ARAMONT (GABRIEL) Ambassador of France to Constantinople, in the Reign of Henry II, was a Gentleman of Gascony, who acquitted himself worthily of his Employ. The Constable de Montmorency, examining the Overture, which Pope Paul III had made, that the only means to recover Placentia out of the Emperor's hands was to cause the Turkish Fleet to appear upon the Coasts of Naples and Sicily, advised the King his Master to negotiate with Soliman about it. Aramont was chosen to transact this Affair. He was neither less Artful, nor less experienced, than la Foret, Rincon, and Paulin, who had preceded him in This Embassy. He made Friends at the Porte, who procured him free access, and private Audiences; and he knew so well how to turn and wind Matters, that he reconciled Soliman to the French, who had been greatly prejudiced against them. The only question now was, how his Highness's Fleet should act: Whereupon Aramont returned speedily to France, to consult with his Master in what manner the Grand Signior's Assistance might be most usefully applied. The King and the Constable informed him, that they had Intelligence in the Island of Corsica, and that it might easily be taken, if the Turkish Fleet, and That of France, should at once attack it. He set out again for Constantinople, to communicate this Project to the Grand Signior; But, landing at Malta, was instantly requested by the Grand Master (a) to repair to the Turkish Generals, who had besieged Tripoli in Barbary, and employ his Credit, and the Authority of Henry the Second, to oblige them to raise the Siege. He yielded to their Intreaties, and reached the Turkish Camp by the time their Batteries were in readiness to play (b). He had several Conferences with Sinan Bassa, and Dragut, in which he remonstrated to them, that they engaged in an Undertaking altogether opposite to the Treaty, which Soliman was going to conclude with France, since his Highness had agreed to attack the Emperor only, and that Tripoli belonged to the Order of Malta. They replied, That the Knights of Malta were perjured Persons; who, notwithstanding the Oath they had taken to Soliman, when they were treated with so much Civility at their Departure out of Rhodes, committed continual Hostilities against the Turks; adding withal, that they had Orders to drive them out of Africa; and that they could not suspend the Execution of this Order. Aramont wanted neither Excuses nor Replies; and, finding he could not prevail with Sinan Bassa, he resolv'd to depart with all speed for Constantinople, if possible to obtain from Soliman, that Tripoli might not be taken. But, as his Credit and Intrigues were not unknown to the Bassa, he could not obtain Leave to continue his Journey, till after the Taking of Tripoli. He saved the Lives and Liberties of the French, who were in the Place; nor did he decline coming to a Feast, to which Sinan and Dragut invited him after their Conquest. Charles the Fifth was too politic to overlook this Event; he took occasion from it to give out, that France had contributed to the taking of Tripoli. Henry the Second did what he could to answer this Complaint [A]. I have not had time to trace the Negotiations and Adventures of Aramont farther. I know, that his Dispatches were sometimes intercepted, and that the Emperor made use of them

to

(a) He was a Spaniard, called Omeda.

(b) See the Judgment Mr. Wicquefort passes upon this Conduct, in his Treatise of the Ambassador, lib. 2. §. 5. pag. 110.

[A] Henry II. did what he could to answer this Complaint (1). The Grand Master of Malta accused our Aramont of having induced the Governor of Tripoli to capitulate. Thuanus, refusing this Accusation, tells us, that the Constable de Montmorency, who had all the Power at that time, had charged this Ambassador to testify to the Grand Master the particular Affection, which He, the Constable, had for the Interests and Prosperity of the Order. This Historian adds, that he had seen Letters, in which the Constable expresses great Concern at the taking of Tripoli; and that his Letters ought not to be suspected of any Diffimulation, since they were written to a Person, to whom the Constable spoke his Thoughts very freely (2). But when Henry II. found, that the Emperor's Partizans accused the Ambassador of France of having contributed to this Conquest of the Ottomans, he dispatched a Gentleman to the Grand Master to complain of the Reports, which were spread abroad, and to enquire of him, how Aramont had behaved himself in That Affair. He declared, that, if he found him guilty of any Misconduct, he would cause him to be punished according to the Exigence of the Case; but he desired, that, if his Ambassador was Innocent, the Grand Master would give a public Testimony of it. The Grand Master's Answer fully justified Gabriel Aramont. "Quo in negotio nullum officium prætermisisset ut Ordini ea in re nostro gratificaretur, hoc enim a V. M. enixe ac religiose sibi injunctum. Præterea, ut quorum culpa ea clades accepta esset certo cunctis constaret, undique probationes collegimus, & inquisitione diligenti super ea re habita nihil commimus quo Aramontium cladi causam dedissemus, aut deditiois auctorem fuisse credi debeat. Quin

(1) Varillas, Hist. de Henri II. liv. 2. p. 198, &c. ad Ann. 1551. See likewise Thuanus, l. 7. p. 155.

(2) Mr. Briffac, who commanded in Piedmont.

"imo ex equitibus captivis — didicimus eum non solum omni culpa vacare, sed multis beneficiis totum ordinem sibi devinxisse, ac proinde non recte nec secundum rationem factum existimamus ut is rumor sparsus sit (3). — In which Affair he used his utmost Endeavours to oblige our Order, as your Majesty had earnestly and solemnly commanded him. Besides, we have collected Proofs from all States, to make it appear to the World, to whom This Loss is to be imputed; and, upon diligent Enquiry into this Matter, we find no reason to suspect Aramont of occasioning this Loss, or of advising the Surrender. We have likewise been informed by some Captive Knights, that he is not only free from all Blame, but that he has obliged the Order by repeated good Offices. For which reason we think this Rumor to be unjustly spread." The King of France did not fail to publish this Answer in all the Courts of Europe, to shew that his Enemies spread Reports right or wrong, without any Foundation, on purpose to make him odious. "Eas litteras — postea Rex per oratores suos passim publicari jussit, qua publicatione compressis Cæfarianorum querelis ac rumoribus, evulgata in Gallici nominis invidiam fama pariter conquevit (4). — These Letters the King afterwards ordered to be published by his Ambassadors; by the Publication of which, the Complaints of the Imperialists being put a stop to, the Report, which was spread to the Dishonour of the French Name, ceased." This might indeed persuade some, that the Partizans of Charles V. were deceived in this Matter; but the Enemies of France easily excused them. When it suits our Inclinations, we imagine it allowable to interpret every thing in a certain Sense, agreeable to a System, which was once built on very probable Reasons.

(3) Thuan. lib. 7. fab. fin.

(4) Id. ibid.

to reproach the French with their strict Correspondence with the Porte [B]. The Relation of his Embassy is in Manuscript in the Library of Mr de Lamoignon (c).

I have just read a Particular, which may serve by way of Supplement to this Article. The Golden Isles in Provence were erected into a Marquitate by Letters of Henry II, confirmed by the Parliament of Aix; and this Marquitate Aramont, Ambassador of France to Constantinople, was invested with, and seized of, to hold in Fief of the King, with expresse Orders to build, in these Isles, Castles, Towers, and Fortresses, to the Expence of Fifty Thousand Crowns (d).

Reasons. This is without doubt an inexhaustible Spring of erroneous Judgments; but, provided they are useful to us, we are not much in pain about them.

[B] His Dispatches were sometimes intercepted; and the Emperor made use of them to reproach the French with their strict Correspondence with the Porte.] In a Letter, which Charles V. wrote, in the Year 1552, to the Princes and States of the Empire, he expresses his wonder, that the Ambassador of France should pretend to justify his Master as to the Engagements with Soliman: "Have not I, says he, the Memorials of Aramont drawn up at Constantinople, which prove the reality of an Alliance negotiated between the Porte and France against a Christian Prince?" Jam quod de communicatis cum Turco consiliis obiter perstringis, quasi abunde purgatum existimet, qua fronte excusare potest? atque penes me habeo Aramontii Gallici legati commentarios Byzantii scriptos, et ad regem per Cosmam centurionem quendam missos, qui societatis cum Turcis in Christiani nominis Principem inita plenam fidem faciunt (5). Mr Varillas observes (6), "That the Pope, and the Emperor, had agreed to accuse the King of France, in full Council, of an Intelligence with the Infidels, and to produce thereupon Mr Aramont's intercepted Letters, to which a wrong Turn might easily be given, because the Truth was but half explained." But what occasion was there for giving a wrong Sense, since Aramont undoubtedly negotiated a Treaty between France, and the Porte, against the House of Austria? Was not that alone sufficient to prove the Intelligence, with which they would accuse Henry II? The best Way, France could take, was, not to contest the Fact, but to justify the Reasonableness of it, by shewing, that, where Religion is not concerned, we may make what Alliances we please. If Charles V. had not been always supported by good Allies among the Christian Princes, Papiſts, or not Papiſts, he would not have stuck at forming Alliances with Infidels; and he would have improved them much better, than France did. He was much more cunning, and had greater Abilities than Francis I. The Turkish Fleet, in concert with him, would not have been useless, as it was with the French, who concerted Matters so ill, that one is moved to Shame, or Pity, or Laughter, who reads the History of those Times. Sincerity had nothing to do in this Case. That would have prevented the Emperor from reproaching his Enemy with entering into Alliance with Heretics and Infidels, when He himself was ready to do the same, had Maxims of State required it. What would have become then of Those, who could make pathetic Harangues, present plausible Memorials, discuss an hundred fine Common Places? All this must have been laid aside; now this would have been very prejudicial; there would have been no blinding the People, no animating them to any Purpose; a thousand exquisite Praises, and pompous Titles, must have been given up.

----- accusat Manilia, si rea non est (7).

People seldom fail to make Reproaches on these Occasions, but when they are guilty themselves.

ARBRISSEL (ROBERT D.) Founder of the Order of Fontevraud. Look for FONTEVRAUD.

ARCESILAS, or ARCESILAUUS, one of the most renowned Philosophers of Antiquity, was born at Pitane in Æolia [A]. He was a Disciple of the Mathematician Autolycus, his Country-man, and followed him to Sardes. Afterwards he came to Athens; where he was a Disciple of Xanthus, then of Theophrastus, and lastly of Crantor [B]. He learned Geometry under Hipponicus (a). He had some Inclination

[A] Was born at Pitane in Æolia.] Diogenes Laërtius is not the only one, who affirms this (1). Read these Words of Pomponius Mela, in the Chapter, where he describes the Country of the Æolians. "Caicus inter Eleam decurrit, & Pitane illam quæ Arcesilam tulit, nihil affirmantis Academice clarissimum Antistitem (2). ----- The River Caycus runs between Elea and That Pitane, where Arcesilas was born, the celebrated Founder of the Academy, which affirmed nothing." See also Strabo; Πίλιον πόλις Ἀιολικὴ ----- ἐν δὲ τῇ Πίλιον ἐστὶν Ἀρκεσίλαος (3). Pitane, a City of Æolia ----- and Arcesilas was of Pitane; but give no Credit to Solinus, who makes Pitane, a Town in Laconia, the Birth-place of this Philosopher (4). Salmafius (5), and Mr Ménage (6), refute him. I cannot tell, whether it is through Inadvertency of the Author, or the Correctors, that Arcesilus Pitaneus occurs in Mr Gassendi (7); it should have been Pitaneus.

[B] A Disciple of Xanthus, then of Theophrastus, and lastly of Crantor (8).] I am surprized, that Diogenes Laërtius, after having clearly insinuated, in several Places, that Arcesilas was a Disciple of Polemon, does not expressly say so in the Life of Arcesilas. The following are the Passages, where he affirms it. Arcesilas, says he, having left Theophrastus's School to follow Polemon and Crates, declared, that they were Gods, or the Remains of the Golden Age. Ἐρθεὶν καὶ Ἀρκεσίλαον μετ' ἐλθόντα παρὰ Θεοφράστου πρὸς αὐτὸς λέγειν, ὡς εἴη θεοὶ τινες ἢ λείψανα τῶ χροσφ γένους (9). Hinc & Arcesilaum, cum ad eos à Theophrasto diverteret, dixisse ferunt, illos Deos esse quosdam, aut auri seculi reliquias. He observes, a little lower, that Polemon and Arcesilas lodged together, and that Polemon and Crates, who lodged together with a Citizen, whose Name was Lyſicles, went and supped very often with Crantor, and that Crates was the Minion of Polemon, as Arcesilas was the Favourite of Crantor. The Translator of Diogenes Laërtius has confounded all this; for he supposes, that Polemon was the Minion of Crates, and Crantor of Arcesilas. Let us produce the Greek: Ἦν δὲ ἐρώμενος, Κράτης μὲν, ὡς προείρηται, Πολέμωνος, Ἀρκεσίλαος δὲ Κραντορος (10). That is: Erat autem amicus, ut quidem prædictum est, Polemonis quidem Crates, Crantoris autem Arcesilas. The Latin Translation, which no Commentator has censured, puts amator, where it should have been amicus: There has been no notice taken of the passive Signification of ἐρώμενος. Neither has any one observed the Contradiction, which follows a little after; for, as the Greek orders the Matter, Arcesilas is represented under the Character of the Patriarch. Ἀρκεσίλαος δὲ λὼν ὅτι αὐτῷ (Κραντορος) συσάδηναι Πολέμωνι, καὶ πρὸς ἐρώμενος (11). Arcesilas volens ab illo (Crantore) se Polemoni commendari, quoniam amatore suo. Let us here reject all the impure and abominable Ideas, which This Author, and many others, seem willing

(d) St Lazar. Histoire de Dignit. Honorar. de France, pag. 400. Edit. of Paris, 1635, in 8vo.

A REFLECTION on Alliances with Heretics or Infidels.

(7) Juven. Sat. 6. ver. 243.

(a) Taken from Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 32.

(10) Id. ib.

(11) Id. ib. n. 22.

(c) Varillas, Histoire de Henri II. pag. 200.

(5) Idem lib. 10. pag. 213.

(6) Varill. Hist. de Henri II. liv. 2. pag. 202.

(1) Diog. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 20.

(5) Pompon. Mela, lib. 1. cap. 18. pag. 20.

(3) Strabo lib. 13. pag. 422. in fin.

(4) Solin. cap. 7. pag. 22.

(c) Salmaf. Exercit. Phil. pag. 138.

(6) Ménage, in Diog. Laërt. pag. 176.

(7) Gassend. Oper. Tom. 1. pag. 18.

(8) Diog. Laërt. n. 28, 29.

(1) Id. in Cratete, lib. 4. pag. 240. n. 22.

tion to Poetry; and took great delight in reading Homer [C]; but his Passion for Philosophy was superior to all others. He succeeded Crates in the Regency of the Platonic School [D], and introduced new Opinions into it; for he founded a Sect, which was called the Second Academy, to distinguish it from That of Plato. He strongly opposed the Dogmatists; he affirmed nothing; he doubted of every thing; he disapproved pro and con; and suspended his Judgment: This I do, said he, because nothing

- (12) Id. lib. n. 25. to suggest in the like Case. When they speak of a Philosopher, and his Disciples, they almost always observe, that he was fond (or a Lover) of such or such an one. This, I confess, may, on some Occasions, be understood in a wicked Sense, but on an hundred others, ought, I think, to be understood only of a virtuous and honourable Affection. Among several Disciples, One was his Master's Favourite. It was He, who was designed for his Successor; he, who had most Docility, Respect, or Genius, &c. Ought this to be expressed by the Term ἐραστής? But to return to the Fact; The last Passage, which I cited from Diogenes Laërtius, informs us, that Arcefilas desired Crantor to recommend him to Polemon. The Historian adds, that Crantor, who was sick, did not take it ill; but, on the contrary, as soon as he was recovered, went likewise himself to Polemon's Lectures. Ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτὸν ὁρῶντα δεικνύν Πολέμωνος (12). Ipsē quoque, cum sanus factus esset, se ad audiendum Polemonem contulit. This is a Proof, that Arcefilas was one of That Philosopher's Auditors, or Disciples. He was so far, that Cicero gives him no other Master. "Arcefilas tuus, etsi fuit in differendo pertinacior, tamen nollet fuit, erat enim Polemonis (13). --- "Your Arcefilas, though stiff in his Opinions, was yet one of us, having been a Disciple of Polemon." Namque assigns him several other Masters. He makes him successively the Disciple of Polemon, Theophrastus, Diodorus, and Pyrrho (14). He adds, that he learnt of Crantor Persuasion, of Diodorus Sophistry, and of Pyrrho to turn about like a Weather-Cock, and be nothing at all. ὅτι οὐδὲ μὲν Κράντορος περὶ διανοίας, οὐδὲ Διοδώρου δὲ σοφιστικῆς, οὐδὲ Πύρρονος ὁρῶντα παντοδαπῶς, καὶ ἑαυτὸν αὐτὸν (15). Et a Crantore quidem ad persuadendum callidus, a Diodoro autem sopsistis, denique a Pyrrhone cum omnem in parte versatilis ac temerarius, tum etiam nullus esse didicit. He fixed himself in the Pyrrhonian Inconstancy, and wanted only the Name of a Pyrrhonian; he was called an Academic; a Name which he kept only in respect to the Philosopher Crantor, his Master, and Lover. Πλὴν τῆς προσηγορίας ἐθέμενος Πύρρωνος ὡς τῶ πάντων ἀναίσιμος ---- αἰδοῖ τὴν ἐξουσίαν ὑπομένειν λέγουσάαι Ἀκαδημαϊκὸς ἔστι. ἢ μὲν τοίνυν. Πύρρωνος πάλιν τὸ ὀνόμαζον. Ἀκαδημαϊκὸς δ' ἐκ ἧρ, πλὴν τὸ λέγουσάαι (16). In Pyrrhone, si appellationem excipias, tanquam in omnium eversione acquiescit ---- is pro sua in amatore observantia Academicum se vocari adbus passus est. Ita qui Pyrrhonicus, excepto nomine, totus erat, idem Academicus prater nomen dabatur nihil. Numerius had but just before said, that Arcefilas, a beautiful Youth, being beloved by Crantor, constantly adhered to him. Δὲ τὸ καλὸς εἶναι ἐτι ὡν ὁραῖος τυκὼν ἐρασῶ Κράντορος τὴν Ἀκαδημαϊκὴν προσηγορίαν μὲν τῷ τῷ. (17). --- Eligantia forma et commoda adbus etate cum esset, Crantorem Academicum amatorem natum, ejus consuetudine usus est ille quidem. He adds, that Menedemus's Lectures made him a more warm Disputant; for which he quotes Timon (18). Thus we see several Omissions in the List, which Diogenes Laërtius has left us, of Arcefilas's Masters. I have supplied this Defect.
- (18) Id. lib. n. 25. [C] He took great Delight in reading Homer.] He preferred him to all other Authors: Every Evening, he read some part of him, before he went to Sleep, and, when he rose in the Morning, he used to say, I am going to pay a Visit to my Mistress (19), meaning, that he was going to read this Poet. Ἀπεδ' ἐχέλο δὲ πάντως μάλλον Ὀμήρου ἢ καὶ εἰς ἑπὶ τῶν ἰων περὶ τῶν ἀνεργήσεων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὁρῶντα λέγων ἐπὶ τῶν ἑωρῶν ἀπείναι, ὅτι δὲ ἀν βουλοῖτο ἀπείναι (20). Amplectebatur Homerum maxime ex omnibus, cuius adeo studiū erat, ut semper ante somnum ejus aliquid legeret. Mane quoque cum surgeret, dicebat, se ad amicum ire, cum se velle legere Homerum.
- (19) Id. lib. n. 25. (20) Id. lib. n. 25.

- [D] He succeeded Crates in the Regency of the Platonic School (21). Several Authors place our Arcefilas immediately after Polemon, without mentioning Crates. See a Note of Aldrobandinus on a Passage of Diogenes Laërtius (22), where you will find, that this learned Commentator had no where discovered, that Crates succeeded Polemon. You will likewise meet with these Words of St Austin; "Moritur Polemon, succedit ei Arcefilas, Zenonis quidem condiscipulus, sed sub Polemonis magisterio (23). --- Polemon dies; to him succeeds Arcefilas, a Fellow-Disciple indeed of Zeno, but under the Tuition of Polemon." To this Passage may be added That of the Fifty sixth Letter. "Iidem quippe Academicus, qui Platonicus, quod docet Auditorum ipsa successio; Arcefilas enim, qui primus occultata sententia sua nihil aliud istos quam refellere statuit, quare cui successerit; Polemonem invenies; quare cui Polemon; Zenocratem; Zenocrati autem discipulo Academicam Scholam suam reliquit Plato (24). --- The Academics are the same with the Platonists; as appears from the very Succession of their Disciples. For Arcefilas, who first taught them to have no Opinions of their own, but to refuse every other, you will find to have been the Successor of Polemon; Polemon of Zenocrates; and Zenocrates, Successor, in the School of the Academy, to his Master Plato." We must not here depend upon St Austin's Authority; for he has not strictly observed Exactness; and, as he skips over one Step between Plato and Zenocrates (25), he may have done the like between Polemon and Arcefilas. I do not insist on his Silence as to Crantor, the famous Academic (26), who seems to have been the immediate Successor of Polemon, and who died before him, and before Crates (27). If the Word Successor displeases you, say, that Crantor taught in Polemon's Life-time. The same thing is affirmed of Crates; and from hence it comes to pass, that sometimes it is said, that Crantor succeeded Polemon; sometimes, that Crates succeeded him; sometimes, that both of them were his Successors; but generally Crates is placed after Crantor (28). Again; I do not object the Omission of Crantor to St Austin: I imagine it is wrong to reckon this Philosopher as Polemon's Successor: He died before his Master; and I find, that Lacydes, the Successor of Arcefilas, was the first, who resigned the Succession of his Chair in his Life-time (29). Let us say then, that Crates alone succeeded Polemon, and reject this Period of Father Rapi; Crates and Crantor, who were successively Heads of Plato's School, altered nothing in his Doctrine (30). He would not have been so much mistaken, if he had named Crantor first; Crantor, I say, who died before Crates. A celebrated Critic (31), in correcting a Passage of Nonius Marcellus (32), has supplied us with an Authority, which wonderfully favours the Text of this Remark. According to his Correction, we are to believe, that Luilius had said, "Polemon & amavit Cratem, & huic transmissit suam scholam, quam dicunt. --- Polemon loved Crates, and transmitted to him his School, as they call it." The Greek of Diogenes Laërtius carries the same Sense. Κράτης --- καὶ ἀπεχάσθη τὴν σχολὴν αὐτοῦ (33). Crates auditor simul amavitque (34) Polemonis, illiusque scholae successor. I do not depend on these Words of Cicero; "Speusippus autem, & Xenocrates, qui primi Platonis rationem autoritatemque susceperant, & post eos Polemon & Crates unaque Crantor, in Academia congregati, diligenter eis quæ a superioribus acceptant, utebantur (35). --- Speusippus and Xenocrates, the immediate Successors of Plato, and after them Polemon and Crates, together with Crantor, taught the same Doctrines in the Academy,
- (21) Id. lib. n. 34. (22) In the beginning of the Life of Crates, l. 4. n. 21. (23) St Austin, contra Academicos, lib. 3. (24) August. Epist. 56. pag. 267. Euseb. in Prep. Evan. lib. 14. c. 4. pag. 726. f. 16. Arcefilas succeeded Polemon. (25) Speusippus, Son of a Sister of Plato, governed the School before Xenocrates. (26) Crantor ille in nostra Academia vel in primis fuit nobilis. Cicero. Tulle. Quasi lib. 3. cap. 6. (27) Diogenes Laërt. lib. 4. n. 27. (28) See Gassendi, Op. tom. 1. pag. 18. & Jonesius de Script. Histor. Philosph. pag. 62. or see Diogen. Laërt. cited before. (29) Diogen. Laërt. in 1. cycle, lib. 4. n. 60. (30) Rapius. Compar. de Platon & Aristote. Part 4. cap. 1. p. 355. (31) Petrus Victorius. See the Notes of Jofias Mercerus on Nonius Marcellus, pag. 193. (32) Nonius Marcellus, eos Transmittere. p. 414. cites the 28th Book of Luilius. (33) Diogenes Translat. (34) Cicero, which main. He attacked with great force whatever the other Sects affirmed [E]; for which

"which they had received from their Predecessors." They are not positive enough, nor so express, as this Passage of Diogenes Laërtius. Πλάτων δὲ τὴν ἀρχαίαν Ἀκαδημίαν οὐκ ἐπέστησεν, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ Σπύρῳ καὶ Ἐποικύτῳ, καὶ Πολύμῳ, καὶ Κράτῳ, καὶ Κρίτωνι, καὶ Ἀρκασίλῳ, δὲ τὴν μέσσην Ἀκαδημίαν ἐπέστησεν (36). — Plato, who founded the old Academy; after Plato, Speusippus and Xenocrates; then Polemon; after Polemon, Crantor, and Crates; to whom succeeded Arcefilas, who instituted the middle Academy. Cassaubon, in his Note on this Passage, quotes Galen, who says, that the Old Academy ended in Crantes; and that Arcefilas, the Disciple of Crantes, founded the lesser Academy (37). This Commentator is ignorant, who the Crantes of Galen is (38); but it is easily to be seen, either that the Transcribers have put Crantes instead of Crates, or that Galen himself does not spell the Name of Arcefilas Predecessor right. It happens daily, that the most learned Persons either add, or retrench, some Letter of the Author's Name, whom they quote; they intend to name the same Person, whom others sledge, according to the true Orthography. I could give an hundred Instances of it, and am surprized, that Cassaubon makes any Difficulty here. We must not forget, that he wonders Galen has made no mention of Crantor. Quis vero non miretur omissem à Galeno Crantorem (39)?

[E] He attacked with great force whatever the other Sects affirmed. It would be wrong to pretend, that he did not justly deserve the Name of an Innovator; but Diogenes Laërtius is mistaken, when he takes him for the first, who introduced the Custom of Disputing pro and con. Πρώτος δὲ καὶ ἐκείνος ἐπεχρίσθη (40). Primusque in utramque differere partem aggressus est. It was the Taste of Socrates; and Plato continued it. We shall quote Cicero, who informs us, that Arcefilas's Method of controverting every thing, which was proposed to him, was the same with that of Socrates; and that Arcefilas was instructed in Pyrrhonism (41) by Plato's Books, and by the Discourses, which Socrates was supposed to have held. "Arcefilas primum, qui Polemonem audierat, ex variis Platonis libris, sermonibusque Socraticis, hoc maxime arripuit, nihil esse certum, quod aut sensibus, aut animo percipi possit: quem ferunt eximio quodam usum lepore dicendi, aspernatum esse omne animi sensusque judicium, primumque instituisse (quamquam id fuit Socraticum maxime) non quod ipse sentiret offendere, sed contra id quod quisque se sentire dixisset disputare (42). — Arcefilas, the Disciple of Polemon; the first, who gathered this Doctrine, chiefly from the Writings of Plato, and the Discourses of Socrates, that there is no Certainty in Objects, either of the Sense, or the Mind. This Philosopher is said to have had a most graceful manner of speaking; to have rejected all Judgment of the Mind and Sense; and to have been the first, who taught his Followers (tho' it had been the constant Practice of Socrates before him) not to declare their own Opinions, but to controvert those of all others." He says, in another Book, that Socrates's Method, which had been in a manner disused, was revived by Arcefilas. It is in this, that the Innovation of the latter consists; and therefore the Expressions of Diogenes Laërtius are not exact; for it is plain, that a Philosopher, who professes to dispute every thing, which is advanced in answer to his Questions, puts in practice the Method of maintaining both sides of the Question. Observe these Words: "Is (Socrates) percontando atque interrogando elicere solebat eorum opiniones, quibuscumque differere, ut ad ea quæ hi responderent, si quid videretur, diceret. Qui mos, quum à posterioribus non esset retentus, Arcefilas cum revocavit, instituitque, ut hi, qui se audire vellent, non de se quærerent, sed ipsi dicerent, quid sentirent. Quod quam discessit, ille contra; sed, qui audiebant, quod poterant, defendebant sententiam suam: apud ceteros autem philosophos, qui quæsiuit aliquid, tacet, quod quidem jam fit etiam in Academia (43). — He (Socrates) was wont, by asking Questions, to make those, with whom he discoursed, discover their own Opinions; that, if he thought proper, he might reply to their Answers. Which Practice, having been discontinued afterwards, was revived by Arcefilas, who instructed, that there, who would be his Hearers, should not ask his Opinion, but declare their own; which when they had done, he applied them; yet his Hearers were allowed to defend their own Sentiments. With other Philosophers it was otherwise; the Enquirer was silent himself, which is not practised even in the Academy." If this Testimony be not express enough, what think you of this, in which it is affirmed, that the Academy of Arcefilas was no other, than That of Plato? "Hinc Academicum novam appellant, quæ mihi vetus videtur. Siquidem Platonem ex illa vetere numeramus, eum in libris nihil affirmatur, & in utramque partem multa differuntur, de omnibus quærentur, nihil certi dicitur (44). — They call this the New Academy, which to me seems to be the Old. For we reckon Plato to have been of the Old, in whose Books nothing is affirmed, and many things are disputed on both sides of the Question; every thing is matter of Enquiry, and nothing certainly pronounced." I cite, elsewhere (45), another Passage of no less Force than this. If any one requires a Scrap of Greek, for variety's sake, I can fit him. I have read, somewhere, that Epicurus could not see, without Chagrin, the great Reputation of Arcefilas, the most renowned Philosopher of those Times; and that he upbraided him with having acquired a Reputation among the Ignorant, without drawing any thing from his own Stock. Τὸ δὲ Ἀρκασίαν τὸν Ἐπίκουρον ἐμύριον ἔσκεν ὅτι οὐδὲ παρὰ τὸν ἄλλοις φιλοσοφῶν ἀπακρίβηται (46). Arcefilas autem Gloria videretur Epicuro baud modicam attulisse ægritudinem, qui inter ejus temporis Philosophos maximi sebat. It is true, Arcefilas did not set up for Invention. He ascribed to Socrates, Plato, Parmenides, and Heraclitus, the Honour of inventing the Epochæ, and the Acatelephia. Ὁ δὲ Ἀρκασίαν τοσούτον ἀπέδει τῇ καλοποιίᾳ τὴν δόξαν ὅσα πᾶν καὶ ὑπονομιεῖσθαι τὸν παλαιόν, ὥς ἐκκαμῖν τὸς τότε σοφιστὰς ὅτι ἀπεχρίσθαι Σωκράτη καὶ Πλάτωνα καὶ Περμενίδα καὶ Ἡρακλείτη τὰ περὶ τὸς ἐποχὰς δόμαζα καὶ τὸς ἀκαταληψίας, ὅθεν δέονται, ἀλλὰ οὐκ ἀναρῶν καὶ βεβαιῶν αὐτὰν εἰς ἀδύνατον δόξας ποιεῖν (47). Arcefilas was so far from any Desire of innovating, or arrogating old Opinions to himself, that the Sophists of his Times even reproached him with ascribing to Socrates, Plato, and Parmenides, the Doctrine of withholding the Assent, and Incomprehensibility; not out of Necessity, but to strengthen, as it were, and confirm them, by insinuating them to those great Men. Pray observe, that, by the Confession of Diogenes Laërtius himself, our Arcefilas only rendered the Platonic Method more Contentious; this was all the Change he made in it. Πρώτος τὸν λόγον ἐκίνησε τὸν ὑπο Πλάτωνα παραδεδομένον, καὶ ἐποίησε δι' ἐρωτήσεων καὶ ἀπακρίσεως ἐκτετικώτερον (48). Primus orationis genus quod Plato tradiderat movit effectique per interrogationem & responsonem contentiosius. It may, nevertheless, be said, that he was the first Disturber of the public Peace among the Philosophers; for, besides his reviving a Practice, which had been almost forgotten, he pursued the Method of Socrates with more Ardor, than had ever been done before; and shewed himself more eager, more obdurate, and more impatient, than the first Inventors. And, for this Reason, what I am going to produce, was said of him. "Nonne jam, quum philosophorum disciplinæ gravissimæ constitissent, tum, ut exortus est in optima Republica Tiberius Gracchus, qui oculum perturbaret, sic Arcefilas, qui constitutum philosophum everteret, & in eorum autoritate delitesceret, qui negavissent quicquam sciri, aut percipi posse (49). — Did not Arcefilas, like another Gracchus, who disturbed the Repose of the best of Commonwealths, arise to overthrow the established Philosophy, and sheltered himself under Their Authority, who denied all Knowledge and Perception of Things?"

Some have enquired into the Reason of Arcefilas's Conduct; and it was generally ascribed to That warm Emulation, which grew up between Him and his Fellow Disciple Zeno. Both had been Polemon's Scholars (50); and they strove to surpass each other (51). Now Zeno took part with the Dogmatists;

(36) Diogen. Laërt. in Præf. c. 10. p. 10.

(37) Galen. in Hist. Phil. c. 10. p. 10.

(38) Ego quidem sic Crantes Galeni plane ignovo. Cassaubon in Diogen. Laërt. Præf. c. 10. p. 10.

(39) Id. lib.

(40) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. c. 28.

(41) I make use of this Pyrrhonism, out of any Regard to the Person of Pyrrho.

(42) Cicero de Oratore. lib. 3. c. 18.

(43) Id. de 1. tribus. l. 2. cap. 1.

(44) Id. A. c. 10. p. 10. c. 10. p. 10.

(45) Id. R. c. 10. p. 10. c. 10. p. 10. c. 10. p. 10.

(46) Philarch. adv. Colotem. p. 1121. E.

(47) Id. lib. 4. c. 28.

(48) Id. lib.

(49) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. c. 28.

(50) Cicero Academ. Quest. 1. 4. cap. 5.

(51) Id. lib. 1. c. 10. p. 10. c. 10. p. 10. c. 10. p. 10.

(52) Numerianus, ubi supra.

(b) See Remark [E] Citation [49].

(c) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 34.

which reason, he was looked upon, in Matters of Philosophy, as a Disturber of the Public Peace (b). Some pretend, that, finding no Evidence, which might prevent his floating equally between the Affirmative and Negative, he would write no Books (c); but others affirm, that he did write some; and then differ about the Question, whether he published any. Some affirm it, and others say, that he condemned all he had composed to the Flames (d). It is observable, however, that he dedicated some Books to Eumenes, Prince of Pergamus, and to no one else (e). We shall see (d) Id. ibid.

(e) Id. n. 38.

(ca) This does not agree with what we'll be reported in Remark [G].

(51) Cicero, Academ. Quæst. 1. 4. cap. 6.

be laid down Definitions, and Axioms, which Arcefilas vigorously opposed; and, to gain his Point, did not stick at overthrowing the very Foundation of all Science, and reducing every thing to Uncertainty. The Passage I am going to cite, gives us this Account, as also of the little Success of his Undertaking (52), tho' supported by the most pleasing Eloquence. "Fuerint illa vetera si vultis incognita: nihil ne est er-
"go actum quod investigatum est postquam Arcefilas, Zenoni, ut putant, obstrictans, nihil novi
"reperienti, sed emendanti superiores immutationes
"verborum, dum hujus definitiones labefactare vult,
"conatus est clarissimis rebus tenebras obducere;
"cujus primo non admodum probata ratio quan-
"quam floruit, tum acumine ingenii, tum admira-
"bili quodam lepore dicendi, proxime à Lacyde solo
"retenta est (53)." Others say, that the fear of being nonplussed, by the Objections of certain Persons, who took a pleasure in puzzling the Philosophers, obliged Arcefilas to affirm nothing. He placed the Epoché before him as a Rampart; this was a Darknel, under favour of which he hoped to escape the Pursuits of the Sophist Bion, and the Followers of Theodoret, perpetual Sticklers against the Philosophers. Numenius, who observes, that Diocles, the Cnidian, had adopted this Conjecture, rejects it; and, in my Opinion, not without Reason; for though, by not deciding pro or con, we may secure ourselves from a thousand perplexing Difficulties, yet we are greatly exposed by so doing; and if, on the one hand, grave and serious Objections, Retortions, and Arguments ad hominem, the ordinary and inevitable Rock of the Dogmatists, are the less to be feared; on the other, we are much more exposed to the Raillery and Insults of Banterers. Now it is certain, that Bion, the greatest Sneerer of his Time, was less formidable, when he reasoned, than when he turned things into ridicule. Generally speaking, That is a very inconvenient Situation, which exposes a Man to Ridicule. Arcefilas himself was wont to rally those, who rejected the Testimony of Sense (54). However, let us see the Words of Numenius. "Οὐ γὰρ πείθομαι, τὸ

(54) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 4. n. 34.

(55) Numenius, apud Euseb. Præp. Evang. 1. 14. cap. 6. pag. 731. C.

Κνιδίῳ Διοκλίῳ φάσκοντι ἐν ταῖς ἐπιστροφαιαῖς διαλέξεσιν, Ἀρχεσίλαον φέβω τὸν Θεοδωρεῖον τε καὶ Βίωνα τὸ Σοφιστὴν, ἐπεισόντων τοῖς φιλοσοφεῖν, καὶ ὡς ἐν ὀκνύνῳ ἀπὸ παντὸς ἐλπίσκειν, αὐτὸν ἐξουλασθῆναι, ἵνα μὴ πεισμάτα ἔχη, μηδὲν γὰρ δόγμα ὑπεκτείνε φαινόμενον, ὥσπερ γὰρ τὸ μέλαν τὰς σκίας περιελάσθαι πρὸς αὐτὴν τὴν ἵπταχιν. Τὸ δ' ἐν τῷ πείθομαι (55). Neque enim Cnidium illum Dioclem audio, qui in suis, ut eas inscriptis, Diatribis, Arcefilam docet, Theodoreorum ac Bionis Sophistæ metu, qui, Philosophis infestis, nullam non eas coarguendi occasionem arripere, ita sibi, ne quid ab iis molestiæ pateretur, cavisse, ut nec certi quicquam statueret; nam ut sepius effuso atramento, sic illum sese objecta hac assensionis retentione tegere ac tueri. Verum hoc, dixi, ut minus credo. Note, that one of Cicero's Interlocutors affirms, that Arcefilas did not make use of the Epoché, in contradiction to Zeno, but through a Desire of finding out Truth. Arcefilas vero non obstrictandi causa cum Zenone pugnavisse, sed verum invenire voluisse sic intelligitur (56). He says (57) that Arcefilas was the first, who discovered, and approved this Proposition; It is possible, that a Man may neither affirm, nor deny, any thing, in uncertain Matters; and it is the Part of a wise Man so to do. Nemo superiorum non modo expresserat, sed ne dixerat quidem, posse hominem nihil opinari, nec solum posse, sed ita necesse esse sapienti, visa est Arcefilæ cum vera sententia, tum honesta & digna sapiente. He says likewise, that this Philosopher asked Zeno, What will be the Consequence, if a wise Man can discern nothing clearly, and if he ought not to admit of any thing, which is not clearly true? And that Zeno answered, The Consequence will be, that he will clearly comprehend some things; and thus will admit of nothing obscure. He was obliged afterwards to give the Marks of those Things, which might be clearly comprehended; but those, which he gave, were contested by Arcefilas, who maintained, against him, that Falshood may appear in the same Guise as Truth; and that, consequently, Truth could not be discerned from Falshood. Zeno granted, that there was no comprehending any thing, if That, which Is not, can appear to us under the same Form with That, which Is; but he denied the Conformity of Ideas, in regard to that which Is, and that which Is not. Arcefilas insisted upon this Conformity. Incumbit in eas disputationes: ut doceret nullum tale esse visum à vero, ut non ejusmodi etiam à falso possit (58). The Dispute between them turned upon this Point. It had been said before, in this Work of Cicero, that the Obscurity of Things, and not Obstinacy, or a Desire of Victory, engaged Arcefilas to dispute with Zeno (59).

(58) Id. ib.

(59) See, below, Citation (62).

I have said, that he carried the Hypothesis of Uncertainty farther than Socrates, and I had reason to say so; for he would not so much as confess, with Socrates, that he knew his own Ignorance (I know, that I know nothing). He suspended his Judgment in every thing, and disputed only to convince himself, that the Affirmative Reasons were no better than the Negative. "Arcefilas negabat esse quicquam quod sciri posset, ne illud quidem ipsum, quod Socrates sibi reliquisset. Sic omnia latere censebant in occulto, neque esse quicquam quod cerni, aut intelligi posset. Quibus de causis nihil oportere neque affirmare quenequam, neque assertione approbare, cohibereque semper, & ab omni lapsu continere temeritatem; quæ tum esset insignis, quum aut falsa, aut incognita res approbaretur, neque hoc quicquam esse turpius, quam cognitioni & perceptioni assertionem approbationemque præcurrere. Huc (rationis quod erat contentum) faciebat, ut contra omnium sententias dies jam plerisque deduceret, ut quum in eadem re paria contrariis in partibus momenta rationum invenirentur, facilius ab utraque parte assertio sustineretur (60). — Arcefilas denied, that there was any thing which could be known, not even That Point of Knowledge, which Socrates left himself: Thus those Philosophers thought every thing lay concealed, and that nothing could be either perceived, or understood. Upon which account, they believed, that no one ought to affirm or approve any thing by an Assertion, but restrain himself from giving a rash Judgment, which would then be notorious, when either a false or unknown thing should be asserted to; and that nothing was more scandalous, than to suffer the Affirmation, and Approbation, to out-run the Knowledge, and Perception, of a thing. This general Opposition to every Opinion was with this View, that, if the Arguments on both sides of the same Question should be found to be equally strong, the Assertion on both Sides might be the more easily supported." It was He, who taught the Acatelephia, or Incomprehensibility of things, more expressly than was ever done before; and carried it to such an Extremity, that Carneades, who was able to support it better than He, was obliged to have recourse to some Limitation (61); but it is certain, that Arcefilas only enlarged upon, and unfolded, what the greatest Masters had said before him. "Cum Zenod ne — Arcefilas sibi omne certamen instituit — earum rerum obscuritate, quæ ad confessionem ignorationis adduxerant Socratem, & veluti amantes Socratem, Democritum, Anaxagoram, Empedoclem, omnes penè veteres, qui nihil cognosci, nihil percipi, nihil sciri posset dixerunt, angustos sensus, imbecillos animos, brevia curricula vitæ, & (ut Democritus) in profundo veritatem esse demersam, opinionibus & institutis omnia teneri, nihil teneri, nil veritati relinqui, deinceps omnia tenebris circumfusa esse dixerunt (62). — Arcefilas opposed

(60) Cicero, Academ. Quæst. 1. 1. cap. 12.

(61) See the Article CARNEADES.

(62) Cicero, ubi supra.

see how he has been attacked by a Father of the Church [F]. As he was Master of

"Zeno, induced to it by the Obscurity of those things, which brought Socrates to confess his Ignorance, as also Democritus, Anaxagoras, and Empedocles, Lovers, as it were, of Socrates, and all the ancient Philosophers; who taught, that nothing could be known, perceived, or understood; that our Senses were narrow; our Minds weak; the Course of our Lives short; that Truth (as Democritus said) lay deep; that all things depended on Opinion, and positive Appointment; that nothing was left to Truth; and that all things were surrounded with Darkness." It was under the Authority of these great Names, that he attacked the Dogmatists (63). He might have alleged several others, as you may see in the second Book of the Academical Questions (64). Nevertheless, Numenius, who is passionately transported against him, grounds his Quarrel on the Revolt, which he imputes to him (65). You will find some Strokes of his Indignation in the Description he gives of this Philosopher's Inconstancy. He tells us, "he was a Man, who denied and affirmed the same things; he ran blindfold to the right and left; he gloried in being ignorant of the Difference between Good and Evil; he uttered the first Notion which came into his Head, and immediately overthrew it by a greater Number of Arguments, than he had brought to establish it. He was an Hydra, which devoured itself." The Original is more expressive and full. "Εἰσε, καὶ ἀνίστασε, καὶ μετέκρινεν αὐτὸ καὶ εἶπεν, καὶ ἔπειθεν, ἐκάλεισθαι, σπῆναι τὸν οὐρανόν, παλινάγειν, καὶ δύναιτο, καὶ παλινεστὶς τε εἶναι, καὶ παρῆκναι δυνεύειν. ἰδὲν τε εἶδεν, ὡς αὐτὸς ἔσθ, γενναῖον δὲ (66). ---- Καὶ ἔπειθε τὸν οὐρανόν, καὶ ἡμετέροισι θαυμαστὸν, ὅτι μὴ τὸ ἀσχεδὸν ἢ κωλόν, μὴτε εἰσάδον, μὴτε αὐ καλὸν εἶσι τῷ, ἡδὲν ἀλλ' ὁπότερον εἰς τὰς ψυχὰς ποιοῖ, τὸ τοῦτον, αὐθὺς μετὰ καλόν, ἀντεταγμένον ἐν περὶ αὐτοῦ, ἢ δὲ ὅσον καλὸν σκευάσκει. Ἦν ἐν ὕδρῳ τὴν ὡν εἰσάδον, καὶ τὴν ὡν εἰσάδον, ἀμφοτέρω ἀλλήλων δυνεύειν, καὶ τὸ δὲ ὅσον ἀσχεδόν (67). Affirms simul idem, idemque negans, bine, illinc, utrinque, vel undique potius subito se temereque versans ac revocans, incerti ambiguique sensus, veterator, praeceptor, atque ut ipsemet, adeo ingenuus est, confitetur, nihil omnino sciens ---- hoc ut probro jucundissime frueretur, eoque se nomine mirum in modum circumspiceret, quod quid turpe quidve bonum, quid bonum quidve malum esset, ignoraret: sed potius, ubi quod primum in mentem venerat effutisset, tum repente mutatus, id ipsum pluribus quam antea stabilerat, evertit. Se ipsum igitur ille quasi Hydram fecabat & secabatur à se ipso, dum sit in utramque partem loqueretur, ut nec quid sibi vellet intelligeret, nec ullam ipse decori rationem haberet. On the whole, he acknowledged the Finger of God, in the Ignorance of Man; for he was much pleased with a Verse of Hesiod, where it is said, That the Gods keep human Understanding behind the Veil (68).

(63) Id. ib. lib. 2. cap. 5. See, above, Citat. (49).

(64) Cap. 24.

(65) Numenius, apud Euseb. Praep. Evang. l. 1. c. 5. p. 731.

(66) Id. ib. lib. 2. cap. 5. p. 730. A.

(67) Id. ib. lib. 2. cap. 6. pag. 730. C.

(68) Euseb. ib. cap. 4. pag. 726. D.

(69) Laetant. Divin. Inst. lib. 3. c. 4. pag. 153.

Κεῖν δὲ τὸν γὰρ ἔχουσιν θεοὶ νόον ἀνθρώποις. Ignaras hominum suspendunt numina mentes.

[F] How he has been attacked by a Father of the Church. I mean Laetantius: He pretends to destroy all Philosophy, by maintaining, with Socrates, that we can know nothing, and, with Zeno, that nothing is to be believed, but what we know. Si neque sciri, says he, (69) quicquam potest, ut Socrates docuit, nec opinari oportet, ut Zeno, tota Philosophia sublata est. He confirms his Pretence by the great Number of Sects, into which Philosophy was divided. Each engrossed Truth and Wisdom to it self, and made Error and Folly the Portion of all the rest. So that whatsoever particular Sect we would condemn, we have the Suffrages of all the other Philosophers, who are not of That Sect. You are sure, then, of a Majority, in condemning them all; for each in particular approves your Judgment as to all the rest; and has nothing to oppose, in bar against a general Sentence, but the Testimony it gives it self; in which case it is a Judge in it's own Cause, and consequently unworthy of Credit. See how Laetantius destroys all the Sects of the Ancient Philosophy by each other: "They destroy each other, like Cadmus's Brood; not one of them is left alive; and the Reason is,

"because they have, indeed, each a Sword, but no Buckler: They have Arms for an Offensive, but not for a Defensive War. Pereunt igitur universi hoc modo, &c, tanquam Spartiatae illi (70) poetarum, sic se invicem jugulant, ut nemo ex omnibus restet. Quod eo fit, quia gladium habent, scutum non habent. Si ergo singulae sectae multarum sectarum judicio stultitiae convincuntur, omnes igitur vanae, atque inanes reperiuntur. Ita se ipsam philosophia consumit, & conficit (71). He goes on; "Arcefilas observing this, took up Arms against them all, and founded a new Sect of Philosophy, which consisted in not philosophizing at all." Quod cum intelligeret Arcefilas, Academicam Conditore, reprehensiones omnium inter se collegit, confessionemque ignorantiae clarorum Philosophorum, armavitque se adversus omnes. Ita consumit novam non philosophandi philosophiam (72). From That Time there arose two Parties; one aspiring to perfect Science, the other destroying all Certainty. The first falls to the Ground, if the Nature of Things cannot be known; the Latter is lost, if it can: Supposing their Pretensions equal, still Philosophy must fall, because divided. "If, as I have taught, our miserable State does not admit of any Science, properly speaking, in Man, then Arcefilas gains the Victory; but he cannot maintain it; because it is impossible we should not know some things; we should of Necessity perish, if we did not know what is useful or pernicious to Life. Si autem (ut docuit) nulla potest esse in homine interna & propria scientia ob fragilitatem conditionis humanae, Arcefilas manus obicit. Sed ne ipsa quidem stabit, quia non potest omnino nihil sciri. Sunt enim multa, quae natura ipsa nos scire, & usus frequens, & vitae necessitas cogit. Itaque pereundum est nisi scias quae ad vitam sunt utilia, ut appetas, quae periculosa, ut fugias, & vitas (73). After this, Laetantius gives us a detail of several Things, which Men know, and insults Arcefilas, who could not degrade the rest of the World, without degrading himself; since they might have reply'd to him, If you prove, that we have no Knowledge, and that consequently we are no Philosophers, neither are you one, for you confess that you know nothing. So that he cuts his own Throat with the same Dagger, which he employs to kill others. Quid ergo promovit Arcefilas, nisi quod confectis omnibus philosophis se ipsum macroche transfixit (74). Laetantius does not blame him in every Thing; he praises him for having discern'd the Folly of those, who believe, that Conjectures about Truth are Science. Recte vidit Arcefilas arrogantem vel potius stultum esse, qui putant scientiam veritatis conjectura posse comprehendere (75): But he does not dwell long on his Praise; he proceeds immediately to the Contradiction, so often objected to the Pyrrhonians; for this very Reason, that you know nothing, you know one thing. "Arcefilas ——— introduxit genus Philosophiae ἀγνώστων, quod latine instabile, five incognitans possumus dicere. Ut enim nihil sciri posset sciendum sit, aliquid scire necesse est, nam si omnino nihil scias, id ipsum nihil sciri posse tolletur. Itaque qui velut sententiae loco pronuntiavit nihil sciri, tanquam praeceptum proficitur, & cognitum, ergo aliquid sciri potest. Huic simile est illud, quod in scholis proponi solet in assidat generis exemplum, somniasse quandam, ne somniis crederet. Si enim crederet, tum sequitur, ut credendum non sit; si autem non crederet, tum sequitur, ut credendum sit. Ita si nihil sciri potest, necesse est id ipsum sciri, quod nihil sciat. Si autem scitur, posse nihil sciri, falsum est ergo quod dicitur nihil sciri posse. Sic inducitur dogma sibi ipsi repugnans, seque dissolvens (76). Arcefilas introduced a kind of wavering, uncertain, Philosophy. For, in order to know, That nothing can be known, we must necessarily know something; for if you know nothing at all, this very knowledge, that nothing can be known, will be destroyed. He, therefore, who gives it as his Opinion, that Nothing is known, professes to know something; a something therefore may be known. Akin to this is That Example of this kind of Philosophy usually propos'd in the Schools; that a certain Person dreams, that he ought not to believe in Dreams. For if he did believe in them, it follows, that he ought not to believe in them; but if he did not believe in them, it follows, that he ought to believe in them. Thus,

(70) Thyffius's Note on this Expresssion is ridiculous. Qui se invicem conficiunt, (71) 1793 he, fictus Cleomedes de sociis, apud Spartano, teste Plutarcho. Could be not see, that Laetantius speaks not of the Historical, but the Fabulous Time, and of that Men, who sprung from the Teeth of a Dragon, sown by Cadmus.

(72) Laetant. lib. 3. c. 4. pag. 154.

(73) Id. ib.

(74) Id. ib. pag. 155.

(75) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(76) Id. ib. cap. 5. pag. 156.

(77) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(78) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(79) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(80) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(81) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(82) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(83) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(84) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(85) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(86) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(87) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(88) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(89) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(90) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(91) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(92) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(93) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(94) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(95) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

(96) Id. ib. c. 6. p. 157.

of a very persuasive Eloquence, which never wandered too far from the main Subject, and had moreover an happy Talent at answering Objections, he drew a great Number of Disciples to his Auditory [G], though he was severe in his Censures. In general, the World was persuaded of his Integrity; and he filled his Scholars with great Expectations; which made them submit the more readily to his Rebukes, though a little too severe (f). Some affirm, that he play'd the Sceptic, only to try his Scholars [H]; and that, after this Probation, he taught them in another manner. He distributed his Money as freely as any Man in the World; and very great things are said of his Liberality [I]. He is accused of Vanity, and of affecting Popularity.

100

(f) Diogen.
Laërt. lib. 4.
p. 17.

(77) Id. ib.
pag. 158.

“ if nothing can be known, we must necessarily know
 “ this very thing, that nothing is known. But, if it “ be known, that nothing can be known, it is false, “ which is pretended, that nothing can be known.
 “ Thus an Opinion is advanced, which is repugnant
 “ to, and destructive of, itself”. Lastly, Lactantius “ confesses, that, with relation to Physics, there is no “ such thing as Science, and that it ought not to be so “ much as sought after. — “ Quanto sacrer sapientius ac “ verius, si exceptione facta dicretur causas rationes-“ que duntaxat rerum coelestium seu naturalium, “ quia sunt abditæ, nesciri posse, quia nullus do-“ ceat, nec quæri oportere, quia inveniri querendo “ non possunt (77). — How much more wisely and “ truly would it be have reason’d, if he had said only,
 “ that the Causes and Reasons of Heavenly or Natu“ ral Things, as being hid, could not be known; since “ there is no Teacher to instruct us in them; and that “ we ought not to enquire after them, since no Enquiry “ will discover them ?

Let us now make some short Remarks of this Dispute. I. The Argument, he makes use of, to overthrow all the Sects of Philosophy, by each other, proves too much. An Atheist, who should make use of it, at present, to overthrow the Christian Religion, would reason ill; the Christian Sects mutually condemn each other; I grant it; but if you should condemn any one of them in all it's Doctrinal Points, you would not have the Suffrages of all the rest. II. La-tantius contradicts himself wretchedly. He confesses, that, if there be no Science among Men, Arceslaus gains the Victory; and he pretends to have demonstrated, that we are too frail to attain to Science. Why then does he presently add, that Arceslaus loses the Victory, because there are actually several Sciences among Men? III. The Examples he alleges are nothing to the purpose: For, in the Sense, in which the Word is taken in this Dispute, it is not Science, to discern Good from Bad; nor has this kind of Knowledge been call'd in question by the Acateleptics. IV. The Charge of Contradiction has less of Solidity in it than of false Lultré; it is rather a Subtily, than a convincing Reason; good Sense soon unravel the Difficulty. If I dream, that I ought not to believe in Dreams, I am caught in a Trap; for, if I do not believe in them, I do believe in them; and, if I do believe in them, I do not believe in them. Who sees not, that, in this case, the particular Dream, which advises me not to believe in Dreams, must be excepted from all other Dreams? See, in Seneca Empiricus, what the Sceptics reply'd to this Objection. V. La-tantius's Confession, as to Physics, was not at all proper to his Design: An Advantage might be drawn from it against his own Cause.

(78) Cicero,
de Natura Deorum,
lib. 1. cap. 5.

(70) Τὸν Θεόφραστον κνικέμενον Φαεῖν εἰπεῖν ὡς ἐνφωτὴς καὶ εὐσταχέρι-τος ἄνευλαβοῦς τῆς διατρι-βῆς αἰν ὑπανόχοις. -- Theophrastus, they say, was grieved at his Departure, and said, How ingenious and ready a Youth has left the School. Diog.
Laërt. ubi
supra. n. 30.
See also n.
17.

[G] He drew a great Number of Disciples to his Auditory.] An Attempt to run down all Science, and to reject not only the Testimony of Sense, but That of Reason too; the boldest, that ever was form'd in the Republick of Letters. It is like That of the Alexanders, and other Conquerors, who would subdue all Nations; It requires much Wit, much Eloquence, much Reading, and deep Meditation. "Si fingulas disciplinas percipere magnum est, quanto majus omnes? quod facere is necesse est, quibus propositum est veri rependi causa, & contra omnes Philosophos pro omnibus dicere (78). — If it is a great attainment to be Master of a single Science, how much a greater is it to understand All? which they must necessarily do, who propose to investigate Truth, and to defend All the Philosophers against All the Philosophers". Arctifas was as fit for such an Undertaking, as a Man could be. Nature and Art had concurr'd to qualify him completely. He was naturally of a happy Genius, and of a ready and lively Wit (79); his Person and Presence were engaging; he spoke with a good Grace; the Charms of his Countenance might be drawn forth, & regulated, & down cast.

nance admirably seconded those of his Voice; and he had learnt, under good Masters, all that was most proper to perfect his Natural Abilities; I mean to extend their Force by the Combination of several different Powers. You will find This Detail in Numenius; but deliver'd with an odious Turn. Numenius did not love Arcefilas; yet could not forbear expressing himself thus; Πλήν τοῖς ἀκκοῖσι πρῆσαν, ὅμα τῇ ἀκροῖσι εὐπρόσφορον ὄληε Σωμῶνι· ἢ νῦν ἀκούμενοι· καὶ βαλόμενοι· ἡΐς· ἔπει τοῖς περσέσι δ' ἔθνας ἀποδύχοντα αὐτῷ τὸν λόγον ἰοῦλας ἀπὸ καλῶς προσωπι τε καὶ σώματος, ἐκ αὐτοῦ τῆς ἢ τοῖς ὀμμασι εἰκοθεροῦσιν (80). Yet be engaged the Attention of his Hearers; whilst, as be spoke, they beheld the greatest Dignity of Apele. For be clamor'd both the Eyes and Ears; for which Reason what be said was favourably heard, as it flowed from pleasing Lips, attended with a certain Native Sweetness in his Looks. He says likewise, that Arcefilas thunderstruck the Stoics by his various ways of confuting his Antagonists. Let us repeat the whole Passage; it will then the great Dexterity of our Philosopher, and the great Esteem he had acquired. 'Οἱ Σταῖοι δὲ ὑπὸ πῶν ἐκπεπληγμένοι. ἡ μῦσα γὰρ αὐτοῖς ἐδὲ τότε ἦν φιλολόγῳ, ἐδ' ἐργάσι χαρίτων, ὅρ ἂν Ἀρεσίλλῳ, τὰ μὲν περικραῖον, τὰ δὲ ὑπομέμον, ἀλλὰ δ' ὑποσκελίζον, καλεῖσθαι ἤξεστο αὐτῆς, καὶ πιδανῶν ἦν. Τοιγαρὶν σπῆς ἔς μὲν ἀνέκλυτον, ἡτάρ κενῶν, ἐν οἷς δὲ λέγων ἦν, καταπεπληγμένον, δεδωκένον πως τοῖς τότε ἀνδρωτοῖσι ὑπέρχον, μὴδὲν εἶναι μὴτ' ἢ πῶς, μὴτε πάδος, μὴτε ἔργον ἐν ὅσῳ, μὴδὲ ἀρχῶν ποταμῶν ὁδῶν ὅσον ποτ' αἰ τι μὲν Ἀρεσίλλῳ δοκεῖ τὸ Πιτάνῳ (81). The Stoic beard the things with Alimentment. For their Maje was as yet unskilled, nor Arcefilas of that Address, by which Arcefilas, variously confuting and baffling Zeno's Arguments, o'rewhelm'd them with a torrent of Words, and established his Credits. Thus when They, with whom be disputed, were overcome, and They, before whom be spoke, remain'd astonished and confounded, it was evident to the World at that time, that no Opinions were right or wrong, but such as were approved, or condemned, by Arcefilas of Pitane. The preceding Remarks might have been sufficient to establish the Merit of Arcefilas. But here is a new one. Some one, in Cicero, says, that no one would ever have followed This Philosopher's Opinion, if the manifest Absurdity of it had not disappeared under the Eloquence and Dexterity of the Teacher. Qui ista tam aperte perspicueque & perscruta & falsa sequutus esset, nisi tantum in Arcefilas --- ἐξ copia rerum, & dicendi vii fuisset (82).

[H] Some affirm, that he play'd the Sceptic, only to try his Scholars. Sextus Empiricus, having said, that Arcesilas did not seem to differ from the Pyrrhonians; adds, that, if certain Reports were to be credited, he was a Pyrrhonian only in Appearance: who, in the main, followed the method of the Dogmatists. The Question he proposed to his Auditors, to discover whether they had Genius enough to comprehend the Doctrine of Plato, made him looked upon as a Philosopher, who affirmed nothing; but he deliver'd Plato's Doctrine, in a Dogmatical way, to Those, in whom he had discover'd a sound Understanding (83). It is difficult to know whether this Relation be true. See the Dissertations of Mr Foucher on the Philosophy of the Academics (84), and the Annotations of Thomas Aldobrandinus, to which I refer you (85).

[1] Very great things are said of his Liberality. He did good, and endeavoured to conceal it. Ἐνεστέησαι πρόχρηστος ἦν, καὶ λαβεῖν τὴν χάριν αὐτοφύστα. (86). Erat ad ferenda beneficia promptus; latere quoque gratiam omni studio quærebat, fastum ejusmodi maxime exhorrens. This was practising the (80) Name.

nius, apud Euseb. Præp.
Evang. l. 14.
cap. 6. pag.
730, D.

(81) Id. Re
p. 733. C.

(82) Cicero,
Academ.
Quæst. 1. 4.
cap. 18. fin.

(83) Sextus Empiricus, Pyrrhon.
Hypotypof.
lib. i. c. 33.

(84) Fou-cher. lib. 1.
pag. 32. &
lib. 3. pag.
154. &c.

(8:) Th. Aldrobrand. in Diog. Laert.
lib. 4. p. 28.

(86) Diogen.
Laërt. lib. 4.
n. 37.

(g) Id. ib. n. 41. too much (g). The other Philosophers took a Pleasure in censuring him (b); but did they equal him in Modesty, and a Freedom from Jealousy? Did they exhort their Disciples to hear other Professors? This He did (i). One of his Pupils having signified, that he should chuse to be the Disciple of a certain Peripatetic, he carried him to the Professor, and recommended him to his Care (k). Another time, he expelled a Disciple his School for having affronted Cleanthes, in a Verse of a Comedy; and would not restore him to Favour, 'till the Person offended had received Satisfaction (l). The Merit of this Action will appear the greater, when it is known, that Cleanthes was the Successor of Zeno, who had been Arcefilas's Adversary. This Person was very free from the failing of most Plagiaries; for he declared openly, that he taught nothing but what he had found in Books (m). It is probable he acted thus to give the greater Authority to his Opinions, and to take off the Odium, which the Name of Innovator drew upon him. He had no Inclination to meddle with Politics (n): Nevertheless, when he was appointed to go to Demetrius to negotiate some Affairs with King Antigonus, in Favour of his Country, he accepted the Deputation. He returned without Success; probably because he never would compliment that Prince, or go to Court, or write Consolatory Letters to him after the Loss of a Sea-Fight (o), as several others had done (p). He had a great share in the Friendship of the Governor of the Pireum (q), and received several fine Presents from Eumenes, Prince of Pergamus (r). He had a very fine Thought concerning Death; for he said, that, of all human Evils, this was the only one, whose Presence is never troublesome to any one, and which makes us uneasy only by it's Absence (s). His Doctrines tended to overthrow all Precepts of Morality; and yet it is observable, that he practised them. The Testimony given him, on this occasion, by the Stoic Cleanthes, his Answer, and the other's Reply, are very curious [K]. He was never married (t); though he was of an amorous Constitution; and followed the bent of his Inclinations but too freely, and even to shameful Excesses [L]. He flourished about the CXXth Olympiad (u), and died of a Delirium, occasioned by excessive Drinking, at Seventy five Years of Age (x), in the fourth Year of the CXXXIVth Olympiad (y). He boasted of his great Patience during a Fit of the Gout [M]. Diogenes Laërtius has not given him Bion for his Successor: Father Rapin imagined this without the least ground [N]. I have but one Fault to charge Mr Motieri

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Id. ib.

(r) Id. ib.

(s) Id. ib.

(t) Id. ib.

(u) Id. ib.

(v) Id. ib.

(w) Id. ib.

(x) Id. ib.

(y) Id. ib.

(z) Id. ib.

(aa) Id. ib.

(ab) Id. ib.

(ac) Id. ib.

(ad) Id. ib.

(ae) Id. ib.

(af) Id. ib.

(ag) Id. ib.

(ah) Id. ib.

(ai) Id. ib.

(aj) Id. ib.

(ak) Id. ib.

(al) Id. ib.

(am) Id. ib.

(an) Id. ib.

(ao) Id. ib.

(ap) Id. ib.

(aq) Id. ib.

(ar) Id. ib.

(as) Id. ib.

(at) Id. ib.

(au) Id. ib.

(av) Id. ib.

(aw) Id. ib.

(ax) Id. ib.

(ay) Id. ib.

(az) Id. ib.

(ba) Id. ib.

(bb) Id. ib.

(bc) Id. ib.

(bd) Id. ib.

(be) Id. ib.

(bf) Id. ib.

(bg) Id. ib.

(bh) Id. ib.

(bi) Id. ib.

Gospel Precept, before it was declared. "Having made a Visit to Ctesibius, who was Sick, and wanted Necessaries, he dexterously convey'd a Purse of Money under his Pillow (87)." Seneca tells us this. Arcefilas, ut aiunt, amico pauperi, & paupertatem suam dissimulanti, egro autem, & ne hoc quidem consentienti deesse sibi in iumentum ad necessarios usus, cum clam succurrendum iudicasset, pulvino ejus ignorantis sacculum subiecit, ut homo inutiliter verecundus, quod desiderabat, inveniret potius quam acciperet (88). Plutarch relates the same Fact more at large, but supposes, that the sick Person was not Ctesibius; he calls him Apelles of Chio (89). Let us add, that Arcefilas, having lent some Silver Plate to a Friend, who was to make a Feast, would never demand it afterwards, supposing that it was given, not lent. Some say, that, considering the Necessity of his Friend, he refused to receive it again, when it was returned to him (90).

[K] The Testimony given him, on this Occasion, by Cleanthes, His Answer, and the other's Reply, are very curious. When once a Man affirms, that there is nothing certain, and that all is incomprehensible, he in effect declares, that it is uncertain whether there be any such thing as Virtue or Vice. Now such a Tenet seems calculated to inspire an Indifference for Probity and for all the Duties of Civil Life. For which Reason Arcefilas's Adversaries tax'd him with having neglected all those Duties. They pretended, that he lived according to his Principles. But Cleanthes, though of a Sect very opposite to This Philosopher, took his part. Hold your Tongue, said he to one of these Censurers, condemn not Arcefilas; he overthrows the Duties by his Words, but establishes them by his Actions. Παύσαι, ἔφη, καὶ μὴ λέγε, εἰ γὰρ καὶ λόγῳ τὸ καθήκον ἀναίρει, τοῖς γούν ἐργοῖς αὐτὸ τιθεῖ (91). Quiesce, inquit, neque vituperes; ille enim est verbis officium tollit, operibus tamen id ponit. Arcefilas answer'd, That he did not love to be flatter'd; Is it Flattery, replied Cleanthes, to maintain, that you say one thing, and do another (92)? This Repartee is smart enough. Probably he alluded to a Verse of Homer, which imports, that Hypocrites and Dissemblers, whose Thoughts are contrary to their Words, ought to be detested as Hell (93). However, at the bottom, This was a great Commendation of the good Life of Arcefilas. By the way, there was a Theory in the Doctrine of the rigidest *Pyrrhonian*s favourable to Virtue; for, whatever the real Nature of things might be, they taught, that, as to Practice, Men ought to behave according to Appearances. Be that as it will, the true Principle of our Morals depends so little upon the speculative Judgment, which we form of the Nature of things, that nothing is more common, than Orthodox Christians, who live ill, and Free-Thinkers, who live well.

[L] He followed the Bent of his Inclinations - - - even to shameful Excesses. The good Qualities, mentioned in the Body of this Article, and in the preceding Remark, were joined, in his Person, with the most criminal Lewdness. So true it is, that Vice and Virtue are sometimes in Alliance. He publicly visited Theodota and Phileta, two common Women. Καὶ Θεοδότην τε καὶ Φιλετάν, ἡλίσαιαι ἑταίραις, συνέκειν πανεύχως (94). Theodota item at Phileta, Elisibus scortis, palam congredebatur. The worst is, He was addicted to the Sin against Nature. Φιλομεράχιός τε ἦν καταφάρως. ἔθεν οἱ περὶ Ἀρίσωνα τὸν Χίον Σταῖκοι ἐπακαλὺν αὐτὸν ᾠδοῦσα τῶν νέων, καὶ κιναιδολόγον καὶ δεσπὸν ἀποκαλῶντες (95). He was fond of Boys, and of an amorous Complexion; insomuch, that the Stoic Arillo of Chios was wont to call him A Corrupter of Youth, and an impudent Boaster of his unnatural Amours.

[M] He boasted of his great Patience during a Fit of the Gout. Nothing ascends from those Parts hither, said he to Carnades the Epicurean, afflicted to see him in so much Torment, Nothing, said he, pointing at the same time to his Feet, and Breast. Is quum arderet podagra doloribus, vixissetque hominem Carnades Epicuri per familiaris, & tristis exiret, mane quæso, inquit, Carnades noster, nihil illinc hic pervenit, ostendens pedes & pectus (96). This was talking like a Stoic, tho' Arcefilas was The Antagonist of The Founder of That Sect.

[N] Diogenes Laërtius has not given him Bion for Successor. Father Rapin imagined this, without the least Ground. These are his Words: "Cicero, who knew Plato's Successors very well, says no- thing of This Bion, whom Diogenes gives Arce-

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Id. ib.

(r) Id. ib.

(s) Id. ib.

(t) Id. ib.

(u) Id. ib.

(v) Id. ib.

(w) Id. ib.

(x) Id. ib.

(y) Id. ib.

(z) Id. ib.

(aa) Id. ib.

(ab) Id. ib.

(ac) Id. ib.

(ad) Id. ib.

(ae) Id. ib.

(af) Id. ib.

(ag) Id. ib.

(ah) Id. ib.

(ai) Id. ib.

(aj) Id. ib.

(ak) Id. ib.

(al) Id. ib.

(am) Id. ib.

(an) Id. ib.

(ao) Id. ib.

(ap) Id. ib.

(aq) Id. ib.

(ar) Id. ib.

(as) Id. ib.

(at) Id. ib.

(au) Id. ib.

(av) Id. ib.

(aw) Id. ib.

(ax) Id. ib.

(ay) Id. ib.

(az) Id. ib.

(ba) Id. ib.

(bb) Id. ib.

(bc) Id. ib.

(bd) Id. ib.

(be) Id. ib.

(bf) Id. ib.

(bg) Id. ib.

(bh) Id. ib.

(bi) Id. ib.

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Id. ib.

(r) Id. ib.

(s) Id. ib.

(t) Id. ib.

(u) Id. ib.

(v) Id. ib.

(w) Id. ib.

(x) Id. ib.

(y) Id. ib.

(z) Id. ib.

(aa) Id. ib.

(ab) Id. ib.

(ac) Id. ib.

(ad) Id. ib.

(ae) Id. ib.

(af) Id. ib.

(ag) Id. ib.

(ah) Id. ib.

(ai) Id. ib.

(aj) Id. ib.

(ak) Id. ib.

(al) Id. ib.

(am) Id. ib.

(an) Id. ib.

(ao) Id. ib.

(ap) Id. ib.

(aq) Id. ib.

(ar) Id. ib.

(as) Id. ib.

(at) Id. ib.

(au) Id. ib.

(av) Id. ib.

(aw) Id. ib.

(ax) Id. ib.

(ay) Id. ib.

(az) Id. ib.

(ba) Id. ib.

(bb) Id. ib.

(bc) Id. ib.

(bd) Id. ib.

(be) Id. ib.

(bf) Id. ib.

(bg) Id. ib.

(bh) Id. ib.

(bi) Id. ib.

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Id. ib.

(r) Id. ib.

(s) Id. ib.

(t) Id. ib.

(u) Id. ib.

(v) Id. ib.

(w) Id. ib.

(x) Id. ib.

(y) Id. ib.

(z) Id. ib.

(aa) Id. ib.

(ab) Id. ib.

(ac) Id. ib.

(ad) Id. ib.

(ae) Id. ib.

(af) Id. ib.

(ag) Id. ib.

(ah) Id. ib.

(ai) Id. ib.

(aj) Id. ib.

(ak) Id. ib.

(al) Id. ib.

(am) Id. ib.

(an) Id. ib.

(ao) Id. ib.

(ap) Id. ib.

(aq) Id. ib.

(ar) Id. ib.

(as) Id. ib.

(at) Id. ib.

(au) Id. ib.

(av) Id. ib.

(aw) Id. ib.

(ax) Id. ib.

(ay) Id. ib.

(az) Id. ib.

(ba) Id. ib.

(bb) Id. ib.

(bc) Id. ib.

(bd) Id. ib.

(be) Id. ib.

(bf) Id. ib.

(bg) Id. ib.

(bh) Id. ib.

(bi) Id. ib.

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Id. ib.

(r) Id. ib.

(s) Id. ib.

(t) Id. ib.

(u) Id. ib.

(v) Id. ib.

(w) Id. ib.

(x) Id. ib.

(y) Id. ib.

(z) Id. ib.

(aa) Id. ib.

(ab) Id. ib.

(ac) Id. ib.

(ad) Id. ib.

(ae) Id. ib.

(af) Id. ib.

(ag) Id. ib.

(ah) Id. ib.

(ai) Id. ib.

(aj) Id. ib.

(ak) Id. ib.

(al) Id. ib.

(am) Id. ib.

(an) Id. ib.

(ao) Id. ib.

(ap) Id. ib.

(aq) Id. ib.

(ar) Id. ib.

(as) Id. ib.

(at) Id. ib.

(au) Id. ib.

(av) Id. ib.

(aw) Id. ib.

(ax) Id. ib.

(ay) Id. ib.

(az) Id. ib.

(ba) Id. ib.

(bb) Id. ib.

(bc) Id. ib.

(bd) Id. ib.

(be) Id. ib.

(bf) Id. ib.

(bg) Id. ib.

(bh) Id. ib.

(bi) Id. ib.

(p) Id. ib.

(q) Id. ib.

(r) Id.

reri with ; to wit, his saying, that Arcefilas studied under Xantibus, and under Theophrastus, before he came to Athens. I have observed a very gross Error in Sidonius Apollinaris [O].

(97) Rapin. Compar. de Platon & d' Aristote, part 4. c. 1. pag. 369.
(98) Diog. Lært. lib. 4. n. 59. in Laërtis, init.
(99) Id. ib. n. 51. 52. in Bione.

"filas for his Successor, and who made himself famous by the Vehemency of his Satires, according to Horace (97)." The only ground Father Rapin can have for what he says, is, that The Life of Bion immediately follows That of Arcefilas, in the Works of Diogenes Laërtius. This Reason is void ; since the Author expressly says, That Lacydes was the Successor of Arcefilas (98), and that Bion, being also a Hearer of Crates, despised the Opinions of the Academy, and afterwards embraced another Sect (99).

[O] I have observed a very gross Error in Sidonius Apollinaris. He pretends, that, according to Arcefilas, who preceded Socrates, God is the Efficient Cause of the Universe, and Atoms the Material Cause of it.

Post hos Arcefilas divina mente patratam
Conjicit hanc molem, confectam partibus illis

Quas atomos vocat ipse leves. Socratica post hunc Secta micat, quæ de naturæ pondere migrans
Ad mores hominum limandos transtulit usum (100).

Next these, Arcefilas supposed the World
Form'd, by a Mind divine, of lightest Atoms.
The Sect of Socrates succeeded next,
Which, quitting nat'ral Things, applied Philosophy
To polish and inform the Human Mind.

Savaro, without taking notice of this Mistake in Chronology, is contented with observing, that every one ascribes to Epicurus, and Democritus, the Doctrine, which Sidonius Apollinaris attributes to Arcefilas (101). This Observation is wrong ; for no one ever pretended, that Democritus and Epicurus taught, that the Universe was the Work of God.

(100) Sidon. Apollin. Carm. 15. ver. 94. pag. 152.

(101) Savaro in hunc locum Sidonii Apollinaris.

ARCHELAUS. Diogenes Laërtius mentions Four Persons, who bore this Name (a) ; to wit, ARCHELAUS, the Philosopher (b) ; ARCHELAUS, the Author of a Description of all the Countries, through which Alexander carried his Arms ; ARCHELAUS, who described the marvellous Properties of certain things in Verse (c) ; and ARCHELAUS, the Orator, who wrote a Treatise of Rhetoric. Mr Menage adds, to these Four, ARCHELAUS, King of Cappadocia ; ARCHELAUS, King of Sparta ; ARCHELAUS, General of Mithridates ; ARCHELAUS, the Dancer ; ARCHELAUS, the Musician ; and ARCHELAUS, the Comedian (d). He observes, that Lucian mentions the latter in his Treatise, de conscribenda Historia ; That Athenæus, in his first Book, speaks of him, who played upon Instruments of Music (e) ; and that Clemens Alexandrinus mentions the Dancer [A], in the seventh Book of the Stromata. He forgot ARCHELAUS the Astrologer (f), and several other Archebaus's, of some of whom I shall speak in the following Articles.

(a) Diogen. Lært. lib. 2. in Archebau.

(b) He, who is the Subject of the following Article.

(c) See Remark [H] of the following Article.

(d) Menage. in Diogen. Lært. lib. 2. n. 17.

(e) See Remark [H] of the Article ABDERA.

(f) Cicero de Divinat. lib. 2. c. 42. some Manuscripts have it ARCHEBAU.

[A] He observes — that Athenæus, in his first Book, speaks of him, who played upon Instruments of Music, and that Clemens Alexandrinus mentions the Dancer. Mr Menage understood the Rules of a just and learned Method of Citation, but he does not observe them upon this Occasion. He should have quoted the first Book of Athenæus, in relation Archebau the Dancer ; not the seventh of the Stromata of Clemens Alexandrinus : For, besides that the Right of Seniority does not belong to the latter, we find some Particulars in Athenæus, but none in the Stromata. Athenæus relates, that King Aniobius had no Favourite, whom he esteemed more, than Archebau the Dancer (1). This Author had observed, in the same Page, that the Inhabitants of Miletum dedicated a brazen Statue to Archebau the Fiddler ; if I may be permitted thus to translate Ἀρχιβαύς τῷ κιθάραῖς, Archebau the Citharist.

(1) Athen. lib. 1. c. 16. pag. 19.

ARCHELAUS, a Greek Philosopher, and Disciple of Anaxagoras, was, as some say, of Athens, or, as others will have it (a), of Miletum. What is very certain, is, that he taught at Athens. It is said too, that he was the first, who brought over Philosophy thither [A]. He made but little Alteration in the Doctrine of Anaxagoras

(a) Diogen. Lært. lib. 2. n. 16.

[A] He was the first who brought over Philosophy to Athens. Several Critics have observed, on this Head, the Opposition, which is found between Diogenes Laërtius, and Clemens Alexandrinus. The one attributes this Translation to Archebau, the other to Anaxagoras. Οὗτος (Ἀρχιβαύς) πρῶτος ἐκ τῆς Ἰωνίας τὴν φυσικὴν φιλοσοφίαν μέλιν' ἄγειν Ἀθήνας (1). Archebau was the first, who brought Natural Philosophy from Ionis to Athens. These are the Words of Diogenes Laërtius ; the following belong to Clemens Alexandrinus : Οὗτος (Ἀναξαγόρας) μέλιν' ἄγειν ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰωνίας Ἀθήνας τὴν διαλεκτικὴν (2). Anaxagoras translated the School from Ionis to Athens. No Person, that I know of, has endeavoured to reconcile these two Opinions, or discover the Origin of this Diversity. To me it seems obvious enough, from what I am going to observe. Anaxagoras came a very young Philosopher to Athens, and lived there thirty Years (3). It is not impossible, but that his Master Anaximenes continued to philosophize in Ionis during part of This Interval (4). We may likewise suppose, that Diogenes, his other Disciple, succeeded him. Now if Thales's Chair in Ionis was not vacant, whilst Anaxagoras philosophiz'd at Athens, it is false, that he transported Thales's School to That City. Such a Translation supposes, that the Succession failed,

(1) Diogen. Lært. lib. 2. n. 16.

(2) Clem. Alexandr. Stromat. lib. 2. pag. 301.

(3) Diogen. Lært. lib. 2. n. 7.

(4) What Diog. Lært. lib. 2. n. 3. says concerning the time of the Death of Anaximenes is ridiculous.

upon Anaxagoras's Removal. All that can be said, with Truth, is, that, before This Philosopher read Lectures at Athens, no Disciple of the Sect of Ionis had taught among the Athenians. Perhaps Clemens Alexandrinus, and the Authors he followed, meant no more ; but did not take the trouble of expressing themselves more exactly. Be That as it will, I think, by Casaubon's good leave (5), that Diogenes Laërtius has expressed himself with more Exactness. For you must know, that Anaxagoras, leaving Athens, retired to Lampascus, where he taught till his Death. His Chair in Lampascus was filled by his Disciple Archebau (6), who went afterwards to philosophize at Athens (7). Archebau, then, was properly the Person, who transported the School of Thales from Ionis to Athens : This was a true Translation : But it could not be deemed so before ; since, perhaps, this School had never been vacant during the time, which past between Anaxagoras's Journey to Athens, and his Retirement to Lampascus ; or, if it suffered any Interruption, it was speedily repaired by That Philosopher's Return into Ionis. It will be in vain to object, that no Writer remains, who has affirmed, that Diogenes was the Successor of Anaximenes : For I may reply, I. That we have nothing exact in the History of the ancient Philosophers ; and consequently, This Silence does not take away the Right of supposing what I do.

(5) Casubon, on this Passage of Laërtius, censures him, and declares for Clem. Alexandr. Mr Menage desires the same.

(6) Euseb. Præpar. Evang. l. 10. cap. ult. pag. 504.

(7) Id. ib.

Anaxagoras (b); he held, with him, that the Similar Parts were the Material Principle of all Things, and the Divine Wisdom the Cause of the Formation of Bodies. He also taught, like him, that all Animals, not excepting Men, were produced out of

do. II. That, Anaxagoras having been more famous than Diogenes, and having had a Disciple, who continued the Succession; having also, as is probable enough, survived Diogenes; the Succession of the Ionian Sect is with more reason continued in him, than in the other. It is very probable, that Sidenius Apollinaris associates these Disciples of Anaximenes, as two Colleagues, who were the Support of That School.

Quartus Anaxagoras Thaletica dogmata servat:
Sed divinum animum sentit, qui fecerit orbem.
Junior huic junctus refidet collega, sed idem
Materiam cunctis creaturis ætra credens Judicat inde Deum, faceret quo cuncta (8), tu-lisse (9).

The Fourth in order, Anaxagoras
Subscribed to Thales's Doctrine; yet acknowledg'd
A Mind Divine, Creator of the World.
His younger Colleague taught, that Air contained
The sole Materials of creating Art.

I proceed to other Conjectures. Our learnedest Critics (10) take for the surest Foundation of Anaxagoras's Age, what Diogenes Laërtius says; that, at the Time of the Expedition of Xerxes, That Philosopher was twenty Years old. From whence they take the Liberty to infer, that, since he lived Seventy two Years, he died in the LXXXVIIIth Olympiad. I shall not dispute this Point. But I have Difficulties to raise against what Laërtius says, that Anaxagoras began his Journey to Athens at twenty Years of Age, and lived in That City thirty Years. It seems very unlikely to me, that he should make choice of the time of Xerxes's Expedition for This Journey, when the Asiatics in general did not doubt, but the Republic of Athens would be destroyed. However, not to insist on this, let us pass on to stronger Instances. If Diogenes Laërtius be right, it must follow, that Anaxagoras lived at Athens only 'till the second Year of the LXXXIIId Olympiad; for Xerxes's Expedition fell out in the last Months of the LXXIVth Olympiad, and the beginning of the LXXVth. But does not Diodorus Siculus affirm, that This Philosopher was accused of Impiety, at Athens, in the second Year of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad (11)? He destroys, then, the Account of Diogenes Laërtius; Yet not without being himself embarrassed in another Point; for what will become of the Story, that Socrates, after the Condemnation of Anaxagoras, became the Disciple of Archelaus (12)? What will become of a Fact, which others have vouched, viz. that Euripides forsook the Study of Natural Philosophy, and applied himself to the Theatre, on account of the Process against Anaxagoras (13)? Could Socrates, who was near forty Years of Age, according to the Chronology of Diodorus Siculus, at the time of That Trial, stand in need of another Master? Observe likewise, that, according to Porphyry, he began to follow the Philosopher Archelaus, at about seventeen Years of Age (14). Had not Euripides, who was above fifty Years of Age, at the time of the same Trial, began to write Tragedies 'till That Time? So far was He from delaying it so long, that he wrote one at eighteen (15). To clear up this Matter a little, and find some Method to reconcile these Accounts, we must return to Diogenes Laërtius, and quit Diodorus Siculus; for, supposing that Anaxagoras was accused in the LXXXIIId Olympiad, we shall find the pretended Consequences of this Trial, with regard to Euripides and Socrates, very possible. We may presuppose, that This Poet, having jointly studied Natural Philosophy, and wrote Tragedies, 'till he saw the Danger of Anaxagoras, confined his Studies afterwards to the Theatre alone. But what shall we do with Eusebius, who tells us, that Archelaus succeeded Anaxagoras, at Lampascus, before he became a Philosopher in Athens? This cannot be true, if Anaxagoras lived to the LXXXVIIIth Olympiad; a time, when Socrates, a greater Master than Archelaus, had no occasion to submit to his Discipline. Perhaps we ought to suppose, I. That Archelaus, having studied some Years at Athens, under Anaxagoras, assumed the Professor's Chair, upon his Master's retiring from thence. II. That, some time after, he rejoined him at Lampascus, and was his Successor there; and that, afterwards, returning from thence to Athens, he entirely transplanted Thales's School thither. It may be proper likewise to suppose, that Anaxagoras was accused more than once at Athens; and that, having withdrawn into Ionis about the Time of the first Trial, he was some time after recalled by Pericles, and accused a new after some Years Abode there. We have seen (16), that certain Authors relate, that he was accused by Thucydides, the Adversary of Pericles, and condemned to Death for Contumacy. Now, after the Banishment of this Thucydides, the Authority was in Pericles's Hands for fifteen Years (17); which shews, that Thucydides was banished fifteen Years before the Death of Pericles. From whence it should follow, that Anaxagoras had been condemned for Contumacy, at least fifteen or sixteen Years before the Death of Pericles: But, according to Diodorus Siculus (18), and Plutarch (19), he was accused a little before the beginning of the Peloponnesian War; that is, two or three Years before the Death of Pericles. We may therefore suppose, that he was twice accused; and, if we place his Return into Ionis, and his second Return to Athens, in the Interval between these two Accusations; a very considerable Difficulty will be removed by this means. Socrates was not a Disciple of Anaxagoras, though Diogenes Laërtius affirms it (20). I have proved this (21) by a very strong Reason; and can confirm it not only by the Silence of Plato and Xenophon, when the Circumstances of the Subject obliged them to mention it, but also by the Silence of the Accusers of Socrates, and by the Answers, which Socrates made to them. Would they have failed to reproach him with being instructed by a Philosopher, who had been condemned for Impiety? Would not this have rendered him more suspected? Would they have forgot this Circumstance? Would they have been satisfied with reproaching him, in general, that he philosophized like That impious Man? And, if he had actually been his Scholar, would he have replied as he did (22)? Let us conclude, then, that he was no Disciple of Anaxagoras. But how can we imagine, that he was not, if we suppose, that Anaxagoras did not leave Athens, 'till the Time, which Diodorus Siculus and Plutarch mention. In this case, would not Anaxagoras have flourished at Athens, when Socrates was at the prospect Age to chafe him for his Professor; and, if so, can any one conceive, that Socrates would attend the Lectures of Archelaus, and not Those of This Philosopher? Is it probable, that the former should set up a School at Athens, whilst Anaxagoras flourished in the same City? Or, if he did, that Socrates would prefer his Lectures before Those of Anaxagoras? These Difficulties may all be solved, if it be supposed, that this latter was twice banished; and that, in the Time, which passed between the two Condemnations, Archelaus philosophized at Athens.

There remains one Observation to be made against Plutarch. It must not be imagined, that he believed Anaxagoras died in the LXXXVIIIth Olympiad; For, when he relates the Prodigies, which preceded the Defeat of the Athenians at the River Egos (23); he says, that, according to the Predictions of this Philosopher, a great Stone fell from Heaven. This Misfortune of the Athenians happened in the fourth Year of the XCIIId Olympiad. It would be absurd, to suppose, that Plutarch meant, that Anaxagoras had predicted the Fall of such a Stone twenty Years before: He believed, then, that This Philosopher lived 'till the XCIIId Olympiad. Now this is a great Error. I suspect him much of an Anachronism, in placing the Fall of the Stone in the XCIIId Olympiad. Pliny, Eusebius, and the Arundelian Marbles, confute this. They place This Event in the LXXVIIIth Olympiad (24).

(b) See Remark [C].

(8) This, compared with what Cicero, de Nat. Deor. lib. 1. pag. 46, and St August. de Civit. Dei, lib. 8, cap. 2, say of Diogenes of Apollonia, shews that this Diogenes is the Pericles meant here.

(9) Apollinarius Carm. 15, vers. 89.

(10) See Scalig. in Euseb. lib. 1. cap. 103. Petavii Ration. Temporis, Pars I. lib. 3, cap. 8, pag. 140. Vollius de Scient. Mathem. cap. 33, n. 4. p. 148.

(11) Diod. Sicul. lib. 12, cap. 59. p. 433.

(12) Diogenes Laërt. lib. 2, n. 19.

(13) See the Article EURIPIDES, in the Text.

(14) See the Life of Socrates, by Mr. Charpentier, pag. 5.

(15) Aulus Gellius, lib. 15, cap. 20.

(16) See the Article ANAXAGORAS.

(17) See the Article PERICLES, pag. 161, E.

(18) Lib. 12, cap. 39. p. 433.

(19) Plutarch in Pericles, pag. 169.

(20) Diogenes Laërt. in Doctr. lib. 2, n. 19, 45.

(21) At the end of the Remark [R], of the Article ANAXAGORAS.

(22) See Citation (20), of the Article ANAXAGORAS.

(23) Ibid. Citation (13).

(24) Pliny, in the second Year. See Citation (13) of the Article ANAXAGORAS. Eusebius, in the fourth, and the Arundelian Marbles, in the fourth Year. See Harpocration, in Plin. Tom. 1, pag. 27.

of a Terrestrial Matter, Hot and Moist [B]. He applied himself principally to Natural Philosophy, as his Predecessors had done; but intermixed Morality with it a little more than they had done. He was not very Orthodox in this Point; since he maintained, that Human Laws were the Spring and Origin of Moral Good and Evil; that is, He did not admit a Natural, but only a Positive Right, and consequently believed, that all Actions were indifferent in their own Nature, and became Good or Evil, according as Mankind is pleased to declare them such by certain Laws (c). He wrote a Treatise of Natural Philosophy, according to Suidas; and He passed for the Author of some Elegies, designed to comfort Cimon, who was very much afflicted for the Death of his Wife (d). Socrates, the most famous of his Disciples, was his Successor (e). It will be proper to take some Notice of a Poet, whose Name was ARCHELAUS [C]. Diogenes Laërtius mentions him; but he is contented with preserving to us the Title of one of his Compositions.

(d) Plot. in Cimon. pag. 481.

(e) Cicero, Tuscul. lib. 5. Diog. Laërt. ubi supra. Clem. Alexandr. Strom. lib. 1. pag. 301. August. de Civit. Dei, lib. 8. cap. 2.

Such is the wretched State, in which the so much boasted Ancients have left the History of the Philosophers. A thousand Contradictions throughout, a thousand inconsistent Facts, and a thousand false Dates. Note, that I have not met with any Modern, who confutes those, who place the Death of Anaxagoras in the LXXVIIIth Olympiad (25); I say, who confutes them by Diodorus Siculus, and Plutarch, who both affirm, that this Philosopher was accused a little before the first Year of the Peloponnesian War (26).

[B] He also taught, like him, that all Animals, not excepting Men, were produced out of a Terrestrial Matter, hot and moist. The Accounts, preserved to us, of these Opinions, in the Authors, who report them, are so concise, that it is difficult to form any distinct Idea of them. Γεννάσθαι δὲ φησι τὰ ζῷα ἐκ θερμῆς τῆς γῆς, καὶ ἰσὺν παρὰ πλῆθος γάλακτι, οἷον τετρὴν, ἀνίσχουσιν. Οὕτω δὲ καὶ τῆς ἀνθρώπου ποιεῖται (27). He taught, that Animals sprang from a warm Earth, which sent forth a kind of milky Substance, by way of Nourishment; and that Men had the same Original. Thus Diogenes Laërtius expresses himself. He had said, that, according to this Philosopher's Opinion, the two Causes of Generation were Heat and Moisture

(28). He had also explained, how Water, Air, Earth, and Fire, proceeded from these two Principles; but I own, I cannot comprehend the meaning of his Words, and therefore will not be at the Pains of transcribing them. Mr Ménage, who inserted them in his Commentary, without any Note upon them, seems to have been ignorant of their Meaning. Other Commentators have not been more successful. They leave them to their Native Obscurity. Let us do the same, and have recourse to Plutarch, who has said, that, according to Archelaus, the infinite Air, the Condensation and Rarefaction of the Air, the one Fire, the other Water, were the Principles of all Things (29). Justin Martyr attributes very near the same Opinion to him (30). This seems to me to imply, that he held the Air to be the first Matter, and Fire and Water to be the Elements; but this was not his Opinion, if we may believe St Austin; for That Father attributes to him the Doctrine of Anaxagoras, concerning the Homœomeria, and the Intelligence, which combined them. "Anaxagoræ successit auditor ejus Archelaus: etiam ipse de particulis inter se dissimilibus, quibus singula quæque fierent, ita omnia constare putavit, ut incelle etiam mentem diceret, quæ cor-pora dissimilia, id est illas particulas, conjungendo & dissipando, ageret omnia (31). — To Anaxagoras succeeded his Scholar Archelaus; who held, likewise, such an Opinion concerning the dissimilar Particles, out of which all things were made, as to allow the Superintendency of a Mind, which, by uniting and dispersing the dissimilar Corpuscles, formed every thing." I believe St Austin is in the right; for Simplicius observes, that Archelaus, endeavouring to give an Explication distinct from all others, did nevertheless run into the same Principles with Anaxagoras, to wit, an Infinity of similar Particles (32). It is probable, that, as to the first Formation of Animals, they held the same Doctrines. We have seen what Archelaus's Opinion was; This was the Doctrine of Anaxagoras: Ζῷα γενέσθαι ἐξ ὕψου καὶ θερμῆς καὶ γάλακτος. ὅτερον δὲ ἐξ ἀλλήλων (33). Animals sprung originally from Moisture, Heat, and Earth; afterwards from one another. Since they admitted an Intelligence, which drew the Homœo-meria out of the Confusion, in which they originally were, we must believe, that they supposed, it to preside over the Production of Animals; for, if there be any Creature, the Formation of which stands in need of being directed by a Spirit, it is certainly the Machine of Animals. If what I suppose be true, They have said nothing on this Head, but what may be reconciled with the Holy Scripture; But if they believed, as many others have done, that, in the beginning, Men sprung out of the Earth by the mere Power of Moisture and Heat, &c. they believed the most ridiculous Thing in the World; nor could they know how to answer the Question, why, in succeeding Ages, Men were never seen to be produced the same way. The Question would not have puzzled them in the other Case, since they might have answered, as a Christian would do, that the Intelligence, having once formed Animals, endowed with necessary Parts of Generation, had no need to create any more; the Conservation of the Species being secured by the Instinct of Copulation in Male and Female.

[C] It will be proper to take some notice of a Poet, whose name was ARCHELAUS. He composed a Work on the particular Nature of Things, that is, on the Singularities and Properties, which distinguish them. What has been cited from it, will not suffer us to doubt, that this was the true Character of the Work. Diogenes Laërtius describes it by these Words: "Ὁ τὰ ἰδιόμοια ποιεῖται (34). Qui quæ cujus rei natura sunt propria, versu prodidit. Cassaubon should not have censured this Latin Translation, under pretence, that, according to the Testimony of Antigenus in Cassius, this Book of Archelaus was a Collection of Epigrams, in which the extraordinary and wonderful Properties of things, τὰ παρὰ φύσιν, τὰ θαυμάσια (35), are recorded; for this may very well agree with the Title given it by Diogenes Laërtius; and, in any Case, the Translator ought not to have given the Title a less general import, than that of the Greek Phrase. Vossius was not of Cassaubon's Opinion; since he has translated the Words of Diogenes Laërtius by, qui carmen fecit de propria cujusque rei natura (36). The Sense he gives these Words does not seem very just; he understands by them, that Archelaus had searched after things, the Nature of which was singular; quæ propriæ ac singulæ naturæ sunt; as that Goats are never without a Fever, and not that they breathe through the Ears, and not the Nostrils. Auribus capras spirare, non naribus, neququam febri carere, Archelaus auctor est (37). Athenæus has cited one Archelaus, ἐν τοῖς ἰδιόμοιοις, and given him the Surname of Chersonesius (38). Daléchamp has rendered this Greek by, sua propriaque stirpe genitis (39); and I wonder Vossius has not made use of the same Words in translating this Passage, as in That of Diogenes Laërtius (40): He has rendered it de proprietate naturæ, and yet believes, that Athenæus, and Diogenes Laërtius, mean the same Author. This is very probable; though Antigenus Carysius tells us, that Egypt was the Birth-place of Archelaus, who composed Epigrams on the wonderful Singularities of certain Things, and dedicated them to Ptolemy. It is possible, that One Archelaus, a Native of Chersonesus, might pass for an Egyptian; it is enough that he dwelt a long time in Egypt (41). Mr Ménage, who pretends, that, instead of ἰδιόμοιος, it ought to be read ἰσχυρῶς, in Diogenes Laërtius (42), seems 451.

(34) Ibid. lib. 2. n. 17.

(35) Cassaub. in Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 17.

(36) Vossius de Hist. Græcia, lib. 3. pag. 329.

(37) Plin. lib. 8. cap. 50.

(38) Athen. lib. 9. cap. ult. p. 409.

(39) Daléch. Annot. in Athen. pag. 766.

(40) Father Hardouin, in indice Auto-nomi Plinii, pag. 97, translates the ἰδιόμοιος by de rebus quæ singulis in locis propria signantur.

(41) Vossius, ubi supra.

(42) There are Examples of this kind. See Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 451.

(43) Ménage, in Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 17.

(c) Τὰ ζῷα καὶ τὰ ἀνθρώπων ἵσχυρῶς ἢ φύσει, ἀλλὰ νόμῳ. Justum & turpe non natura constare sed lege. Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 16.

(25) Diogenes Laërtius, lib. 2. n. 7, does place it in the fourth Year of the 79th Olympiad.

(26) That is, in the second Year of the 87th Olympiad.

(27) Diogenes Laërtius, lib. 2. n. 17.

(28) Instead of ὑγρὸν frigidum, it ought to be read ὕψον, humidum. See Mr Ménage in this Passage. But, note, that Hermias, in Philosophorum descriptio, pag. 177, affirms, that Archelaus gave, as Principles of all Things, θερμὸν καὶ ὑγρὸν, Hot and Cold.

(29) Plutarch, de placit. Phil. lib. 1, cap. 3. pag. 876.

(30) Justin Martyr, Admonit. ad Græcos, p. 4.

(31) Augustine, de Civit. Dei, lib. 8, cap. 2. See also Clem. Alex. in Protr. pag. 43.

(32) Simplicius, in 1. Lib. Physic. Arist.

(33) Diogenes Laërtius, lib. 2. n. 9.

nature. This Foundation is not solid; for, as the Book of Archelaus was not confined to that kind of Singularity, which distinguishes amphibious Animals, produced by the Copulation of Males and Females, of different Species, it is unreasonable to suppose, that the Author made use of a Title confined to this Sense. We should either correct the Scholiast by Diogenes Laërtius, or say, that Archelaus, having divided his Work into several Treatises, gave a particular Title to each Treatise; for Example, That of Δισοῦν to the Epigrams, in which he treats of amphibious Animals. On this Supposition, we may believe, that They, who cite Archelaus, Lib. I. ἀρετῆς ἀποβλεπῶν, de fluviis (43), Lib. I. ἀρετῆς λίθων, de lapidibus (44), cite part of a Work, the general Title of which was Ἰδισοῦν. But I should chuse to say, that another Archelaus is meant in these Places. I do not pass the same Judgment on the Citations of Artemidorus (45); I believe they relate to the Author of the Ἰδισοῦν.

Let us, here, wonder at the Frailty of human Memory. Vossius, in his Treatise of the Greek Historians, speaks learnedly of this Author; he sets down what he finds of him in Varro, Pliny, Antipater, Antigenes Carystius, &c. but remembers nothing of the Matter, when he afterwards comes to treat of the Greek Poets; where we read what follows: "Idem (Archelaus Phycus) ut ait Suidas, συνέταξε φιλοσοφίαν *." Id sic Lilius Gyraldus verit in 111. "Dialogo de Poëtis†: quæ naturæ propria sunt, multis versibus collegit. Itaque & Archelaum inter Poëtâs recenset. Sed addit, Poëtâm phycum esse alium ab Socratis magistro. At unde id astruit, non video. Nam Suidas clare ait φιλοσοφίαν conscriptam ab Archelao Phycico, Socratis magistro. Imò nec video, unde colligat, quempiam Archelaum carmine scripsisse de rerum natura. Saltem ex verbo συνέταξε, quo Suidas utitur, id colligi nequit. Et Lærtius, cùm dicat tres præterea Archelaos fuisse, non tamen Poëtâm in iis memorat (46). — The same (Archelaus the Naturalist) list, according to Suidas, composed a Treatise of Natural Philosophy; or, as Lilius Gyraldus understands

"the Greek of Suidas, collected in many Verses the Properties of Nature. Therefore he reckons Archelaus among the Poets. But he adds, that the Philosophical Poet is not the same with the Preceptor of Socrates. But how he can prove this, I am at a Loss to know. For Suidas expressly says, that the Treatise of Natural Philosophy was composed by Archelaus the Naturalist, the Master of Socrates. Nay, I cannot conceive, whence he gathers, that any Archelaus wrote of the Nature of Things in Verse. At least it does not follow from the Word συνέταξε, made use of by Suidas. And Diogenes Laërtius, where he says there were three Archelaus's besides, yet mentions no Poet among them." Behold a very learned Man, who imagines, I. That Gyraldus had in view the Greek Words of Suidas, and not those of Diogenes Laërtius, ὁ τὰ Ἰδισοῦν ποιήσας (47): II. That there was no Room to acknowledge a Poet Archelaus, different from the Naturalist: III. Nor to suppose, that an Archelaus wrote Verses on the Nature of Things: IV. That Diogenes Laërtius does not mention any Archelaus, who composed Verses. This must surprize us, if we consider it by itself; but it is much worse, when compared with the Three hundred and twenty ninth Page of the Book De Historicis Græcis. Mr Colomies has corrected the first of these four Faults of Vossius, and advanced some good things besides (48); but he is mistaken in supposing, that Plutarch's Words, in the Life of Cimon, concern Archelaus the Poet, for they relate to the Naturalist, to whom Socrates was a Disciple. He might have censured Gyraldus, who believed, that Archelaus, Author of the Ἰδισοῦν, was a Philosopher. Mr Moreri says the same without the least Ground; for a Person, who collects the singular and wonderful Properties of Animals, or Metals, &c. may well be called a Naturalist, or a Natural Historian, but not a Natural Philosopher; unless to the Facts he subjoins the Reasons of them, and a Discussion of their Causes. We do not find, that the Poet Archelaus did this. Mr Moreri affirms, that Diogenes Laërtius often cites him. Say rather, that he never cites him.

(47) Gyraldus has translated them Quæ naturæ propria sunt, multis versibus collegit. This Version is not better, than the's below, Citat. (39).

(48) Colomies, Notum in Gyrald. de Poëtis, pag. 147. Edit. Operum Gyraldi, 1696.

(43) Stobæus, Serm. I. de morbis & molestiis in eis solutione. Plutarch. de fluminib. pag. 1148, cites the 13th Book of Archelaus, πῦρ ποταμῶν.

(44) Plutarch, ibid. pag. 1153.

(45) Artemidor. de Somn. lib. 4. cap. 24.

* Composit Philoſophiam.

† Pag. 108.

(46) Vossius de Poët. Græcis, pag. 34.

(a) Note, there are, who allow of but one Archelaus among the Kings of Macedonia.

(b) See Remark [A].

(1) Plato, in Gorgia, pag. 321.

(2) Ælian. Var. Histor. lib. 12. cap. 43.

(3) Dio Chrysost. Orat. 4. de Regno.

(4) Plato, in Gorgia, pag. 321.

A R C H E L A U S, First of the Name (a), King of Macedon, and a Natural Son of King Perdiccas, having ascended the Throne, supported himself in it by the most enormous Crimes. His Mother was a Servant of Alcetas, the Brother of Perdiccas [A]; so that, according to the Laws (b), he ought to have been himself no more than the Servant of Alcetas; but, instead of paying him the Submission he owed him, he caused him to be treacherously murdered. He invited him to his House, promising to restore to him the Crown, which Perdiccas had taken from him; he entertained him sumptuously, and, having made him drunk, caused him to be carried out of Town by Night in a close Chariot, with Orders to put him to Death. Alexander, the son of Alcetas, was treated in the same manner; He was conveyed drunk in the same Chariot, and murdered, with his Father. Archelaus soon after caused his own Brother, the Legitimate Son of Perdiccas and Cleopatra, and but seven Years of Age, to be put to Death, and thrown into a Well; making his Mother Cleopatra believe, that the Child fell in, as he was running after a Goose (c). He applied himself diligently to whatever might render Macedon formidable; he fortified several Places, caused high Roads to be made; providing himself also with great Quantities of Arms, Horses, and all warlike Stores; exceeding the Kings his Predecessors in these Preparations (d). One Thing he put in practice, which They never did; to wit, the sitting out of Fleets, and engaging in Sea-Fights (e). He loved Learning and polite Arts [B], and had always the greatest Poets, the most famous Painters, and the best Musicians, about him (f). He was at a great Expence in having his House painted by Zeuxes [C], and doubtless was very angry, (c) Taken from the Gargias of Plato, pag. 321.

(d) Thucyd. lib. 2. pag. 142.

(e) Solinus, cap. 9.

(f) See Remark [C].

[A] His Mother was Servant of Alcetas, Brother of Perdiccas (1). Ælian calls her Simicba (2): But, after all, since Archelaus was the Son of the King of Macedon, it ought not to have been said, that, from the Condition of a Goat-herd, he raised himself to the Throne. Yet this is what Diogenes the Cynic affirms, in a Speech of Dion Chrysostom. Ἀποτολὸν ἢ Ἀρχέλαον (3). Caprarius erat Archelaus. Observe these Words of Plato, which inform us, what Archelaus ought to have been according to the Laws. Κατὰ μὲν τὸ δίκαιον δδλῶν ἢ Ἀλκίτην, καὶ εἰ ἐξέλετο τὰ δίκαια ποιεῖν ἐδίδουσαν ἂν Ἀλκίτην (4). He was by right the Servant of Alcetas; if therefore he would have acted justly, he should have served Alcetas.

[B] He loved Learning, and polite Arts. Solinus tells us this (5). I have cited his Words, in the Remark [N] of the Article EURIPIDES, at the Beginning. Add to them this Passage of Ælian. Ἦν δὲ ἀγαθὸς Ἀρχέλαος ἐρωτικὸς καὶ ἡτλὸν ἢ καὶ φιλόμορος (6). Archelaus was no less amorous, than fond of Learning.

[C] He was at a great Expence in having his House painted by Zeuxes. Socrates plays the Censor upon this Occasion; he says, that this Prince, who had been at such a vast Expence in beautifying his Palace, had been at none at all in adorning his Mind. We know likewise, adds he, that many Strangers make it their Business to go to Macedon, to see the Prince's House, but none to see the Prince himself, except

(5) Solia. cap. 9.

(6) Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. 2. cap. 21.

angry, that Socrates, whom he endeavoured to draw to his Court, would never come near him [D]. He might have learnt from him not to be frightened at Eclipses; and he wanted greatly to be set right in That Matter (g). The Esteem he had for Euripides is shewn in another Place (b). By the way, his Liberality to ingenious Men was not extraordinary; but this might proceed from his finding them too free in asking [E]. He instituted Sacrifices, and Stage-Plays, in Honour of Jupiter, and the Muses; which were celebrated for nine Days together; each Muse had it's Day (i). He sent Chariots with four Horses, which carried the Prizes at the Olympic and Pysbian Games (k). Authors agree as to his being killed, but not as to the Circumstances of his Death, or the Length of his Reign [F]. Scaliger himself

(7) Diodor. Siculus, lib. 17, cap. 16.

(8) Solinus, met cap. 9.

(g) See Remark [D].

(b) In the Article EURIPIDES, Remarks [N], [O], [P], &c.

(7) Taken from Ælian, lib. 14. Var. Hist. cap. 17.

(8) Plut. in Appophthegmat. pag. 177.

(9) See, in the New Letters against Maimbourg's History of Calvinism, those which treat of an erroneous Conscience.

(10) Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. 2. cap. 21.

(11) Schol. Aristoph. in Rana.

(12) Diogenes Laërtius, lib. 2. n. 25.

(13) Seneca de Benef. lib. 5, cap. 6, pag. 96.

(14) Marcius Antoninus, τῶν εἰς αὐτὸν, lib. 12. §. 25. Note, that he supposes this Answer was made to Pedricas.

(15) Aristot. Rhetor. lib. 2. cap. 23.

except those he draws thither by his Presents. Now these are Things, which never influence an honest Man (7). I believe he had taken no Pains to conquer his lewd Inclinations, by cultivating the Muses; but I am certain, that he made no mean Progress in adorning his Mind. And, by one of his Sayings, he seems to have made some Progress in Practical Virtue. One of his Courtiers animating him one Day against a Person, who had thrown some Water upon him; he answered, he has not suited me, but the Person for whom he took me (8). Never Philosopher, disconcerting on the Privileges of an erroneous Conscience, said a more sensible Thing. All Princes would treat involuntary Faults in this manner, were they but equitable, or if the Interest of the Public would permit the regulating their Practice according to the Ideas of Reason (9). Let us leave this, and return to Socrates. In the foregoing Words, he declared several Men of Wit, who went to Macedonia, only for Archelaus's Sake (10) errant Rascals. Did Euripides go thither upon any other Account? Did not the fair Agathon, That illustrious Poet, and his Inamorate Pausanias, and so many others, go thither purely upon this Account? Οὐτὸς δ' Ἀγάθων Ἀρχέλαον τῷ βασιλεῖ μῆχες τελευτῆς μέτα ἄλλων πολλῶν συνὴν ἐν Μακεδονίᾳ (11). This Agathon, with many others, resided at the Court of Archelaus, till his Death.

[D] Socrates, whom he endeavoured to draw to his Court, would never come near him.] There were two other Persons, whom this Philosopher treated after the same manner; he would neither visit them, nor accept of Presents from them. Τρεῖς ὁμοῖον δὲ καὶ Ἀρχέλαος τῷ Μακεδόνῳ, καὶ Σκῶπα τῷ Κερναίνῳ, καὶ Εὐρυλόχῳ τῷ Λακισσαίνῳ, μήτε χρηματὰ προσέμενον αὐτῶν, μήτε παρ' αὐτῶν ἀπελάθων (12). In the greatness of his Soul, he despised Archelaus the Macedonian, Scopa the Crannonian, and Eurylochus the Larysæan; nor would ever accept of the Presents, which they sent him, or the Invitation they gave him. Seneca has preferred us to the Excuse, which Socrates made to our Archelaus; he said, "I will not visit a Man, from whom I may receive Benefits, without being able to return them." Archelaus rex Socratem rogavit, ut ad se veniret: dixisse Socratem traditur, nolle se ad eum venire, id quo acciperet beneficia, cum reddere illi paria non posset (13). This Answer of Socrates has been related by Marcus Aurelius, agreeably to the same Sense (14); but Aristotle relates it in terms, which are not Philosophical. He supposes Socrates to have replied, that it is as great an Affront to confer a Benefit on a Person, who cannot return it, as to injure a Person, who cannot revenge himself. Τρεῖς εἶναι τὸ μὴ δύνασθαι ἀμείψασθαι ὁμοίως ἢ παθόντι ὥστε καὶ κακῶς (15). Contumeliam esse dixit, non posse referre eum qui accipit beneficium, perinde ac eum qui injuriatur. This Maxim supposes, that we ought to revenge ourselves on those, who injure us. It is not, therefore, becoming the Morality of a Philosopher, especially such a Philosopher as Socrates. Seneca has taken pains to shew, that it was easy for this Philosopher to requite Archelaus. Among other things, he says, that the Favours of That Monarch could not have been of equal Value with the Instruction he might have received concerning Eclipses alone, and which would have prevented his falling a second time into such a Confection, as he was one day in, when the Sun was eclipsed. He shut up his Palace Gates; he caused his Son's Hair to be cut off. "Quid tantum erit accepturus (Socrates) quantum dabat, si regem in luce media errantem ad rerum naturam admisset, usque eo ejus ignarum, ut, quo die solis defectio fuit, regiam clauderet, & filium (quod in lætu ac rebus adversis moris est) tonderet? Quantum fuisset beneficium, si timentem è latebris suis extraxisset, & bonum animum habere jussisset, dicens: Non est ista solis defectio, sed duorum siderum coitus, cum luna humilioris currens via infra ipsum solem orbem suum posuit, & illum obiectu sui abscondit (16). — What Benefit cou'd Socrates have receiv'd so valuable as what he wou'd have conferr'd; if he had explain'd the Nature of Things to the mistaken King; who was so ignorant of them, that, upon the day of an Eclipse of the Sun, he shut up his Palace, and (as is practis'd in Affliction and Adversity) shaved his Son? What an Advantage wou'd it have been to him, had the Philosopher dragg'd him trembling from his Concealment, and had him be of good Courage; telling him, This is no Failure of the Sun, but the effect of the Moon's interposing between the Sun and Us, and by that means intercepting it's Light? Seneca says, that Socrates made this Excuse by way of Irony only (17), and that, in reality, he refused to go to the Court of Macedonia, because he would not be abridged of his Liberty. "Vis scire quid verè noluerit? Nolit ire ad voluntariam servitutem, is, ejus libertatem civitas libera ferre non potuit (18). — Wou'd you know what in reality he refus'd? He refus'd to go to voluntary Servitude; He, whose Liberty a Free State could not bear". Some say, that Aristophanes (19) compos'd the Comedy of the Clouds out of spite to Socrates, because Archelaus, King of Macedonia, had a better Opinion of This Philosopher than of himself. Observe, that another turn has been given to Socrates's Answer. It has been said, that he excus'd himself from going to Archelaus's Court, because Bread was at a low Price, and great Plenty of Water at Athens (20).

[E] His Liberality to ingenious Men, was not extraordinary, but this might proceed from his finding them too free in asking.] Plutarch tells us, that Archelaus, King of Macedonia, was a little too backward in giving, or making of Presents; which the Musician Timotheus gave him an Hint, by often repeating, as he sung to his Lute, this satirical Sentence. You are too fond of This Son of the Earib, Silver. But Archelaus immediately replied, genteely and with a good grace; And "You demand it of me too fast (21)". In another Book he relates what I am going to transcribe. A certain Person once, who thought, that nothing was more genteel, than to ask and receive, being at Supper with Archelaus, King of Macedonia, asked of the King a Golden Cup, out of which He drank. The King commanded his Page to present it to Euripides, who by accident was then at Table; and, turning to the Person, who had ask'd it, said, "As for you, you deserve to ask, and be refus'd, because you ask; but Euripides deserves to receive, even though he does not ask (22)". Perhaps he set bounds to his Liberality upon a Principle like That of Charles the 11th (23); But it is more probable he was of the Taste of Cardinal Richlieu, who never gave any thing to the Poet Mainard, partly — because he did not love to be ask'd, but the last Reason have the Honour of giving of his own meer Motion (24).

[F] Authors are not agreed — As to the Circumstances of his Death, or the Length of his Reign.] Some say, That, being a Hunting, he was accidentally wounded by his Favourite Craterus; and that he died of his Wound (25). Others say, that he was killed by Conspirators, urged on by Decamichus to commit This Parricide (26). Quintus Curtius favours this Opinion. He says, "Quis proavum hujus Alexandrum, quis deinde Archelaum, quis Perdiccam occisus ultus est? (27) — Who ever revenged the murder of This Person's Great-Grand Father, Alexander, (16) Seneca de Benef. lib. 5.

(17) Ibid.

(18) Ibid. pag. 95.

(19) Charpentier's Life of Socrates, pag. 57. He cites the Commen-tators on Aristophanes, in argumento illius Comœdii.

(20) See Strabo, lib. 17, cap. 237.

(21) Plutarch, de Fortuna Alexandri. lib. 2.

(22) Id. de vitiois pudore.

(23) See the Article DAURAT, Remark [F].

(24) Pellissier, Hist. de l'Acad. Française, pag. 278.

(25) Diodor. Siculus, lib. 14, cap. 38. I shall cite his Words in the last Remark.

(26) Aristot. lib. 5. de Repub. cap. 10. I have cited his Words in the Remark [N], of the Article EURIPIDES.

(27) Quintus Curtius, lib. 6. cap. 11.

met with so much Obscurity in these Points, as led him into gross Mistakes (i). Probably Archelaus led an impure Life, which occasion'd his Downfal [G]. I have a few Observations to make against Moreri [H].

(1) See Remarks [F].

"Alexander, of Archelaus, or Perdiccas?" — I shall speak farther of This in the following Remark. As for the Length of his Reign, some make it Twenty Four Years (28); others Sixteen (29); others Fourteen (30); and others but Seven (31). This latter Opinion seems to me the most probable: It is That of Diodorus Siculus; and I am surpriz'd at Calvisius's citing this Historian, after having said, that Archelaus reign'd Sixteen Years (32). A misinterpreted Passage in Athenæus has occasion'd a great deal of Confusion. We read, in the Editions of That Author, that Pericles and Perdiccas died in the third Year of the Peloponnesian War, and that Archelaus ascended the Throne immediately after (33). It is impossible Athenæus should say this; for his Design is to convict Plato of a Mistake; Plato, I say, who, in the same Dialogue, where he supposes, that Archelaus was then on the Throne, affirms, that Pericles died but a little before. It is plain, that his Censor renders himself ridiculous; and does not know what he says, if he really advances what we read in his printed Works. Casaubon justly thinks it strange, that The Translators of Athenæus took no notice of so manifest an Absurdity, or could digest so hard a Moriel. Cum hæc clarissime disputetur ab Athenæo, quis interpretum somacho non invideat, qui vulgata loci hujus scripturam adeo evēpaxos tulerint (34)? For his own part, he confesses himself incapable of it, and, in spite of all the Manuscripts, maintains, that the Copyists of Athenæus have omitted a Period in That Place. He seems to me to have guessed very happily at what the Author really said; Namely, that Alexander, King of Macedonia, who died at the same Time with Pericles, was succeeded by Perdiccas, who reign'd till the Archonship of Callias; and that Perdiccas, dying in That Archonship, Archelaus took possession of his Throne. In this Case, Athenæus criticises on Plato's Discourse not without some Foundation; for there is a considerable Interval between the Death of Pericles, and the Reign of Archelaus. Observe, by the way, that Casaubon has answered This Censure (35); but take particular notice, that Diodorus Siculus, in assigning to Archelaus Seven Years Reign, places his Death in the Second Year of the XCVth Olympiad, under the Archonship of Aristocrates. His Reign, then began, the third Year of the XCIIId Olympiad, under the Archonship of Callias. It must be said then, that Perdiccas died under the same Archonship. Now, among the Diversity of Opinions concerning the Time of the Reign of This Perdiccas, That of Marjyas and Philcorus, who determined it to Twenty three Years, was made choice of by Athenæus, in reasoning against Plato: He must, then, have supposed, that Perdiccas came to the Crown the same Year that Pericles died, that is, in the fourth Year of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad. All this is so strong a Confirmation of Casaubon's Opinion, that, instead of saying his Conjecture is very probable, we may affirm, without Hesitation, that the Period he restores did actually proceed from the Pen of Athenæus: And, as it contains the same Words twice or thrice at the end of a Sentence, we may easily apprehend, how the Transcribers might pass it over, and the Reader not perceive the Omission. Most People read to be intrusted without Fatigue; so that they seldom are sensible of an Error in reasoning, which requires some Attention, or Reflexion on what went before; contenting themselves with saying, This is obscure, This is beyond my Comprehension. But this brings no Remedy; The Fault remains still where it was. Critics, and especially Critical Translators, act otherwise. They perceive Mistakes in the Sense; they endeavour to correct them; they collate Manuscripts; and exert their Talent for Conjecture. But in this Passage of Athenæus, as Casaubon reproaches them, the Edge of their Genius was greatly blunted.

The great Scaliger shall be my Proof, that the Genius of the most learned Persons may sometimes be very much confined. He did not perceive the manifest Error of the Author, on whom he commented and criticized; and has made This Error the Foundation of a Criticism on Diodorus Siculus, to whom he has imputed what is only to be met with in Athenæus. To explain This; Eusebius has ranged three Things under the first Year of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad; The Death of Perdiccas, The beginning of the Reign of Archelaus, and The beginning of the Peloponnesian War. Scaliger passes over this, and contents himself with observing, that the first Year of This War is generally placed under the second Year of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad, because, the Rupture falling out towards the end of the Archonship of Pythodorus, it was thought it ought to be dated from the Archonship of Euthydemus (36), the Successor of Pythodorus (37). According to this Usage, he confesses, that the Year of the Death of Pericles is the fourth of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad, and the third of the Peloponnesian War; and he cites a Greek Passage, which imports, that, in the Year of Pericles's Death, Perdiccas King of Macedonia died also, and Archelaus ascended the Throne. He attributes this Passage to Diodorus Siculus; and, accordingly, censures him for an Anachronism of three Years. This proceeds from his supposing, that Eusebius is neither mistaken as to the Death of Perdiccas, nor the Accession of Archelaus. He was ignorant, then, that Thucydides had expressly said, that King Perseus was living in the sixteenth Year of the Peloponnesian War (38). Besides, he was ignorant, that the Words, which he ascribes to Diodorus Siculus, belong to Athenæus: He knew not, that these Words of Athenæus were corrupted; he did not perceive, that they are maimed, and that they ought to be read as Casaubon has restored them. Note, that Salmasius acknowledges for good Chronology the placing the Death of Perdiccas, and the beginning of Archelaus's Reign, in the fourth Year of the LXXXVIIth Olympiad (39). He was ignorant, then, of some things, which he might have learned from Casaubon; but note still more carefully, that, by a favourable Interpretation, one of the Points of my Criticism on Scaliger may be eluded, if not confuted. I have observed, that he has censured Diodorus Siculus; which I gathered from these Words: Diodoro ergo prochronismus fuerit triennii (40). — Diodorus therefore has anticipated three Years. They follow the Greek Passage, falsely ascribed by Scaliger to That Author; where we also find, that Perdiccas, dying in the third Year of the Peloponnesian War, was succeeded by Archelaus. Now, whereas Eusebius affirms, that Archelaus ascended the Throne in the first Year of the Peloponnesian War, it may be pretended, that Scaliger meant no more, than that the Doctrine of Eusebius contains an Anachronism or Anticipation of three Years, according to Diodorus Siculus. If this be his true meaning, he has not censured this latter Historian; he was satisfied with suspending Judgment, deciding neither in favour of him, nor of Eusebius: It will be a great Pleasure to me, if This Recantation be allowed to pass. A Critic, who takes Advantage of an equivocal Expression, ought not to omit the favourable Sense: He shews, by this means, what may be said for, or against, Authors: He sustains alternately the Character of Council for the Plaintiff and Defendant.

[G] Probably Archelaus led an impure Life, which occasioned his Downfal. Aristotle, having said, that several Conspiracies have been formed against Monarchs, on Account of their Impurities, immediately alleges the Attempt of Crates (41). This Man never could brook the Dishonour Archelaus had done him, in satisfying his Brutal Lust upon him. Accordingly a New Affront, which would not of itself have been a just Pretence for Conspiracy, being added to the former, he resolved to get rid of his Master. The Affront was this; the King had promised him one of his Daughters, and yet married the eldest to the King of Elymæa, and the youngest to the Son of Amyntas. Reasons of State occasioned this Breach of Promise. Finding himself embroiled in a War with Sirras, and Arrabæus, he had a Mind to gain over the King of Elymæa to his Party. Fearing, on the other hand, that the Son of Amyntas would raise Disturbances, he made him his Son-in-law too; hoping

(36) It belongs to the second Year of the 87th Olympiad.

(37) Scaliger, Ani-madv. in Euseb. n. 1585, pag. 106.

(38) Thucydides, lib. 6, pag. 341.

(39) Salmasius, Exercit. Plin. pag. 156, 157.

(40) Scaliger, ubi fusa pæ.

(41) Aristot. lib. 5. de Republica, cap. 10. pag. 305.

which he acquired by This Marriage; for, about six Months after, he lost his Life (e), in a Battel against the Troops of Gabinus, in the Year of Rome 698 [B]. He had obtained from Pompey a very honourable Dignity [C]; namely the Pontificat of Comana, in Cappadocia (f). His Son Archelaus enjoyed it after him (g), until Cæsar turned him out in the Year of Rome 707, in order to give it to another [D]. The rest of his Adventures are unknown; except that he was married to a very beautiful Woman, whose Name was Glaphyra; and had two Sons by her, one called Sisinna, and the other Archelaus. The first disputed the Kingdom of Cappadocia with Ariarathes, who was in Possession of it. Marc Antony was made Judge of this Dispute, in the Year of Rome 713; and gave it in favour of Sisinna (h). The Fair Sex had too great an Influence over him, and Glaphyra was too beautiful for This Trial to have any other Issue. Some Historians treat her as a Courtesan (i); which makes it the easier to apprehend, why Marc Antony gave Judgment in favour of Sisinna. But, how probable soever This Calumny may seem, it is not impossible, that the Friendship Marc Antony had for That Archelaus, who married Berenice (k), might induce him act as he did. It is not known what became of Sisinna; but it is certain, that Ariarathes re-ascended the Throne of Cappadocia; for Marc Antony was obliged to dispossess him a second Time, in the Year of Rome 718; and, then, conferred the Kingdom on ARCHELAUS, the Son of Glaphyra (l). This is He, who appears at the Head of this Article. He became very powerful (m), and expressed his Acknowledgments to his Benefactor Marc Antony, by supplying him with fine Troops during the Atic War (n). He was so happy, as not to disoblige Augustus by it; so that he remained in Possession of Cappadocia, and was almost the only Person, to whom so much Favour was shewn (o). He assisted Tiberius, in the Year 734, to re-establish Tigranes in Armenia (p), and obtained the lesser Armenia, and a good Part of Cilicia, from Augustus (q). He fixed his Residence in the Island of Eleusa [E], near the Coast of Cilicia; and, having married Pythodoris, the Widow of Polemon, King of Pontus, he increased his Power considerably; for, as the Sons of Polemon were yet but Infants, he had, without Doubt, the Administration of the Kingdom, jointly with the Queen, their Mother [F]. He signalized himself, after an extraordinary manner, in making his Court to Caius Cæsar, when sent into the East by his Grandfather Augustus (r). This proved very fatal to him in the end [G];

(k) Plutarch. in Anton. p. 6. 917.

(l) Dio, lib. 49. p. 48. 499.

(m) See Remark [I], towards the end.

(n) Plutarch. in Anton. p. 6. 544.

(o) Dio, lib. 51. init.

(p) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 5.

(q) Dio, lib. 51. ad Ann. 734. See also Strab. lib. 12. pag. 388, 382, and lib. 14. pag. 491.

(r) In the Year of Rome, 755.

[B] He lost his Life, in a Battle against the Troops of Gabinus. This does not agree with the Seventeenth Book of Strabo, where we read, that Ptolemy, being restored to his Kingdom, put his Daughter, and Son-in-law Archelaus, to Death. I shall make it appear, in the Article Berenice, that Strabo is mistaken in this, and that he has contradicted himself. You may boldly pronounce these Words of Moreri to be false; Ptolemy, being restored in 699, put Archelaus and Berenice to Death.

[C] He obtained from Pompey a very honourable Dignity. Father Norris says, that the Pontiff of Comana was Sovereign of the Place. "Hunc Archelaum Pompeius Sacerdotem Bellonæ, ac Comæ norum principem (utraque enim dignitas uni eademque conferebatur) constituerat, cuius Dynastæ parem opibus, ex Appiano in Mithridat, p. 252. (1)." — Pompey appointed This Archelaus Priest of Bellona, and Prince of Comana (for both Dignities were conferred upon one and the same Person) A Post, equal in Revenue to That of a Dynast, according to Appian, in Mithridat, p. 252. We shall examine in another Place, whether this be Right (2).

[D] Cæsar turned him out — to give his Post to another. Hirtius relates, that Cæsar disposed of this Benefice in favour of Nicomedes, who made it appear, that he had very just Pretensions to it. "Id homini nobilissimo Nicomedi Bythinio adjudicavit, qui regio Cappadocum genere ortus, propter adversam fortunam majorum suorum jure minime dubio, vestustate tamen intermisso, sacerdotium id repetebat (3)." — He adjudged it to an illustrious Person, Nicomedes of Bythnia, who, being descended from the Kings of Cappadocia, justly laid claim to "This Priest-hood, which thro' the misfortunes of his Ancestors, had been for a long time lost to his Family". Father Norris affirms, that Cæsar conferred this Dignity on Nicomedes, after his Victory over Pharnaces; but They, who think fit to consult Hirtius, will easily find, that it was disposed of before the Battle. As for the Name of Nicomedes, it is to be found in the Editions of Strabo (4). It is also certain, that, in Dion, we meet with a Nicomedes, divested of his Estate by Augustus, after the Flight of Marc Antony (5), and, perhaps, the Same, whom Cæsar raised to the Pontificate of Comana; for he reigned in a Part of Cappadocia. The Epithet Bythinus, which Hirtius makes use of, favours more the Reading Nicomedes (6), than Nicomedes.

[E] He fixed his Residence in the Island of Eleusa. This we learn from Strabo, and Josephus. "Post Corycum Eleusa insula est continens propinqua. Eam Archelaus condidit, ac regiam sibi fecit, cum totam Ciliciam excepta Seleucia esset nactus (7)." — Next to Corycum is the Island of Eleusa, close by the Continent. Archelaus fixed his Residence there, after having made himself Master of All Cilicia, except Seleucia. Josephus observes, that Herod, having landed at Eleusa in Cilicia, found Archelaus King of Cappadocia there (8). It was there that the Envoys of Herod received Orders to carry the Letter, which he wrote to Archelaus (9). The same Historian observes, that Eleusa was called Sebasta (10). Might not Archelaus, in compliment to Augustus, make this Alteration in the Name?

[F] He had, without doubt, the Administration of the Kingdom jointly with the Queen their Mother. Father Norris positively affirms this (11); I have chosen to make use of an Expression, which imports, not that this Fact is to be found in the Ancient Writers, but that it appears to be very agreeable to Reason. What makes me express my self with some Caution, is, that Strabo says nothing more, than that Pythodoris lived with her Husband Archelaus, during his Life. "Αὐτὴ δὲ συνῆκεν Ἀρχελαῷ καὶ συνέμεινεν ἐκείνῳ μέχρι τέλους (12)." If Archelaus nupt, &c. cum eo dum is in vivis permanisset vitam exegit. She knew how to command; it is not impossible, then, that she might have governed the Estates of her Children Alone. "Τὴν ὡς ἑσὶν καὶ θυράδην ἀπεκρίσας δαὶ ἀγαγόντων (13)." Prudens mulier & præesse rebus gnara.

[G] This proved very fatal to him in the End. I have observed more than once, that Persons, whom we slight, are often destined by Providence to the highest Stations (14). Unhappy for Those, who have treated them with Contempt. Few are so reasonable, as Lewis the XII, who said, that a King of France ought not to revenge the Injuries done to a Duke of Orleans. Our Archelaus acted like a Politician: He knew, that Augustus loved his Grandson tenderly; And, in all probability, That young Prince was to succeed

(6) It is that of the Edition of Appian, in Mithridat. sub. fin.

(7) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 461.

(8) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 8.

(9) Ibid. cap. 16.

(10) Ibid. cap. 8.

(11) Norris, Cenotaph. Pagan. pag. 227. He quotes no Authority.

(12) Strabo, lib. 12. pag. 383.

(13) Idem. pag. 382.

(14) See the end of the Text, and Remark [B] of the Article de APOLODORUS the A. d. c. 118.

(e) Strabo, lib. 17. pag. 54.

(f) Id. lib. 17. pag. 384.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Appian. lib. 4. Belli Civilis, pag. 675.

(i) See the Article GLAPHYRA.

(1) Norris, Cenotaph. Pagan. pag. 255.

(2) In the Article COMANA.

(3) Hirtius de bello Alexandrino, pag. 416.

(4) Lib. 12. pag. 384.

(5) Lib. 52. init.

for Tiberius, recollecting, that he had paid him no Civilities during his Stay at Rhodes; and that, on the other side, Caius Cæsar had received a thousand Marks of Respect from him, resolved to be revenged, as soon as he found himself Master of the Empire; accordingly he summoned him to appear at Rome, and appointed the Senate as Judge [H] of the Accusations, which should be brought against him. But Age, the Gout, and, above all, the Indignity of the Treatment he met with, soon broke his Heart, before the Senate had pronounced any Sentence against him. Some believe, that he escaped the Sentence of the Senate, by feigning himself mad [K]. He died in the Year of Rome 770, and the Fifty second of his Reign; after which Cappadocia became ceed his Grand-father. Tiberius was in some kind of Disgrace, in the Island of Rhodes, which did not seem to preface him the Empire. Archelaus believed he hazarded nothing in neglecting Him, and, besides, had intimations, that it might be dangerous to cultivate his Friendship. He look'd upon all the Honours he paid to Caius Cæsar as a sure Fund of Advantages, and Rewards for Life. But he was mistaken; and little considered the Artfulness of Livia, in paving her Son's way to Empire. Caius, and his Brother, did not live long; and probably she knew the Reason of it. After all, it is often the truest Policy to pay One's court, even when They are in Disgrace, to Those, whom we see in the Road to High Preferment (15). Let us produce Authorities, which inform us of Tiberius's Relentment. "Rex Archelaus,

(15) This was Pompeius Atticus' Rule. See the Remark [A] of his Article.

(16) Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap. 24.

"says Tacitus (16), quinquagessimum annum Cappadocia potiebatur, inquit Tiberio, quod eum Rhodi agentem nullo officio coluisset: Nec id Archelaus per superbiam omiserat, sed ab intimis Augusti monitus, quia florebat Caio Cæsare, misloque ad res Orientis, intuta Tiberii amicitia credebatur. — "King Archelaus had reigned fifty Years in Cappadocia, being odious to the Emperor Tiberius, to whom he had neglected to pay his Court, when in the Island of Rhodes. Not that Archelaus's omission was the Effect of Pride, but owing to the Advice of Those about Augustus; who thought it not safe for him to cultivate the Friendship of Tiberius, who still Caius Cæsar was in such high Favour, and had the Command of Affairs in the East." Dion Cassius says almost the same thing. "Tiberius Cappadociæ regem Archelaum, insensu ei, quia, cum olim sibi supplicasset, suoque patrocinio usus, cum ab incolis apud Augustum accusaretur, fuisset, Rhodi se neglectisset, ac Caium in Asia venientem officio coluisset, infamulatum, quasi novis rebus studeat, evocavit Romam (17). — Tiberius, being incensed against Archelaus, King of Cappadocia, who, notwithstanding the Protection he had afforded him, when his Subjects accused him to Augustus, had yet neglected him at Rhodes, and officiously paid his Court to Caius Cæsar, upon his arrival in Asia, cited him to appear at Rome, where he was accused of plotting against the State." We learn from this Passage, that Tiberius complained, not only of Archelaus's want of Respect, but also of his Ingratitude. The Circumstance of the Place might contribute to exasperate the Emperor; for the Island of Eleusa, where Archelaus resided, was but Fifteen thousand Paces distant from Rhodes (18).

(17) Dion. lib. 57.

* Fifteen Miles.

(18) Strab. lib. 14, pag. 448.

(19) Dion, ubi supra.

(20) Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap. 42.

(21) Id. ib.

(22) Suet. in Tiber. cap. 37. See also Eutropius, l. 7.

[H] He summoned him to appear at Rome, and appointed the Senate as Judge. Dion relates this; Infamulatum, quasi novis rebus studeat, evocavit Romam, ac Senatus judicio tradidit (19). He was accused of a Crime against the State. Tacitus does not seem to be of this Opinion; he intimates very plainly, that Tiberius complained only of Archelaus's Incivility, and encouraged him, by Letters from his Mother, to hope, that by his Presence and Intreaties, he might obtain Pardon. Ut versa Cæsarem spole imperium adeptus est, elicit Archelaum matris literis, quæ non dissimulatis offensionibus clementiam offerebat, si ad precandam veniret (20). This Frankness, with regard to Personal Offences, covered a most dangerous Snare. Either the King of Cappadocia did not perceive it, or durst not act, as if he did. He repaired immediately to Rome; and was very coldly received by Tiberius; and found himself soon after in the hands of Justice. Ille ignarus doli, vel si intelligere crederetur vim metueni, in urbem properat, exceptusque immitti à principe, & mox accusatus in Senatu (21). Suetonius (22) has spoken of this Action of Tiberius only in general Terms. "Reges infestos suspectosque conminationibus magis & querelis

"quam vi repressit: quosdam per blanditias atque promissa extractos ad se non remisit, ut . . . Archelaum Cappadocem. — Those Kings, whom he hated and suspected, he repressed by Threatening and Complaints, rather than by Force. Some, whom he got into his Power by Sootbing and Promises, he never sent back — as Archelaus the Cappadocian." I Question whether Archelaus, notwithstanding his Age, was not tempted to raise some Commotions after the Death of Augustus; for mention is made of One of his Plots (23), which could only relate to That time.

(23) Philost. in Vit. Apoll. lib. 1. cap. 7.

[I] His Age, the Gout, but, above all, the Indignity of the Treatment he met with, broke his Heart. Let us hear Tacitus. "Mox accusatus in Senatu, non ob crimina quæ fingebantur, sed angore, simul scelus senio, & quia regibus æqua nedum infima insolita sunt, finem vitæ sponte an fato implevit. — Being afterwards accused in the Senate, tho' he was not condemned for the Crimes alleged against him, which indeed were fictitious; yet Affliction of Mind, together with Old Age, and a Fate uncommon to Kings, put an end to his Days: whether by a voluntary or natural Death, is uncertain." This Historian does not know, whether Archelaus killed himself, or only sunk under the Weight of his Misfortunes; but from his Relation it appears, that This Prince was not condemned, and consequently not put to Death. Dion will inform us of more Circumstances.

[K] Some believe, that he escaped the Sentence of the Senate, by feigning himself mad. Dion affirms, that Archelaus, bending under the Weight of Years, passed for a Dotard; that, nevertheless, he had all his Senses perfect; but counterfeited the Madman, because he saw no other means of saving his Life (24); that he would yet have suffered Death, had not a false Witness accused him of Threatening Words, and of saying, that, when he should return to his Kingdom, he would shew Tiberius, that he did not want Courage. This occasioned Laughter, and diverted Tiberius from his Design of putting him to Death. He was so weak, and worn out, that they were obliged to carry him in a Litter to the Senate-House. Dion adds, that, for this Time, Archelaus escaped Death; but that he died soon after. Dion does not contradict the Text of this Remark; for, if the false Witness saved Archelaus's Life, it was only because it was judged, that the Threats of a superannuated, decay'd, old Man, were certain Proofs of a Delirium, of Dotage, and a second State of Childhood, &c. By this it appears, that Xiphilin had not the best Judgment, when he suppressed the feigned Madness of Archelaus. This is a Fact which ought not to be omitted by the most concise Writers. David, Brutus, and others, have successfully put in practice this kind of Dissimulation; They are, therefore, remarkable Adventures, and such as an Abbreviator ought to retain. Let us not omit what Dion observes, that Archelaus had really been next to an Idiot, some time before; witness Augustus's appointing him a Governor, who was Regent of his Kingdom. I cannot say, whether it was on This Occasion, that he had recourse to the Protection of Tiberius. He fled for it, when he was accused by his Subjects: But might they not have represented him as a Fool, at a Time, when he had Reason enough left to desire not to be put under Tuition; and to maintain, that it was out of Malice alone, that his Subjects endeavoured to represent him as unfit to govern? It is difficult to clear up this Matter. The Ancient Historians so accustomed themselves to relate Things only in the Grofs, that they afford but little Light into some of the more minute Particulars. Their Method is very good; however, there is an

(24) Mr de Tillemont. Hist. des Emper. Tom. 1. pag. 107, falsely charges Dion, with saying, that Archelaus was acquitted by the Senate, upon his counterfeiting Madness.

came a Province [L]. His Family boasted of a most Ancient and Noble Extraction [M]. We shall take some notice of his Posterity in the Article of Glaphyra.
There is reason to think, that he was Author of some books [N]. His Address, in appealing Herod's fierce Anger against his Son Alexander, is a proof of his Abilities on some Occasions (s). Some have confounded him with ARCHELAUS, the Son of Herod [O]. I cannot find, that Eutropius says, what a modern Author imputes to him, that ARCHELAUS, at his Death, bequeath'd his Kingdom to the people of Rome; and that Cappadocia was reduc'd into a Province by this Title (t). Mr de Tillemont might have been very certain of a thing, which he seems to doubt of; to wit, that the same ARCHELAUS, who was King of Cappadocia, obtain'd, by the Favour of Augustus, Part of Cilicia, and the lesser Armenia. Mr Moreri has been guilty of several Faults of Omision in this Article. His Continuator has been guilty of but One of Commission; but such an one, as will match with any

Four

(r) Noldius, de vita & gestis Herodum, pag.
194.

(u) Hist. des Emper.
Tom. 1, pag.
33.

(35) Id. ib.
cap. 56.

(36) Joseph.
de bello Jud.
lib. 1. c. 17.

(37) Plin.
lib. 37, cap.
3. pag. 371.

(38) Har-doun, in In-dice Autor.
Plin. See also Mallin-crot. Paralip.
pag. 60.

(39) Plut.
de Fluvio,
pag. 1153.

(40) Plin.
lib. 18, cap.
3. pag. 440.

(41) In Remark [C]. of the Article
ARCHE-LAUS; the Philophr.

(42) Cenot.
Plin. pag.
143.

(43) Suet.
in Tiber.
cap. 8.

(44) Citation (17).

(45) Torrent in Suet.
Tiber. cap.
8. He refers us to Euseb.
in Chron. & Ecclef. Hist.
lib. 1, and to Joseph.
Antiq. lib.
17, cap. 11.

(46) Comment. in Sueton.

(s) Joseph.
Antiq. lib.
16, cap. 12,
& de bello
Jud. lib. 1,
cap. 17.

(25) Strabo,
lib. 12, pag.
368. Sueton
in Tib. cap.
37. Eutrop.
lib. 7, cap. 6.

(26) Patern.
lib. 2, cap.
39.

(27) Tacit.
Ann. lib. 2,
cap. 42.

(28) Dion,
lib. 57, pag.
614.

(29) Suet.
in Calig.
cap. 1. Ta-cit. Ann.
lib. 2, cap.
56.

(30) Appia-nus, in Mi-thridaticis,
pag. 244.
apud Norris, Cenot. Pi-
lin. p. 241.

(31) Norris,
ibid. p. 226.

• Riccioli Chron Re-format.
Tom. 1, lib.
5, cap. 9,
p. 5.

(32) Strabo,
lib. 12, pag.
273.

(33) Jor-nand. de Regnor. & Temp. Success. pag.
64 c. apud Noldium, de Vit. Herod.
pag. 194.

(34) Tacit.
Annal. lib.
2, cap. 42.

Art of specifying Facts in few Words, and by the by; which would be of great Use, if Writers had the Will, or the Skill, to practise it. One History in Folia, might, by the Help of this Art, prevent numberless Disputes, and clear up a great Variety of Particulars, without consisting of above fifty Pages.

[L] After which Cappadocia became a Province].

Velleius Paterculus, Tacitus, Dion, and several others, expressly assert this (25). The proper Terms of the three first are these. "Tib. Cæsar — ut ar-
"mis, ita auctoritate Cappadociam populo Romano
"Stipendiariam fecit (26). — Tiberius Cæsar —
"as he reduced these by Force, so by his Authority he "made Cappadocia tributary to the Romans. — Reg"num in Provinciam redactum est (27). — The "Kingdom was reduced into a Province. — Paulo post
"obit (Archelaus), ac inde Cappadocia quoque Ro"manorum juris effecta est, Equitique regenda data
"est (28). — Soon after, Archelaus died; from which "time Cappadocia likewise became a Roman Province,
"and was under the Government of a Knight." It was Germanicus, who executed this Order (29). Ap-pian was very much mistaken, in saying, that the Kingdom of Cappadocia, was reduced into a Province under Augustus (30). Father Norris, who corrected this Mistake of Appian, has discovered two very considerable Faults in Riccioli, one in point of Genealogy, the other in point of Chronology (31). The Words, which he produces from That Author, are these:
"Summo Mithridate, creatus est Cappadocum con-
"sensu à Romanis Ariobarzanes; tandem Archelao
"pronepote mortuo Romæ, Consulibus C. Cælio Ru-
"fo & L. Pomponio, ut ait Tacitus, id est anno 84
"ante Christum, defuit regnare in Cappadocia ". —
"Mithridates being set aside, Ariobarzanes was crea"ted by the Romans, with the Consent of the Cap-
"pocians; at length, Archelaus, his Nephew's Son,
"dying at Rome, in the Consulship of C. Cælius
"Rufus, and L. Pomponius, according to Tacitus, "that is, Eighty four Years before CHRIST, Cap-
"pocia ceased to be a Kingdom." These Words carry the Air of a mutilated Passage: It is no uncommon thing for Printers to omit whole Lines. Be that as it will, Archelaus did not descend from Ariobarzanes; this is the Genealogical Error of Riccioli; and the Consulate of C. Cælius Rufus, and L. Pomponius, in which he died at Rome, fell out in the seventeenth Year of JESUS CHRIST; this is his Chronological Error. Strabo witnesses in express Terms, that Archelaus was not related to Ariobarzanes. "Ita
"rex ab his factus est Ariobarzanes, cujus in tertia
"sæpe gens defecit. Exinde Archelaus ab Antonio
"rex est constitutus, NULLA AFFINITATE ipsis con-
"junctus (32). — Thus Ariobarzanes was made
"King by them; whose Race was extinct in the third "Generation. Upon which, Archelaus, who was of a "quite different FAMILY, was appointed King by "Anthony." The Error, which Noldius imputes to Jornandæ, is very different from this of Appian. He will have it, that Cappadocia became a Province in the time of the Emperor Claudius, by virtue of the last Will and Testament of Archelaus (33). By the way, the Revenues of Cappadocia were so considerable, when Archelaus died, that Tiberius thought himself, by this new acquisition, in a condition to remit one moiety of a Tax, which he had order'd to be levy'd. Regnum (Archelai) in provinciam redactum est, fructibusque ejus levati posse centesimæ veltigii profectus Cæsar, ducentesimam in posterum statuit (34). He said This Province likewise; and would not exact from it as much as it had paid to the last King (35).

[M] His Family boasted of a most ancient and noble Extraction] Glaphyra, the Daughter of the last Ar-chelaus, and Wife of Alexander, the Son of Herod, spoke often of her Family, and boasted, that she was descended from Temenus, by the Father's Side, and from Darius, the Son of Hystaspes, by the mother's (36).

[N] There is reason to think, that he was Author of some Books.] Pliny seems to intimate this. He quotes Archelaus several Times; and it is thought, that, in two Places, he means our Archelaus, king of Cappa-docia. He gives him This very Title in one of these two Quotations; Archelaus, says he, qui regnavit in Cappadocia (37); and, as the Discourse there turns upon some Particulars relating to Amber, Father Hardoun makes no question, but that the same Ar-chelaus is meant in the seventh Chapter of the Thirty seventh Book of Pliny; where one Archelaus is quoted concerning the Properties of a kind of Precious Stone (38). Neither does he doubt, that this is taken from the Book de lapidibus, cited by Plutarch (39).
To relate something more certain, I shall point out a Passage of Pliny, where Archelaus is reckon'd among the Kings, who had written concerning Agriculture (40). I have already mention'd (41) another Archelaus, often quoted by Pliny.

[O] Some have confounded him with Archelaus, the Son of Herod.] Father Norris has convicted Riccioli of this Error (42). Riccioli had said, that, in the Trial between Archelaus, and his brother, concerning Herod's Succession, Tiberius pleaded his Cause before Augustus, and pretends to prove it from this Passage of Suetonius; "Civilium officiorum rudimenta Ar"chelaum, Trallianos, & Thessalos varia quoque de
"causa, Augusto cognoscente, defendit (43). —
"He was yet a young Pleader, when he undertook the "different Causes of Archelaus, the Trallians, and Thes-"saliens, before the Tribunal of Augustus." And, as Velleius Paterculus informs him, that Tiberius left Rhodes, to return to Rome, in the year 755; he concludes, that Archelaus was made Ethnarch in That Year, and not in 751, or before. Father Norris
shews him, from the Passage of Dion quoted above (44), that the Words of Suetonius must be understood of Archelaus, King of Cappadocia. He might have added an Instance, which destroys the Hypothesis of Riccioli; to wit, that Tiberius defended Archelaus's Cause, before he went to Rhodes. This is plain from Dion's Words; and may clearly be inferr'd from Those of Suetonius; who makes Tiberius's Defence of Archelaus the First in the List of Causes undertaken by Him, when (if I may so speak) he made his first Campaign at the Bar, civilium officiorum rudimenta. Torrentius is of the same Opinion with Ri-cioli; to wit, that Suetonius meant the great Cause of Archelaus, the Son of Herod; and refers us to Josephus (45). But how came they not to perceive, that, in this Case, Josephus could not possibly be ignorant of that he could not well have omitted it? I am surpriz'd that Father Norris, who makes such frequent and vigorous Attacks upon the Jesuit Salian, has spar'd him on this Occasion. This Jesuit fell into the same mistake with Riccioli; he has censur'd Cajaubon for applying (46) the Passage of Suetonius to Archelaus, King of Cappadocia; he represents to him, that the Cause of this Prince was debated in the Reign of Tiberius; and maintains, that Archelaus, the Son of Four; it is so very gross [P]. We shall see what it is, in the last Remark of this Article.

Herod, must consequently be understood in this Place; to prove which, he supposes, that JESUS CHRIST staid Two Years in Egypt: For, says he, Tiberius did not return to Rome in the Second Year of JESUS CHRIST; but he was at Rome, when Archelaus disputed Herod's Succession with his Brothers; since he honour'd him with his Protection (47). Behold how Faults are heap'd upon Faults, when the foundation is ill laid. It is as clear as the Day, that the King of Cappadocia's Cause was adjudged by Augustus, before Tiberius retir'd to the Island of Rhodes (48).

[P] His Continuator has been guilty of but One of Commission; but such an One, as will match with any Four; it is so gross.] He says, that Sylla (it is his own Orthography) after having taken the City of Athens, kill'd Archelaus, General of Mitridates's Army, with his own Hand, at the Foot of the Altar, to which he had fled for Refuge. He quotes Aulus Gellius, lib. 14. It is certain, that Aulus Gellius speaks, in the First Chapter of his Fifteenth Book, of a Particular, which the Continuator has mention'd; I mean of an expedient, which Archelaus made use of, to hinder the Romans from firing a Tower of Wood, which defended the Pyreum: We shall see below what it was; but that he has said, that Archelaus took Refuge in a Temple, and that Sylla kill'd him with his own hand at the Foot of an Altar, is most false. I believe no Author, worthy of Credit, has said this; for it is notorious, that Archelaus, having constrain'd Sylla to give over attacking the Pyreum, and to bend all his Force against the City, had time to retire, when it was taken by assault (49). Sylla pursued him, gain'd great Victories over him, and oblig'd him to make a Disadvantageous Peace. Archelaus, finding himself suspected of some Misdemeanors (50), durst not trust Mitridates, but went over to Murena, who commanded the Romans. He was receiv'd with Honour, as Strabo has observ'd in more Places than one. Ἦν δὲ ὁ Ἀρχέλαος οὗτος μὲν τὸ ἐπὶ Σύλλα καὶ πῶς συγκατατίμηται (51). This Archelaus was the Son of His, who receiv'd Honours from Sylla and the Senate.

The Secret of preserving his Tower of Wood consisted in causing it to be well rubb'd with Allum. Quadrigrarius, I think, is the only Historian, who has mention'd this. Others say, that His Tower, and Machines were ruin'd by the Besiegers. It is certain, that Allum has not the virtue Quadrigrarius speaks of. These are his words: "Tum Sulla conatus est, & tempore magno eduxit copias, ut Archelai turrim unam, quam ille interposuit, ligneam incenderet. Venit, accessit, ligna subdidit, submovit Græcos, ignem admovit, satis fuit diu conati, nunquam quiverunt incendere: ita Archelaus omnem materiam obleverat alumine, quod Sulla atque milites mirabantur; & postquam non succendū, reduxit copias (52). — Sylla, upon this, made an Attempt, and hastily drew out his Forces, in order to set Fire to a Tower, which Archelaus had built to oppose him. He came, He approached it, He made the Greeks retreat; His Men attempted a long Time to set it on Fire; but Archelaus had so dawb'd it with Allum, that Sylla and his Soldiers were surpriz'd; and, not being able to set it on Fire, he drew off his Forces." If the Abbot de la Roque had been appriz'd of this Passage of Aulus Gellius, he would not have said, "That History mentions, that Sylla formerly undertook to burn a Tower of Wood, which was defended by one of Mitridates's Lieutenants, but could not execute his Design, because it was dawb'd over with a certain Drug, the Name of which is not come to our Knowledge, and which had the Virtue to repel the Activity of Fire (53)." Two Things surprize me; The One is, that, since Quadrigrarius has mention'd so extraordinary an Event, all other Historians should be silent concerning it; The other is, that, since so many Historians have not said a Word of it, Quadrigrarius shou'd mention it in so express a manner. Facts of this kind strike the mind so forcibly, that an incombustible Wooden Tower would have been the last Thing omitted by an Historian. Sylla would infallibly have insert'd it in his Memoirs; Plutarch, who cites them so often (54), would have met with it in them, and would not have forgotten to mention it. Let us conclude from his Silence, and That of so many other Historians, that the Fact is false. But from whence had Quadrigrarius this Account? I believe it is impossible to trace the Original of his Error. It is true indeed, that Plum-Allum will resist Fire, and will not be consumed by it; but to rub a Tower of Wood with it, and thence to render it incombustible, is a Thing which, I conceive, is impracticable.

ARCHILOCHUS, a Greek Poet, Native of the Island of Pharos (a), and the Son of Teleficles [A], flourish'd in the XXIXth Olympiad [B]. An uncommon Torrent

[A] The Son of Teleficles] This we find, not only in Suidas, but in Oenomaus likewise, quoted by Eusebius (1).

[B] He flourish'd in the XXIXth Olympiad.] Authors differ a little in this. Tatian, and St Cyril, place Archilochus in the XXIIIrd Olympiad (2). Clement Alexandrinus places him the XXth; Others in the XVth, XVIIIth, and XIXth (3). Cicero supposes him to have lived in the Reign of Romulus (4). Cornelius Nepos places him in the time of Tullus Hostilius (5). Herodotus not only affirms, that he wrote Verses on the Adventures of Gyges, and Candaules; but that he liv'd likewise at the same time (6). Eusebius makes him flourish in the LXXIXth Olympiad. It is easy to reconcile some of these Authors, but not all; for the Revolution, which happened in Lydia by the Death of Candaules, and the Inauguration of Gyges, fell out in the XXVIIth Olympiad (7). The Death of Romulus happened in the preceding Olympiad. The Reign of Tullus Hostilius takes in the space of time between the first Year of the XXVIIth Olympiad, and the first Year of the XXXVth. Salmastius, who was very happy in correcting a Mistake in Solinus, did not perceive one of his own. Solinus has been rash enough to place the Three Orators of the Family of the Curio's, Archilochus, and Sophocles, in the same Age. "Plurimi sibi be (8), inter Romanos eloquentia florerunt, sed hoc bonum hereditarium nunquam fuit nisi in familia Curionum, in qua tres iterum continua oratores fuerunt: magnum hoc habitum est sane eo seculo, quo facundiam præcipue & humana & divina mirata sunt: quippe tunc

"percuressores Archilochi poetæ Apollo prodidit, & latronum facinus Deo coarguente detectum; cumque Lyfander Lacedæmonius Athenas obideret, ubi Sophoclis tragici inhumatum corpus jacebat; identidem Liber Pater duce[m] monuit per quietem, sepeliri delicias suas sineret, nec prius destitit, &c. — Many among the Romans were famous for Eloquence; but This Talent was never Hereditary, except in the Family of the Curio's, in which were Three successive Orators. This was look'd upon as very Extraordinary even in That Age, in which Eloquence was held in great Admiration both by Gods and Men; for, at that time, Apollo discover'd the Murderers of Archilochus the Poet, and the Robbers were convicted of their Guilt by the Evidence of a God; and, when Lyfander the Lacedæmonian besieg'd Athens, where the Body of Sophocles the Tragedian lay unburied, Bacchus admonish'd the Chief in a Dream, to suffer his Favourite to be buried; nor did he desist till, &c." Salmastius observes (9), that One of these Curio's liv'd in the time of Tullius Cæsar; that Archilochus liv'd in the time of Tarquinius Superbus; and that Sophocles did not flourish till above two Centuries after Archilochus. He has reason, then, to laugh at Solinus, but is in the wrong to place Archilochus in the time of Tarquinius Superbus, who reign'd from the third Year of the LXIth Olympiad to the last Year of the LXVIIth: I say, he is in the wrong to place him in this Time, since he, elsewhere, fixes him under the XXXIXth Olympiad. Circiter vigesimam nonam Olympiadem inclaruit Archilochus (10). Having been guilty of This Error, (10) Id. ib.

(47) Sallian. Annal. in Schol. ad Ann. Christi 3, n. 7.

(48) See Noldius, de vita & gestis Herodum, pag. 194, & seq.

(49) See Apian. in Mithridaticis.

(50) The Epitome of Livy says, that Archelaus delivered up the Fleet of Mithridates to the Romans. Aulus Victorius says, that Sylla classed Mithridatis provisiones in Archelaus interceptis. — intercepted the Fleet of Mithridates, by the Treachery of Archelaus.

(51) Strab. lib. 12, pag. 314. — See also lib. 17, pag. 547.

WHETHER ARCHELAUS could make Wood proof against Fire.

(a) Herodot. lib. 1, cap. 12, Lucianus, in Pseu-dol.

(1) Euseb. lib. 6, cap. 7. Præp. Evang. pag. 256. item lib. c. cap. 33, pag. 227.

(2) See Vossius, de Poët. Gr. pag. 14.

(3) Anonymus, in Descrip. Olymp. apud Vossium, ubi supra.

(4) Tufculan I. cap. 1.

(5) Corn. Nep. apud Gellium, lib. 17, cap. 21.

(6) Herod. lib. 1, c. 13.

(7) See Suetonius Calpurnius ad Ann. Mundi 3239, p. 65.

(8) Solin. cap. 2, sub fin.

(52) Apud Aul. Gell. lib. 15, c. 1.

(53) Journal des Sav. de l'156 of Feb. 1677, pag. 54.

(54) Plut. in Vita Syllæ.

(9) Salmast. Plin. Exercit. pag. 52.

(10) Id. ib. pag. 854.

(b) Plutarch.
Instit. La-
con. p. 239.

(c) See Re-
mark [C].

chus [E]. Some have said, that he himself was banished from Lacedemon (b); but the Reason they give for it is taken from a Maxim, which he inserted in one of his Poems, That it is better to throw down one's Arms, than to lose one's Life. He wrote This in his own Justification (c). His Calumny, which was sometimes an Inconvenience to him in his Affairs [F], and which extended even to his own Person [G], did not deprive him of the Favour of Apollo; for, upon his being killed in Battel, the Oracle of Delpi drove his Murthrerer out of the Temple [H]; nor could it be appeased but by dint of Excuse and Prayer; and even, after this, ordered him to repair to a certain House, and there appease the Ghost of Archilochus.

(23) Anthol.
lib. 3, c. 25.

(24) Remark
[F].

(25) Schol.
in Horat.
Epod. 6.

But, in the Antologia, we read, that two, or even three, Daughters of Lycamber hanged themselves (23). See, in the Article HIPONAX (24), some Instances of the tragical and mortal Effects of Satire. Let us not omit what a Scholiast on Horace observes; to wit, that Neobula (so he calls the Daughter, who was contracted to Archilochus) did not hang herself on account of her Gallant's Satire, but out of Grief for the miserable Catastrophe of her Father's Life (25). Most Readers will take part with the Antologia; in which Archilochus is represented as the immediate Cause.

[E] It was on occasion of This Satire, that the Lacedemonians ----- prohibited the Verses of Archilochus. Valerius Maximus affirms this in express Terms. "Lacedemonii libros Archilochi & civitate sua exportari jusserunt, quod eorum parum verendum ac pudicam lectionem arbitrabantur. Non luerunt enim ea liberorum suorum animos imbui, ne plus moribus noceret, quam ingenii prodesset. Itaque maximum poetam, aut certe summo proximum, quia domum sibi invisam obcenis maledictis laceraverat, carminum exilio multarunt (26). ----- The Lacedemonians ordered the Books of Archilochus to be banished from their State, esteeming the reading of them to be vicious and immodest. They were unwilling the Minds of their Youth should be tainted with them, lest their Morals should be more injured, than their Genius improved, thereby. They therefore punished the greatest of Poets, or next to the greatest, for an offence of Satire on a Family, whom he hated, by banishing his Verses."

[F] His Calumny ----- was often an Inconvenience to him in his Affairs. Pindar informs me of this particular; for he affirms, that, though Archilochus fattened upon Slander, yet was he often put to his Shifts.

Εἶδον γὰρ ἐκὰς ἑὸν τὰ πολλ' ἐν ἀμαχανίᾳ Ψογερὸν Ἀρχιλόχου, βαρυλόγους ἔχθρουν παλαιόνερον (27).

(27) Pind.
Pythior. Od.
2.

Vidi enim procul existens sæpe in angustiis conviciatorem Archilochum, dum maledictis odiis pinguefere.

Arctius did not understand this Passage; since he took it to mean, that Archilochus was a Gainer by his Calumny, and raised himself by it from a low Estate to Honour and Riches (28). The Word παλιόνερος, which signifies to fatten, deceived him; he should have remembered, that, to this day, to feed, or grow fat, upon any thing signifies, figuratively, to take an extraordinary Pleasure in it. No doubt Ovid had an Eye to this Passage of Pindar, when, in his Poem in Ibin, he says,

Utque repertori nocuit pugnacis Iambi,
Sic sit in exitium lingua proterva tuum.

*Like His, who first the keen Iambic gave,
May thy abusive Tongue thy Ruin prove.*

(28) Leicaropier, in Ciceron. lib.
3, de Nat.
Deor. pag.
703. Ro-issine in Instit. Comment.
in Ibin.

We shall see in the Remark [H], that they, who pretend, that Calumny cost Archilochus his Life (29), are mistaken.

[G] His Calumny ----- extended even to his own Person. This Poet took such strange Delight in Slander, that not content to pull his Neighbour to pieces, he could not forbear defaming himself (30). For which Critias blames him (31); saying, that, had it not been for his own account, we should not have known, that his Mother Enipone was a Slave; that meer Poverty forced him to quit the Isle of

(30) See the Passage of Plutarch, which shall be cited in the Remark
[M], Citation (55).

(31) Apud
Ælian. Var.
Hist. lib. 10,
cap. 13.

Paros, and remove to That of Thasus; that he rendered himself odious there by slandering both Friends, and Foes; that he was extremely addicted to Women, and very insolent; and, what is worst of all (32), that he had thrown away his Buckler in Fight. The Scholiast on Arifophanes informs us, that it was in the War against the Saians, a People of Tbrace, that Archilochus threw down his Arms, and fled (33). Arifophanes has borrowed a Distich of This Poet's concerning this Adventure (34); upon which his Scholiast gives us this Gloss. Plutarch repeats the same Verses, and something more.

Ἀσπίδι μὲν Σαίων τις ἀγάλλεται ἦν περὶ
Σάνωρ
Ἐνδὸς ἀμύμητον κάλλιπον ἐκ ἐθέλων.
----- Ἀσπίς ἐκείνη
Ἐρρέτω. ἐξῆυδ' ἰς κτήσσομαι ἢ κακίῳ (35).

One of the Saians, perhaps, now prides himself in wearing my Shield; which I unwillingly left behind me, unburt, amidst the Briers. No matter for the Loss of This Shield; I shall soon purchase as good an one.

Yet our Run-away valued himself more upon being a Soldier, than a Poet.

Ἐμὶ δ' ἐγὼ θεράπων μὲν Ἐνναλίῳ ἀνακτοῖς,
Καὶ μυστῶν ἐράβην δῶρον ἐπιτάμνονος (36).

I am a Follower of the God of War, and skilled in the amiable Gift of the Muses.

Alceus ranged the Posts of Honour after the same manner; he gave the first Place to Arms; and, in describing his House (37), he makes no mention of Books, but of Helmets and Bucklers; all favours of the Arsenal, and not of the Library. Yet it is well known, that he saved himself in Battel by the help of his Heels, and not his Arms. See the Remark [B] of his Article.

[H] Apollo ----- drove his Murthrerer out of the Temple (38). The Name of Him, who slew Archilochus, was Callondas Corax (39), a Native of the Isle of Naxos. The Priests of Delpi drove him out of the Temple, because he had killed a Man consecrated to the Muses. Ἐκκληθεὶς ὑπὸ τῆς Πυθίας, ὡς ἱερὸν ἄνδρα τῶν μυστῶν ἀνθρωπῶς (40). And yet he had killed him in War, and in fair Combat; as appears more plainly from Suidas, than Plutarch. For this Reason we cannot suppose, that Pliny, upon this Occasion, is sufficiently exact, when he said, in the plural Number, Archilochi poetæ interfeciores Apollo arguit Delpis (41). ----- Apollo at Delphi accused Those, who had slain Archilochus the Poet.

His Copyer Solinus, affecting the Paraphrast, has left himself without excuse; since he has the boldness to say, that this Poet was killed by Robbers; "Percussiores Archilochi poetæ Apollo prodidit, & latronum facinus Deo coarguente detectum (42). ----- Apollo discovered the Murthrerers of Archilochus the Poet; thus the Villany of certain Robbers was detected by the Evidence of a God."

Eusebius cites a Greek Author, called Oenomaus, who gives the Name of Archias to the Murthrerer of Archilochus; "Quare qui Archilochum occidit Archias à templo quasi sceleratus exire ab Apolline justus est: mularum enim amicum occiderat (43). ----- Wherefore Archias, who slew Archilochus, was commanded by Apollo to depart from the Temple, as one guilty of Impiety; for he had slain a Friend of the Muses." Galen has reported the Words of the Oracle.

(32) It is Critias, who speaks.

(33) Schol.
Arifoph. in Comed. de Pace. See alio Strabo,
lib. 12. pag.
378.

(34) In Co-
med. de Pace, circa finem.

(35) Plut.
in Instit. La-
con. p. 239.

(36) Athen.
lib. 14, cap.
6, p. 627, C.

(37) Apud.
Athen. lib.
14, cap. 5.

(38) Plut.
de his qui se-ro à numine puniantur,
pag. 560.
And Suidas
sunt in Ap-pulo.

(39) Id. ib.
See also Plut.
in Numa.
pag. 62.

(40) Plut.
ubi supra.

(41) Plin.
lib. 7, c. 29.

(42) Solin.
cap. 1, p. 11.

(43) Euseb.
Præp. Evang.
lib. 5, cap.
33, cited by Father Har-douin, in Plin. Tom.
2, pag. 124.
These are not the very Words of Oenomaus, but only his Thoughts.

(d) See the Art de TETRIX.

Archilochus (d). And yet this Person had killed him in a fair Combat [I]. Iambic Verse was what this Poet excelled in; he was the Inventor of it [K], and one of the three Poets, whom Aristarchus approved of in this kind of Poetry (e). Quintilian places him, in some Respects, above the other two. Aristophanes, the Grammarian, was of Opinion, that Archilochus's Iambic Poems, the longer they were, were the finer [L]. The Hymn, he composed on Hercules and Iolus, was so distinguished, as to be constantly sung three times, in honour of those, who gained the Victory in the Olympic Games (f). Scarce any thing remains of his Works; which, for the sake of Morals, is rather a Gain, than a Loss, [M]. They, who speak of several

(e) See Remark [K].

(f) Pindar.
Olymp. Ode
n, & ibi Jo.
Benedictus.
See also, in the Ch. heads of Erasmus, Archilo. hi
melos.

(34) Galen,
in Sutoria,
Tom. 2, cap.
6, pag. 10, apud Hor-omian, ubi
supra.

Μυζῶν θεράποντα κατέκτανες, ἐξιδί νηῶ (44).

You have slain a Servant of the Muses; depart from the Temple.

Apollon has been much blamed for acknowledging as a Son of the Muses, and extremely commending, a Poet, who had written so obscenely. Oenomaus reproached This God with This (45): Origen and Eusebius make use of it to shame the Pagans. Τύτοις περσάμεν, says Eusebius (46), καὶ δι' ὃν αὐδῆς ὁ Ἀπόλλων θανάτω τὸν Ἀρχιλόχον, ἀνδρα παρ' ἰσότητος κατὰ γυναικῶν ἀσχερῆρ' ἠμύναται καὶ ἀρρητολογίαις αἷς ἰδ' αὐτοῖς τῶν σφῶρον ἀνὴρ ὑπομνήσκειν, ἐν τοῖς δίκαιοις ποίημασι κεχρημένον. Let me add what greatly recommended Archilochus to the Favour of Apollo: a Poet so infamous and obscene, that no good Man can bear to bear him. I omit the Passage of Origen; it may be found in his third Book against Celsus, in the hundred and twenty fifth Page of the Cambridge Edition, 1677.

[K] This Person had killed him in a fair Combat.] I have already observed, that Suidas informs us more clearly of this Matter, than Plutarch; but I have something to add, which is worth our notice. There is a small Treatise Of Republics, attributed to Heracleides; in which the Order of the Priestests is to be found, commanding the Murderer of Archilochus to depart the Temple, together with the Murderer's Answer. This Answer is an inexplicable Riddle in the Latin Translation. The Translator supposes, that the Murderer answered, I am innocent, for I killed him at a Distance, as the Law commands. Read the Greek, and the Translation of it (47). Ἀρχιλόχον τὸν ποιήτην Κόραξ ὄνομα ἐκίλεν, πρὸς ὃν φασιν εἶπεν τὴν Πυθίαν, ἐξιδί νηῶ. Τύτον δ' εἶπεν, ἀλλὰ καθάρως εἰμι ἀναξ, ἐκ χειρῶν γὰρ νόμῳ ἐκίλενα. Quidam Corax dixit Archilochum poetam interfecit. Itaque Pythia ad eum ait, exi templo. Cui is respondit, ad purus sum Rex, eminus enim, ut lex jubet, interfeci (Archilochum). A Friend of mine, who is well versed in Philological Learning (48), has confessed to me, that he never heard of an Edict, acquitting Murderers, who killed at a Distance; and that he did not believe ἐκ χειρῶν signified eminus. As he was an intimate Friend of Mr Gronovius's, he consulted him on this Difficulty; and This was the learned Answer of That learned Professor. "Ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ, locutio est propria in praeliis occidendi forum & occidentium. Quem in illo furore vel gladius, vel alia machina deprehendens ad Orcum mittit, is trucidatur ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ. Ita omnes Græci, & præsertim Polybius, ut libro 1. cap. 34. Καταπαύμενοι σωρὸν δὲ ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ διεσφάτεοντο. Ο παῖς (49) illic pugnant: quod quidem non sufficit, nam & in prælio multi possunt non pugnant occidi, & tamen ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ. Rursus eodem libro cap. 57. τῆς γὰρ αὐτοῖς αἰεὶ συνέβαινε διαρπείσθαι κατὰ τὰς ἀνέπλοκάς τὰς ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ περιεσφάσας. "Ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ is a Phrase belonging to Those who kill, or are killed, in Battel. Whoever, in the Heat of Battel, is killed by a Sword, or any other Engine, is said to be killed ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ. So all the Greek Authors; particularly Polybius, lib. 1. cap. 34. καταπαύμενοι, &c. Casaubon renders it pugnantes; which is insufficient; for many may die in Battel, not fighting, and yet ἐν χειρῶν νόμῳ. Again, in the same Book, cap. 57. τῆς γὰρ αὐτοῖς, &c." There remains no further Difficulty, after this learned Answer; whereby it appears, that Corax meant no more, than that he had killed Archilochus in Battel, according to the Laws of War.

[K] He was the Inventor of Iambic Verse.] This appears from these Lines of Horace, in the nineteenth Epistle of the first Book, ver. 23.

----- parios ego primus Iambos Offendi Latio, numeros animosque secutus Archilochi; -----

I first the Romans keen Iambics taught.
In numerous Smoothness, and in height of Thought I match'd Archilochus; CREECH.

But yet more clearly from this Passage of Paterculus. "Neque quemquam alium cuius operis primus auctor fuerit in eo perfectissimum præter Homerum & Archilochum reperiemus (50). ----- Homer and Archilochus alone arrived at Perfection in those Species of Poetry, of which they were the respective Inventors." It is certain, that Iambics were This Poet's Master-piece. "Ex tribus receptis Aristarchi judicio scriptoribus Iamborum ad ἐξιν maxime pertinebit unus Archilochus. Summa in hoc vis elocutionis; cum validæ ium breves vibrantque sententiæ; plurimum sanguinis atque nervorum; adeo ut videatur quibusdam, quod quocumque minor est, materiæ esse non ingenii vitium (51). ----- Of the three received Writers of Iambics, (in the Opinion of Aristarchus) Archilochus alone arrived at Perfection. This Poet was Master of the greatest Force of Expression; his Sentences were short and sprightly; inasmuch, that many think, if he fell short of any Poet, it was owing to the Defect of his Subject, not of his Genius." Paterculus, then, made him the Inventor of Iambics. But he must also have been the Inventor of Epic Poetry, if what is imputed to Terentianus be true; "Doctrinæ laudem ei Terentianus tribuit, ut & Epicorum versuum inventionem, libr. de metris, pag. 86. — Terentianus, in his Book Of Metres, ascribes to him the Praise of Learning, as also the Invention of Epic Poetry." Thus they speak in the Theophrastus Fabri, in the Article of Terentianus Maurus; but, when we consult the Passage of Terentianus Maurus, it is easy to perceive, that the Matter in hand there is the Epode, not the Epic Poem; nor yet would it be certain, that the Passage, which relates to Archilochus, declares him the Inventor of the Epode, if this Truth were not learnt elsewhere (52). This Passage might pass for a Citation alleged as an Example of the Epode, spoken of in this Place, which is an Hexameter Verse followed by one half of a Pentameter.

Hoc doctum Archilochum tradunt genuisse Magistri, Tu mihi Flaccus fat es.

Lorenzo Fabri observes, that "the Greeks for fix hundred Years knew no other than Hexameter Verse; till Archilochus taught other kinds with so much Success, that all began to try their Skill in Verses of different Measures; which made the Greek Poetry so fine by this Variety of Versification (53).

[L] Archilochus's Iambics ----- the longer they were, were the finer.] Cicero informs us of this Particular, where he applies it to his Friend Atticus's Letters; "Ut Aristophani Archilochi Iambus, sic Epitola longissima quæque optima videtur (54). ----- As the Iambics of Archilochus appeared to Aristophanes, so the longest of your Epistles seem to me the best." The same Judgment has been passed upon Demosthenes's Orations.

[M] Scarce any thing remains of his Works; which, for the sake of Morals, is rather a Gain, than a Loss.] The Verses of Archilochus afforded no Examples,

(35) Arud Eusebium,
ibid.

(46) Ibid.
cap. 32, pag.
22.

(47) Juxta
Editionem Nicolai Cra-gii, ad cul-tem Tractatus de Republica La-cedæmonorum, pag. 19.

(48) M. F.
HENRI-CIUS, whose Elgy may be seen in the Epistle Dedicated to the Treatise, which Gronovius published at Leyden, in 1653, etc.
subd. Dis-quisitione de Icuncula Smetiana,
&c.
I. 1. c. 11.
Of postumy of pullus showing Mr Henricus for the life of a excellent Library.

(49) Plutarch,
C. Iambus.

(50) Pater.
lib. 1. cap. 5.

(51) Quin-til. lib. 10,
cap. 1.

(52) In Ma-rius Victori-nus, l. 3, de Arie Gram-
mat.

(53) Mene-trius, Repræ-sentat. en Musique,
pag. 245.

(54) Cicero
Epist. 11,
lib. 16, ad
Atticum.

(7) Diog. Laert. in Hieracle.

several Archilobus's, multiply Beings without Necessity [N]. If we had the Dialogue composed by Heracides (g) on the Life of our Poet, we might, in all Probability, find several Particulars in it concerning him; and doubtless we might there find, how he conducted a Colony of Parians into the Island of Thajus (b). It was some Honour to be chosen for such a Trust.

(b) Oenomaus apud Euseb. Præpar. Evang. lib. 6, cap. 7.

amples, but what were vicious. He had expressed a deep Sorrow at the loss of his Sister's Husband, who died at Sea. This Tenderness might have been improved to an excellent Lesson; but in him it degenerated into a most pernicious Maxim, viz. that he would fly for Consolation to Wine, and other sensual Pleasures, since his Tears could do his Brother-in-law no good, nor his Pleasures harm.

Οὐτά τι γὰρ κλαίον ἴσσομαι, ὅτε κακίον
Θῆσω, τριπλάσι καὶ θαλίαις ἰσῆκων (55).

(55) Plut. de ausend. Poet. pag. 33.

The work is, that he never scrupled to defame himself, and fill his Poems with a thousand scandalous Reflexions on the Sex. Τῶν ὅτι Ἀρχιλόχῳ πρὸς τὰς γυναῖκας ἀπρεπὺς καὶ ἀκολάτους ἐνθιμίων, ἰανθὸν παραδειγματίζοντες (56). See the use, which Theodore Beza makes of this last Sentence in his Notes on the first Chapter of St Matthew.

(56) Plut. de Curiosit. pag. 520.

[N] They, who speak of several Archilobus's, multiply Beings without Necessity.] A Passage of Eusebius, misunderstood, occasion'd the mention of an Archilobus, an Historian and Chronologer, on whom the Impostor of Viterbo had the boldness to sather a small Book. Thus Eusebius speaks, according to the Latin Translation, Licet Archilobus vicissimam tertiam Olympiadem — supputet (57). It is pretended, that the meaning of this is, that, according to Archilobus's Computation, Homer lived in the XXIII^d

Olympiad. But Scaliger has shewed, that the Greek of Eusebius signifies no more, than that some Authors made Homer and Archilobus flourish at the same time. Goropius Becanus had cleared up this Matter before, in the great and curious Collection relating to Archilobus, which he made on purpose to confute the Impostures of Annus of Viterbo (58). Thus the pretended Chronologer Archilobus comes to nothing. Vossius would have done better to have followed this Correction, than to place Archilobus among the Greek Historians (59). He adds, that Scaliger places him in the Reign of Darius, the Son of Hystaspes (60), without producing any Proof for it. I cannot find in Scaliger's Notes, what Vossius imputes to him; neither do I believe he has said any such thing. Vossius, having made mention of our Poet Archilobus, in another Book (61), under the XXIXth Olympiad, promises another under the XCIVth. But, when we look for him there, we meet with only An Antilobus. Charles Stephens, Lloyd, and Hofman, have given us a Lacedemonian Poet Archilobus, who flourished at Rome, in the Reign of Tullus Hostilius, and another Archilobus, the Son of Nestor, who was kill'd by Memnon at the Siege of Troy. These are all Chimæras; This last was call'd Antilobus; and there needed but little Attention, to discover, that the Court of the little Kings of Rome was no fit Theatre for Greek Poets. Most of these last Faults are to be found in Caletin.

(58) Gorop. Becanus Origin. Ant. verp. lib. 4, What he says thereupon is to be found in the Bibl. Hispanica, of Schotus, pag. 375, &c.

(59) Vossius de Histor. Græcia, p. 5.

(60) He came to the Throne in the third Year of the LXVth Olympiad. Vossius, ib. pag. 6.

(61) Voss. de Poet. Græc. p. 14.

(57) In Chron. ad Ann. 908.

(a) See a Description of it in Athenæus, lib. 5. pag. 206.

(b) Athen. pag. 209.

ARCHIMELUS, a Greek Poet, flourished in the Reign of Hiero, King of Syracuse [A]. This appears by the Present, which he received from That Monarch. He had made an Epigram in praise of a prodigious large Ship, which Hiero had ordered to be built (a). This Epigram was worth to him above Five thousand Quarters of Corn, which this Prince sent him to the Pyreum (b). Behold, then, a Poet, who may be ranked among the Few, who have met with Admirals de Joyeuse (c).

(c) The Admiral of this Name, gave an Abbey for a N. g. Balzac. Entrec. VII.

[A] He flourish'd in the Time of Hiero, King of Syracuse. That is about the Year of Rome 520, and the CXXXVth Olympiad. It is probable, that he lived at Athens; since this Present of Corn was carried to the Pyreum. I wonder Vossius could forget this Poet: The Reward of his Epigram makes him remarkable. Athenæus has preserved the Eighteen Verses, which were so amply paid for (1). Mr Catherinet has not faithfully reported the Circumstances of This Recompence; he says, that (2), Archimelus was rewarded by King Hiero with Thirty thousand Quarters of Corn, for an Epigram of Twenty Verses, written on his Ship.

(1) Athen. lib. 5, pag. 203.

(2) Catherinet, Traité de la Marine, pag. 6.

(a) A kind of Mints in Italy.

(b) Lancel. de Perousa, at Page 987 of a Book entitled, Chi l'indovina è Savio.

ARCHIROTA (ALEXANDER) [A] Abbot of the Olivetans (a), was of Naples. He composed, among other Books, A Collection of the Actions of the Kings, mentioned in the Scripture [B], and dedicated it to the Queen of Poland, Bonna Sforza, who resided, then, at Bari. In return, she gave him a Pension for Life of Three hundred Crowns per Annum. He lived an Hundred and twenty Years (b). Konig makes him flourish in 1636, and ascribes to him A Commentary on the Books of Samuel and Kings, and A Treatise on the Vow of Poverty.

[A] ALEXANDER. Lancelot of Perousa, in the Body of his Work, entitled, Chi l'indovina, e Savio — The Soothsayer or Philosopher — tells us, that This Person's Name was Alexander; but in the Margin, and Table of Matters, he calls him Agostino, Augustin.

[B] A Collection of the Actions of the Kings, mentioned in the Scripture This Work was composed in Italian. I know not whether it be the same with That entitled, Discorsi sopra diversi Luoghi della sacra Scrittura — Discourses on different Passages of Holy Writ. The Catalogue of Oxford remarks, that it is divided into two Parts; the first of which was printed at Florence, in 1581, in 8vo; and the second, in the same City, in 1583, in 8vo. We find, in the same Catalogue, that the Treatise De Voto Paupertatis, Of the Vow of Poverty, appeared at Florence, in 1580, in 8vo; and that the Author of these three Works was called Alexander Archirota. I believe it should be Archirota.

(a) Poggius init. Histor. Discept. & II. Invecl. in Philoph.

ARETIN (CHARLES) was of Arezzo in Tuscany, as his Sirname testifies (which apply to the other Aretin's). He held a considerable Rank among the Learned of the XVth Century. Poggius gives him great Encomiums (a); but they ought to be suspected, because Charles Aretin was a great Enemy of Philippus, whom Poggius mortally hated. Philippus complains bitterly of our Aretin, and represents him as a wicked Man, full of Frauds and malicious Arts (b). This likewise ought to be suspected, as coming from such an Enemy as Philippus; who, being naturally given to slander, became much more so, on account of the Contests he had with some other learned Men. Be that as it will, there are disinterested Persons, (b) Phil. phi. Epist. ad Carol. Aretin. Ann. 1433, & Epist. seq.

sons, who say, that Charles Arelin understood the Latin and Greek Tongues perfectly well, and that he shewed it by some Translations from the Greek (c). He was, besides, a tolerable good Poet [A], and wrote Comedies in Prose; some Parts of which are inserted by Albert Eyb, in his Marguerite Poétique (d). But, what discovers his Abilities most, is, his having been chosen to succeed in the Post of Secretary to the Republic of Florence, after the Death of Leonard Arelin, in 1443 [B]. We do not know the Year of his Death; but Mr Moreri is certainly mistaken, when he places it in the Year 1443 [C]. The Authors, he quotes, do not say, that our Arelin left a Volume of Letters. Some have thought he was the Brother of John Arelin (e), of whom we shall speak in his Place. But they are mistaken: He was very ambitious of equalling the Reputation of Leonard Arelin, his Predecessor (f).

(c) Leand. Albert. Descript. Ital. pag. 96.

(d) Gouneri Biblioth.

(g) Vossius d. Hist. Lat. pag. 579.

(f) See Remark (H), of the Article ARELIN (LEONARD).

[A] He was a tolerable Poet. This must be understood in regard to those Times; and I question not, with this Restriction, to establish my Text: for thus Mr de la Monnoie writes to me: Lilius Gyraldus, who had seen Charles Arelin's Poems, did not find them good; and in Truth, from the Quotations to be seen of them in the Dictionary of Torcellius, there is Reason to judge, that they are little worth. Note, that Torcellius quotes nothing of Him but Elegiac Verses; but Father Labbe, in two or three Places, cites a Translation of the Batrachomyomachia, in Hexameter Verse, by Charles Arelin.

• Labbé, Nouvelle Biblioth. de MSS.

[B] He was chosen to succeed Leonard Arelin. This we have from Leander Albertus. "Diem functus est (Leonardus Arelinus) anno post C. N. MCCCXXL, ætatis suæ LXXIV, Florentiæ, cum illi Reipub. diu à secretis fuisset, & successorem in eo munere habuit Carolum item Arelinum, & Græcis Latinique literis eruditissimum, qui etiam ipse quædam de Græcis Latina fecit (1.) — Leonard Arelin died in the Year of Christ 1440, aged Seventy four Years, at Florence; having been a long time Secretary to That Republic; and was succeeded in That Employ by Charles Arelin, a Person well skilled in Greek and Latin, and who had translated some Pieces out of Greek into Latin". To this Testimony let us add That of Æneas Silvius, tho' somewhat long; because it will serve as a Proof of more than one Thing; "Commendanda est, says he (2), multis in rebus Florentinorum prudentia, tum maxime quod in legendis Cancellariis non juris scientiam, ut pleræque civitates, sed oratoriam spectant, & quæ vocant humanitatis studia. Norunt enim recte scribendi dicendique artem non Bartolomæum aut Innocentium, sed Tullium Quintilianumque tradere. Nos tres ex ea urbe cognovimus, Græcis & Latinis & conditorum operum fama illustres, qui Cancellariam alius post alium tenuere, Leonardum & Carolum Arelinos, & Poggium ejusdem reipublicæ civem, qui Secretarius Apostolicus tribus quondam Pontificibus dictat Epistolas. — The Prudence of the Florentines is to be commended in many things; particularly in the Choice of their Secretaries; in whom they do not require, as many States do, a knowledge of Law, but Oratory and Polite Learning. For they are sensible, that the Art of Writing and Speaking well is not to be learned from Bartolus, or Innocentius, but from Cicero. I have been acquainted with Three successive Secretaries of That City, all famous for their knowledge in Greek and Latin, and the

(1) Leand. Albert. Descript. Ital. pag. 96.

(2) Æn. Silvius Histor. de Europa. cap. 54.

"Works they have composed; to wit, Leonard and Charles Arelin, and Poggius, a Citizen of the same Republic, who had formerly, in quality of Apostolical Secretary, dispatched the Briefs of three successive Popes." By this Passage the Obscurity, or Error, of another Passage of Æneas Silvius, which gave Vossius a great deal of trouble, may be corrected. It is this: "Leonardum Arelinum ex te primum sensi obisse, qui Latium ornavit literis, quæ nemo post Lactantium Ciceroni proximior fuit. Gaudeo Poggium ejus locum apud Florentinos tenere. Sed maluisse potius locum non vacante, ne tanto splendore caruisset Hetruria (3). — You first in form me of the Death of Leonard Arelin, who, by his Learning, was an Ornament to Italy; and who, after Lactantius, came the nearest to Cicero. I rejoice, that Poggius succeeds him at Florence; but should have been better pleased, that the Post had not been vacant, that Hetruria might not have lost so great an Ornament." See the Remark [A] of the Article ARELIN (LEONARD).

[C] Moreri is mistaken, when he places it in the Year 1443. It is certain, that Poggius succeeded our Arelin in the Employ of Secretary at Florence. Now it appears by the Speech, in which he congratulates Nicholas the Fifth on his Promotion to the Papacy, that he had no Employ at Florence in 1447 (4). It must be supposed, then, that Charles Arelin was Secretary of Florence in 1447; for his Predecessor Leonard Arelin died in 1443. But there is a more demonstrative Proof of Mr Moreri's Error. Poggius, in a Letter written in the Pontificate of Nicholas V, says, that Charles Arelin had paid him a Visit; at the same time, when Nicholas V. had retired for fear of the Plague, and himself and Family had left Rome. Quo primum anno, says he (5), Nicolaus Pontifex quintus, pestis causa, Fabrianum, Piceni oppidum, fecisset, cum me ad Terram novam natalem patriam cum familia contulisset, venit eo postmodum regatus à me, qui Florentiam ob negotia publica adibat, Carolus Arelinus. What lead Mr Moreri into a Mistake, was his finding, that (6) Vossius does not refute the German Author, whom he quotes, and who had said, in his Collections of the Days of Death, and of Nativity, that Charles Arelin, the Orator and Historian, died in 1443, at Seventy Four Years of Age. All this agrees so well with Leonard Arelin, that, in all Probability, the German Author has confounded Charles with Leonard: However Vossius ought to have shewn him his Mistake in relation to the Year of our Arelin's Death.

(3) Id. ibid.

(4) The Year of the Election of Nicholas V.

(5) Poggius init. Disceptat. l.

(6) Voss. de Hist. Lat. pag. 578.

ARELIN (FRANCIS) lived in the XVth Century. He was a Man of great Reading, and understood the Greek Tongue. He translated the Commentaries of St Cbrysofom on St John, and twenty of the same Father's Homilies, into Latin. He translated also the Epistles of Phalaris into Latin [A]. There is still extant a Treatise of his, de Balneis Puteolanis; — of the Baths of Puteoli. John Antony Campanus, who was a Favourite of Pius II, and Sixtus IV, was one of his intimate Friends (a). Erasmus did not esteem our Arelin's Translations of St Cbrysofom [B].

Some

[A] He translated also the Epistles of Phalaris into Latin. I have met with several curious Reflexions on these Letters in a Book printed in Germany, in 1689 (1); but I must not suppress, that what is only due to Francis, is attributed to Leonard Arelin. "Latine emisit Leonhardus Arelinus Florentiæ MCCCCLXXX. — Published by Leonard Arelin, at Florence, 1480". We shall see, in its Place (2) that Leonard was not living at the Time of That Edition.

(1) Decas Decadum J. Alberti Fabricii. n. 8.

(2) In Remark [C], of the Article ARELIN (LEONARD).

[B] Erasmus did not esteem our Arelin's Translations. He observes, in two Places, the Error, which This Translator is guilty of, in relation to the Word οἰσῆς, in translating the Commentary on the First Epistle to the Corinthians. "Quod attinet ad fidem bene reddendi Græcæ, magis peccatum est ab Aniano, Aretino, & cæteris, quam ab Oecolampadio, qui magis peccat festinatione quam imperitia. Versumem Francisci Arelini in priorem ad Corinth. habemus usque ad cap. 30. Cepi gu-

(a) Taken from Aubertus Miræus, Au'tor de Script. Ecclesiast. pag. 268.

Some believe, that our Francis Arctin is the same with the famous Lawyer Franciscus Arctinus, of the Family of the Accolli. But others can scarce believe, that the Translator of some of St Chrysostom's Works, &c. is the same Francis Arctin, whose Works of Law favour of the grossest Barbarity, without the least Shadow of Knowledge in the Greek Tongue. I have some Observations to offer on this Head, which may serve to convince many People, that there is but one Francis Arctin in the Case [C]. Be that as it will, let us here speak of Arctin the Lawyer. He studied

(1) Franciscus Arctinus, Epist. 50, lib. 26, pag. 1478. See also Epist. 2, lib. 28, pag. 1591.

(4) Page, 1591.

(5) Panzirus de Claris legum Interpret. lib. 2, cap. 103, pag. 249.

(6) Mr de la Monnoie, Remarque MSS.

" Num quam scilicet transisset rem, & ecce in ipso
" statim limine, quod est τὸν τῶν κατὰ καὶ
" κατὰ ἑστῆς παρὰ αὐτὸν οἰοῦν, εἰσὶν ἐπιτί-
" nem vertit pro arrogantia (3). — As to tran" scribing Greek faithfully, Anianus, Arctin, and " others, are more guilty in this respect, than Occo-
" lampadius, who offends more thro' Hastie, than Un" skillfulness. We have the translation of Arctin on " the first to the Corinthians, as far as the 30th
" Chapter. I immediately perceived how hastily he " performed this Work; for, in the very beginning of it,
" he renders οἰοῦν by Opinio (Opinion) instead of Ax-
" rognatia (Arrogance)." He observes, in another " Place (4), that Arctin had translated the Commentaries
" on the First Epistle to the Corinthians to the Twen" tieth Homily.

[C] I have some Observations to offer on this head,
" which may serve to convince many People, that there " is but one Francis Arctin in the case. Let us first
" propose Panzirolus's Doubt. " Liberalibus artibus
" imbutus, non solum Latinis, sed etiam Græcis li" teris operam dedisse creditur, & Joannis Chrysostom-
" i in D. Joannem & epistolam primam Pauli ad
" Corinthios commentaria Latina fecisse; vereor ta-
" men ne is sit Accolus, cum quæ in jure scripsit,
" illum stylium non oleant, neque ullum fervent lin-
" guæ Græcæ vestigium (5). — Being a polite " Scholar, he is said not only to have studied the Latin,
" but the Greek Tongue likewise, and to have transla" ted into Latin St Chrysostom on St John, and St
" Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians; tho' I much
" question whether he be the Accolus Arctinus, since
" what That Author has wrote in the Law does not " favour of this Style, nor preserves the least Traces of " the Greek Tongue." Next let us see what Mr de " la Monnoie writes to me on occasion of this Doubt

(6). " Francis Accolli d' Arezzo, having written his " Concilia, and other Works of the Law, in a Style,
" which discovers not only an entire Ignorance of " the Greek, but of the Latin likewise; I have " been in doubt, as well as Panzirolus, whether " This was the same Francis d' Arezzo, who has " given us Greek Translations, and whose Style is " not inferior to That of most of the Humanists of " his time. I knew, that the Lawyer took the " Name of Accolli, and the Titles of Doctor and " Knight, whereas the Humanist was simply called " Francis Arctinus. In the mean time, having " lately had the Sight of a Copy of Francis Phil" lephus's Epistles, printed at Venice, in Folio, in the " Year 1502; a very scarce, and much ampler Edition,
" than the Others, by Twenty one Books; I found
" a way of resolving my Doubt, upon Reading fe" veral of Those Epistles, in which the Author
" speaks of one Francis d' Arezzo, his Disciple,
" equally learned in the Law, and in polite Litera" ture. The Time and Circumstances make it evi" dently appear, that he is the same, whom Volater-
" ran, an almost Cotemporary Writer, mentions,
" at the End of his 21st Book. Besides his Law Com" positions, his Translations of St Chrysostom, of the " Epistles of Phalaris, and of Those of Diogenes the " Cynic, they attribute to him a Treatise of the " Baths of Puteoli; tho' he is not the Author of it,
" nor was any farther concern'd, than in dedicating
" it to Pope Pius the Second, by a Letter con" ceived in mean Expressions enough. He had also " composed a Book of the Life and Manners of " St Antonin, Archbishop of Florence. Phil-lephus
" speaks with praise of this Work, in the Twelfth " Letter of his Seventeenth Book. In the Twenty " Eighth Book of Letters of the same Phil-lephus,
" there are Six addressed Francisco Arctino Equiti
" aurato ac Juriconsulto, then Professor of Law
" in the University of Sienna. In most of these " Letters, he gives him high Commendations, a " great part of which might have been spared.
" Quasi dubitandum sit, sibi se to him in the First " Letter, minus tibi esse apud florentissimam istam

" Rempublic. secunda omnia, qui vir in omni eruditio-
" nis ac sapientie genere præstantissimus sis, atque ea
" virtute præditus, qua non modo cedis, sed potes jure cum " universa antiquitate de laude contendere. — As " if there were any room to doubt of your Success in " That most flourishing Republick; you, who excel
" in every branch of Learning and Knowledge, and " whose extraordinary Virtues not only raise you above
" the Moderns, but equal you to the most shining " Characters of Antiquity." " It appears by the " Third, dated the 8th of March 1468, that Francis
" of Arezzo was then somewhat above Fifty Years " of Age; a Reason he made use of to excuse him" self from marrying; Whereupon Phil-lephus tells " him merrily: " Nam quod ais sentire te debilita-
" tas tibi esse corporis vires, cum sis quinquagenari-
" us, aut paulo amplius, id nulla tui causa acci-
" dit alia, quam quod ætatis robur remiseris, ut
" quo tempore tendendus erat arcus, tum cum tu
" maxime relaxaveris. Quod si eam servasses medio-
" critatem, quem & Philolophi probant, & ego se" cutus sum, consuliisses tu sane & posteritati &
" tibi. — As to what you plead, that you find your " Strength decay'd, being now fifty Years of Age, or " upwards, this proceeds from your not having ex" erted the Strength of your Youth; inasmuch, that,
" when the Bow ought most to have been bent, you gave
" it the greatest Relaxation. Had you observed That " Modericity, which the Philosophers approve of,
" and I have follow'd, it would have been for the " Advantage both of your Self and Posterity." In " the Fourth of the 28th, he enquires after his Stu" dies: Ceterum cupio ex te nosse quid rerum agas?
" Non enim satis tuo præstanti ingenio, singularique
" doctrinæ esse duco, quod doceas leges, & jus civile,
" nam hæc jam tibi nullius sunt industriae, cujus
" memoria divina est potius quam humana. Majora
" quædam te arbitror meditari, nec enim in eodem
" semper verfaris ludo, itaque fieri non potest, quin
" aliquid novi semper cudas excudique. — I " desire you would inform me how you are employ'd?
" for your great Abilities and uncommon Learning
" cannot, I think, be satisfied with Teaching the " Laws; a Study, which now requires no Indus" try in you, the memory of which is rather di" vine, than human: I cannot help believing, that " your Thoughts are employ'd on something greater;
" for, as you do not confine your Self to One Branch of " Science, you must necessarily strike out something " New." " In the Fifth he desires him to get the
" the History of Ammianus Marcellinus copied for " him in Parchment. In a Letter of the 29th Book,
" he proposes the getting Demetrius Castrensis, of " Constantinople, entertain'd at Sienna, at the Charge " of the Republick, to instruct the Youth in the " Greek Tongue. In another Letter of the 31st " Book, he informs him of a Design the Se" nate of Venice had to get him from Sienna, and " give him a Chair at Padua; and adds, " Ad hæc
" ego contra locutus sum, & quæ vera esse novi, &
" quibus te delectari exillimavi, quippe qui non
" essem oblitus quæ mecum nuper, cum ad Octobrem
" Senæ fuisset, & de temperamento corporis tui, &
" de istius cæli, quantum ad te attinet, intemperie
" locutus fuera. — This Design I oppos'd, and de" clared what I knew, and what I thought was " agreeable to your Inclinations; for I had not for" got the Conversation, which paid between us at " Sienna, in the Month of October, in which you
" mentioned the State of your own Constitution, and the " inconsistency of That Air with your Health." " What " is surprising in this, is, his saying in the " same Letter, that Francis of Arezzo was an Enemy
" to a barbarous Style: " Nec illud sane prætere-
" undum censui, Appianum Alexandrinum esse jam
" a me magna ex parte Latinum & Quam, quoniam
" tu

studied at Sienna, about the Year 1443 (b), and afterwards taught the Civil Law there, with such a Vivacity of Genius, that he was nick-named the Prince of Subtilties; and that the Subtilty of Aretin passed into a Proverb. He signalized this fine Talent chiefly in Disputation; for no one could resist him. He gave his Advice with such Confidence, that he made his Clients sure of their Cause: His Experience did not deceive him; for it was commonly said in Court, Such a Cause is condemned by Aretin, therefore it will be lost. He taught also in the Academy of Pisa, and in That of Ferrara. He went to Rome in the Pontificate of Sixtus IV, but continued not long there; for he quickly perceived, that the great Hopes he had built on his Reputation would be greatly disappointed. That Pope declared he would willingly give him the Dignity of a Cardinal, were he not loth to injure the Public, by taking so excellent a Professor from his School. When Age would not permit him to exercise all the Functions of his Employ, he was dispensed with from reading of Lectures; but his Salary was continued. Nevertheless he sometimes mounted the Chair; and, though his Lectures had lost their wonted Spirit, yet he had a great many Hearers; which was attributed to his Reputation. One Day, his Scholars being run to a public Shew, he perceived, that there were but forty Persons in his Auditory; and was in such a Passion, that he threw away his Book, and cried out aloud, Aretin will never explain the Mystery of the Law to so few. He went away abruptly, and would teach no more. He was naturally severe, and never kept a Servant above a Month or two; for he said, that those, who were newly hired, served with most Diligence. He was honoured with the Quality of a Knight; lived always a single Life, and very frugally; which gave him an Opportunity of acquiring a great Fortune. He was no less honoured for his Chastity, than for his Learning. The Reader will be pleased to know the Wile he employed to make his

(b) Panz-
rol. de Claris Legum Interpret.
lib. 2, cap.
103, pag.
249, dec.

"tu nulla barbaria linguæ delectaris. — Nor did I "think proper to omit, that I had translated into
"Latin the greatest part of Appianus Alexandrinus, "because you are displeased with All Barbarism of "Style." Is it then to the Practice of the Age,
"that the barbarous Expressions of Francis of Arezzo,
"in his Writings on the Law, are to be imputed?
"To me it seems, that there is ground to believe,
"he industriously affected them; lest, endeavouring
"to pass for a more Polite Writer, he should not "be thought so profound a Lawyer. I have perused
"some of his Pleadings, which are Barbarism it "self. The CXLIIId has been much ridiculed;
"where, in Consequence of the Agreement, made "between Francis Sforza, Duke of Milan, and Lewis
"de Gonzaga, Marquis of Mantua, that, in case
"Dorothy, the Daughter of the Marquis, should be "found without Deformity of Body, at the Age
"of Fourteen Years, she should be married to Ga- "leazzo, the Duke's Son; he maintains, that the "Duke had a Right to demand a Search by the Phy"sicians, who should see, and feel, the Princess
"stark naked, wherever the Exigency of the Case "might require. It appears, however, that this "Examination, how grievous soever in the Execu"tion, was demandable by Law; and it was ac"cordingly demanded by the Duke, but refused by
"the Marquis."

Having examin'd these Observations of Mr. de la Monnoie, I propos'd some other Doubts to him; and he confirm'd his opinion a-new in this manner. You ought not to doubt in any wise, but that Francis d'Arezzo, Translator of some Greek Works, and Francis d'Arezzo, the Lawyer, whose Comments on the Law, and Pleadings, are extant, are one and the same Author. Volaterran, who might have seen the Lawyer, allows him, besides his Learning in the Law, a considerable Attainment in the Belles Lettres (7). Philoplaus, who wrote some Years before, says the same Thing. It appears by the Testimony of the Epistles, I have cited to you, that, in his Time, there was one Franciscus Aretinus, or Arretinus (as he himself, and others, always write) his Disciple, Knight, Lawyer, Professor of Civil Law in the University of Sienna, and One, who excell'd in all manner of Literature. I add this following Passage, to those I have already sent you. It is in the First Epistle of the Twenty sixth Book, which is an Invective against Leodrisio Crivello. "At laudas Franciscum Arretinum, & jure quidem, sed, ut arbitror, dormitans. Egisti enim præter ingenium, & consuetudinem tuam. At meretur Franciscus Arretinus, cum sit tum Jureconsultorum omnium præstantissimus, tum nullius præclaræ discipline ignarus. Tamen laudari à te flagitiorum omnium scelerumque sententiâ dedecoratum est."

VOL. I.

"Jubes ab illo ut discam: rectè mones; nam non ab
"iusto solum, sed etiam abs te ipso, si quid boni af-"ferre posses, non invitus discerem. Sed cur, quem
"tantopere laudas, non item imitaris? Ille prædicat
"apud omnes discipulum se meum extitisse, mihi quæ
"tribuit tantas laudas, quantis vellem me non carere.
"At est te, inquis, omni doctrina præstantior. Non "eo inficias, neque fero graviter me à multis etiam
"discipulis meis superari, id quod sine aliqua mea
"laude fieri non potuerit, siquidem hi grati esse vo"luere. — You commend Francis Arretin, and just"ly; tho' sure you was asleep, when you did so; for "your Disposition and Practice never lead you to "Panegyric. Francis Arretin deserves Commendation,
"as being a most skillful Lawyer, and a compleat "Scholar. But it is a Disgrace to him to be praised "by you, who are a Sink of all Villany and Wicked"ness. You bid me learn of him; your Advice is "good; for I should readily receive Instruction, not "only from him, but even from you, were it possible "to learn any Good of you. But why do you not imi"tate a Man, whom you so greatly commend? He "publicly declares himself to have been my Disciple,
"and bestows such Commendations on me, as I wish "were due to me. But he excels me, you say, in "every Branch of Learning. I confess it, nor am I
"displeased, that many of my Scholars surpass me;
"which very Thing cannot but tend in some Degree
"to my Praise; since They acknowledge themselves in"debted to me for it." This Letter is dated the First "of August 1465. At the same time Janus Pannonius, "who studied, then, in Italy, address'd an Epigram to "our Francis d'Arezzo; the Two first Verses of which "were these:

Franciscus, interpres legum, ô Aretine, Sacramus, Nec minus Aonia nobilis in cithara.

Learn'd in the Sacred Laws, O Aretin, Nor less renown'd on the Aonian Lyre.

It is certain, then, that this Professor of Civil Law at Sienna, call'd Francis d'Arezzo or Aretin, was skill'd in polite Literature; and it is no less certain, that the Name of the same Professor's Family was Accolti. You may believe himself: For he subscribes himself at the Bottom of his 118th Pleading, "Decretorum Doctor, Senis ordinariæ legens, & illustri D. Marchionis Elitenfis Consiliarius; — Deor of Decretals, Professor at Sienna, and Counsellor of the Illustrious Marquis d'Este." The Times agree. Volaterran says, That Francis Aretin, Humanist, and Civilian, was at Rome in the Pontificate of Sixtus IV. Francis Accolti wrote his Hundred and Sixty ninth Plea against the same Sixtus, in Favour his Disciples sensible, of how great Importance it is to keep a fair Reputation [D]. Though he had designed his Estate for the Maintenance of a College, yet he left it to his Relations (c). He had a Brother, who became very famous under the Name of BENEDICTUS ACCOLTUS ARETINUS [E]. I shall speak of him in one of the Remarks.

(7) These are the Words of Volaterran, at the end of the 25th Book, pag. 782. Alexander Imolenfis, & Franciscus Aretinus, ambo scriptis excellentibus nuper relictis in memoria posteritatis vivunt. Franciscus Aretinus, præter jura, cæteras etiam liberales artes est adeptus, princeps scilicet hujus habebatur. Kithi tempore magna expectatione in hanc urbem venit, pauloque post se frustra remigravit impari doctrinæ sapientia vitæque institutio, cum in exilium venerit, ac opibus inhiavit, quas cumulatifimas cognatis denum requirit.

(c) Ibid.

of Lorenzo de Medicis, and the Florentines, whom That Pope had excommunicated for the Murder of the Archbishop of Pisa, and the Imprisonment of the Cardinal, his Great-Nephew. Volaterran observes, That Francis Aretin, having gone to Rome with great views, stay'd there but a little while, finding that the Success did not answer his Expectation. From whence I infer, that Francis Accolti, who is the same with the Francis Aretin of Volaterran, undertook the more freely to write against Sixtus in Defence of the Florentines, as remembering, that this Pope had let him depart Rome, without acknowledging his Merit. Perhaps, likewise, the Reason of his not marrying was the Hopes he had entertain'd of some Ecclesiastical Dignity, as has been said of the Civilian Jalon. There only remains the Doubt, arising from the Difference between the Style of Aretin, the Professor of Law, and That of Aretin, the Translator. It is true This Difference is very great; and, tho' the Translations be but left us are not, indeed, the most elegant Latin, yet, in comparison of his Civil-Law Works, they may be reputed more than Ciceronian. Had he endeavour'd (as some Authors to divert themselves have) to write in a Macaronic Style, he could not have succeeded better. Sunt etiam multi testes, says he, Concil. 83. qui viderunt aquam bene ire ad molendinum, & ipsum bene molere, & stercerium lignaminis bene in pectus. And, Concil. 13. Probat per duos testes nostros, quod ista mulier gessit portatorem capitis secundum habitum nuptiarum à sex annis citra. The whole Book abounds with these Elegancies. The Orthography of the Words taken from the Greek is strangely perverted in it. We there find Economus, emologatio, cyrothece, Grifogonus, emphitheota. I have insinuated the Reason, which this Lawyer might have, for making use of these barbarisms, viz. that his Brethren did not write, or express themselves, otherwise: if his Language had been more correct, it would not have been understood by those of the Trade. Francis Aretin, or Accolti, which you please, could have express'd himself better; but he loved Money; and, if he had affect'd to employ the Papinian Style, he might have danced attendance in vain, and would have been generally abandon'd. The same Barbarism reign'd at that Time among the Divines and Physicians. They among them, who first attempted to introduce Politeness, were reckon'd neither Divines, nor Physicians, but only Grammarians. They were scarce cur'd of this Prejudice in the Days of Ludovico Vives. His Words are worth transcribing. Quæ Lyranus, & Hugo scribunt (says he, lib. 1. de "causis Corruptar. Art.) Theologia est, quæ Erasmus, "Grammatica. Idem de Hieronymo, Ambrosio, Augustino, Hilario dicturi, nisi nomina obtarent; tametsi hic etiam nescio quid mullant: Quod si Joannes Picus apologiam suam corrupto illo non scripsisset sermone, haud quaquam haberetur Theologus, sed Grammaticus. Alciatus, Zasius, Cantiuncula, Grammatici sunt, cum de jure disputant; Accursius est Jurisconsultus, vel cum interpretatur, que, id est, & ait, id est, dixit; seu, id est, aut. ----- What Lyranus and Hugo write is Divinity; What Erasmus, Grammar. They would say the same of Jerom, Ambrosius, Austin, and Hilarius; did not the Greatness of their Names silence them; tho' even here they mutter I know not what. But if Joannes Picus had not written his Apology in that corrupt Style, he would have been considered, not as a Divine, but a Grammarian. Alciatus, Zasius, Cantiuncula, are Grammarians, when they dispute concerning Law; Accursius is a Lawyer, when he interprets que by et; ait by dixit; and seu by aut. So that, Sir, there was a Kind of Necessity on Francis Aretin, the Lawyer, to conform to the Practice of his Time; and I think these Reflexions, together with the Proceeding, may suffice to persuade you, that he only differs from the Humanists in Point of Elocution.

[D] The Wife he employ'd to make his Disciples sensible, of how great Importance it is to keep a fair Reputation. When he found, that the frequent Exhortations he gave them to preserve a good Reputation, availed nothing, he made use of the following Stratagem. Ubi (Ferrariæ) studiosos ad famam boni nominis conservandam sæpe hortatus, cum nibil proficeret, ridiculum commentum excogitavit, ut quam vim maximam habere existimatio offenderet (8). The Butchers of Ferrara left their Meat all Night in the Shambles. He went thither with his Lacquey before Day, and, having broke open their Boxes, carried off all the Meat. Two of his Scholars, who were reputed the most unlucky, were accused of This Action, and imprison'd. Aretin waited upon Duke Hercules, to desire their Liberty, taking the Fact upon himself. But, the more obstinately he insisted, that He had done it, the more it was believed, that the Prisoners were guilty. For no one durst suspect a Professor, whose Gravity and Wisdom were so well known, of such an Action. The Affair being at last terminated, he openly declared, that he had gained his Point; which was to shew the Weight and Authority of a good Reputation. Quo constantius se facti autorem fatebatur, eo magis qui in vinculis erant rei credebantur, cum ob viri gravitatem nemo id de eo suspicari auderet. Re demum composita, id se Aretinus ad demonstrandum hominis bonæ opinionis auctoritatem fecisse dixit (9). It is well known, that reputed Liars, are never believed, even when they speak Truth. It is quite contrary with those, who pass for sincere Men; They are believed, even when they lie. See, in Valerius Maximus (10), what a good Opinion once conceived of a Man can do.

[E] He had a Brother, who became very famous under the Name of BENEDICTUS ACCOLTUS ARETINUS. He was born in the Year 1415, and, having gone thro' the Studies of Humanity, he applied himself to That of the Law, with so much Ardor, that, in a short Time, he arriv'd to the Degree of Doctor; and, soon after, by his Public Lectures, and by his Opinions and Advice (11) in difficult Cases, equalled the most famous Civilians of his Time. He did not bid adieu to Polite Learning; but wrote Treatises, which shew'd, that this Branch was not indifferent to him. His Dialogue, de præstantia virorum sui ævi, was printed at Parma, in the Year 1692, from the Manuscript, which Mr Magliabecchi produced. During the last Seven Years of his Life, he was Secretary to the Republic of Florence; where he died, in the Year 1466, in the Fifty first Year of his Age. His Son, Peter, a great Civilian, having been Auditor of the Rota Twenty five Years, was honour'd with a Cardinal's Cap by Pope Julius II. He had another Son, whose name was Michael, and who was the Father of Benedictus Accoltus. This Son was Secretary to Clement VII, and afterwards Cardinal (12). See Moreri's Dictionary, at the Word Accolti.

(8) Panz. de Claris Legum Interpret. pag. 250.

(9) Id. ibid. pag. 251.

(10) Valer. Maxim. lib. 3. cap. 7. n. 8.

(11) Some of them have been printed.

(12) Taken from the Life of Benedict Accoltus, prefixed to the Dialogue de Præstantia virorum sui ævi.

ARETIN (Guy), a Monk of the Order of St Benedict, lived in the XIth Century. He became famous by discovering a new Method of teaching Music. He published a Book on this Subject, entituled, Micrologus, and a Letter, which Cardinal Baronius has inserted in his Annals, under the Year 1022. He published his Micrologus, at the Age of Thirty four Years, in the Pontificate of John XX; and had been three times called to Rome by Pope Benedict VIII. This Pope had examined the Antiphonary of Aretin, and was fond of several Things, which he had learned from this Author. Possevin gives us this Account of him, in his Apparatus

(a) Pag. 694.

(a). To say something concerning this Invention of Guy Aretin, I must observe, that that it was he, who invented the six Notes, ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la. The Names of these six Notes are said to be taken from an Hymn, which contains these Sapphic Verses.

UT queant laxis *RE*sonare fibris
*Mi*ra gestorum *FA*muli tuorum
*SOL*ve pollutis *LA*bii reatum (b).

(b) See Voffius de Musica, pag. 40.

For this Purpose, you need only take the first and sixth Syllable of each Verse. Some pretend, that the Word Gammus, so common in Music, comes from Guy Aretin's having, in making use of the first Letters of the Alphabet, to specify his Notes, employed the Letter G, which the Greeks call Gamma; and that he did this to shew, that Music came from Greece (c). They, who attribute to him a Book against Berengarius are mistaken [A].

(c) Furetiere, at the Word Gammus.

[A] They, who attribute to him a Book against Berengarius, are mistaken. Vossius fell into this Mistake; and thence infers, that he flourished in the Reign of the Emperor Conrad the Younger; and that, therefore, they, who place him an Hundred Years later, are mistaken (1). The Error, I speak of, arose from hence, that they have confounded Guy Aretin with another Monk, whose Name was Guilmont, a Brother of the Convent of St Leufred, of the Order of St Benedic, in the Diocese of Evreux; who became Cardinal, and Bishop of Aversa in Italy. They were very near Contemporaries; for Guilmont died about the Year 1080. He is the Author of Three Books, "De veritate corporis & sanguinis Christi in Eucharistia, adversus Berengarium; — Of the real Presence of the Body and Blood of Christ in the Eucharist; against Berengarius; which have been printed separately, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum (2). The Cause I assign for this Error is so plain, that the same Vossius says expressly, in another Place, that, in 1070, in the Pontificate of Gregory VII, flourished Guido or Guilmont, born at Arezzo, Patria Aretinus, first a Monk in the Monastery of St Leufred, in the Diocese of Evreux, in Normandy, and afterwards Cardinal, and Bishop of Aversa; that, while he was a Monk, he composed Two Treatises of Music, one in Verse, and the other in Prose, and is the same, who wrote Three Books against Berengarius (3).

(2) Vide Labbé, de Script. Ecclesi. Tom. 1, pag. 402.

(3) Vossius de Scient. Mathem. p. 95.

ARETIN (JOHN), surnamed Tortellius, passes for one of the learnedest Men of the XVth Century. He composed the Life of St Athanasius [A], at the Request of Pope Eugenius IV. He was admitted to the Confidence of Nicolas V, whose Chamberlain he was (a). He was a Man of an agreeable Conversation, and honourably distinguished himself from other learned Men, his Contemporaries, by never dishonouring the Profession of Learning by fierce and injurious Disputes. He was chiefly skilled in the Knowledge of Grammar; as he has shewn by his Book De Potestate Literarum [B]. Gesner's Bibliotheca gives us the Titles of several other Works of Tortellius, excepting a Lexicon, which he composed, and which is cited by Magius (b). Laurentius Valla was much his Friend, and dedicated to him his Books De Latina Elegancia [C]. Vossius, who affirms (c), that he was the Brother of Charles Aretin, would be much mistaken, had he no other Proof for it, than the

(a) Jovius Elog. c. 108.

(c) Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 579.

[A] He composed the Life of St Athanasius. Paul Jovius intimates plainly enough, that Tortellius only translated it into Latin (1); Divi Athanasii vitam Eugenio expetenti Latinam fecit. Gesner says so more expressly; Athanasii Alexandrini vitam ad Eugenium Pontificem in Latinum transtulit (2). But Vossius allows him much more than the Task of a Translator; He makes him the Compiler of it; Athanasii vitam ex variis, Eugenii postulat, confarcinavit; and quotes Paul Jovius, and Volaterran (3). The Quotation of Paul Jovius cannot be altogether exact, as any one may see by comparing the Words. That of Volaterran is not more so, than the former; these are his Words. "Joannes (Aretinus) cognomento Tortellius, Romanæ Ecclesiæ subdiaconus, apud Eugenium quartum fuit. Orthographiam, vitamque Athanasii, ac nonnulla alia conscripsit (4). — John Aretin, surnamed Tortellius, Subdeacon of the Roman Church, was in the Court of Eugenius IV. He wrote a Treatise of Orthography, the Life of St Athanasius, and some other Works." Vossius affirms, that Wincelius has inserted This Life of St Athanasius in his Hagiologia. He conjectures, that Tortellius is the Author of the Life of St Zenobius, Bishop of Florence, inserted in the Collections of Surius, under the Twenty fifth of May. The reason of this Conjecture is taken from the Circumstances of Time, and from the Name, which the Author of This Life, assumes; to wit, Joannes Archiepiscopus Aretinus.

"some Chapters on the Invention, Number, Figure, Pronunciation, and Joining of the Letters of the Alphabet. The second, which is very long, contains an Alphabetical Catalogue of Latin Words, chiefly taken from the Greek, of which he teaches, or endeavours to teach, the Orthography (5)."

[C] Laurentius Valla dedicated to him his Books de Latina Elegancia.] From the manner, in which Gesner had expressed himself, no One but would judge, that Tortellius dedicated this Work to Laurentius Valla: These are Gesner's words: "Joannes Tortellius, natione Aretinus, Laurentii Vallæ amicus, ad quem elegantiarum linguæ Latinæ sex libros perperisit. Nicolai postmodum pontificis contubernalis, & studiorum ejus intims comes (6). — Johannes Tortellius, of Arezzo, an intimate Friend of Laurentius Valla, to whom he dedicated Six Books, of the Elegancies of the Latin Tongue. He was afterwards Chamberlain and Confident of Nicolas V, and an intimate Companion of his Studies." Those Compilers, who, thro' an Ambition of writing a large Book in a short Time, or for any other Reason, never seek for the necessary Instruction beyond the Page in Sight, would easily commit Three gross Faults, if they applied their own Conjectures to this Text of Gesner. I. They would say, that Tortellius wrote six Books of the Elegancies of the Latin Tongue, and that he dedicated them to Laurentius Valla. II. That, afterwards, he became a Domestic of Pope Nicolas V, and his Oracle of Learning; and that the great Success of his Book procured him This Honour. III. That Nicolas V held the Chair in the Year 1420; for, since Gesner places the flourishing State of Tortellius in this time, and common Sense tells us, that this flourishing State must be referred to the time, when Tortellius, was

(5) Mr de la Monnoie, Remarques, manuscrit.

(6) Gesner Biblioth. fol. 458, ex Trithemio.

[B] His Knowledge of Grammar is shewn in his Book De Potestate Literarum.] "That, which Volaterran calls Orthographia; Paul Jovius, a Book de potestate literarum; Gesner, Commentarii linguæ Latinæ; and Magius, Lexicon; is but One and the same Volume of Tortellius in Two Parts: "The First of which, which is very short, contains

(1) Vossius de Musica, pag. 40.

(b) Magius, Miskel. lib. 2, cap. 14.

(1) Jovius, Elog. cap. 108, p. 251.

(2) Gesner. Biblioth. fol. 458.

(3) Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 579.

(4) Volaterran. lib. 21, pag. 773.

Words of Volaterran, to whom he seems to refer us. Volaterran says nothing of this pretended Brotherhood [D].

Some very good Judges believe, that Tortellius was but moderately learned, even for the Age he lived in; but, as he was naturally officious, and held a considerable Post about the Pope's Person, the Wits of those Times gave him great Praises, which some of them retracted afterwards. Philelphus was of this Number [E]. I shall observe, in another Place (d), that Tortellius was Library-Keeper to Nicholas V.

(d) See, in one of the Remarks of the Article NICOLAS V., the Passage in the Letter of the 26th Book of Philelphus.

in Favour with Nicholas V. it follows, that, according to Gesner, This Pope sat in the Chair at the time I have said. The Truth is, that he was elected in 1447; and that Tortellius had been his Man of Learning, and his Chamberlain, before; when Laurentius Valla dedicated his Elegantiae to him. I cannot guess what Mr Moreri would be at, in this Article, with his indefinite Citation from Valerius Andreas. Why did he not consult Vossius, and Paul Jovius, who would have furnished him with a Cure for Leanness.

[D] Volaterran says nothing of this pretended Brotherhood. I have very good Reason to call it so; since Tortellius, speaking of Charles and Leonard d'Arezzo, styles them only his Countrymen.

* In the 4th Part of his Work, at the Chapter of the Greek T.

A doctissimis viris nostrae aetatis, & contreraneis meis Leonardo & Carolo Arretinis *. And, when he mentions Charles, he always styles him either Carolus Arretinus contreraneus meus, or Carolus noster Arretinus †. This was communicated to me by Mr de la Monnoie. Let us set down the Words of Volaterran, and Those of Vossius; and we shall see, whether the latter could build upon the former.

† In the second Part, which contains the Words in an Alphabetical Order.

"Carolus & Joannes Arretini nobilia temporis illius ingenia, quorum alter scriba Florentinorum Leonardus successit; Alter Joannes, cognomento Tortellius, Romanæ Ecclesiæ subdiaconus, apud Eugenium quartum fuit (7). ----- Charles and

(7) Volaterran. lib. 21, pag. 773.

"John Arretin, celebrated Wits of That Time; the former of which succeeded Leonard, as Secretary at Florence; The latter, John, surnamed Tortellius, Sub-deacon of the Roman Church, was retained by Eugenius IV." Vossius expresses himself thus: "Joannes Arretinus, cognomento Tortellius, Caroli Arretini, qui post Leonardum Arretinum scriba Florentinorum fuit, frater, Romanæ Ecclesiæ subdiaconus apud Eugenium IV. ----- præter græpde de orthographia volumen, etiam Athanasii vitam ----- confarcinavit, ut præter Jovium auctor est Volaterranus lib. XXI. Anthropol. ubi & hocce Arretinos fratres nobilita illius temporis ingenia appellat (8). ----- John Arretin, surnamed Tortellius,

(8) Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 579.

(a) Leon. Arretin. Histor. Rerum Italicar. See also Jovius, Elog. c. 23.

(b) Jovius, ibid. cap. 9.

(c) Leand. Albert. Descript. Ital.

(1) Jovius, Elog. cap. 9, pag. 27.

(2) Philelph. Convivior. lib. 1, & Epistol. ad eum scripta.

(3) Pogg. in Philelph. Invect. 2.

(4) Apud Philelph. Invect. 1, in Vallam.

(5) Flor. Sabinus advers. Calumn.

(6) Erasmi in Cicroniano.

ARETIN (LEONARD), is more known by This Name, which was given him as he was a Native of Arezzo, than by That of Brutus, or Bruni, which was his Family Name. He was one of the most considerable Men of the XVth Century [A]. He learned Greek under Emanuel Chrysolorus, as he himself informs us (a); and, his Merit being made known to Pope Innocent VII., he obtained of him, though very young, the Place of Secretary of the Briefs, of which he acquitted himself worthily under That Pontificate, and the four following (b). He was afterwards Secretary to the Republic of Florence (c), and raised a large Fortune (d), as well, because he always lived a single Life (e), as on account of his Extraordinary Economy. He translated some of Plutarch's Lives [B], and Aristotle's Ethics, from the Greek into Latin. He composed three Books of the Punic War, which may serve to supply some of those, which are wanting in Livy [C]. He composed also an History of the Transactions

[A] He was one of the most considerable Men of the XVth Century. Paul Jovius says, that Leonard Aretin was the first, who restored the Purity of the Greek Tongue in Italy (1). Philelphus allows him great Eloquence, and a great Depth of Genius and Learning (2). Poggius (3) and Laurentius Valla (4) have ranked him above all his Contemporaries in point of Eloquence and Learning; but Floridus Sabinus is more moderate in his Commendations of him, and gives us no advantageous Idea of his Latin (5); in which Erasmus seems to agree with him (6). Aeneas Silvius praises our Aretin highly in his Fifty first Letter, and informs us, that the Florentines had conferred his Office on Poggius. Vossius observes, that Aeneas Silvius and Leander Albertus differ in this; the latter saying, in his Description of Italy, that Charles Aretin succeeded Leonard in the Post of Secretary to the Republic of Florence. See, above, "Brother of Charles Aretin, who succeeded Leonard as Secretary at Florence, Subdeacon of the Roman Church, and Domestic of Eugenius IV. ----- besides a large Volume de Orthographia ----- wrote the Life of Athanasius; as, besides Jovius, Volaterran informs us, lib. 21. Anthropol. where he calls the Brothers, Arretins, Celebrated Wits of That Time." If they had contented themselves with saying, they were Relations, they might have some ground for it in these Words of Philelphus, "Putabam Carolum Arretinum redisse mecum in gratiam. Ita enim Joannes Arretinus ejus NECESSARIUS tuis verbis mihi renunciavit (9). ----- I thought that Charles Arretin had been reconciled to me; for so John Arretin, his Relation, informed me from you." For though necessarius be sometimes taken for an intimate Friend, yet Philelphus, and most of the Writers of those times, never used it but in the Sense of a Relation by Blood, or allied by Marriage. I am indebted for this Observation to Mr de la Monnoie.

(9) Philelph. Epist. lib. 9.

[E] Philelphus was of the Number of Those, who retracted the Praises, they had bestowed on J. Aretin. I shall cite, in the Article NICOLAS V., a Letter of Philelphus, dated the first of August 1465, in which he greatly commends Tortellius for his Skill in Greek and Latin. But see what the same Philelphus wrote, the twenty ninth of May, 1473. "Video quosdam nostræ tempestatis homines, qui cum magnum de se quiddam voluerunt in arte grammatica proficere, in maximis errores devenerunt. E quorum numero principatum mihi tenere visus est Joannes Tortellius Aretinus, qui cum & Græcam & Latinam litteraturam novisse videri vult, atqueque ignoravisse aperitissime declarat (10). ----- I know several Persons of our Age, who, pretending to great Skill in Grammar, have fallen into the greatest Errors. Among These John Tortellius Arretinus claims the first place; who, at the same time that he would seem to be versed both in the Greek and Latin Literature, plainly discovers his Ignorance of both."

(10) Mr de la Monnoie supplies me with this.

(d) Jovius, ubi supra.

(c) Volaterran. lib. 21, pag. 772.

the Article (CHARLES) ARETIN (7), where we prove, from Aeneas Silvius himself, that Leander Albertus is in the right.

[B] He translated some of Plutarch's Lives. To wit, That of Paulus Emilius, That of the two Gracchi, of Pyrrhus, of Sertorius, of Demosthenes, of Marc Antony, and That of Cato Uticensis (8). The Printers have been guilty of a strange Mistake in Moreri's Dictionary, in putting (vers de Plutarque) Plutarch's Verses, instead of (vies de Plutarque) Plutarch's Lives.

(8) Gesner, in Bibl.

[C] He composed three Books of the Punic War; which may serve to supply ----- Livy. The two first of these three Books treat of the first Punic War, which is wanting in Livy. The third treats of the Confusions, into which the Carthaginians fell by the Mutiny of the Soldiers, and Revolt of the People; as also of the War against the Gauls, and against given him; the fame, with which all Antiquity has honoured the great Merit of Plato; to wit, That of Divine; il Divino Arefino [B]: He has been stiled on Medals, Divus Petrus Aretinus (a). Some have thought, that he gave himself this Title, to signify, that he performed the Office of a God upon Earth, by the Thunderbolts, which he darted at the most eminent Heads [C]. He boasted, that his Libels were of more Benefit to the World, than Sermons [D]. He was complimented, in Letters, with having subjected more Princes by his Pen, than the greatest Kings had ever subdued by their Arms [E]; and was exhorted to persevere in this kind of Writing, to the end, that Monarchs might learn to amend [F]. Our Age has produced as bold and virulent Satirists, as Areto could be; and yet I believe none of them ever settled Contributions in an Enemy's Country. Some misinformed Writers make Areto pass for the Author of the Book De Tribus Impostoribus.

(a) Spizellus Scrutator Atheismi, pag. 19. affirmes to have seen some of them.

(3) See the Thoughts on Comets, n. 162, &c.

THE Judgment of Montagne on Areto.

(4) Montagne's Essays, lib. 1. chap. 57. towards the end.

(5) Jacobus Gaddius de Scripioribus non Ecclesiasticis, Tom. 1. pag. 13. apud Spizellum, in Felice Literato, pag. 112.

(6) It is in a Collection, published in 1538, at Venice, attributed to Domino Giglio, in 8vo, at the 22th Page of the first Book.

should not abstain from, if we had no other Fear upon us, but That of the Divine Vengeance (3).

[B] He had a very glorious Appellation, viz. --- That of Divine; il divino Areto.] It will not be amiss to see Montagne's Opinion of this Elogy: "Plato, says he (4), had the Surname of Divine by general Consent, and no one envied him; and the Italians, who boast, with Reason, of having generally a more refined Wit, and better Expression, than other Nations, bestow it on Areto, in whom I see nothing beyond the common Authors of his Age, except a manner of uttering lofty, frothy, Bombast, or Jest, which are ingenious indeed, but far-fetched and whimsical; so far is he from approaching That ancient Divinity."

[C] He gave himself this Title, to signify, that he performed the Office of a God upon Earth, &c.] I have met with this Thought in an Italian Author, quoted by a German. "Cur vero sibi arrogaverit aliorum consensu divinitatem, nescio, nisi forte DEI munus exercuisse dicendus sit, cum summa capita velut cellulosos montes fulminaverit, lingua corrigens & mulians quæ ab aliis castigari nequeunt (5). --- Why, with the Consent of others, he arrogated this Title to himself, I know not, unless, perhaps, he may be said to have exercised the Function of a GOD, in darting his Thunder on the biggest Heads, as on the loftiest Mountains, correcting and punishing those Faults with his Tongue, which others cannot chastise."

[D] He boasted, that his Libels were of more Benefit to the World than Sermons.] He says, in his Epistle dedicatory to the second Part of his Ragionamenti, that "if he does not merit Esteem on the Score of his Inventions, yet ought he to receive some Honour for the Service he had done to Truth, in conveying it into the Chambers and Ears of great Persons, to the Confusion of Flattery and Falshood." He takes notice of what one of Duke Urbino's Ambassadors had said, That "if the Ministers of Princes and Courtiers were rewarded for their Services, they were obliged for it to the Pen of Peter Areto." He adds, what another had said; "Areto is more useful to human Life, than Sermons; because Sermons instruct only the Ignorant; but his Writings reform great Men." These are his Words in Italian. "Quando io non fossi degno di honor veruno, merce de le inventioni con le quali do l'anima à lo stile, merito pur qualche poco di gloria per havere spinto la verità ne le camere, e ne le orecchie de Potenti ad onta de l'adulatione, e de la menzogna: e per non disfraudere il mio grado, ufero le parole stesse del Singulare M. Gianciopo, Ambasciadore d'Urbino: noi che spendiamo il tempo ne servigi de Principi insieme con ogni huomo di Corte, e non ciascun virtuoso, siamo riguardati, e riconosciuti da nostri padroni, bonta de galfighi che gli ha dati la penna di Pietro. E lo fa Milano, come cadde de la sacra bocca di colui, che in pochi mesi mi ha arricchito di due Coppe d'oro: l'Areto è più necessario a la vita humana, che le predicationi, è che sia il vero esse pongono in su le dritte strade le persone semplici, & i suoi scritti le signorilli, & il mio non è vanto, ma un modo di procedere per sostenere se medesimo osservato da Enea, dove non era conosciuto."

[E] He was complimented, in Letters, with having subjected more Princes by his Pen, than the Greatest Kings had subdued by their Arms.] This I have read in a Letter, written to him by Baptista Tornielli (6).

He tells him, that he merits the Titles Germanicus, Pannonicus, &c. as formerly the Emperors took the Names of the Provinces, over which they had triumph'd. "Non sapete voi, che con la penna vostra in mano avete soggiogato piu Principi, ch'ogni altro potentissimo Principe con l'arme? La penna vostra à qual non mette terrore, à quale non è formidabile, à chi anche non grata, à chi non cara, ove si mostra amica? La penna vostra si può dir, che v'ha fatto trionfator quasi di tutti i Principi del mondo; che quasi tutti vi sono tributarii, & come infudati. Meriterebbe esser chiamato Germanico, Pannonico, Gallico, Hispanico, & finalmente insignito di quei titoli, quali si davano à gli antichi Imperadori Romani, secondo le provincie per loro soggiogate: che se quelli soggiogavano le provincie per forza d'arme, & per esser piu di loro potenti, non era gran meraviglia; maggior meraviglia, aliai è, che un privato, inerme, haggio soggiogato infiniti potenti: che l'un potente l'altro, non è meraviglia. --- Are you not sensible, that, with Pen in hand, you have subdued more Princes, than ever the most powerful Monarch did by force of Arms? To whom is it not your Pen a Terror? To whom is it not formidable? and who is not pleased with it, when it has the Appearance of a Friend? With your Pen you have, as it were, triumph'd over all the Princes in the World; who are almost all tributary, and as it were feudatory, to you. You merit the Titles of Germanicus, Pannonicus, Gallicus, Hispanicus; Lastly, all the Titles given to the ancient Roman Emperors, according to the Provinces they had conquer'd; for that These should subdue Provinces by force of Arms, and superior Power, is no wonder; it is much more surprizing, that a private, unarm'd, Man should conquer numbers of powerful Men."

[F] He was exhorted to persevere in this kind of Writing, to the end, that Monarchs might learn to amend.] The Marquis del Guasto sent him this Exhortation, in a Letter, which he wrote to him with his own Hand (7). He desired no Exemption for himself; but that his Faults might be censured by Areto; and exhorted him to do it. It is probable he was pretty sure, he should not be taken at his Word. Areto did not confound his Friends with his Enemies; he only exercised his Satire upon those, who neglected to buy it off. "Seguete dico col solito, says the Marquis, e se in me vostro amico alcuna cosa men che laudabile conoscete; ricordatevi di non lasciar di riprenderla: accioche fatto accorto dell' error, come desidero, lo fugga, e divenga migliore. Seguite lo stil vostro, che di nuovo ve ne prego: accioche, se i defecti con verità faranno in altri trovati, si vergognino, & & vergognandosi, & mendandosi fuggano dal vizio alla virtù. Onde i rei divenuti buoni, abbracciati con essa virtù, si confermino nel bene. Del che quanto in cio l'humana Repub. si avvanzi; lo giudichino quelli, che lo fanno meglio intendere, ch'io nol lo esprimere. --- Follow, I say, your usual manner; and, if you see any thing faulty even in me your Friend, forget not to reprove me for it, that I may profit by your Admonitions, and become better. Persevere in Satire, I once more entreat you; that others may blush at their Imperfections, and, by blushing, and growing better, may fly from Vice to Virtue; and, being once reformed, may be confirm'd in Good. What Advantages human Society will from hence receive, let those judge, who understand it better, than I am able to express it."

(7) It is at the 44th Page of the second Book of the same Collection.

bus [G]. I cannot believe, that the Epitaph, mentioned by Moreri, was engraved on his Tomb [H], in St Luke's Church, at Venice. The Author of this Epitaph, no

[G] Some misinformed Writers make Aretin pass for the Author of the Book De tribus Impostoribus.

We shall, perhaps, have occasion to examine this Matter more fully, in another Place, and to make it appear, that it is very improbable there ever was such a Book. The Abbot Nicaifus, one of the worthiest Persons of this Age (8), who is acquainted with all the most learned Men in Europe, among whom he holds a very considerable Rank, was so kind as to send me, last Year (9), a very curious Dissertation of Mr de la Monnoie, his Countryman (10), on the Book De tribus Impostoribus *. It is full of very curious Observations, and deserves exceedingly to be printed. Mr de Beauval has lately given a small Extract from it (11). The Author shews, by very strong Reasons, that This Book is a meer Chimera. Grotius believ'd, but perhaps without Reason, that This very Book had been taken notice of, before Aretin was born. He says, that the Enemies of Frederic Barbarossa accused him of having composed this Book (12). He should have said, that Frederic II was accused of having said, that the World had been deceived by Three Impostors (13). The good Father Mersennus pretends, that one of his Friends, who had read the Book in question, had discovered in it the Stile of Peter Aretin (14). Meer Cant! Yet one would hardly imagine how much this Notion of Father Mersennus has been propagated.

[H] I cannot believe, that the Epitaph, mentioned by Mr Moreri, was engraved on his Tomb. He does not say positively and precisely, that this Epitaph was engraved on the Tomb of Peter Aretin, in St Luke's Church; but every one must suppose, that this is what he meant; for he expresses himself after this manner: "He died at Venice, where he is buried in St Luke's Church. This is his Epitaph."

Condit Aretini cineres lapis iste sepultos,

Mortales atro qui fale perfricuit.

Intactus Deus est illi, causamque rogatus

Hanc dedit, ille, inquit, non mihi notus erat (15).

Here Aretin enterr'd doth lie,

Whose Satire las'd both High, and Low:

His God alone it spared; and why?

His God, he said, he did not know.

"It is more ingenious in the Italian:

Qui giace l' Aretin Poëta Tosco,

Che d' ognun disse malo che (16) di Dio,

Scufandosi col dir' io no'l conosco.

There is nothing in the Thread of Moreri's Narrative, which gives the least Intimation, that these four Verses are not the very Inscription on Aretin's Tomb. It is imposing on every Reader, who has not the Ability to rectify a Mistake by his own Reflexions. It is particularly laying a Snare for Protestants, who, unless they believe with caution, will be apt to infer, that there is no Object so scandalous, which the Italians do not admit in their Churches. Several, then, amongst them, might easily believe, on Mr Moreri's Word, that the Patriarch of Venice not only suffered an Atheist to be buried in Consecrated Ground; but also, that the Epitaph of This Atheist was exposed, in the Church, to the View of all the World, in four Verses, which turn the matter into a Jest. For my own part, I cannot believe, that the Corruption and Negligence of the Clergy was ever at such an height, as to suffer Sepulchral Inscriptions of this kind in a Church. I am of Opinion, then, that the Four Verses produced by Mr Moreri, are one of Those Satirical Banterers, made on the Death of certain Persons, under the Title and Form of an Epitaph. How many of this kind were made on the Cardinals of Richieu, and Mazarine? They, who write the Elegies of Illustrious Men, and who, after the Example of Paul Jovius, take a pleasure in relating their Epitaphs, ought always to explain, whether they are Verses actually engraved on their Tombs, or only meer Sallices of Wit. If this Precaution had been used with regard to Aretin, we should not at present read in the Theatrum of Paul Freberus, and the Felix Literatus of Spizelius (17), (17) At the that the four Verses in Question are inscrib'd on the Tomb of this Personage at Venice (18). A Divine of Utrecht affirms (19), that the Epitaph of Peter Aretin, inserted in the Elogies of Paul Jovius, and That, which Pazzi has reported; testify, that he was a grand Apostle of Atheism; "Aretini epitaphium apud Jo-" vium in Elogiis virorum doctorum, says he, & al- " terum apud Guizeppe Pazzi, indicat qualis & quan- " tus Atheismi præco fuerit: scienim Pazzi in lib. " cui tit. Continuazione della monstruosa farina, " Venetii 1609. Qui giace l' Aretini poeta Tos- " ca (20), Che disse mal d'ogn'un fuor che di Dio; " ma si scuso dicendo, no'l (21) conosco. Aliter " sic. Qui giace estinto quell' amaro Tosco Ch'ogn' " huom vivendo col mal dir trafficasse. Vero e che " mal di Dio giamai non disse, Che si scuso dicen- " do io no'l conosco". Upon this let me observe, first, that Paul Jovius does not mention the Epitaph of Peter Aretin. How should He, since he died before him? He mentions That of Leonard Aretin, but it contains nothing which in the least reflects on the Faith of the Deceased; it has nothing to do with Religion. In the second Place, there is no depending on the Two Italian Epitaphs; for they were wrote without Approbation, and were never engraved on the Tomb. They were Sallices of Wit of some Satirical Poet. Spizelius has copied the whole Passage of Voëtius, almost Word for Word, without citing it (22). Note, that Lorenzo Crasso (23) insinuates yet more clearly, than Moreri, that the Four Latin Verses are inscribed on the Tomb of This Atheist, in St Luke's Church.

Let me here set down a considerable Supplement (24) At the " (24). It is a Custom, among the Catholics, to affix 38th Page of " to some Pillar, or other Place, near the Tomb of the Deceased, especially if a Person of Reputation, the 1st Tom. " Funeral Inscriptions, written on Paper. The " Truth is, these Inscriptions are, and always ought " to be, in Honour of the Deceased. But, Aretin " having been a noted Libertine, it is very possible, " that some Jester convey'd the Epitaph, mentioned " by Mr Moreri, and many others, into St Luke's " Church, at the Time of, or after, the Funeral. " Thus the Words of Ghilini must be understood, " who has himself likewise explain'd them clearly " enough to the same Effect; when, after having " said; e sopra il suo sepulchro fu posto questo Epita- " fion: Condit Aretini cineres, &c. — Over his " Tomb was hung up This Epitaph, Condit Aretini " cineres, &c. he immediately adds; sù parimente " appeso alla sua tomba quest' altro, quasi tradotto " d'al fuddetto, che va attorno nella bocca fino delle " persone idiote, Qui giace l' Aretin, &c. — This " other was hung up likewise at his Tomb, translated " as it were from the foregoing, which is That which " is most commonly repeated; Qui giace l' Aretin, &c. " The Italian Epitaph, as Ghilini delivers it, is much " correcter, than That in le Pazzi, Voëtius, or " Moreri; and I cannot comprehend this latter, " when he says, that it is more ingenious, than the " Latin. Both He, and Ghilini, seem to me to be " mistaken, in taking the Italian for a Transcript " of the Latin. The contrary, in my Opinion, is " the Truth; and what inclines me to believe so, " is, because the Italian is to be found in the New " Recreations, printed at Paris, in 1572, in 16mo " *, under the Name of Bonaventure de Periers, and " the Latin is not to be met with in any Book so " Ancient — There are Faults in the Italian Epi- " taph of Aretin, produced by Moreri and Voëtius " us — The most correct is That, which you read, " in these Terms, in Ghilini:

Qui giace l' Aretin amaro tofco

Del sem' human, la cui lingua trafficasse

Et vivi, & morti: d' Iddio mal non disse,

Et si scuso, col dir, io no'l conosco.

This is so far from weakening my Criticism on Moreri, that it rather confirms it.

(18) Venetii sepulchri jacet cum hoc Epitaphio, condit Aretini, &c. Paulus Frsch. in Theatr. pag. 1461.

(19) Voët. Disput. Tom. 1, pag. 206.

(20) It should be Tosco.

(21) It should be io no'l.

(22) Spizel. Scrutinium Atheismi, pag. 18.

(23) At the 38th Page of the 1st Tom. of his Elogies.

(24) Mr de la Monnoie, Remarques MSS.

* I cite this Edition, because, in the first, which is of Lyons, in 8vo, by Robert Granjon, 1588, Aretin's Epitaph is not recorded.

(8) See the Elogy given him in the Menagiana, Tom. 2, pag. 68, Edition of Paris.

(9) That is, the Year 1693.

(10) They are of Dijon.

* [It was printed in 1715, at the end of the fourth Tom. of the Menagiana. Edit. of Paris.]

(11) Hist. des Ouvrages des Savans, mois de Fevrier, 1664, pag. 278, 279. He transcribes the Elogy, given in the Menagiana, to Mr de la Monnoie.

(12) Grot. Append. ad Comment. de Antichristo, p. 133.

(13) See Deckherus, de Scriptis Adelphotis, pag. 374. Edit. 1686.

(14) Mersennus in Genesim, pag. 1830.

(15) Voët. Disput. Vol. 1, pag. 206, & Spizelius, Atheismi Scrutinio, pag. 18.

(16) He should have said mal fuor che.

no doubt, exceeded his Commission. If there was reason to think, that Aretin did not love God, there was none to say, that he did not know him; his Works of Piety plainly testify the contrary [1]. I do not believe, that any one Tenet of Atheism is

(25) At
Page 120.

In the Conversations, which I had, in the Year 1696, with Father Coronelli, who accompanied the Ambassador of the Republic of Venice to England, I ask'd him what he thought of Aretin's Epitaph. He answered, that he did not believe it was such as Moreri gives it; and promis'd me to make enquiry. He wrote to me from Venice, the 2d of November of the same Year, that it was very true, that Aretin was buried in St Luke's Church, but that he could not, as yet, discover any thing concerning the Epitaph. He sent me a Passage, taken out of the (25) Venetia descritta dal Sanjovino, coll' addizioni del Martiniemi; which, after informing us, that Aretin was interr'd in That Church, says, that he lost all his Reputation after Death, and would have been buried in Oblivion, had not Ariosto undeservedly perpetuated his Memory, by crying out in his Orlando Furioso; Behold the Scourge of Princes, the divine Peter Aretin! "Vi dorme parimente in un deposito posto in aria quel Pietro Aretino, il quale fu cognominato flagello de' Principi, per la licentiosa presunzione della sua mordacissima penna, & il quale morendo perde del tutto il nome: pioche essendo ignaro di lettere, e operando per forza di natura ne' suoi capricci, hebbe dopo morte il meritato premio della sua petulantia: conciosia che essendo le cosse sue reputate dalla Chiesa poco Cristiane, furono vietate del tutto a Lettori, e si farebbe affatto a cancellata la memoria, se l' Ariosto burlandosi del titolo ch' egli si aveva preso indebitamente, non haveffe detto nel Furioso;

Ecco il flagello

De Principi, il divin Pietro Aretino.

(26) Misson,
Nouveau Voilage d'
Ital. Tom.
1. pag. 181.
Edition of the Hague,
1638.

(27) Bibl.
Librorum Novorum,
Tom. 3, pag.
630.

(28) Freherus, ubi supra. Ghiliini says the same, at the 102d Page of the first Part of his Theatre.

Observe, pray, these Words of Mr Misson: "I can scarce believe, what some have affirm'd to me, that the severe Epigram, made upon Aretin, is turn'd into an Epitaph. However, I will, at a venture, set down the Copy, which was given me of it (26)". It is pity he could never find St Luke's Church open; he went several times thither on purpose to see Aretin's Tomb. If he had seen it, he might easily have decided the Dispute. The Journalists of Utrecht, speaking of his Travels, mention the Four Verses, Condit Aretini cineres, &c. and declare, that they are engraven on the Tomb of This Satirist. Cajus sepulchro sequentes versus inscripti esse dicuntur (27). Once more I believe nothing of it.

[1] His Works of Piety plainly testify the contrary.] Paul Freherus relates, that certain Italian Princes, bad Imitators of the Emperor and King of France, who brib'd Aretin with Presents not to attack them, caus'd an hundred Strokes of a Cudgel to be given him, and that This Punishment had such an Effect, that the Author renounc'd all Defamatory Satires and Libels, and wrote nothing afterwards but pious Books. "Quidam principes Italie minus sibi convenire existimantes donis eum afficere, sustibus ad mortem usque cadere per alios curarunt, & hoc modum linguam ejus maledicam refrenarunt, qui deinceps a scriptis satiricis abstinens sacra scripsit, non sicut prius per Inquisitionem prohibita (28)". So that he was, with some little difference, in the case of those, whom Horace mentions in the First Epistle of the Second Book; ver. 154.

— vertere modum formidine fustis
Ad bene dicendum delectandumque redacti.

*Fear made them civil, and design to write
With Modesty; speak well, and to delight.*

CREECH.

I shall mention but Two Circumstances, in which the Cases differ. The first is, that he did not come off with Fear alone; the Cudgel effectually play'd upon his poor Shoulders. The second is, that he did not greatly entertain the World by changing his Style; He was got out of his Element. Wit distinguishes itself very little, when applied, late, in writing Books of Devotion. This I say, agreeably to the Hypothesis of the Sieur Freber, which I shall examine hereafter. But the best of it is, that, in the Opinion of several Persons, the Books he wrote of this kind favour of a true Convert. It is no Secret, what a thorough Conversion That of the famous Aretin was; every thing in him was changed, even to his very Name; and some pretend, that he succeeded so happily, that it is almost impossible to discover, in the Books of Partenio Eitro (29), the least Marks of the old Man, which are so strongly imprinted in the Works of Pietro Aretino (30). We find, in the Conversations of Mr Ménage, a Particular, which deserves a Place here. "Aretin wrote Books of Devotion, which gave occasion to a Saying concerning him, Ubi bene, nemo melius; ubi male, nemo pejus — Where well, no one, better; where ill, no one worse". The following Epigram was wrote on the Paraphrase of the Seven Penitential Psalms, by Peter Aretin.

Si ce livre unit le destin
De David & de l'Aretin
Dans leur merveilleuse science, Lecteur, n'en fois pas empêche,
Qui paraphrase le peche,
Paraphrase la penitence (31).

*Start not, that here unite in every Line,
The Fate of David, and of Aretin;
He, who before had paraphrased his Sins,
To paraphrase his Penitence begins.*

Note, that, in the second Edition of the Menagiana, they have omitted the ubi bene, nemo melius, and have said, that, in Works of Devotion, the Style of Aretin is insufferable; and that nothing can be more mean, than his Lives of Christ, the Virgin, St Thomas Aquinas; his Genesis, and Paraphrase on the Psalms; whether we consider the Thoughts, or the Expression. It appears from the Passage of Freherus, which I have cited, that the Books of Libertinism, and Those of Devotion, were composed by Aretin at different Seasons of his Life; the first before his Conversion, the last after. Mr Moreri says, he wrote his pious Works towards the latter end of his Days: I question this much; for he says himself, in his Epistle dedicatory of the second Part of his Ragionamenti, that he endeavoured chiefly to write quick, and from his own Stock; and, to prove the Fertility and Quickness of his Pen, he sets forth the Titles of several Works, some on Subjects of Devotion, and others on Matters of Gaiety, which he had composed in a very short time; as His Psalms; His History of Christ; His Comedies; His Dialogue; all which were wrote, as it were, in a Day, with a view of proving the Strength of his own Genius. "Tutto e ciancia, eccetto il far tosto, e del suo. Eccovi la i Salmi, eccovi la historia di Christo, eccovi le Comedie, eccovi il Dialogo, eccovi i volumi divoti & allegri, secondo i soggetti, & ho partorito ogni opera ubasi in un di, e per che si forniva di vedere cio che sa far la dote, che si ha ne le false, tosto udiansi i furori de l'armi e le passioni d'amore, che io doverei lasciar di cantare per descriveri i gesti di quel Carlo Augusto." His Paraphrase on the Penitential Psalms was translated into French, and printed at Lyons, in 1540. His Paraphrase on Genesis, with the Vision, in which Noah discovered the Mysteries of the Old and New Testament, was printed at Lyons in the Year 1540, translated from the Italian (32). Who dares pretend, that This Author had, then, renounced his Sins, and his Libels? However it be, these are the Titles of some of his Works of Devotion. "Specchio delle opere

(29) He prefixed this Anagram of his Name to his Books of Devotion.

(30) Baillet-Lugem, sur les Poetes, Tom. 1, pag. 133.

(31) Menagiana, pag. 26.

(32) Bibli. o. h. de da Verdier.

is to be found in his Writings; but, since many of his Libels severely lashed the Disorders of the Clergy, and described, in an impious and libertine Stile, the many Vices imputed to a Monastic Life, no wonder he is made to pass for an Atheist. Add to this, that a Man, who had any Respect for Religion and good Manners, would never have published Dialogues on such Subjects, as Aretin made choice of, nor express them in Language so obscene. It is easy to see, that I mean his Ragionamenti [K]. They were printed in his Life-time; but it is difficult to discover the opere di Dio. ---- Parafrafi sopra i sette Salmi. ---- Vita della beata Vergine. ---- Humanita del figliuolo di Dio. ---- Vita di Santo Tomaso d'Aquino. ---- Vita di Santa Catarina Vergine & Martire (33). ---- A Mirror of the Works of God. ---- A Paraphrase on the seven Psalms. ---- The Life of the Blessed Virgin. ---- The Human Nature of the Son of God. ---- The Life of St Thomas Aquinas. ---- The Life of St Catharine, Virgin and Martyr.

(31) Fischer. Theatr. Viror. I. lustr. ex Theatro Ghilini.

(34) Mr de la Monnoie, Rem. MSS.

The following is a full Confirmation of what I here advance (34). "Aretin composed his Works "of Piety, to exercise his Imagination and to shew, "that he was capable of any Thing; to appease "likewise the Devotees, who were exasperated a- "gainst him, and to reap the Liberality of some "great Ladies, to whom he sent Copies of this "kind of Books. He was not a whit the sorer "Man for this; since, after having published his "Paraphrase on the seven Psalms, and his Humanita di Christo, in 1535. he bethought himself, at the "end of 1537, of dedicating Those Infamous Po- "stures, which have been so much spoken of, to "Baptista Zatti, of Bressa, a Roman Citizen, with "a Sonnet at the bottom of each, no less obscene, "as M. Felibien observes, than the Posture repre- "sented. The Epistle dedicatory to This Baptista Zatti is in the first Volume of Aretin's Letters. "It appears also, by the Description, which This "Author gives of his own Manners, in the Two "hundred and ninetieth Letter of the fourth Vo- "lume, dated in December 1547, that, though he "was, then, in the Fifty seventh Year of his Age, "he led a Life no less licentious, than he had ever "done. The Passage, in which he mentions the In- "terruption he was obliged to suffer in writing "This Letter, has something in it very singular (35). "----- We may appeal likewise to the Four "hundred and thirty ninth Letter of the same Vo- "lume, where it appears, that he made open Pro- "fession of a Morality far from scrupulous."

* This is pro- vided from his saying, in a Letter to P. Jovius, in May, 1545, that he was then 47 Years of Age.

(35) It is com- mitted, as being too long.

It is, therefore, a Mistake to pretend, that he composed his pious Works, after he had, by a serious Repentance, renounced his licentious Courses. He composed Works of Piety, and of Libertinism, by turns; being always a debauched Liver, and sunk in Corruption; and if, with regard to Men, he did less Mischief, whilst he exercised his Wit on pious Subjects, than when he employed it on lewd; yet was he more criminal in the Sight of God, on Account of the former Compositions, than the latter. It did not belong to so prophane a Wretch to treat of things sacred. He did them more Injury, by explaining them, with a depraved Heart, and from bad Motives, than if he had openly insulted them. We may apply to him That thundering Censure, contained in these Words of the Psalms.

But to the Wicked thus saith God,
How dar'st thou teach my Laws abroad,

Or in thy Mouth my Cov'nant take?

For stubborn thou, confirm'd in Sin,

Hast Proof against Instruction been,

And of my Word didst lightly speak.

When thou a subtle Thief didst see,

Thou gladly didst with him agree,

And with Adulterers didst partake.

Vile Slander is thy chief Delight,

Thy Tongue, by Envy mov'd and Spight,

Deceitful Tales does hourly spread:

Thou dost with hateful Scandals wound

Thy Brother, and with Lyes confound

The Offspring of thy Mother's Bed.

These things didst thou, whom still I prove

To gain with Silence and with Love;

VOL. I.

Till thou didst wickedly surmise,
That I was such a one as thou;
But I'll reprove and shame thee now,
And set thy Sins before thine Eyes (36).

(36) Psalm 50th, Brady's Version. [BAYLE makes use of That of Marrot.]

I confess, the Generality of Men are not offended at Works of Devotion, composed by Indevout and Prophan Writers; but Persons of nice and delicate Taste are more scandalized at them, than at Pieces, in which such Authors deliver their genuine Thoughts. Choose one side; would such Persons say; be one thing, or other; give not the Printer a Work of Piety to Day, and to morrow a Bawdy Book; we cannot bear such a Face; since you persist in evil Courses, we had rather you would always appear in your proper Colours.

— quanto constantior idem

In vitis, tanto levius miser, ac prior ille

Qui jam contento, jam laxo fune laborat (37).

(37) Horat. Sat. 7. lib. 2. ver. 18.

He that is constant in his vicious Race,
Runs the same Course, and keeps an equal Pace,
Is certainly not half so great a Wretch,
As he, who now rides loose, and now on stretch.

CREECH.

It were to be wished, that no one would presume to write Books of Devotion, without being persuaded of what he says, and without practising it; for to People of Thought and Reflexion it is matter of Scandal to see such Contradiction between the Thoughts and Words, and much more between the Actions and Writings, of such Authors.

[K] I mean his Ragionamenti.*] They are divided into Three Parts; the last of them, which treats of the Court, and Card-playing, is much more tolerable, than the others. The first treats of the disorderly Practices of Nuns, married Women, and Misses. It is sufficient to say, in general, that the Second is the Spirit and History of Whoredom. How abominable forever these Dialogues are, yet are they much less so, than the Book generally ascribed to him, de omnibus Veneris Schematibus.

* DIA- LOGUES.

The following Remark was communicated to me (38): "This Book (De omnibus Veneris Schematibus) which is here ascribed to Aretin, and which many perhaps believe to have been composed by him in the Latin Tongue, because, out of Modesty, you give it a Latin Title, is only a Collection, containing Sixteen lewd Figures, engrav'd by the Famous Marc Anthony of Bologna, after the Designs of Julio Romano, with a Sonnet of Aretin's at the bottom of each. He mentions them, in a Letter of the Twenty ninth of November 1527, in which he writes to Signor Caesar Fregosa, that he sends him "il libro de i Sonetti e de le Figure lussuriose. — The Book of Sonnets, and Wanton Figures. Le Vassari," and M. Felibien after him, have said, that these Figures and Sonnets were Twenty in number. But Aretin himself, in his Dedication of them, in 1537, to Baptista Zatti, before-mentioned, makes them but Sixteen. There is a Dialogue between Magdalen, and Julia; the Title of which is, la Putana errante; — The Whore-errant; wherein he treats at length, de i diversi congiungimenti — Of the different Ways of C - p - l - t - n, to the number of Thirty five. This is to surpass four fold the ancient Debauchery;

(38) By Mr de la Monnoie.

† Usually called Aretin's Figures.

Quales nec Didymæ || sciunt puellæ,
Nec molles Elephantidos libelli, —
Sunt illic Veneris novem || figuræ.

|| Others read Didymi.

† Others read Novæ.

Such Lines, as Harlots never read,
Nor Elephantis could indite;

S S

Nine

the Year of their first Impression [L]. We have Six Volumes of his Letters, which are

*Nine Postures: Venus there assumes,
To vary the obscene Delight.*

" Though the Work has always been printed under Arctin's Name; yet he disowns it; and says it is the Work of One of his Scholars, called le Veniero. This he tells us, in his Capitolo, addressed to the Duke of Mantua; in which he assures him, that his Pupil greatly exceeds him in Obscenity.

Ma perch' io sento il presente all' odore,
Un' operetta in quel cambio galante.
Vi mando hora in fililadro traditore Intitolata la Putana errante.
Dal Veniero composta mio creato,
Che me in dir mal quattro giornate inante.

I add to this a fine Passage of Mr Chevillier: " It was about the Year 1525, that Julio Romano, the most Famous Painter of Italy, infligated by the Enemy of our Salvation, invented Designs, to be engraved on Copper-Plates. The Subjects of them are so lewd, that they are not so much as to be named. Peter Arctin, a notoriously infamous Writer, and known in the World for a Profligate and an Atheist, composed Sonnets for each Design. George Vasari, who relates this, in his Book of the Lives of the Painters, says, he knows not which would be most immodest, to cast one's Eyes on the Designs of Julio, or to read the Sonnets of Arctin. Io non fo qual fusse piu o brutto le spettacolo de i Desegni di Giulio all' occhio, o le parole dell' Arctino a gl' orecchi. 3. Part. pa. 302. An Engraver, whose Name was Marc Anthony, ventured to employ his Tool in engraving these infamous Designs on Twenty Copper-Plates. Pope Clement VII threw him into Prison; but the Cardinal de Medicis saved his Life. And, as great as Julio's Fame was in Painting, he would have been very severely punished, if he had not escaped to Mantua. It happened in the Year 1527, that Rome was plundered by the Army of Charles V. It was this Engraver's Fortune to lose all his Estate, and be obliged to leave the Town; soon after which he died. Mr Chevillier adds, that Mr Jollain, a Merchant in St James's street in Paris, being informed where some of these infamous Plates lay, which contained these abominable Designs of Julio, and the lewd Sonnets of Arctin, went thither, and bought them for an hundred Crowns, with a Design to destroy them; which accordingly he did—He always believed, that They were the Original Plates, engraved by Marc Anthony, which he had destroyed (40)."

(40) Chevillier, of the Origin of Printing, at Paris, pag. 224.

[L] His Ragionamenti were printed in his Life Time; but it is difficult to discover the Year of their first Impression.] The Preface to the Edition, in 1584, does not suffer us to doubt of the first Fact. The Bookeller, under the fictitious Name of Barbarigra, declares, that " the Author had resolved to publish his Dialogues, divided into Days, after the manner of Boccaccio," and as they now stand in the Edition I have cited; " But that others had prevented him, and published This Work, against his Will, and in great Disorder." ----- Hoggi vi presento di loro una bu-na parte — da me ridotte ne la maniera ch' egli le compose, e ne la medesima maniera ch' egli haveva determinato di farle la prima volta stampare, s' altri (contra sua voglia) non havevano prima di lui date per mezzo de la stampa in luce assai male acconcie: conciosia cosa che Giornate questo nomeasse per seguitare l' alte pedate del gran Giovanni Boccaccio. I add something still more expressive to this; and I do it with so much the more Satisfaction, because, at the same Time, I acquit myself of an indispensable Duty towards Mr Minutoli, by the Publick Testimony I give him of my singular Esteem, and the great Value I set on the Friendship, with which he honours me. I have consulted This ingenious Professor of Geneva; and here present the Reader with an Extract of a Letter, which he communicated to me, and which was sent to him from Dijon. " I must now, Sir, mention to you a Book very opposite to this (41), to wit, the Ragionamenti of Peter Arctin: You desire me to clear up some Points, concerning them. The Ragionamenti, or Humorous Dialogues, of Arctin were published before his Death. This cannot be doubted of; since, in 1551, there appeared an Invektive of Joachim Perion, a Benedictin Monk, against the Author of the Ragionamenti, who did not die till the Year 1556 (42). Antonio Francisco Doni, in the first Part of his Bibliothèque, published in 1550, which contains only the printed Books, speaks of Two Dialogues, Delle Donne (43), which differ from the Ragionamenti, of which he says not a Word, because it is most certain they were not printed at that time. As for the Letters, The first Volume alone deserves to be read, though it contains scarce any thing satirical: The other Five are very flat; you may take Mr Menage's Word for it, in the Menagiana; who honours them but too much, when he esteems them for the Stile. In another Letter, Mr Minutoli had the Goodness to communicate to me Two Observations, which he had made, in reading the Letters of Illustrious Men, published by John Michel Brutus. He found these Words in a Letter of John Maludanus to Dionysius Lambinus pag. 369. " Penè me fugerat, quod scribendum in primis fuisse arbitrator. A Perionio editam esse audio orationem adversus Petrum Arctinum. Periculum est, ne, ut jampridem principum, ita posthac & μωχαλῶν flagellum esse & nominari velit lascivius Arctinus. I had almost forgot what I ought particularly to acquaint you with. I am informed, that Perionius has published an Oration against Peter Arctin. It is to be feared, lest Peter Arctin, thus provoked, should become, and desire to be called from henceforth, the Scourge of Monks, as formerly of Princes." There is only the Date of the Day in this Letter; Nonis Maiis; but as Lambinus's Answer is dated Nonis Junius, anno 1510 to 11. it is easy to conjecture in what Year Maludanus wrote to him. My Reader will be pleased to find here what Lambinus, who was then at Rome, thought of Perionius's Harangue. " Perionii orationem in Petrum Arctinum jampridem legeramus, sed multo non fine risu. Quid enim magis ridiculum excogitari potest quam hominem Benedictinum, Philosophum, Ciceronianum, Theologum, cum P. Arctino verbis decertare? Omnino suæ estimationi parum consuluisse judicatur; nam quod arguit illum esse impurum, sceleraum, impium, quid tum postea? Tales homines non verbis aut scriptis castigandi, sed legibus & pœnis sunt coercendi. Sed hac de re alias plura. I had already read Perionius's Oration against Peter Arctin, but not without much laughter. For what can be conceived more ridiculous, than for One, who is a Benedictin, a Philosopher, an Orator, and a Divine, to contest, in Words, with Peter Arctin? He can gain but little Reputation by such a Controversy; for, suppose that he proves him to be an impure, wicked, and impious Fellow; What then? Such Men are not to be corrected by Words, or by Writing, but to be restrained by Laws and Punishments. But more of this hereafter."

(41) He had been speaking of Mr Ballin's Book, concerning the Worship due to the Blessed Virgin.

(42) See Remark [N].

(43) Freherus reckons the two Dialogues among the Works of Arctin, and says nothing of the Ragionamenti. Perhaps these two Dialogues were the first Edition, which was published without the Knowledge, and against the Will, of the Author, and in a different Method from his own.

As to the Second Part of the Text of this Remark, read what follows; and you will admire the Accuracy and Extent of the Enquiries of the ingenious Gentleman, whom I quote (44). " It is difficult to determine the exact Time of the first Edition of the Ragionamenti, as well because it is become so scarce, that it is hardly possible to meet with a Copy of it, as because the Dialogues, which compose the Two Parts of this Work, did not appear at the same Time. The first Part preceded the other some Years; but what is certain, is, that they were both in Print in 1537; the Epistles Dedicatory to both Parts being inserted in the Edition of the first Volume of Arctin's Letters, at Venice, in Folio, by Francis Marcelini, in the same Year. The Title of These Ragionamenti has varied. In the Epistle Dedicatory to the Second Part of These Dialogues, the Author calls the first i tre Giorni di capricci, and even simply dialogo; for this is what he understands by these Words, eccovi il dialogo, which nevertheless are not to be found in this same Epistle, inserted among the Letters of the first Volume; in which there is a farther considerable Variation. Which is, that, after the Words " e per non disfraudare il mio grado, all which follows, (44) Mr de la Moignon.

are but of little Value [M]. His Works of Devotion were not much enquired after (b); yet they met with some, who gave them great Commendation (c). His Comedies in Prose are much better in their kind. He died about the Year 1556, at the Age of Sixty five Years, more or less [N]. It is said, that he fell into so violent a fit of Laughter, upon listening to some obscene Discourse, that he overturned the Chair, on which he sat; and that, in the Fall, he bruised his Skull, and died upon the Spot [O]. It was unlucky for him, that he wrote Lampoons against Peter Strozzi; for this brave Man threatened to have him assassinated in his very Bed; which so terrified our Poet, that he durst not admit any Person into his House, nor ever stir out of the Doors himself, during Strozzi's stay in the State of Venice. For this I shall quote my Author [P]. Observe, that This so satirical Poet was lavish of his Praises to excess. We find the most pompous Hyperboles, and extravagant Flat-teries, in his Letters to Kings, Princes, Generals of Armies, Cardinals, and other eminent Men: So far are they from carrying the Air of an Author, who makes himself dreaded, or exacts Contributions, that, on the contrary, there appears in them the Meanness of a Writer, who humbly intreats for a Piece of Bread. He employs the most moving Expressions to represent his Poverty, so far as to use the Language of Canaan, I mean a Scripture-Cant, as likeliest to raise Compassion, and excite those to Charity, who expect a Reward of their good Works from God. It must not be forgot, that one of the Subjects of his Importunities was the Dowry of

(b) See Remark [1].

(c) See Remark [1].

"as far as to the Milanese, is entirely omitted; instead of which there is: Ujaro le parole cadute della sacra bocca del magno Antonio de' Leva, l'Aretino è più, &c." Sometimes, instead of Dialogo, he says all along, as in his Epistle to his Ape, il Dialogo de la Nanna &c. de la Antonia. Sometimes, as in his Dialogue della corte, by his Nanna he means the first Part of the Ragionamenti, and by La Pippa the second. In a letter of the 15th of May, 1537, to Francesco de l'Orme, he styles both Parts Dialoghi, as Anthony Francesco Doni likewise does. It is certain These Dialogues were never entitled Ragionamenti by This Author. They bear this Title only since the Edition of the Year 1584. The true Title was Caprici. Perionius confesses it, in his Invektive against Aretin. "Scripsit enim, says he, atque edidit nefarium librum quemdam, quem Capricium a Caprarum lascivia & libidine inscriptum. ----- He wrote and published a vile Book, which he called Caprici from the Wantonness of (Capre) Goats. And a little lower; Gallii plerique jam Italice sciunt, quo quidem sermone istius Capricius, alique libri, scripti sunt ----- The French almost in general understand Italian, in which Language his Caprici, and other Books, are written. Le Bandel is mistaken, when, in the Thirty fourth of his Novels, pag. 235, of the first Part, he says, that la Zanina read la Nanna; They are his own Words; O fia Raffaella de l'Aretino. In effect, La Nanna and la Raffaella are distinct Pieces, and by different Authors. By La Nanna should be understood the first Part of Aretin's Ragionamenti, and by la Raffaella, the Dialogue of Madona Raffaella, and Margaretta, entitled della bella creatura delle Donne; which instructs Women in the Arts of Gallantry. It is written by Alessandro Piccolomini under his Academical Name of Stordito Intronato. This Quotation of La Nanna by le Bandel serves however to make it appear, that the first Part of the Ragionamenti had been extant at least from the Year 1535; since, at the end of the same Novel, in which la Nanna is quoted, mention is made of du Bernia, as being then living, who certainly died in the Month of May, 1535; though M. Baillet places him after the Poets, who died in 1606. Il Bernia Vicario Poeta d'Aretino mori apoplectico, says Paul Jovius in a Letter, of the last of May, 1535, to Ridolfo Pio, Bishop of Faenza, afterwards Cardinal of Carpi, then Nuncio in France. Mr Menage, who has made a Chapter expressly of Bernia, in the first Part of his Antibaillet, has not corrected this Error."

[M] We have six Volumes of his Letters, which are but of little Value.] We have already seen the Judgment of a learned Man of Dijon on this Subject (45): That of Mr Menage may be added to it. "I have read, says he (46), all the Letters of Peter Aretin, without ever having found any thing in them, worthy of an Extract. There is nothing in them but Stile." One cannot convey a more expressive Idea of a Work, which is barren and dry; like an unfurnished House, or heathy, sandy, uncultivated Ground; for Mr Menage knew how to make the most of his Reading, and had an happy Talent at varying his Application of it.

[N] He died about the Year 1556, at the Age of Sixty five Years, more or less (47). "The Reason for conjecturing, that Aretin died either towards the end of 1555, or in 1556, is, that, from the Month of October, 1555, (the Date of the Epistle dedicatory to the last Volume of his Letters), it does not appear, that he had written any thing; and that Ruscelli, who wrote his Rimario in 1577, mentions Aretin therein, as a Person lately dead. At the Word Raffa, in the Vocabulary at the end of the Rimario, he says Onde il mio Aretino di buona memoria. That This Rimario was composed in the Year 1557, appears by a Passage, I have observed from it, above (48), on occasion of Silvio Antoniano (49). "Paul Freberus is mistaken, in saying, that Aretin died towards the Year 1566 (50).

[O] He fell into so violent a fit of Laughter, ----- that he overturned his Chair ----- bruised his Skull; and died upon the Spot. "Infans obsecrantes de meretricibus, ut aiunt, fororibus suis, cum audiret, ex risu fellam, in qua sedebat, everisse, occipitque vehementer graviterque ad terram affluisse, atque atque alluisse, ut exemplo nequissime interiret (51)."

[P] I shall quote my Author.] He is Remi of Florence. "Volsi Pietro Aretino, says he (52), burlesque & motteggiare il Sig. Pietro Strozzi, quando egli diede Marano a Veneziani, e gli fece un Sonetto, che cominciava;

Mentre il gran Strozzi Arma virumque cano, &c.

"Ma il Signor Pietro come huomo valoroso, & che non voleva sue burle ne suoi motti gli fece intendere, che attendesse ad altro, perche lo farebbe ammazzare infin nel letto. Onde il povero Aretino, che conosceva il Signor Pietro huomo più da farlo che da dirlo, si mise tanto spavento, che serrato in casa, ne dando ingresso à persona alcuna, guardava pure se i pugnali piovevano, & meno giorno e notte una vita infelicitissima, e per fin che lo Strozzi stette in paese de' Veneziani, non ardi mai uscir di casa. ----- Peter Aretin had a Mind to banter Peter Strozzi, upon his delivering up Marano to the Venetians; and made a Sonnet, which began thus;

Mean time Great Strozzi, &c.

"But Peter, as a Man of Valour, and who desired none of his Jokes, gave him to understand, that he had better mind something else, if he expected to be safe in his Bed. Poor Aretin, who knew that he was a Man of Dreads, more than Words, was so frightened, that he kept himself locked up in his House,

* Libreria del Doni. Parte I. pag. 39.

(47) See Citation, however (34) and (35).

(48) At the end of the Remark. D. of the Article ANTONIANO.

(49) Mr de la Monnoye. Rem. MSS.

(50) Freherus in Theatro, p. 1461.

(51) Ant. Laurent. Politianus, in Dialogo de Rifu. p. 78.

(52) Remig. Florent. Confidat. Civil. sopra Galecardini. c. 6. fol. 3. verso 6. See la Rime Pia-cevoli, Parte II. fol. 12.

(45) Ab we, immediately after Citation (43).

(46) Menage, p. 306, of the first Edition of Holland.

of his dear Daughter Adria [Q]. He took a great deal of Pains to marry her, but saw her so unhappy in this State, that he heartily repented of his Impatience [R]. A Fatality too common among Men! for how many things are there, which make us extremely uneasy, before they are accomplished, but much more so after Accomplishment?

"Houfe, and admitted no one to enter; he even watched to see, whether it did not rain Poignards, and led a miserable Life, Night and Day, during Strozzi's Residence in the Venetian State, not daring to stir out of his Doors." I fancy, when he found himself out of Danger, he behaved like the Savo, that is washed.

[Q] One of the Subjects of his Importunities, was the Dowry of his dear Daughter Adria. He loved her very affectionately, and had engaged himself to give a thousand Ducats to the Person, who was to marry her. This future Son-in-law was not to be put off to the next Dedication: such an Assignment, which some Authors have put their Creditors off with, would not satisfy him; he articulated, that a thousand Ducats should be paid him down, before he gave the Ring to the Bride. Mille ducati e la promessa da me fatta allo sposo in contanti, prima che se le dia l'anello (53). The Gold Chain, which

(53) Aretin, Letter 145, Book 5. fol. 72. Edit. of Paris 1609.

(54) Id. ib.

(55) See the 24th Letter of the same Book. It is dated at Venice, 1548.

(56) See the 23rd Letter of the 15th Book. It is dated March 1549.

(57) Ibid. fol. 102.

Aretin had received from the Prince of Spain (54), was forced to go towards the Payment of this Sum. He addressed himself to the Cardinal of Lorraine for Assistance in this Necessity. I cannot tell, whether he received any thing from him; but I know, that he was assisted by the Duke of Florence. The Bill of Exchange, which That Prince sent him (55), imported, that the Money should not be paid, but on good Attestations that the Marriage was consummated (56). This Condition haltered the Wedding; the Father would have deferred it; for he fancied his Daughter Adria was too Young; but this Consideration must now be past by. When she was laid in the nuptial Bed, he said, that she looked like a spotless Victim laid on the sacred Altar: Per importarmi piu l'honore della parola obligata, che il rispetto della etade tenera; consentii, che la innocenza si copulasse col sacramento. Ella, nello entrare nel letto, parve una ostia pura, posta sopra l'altare sacro (57). It appears, that the Son-in-law did not rigorously exact the Payment of the whole Sum before Marriage; he was satisfied with the Gold Chain, which the Emperor's Son, had given Aretin, as Security for what was wanting of the thousand Ducats; but this did not make the Father-in-law a jot the easier; who had a great Desire to keep his Gold Chain; and yet could not get rid of his Daughter, until all the Money was paid: For his Son-in-law refused to take her Home to his own House, without the full Portion.

The Duke of Florence was again importuned, and disturbed something more (58).

[R] He saw her so unhappy in this State, that he repented of his Impatience. It was a very unhappy Match; poor Adria was so ill treated by her Husband, that she was obliged to return to her Father (59); but, her Husband promising her better Usage, she was persuaded to a Reconciliation; but was still as unhappy as ever. She was still denied the Power of the Keys; a Power, which never falls to the Petticoat in the Church, but is the Woman's Right in the Management of a Family. She could neither eat, nor drink, but when it pleased others to dispose of the Keys in her Favour: She was perpetually teased about her Dress. Her Husband would not suffer her to wear Jewels, and obliged her to sell a Diamond, which her Father had given her: Thus she was attacked in the most sensible Part; this was tearing her very Heart out. Aretin implored for her the Protection of the Dukes of Urbino (60). What a Heart-breaking must it be to him, to find himself treated so contemptuously by his Son-in-law, whilst his Fame was spread as far as the Court of Persia (61)! What a Dometic Bitter was This amidst the fancied Sweets of a great Reputation! Could it be any Consolation, to consider, that this Brute at the same time despised the Duke of Florence, who had earnestly recommended it to him to treat his Wife well? On the contrary this was a new Subject of Confusion to the Person, who had made so ill a Choice of a Son-in-Law. "Benche in quanto al non fare nessuna stima di me simil cane, non e maraviglia, e ben da stupire del sì poco rispetto che mostra d'havere lo affnaccio al gran Duca, la cui benignita manifesta, uscendo noi di Pesaro, per il viaggio di Roma, così qual era a cavallo, chiomollo, e dissegli; Se tu vuoi che non ti si manchi di gratie, tratta la moglie tua, sì come di me nata fusse (62). — As to this Brute's little regard for me, it is not to be wondered at; but it is astonishing that This Ass should be so wanting in Respect to the Great Duke; who was so kind, at our Departure from Pesaro to Rome, as to call him back, when on Horseback, and say; if you expect the Continuance of my Favour, treat your Wife as if she were my Daughter." Note, That Peter Aretin had another Daughter, whom he was very desirous of marrying (63).

(58) See the 6th Book of the Letters of Aretin, fol. 121.

(59) See the 16th Book of his Letters, fol. 281.

(60) His Letter to the Dukes of Urbino is dated from Venice in November 1554.

(61) See Remark [A].

(62) Aretin, pag. 282, of the 6th Book of his Letters.

(63) She was called Augusta. See the 210th Letter of the 5th Book.

(a) And not ARGYROPHILUS, nor ARGYROPHILUS, as in Moreri.

ARGYROPYLUS (a) (JOHN), a Native of Constantinople, retired into Italy, while the Turks were overturning all Greece [A]. He was very kindly received by Cosmo de Medicis, who made him Preceptor to his Son Peter, and his Grandson Lorenzo (b), and Professor of Greek at Florence. He testified his Gratitude in a Translation of Aristotle's Physics and Ethics. He was attended with a very particular piece of good Fortune in This Work; for Theodore Gaza, who had finished a like Translation, threw it into the Fire, that he might not prejudice the Fortune of his good Friend Argyropylos. Gaza surpassed him in Eloquence, and his Translation would infallibly have eclipsed the other; but, as he was not ignorant of Argyropylos's Ambition, and was, besides, a good-natured Man, he made a Sacrifice, which cost him but little; for he was one, who valued neither Praise, nor Money. Argyropylos's Conversation disgusted and tired Men of Learning, especially when he took upon him to maintain, that Cicero did not

[A] He retired into Italy, while the Turks were overturning all Greece.] I dare not say, with Moreri, that he retired into Italy, after the Conquest of Constantinople by the Turks; for Two Reasons make me doubt it. One is, Paul Jovius's saying, that Argyropylos was driven into Italy by the same Tempest, which forced Theodore Gaza thither (1). Now he observes, that This Theodore took refuge there, while Amurath shook all Greece with his Victorious Arms. Amurath Græciam omnem victoribus armis quætuente, in Italy venit (2). This inclines me to believe, that Argyropylos left his Country before the Ottomans had taken Constantinople. My second Reason is, because he addressed a Treatise of Consolation to the Emperor of Constantinople. To make this a good Argument, it must, I confess, be proved, that he composed this Piece in Italy; and I own I cannot prove this; so that I only offer this Observation, as a motive to keep my Reader in suspense. Paul Jovius is to blame, in having neglected Chronology, so much as he has done, in his Elogies; for he might easily have discovered the date of the Offices, Travels, and Deaths, of his Illustrious Persons. This by the way. Vossius observes, that This Treatise of Argyropylos's Monodie, his Book de Regno, and his Parallels between the Ancient and Modern Princes, are in the Library of the most Christian King (3). Mr Moreri, who never saw these Works, affirms, nevertheless, that the Author dedicated them to the House of Medici. Why was he not satisfied with affirming this concerning the Translations of Aristotle only? his Guide goes no farther (4).

(1) Paulus Jovius, Elog. cap. 27. pag. 64.

(2) Id. ib. cap. 26. pag. 61.

(b) And not his Nephew, as in Moreri.

(3) Vossius, de Histor. Græciæ, lib. 4, cap. 19, pag. 413.

(4) Paulus Jovius, Elog. cap. 27.

[B] What

not understand Greek. He left Tuscany, in the time of a Plague, and went to Rome, where he read Lectures on the Greek Text of Aristotle. His Salary was considerable; but, as he loved good Eating and Drinking, and as his Constitution was able to bear Intemperance, he spent all his Income. So that what has been said of his Gluttony, is not incredible [B]. He died of a Fever, which he got by eating too many Melons, at seventy Years of Age (c). He discovered great Constancy of Mind, when one of his Sons was killed at Rome (d). See, concerning the Order, which Pope Paul III gave for pursuit of the Murderers, and for the Funeral of the deceased, the 200th Letter of the Cardinal of Pavia, pag. 620. It has been remarked, that he was the first Greek, who taught Philosophy in that City [C]. He disputed with much Vivacity, and had a very extensive Knowledge. He left a Son, who was an excellent Musician (e). The Judgments, which have been passed upon his Translations, differ extremely [D].

(c) T. Hen from Paul Jovius, E-
log. cap. 27.

(d) Petrus Alcyonius, in Medicis Legato papino, pag. 25.

(e) Obiit re-lictus filio I-sacio, nobili Musico. Volaterran. lib.
21. p. 776.

[B] What has been said of his Gluttony is not incredible. Let us quote Paul Jovius. "Vini & cibi æque avidus & capax, & multo abdomine ventriculus, immodice melopeponum esu autumnalem accersivit febrem, atque ita septuagesimo ætatis anno ereptus est (5). — Being equally desirous, and capable, of eating and drinking, and having a very large Belly, he got an autumnal Fever by eating too many Melons; and thus was taken off in the Seventieth Year of his Age." To die of excessive eating is scandalous in any one; much more in Men of Letters. It had been more for the Honour of Argyropylus to have died of Hunger. Let us not, however, look upon the enormous Size of his Belly as a good Argument against those, who represent him as a Person of great Abilities: The Event of such a Dispute would be very uncertain. See the Collections, which shall be produced in the Remarks of the Article GORGAS.

(5) Jovius,
ibid. p. 65.

[C] It has been remarked, that he was the first Greek, who taught at Rome. His Disciple Politian is now to be quoted; read these Words of Hornius. "Primitus ex Græcis Romæ philosophiam professus fuit Argyropylus, cujus sectatorem se fuisse memorat Angelus Politianus, Miscel. cap. 1. eumque cum literarum Latinarum minime incuriosum, tum sapientie decretorum, disciplinarumque adeo cunctarum, quæ Cyclicæ à Martino dicuntur, eruditissimum illis temporibus habitum, atque in disputando acerrimum (6). — Argyropylus was the First of the Greeks, who professed Philosophy at Rome; whose Follower Politian was, as he informs us, Miscel. ch. 1. as also that, he was not only well versed in the Latin Tongue, but skilled likewise in the Learning of Decretals, and esteemed the greatest Scholar of his Times, in all those Sciences, which by Martians are called Cyclic, and a strenuous Disputant."

(6) Hornius, Historia Philo-soph. l. 6.
c. 6. p. 304,
305.

[D] The Judgments, which have been passed upon his Translations, differ extremely. Thuanus observes, that Perionius, intending to avoid the Method of Argyropylus, fell into another Extreme. He found, that Argyropylus had translated Aristotle more faithfully, than elegantly; and therefore undertook a Translation, which should please those, who admire good Latin; but, labouring too much at Elegancy of Style, he lay open to the Charge of departing from the Sense of the Author. "Is (Joachim Perionius) cum Aristotelem hæcenus a Johanne Argyropulo fideliter potius quam ornate versum auribus Latinis proponendum statuisset, dum elegantiori stili potius quam veri rationem plerumque Ciceroni stili addidit habet, in contrarium ab Argyropulo reprehensionem incidit (7). Which Judgment amounts to this: Argyropylus's Translation is faithful, but without Grace or Ornament. Others judge of it quite otherwise; They say there is more of Elegancy, than Faithfulness, in it; and blame him for not translating his Original Word for Word, according to the Duty of those, add they, who translate the Holy Scripture, and Aristotle. Aliquot Aristotelis libros convertit magis eleganter quam

(7) Thuan.
Histor. l. 23.
pag. 472, ad
Ann. 1559.

fideliter, cum in hoc philosopho baud aliter quam in sacris literis verbum verbo reddere oporteat (8). If we consult a Professor of Louvain, we shall find this Judgment of Volaterran but ill grounded, and that Argyropylus confined himself more servilely to Aristotle's Words, than Thoughts; and that his Translation can pass for neither faithful nor elegant. See the words of This Professor: "Superiori sæculo, quidam verba verbi ita admensi sunt, ut sententiam depravarent, non aliter quam indocti pictores, qui, operosi in cultu effigendo, membra secundum vestem distorquent: quum Apelles, Parrhasique, prius nudum corpus efformare, quam amictum superinducere soleant. In quorum numero Argyropylum reponas, & Rufinum, alterum interpretem Aristotelis, alterum Gregorii Nazianzeni, de quibus vere id hemistichii dici potest: Dant sine mente sonum. Fit autem illud vel ex incitiis, vel ex κακογυῖα; quum enim sententiam apprehendere nequeunt, verba reddunt, quasi quod ipsi non intellexerint, alius ex illorum verbis intelligere queat, cum verba non minus ex sententia vim suam, & significatum accipiant, quam sententiam constituant. Aliqui rursus fidem existimant à numero verborum non discedere (9). — In the last Age, some Writers so scrupulously adhered to the Words of an Author, as to spoil the sense; like unskilful Painters, who, taking a great Deal of Pains about the Drapery, neglect the Proportions and Symmetry of the Figure: Whereas Apelles, and the Parrhasii, always drew the naked Figure, before they clothed it. In the number of these may be ranked Argyropylus, and Rufinus, The One a Translator of Aristotle, the Other of Gregory of Nazianzen; to whom may justly be applied the Hemistich, Dant sine mente sonum; They give a Sound without a meaning. This proceeds either from Ignorance, or false Emulation; for, when they cannot comprehend the Sense, they render the Words; as if another could apprehend from their Words what They themselves understand not; whereas Words no less receive their Force and Signification from the Sentence, than constitute the Sentence. Others again think it the business of a Faithful Translator to keep to the very number of the Words." Some Learned Men imagine, that Argyropylus is here accused of confining himself verbatim to the Original, and, where he cannot comprehend his Author's Sense, of having recurred to a jingle of Words without any meaning (10). I question whether this is exactly what Nannius aims at. Huettius agrees in his Judgment with Thuanus (11), and consequently condemns That of Volaterran. He condemns Paul Jovius likewise, who preferred the Translation of Gaza before That of Argyropylus, and declares, that, if the first be more Eloquent, the latter is more faithful. Non effores quin major quidem eloquentia laus Gazæ, accurate autem interpretandi Argyropulo debeatur (12). See, above, Remark [B] of the Article ACCIAIOLI (DONATO), and wonder at the Diversity of these (12) Id. ib. Opinions.

(8) Volaterran.
lib. 21. pag.
776.

(9) Petrus Nannius, Alcmarianus
in Collegio Baldiano apud Lovani-enses Lati-nes Professor, sup-plimentum,
lib. 1. c. 3.
pag. 6.

(10) See Mr Bailet, Ju-gem. des Savans,
Tom. 4. n.
814. p. 356.

(11) Huëtius de claris Interpret. pag.
239.

(12) Id. ib.

ARIARATHES. The Name of several Kings of Cappadocia. See the Article CAPPADOCIA.

ARIGONI (POMPEIO), Cardinal and Archbishop of Benevento, was born at Rome, in the Year 1552. During the Time, that he was one of the Confessorial Advocates, he was retained in all the Causes relating to Philip II of Spain. In the Pontificate of Sixtus Quintus, he make a Speech, to shew the Reasonableness of canonizing
VOL. I. 5 T zing

zing the blessed Diego d'Alcala. He was made Auditor of the Rota, in the Year 1591, and Cardinal in 1596, and exercised the Office of Chancellor under Leo XI, and Paul V. The Archbishopric of Benevento was conferred upon him by This last Pope. He died, the fourth of April, 1616, in the Greeks Tower near Naples, whither he had retired for change of Air. His Body was carried to Benevento, where his Nephew erected a Marble Tomb over him, in the principal Church. There are some Latin Letters of our Pompey, among those of John Baptista Lauri, besides the Speech beforementioned, which was printed by Peter Galefimi (a). As to his Decisions of the Rota, they are only Manuscripts in the Cabinets of some learned Men. Charles Cartbari gave him great Commendations in his List of the Consistorial Advocates (b).

(a) In Libello pro Canonizatione B. Didaci Compulenta. See also Franciscus Pegna, in vita ejusdem Didaci.

(b) Ex Bibl. Romana Prosperi Mandolfi.

ARIMANIUS, one of the chief Deities of Persia. That Nation was indebted to Zoroaster for it's Philosophy; one principal Tenet of which was revived by the Manicheans; to wit, That there are two first Principles, one of Good, and the other of Evil. The Persians called the Deity, which they acknowledged as the Principle of all Good, and Author of the State, in which Things were first produced, Orosmades; and the Divinity, which they acknowledged as the Principle of Evil, and Author of the Corruption, into which the Original Nature is fallen, They called Arimanius. They said, that Orosmades, having produced the good Spirits, and the Stars, enclosed them in an Egg [A]; and that Arimanius produced the bad Gemii, who broke This Egg; from whence proceeded Confusion, and a mixture of Good and Evil. They add, that, at last, after divers Conflicts, in which the Victory would be various, Orosmades should totally vanquish Arimanius, and destroy him beyond retrieve; which would be followed by a State of great Happiness to Mankind, and by a very commodious Transformation, by which the Bodies of Men would become transparent, and be preserved without any Nourishment (a).

(a) Taken from Burnet's Theory of the Earth, lib. 2. c. 10. p. 289, 290. who cites Plutarch de Iside & Osiride.

(b) In Remark [C] of the Article M A N I C H E A N S; and Remark [E] of the Article Z O R O A S T E R.

What I have here said is borrowed from an Author, who had it from Plutarch, whose entire Passage I shall produce elsewhere (b). It is remarkable, that the King of Persia, when Themistocles fled to him for Refuge, prayed to Arimanius, that he would always influence his Enemies to banish their bravest Men (c). This is a Proof, that the Persians considered Arimanius as a Divinity, which took a Pleasure only in Evil [B]. The same Divinity, doubtless, was meant, when, upon Darius's complaining of the Deity of Persia, when he was informed, that the Queen his Wife was dead a Prisoner in the Camp of Alexander; he was answered; With regard to Funeral Honours, &c. you have no reason to accuse the Bad Genius of the Nation (d). Your Wife, Your Mother, and Your Children, have lost nothing of their former Fortune, but the Opportunity of seeing your Glory restored by Orosmades (e). We see, in these Words, the Opposition, which the Persians supposed to be between Orosmades and Arimanius.

(c) Plut. in Themist. pag. 126.

(d) The Greek version of the text in Alexander, p. 632.

(e) Id. ib.

[A] Enclosed them in an Egg.] I promised, in another Place (1), that I would say something here concerning the Egg, which, according to the Ancient Theology of the Pagans, had been employed in the Production of Beings, when the Chaos was reduced. I say, then, that it was the Opinion of the Phœnicians, that the obscure Air, and the Chaos, were the Principle of all Things. This obscure Air is without doubt the same, which others call Night, and to which they attribute the Production of an Egg, out of which proceeded Love, and Human-kind.

(1) Above, Remark [A] of the Article ADAM.

(2) Ἰσχυρὸς ἀέρας ὃν ἐμύχλιντο τὸν αἶον (2). This may be ingeniously explained of the Earth, and compared with the Words of Moses; by supposing, that the grosser Parts of This obscure and thick Air, subsiding, met with a fat and glewy Substance, with which, incorporating they formed a kind of Slime; which, being hardened, became an habitable Earth (3). Some of the Ancients said, that a Dove, brooding on an Egg, produced Venus, or Love. "Verba citat Grotius ex Nigidio in Scholiasten Germanici, ovum miræ Magnitudinis, quod volentes eiecerunt in terram, atque ita columbam infedisse, & post aliquot dies exclusisse Deam Syriæ, quæ vocatur Venus (4)."

(3) This is Dr Burnet's Explanation, ibid. p. 244.

(4) Id. ib. pag. 259.

(5) Ibid.

(6) Ibid.

(7) Ex Plutarchi Sympos. lib. 2. Quest. 3.

"de Ovo mundano datæque interpretationi tacite faveat mihi videtur incubatio Spiritus Sancti in abyssum, de qua Moses in prima telluris productione, ubi ad ovum manifeste alluditur (8). . . . This Moving (or Brooding) of the Holy Spirit upon the Face of the Waters, which Moses speaks of in the History of the Creation, where he plainly alludes to an Egg, is a tacit Confirmation of This Doctrine of the Mundane Egg, and the Explication I have given of it."

(8) Burnet's Theory, p. 236.

[B] The Persians considered Arimanius as a Divinity, which took a Pleasure only in Evil.] If any one is inclined not to grant me this, he may object, that the King of Persia was greatly pleased to have gained Themistocles; he believed, therefore, the Exile of such Persons to be a fortunate Event for his own Country, and that it was his Interest they should take Refuge in his Court: when, therefore, he prayed to Arimanius to inspire his Enemies with a Resolution to banish their bravest Citizens, he demanded a very great Favour of him; and, consequently, he looked upon him as a Principle of Good, upon some Occasions, with regard to the Persians. I answer, that This Reasoning is invalid. This Monarch agreed in Opinion with his Divines; he considered Arimanius only as a malignant Being; he petitioned for the Exile of the great Men of Greece, only inasmuch as it was prejudicial to That Country. It was an Action within the Jurisdiction, and to the Taste, of Arimanius, as far as it was unjust and pernicious, with respect to the Towns, which banished them. But, as far as it was beneficial to the Persians, it was by no means agreeable to him; nor was it under this Notion, that his Assistance was intreated. In a Word, to solve this Objection, it is sufficient to say, that the Affairs of this World being so interwoven with each other, that, generally speaking, one Country profits by the Misfortunes of another, Arimanius could scarce effect any thing thing simply and absolutely pernicious; some Advantage would always result from it, either by accident, or otherwise. Now, as He did nothing, but on account of the Evil, which he discovered in it, it could never be pretended, that he was the Principle of any Good. It is true, then, that the Prayer, we are speaking of, is no Proof, that he was considered otherwise, than as a Being, who took a Pleasure only in hurting.

ARIMINI (GREGORY of) See RIMINI.

ARION, a wonderful Horse, and famed in Poetical Story on a different account from Bucephalus in the History of Alexander. His Origin has been variously spoken of; though all allow it Divine. Some say (a), that Neptune, being desirous to procure to Men all the Conveniences, which Horses could afford them, struck the Earth in Theffaly with his Trident; and immediately out started a couple of Horses; one of which was our Arion. Others say, that Neptune, disputing with Minerva, which of them should give a Name to the City of Athens, it was ordered by the other Gods, that which ever of the Two should make the best Present to Men should give a Name to The City. Whereupon, Neptune struck the Beach with his Trident, and caused an Horse to issue forth of it [A]; but Minerva produced an Olive-Tree; and gained the Victory; for it was judged, that Peace, of which the Olive is an Emblem, was better than War, in which the Horse was most useful. Now there are, who pretend, that the Horse, which Neptune produced on this Occasion, was named Arion. Others say, that This Horse sprung from Ceres and Neptune (b). This Goddess, as she was wandering through the World in quest of her Daughter, met Neptune, who made fierce Love to her; but, not being disposed to gratify his Passion, she thought fit to assume the Form of a Mare. This past near the City of Oncium in Arcadia. Ceres in vain endeavoured to conceal herself among the Studd; Neptune soon discovered her, and enjoyed her in the Shape of an Horse. She was vexed at it at first; but was, afterwards, appeased, and washed herself in a neighbouring River. She had, by this Adventure with Neptune, not only a Daughter, whose Name it was not lawful to declare to prophane Persons, but likewise Our Horse Arion. There are, who say, that she was in the Form of a Fury, when Neptune begot this Horse on her, or that, in effect, a Fury conceived him, from the Act of Neptune [B]. The Poet Antimachus, cited by Pausanias, gives him no other Origin, than the Soil of Arcadia: But Quintus Calaber makes him the Son of Zephyrus, and a Harpy [C]. However it be, it was believed, that he was brought up by the Nereids [D], and that, being sometimes harnessed, with other of Neptune's Horses, to the Chariot of That God, he drew him with incredible Swiftnes over all the Seas (c). He had this peculiar to him, that his Feet, on the off side, were like those of a Man (d). Hercules mounted him, when he took the City of Elis, and afterwards presented him to Adrastus. This Pausanias informs us of; who adds, that Antimachus made Adrastus the third Owner of him [E]. Hesiod represents him as belonging to Hercules, in his Combat with Cygnus (e). Statius says, in general, that he served Hercules in his Travels, and that, afterwards, the Gods gave him to Adrastus (f). Probus ascribes the whole Honour of This Present to Neptune (g). Under this

(a) Latitudo in Statii Thebaid. lib. 4. v. 43.

(b) Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 257.

(c) Hesiod. in Clypeo Herculia.

(f) Stat. ubi supra.

(g) Probus, in Virgil. Georgic. I.

(c) Stat. Thebaid. I. 6. ver. 308.

(d) Latitudo in Statii Theb. I. 6. ver. 302.

(t) Virgil. Georgic. lib. I. ver. 12.

[A] Neptune, disputing with Minerva --- struck the Beach --- and caused an Horse to issue forth of it. Servius informs us of this, on these Words of Virgil.

----- tuque ô, cui prima frementem
Fudit equum magno tellus percussa tridenti, Neptune (1).

And Thou, whose Trident struck the teeming Earth,
And made a Passage for the Courser's Birth.

DRYDEN.

See likewise Probus on the same Passage of Virgil.

[B] She was in the Form of a Fury, when Neptune begot this Horse on her; or --- a Fury conceived him by Neptune.] They are the Opinions of Apollodorus and Hesychius. These are their Words.

Ἐπειὶς ἐκ Ποσειδῶνος ἐγέννησε ἑκατόθεσσα Ἐπινύβη κατά τιν ὑμνοῖς (2). Ceres, under the Form of a Fury, conceived this Horse by Neptune.

Ἀπὸ τῶν ὀτρυνόντων Ποσειδῶνος καὶ μῆτρὸς τῶν Ἐρινύων (3). The Horse Arion, the Son of Neptune and one of the Furies. Barbius has confounded This Opinion of Apollodorus with That of Hesychius.

"Unius ex Erynibus, sicut be (4), fobolem affentur Apollodoro Hefychius Lexicographus. --- Hefychius the Lexicographer agrees with Apollodorus, in making him the Offspring of one of the Furies." This is to make Apollodorus say, that Arion was foaled by one of the Furies; but he has said no such thing; he expressly observes, that Ceres was the Mother of This Horse, and that she had assumed the Form of a Fury, only at the Time of Copulation. Lloyd has stolen from Barbius in this Place, without correcting him.

[C] Quintus Calaber makes him the Son of Zephyrus, and a Harpy.] Behold a second Fault of Barbius, which Lloyd has transplanted into his Lexicon, just as he found it. "Intercedit Quintus, sicut Barbius (5), Harpyia patronus, cuius fuerit potius (5) Id. ib. seminio oriundus patre Zephyro, ingratis etiam Neptune. --- Quintus Calaber interposes, making him to have been begot upon a Harpy by Zephyrus, against the Will of Neptune." There is nothing in That Poet which remarks, that it was with, or without, the Approbation of Neptune, that Zephyrus and the Harpy produced Arion (6).

[D] It was believed, that he was brought up by the Nereids.] I shall cite only Claudian.

Si dominus legeretur equis, tua posceret ultro Verbera, Nereidum stabulis nutritus, Arion (7).

To chuse a Master were the Coursers free, Arion, once the Nereids Care, would be Subject to thy Command, and court the Whip from thee.

[E] Adrastus was his third Owner.] This is true, according to the History, which the Scholiast of Homer makes of it, on the Three hundred and forty sixth Verse of the Twenty third Book of the Iliad. He says, that Neptune, falling in Love with Erin-

(7) Claudian. Consul. IV. Honorii ver. 555. Lloyd cites this twice.

ny,

this last Matter it was, that Arion signaliz'd himself most; he won the Prize of the Race in the Nemean Games [F], which the Princes, who undertook the Siege of Thebes, instituted in Honour of Archemorus, and was the means of preserving Adrastus from perishing, with all the other Chiefs, in This famous Expedition. This Apollonius testifies in his third Book.

(8) That is, One of the Furies. (8) metamorphos'd himself into a Horse, and enjoyed her in Baotia, near the Fountain Tipblousa; that he got an Horse on her, which was called 'Apeiaon, because he excelled all others; that he gave him to Copreus, King of Aliartus; who presented him to Hercules; who won the Prize of the Race with This Horse, against Cygnus, the Son of Mars, near Trazene, and that, afterwards, Hercules presented him to Adrastus.

[F] He won the Prize of the Race in the Nemean Games. Apollodorus, in his third Book, says, that Adrastus was Victor in the Chariot-Race; but Statius pretends, that This Prince gave Arion to his Son-in-law Polynices; and that Arion threw his new Driver, and, continuing his Course, outstript all the rest; which did not prevent Amphiarus from carrying the Crown: For, though he did not distance Arion, yet it was sufficient, that he carried it from his Competitors, and that Polynices, being thrown, could pretend to nothing in virtue of the superior Fleetness of his Horse.

(9) Stat. Theb. lib. 6. ver. 528. Forsitan & victo prior isset Arione Cygnus, Sed vetat æquoreus vinci pater: hinc vice iusta Gloria manit equo, cessit victoria vati (9).

Neptune forbad, that, in his whirling Car, Cygnus the Prize, should from Arion bear; Hence the Steed gain'd the Honour of the Day, The Prize Amphiarus bore away.

Apollodorus confesses, that Amphiarus carried it in the Chariot Race, ἀρμαίης; which his Latin Translator ought to have rendered by curru, and not curfu, as Barbicius has observed (10). As for the Distich of Propertius, which makes Arion a speaking Animal,

Quis & Adraſti fuerit vocalis Arion, Trifidis ad Archemori funera victor equus (11).

— ſuch Arion was,
Adrastus' vocal Horse, who, at the Games
Sacred to dead Archemorus' Fame,
Was crown'd victorious in the dusty Race.

I do not believe he attributes That Grief to Him, which Pasſerat imagines; The Word trifidis I take to relate to the fatal Accident of Archemorus, for whom These Games were celebrated, and not to the Grief of Arion, on finding another Master besides Adrastus (12).

(10) Barth. in Stat. Tom. 3. p. 537.

(11) Propert. lib. 2. Eleg. ult.

(12) Nouvelles de la Repub. des Lettres, July 1702, pag. 110.

ARIOSTA (LIPPA), Concubine of Opizzo, Marquis of Est and Ferrara, improved so well the Impressions which her Beauty had made on the Heart of the Marquis, by her Fidelity and artful Management, that, at last, he owned her for his lawful Wife, in the Year 1352. He died the same Year, and left her the Administration of his Estates; of which she acquitted herself very well, during the Minority of her eleven Children. From this Lady is descended The House of Est, which subsists, at this Time, in the Branches of the Dukes of Modena and Rhegio (a). The Author, from whom I borrow this, observes, that Lippa Ariosta brought more Honour to her Family, which was one of the noblest of Ferrara, — than she had taken from it [A]. The Reader will meet with some Reflexions on This in the Remark, which I subjoin to this Article.

(a) Le Laboureur, Relation du Voyage de Pologne, Part. 3. pag. 372.

[A] She brought more Honour to her Family — than she had taken from it. I have discoursed, in another Place (1), of the singular Efficacy of Marriage. It cannot be sufficiently admired; for, in short, it changes the Nature of the three Distinctions of Time; the past is no less affected by it's Influence, than the present and the future. “Do you not admire at the force of Custom, and the Authority it has in the World? With three Words, pronounced by a certain Person, Ego conjungo vos, you privilege a young Man and a Maid to go to bed together, in sight, and with the consent, of all the World; and this is called a Sacrament administered by a consecrated Person. The same Action, without these Words, is an enormous Crime, which disgraces a poor Lady; and He, who conducts the Affair, is called, an please you, a Pimp. In the first Case, the Father and Mother make merry, dance, and conduct their Daughter themselves to bed. In the other they are at their Wits'end, get her shaved, and away with her to a Convent. It must be confessed that the Law “is a very merry Affair (2).” This is not the Marvellous of the Matter: The chief singularity consists in the retroactive Effect. Our Ariosta had been a Concubine; her Children were Bastards; this was a Stain to her Honour, and her Family; but all was effaced, washed out, and annihilated, by three Words of the Priest, Ego conjungo vos. The Marquis of Ferrara, by marrying this Mistress, a little before he left the World, metamorphos'd her from a Concubine into an honest Wife, and legitimated her Children. Such Metamorphoses happen daily; and some have pretended, that Children, born

(2) Buffi Rabutin, Lettre 136, Part. IV, pag. 192. Edit. of Holl.

(a) TELL-MESSUS. See its Article. Plutarch, Aristian, Lucian, Clement, Alexandrinus, and several others, say, that Aristander was of this City.

at a time, when their Father and Mother could not marry for want of a Dispensation, ought to be legitimated by a subsequent Marriage; but the Parliament of Paris gave Judgment against this Pretence in the Year 1664 (3). It may perhaps be asked, why the Marquis did not comply before the Year of his Death. I answer, that a Fornicator, who finds himself near his end, is more disposed to such a Conduct, than if he were in hopes of living longer. The Checks of Conscience, excited of themselves, or by the Discourse of a Casuist, are more lively at the approach of Death; less Difficulty is then made in passing through a vexatious Ceremony, which may quiet them. Add to this, that a great Lord, solicited to marry by a Mistress, whom he enjoys, may imagine, that she will be a thousand times more obliging, and faithful, while she flatters herself with the Hopes of attaining to the Quality of his Wife, but that, after having attained to it, she will discover her Pride and ill Humour, &c. He may, therefore, think proper to keep her in constant Expectation; but, when he is past Hopes of Recovery, he will think it time to give over this Piece of Management. However it be, some are so severe, that they cannot be reconciled to the Conduct of the Marquis of Ferrara, and his Imitators: They would have a Woman, who has dishonoured herself, and been a long time a Scandal to a whole Country, remain all her Life-time in Disgrace; that the Example of her being restored to Honour and Reputation may not serve as an Allurement to other Maids, and, under the like Prospect, conceal from them the Infamy of Concubinage (4).

(3) See the Journal des Savans, for Jan. 12, 1665, pag. 46.

(4) See Remark [D] of the Article ALESIUS.

ARISTANDER, a famous Soothfayer in the Days of Alexander the Great, was Native of a certain City in Asia, where almost all were born with a Disposition to Prophecy (a). He followed Alexander to the Conquest of Persia, and acquired quired a wonderful Ascendant over the Mind of This Monarch [A], by the great Success of his Art [B]. He had been formerly in the same Employ at the Court of King Philip; and it was He, who explained That Prince's Dream, after his Marriage with Olympia, more to the King's Satisfaction, than any of his Brethren. Philip dreamed, that he had sealed the Queen's Belly with a Seal, on which was engraved a Lion,

[A] He acquired a wonderful Ascendant over the Mind of This Monarch. It is certain, on the one hand, that, in all the Macedonian Army, there was no Soothsayer of such great Reputation and Authority, as Aristander: Peritissimus vatium (1). Cui maxima fides habebatur (2). Cui tum plurimum credebatur ex vatibus (3). It is, on the other hand, most certain, that Alexander was very superstitious: Erat non intactus ea superstitione mentis (4). Superstitiosis potens erat (5). It is easy, then, to conclude, that Aristander had a great Ascendant over him. Quintus Curtius observes, that This Prince had an implicit Faith in him. "Qui post Darium victum" Ariolos & vates consulere deferat, rursus ad superstitionem humanarum gentium ludibria revolutus, Aristandrum, cui CREDULITATEM SUAM ADDIXERAT, explorare eventum rerum sacrificiis jubet (6). . . . He, who, after the Conquest of Darius, had left off to consult with Soothsayers and Diviners, relapsing into the Follies of Superstition, commanded Aristander, in whom he had an implicit Faith, to enquire by Sacrifice the Event of "Things." If, in any critical Juncture, he was to beg a singular Favour of the Gods, he shut himself up with Aristander. With him he shut himself up, to perform the most mysterious and ineffable Ceremonies of Religion. Plutarch informs us of this, where he mentions the Preparations for the Battle of Arbela.

Ἀλέξανδρος δὲ τῶν Μακεδόνων ἀναπαυόμενος, αὐτὸς πρὸς τὴν σκηνὴν μετὰ τῷ μάγῳ Ἀριστάνδρῳ διέτριβεν ἱερουργίας τίνας ἀπορήτους ἱερουργήματα καὶ τῷ τοῖσιν σφραγίζμενος (7). Alexander, whilst the Macedonians slept, performed certain mysterious Ceremonies before his Tent, with Aristander the Soothsayer, and sacrificed to Apollo. Quintus Curtius says, that Alexander, being much troubled on this Occasion, sent for Aristander, to implore the Assistance of the Gods, and that Aristander, in his Habit of Ceremony, dictated the Forms of Prayer to him. "Alexander non alias magis terribus ad vota & preces Aristandrum vocari jubet. Ille in candida veste, verbenas manu preferens, capite velato præibat preces regi, Jovem, Minervam, Victoremque propitiantem (8)." It is no wonder, that This Prince had such a Value for his Soothsayer; for he did him more service than any of his Generals. By his Assistance he inspired his Army with Hopes and Courage; which greatly contributed to the Success of his Enterprizes. Do but consider This Aristander in the Heat of the Battle of Arbela, habited in white, and carrying a Branch of Laurel in his Hand, crying out to the Soldiers, that he saw an Eagle perched on Alexander's Head, a certain Pledge of Victory, and that They might see it as well as he. Consider this, and reflect how much this must promote the Victory, without it being necessary, that the Soldiers should really see it? They trusted to the Eyes of the Soothsayer; if they themselves saw nothing, they imputed it to their bad Eye-sight, or the small time they had to look about for such an Object in the Air. "Vates Aristander alba veste indutus, & dextra preferens lauream" militibus in pugnam, intentis avem monstravit, haud dubium victoriæ auspicium. Ingens ergo alacritas ac fiducia paulo ante terribis accendit ad pugnam (9). Plutarch observes, that Alexander lent a helping Hand to his Soothsayers (10), and, least the Event should justify Those, who laughed at Aristander's Promise, that the City of Tyre should be taken before the end of the Month, he ordered, that That Day, which was the last of the Month, should, for the future, be counted as the Twenty eighth. He would give his Prophet time: who had nevertheless not much exceeded it; for the City was taken upon That Day, if we may believe Plutarch, an Author much to be suspected in These Matters. Let us not omit, that no one knew the Art of comforting his Master so well as our Aristander. He used very little Rhetoric in recovering him from the most oppressive Melancholy. A Dream served him instead of every thing else, upon these Occasions. Alexander, perfectly in Distraction at his having killed Clitus, had almost broke his Heart with groaning and weeping. It was feared, he would dye of Sorrow; the Door of his Chamber was forced open; he would hear no Body; but, no sooner had Aristander put him in Mind of a Dream, which related to the Death of Clitus, and represented to him, that That unfortunate Man was from the beginning predestinated to This End, Our Prince receives immediate and perfect Consolation. Ἀριστάνδρῳ δὲ τῷ μάγῳ ὑπομιμνήσκοντος αὐτὸν τὴν τε ὄψιν ἣν εἶδεν περὶ τῷ Κλίτῳ, καὶ τὸ σημεῖον ὡς δι' αὐτοῦ καθευδόμενον τῶν ἐξ ὅσων ἐκδίδονται (11). At quum vates Aristander visum illi quod de Clito fuerat ei representatum & prodigium subjeceret, jamdudum bene in satis fuisse, visus est animus relaxare.

[B] By the great Success of his Art. [A] They, who set up for Prediction, are happy, when they serve a Prince, whom the Providence of God designs for great Purposes. A thousand human Reasons induce them to foretel all manner of Success, cost what it will; and they have the pleasure to see the Event justify their Temerity. This was Aristander's Case. He ventured to foretel Things at all Adventures; and Alexander's good Fortune still saved his Credit. The Prophet had reason to be fond of such a Conqueror; and the Conqueror was excusable in trusting to a Man, who divined so rightly. I have formerly wondered, that Alexander should be so superstitious; at present I should wonder, if he had been otherwise; and it is surprising to me, that his Respect for the Soothsayers was interrupted in the Time of his highest Prosperity (12). He could not be ignorant, that his good Fortune exceeded the Foresight of his own Prudence, and the Greatness of his Courage. He must, then, necessarily have believed, that an invincible and most powerful Virtue took particular Care of his Affairs: He must, therefore, morally speaking, have been always disposed to cultivate the Favour of That Power, by all those Means, which the Soothsayers suggested to him; I say, the Soothsayers, whom he considered as the proper Judges of the Time, in which Fortune was in a good or bad Humour, and as Arbitrators of the Means to appease This Goddes, and render her propitious. It would be found to be less strange, that certain Princes should slight the Counsels of those, who are Directors of their Devotions: I say, certain Princes, who succeed in their Undertakings, only in proportion to the human Means, which they make use of to render these Enterprizes almost infallible; and who fail of Success, whenever their Prudence has not taken all necessary Measures. They are the Antipodes of great Conquerors. But I confess there still remains matter of Wonder in the Case. Could such a Great Soul, as That of Alexander, represent God to itself under the Idea, which Superstition gives of him? He had his lucid Intervals; as, when he dismissed one of his Prophets from his Presence, who came to dissuade him from an Attack, for which every thing was prepared; telling him, that nothing could be more impertinent, in the midst of such Preparations, than a superstitious Soothsayer. "Si quis, inquit, arti tuæ intentum & exta inspectantem sic interpellat, non dubium quin incommodus ac molestus videri tibi possit. Et cum ille ita prorsus futurum respondisset; censeñse, inquit, tantas res non pecudum fibras ante oculos habenti, ullum esse majus impedimentum quam vatem superstitione captum (13). — Should any One thus interrupt you, whilst buisied in your Art, and contemplating the Entrails, I question not but you would think him troublesome and impertinent. To which when the Soothsayer assented; The King added; Do you think then, that to me, who have such great Things, not the Entrails of Beasts, in view, any thing can be a greater Interruption, than a superstitious Diviner." The Confidence, which he had in his good Fortune, hindered him sometimes from submitting to the Advice of Aristander. He found himself designed for great Things; an Opinion, which is one of the most powerful Springs of Providence;

(11) Id. ib. pag. 694.

(12) See what has been cited from Quintus in the foregoing Remarks, Citation (5).

(13) Quint. Curtius, lib. 9, cap. 4.

(a) Plut. in Alexand.
init. p. 665.

(b) Artemi-
dor. lib. 1.
c. 33. p. 30.

(c) Plut. in Alexandro,
pag. 671.

(d) Arrian.
lib. 1. c. 8.

(e) Q. Cur-tius, lib. 4.
cap. 2.

a Lion. The other Soothsayers, upon this, advised him to have his Wife's Conduct more carefully observed [C]; but Aristander maintained, that the Dream signified, that the Queen was pregnant with a Son, who should have the Heart of a Lion (a). She was, then, with Child of Alexander. King Philip pretended to expound the Dream himself [D], but could make nothing of it. Though Aristander had applied himself chiefly to the Interpretation of Dreams; and though he is One of the Authors, who have wrote the most learnedly on This Subject (b), yet he exercised his Talent on all kinds of Prodigies. If News was brought, that a Statue of Orpheus had sweated, he would say, that it foreboded, that the Poets would one Day sweat in singing the Victories of Alexander (c). If a Swallow fluttered about this Prince, or perched upon his Head, Aristander said, it was a Sign of a Conspiracy against the King; which, however, would be discovered (d). If, during the Preparations for the Siege of Tyre, Blood, issuing out of a Soldier's Loaf, dismays the King; Aristander recovers him, and tells him, since the Blood proceeded from the internal parts of the Bread, it was a fatal Omen to the City, which was to be besieged (e). On another Occasion, he interpreted the Presage of a Raven, which had let fall something on Alexander's Head, and afterwards rested upon a Tower, where it was taken (f). The Entrails of Victims were new Matter of Foresight to This great Soothsayer (g); He explained likewise what the Actions of Men portended [E]. Probably, then, he

(f) Ib. c. 6.

(g) Quintus Curtius, lib.
7. cap. 7.
Plut. in Alex. pag. 679.

(14) Quintus
Curtius, lib.
7. cap. 7.

(15) That of Alexander the Great.

(16) Plut. in Alexandro.

(17) Cic. de Divin. lib. 2.
cap. 70.

(18) Macrobius, lib. 2.
cap. 5.

dence; and by That he kept up the Courage of This Soothsayer. "Rex iustum confidere felicitati suæ remiffit. Sibi enim ad alia gloriam concedere Deos" (14). — The King sent him back, bidding him to trust to His good Fortune, and telling him, that the Gods reserved him for still greater Glory.

If any one thinks these Remarks too prolix, let him know, that I have my Reasons for it. My design was to ease another Article (15), which abounds but too much with Matter. Four Articles are read with more Pleasure than One, though That one be shorter than the other four. This obliges me to scatter many Things here and there, which naturally belong to one and the same Subject. What are we not obliged to do to humour a capricious Age?

[C] Advised him to have his Wife's Conduct more carefully observed. Their Reasons were at least as good as Those of Aristander; for thus the latter reasoned. Men do not seal up an empty Box; the Queen must therefore be with Child; since the King has dreamt, that he sealed up her Womb (16). But hear the Reasons of the other Diviners. Men do not seal up a Box, when there is no danger, that any Person should open it; it is sealed only as a Precaution against Those, who may approach it. The Queen's Box, then, is in danger, since the King has dreamt, that he sealed up it: The Lyon, engraven on the Seal, signifies the Necessity there is of being upon his Guard. This imports, that the Place is besieged, and begins to think of surrendering; and that, unless a strong and faithful Garrison be kept in it, the Besiegers will quickly enter the Place. Cicero, to ridicule the Interpretation of Dreams, alleges the different Explications, which were given in much such another Case. "Parere quædam matrona cupiens, dubitans esse ne prægnans, visa est in quiete obignatam habere naturam: ad conjectorem retulit: Negavit eam, quoniam ob signata fuisse, concipere potuisse. At alter prægnantem esse dixit; nam inane nihil obignari solere" (17).

— A certain Matron, who desired to be a Mother, but was in doubt, whether she was with Child or not, dreamt, that her Natural Parts were sealed up. She applied to an Interpreter of Dreams; who told her she could never conceive, as being sealed up. But another assured her she was actually pregnant, since it was not the Custom to seal up an empty Thing. But it may be said, that Aristander was more successful in his Conjecture, and therefore argued better. I deny the Consequence; a Person may be happier in his Conjectures, without being consequently a Man of more Skill: And might not both Parties have Reason of their side? Does Pregnancy and Chastity always go together? Olympia might resemble Julia a little, who said, Nunquam nisi navi plena tello vestrorem (18). We are going to see another Explication of this same Dream.

[D] King Philip pretended to expound this Dream himself. Neither Plutarch, nor any other Pagan Author informs us of this; but a Father of the Church. I shall set down all he says concerning it; since several Things may be learned from it. "Philipus magis cedo nondum Pater Olympiadis Uxoris naturam obignasse viderat annulo. Leo erat signum: cre-diderat præclusam genituram, opinor, quia leo femel pater est. Aristodemus vel Aristophon conjectans immo nihil vacuum obignari, filium & quidem maximi impetus portendi. Alexandrum qui sciunt leonem annuli cognoscunt (19). — Philip of Macedon, not yet a Father, dreamt, that he had sealed up the Natural Parts of his Wife Olympia. The Seal was a Lion: he believed she would never have a Child; I suppose, because the Lion is but once a Father. Aristodemus, or Aristophon, interpreted the Dream to portend the Birth of a very brave Son. They, who know Alexander, know the Lion on the Seal." Hence it appears, 1. That the Seal, applied in a Dream to Olympia's Womb, made her Husband believe, that she would have no Children. There was some ground for this Thought; and we may almost suppose, that Philip was One of those Pagans of Europe, who, as it is said, had read the Holy Scriptures: I say, this might be supposed, if the Ideas of common Sense did not naturally enough lead to This Prince's Conjecture. But it is certain, that the Word of God represents the Barrenness of Women under This Idea. If the closing of the Womb represents, in Scripture, the Punishment of Sterility (20) inflicted by God, the opening of it represents the Blessing, by which he causes This Evil to cease (21). In the Second Place, it appears, that Tertullian made no Reflexion on This Idea, which the Scripture furnishes, and which Nature itself dictates. He considers only the Lyon engraven on the Seal, and believes, that Philip built all his Conjecture on That. Tertullian supposes wrong in this Place, and concludes ill. It is false, that the Lyon is but once a Father (22); and, besides, would not a Man who thought so, be ridiculous in arguing from it, that he should never have a Child; he ought at least to conclude that he should have One. It appears, in the Third Place, that Tertullian had forgot the Name of the Soothsayer, who hit upon the best Explication; he does not know, whether he ought to call him Aristophon, or Aristodemus. He remembered only the two first Syllables of his Name, and could not properly supply the rest; in a word, he had forgotten the Name of Aristander. In the Fourth Place, we see that he was very well satisfied with the Explication of the Dream: It is One of Those, which he alleges, to prove the Excellency of the Soul. Let us finish this Comment, with observing, that, perhaps, King Philip contended a long time with his Diviners for the Explication, which he gave of his own Dream; and perhaps Aristander said to him, upon this Occasion, what a Musician said, one Day, to the same Prince, in a like Case; God forbid, that your Majesty should ever be so unhappy, as to understand these things better than myself. Μὴ γινώσῃς σοι ἑαυτὸς, ὡς βασιλεὺς, κακῶς, ἢ αὐτὰ ταῦτα βέλῃς σιδῆς (23). Alas! O Rex, ut eo tu infortunio deolectare, ut barum rerum scientia me fias prior.

[E] He explained likewise what the Actions of Men portended. For Example; he foretold, that Lysimachus, one of Alexander's Lifeguard, should attain to Royalty, but not without much Difficulty (24). His Reason was This: Alexander being mounted on a good Horse,

(19) Tertul-lus de Anima.
cap. 46.

(20) Genes.
xx. 18.

(21) Ibid.
chap. xxx.
ver. 22. See also chap.
xxix. ver.
31.

(22) See the Notes of Rigaltius on this Passage of Tertullian.

(23) Plut.
de discrim.
Aulæ. &
Amici, pag.
67.

(24) Appi-
an. in Syria-cæ.

was the Author of the Book, mentioned by Pliny, so full of prodigious Events [F]. But, as for the Books of Agriculture, mentioned by Varro and Columella (b), I am apt to believe they were written by another ARISTANDER, especially since Varro has given the Surname of Albenian to the Author of them. Our Aristander survived the King his Master; and his Remonstrances brought the People in good earnest to think of burying him. I know not whether this Particular has been touched upon by any other than Ælian, who mentions it in the last Chapter of the twelfth Book of his Various History.

Horfe, Lyfmacbus, who was not able any longer to follow him on foot, had taken hold of the Horfe's Tail, that he might not quit his Master. Alexander had, by chance, wounded him in the Forehead with his Lance, and having, for want of Linnen, made use of his Diadem to bind up the Wound, it happened, that the Diadem was stained with Blood: And upon this Aristander grounded his Prediction.

[F] Probably he was the Author of the Book, mentioned by Pliny, so full of prodigious Events.] These are his Words: "Prodigio autem sunt ex dulcibus acerba poma, aut dulcia ex acerbis; gravi offento cum in deteriora mutantur ex olea in oleastrum, ex candida uva & fico in nigras: ut Laodiceæ, Xerxis adventu, platano in oleam mutata: qualibus ostentis Aristandri apud Græcos volumen scætet; apud

"nos vero C. Epidii Commentarii, in quibus arbores locutæ quoque reperiuntur (25). — It is a Prodigy, when bitter Apples become sweet, or sweet bitter; it is of dire Portent, when things are changed into worse, The Olive into the wild Olive, or the white Grape or Fig into black; as at Laodiceæ, upon the Arrival of Xerxes, the Plane-Tree was changed into an Olive; with which kind of Prodigies the Work of Aristander, among the Greeks, abounds; among our own Authors, the Commentaries of Caius Epidius, in which we read even of speaking Trees." Compare with this the Passage of Cicero concerning the Inhabitants of Telmessus, mentioned in the Article of That City (26), and wonder at the incredible Facility of the Ancient Pagans in multiplying Prodigies.

(b) Ælian Hardouin, in Indice Aulorum, takes for the same Aristander Him mentioned by Varro, and Columella, and Him mentioned by Pliny.

(a5) Plin. lib. 17, cap. 25.

(a6) Remark [C].

ARISTARCHUS, a Greek Philosopher, and Native of Samos, was one of the first, who maintained, that the Earth turned upon it's Center, and described annually a Circle round the Sun [A]. He invented one kind of Sun-Dials (a). It is not constantly agreed, at what Time he lived. It is only certainly known, that he was born before the Death of Archimedes [B]. There are extant of his Works only A Treatise of the Magnitude and Distance of the Sun and Moon, translated into Latin, and commented on, by Frideric Commandin, and published with the Explications of Pappus, in the Year 1572. Dr Wallis published it in Greek, with the Latin Version of Commandin, in 1688, and inserted it in the third Tome of his Mathematical Works, printed at Oxford, in 1699. The System of the World, which appeared under his Name, is a Work of Roberval (b). We shall remark a Fault, which has crept into the Text of Plutarch (c).

[A] Was one of the first, who maintained, that the Earth turned upon it's Center, and described annually a Circle round the Sun.] Sextus Empiricus, speaking of the Hypothesis of the Motion of the Earth, intimates plainly, that Aristarchus was the chief Inventor of it: for he mentions only Him. Οἱ γὰρ μὲν τὴν τῆ κόσμου κίνησιν ἀνέλονται, τὴν δὲ γῆν κινεῖσθαι δοξάζουσιν, ὡς οἱ περὶ Ἀρίσταρχον τὸν μαθηματικόν, ἃ καλοῦνται νοστὶν χρόνον (1). — They, who denied the Motion of the World, but believed, that the Earth moved, as Aristarchus the Mathematician, could easily form an Idea of Time. Plutarch, intending to clear up a Thought of Plato, and, considering with himself, whether That Philosopher did not believe the Motion of the World, adds, That This Opinion was afterwards That of Aristarchus and Seleucus; and that Aristarchus taught it Hypothetically, and Seleucus Dogmatically. Ὅς ὕστερον Ἀρίσταρχος καὶ Σέλευκος ἀπεδείκνυσαν ὁ μὲν ὑποτίθειναι μόνον ὁ δὲ Σέλευκος, καὶ ἀποφανθῆναι (2). Ut postmodo Aristarchus & Seleucus ostenderunt. Same hoc ille ita ut supponeret tantum, hic etiam pronuntiavit. This is intimating, that Aristarchus was looked upon as the Author of this Opinion. Archimedes intimates this more plainly. These are his Words: Ταῦτα γὰρ ἐν ταῖς γεγραμμέναις παρὰ τοῦ Ἀρετολόου διακρίσας Ἀρίσταρχος ὁ Σάμιος, ὑποθέσας τινὲν ἐξιδωκεν γράφας, ἐν αἷς, ἐκ τῶν ὑποκειμένων συλλέγειν τὸν κόσμον πολλαπλάσιον ἤμεν τὴν νῦν εἰρημένην ὑπὸ τῆς γῆς γὰρ τὰ μὲν ἀπλανῆ τῶν ἄστρον, καὶ τὰ ἄλλα, μένει ἀκίνητον. τὰν δὲ γῆν περιστρέφεται περὶ τὸν ἄλιον, κατὰ κύκλου περιφέρειαν, ὅς ἐστιν ἐν μέσῳ τῶ δρόμου καί μιν (3). — Aristarchus the Samian, confuting these Notions of the Astrologers, laid down certain Positions: from whence it follows, that the World is much larger, than what we just now mentioned; for he lays it down, that the fixed Stars, and the Sun, are immovable; and that the Earth is carried round the Sun, in the Circumference of a Circle. Probably the Transcribers have falsified the Passage of Plutarch, where we read, that Aristarchus pretended, that Greece ought to have entered a Process against Cleanthes for Irreligion, in believing the Motion of the Earth. Μόνον (εἶπεν) ὁ τῶν, μὴ κρίνιν ἡμῖν ἀσεβείας ἐπαγγέλλειν, ὥσπερ Ἀρίσταρχος ὥλοιο δέιν κλεισθῆναι τὸν Σάμιον ἀσεβείας προκαλεῖσθαι τὸς Ἕλληνας, ὡς κινῶν τὰ κόσμου τιν ἐστίν, ὅτι φαίνεται σωζέειν ἀπὲρ ἐπερῶτο, μένει τὸν ἔσθρον ὑποτίθειναι, ἐκ ἐλπίσθαι δὲ κατὰ λογὴν κύκλου τὴν γῆν ἅμα καὶ περὶ τὸν αὐτοῦ ἄλιον διενεμένην (4). — Bring not an Action of Impiety against us, as Aristarchus thought Greece ought to have done against Cleanthes the Samian, as a Disturber of the Lares of the Universe; For he endeavoured to preserve the Appearances of the Heavenly Bodies, by supposing, that the Heavens themselves stood still; but that the Earth revolved in an Oblique Circle, and at the same Time round it's own Axis. The Transcribers seem to me to have transposed the Names; it should be read; Cleanthes was of Opinion, that Greece ought to have tried Aristarchus the Samian for Irreligion, &c. This is a Conjecture of Gassendi (5), and a Correction, which Mr Ménage adopts as certain. In verbis Plutarchi, says he (6), legendum omnino ὥσπερ Ἀρίσταρχον τὸν Σάμιον ἐπὶ Κλειάνθους δέιν ἀσεβείας προκαλεῖσθαι τὸς Ἕλληνας. Amist did not perceive this Fault.

[B] It is not constantly agreed, at what Time he lived; it is only certainly known, that he was born before Archimedes's Death.] The Words, I have quoted (7), prove, that, at the latest, our Aristarchus could be but cotemporary with Archimedes. Now we know, that Archimedes lost his Life, when Syracuse was taken by the Romans, in the First Year of the CXLII Olympiad, during the Second Punic War. Observe, that, according to Plutarch, quoted above, Timeus the Locrian lived before Aristarchus; for the Sentiment, which he would have explained, is found in Plato, as if Timeus had spoken it in Conversation. Now, since Plato was a Disciple of This Timeus (8), and That, after having seen Egypt; we must conclude, that, if Plutarch has well observed Chronology, Aristarchus flourished after Plato. We are sure, then, that he did not flourish after Archimedes, nor before Plato; and I believe it is not easy to fix on any thing more exact. Blancanus has placed Aristarchus Two Centuries earlier, than Hipparchus, and has placed the latter an Hundred Years after the Death of Alexander, that is, an Hundred Years after the First Year of the CXIVth Olympiad (9). He believed, then, that Aristarchus flourished about the LXXXIXth Olympiad.

(a) Vitruv. lib. 9, cap. 9.

(b) See Ménage, in Diog. Laërt. lib. 8, n. 85, pag. 389.

(c) In Remark [A], Citation (4).

(4) Plut. de facie in Orbe Lunæ, pag. 922, F.

(5) Gassendi, Phys. sect. 2, lib. 3, cap. 5, pag. 617, Tom. 1, Oper.

(6) Ménage, ubi supra.

(7) In the foregoing Remark.

(8) Cicero, de Finib. lib. 5, c. 29, & Tuiculi, lib. 1.

(9) Blanc. in Mathematico. Chronol. ad calcem libri de Arith. locis Mathem. pag. 46, 49.

(1) Sextus Empiricus adversus Mathematicum, pag. 410. Mr Ménage in Diog. Laërt. lib. 8, n. 85, cites this Passage twice in the same Page, first as Sextus Empiricus, and secondly as Pyrrho.

(2) Plut. in Quest. Plat. p. 1006, C.

(3) Archimedes in Pammitte, pag. 449, & apud Ménage, in Diog. Laërt. lib. 8, pag. 389.

(10) Simler. in Epit. Bibl. Gessner.

(11) Lib. Fromond. de Orbe Terræ Immobile, pag. 1. He has omitted this Poet Ant-Aristarchus.

(12) Voss. de Scient. Math. pag. 157.

(13) Joh. Stadius, in Pref. Tabularum Bergensium, apud Voss. ubi supra.

(14) Vitruvius, de Architect. lib. 1, cap. 1.

(15) Dacier's Remarks on Homer's Art of Poetry, ver. 470, pag. 371.

(16) Heinsius, in Prolegomenis Aristarchi Sacerdotis, fol. 3.

(17) Fabricius, Lives of the Greek Poets, pag. 7.

(18) Athen. lib. 2, lib. finem, pag. 71. B.

(19) That the same as the second Evergetes.

(20) Pag. 549. He cites him in several other Places.

(21) That the Name of Scopia, a City of Myfia.

(22) Strabo, lib. 13, pag. 419.

(23) Voss. de Histor. Græcia, pag. 135.

(24) Diog. Laert. lib. 5, n. 84, says, that Demetrius Scerpius was a Disciple of Crates and Aristarchus.

(25) Now This Demetrius was Contemporary with one Metrodorus (17), whom Mithridates caused to be put to death in the Year of Rome 681 (18). Judge then, whether One, who flourished under Ptolemy Philadelphus, could be contemporary with This Metrodorus.

(26) The Death of That Ptolemy falls in with the Year of Rome 506. Note, that it may be collected from Diogenes Laertius, that Demetrius was elder than Metrodorus, and, if so, there is no retorting the Reason; for it cannot be said, that I prove too much.

(27) Observe likewise, that the Son of a Disciple of Aristarchus was still living (19), when Strabo was old enough to assist at the public Lectures (20). Now, since Strabo lived to Tiberius's Time, he could not hear the Lectures of the Son of one of Aristarchus's Disciples, if Aristarchus flourished under Ptolemy Philadelphus.

(28) [B] Whenever a Verse displeased him, he treated it as supposititious. Cicero certifies this in these Words: "Si, ut scribis, ex litteræ non fuerunt diserte, scito meas non fuisse. Ut enim Aristarchus Homeri verbum negat, quem non probat, sic tu (libet enim mihi jocari) quod disertum non erit, ne putaris meum"

(29) If, as you write, those Letters were inelegant, be sure they were not mine. For, as Aristarchus denied those Verses, which did not please him, to be Homer's, so I desire, that what is not elegant (allow me to jest) you would believe not to be mine."

(30) To this may be added another Passage of the same Author: "Nisi forte scire vis, me inter Nician nostrum & Vidium judicem esse. Pro-

(31) fert

(32) See Strabo, lib. 14, pag. 447.

(33) Strabo, lib. 14, pag. 447.

(34) Cicero, Epist. 11, ad Famil. lib. 3, pag. 169.

(35) Cicero, Epist. 11, ad Famil. lib. 3, pag. 169.

(36) Cicero, Epist. 11, ad Famil. lib. 3, pag. 169.

(37) Cicero, Epist. 11, ad Famil. lib. 3, pag. 169.

(38) Cicero, Epist. 11, ad Famil. lib. 3, pag. 169.

Olympiad, a little after the Birth of Plato. This does not agree with the Passage of Plutarch, which I have alleged. Simler's Opinion agrees with it as little. That Author makes Aristarchus flourish in the Reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, which reached from the first Year of the LXXXIXth Olympiad to the last Year of the LXXXVIIIth (10). Libertus Fromondus is yet more opposite to Plutarch's Opinion; since he knew not whether Aristarchus preceded, or followed, Pythagoras (11). I believe Vossius (12) would ARISTARCHUS, a famous Grammarian, was born in Samotracia, and chose the City of Alexandria for his adopted Country (a). He was much esteemed by Ptolemy Philometor, who entrusted him with the Education of his Son [A]. He applied himself diligently to Criticism, and revised Homer's Poems with incredible Exactness, but a little too magisterially; for, whenever a Verse displeased him, he treated it as supposititious [B]. This Edition of Homer was much esteemed, as also much

[A] Ptolemy Philometor entrusted him with the Education of his Son.] This appears plain in the Words of Suidas. Γέγονε, says he (1), κατὰ τὴν πρὸς Ὀλυμπιάδα, ἐπὶ Πτολεμαίῳ τῷ φιλομήτορι, ὃ καὶ τὸν υἱὸν ἡγαγεῖν.

He lived in the CLVth Olympiad, in the Reign of Ptolemy Philometor, whose Son he also educated. The Olympiad, which he specifies, answers very well to the Reign of This Ptolemy; but This however may be said, that it does not appear, that this Prince had any Sons: Historians give him but one Daughter, and make his Brother succeed him. This Objection is of no force; for, on the one side, if the Son, whom he caused to be instructed by our Aristarchus, died in his Youth, the Historians might think, that there was no need of mentioning him; on the other hand, it is false, that They are all silent in the Matter. Justin gives Ptolemy Philometor a Son; and says likewise, that Ptolemy, his Uncle, caused him to be put to death (2).

The learned Leo Allatius has not taken notice of this; he will have it, that the Disciple, which Suidas gives Aristarchus, was the second Ptolemy Evergetes: Cujus (Ptolemæi Philometoris) filium secundum Evergetem erudiit, Olympiade CLVI, ut Suidas tradit (3). This is wrong; the second Ptolemy Evergetes was the Brother, and not the Son, of Ptolemy Philometor. Vossius was no less mistaken, in believing, that Ptolemy Philometor made choice of Aristarchus for Preceptor to his Son Ptolemy Latyrus (4); he should have known, that Ptolemy Latyrus, or Latbarus, was the Son of the second Ptolemy Evergetes. What Suidas observes, that Aristarchus was a Disciple of Aristophanes, the Byzantian, does not furnish a reasonable Objection; for it is well known, that a very great Error has crept into That Passage of Suidas, where we read, that Aristophanes of Byzantium flourished in the XLVth Olympiad; it should be read the CXLVth Olympiad; as Allatius, and Jonsius, have observed (5). "Aristophanis meminit Suidas, in quo obiter Librarianum error in Olympiade notandus est. Ipse namque habet, Γέγονε δὲ κατὰ τὴν μὲν Ὀλυμπιάδα, quæ Hieronymus Wolphius vertit, Vixit Olympiade XLP, cum omnino scribendum sit πρὸς, id est, CXLV (6). . . . Suidas mentions Aristophanes, in which Author, by the way, a Mistake of the Transcribers, with regard to the Olympiad, deserves to be taken notice of. For Suidas has it Γέγονε δὲ κατὰ μὲν Ὀλυμπιάδα, which Jerom Wolsius renders by Vixit Olympiade XLV (he lived in the XLVth Olympiad); whereas it ought certainly to be read πρὸς, i. e. 145. The Anonymous Author of the Description of the Olympiades places Aristophanes the Byzantian, under this Olympiad. Suidas, in saying, that the same Aristophanes was, in his Youth, a Disciple of Callimachus, does not contradict this. Μαθητὴς Καλλιμάχου καὶ Ζηνοδότου, ἀλλὰ τὸ μὲν νέος, τὸ δὲ παλαιὸς νεὺς (7). A Disciple of Callimachus and Zenodotus, but of the former in his Youth, of the latter in his Childhood. A Person, who flourished in the CXLVth Olympiad, might have been a Disciple of Callimachus; for That Poet lived 'till the Reign of Ptolemy Evergetes, the Son of Ptolemy Philadelphus; and we know, that Ptolemy Evergetes reigned to the end of the CXXXIXth Olympiad. Now, if Aristarchus was a Disciple of Aristophanes the Byzantian, it is pointing out the exact time, in which he flourished, to place him, as Suidas has done, in the CLVth Olympiad. They, who will weigh these several Particulars, will find some Difficulty in assenting to this Proposition: Aristarchus lived in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, at the same time with Callimachus (8). The learned Heinsius observes, that some Persons say this (9); and, since he does not censure them, we may suppose, that he approves of their Opinion. He would have done better to have condemned it. Faber is more to be credited in this, than his Son-in-law: He places Aristarchus in the Reign of Ptolemy Philometor (10). See the Remark [G], where we shall prove the Truth of This Opinion, from the Consideration, that Crates and Aristarchus were Contemporaries. A Passage of Athenæus might induce some to believe, that our Critic lived under Ptolemy Philadelphus; it is, where Athenæus relates, that Ptolemy Evergetes was one of Aristarchus's Disciples (11). For want of examining the whole, one might be persuaded, that This Ptolemy Evergetes was the Son of Ptolemy Philadelphus; but it is certain, that he must be taken for Ptolemy Physcon (12), Brother of Philometor. In effect, Athenæus speaks of one Ptolemy, who wrote Books, and who must necessarily be the same with Him, whom he cites in the twelfth Book (13), and whom he reckons the seventh King of Egypt.

There are still farther Proofs against Mr Dacier's Opinion. It is well known, that Demetrius Scerpius (14) lived at the same time with Aristarchus. This Strabo testifies: Κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον γεγορὸς Κράτητι καὶ Ἀριστάρχῳ (15), æqualis Cratetis & Aristarchi. Vossius did not consider these Words with Attention, when he said, that Strabo affirms, that Demetrius Scerpius was a Disciple of Crates and Aristarchus (16). Now This Demetrius was Contemporary with one Metrodorus (17), whom Mithridates caused to be put to death in the Year of Rome 681 (18). Judge then, whether One, who flourished under Ptolemy Philadelphus, could be contemporary with This Metrodorus. The Death of That Ptolemy falls in with the Year of Rome 506. Note, that it may be collected from Diogenes Laertius, that Demetrius was elder than Metrodorus, and, if so, there is no retorting the Reason; for it cannot be said, that I prove too much. Observe likewise, that the Son of a Disciple of Aristarchus was still living (19), when Strabo was old enough to assist at the public Lectures (20). Now, since Strabo lived to Tiberius's Time, he could not hear the Lectures of the Son of one of Aristarchus's Disciples, if Aristarchus flourished under Ptolemy Philadelphus.

[B] Whenever a Verse displeased him, he treated it as supposititious.] Cicero certifies this in these Words: "Si, ut scribis, ex litteræ non fuerunt diserte, scito meas non fuisse. Ut enim Aristarchus Homeri verbum negat, quem non probat, sic tu (libet enim mihi jocari) quod disertum non erit, ne putaris meum"

(21). . . . If, as you write, those Letters were inelegant, be sure they were not mine. For, as Aristarchus denied those Verses, which did not please him, to be Homer's, so I desire, that what is not elegant (allow me to jest) you would believe not to be mine."

To this may be added another Passage of the same Author: "Nisi forte scire vis, me inter Nician nostrum & Vidium judicem esse. Pro-

fert

(12) Voss. de Scient. Math. pag. 157.

(13) Joh. Stadius, in Pref. Tabularum Bergensium, apud Voss. ubi supra.

(14) Vitruvius, de Architect. lib. 1, cap. 1.

(15) Dacier's Remarks on Homer's Art of Poetry, ver. 470, pag. 371.

(16) Heinsius, in Prolegomenis Aristarchi Sacerdotis, fol. 3.

(17) Fabricius, Lives of the Greek Poets, pag. 7.

(18) Athen. lib. 2, lib. finem, pag. 71. B.

(19) That the same as the second Evergetes.

(20) Pag. 549. He cites him in several other Places.

(21) That the Name of Scopia, a City of Myfia.

(22) Strabo, lib. 13, pag. 419.

(23) Voss. de Histor. Græcia, pag. 135.

(24) Diog. Laert. lib. 5, n. 84, says, that Demetrius Scerpius was a Disciple of Crates and Aristarchus.

(25) Now This Demetrius was Contemporary with one Metrodorus (17), whom Mithridates caused to be put to death in the Year of Rome 681 (18). Judge then, whether One, who flourished under Ptolemy Philadelphus, could be contemporary with This Metrodorus.

The Death of That Ptolemy falls in with the Year of Rome 506. Note, that it may be collected from Diogenes Laertius, that Demetrius was elder than Metrodorus, and, if so, there is no retorting the Reason; for it cannot be said, that I prove too much.

Observe likewise, that the Son of a Disciple of Aristarchus was still living (19), when Strabo was old enough to assist at the public Lectures (20). Now, since Strabo lived to Tiberius's Time, he could not hear the Lectures of the Son of one of Aristarchus's Disciples, if Aristarchus flourished under Ptolemy Philadelphus.

[B] Whenever a Verse displeased him, he treated it as supposititious.] Cicero certifies this in these Words: "Si, ut scribis, ex litteræ non fuerunt diserte, scito meas non fuisse. Ut enim Aristarchus Homeri verbum negat, quem non probat, sic tu (libet enim mihi jocari) quod disertum non erit, ne putaris meum"

(21). . . . If, as you write, those Letters were inelegant, be sure they were not mine. For, as Aristarchus denied those Verses, which did not please him, to be Homer's, so I desire, that what is not elegant (allow me to jest) you would believe not to be mine."

To this may be added another Passage of the same Author: "Nisi forte scire vis, me inter Nician nostrum & Vidium judicem esse. Pro-

fert

(b) See Remark [B].

(c) See the Anti Baillet Tom. 1. p. 80, 81.

much criticized (b). He play'd the Critic upon Pindar (c), and Aratus (d), and other Poets; and it is not true, that, in order to criticize on every one, without Fear of being censured in his Turn, he had the Address not to publish any thing of his own

(d) See Vol. de Scient. Mathem. pag. 156.

(22) Id. lib. 9. Epist. 10. pag. 23, 24.

"fert alter (ut opinor) duobus vericulis expensum Niciae: alter Aristarchus hoc ἐξελίξεν. Ego, tamquam criticus antiquus, judicatorum, utrum sit τὸ ἀντιπρὸς, ἀπαρμυζόμενος (22). — Unless, perhaps, you would know, that I am Umpire between our Friend Nicias and Vidius. The one acknowledges certain Verses to be genuine, the other, like an Aristarchus, condemns them. I, as some ancient Critic, am to decide, whether they really are the Poet's, or are spurious." It is said, that Aristarchus marked, over against the Verses, which he condemned as spurious, the Figure of a Spit, from whence it came, that ἐξελίξεν signifies to condemn. Translatum ab Aristarcho, qui Homeri carmina in corpus redegit, atque in libros digessit, versus nostros, hoc est adulterinos & subditos, qui non videntur sapere venam illam Homericam, ἐξελίσκοις, id est minutis veribus prænotatis, damnans: contra, qui videntur insignes ac genuini ἀσπίσκοις, id est stellis, illustrans (23). — Borrowed from Aristarchus, who reduced the Poems of Homer into a Body, and divided them into Books; condemning those Verses as spurious, which seemed not to reek of Homer's Vein, by prefixing an obelisk, or Spit; on the contrary distinguishing those, which appeared to be excellent and genuine, with an Asterisk, or little Star." See Ausonius's Poem, entituled Ludus septem Sapientum; where he desires a rigorous Censure of his Poems from Drepanius Pucatus. He would be treated, as Aristarchus had treated Homer, and expresses himself thus:

Mæonio qualem cultum quæsitivè Homero

Censor Aristarchus, normaue Zenodoti.

Pone obelos igitur spuriorum fligmata vatam,

Palmas non culpas esse putabo meas (24).

(24) Auson. in Ludo septem Sapientum, circa imit. p. 265.

As Aristarchus and Zenodotus polished Homer; so affix the Spits, the Brands of spurious Poets; I esteem them as my Palms, not as my Faults.

It is thought, that he means Aristarchus in the last of these two Verses.

Quique Sacri lacerum collegit corpus Homeri,

Quique notas spuris versibus apposuit (25).

(25) Id. Epist. 18. p. 649.

He, who collected the scattered Poems of Homer, and he who branded the spurious Verses.

(26) Quenstedt. de Patriis Viror. Illustr. pag. 433.

Charles Stephens, Lloyd, and Hofman affirm, in their Dictionaries, that Ælian observes, that Aristarchus's Criticisms were so exact, that, whenever he condemned a Verse, as not being Homer's, it was looked upon, of course, as supposititious. Ælianus tradit hunc tam castigato fuisse iudicio, ut Homeri versus non putaretur, quem ipse non probasset. Quenstedt affirms the same thing (26). I do not think Ælian says so, and, if he did, he must have been mistaken; for we learn from Athenæus, that the Taste of this great Critic (27) was often condemned; some Verses of Homer, which he rejected, were still received, and he and his Reasoners laughed at. His Confidence alone was sufficient to bring his Judgment in question: He decided, in some Cases, that such and such Verses of the Iliad ought to be transferred to the Odyssey (28). Allatius was not ignorant, that the Criticisms of Aristarchus were often censured; and, upon this Occasion, quotes Athenæus (29), Plutarch, and the Scholiast of Homer. He informs us, that the Grammarian Prologus of Alcalon published a Book of Aristarchi correctione in Odyssea (30), and that Zenodotus of Alexandria was sent for to revise Aristarchus's Criticisms. "Zenodotus alter Alexandrinus ideo advocatus est, ut de reprobatis ab Aristarcho Homericis carminibus iudicium ferret (31)." Idem (Suidas); Ζηνόδοτος ὁ Ἀλεξανδρεὺς γεγραμμένους ὁ ἐν ἄλλοις κληθεὶς πρὸς τὰ ὕμῳ Ἀεσπερχυ ἀδεδεμένα τῷ Πτολεμῷ. Nevertheless, he affirms, that Antiquity paid too great regard to Aristarchus's Judgment, that it was believed, that those Verses, which displeased him, were not really Homer's. Aristarchi porro iudicium adeo probavit antiquitas, ut Homeri versus non putarentur, quos ipse non probaret (32). Does not this betray great want of Judgment? Ælian Vinetus deserves Censure upon this Occasion: "Cujus (Aristarchi), says he, veteres tanti fecerant iudicium, ut, quem non probaret, Homeri verum non crederent. Ita Cicero, Suidas, Erasmus (33). — The Ancients had so great a Regard for Aristarchus's Judgment, that they looked upon whatever Verse he disapproved of not to have been Homer's; as we find in Cicero, Suidas, and Erasmus." It is false, that Cicero says any such thing (34); he only tells us, that Aristarchus took those alone for Homer's Verses, which he himself approved of. Nor does Suidas say, what Vinetus imputes to him. I can affirm the same of Erasmus, in regard to the Place, from whence I have borrowed what has been cited above (35). Saldenus, desiring to make some Alteration in the Words of Charles Stephens, which I have quoted, has greatly offended against the Reasoning Part. He has not quoted Ælian, nor has he affirmed, that Aristarchus's Criticism was exact; he is satisfied with saying, that this Censor believed it so. Thus far all is well; he defers Charles Stephens upon a false Quotation, and will answer but for one thing, which is very probable, to wit, that the Corrector of Homer thought himself a very able Man; but here is the Mischief of it: From this advantageous Opinion, which he had of his own Wit, Saldenus concludes, that Antiquity received none for Homer's Verses, but such as pleased Aristarchus. This is a false Inference. Grammaticus ille, qui hoc nomen (Aristarchi) gessit, tam castigato se putavit esse iudicio, ut Homeri versus nullus haberetur, quem ipse non probaret (36). Thus Saldenus argues; and, to confirm his Argument, he cites us the Words, where Cicero says, that Aristarchus rejected all the Verses of Homer, which were not to his Taste, as supposititious. This Proof is no better, than the Position itself, which was to be proved. I have read, in the Commentary of a modern Author, that Aristarchus had so refined and penetrating a Genius for Criticism, that he was generally called the Prophet, or Diviner, from his wonderful Sagacity (37). I have been surprized not to find any Footsteps of this Elogy in a vast number of Writers, whom I have run over, in the Places, where this Grammarian is mentioned. At last I found, in a Note of Corradus on Cicero's Epistles, the following Words: Hinc illam (Aristarchum) μάστιγιν ἐκάλει Παναίτιος ὁ Ῥόδιος φιλόσοφος, ἡ δὲ ῥόδιος κατανομήσις τῆς τῶν ποιημάτων διαβάσεως. Athen. lib. 14. (38). I have searched in vain in the fourteenth Book of Athenæus. However it be, there is a great Difference between this Quotation of Corradus, and That of Mr Dacier. The Greek Words signify only, that Panetius gave the Name of Diviner to our Aristarchus; and not that it was the common Style of Antiquity.

(32) Id. ib. pag. 104.

(33) Ælian Vinetio, in Aufonii Ludum septem Sapientum, init. p. 265.

(34) See, above, Citation (21), the Words of Cicero.

(35) Citation (23).

(36) Saldenus de Libris, p. 388.

(37) Dacier's Remarks on Horace's Art of Poetry, p. 371, 372.

(38) Corradus, in Epist. 14. Cicero, ad Atticum, lib. 1.

Note, that it is the Opinion of many, that Aristarchus was He, who divided each of Homer's Great Works into as many Books, as there are Letters in the Alphabet, and inscribed each Book with a particular Letter. "Plutarch. lib. de Homero. Iliadem & Odysseam Homeri ab Aristarcho Grammatico in numerum librorum divivam ad ordinem & numerum Græcarum literarum. Eustathius in Iliad. A. tradit, Aristarchum & Zenodotum confusum antea Homeri opus digessisse in certos libros, eosque literis distinctisse. Unde non solum primus tam Odysseæ, quam Iliadis, liber α vocatur, secundus β & sic deinceps: Verum etiam ipsum opus γεγραμμένα nominatur. Et sane verum est, banc per literas divisionem recentiore. Nam antiqui nunquam ea usi, ut patet ex Aristotele de Poetica, Cap. 24. (39). — Plutarch, in his Book of Homero, tells us, that the Iliad and Odyssey of Homer were divided by Aristarchus, the Grammarian, into a Number of Books, answering to the Order and Number of the Greek Letters. Eustathius, upon the first Iliad, informs us, that Aristarchus and Zenodotus digested the Work of Homer, which was before confused, (39) Joannes de Wower de Polymathia, cap. 18. pag. 153, 154.

own [C]. They, who make him cotemporary with Pisistratus, are grossly mistaken [D]. His Reputation continued a long time. Cicero and Horace employed his Name, when they would describe a too rigid Critic [E]. Some ascribe to him a Thought, which

"into a certain Number of Books, and distinguished them by Letters. Whence it is, that not only the first Books both of the Iliad and Odyssey are called A, the second B, and so on; but the whole Work is styled ἑρμηνεία, The Letters. And indeed this Division by Letters is of modern Date. For the Ancients never made use of it, as appears from Aristotle, De Poëtica, Cap. 24."

[C] It is not true, that, in order to criticise on every One, without Fear of being censured in his Turn, he had the Address not to publish any Thing of his own. Saldenus, under the borrowed Name of Christianus Liberius, tells an untruth, when he says, "Sic Aristarchus Grammaticus nullum non reprehendebat,"

(40) Christianus Liberius, in Bibliophila, pag. 21. apud Ménage, Anti-Baillet Tom. 1. pag. 81.

"nihil ipse scribens ne ab aliis reprehendi posset (40). — Thus Aristarchus the Grammarian censured every one; but published nothing himself, for fear of being censured by others." I know not whether he relates it with the same Correctives, as in the Work, which he published in his own Name, in 1688. If he has, Mr Ménage has not cited him justly; for he has dropped an Essential Part of the Passage, which he reports. These are Saldenus's Words, in the Work, which he published, in 1688. "Sicuti Aristarchus Grammaticus neminem non reprehendebat, nihil interim ipse scribens, ne reprehendi ab aliis posset ut nonnulli volunt: licet aliis sint, ac plerique quidem, qui πολυγραφοί ipsum accensent, ut supra diximus (41). — At Aristarchus the Grammarian censured every one; but published nothing himself. lest he should be censured by others; as some will have it; tho' others reckon him among the Voluminous Writers; as I have observed above. We may add, upon this Occasion, what Mr Faber addressed to a Journalist (42). If you had published any thing of your own, we should be upon the Square; but, as the Case stands, you play with too much advantage; it is mockery to bet a Farthing against a Guinea; I know not who will play with you upon such Terms.

(41) Guill. Saldenus de Libris, pag. 43. He bud said, p. 13. Aristarchus Grammaticus supra mille Commentarios interis configuravit; He should have said, as Suidas does, supra octingentos.

(42) Faber. second. Journal. pag. 48. Edit. Holl.

(43) Allatius, de Patria Homerii, pag. 93. & seq. He says, that these Commentaries are not printed.

[D] They, who make him cotemporary with Pisistratus, are grossly mistaken. This is a very ancient Error. Allatius cites a long Passage (43), in which one of the Commentators of Dionysius of Thrace affirms, that Pisistratus ordered it to be published over all Greece, that They, who brought him any of Homer's Verses, should receive a Reward, at so much per Verse. When he had collected as many as he could, he sent for seventy Grammarians, to each of whom he gave a Copy of this Collection. They were defared, each of them separately, to range these Verses in the best Order they could. After each had done his Best, they met again, by Pisistratus's Order, and shewed their Work to each other. They agreed, unanimously, that the Work of Aristarchus and Zenodotus deserved the preference, and afterwards declared, that Zenodotus's Work ought to yield to That of Aristarchus. This Story contains This, among other Falsenesses, that Aristarchus and Pisistratus lived at the same Time. It was easy to discover this mistake; yet the Commentators on Dionysius of Thrace have persuaded a great many into a Belief of it. Eustathius has vented it, and, after him, Genebrard, and Jafon de Noreis. Read this Passage of Allatius: "Multis aliis recentioribus fucum fecerunt. Nam Eustathius in Iliados idem asserit. Οἱ δὲ συνδόμενοι ταῦτων κατ' ἐπιστάσαν, ὡς φασι, Πεισιφάτης τε τῶν Ἀθηναίων τυραννὸς Γενναῖαρχοῦ, καὶ διορθωσάμενοι κατὰ τὸ ἐκείνου ἀρίστον, ὡν κορυφαῖος Ἀεῖσαρχος, καὶ μετ' ἐκείνου Ζηνόδοτος. Id est: "Qui vero eam complerentur Grammatici, jussu, ut tradunt, Pisistrati Abotemum Tyranni, & ut mihi melius visum est correxerunt, quorum Princeps Aristarchus, & post eum Zenodotus. Et interius: Ἰὺ δὲ ἀπαρχὴν γάλακτος τῆς οὐμῆς ποίσιον σκεδασθεῖσαν ἀρχὴν ἐποιούσαο Κιναιδῶν ὁ χιζῶ. Κιναιδῶν τὸ δὲ, φασιν, αὐτῶν πᾶμπόλλα, οἱ περὶ τὸν Κιναιδῶν. καὶ πολλὰ τῶν ἐπῶν ἀνέοι ποινῶν παρὲν ἀποδοῦναι. Διὸ καὶ διορθώσαναι οἱ Οἰμεικαὶ βέλτοι, ὡς ἀνὰ τὴν εἰρησίαν. Id est: "Homeri vero poemum dispersim recitandi principium fecit Cinæthus Chius. Verum illum multis modis Cinæthi sectatores depravarunt, multaque à se conscripta carmina iniecerunt. Quare libri Homerici

"correcti sunt, ut superius diximus. Gilbertus Genebrardus Chron. lib. 2. Pisistrati jussu Aristarchus Homeri rapsodiam recensuit, & in 24 partes pro numero elementorum distribuit. Jafon de Noreis in artem Poeticam Horatii, Aristarchus miro quadam acumine castigabat veterum scripta, atque ideo colligendis Homeri versibus præpositus fuit. In quibus vides miros Anachronismos. Primus, qui Aristarchum sub Pisistrato collocat. Secundus, qui Cinæthum Chium asserit primum Homeri poemum dispersim recitasse. Cum uterque post Pisistrati tempora floureret. Cinæthus enim, si Pindari Scholiastæ credimus, in Nemeon, Od. 2. sub Olympiade sexagesima nona apud Syraculas Homeri carmina (44) Id. ib. p. 96, 97. ἐξελθόντες (44). — They have deceived many others of the Moderns; for Eustathius, on the first Iliad, asserts the same Thing. Οἱ δὲ συνδόμενοι, &c. i. e. The chief of the Grammarians, who dispersed and corrected it, by order of Pisistratus, Tyrant of Athens, were Aristarchus, and after him Zenodotus. And a little lower, τὸ δὲ ἀπαρχὴν γάλακτος, &c. i. e. Cinæthus the Chian was the First, who recited the scattered Poems of Homer. But the Followers of Cinæthus corrupted them several Ways, and foisted in several Verses of their own. For which reason the Books of Homer were corrected, as I have said above. Gilbert Genebrard, Chron. lib. 2. says, that Aristarchus, by order of Pisistratus, revised the Rhapsody of Homer, and divided it into Twenty four Parts, according to the Number of the Letters. Jafon de Noreis, upon Horace's Art of Poetry, tells us, that Aristarchus with wonderful Judgment corrected the Writings of the Ancients, and was therefore appointed to collect Homer's Poems. In these Passages you see surprising Anachronisms. The first places Aristarchus in the Reign of Pisistratus; The second asserts Cinæthus the Chian to have been the first, who recited the scattered Poems of Homer; Whereas as both of them flourished after the Time of Pisistratus. For Cinæthus, if we may believe the Scholiast on Pindar, Nem. Od. 2. collected together the Verses of Homer, at Syracuse, in the LXXIXth Olympiad."

[E] Cicero and Horace employed his Name, when they would describe a too rigid Critic. Consult the Oration against Piso, where you will find the following Words: "Verum tamen, quoniam te non Aristarchum, sed Phalarim Grammaticum, habemus, qui non notam apponas ad malum verbum, sed Poëtam armis persequere, scire cupio quid tandem isto in versu reprehendas, Cedant Arma togæ (45). — I desire to know of you, who are not an Aristarchus, but a Phalaris, and who, instead of affixing a Mark to a bad Verse, pursue the Poet himself, sword in Hand; inform me, I say, what you dislike in That Verse, Cedant Arma Togæ, &c." The same Orator declares, that he was afraid of his Friend Astarchus's Nails. Nostrium opus tibi probari letor; ex quo avēn ipsa posuisti, quæ mihi florentiora sunt visa tuo judicio. Cæculas enim tuas minutulas illas extimescebam (46). Thus we should express ourselves at present to denote the Censures, which a Reader might mark down in the Margin of a Book, and the cæculas minutulas of the Passage, which I have quoted. Articus was one of those sincere Persons, who examine the Compositions of their Friends with Strictness, and therefore Cicero calls him his Aristarchus. Quid multa? totum hunc locum, quem ego varie mei orationibus, quarum tu Aristarchus es, soleo pingere, de flamma, de ferro, (noti illas λανθάνουσιν) valde graviter perterritus (47). The Verses of Horace, which I am going to quote, furnish an Idea, which is a strong Proof of my Text.

(44) Id. ib. p. 96, 97.

(45) Cicero, Orat. in L. Pison, c. 30.

(46) Cicero ad Attic. lib. 16. Epist. 10.

(47) Ibid. lib. 1. Epist. 10.

Vir bonus & prudens versus reprehendit inertes
Culpabit duos: incomptis allinet atrum
Transverso calamo signum: ambitiosa recidet
Ornamenta: parum claris lucem dare coget:
Arguet ambigue dictum: mutando notabit:
Fiet Aristarchus: nec dicet, Cur ego amicum Offendam in nugis (48)?

(48) Horat. de Arte Poetica, vers. 445.

which others impute either to Theocritus, or Iſocrates [F]. He had ſeveral Conteſts, in Pergamus, with Crates the Grammarian [G]; and died in the Iſland of Cyprus, at Seventy two Years of Age. He was ſeized with a Dropſy, and found no better Remedy for this Diſtemper, than ſtarving himſelf to Death. There proceeded out of his School to the Number of forty Grammarians [H]. He left two Sons, whoſe only Merit was their great Simplicity. He, who bore his Father's Name, had been fold

*The prudent Care of an impartial Friend
Will give you notice of each idle Line;
Shew what ſounds baſhful, and what wants Ornament,
Or where it is too lavishly beſtow'd;
Make you explain all that he finds obſcure,
And with a ſtriſt Enquiry mark your Faults;
With Freedom, Ariſtarchus-like, will judge *,
Nor for theſe Trifles fear to loſe your Love.*

Lord RosCOMMON.

[F] Some aſcribe to him a Thought, which others impute either to Theocritus, or to Iſocrates.] This Saying of Ariſtarchus is upon Record; I cannot write, what I would; and I will not write, what I can (49). Mr Dacier tells us this, on theſe Words of Horace:

Si quantum cuperem, poſſem quoque (50).
Did but my Pow'r riſe equal to my Wiſh.

The Authors, whom I have hitherto conſulted, have not led me to the Source; and my Enquiries have been leſs ſucceſſful in this Point, than in That of Ariſtarchus's Divination. This makes me paſſionately wiſh, that Mr Dacier, and others like him, would have the goodneſs to leave off the Practice of not quoting their Authors. Are they afraid, that the Great and Polite World, for whom they labour, ſhould look upon Citations as too pedantic? I can ſcarce believe, that a Count de Guiche (51), for Example, would be diſpleaſed to know, where we may find, that Ariſtarchus was the Author of this fine Saying, and was treated as a Prophet. Any Lady, who loves Learning, would be better pleaſed to know, that Plutarch, or Ariſtote, vouch ſuch a Faſt, than, in general, that it is reported. This by the way: To return to our Text; we read, in the Col-lections of Stobæus, that Theocritus, being asked, why he did not write, answered, becauſe I cannot do it as I would. and I will not do it, as I can. Ἐρωτηθεὶς διὰ τί ἢ συγγράφει, ἢ τι, εἶπεν, ὡς μὲν βύλομαι ἢ δύναιμαι, ὡς δὲ δύναιμαι ἢ βύλομαι (53). Iſocrates, being at Table with Nicæreus, King of Cyprus, was deſired to ſay ſomething, but would not; and gave this Reaſon; What I do know, is not ſeaſonable, and, what may be ſeaſonable, I do not know. Οἷς μὲν ἐγὼ δεινὸς ἔκ οὐ νῦν καίρος, οἷς δὲ οὐ νῦν καίρος, ἔκ ἐγὼ δεινὸς (52). This puts me in mind of The Thought of Seneca; "I never endeavour'd to pleaſe the People; for they do not approve of what I do know, and I do not know what they do approve of. Nunquam volui populo placere, nam quæ ego ſcio, non probat populus, quæ probat populus, ego neſcio (54)."

[G] He had Conteſts, in Pergamus, with Crates the Grammarian (55).] The Words of Suidas are expreſs to this Purpoſe: Κράτης τῷ γραμματικῷ περγαμηνῷ πλεῖστα διημιλλήσατο ἐν περγαμῷ (56). Cum Cratete Grammatico Pergamæno Pergami ſepſiſſime contendit. By virtue of this Paſſage, Cafaubon maintains, that Crates Mallotes was not the Antagoniſt of Ariſtarchus; but another Crates, born at Pergamus (57). As this Crates Mallotes was cotemporary with Ariſtarchus, and very well known to the King of Pergamus, it might eaſily be ſuppoſed, that he was the ſame, who diſputed on ſeveral Occaſions with Ariſtarchus. It is proper therefore to obſerve, that Suidas gives the Surname of Pergamæni to Ariſtarchus's Adverſary. Perhaps he is miſtaken; for They, who quote Crates of Pergamus, repreſent him rather as an Hiſtorian, than Grammarian (58); and it is certain, that Grammar was the chief Study of Crates Mallotes. Read this Paſſage: "Primus quantum opinamur Studium Grammaticæ in Urbem intulit Crates Mallotes, Ari-

ſtarchi æqualis, qui miſſus ad ſenatum ab Attalo rege, inter ſecundum ac tertium bellum Punicum, ſub ipſam Ennii mortem, quum in regione Palatii prolapſus in cloacæ foramen cruſis fregiſſet, per omne legationis ſimul & valerudinis tempus plurimas alexandriſubinde fecit, aſidueque diffuſit, ac noſtris exemplo fuit ad imitandum (59). ----- It is believed, that Crates Mallotes, Cotemporary with Ariſtarchus, firſt introduced the Study of Grammar at Rome; who, being ſent to the Senate by King Attalus, between the ſecond and third Punic War, about the Time of Ennius's Death, and having the Miſfortune to fall, and break his Leg, near the Palatine Hill, continued, during the whole Time of his Embaſſy and Recovery, to read ſeveral Lectures, and to bold Diſputations; in which he ſet the Romans an Example worthy of Imitation." This Paſſage of Varro is generally underſtood of Crates Mallotes. Crates nobilis Grammaricus, qui fretus Chryſippo homine acutiſſimo, qui reliquit ſex libros περὶ τῆς ἀνομαλίας; heis libris contra analogiam atque Ariſtarchum eſt nixus (60). ----- Crates, a celebrated Grammarian, who relied on Chryſippus, a Man of great Subtilty, who left ſix Books concerning Anomaly; by the help of theſe Books, he oppoſed Analogy and Ariſtarchus." If Varro ſpeaks here of Crates Mallotes, it is probable, that Suidas miſtook the one for the other; I mean, that Crates Mallotes, and not Crates of Pergamus, was the Rival of our Ariſtarchus. I know not whether the Commentators on Suetonius have ever thought of criticifying him on a Point of Chronology, which I ſhall mention. He ſays, that Crates Mallotes came to Rome in the Name of King Attalus, about the time that Ennius died. The Death of That Poet happened in the Year of Rome 585. Now He, who reigned at that Time at Pergamus, was called Eumenes: He began his Reign in the Five hundred and fifty ſixth Year of Rome, and died in the Year 596, leaving the Tuition of his Son, and the Regency, to his Brother Attalus. If Crates Mallotes, then, was deputed to the Romans by This Attalus, Chronology will not allow us to ſay, that he took this Journey about the time of Ennius's Death. However, Suetonius ſupplies us wherewith to confirm the Opinion of Thoſe, who make Ariſtarchus flouriſh under Ptolemy Philometor, in the CLVth Olympiad (61). Eufebius and Suidas are of This Number.

Voffius has not followed Suetonius; for, inſtead of ſaying, that Ariſtarchus, and Crates Mallotes, were Cotemporaries, he makes Crates Mallotes, and Apollodorus, the Diſciple of Ariſtarchus, Cotemporaries (62). I do not pretend, that this is falſe; for a Perſon may be cotemporary both with the Maſter and the Diſciple; but I obſerve, by the way, that he is miſtaken in another Point: He believed, that a Drammatic Piece, which had been tranſlated by Ennius, and was called the Acchilles of Ariſtarchus, had this Name given it, only becauſe That great Critic had corrected it. Ab hoc & vetus quedam Comædia, quam Ennius poſtea tranſtulit, dicebatur Acchilles Ariſtarchi. Mementi ejus Plautus (63). At ſic non alia de cauſa vocabatur, quam quod ab eo eſſet emendata. It is a Miſtake. This Piece was a Tragedy of Ariſtarchus of Tegeæ, cotemporary with Euripides. See Scaliger (64).

[H] Forty Grammarians proceeded out of his School.] He may be reckoned the Head of a Sect; witneſs the Words of Varro: "Relinquitur de caſibus, in quo Ariſtarchi ſuos intendunt nervos (65). "Hoc in oratione diligentius quam alii ab Ariſtarcho Grammatici (66). ----- It remains to ſpeak of the Caſes, in which the Followers of Ariſtarchus exert themſelves. ----- This Part of Speech they more carefully obſerve, than the reſt of the Grammarians ſince Ariſtarchus." See likewiſe the Raileries

* This Line is not Lord Roscommon's, but neceſſary upon the preſent Occaſion.

(49) Dacier's Remarks on Horace, Epit. l. 1. 2.

(50) Horat. Epod. l. 1. 2. ver. 256.

(51) We find, in the Continuation of the Menagiana, pag. 6, Edit. of Holland, that this Count, in the miſſion of the Pleſures and Associations of the Court, never omitted ſtudying regularly, at leaſt three hours a day.

(52) Stobæus, Serm. XXI. de cognito. ſecipio.

(53) Plut. in Vita Iſocr. p. 838. F. See Id. in Symposium. l. 1. c. 1. p. 613. A.

(54) Senec. Epit. 29. pag. 219.

(55) Suidas in Ἀριſτάρχῳ.

(56) Id. ib.

(57) Cafaub. in Sueton. de Illuſtr. Gramm. c. 2.

(58) See Voffius de Hiſtor. Gr. pag. 347.

(59) Sueton. de Illuſtr. Grammat. cap. 2.

(60) Varro, de Lingua Latina, l. 8. init. See alſo lib. 7. p. 97. See in Voff. ubi ſupra ſeveral Authorities, which prove, that Crates Mallotes was a Grammarian.

(61) It anſwers to the end of the ſixth Age of Rome.

(62) Voff. de Arte Gram. l. 2. c. 6. p. 24.

(63) Plaut. in Prologo Pænuli, ver. 1.

(64) Scalig. Animadv. in Eufeb. n. 1563. pag. 103.

(65) Varro, de Lingua Lat. lib. 7. pag. 96.

(66) Id. lib. 9. pag. 134.

(e) Taken from Suidas in 'Ariste' 266.

(67) Apud Athenæum, lib. 5. in fine.

(68) Suidas in 'Ariste' 266.

(69) Voff. de Poët. Gr. pag. 67.

(70) It is Cretæ in the Edition of 1688.

(71) Diog. Laërt. in Vita Phil. 1. 4. n. 23.

fold for a Slave; but the Athenians ransomed him (e). I have something to offer against Moreri [J].

Raileries of Herodotus (67). It appears from Suidas, that Arifarchus's School subsisted for some Ages in Alexandria (68).

[I] I have something to offer against Moreri.] I. He suffered himself to be imposed upon by Voffius, when he said, that Arifarchus was of Samos (69). II. Nothing is more impertinent, than to observe, that Arifarchus was Cotemporary with Crates (70). It is explaining an obscure point by one, which is more obscure, obscurum per obscurius. There have been several Crates's; Diogenes Laërtius reckons up ten, some Philophers, others Poets, or Grammarians, or Orators, or Geometricians, &c (71). They did not all flourish at the same time; nor were they all of the same Country; what then can be more insignificant, than to remark, that Arifarchus flourished in the Time of Crates? The most famous of these Crates's was the Cynic Philosopher. The most natural Sense, therefore, of Mr Moreri's Words is, that Arifarchus was Cotemporary with That Cynic: Now this is false; there is a great Interval of Time between them (72). This Censure does not affect Suetonius, who says, that Crates Mallotes was Cotemporary with Arifarchus; for there were few learned Persons in Suetonius's Age, who were ignorant at what time Arifarchus lived. III. I believe no one has said, that This Grammarian composed nine Books of Corrections on the Iliad, and the Odyssey. Suidas affirms it of Crates Mallotes (73), as Voffius observes (74). Moreri did not understand Voffius's Words. IV. It is false, that Ptolemy Laibus was the Son of Ptolemy Philometor. V. I believe it to be true, at the bottom, that our Arifarchus was living in the CLVIIIth Olympiad; but, since Eusebius and Suidas make him flourish in the CLVith, this ought to have been remarked. Voffius falsely imputes to Eusebius the placing of him in the CLVIIIth (75).

(72) Diog. Laërt. l. 5. n. 8. sup. that Crates the Cynic flourished about the CXIIIth Olympiad.

(73) Suid. in Crates.

(74) Voff. de Poët. Gr. pag. 67.

(75) Id. de Hist. Gr. lib. 1. c. 18. pag. 119.

ARISTEUS, the Son of Apollo and Cyrene [A]. His Article is very imperfect in Moreri, who confines himself to the informing us, I. That, by pursuing Eurydice, the Wife of Orpheus, from place to place, he occasioned her Death, by the bite of a Serpent. II. That the Nymphs, to be revenged of Aristeus, killed all his Bees. III. That, having offered a Sacrifice of Bulls, he recovered what he had lost (a). IV. That

(a) All this is to be found in Virgil's Georgics, Book 4.

[A] The Son of Apollo, and Cyrene] This is the general Tradition; and there are very few Traditions in Mythology more constant than this. Yet Cicero mentions another; he says, that the Greeks make Aristeus the Son of Bacchus; and adds, that, in Sicily, he was honoured in the Temple of That Deity. He addresses himself to Verres. "Quid! ex æde Liberi Simulacrum Aristei non tuo imperio palam ablatum est? — Aristeus, qui ut GRAECI FERUNT, liberi filius, inventor olei esse dicitur, una cum libero patre apud illos eodem erat in templo consecratus (1). — What! was not the Image of Aristeus openly taken away from the Temple of Bacchus by your Command? — Aristeus, who being, as the Greeks relate, the Son of Bacchus, is said to have invented Oyl, and was consecrated by them in the same Temple with his Father Bacchus." In another Book, he takes up with the common Opinion, and says, that Apollo was the Father of Aristeus, the Inventor of Oyl. Quid Aristeus qui olivæ dicitur inventor Apollinis filius (2). Let us next speak of Cyrene: She was the Daughter of Hypleus, King of the Lapithæ, who was the Son of Peneus and Creusa (3). Creusa was the Daughter of the Earth; and Peneus was the Son of the Ocean. Cyrene despised the Employments of other Maidens, and their House-hold Amusements (4), and rising, early (5), was extremely fond of Hunting, and making great Destruction among the wild Beasts. Apollo, encountering her, as she was fighting singly with a Lyon, demanded of Chiron, who she was, and whether he might not use force, and enjoy her.

(1) Cicero in Verrem, Orat. 9. c. 57.

(2) Id. de Nat. Deor. lib. 3. c. 18.

(3) Pindar. Ode 9. Pyth. pag. 433.

(4) Pind. ib. pag. 434.

(5) Τὸν δὲ σύνοιστον γαυκὺν παῦρον ἐπὶ βασιφάροις ὕπνον ἀναλίσκουσα, πρὸς δὲ ἄνα- Exiguum autem somnum concubito- rem suum in palpebris impendens, quum adveniret aurora. Id. ib.

(6) Id. ib. pag. 437.

--- Ὅσια
Κλυδὸν χεῖρ' οἱ προσενεγκεῖν;
ἢ ῥα καὶ ἐκ λεχέων
Κεῖρεν μελινδῆα ποίαν (6).

Fasne est illustrem manum ei admove- Utrum & ex stratis tondere militum herbam?

Chiron, beginning with an Answer to the last Question, represented, that Lovers ought to make use of the Key of the Heart; that is of soft and tender Words, to persuade the Fair to grant what they request; adding, that, among both Gods and Men, Modesty opposes the Precipitation, with which some fall to downright Enjoyment; and explained himself very nicely upon this Subject.

(7) Id. id.

--- καὶ ἔν τε θεῶς
Τότο κἀνδρώποισι ὁμῶς Αἰδῶν τ' ἀμφαδὼν ἀδείας τυχεῖν τὸ πρῶτον εὐνᾶς (7).

Et inter Deos & homines pariter verecundanter aperte postulato dulci frui primum cubili.

"By the way, continues he, it is a visible effect of your great Civility, that you, who know all things, should do me the Honour to enquire of me concerning this Maid's Extraction." This is Pindar's Sense; I pretend not to give a Translation Word for Word; it is sufficient to represent his Thought. Now, if this be his Meaning, who can see, without Indignation, the Liberty, which a French Author takes of making him express himself thus? "Is it lawful to see her? May I approach her? Shall I not be thought rash, if I take her fair Hand, and gather one of those Vermillion Roses, which I see painted on her Lips? But the Centaur, smiling, answered him thus: A chaste Love, Apollo, ought always to be concealed; and the Fair Sex, among the Gods, as well as among Mortals, do not grant their Favours in the Eyes of the World. This is without doubt the Reason, which makes you speak with so much reserve. A Lover less chaste than you, would not have had so much Respect; and it is to your own good Manners, rather than to my Instruction, that you owe this Modesty (8)." This Translation is repugnant to the Original, and inconsistent with itself; for, should we suppose, that Apollo did not express himself grossly, but modestly and chastely, Chiron's Answer is ridiculous and contradictory. The Event was, that Apollo enjoyed Cyrene, without delay, and transported her into Africa.

(8) Notes on the Aristæus of Virgil, translated into French, and printed at Lyons, in 1668, pag. 28, 29.

Ὡκεία δ' ἐπαγομένην ἦδ' ὁθεὺς πρᾶξις, ἰδοὶ τε βραχεῖαι.
κεῖνο κιν' ἄμαρ διαίτα-σεν. Σαλαμὸς δὲ μίγην ἐν πολυχρύσῳ Λιβύας (9).

(9) Pindar. Od. 9. Pyth. pag. 443.

Celer autem est properantium jam Deorum ætio, viasque breves. Illud illa dies peregit. In thalamo autem Libyæ divite auri congressi sunt.

Chiron would have had him say tender things to her, and proceed in a way of honourable Love; but, as Pindar observes, the Gods of the Poets could not away with delays; they dispatched Matters in a trice; they went the shortest Way to work; they boarded briskly, and enjoyed either by fair, or by foul Means. They took the Romance by the tail (10), and said, with Boreas in Love, Apta mihi vis est (11).

By Force and Violence I chiefly lie.

CROXAL.
Cyrene

(10) Compare with this the 4th Scen of the Precieuses Ridicules.

(11) Ovid. Metam. lib. 6. ver. 690.

That be invented the Secret of extracting Honey, making Oyl, and Cheese [B]. There are several other Things, which should have been said concerning This Son of Apollo; it should have been observed, that he was born in That Part of Lybia, where the City of Cyrene was built; that he was brought up by the Nymphs; that, having taken a Journey to Thebes, he there married Autonoë, the Daughter of Cadmus; that he had by Her Aëxon, who was torn in Pieces by his own Dogs; that, after the Death of This Son, he consulted the Oracle of Apollo; that, upon the Strength of the Answer, which was given him, concerning the Honours he should receive in the Island of Cea, he made a Voyage thither [C]: That, a Plague ravaging all Greece, he offered Sacrifices, which put a stop to it; that, leaving his Family in the Island of Cea, he re-passed into Lybia; from whence he sailed with the Fleet, which his Mother had

- (12) Virgil. Georgic. lib. 4. ver. 355. See also Servius, on ver. 317.
- (13) Hygin. cap. 161.
- (14) Schol. Apoll. in lib. 2. Argon. v. 502.
- (15) Frischlin. in Callimach. Hymn. 2, pag. 397. Edit. Ultraj. 1697.
- (16) Apoll. Argon. lib. 2, ver. 502. & seq.
- (17) Diod. Sicul. lib. 4, cap. 83, pag. 167.
- (18) Pindar. Od. 9. Pyth. pag. 441.
- (19) Schol. Apoll. Argon. lib. 2, ver. 500.
- (20) Apoll. ibid. lib. 4, ver. 1218. mentions a Temple of Apollo Nomius.
- (21) Benedictus, in Pindarum ubi supra, pag. 442.
- (22) Plut. in Amator. p. 757.
- (23) Scholiast. Apoll. in lib. 2. ver. 509.
- (24) Apoll. Argon. 1. 4. ver. 512, &c.
- (25) Id. ib. ver. 1132.
- Cyrene* conceived, and brought our Aristeus into the World. Observe, that Virgil (12) and Hyginus (13), who make her the Daughter of Peneus, follow an Ancient Tradition in this (14). Wherefore we may say, that Frischlinus was much in the wrong to blame Boccace, and to be ignorant of what They had affirmed. "Constat non recte scripsisse Bocatium, l. 7. Geneal. c. 28. dum asserit Cyrenem Penei fuisse filiam (15). — Boccace was certainly mistaken, in asserting, that Cyrene was the Daughter of Peneus." Apollonius supposes, that she was a Shepherdess, and had resolved to lead a single Life, but that Apollo, who carried her away by force, would not suffer her to preserve her Virginity (16). [B] He invented the Secret of extracting Honey, making of Oyl, and Cheese. Diodorus Siculus relates, that Aristeus, having learnt of the Nymphs, who nursed him, the Art of curdling Milk, and making Bee-hives, and cultivating Olive-Trees, was the first, who communicated these three Inventions to Men. The Conventions, which they received thereby filled them with so great Acknowledgment, that they paid the same Divine Honours to Him, as they did to Bacchus. This Historian adds, that the Nymphs imposed three Names on him, That of Nomius, That of Aristeus, and That of Agreus (17). This agrees well enough with Pindar (18). But observe, that he says, that the Hours and the Earth, to whom Mercury carried this Infant, fed him with Nectar and Ambrosia: Others say, that Aristeus, having invented the making of Honey, and Oyl, in the Island of Cea, and having caused the Winds, which are called Etesian, to blow, was surnamed Jupiter Aristeus (19), and Apollo Agreus, and Nomius (20). The Surname of Nomius suited him (21), because of the Care he took of his Herds; and That of Agreus was proper, because he applied himself to Hunting. The following is a curious Authority for this Interpretation: They, who take Wolves and Bears in Traps and Gins, put up Prayers to Aristeus, because he was the first, who invented the Art of taking them with Snares, and running Nooses. It is a Passage of Plutarch. This is the Original. Εὐχόμενοι δὲ Ἀριστέω δοῦναι ὅπρ' ὀρύγματος καὶ βροχίοις λύκους καὶ ἀρκυίς, ὅς παρ' ὅτ' Ἰσσεύοντι ἐπὶ τῇ ποδ' ὀρύγματος (22). Aristeo vota faciunt siveis adis, aut laqueis possit, qui lupis aut uris insidiantur, ille feris primus pedicatus quia tendere cepit. The Scholiast of Apollonius does not explain the Etymology of these two Names after this manner. He founds That of Nomius on Cyrene's having to do with Apollo, while she was a Shepherdess, and That of Agreus on the Act being performed in the Fields. He adds, that, according to others, the Etymology came from Aristeus's teaching the Shepherds the Art of Tilling and Manuring the Ground. Ἀγρία καὶ νόμιον, τὸ μὲν, ὅτι ἐν ἀγρῶ ἐμύζον τῇ μητρὶ αὐτῷ ὁ Ἀπόλλων. νόμιον δὲ, ὅτι νεμύει ἐμύζον. ὁ δὲ, ὅτι τὴν κατὰ τὰς ἀγρὰς θεωρεῖται τοῖς νομίσις ἐισπνήσας (23). The Passage, where Apollonius says, that the Inhabitants of Thebessy gave these two Surnames to Aristeus, contains Particulars, which deserve to be produced here. We there find, that Aristeus was brought up in Cbiron's Cave, and that, when he was come to Age of Maturity, the Muses gave him a Wife, and taught him Physic, and the Science of Divination, and let him over all their Flocks (24). We find, in another Passage of the same Poet, that he invented Honey, and Oyl (25). He hints, in Virgil, that the Pains he had taken in perfecting Agriculture, and feeding of Cattle, had procured him all the Glory he enjoyed.

Quem mihi vix frugum & pecudum custodia solers Omnia tentanti extuderat, te matre relinquo (26).

Left are the Honours; of my Herd and Plough Honours, which scarce my utmost Toils allow;
So wretched is thy Son, so hard a Mother Thou.

He is one of the Deities, whom Virgil invokes, when he undertakes to write on Agriculture.

— et cultor Nemorum, cui pingua Cææ
Ter centum nivei tondent dumeta juvenci (27).

And Thou, for whom the Cæan Shore sustains
The milky Herds, that graze the flowry Plains.

DRYDEN.

Oppian (28), Nonnus (29), the Scholiast of Pindar, and Apollonius, &c. all agree, in making him the Inventor of Those Things, which I have specified. Some Passages on the same Subject will occur below. The following is One of them, in which the City of Athens is made the Place of his Birth. Oleum & trapetas Aristeus Atheniensis. Idem mella (30). By trapetas are to be understood the Mills for squeezing the Olives (31). Let us not forget, that he invented the Aromatic Gum Benjamin. This is asserted by an Ancient Author, quoted by the Scholiast of Aristophanes (32), as you may see in the Three Hundred and Fifty sixth Page of Salmastus's Commentary on Solinus.

Note, that Justin (33) relates, that Cyrene, being got with Child by Apollo, a Deo repleta, had four Sons, Nomius, Aristeus, Autobocus, and Argæus (34). This is making of the two Surnames of Aristeus two Men (35).

[C] He made a Voyage to the Island of Cea. The Greek of Diodorus Siculus is ἐς Κῶ νῆσον; and a little after, ἐν τῇ Κῳ. Rhodomani translates it in Co insulam, and in Co. This rendering puzzles the Readers for it inclines him to believe, that the Greek Historian is speaking of the Island of Cos, the Country of the great Hippocrates, and not of the Island of Cea, as other Authors do, when they speak of Aristeus. However, we may be certain, that he means the Island of Cea, whether it be necessary to correct the Text, by putting Κῆω, instead of Κῳ (36), or that the Rules of Contraction allow us indifferently to make use of Κῳ or Κῆω, in speaking of This Island (37). Let us take notice of these Words of Diodorus; παρὰ τῶν Κῆων τιμαῖς, de honoribus apud Ceos (38). They shew plainly, that he does not design to speak of the Island of Cos. However, let us produce some Authors, who have affirmed, that Aristeus settled in the Island of Cea; and let us begin with the Commentator Servius, on these Words of Virgil — et cultor nemorum, cui pingua Cææ, &c.

cited above (39). "Aristeum invocatur, id est Apollinis & Cyrenes filium — hic (ut etiam Sallustius docet) post lanitium à canibus Actæonem filium Thebas reliquit, & Ceam insulam tenuit primo ad huc hominibus vacuum (40). — He invokes Aristeus, i. e. the Son of Apollo and Cyrene. — This Aristeus (as Sallust also informs us) after his Son Actæon was torn in pieces by Dogs, left Thebes, and took possession of the Island of Cea, which, till then, had been uninhabited." Apollonius informs us, that Aristeus, being sent for by the Inhabitants of the Cyclades, to put a stop to the Plague, went from Thebessy into the Island of Cea.

(26) Virgil. Georg. lib. 4. ver. 326.

(27) Id. ib. lib. 1. v. 14.

(28) Oppian. Cyneg. l. 4.

(29) Nonnus. Dionys. l. 5.

(30) Plin. l. 7. c. 56. p. 99.

(31) Varro de Ling. Lat. l. 4. p. 34.

(32) Aristophanes. παρὰ τῶν Κῆων τιμαῖς, ὅτι ἐν τῇ Κῳ ἔστιν ἡ πόλις ἡ Κῆος, ὅτι ἐν τῇ Κῳ ἔστιν ἡ πόλις ἡ Κῆος, ὅτι ἐν τῇ Κῳ ἔστιν ἡ πόλις ἡ Κῆος.

(33) Justin. lib. 13. c. 7.

(34) It should be read Agreus.

(35) See Vossius de Theolog. Gentil. lib. 7, cap. 10, pag. 350.

(36) It is the Opinion of Voss. ubi supra.

(37) And not, apud Ceos, as Rhodomani has translated it.

(38) It is the Opinion of Salmastus in Solinus, pag. 144.

(39) Citations (27).

(40) Servius in Georg. lib. 1, v. 14.

had given him, to Sardinia [D]; that he fixed upon an Habitation there; that he cultivated This Country with great Care; that he banished Barbarity from thence, and civilized the Place; that he visited some other Islands; that the plentiful Harvests, and vast Stocks of Cattle, induced him to stay some time in Sicily; where he taught his rare Secrets to the Inhabitants; that, by way of Acknowledgment, they honoured him as a God, especially Those, who cultivated Olive-Trees; that, at last, he went into Thrace; that he was admitted there by Bacchus into the Mysteries of the Orgies; and that, by his Familiarity with That God, he learnt many things, which were useful to human Life; that, having lived there, some time, near Mount Hemus, he disappeared; and that not only the Barbarous People of the Country, but the very Greeks instituted to him Divine Honours (b). Mr Moreri fallily observes, that Diodorus Siculus mentions another Aristeus, in the Eighty fourth Chapter of the Fourth Book; for That Chapter, and the preceeding, contain what I have now delivered. I am surprized, that we meet with nothing there concerning Arcadia, which was one of the principal Stations of Aristeus [E]. In the Remarks, you will find the different Opinions of Authors, the Impertinence of some Cenfures, with other Particulars; nor shall I omit the Astronomical Discovery, which is ascribed to Aristeus [F]; nor his worshipping the Dog-Star; nor his Daughter Macris

(b) Taken from Diodorus Siculus, lib. 4. cap. 33, 34.

(41) Apoll. Argon. lib. 2. ver. 522.

Λίπερ δ' ὅγε πατρὸς ἐφελμῇ
φθίνω, ἐν δὲ Κῶν καλ' ἐνάσσατο λαὸν ἀείεργς Παρθίων (41).

*Commanded by his Sire, the Son obey'd,
And, leaving Phthia, the Parthians led To Cea's Isle.*

(42) Schol. Apoll. in lib. 2. ver. 500.

The Scholiast on this Poet affirms, as I have already observed, that Aristeus taught the Art of making Honey, and Oyl, in the same Island. Ἀριστὺς δὲ ἐν τῇ Κῶ εὖρον τὰ μελισσορικὰ πρῶτος καὶ τὴν τε ἑλαιο καλ' ἐρπασίαν (42). We shall see, in the Remark [F], that he established there the Worship of the Dog-Star. Varrus Atacinus relates, in his Poem of the Argonauts, that, a great Mortality among the Cattle afflicting That Island, Aristeus went thither, by Apollo's Direction, and delivered it from That Calamity, after he had sacrificed to Jupiter Icmæus. The Winds, and Heats, which occasioned the Mortality, ceased. After Aristeus's Death, the Inhabitants of the Island of Cea obeyed an Oracle, which commanded them to place him in the Number of the Gods, and called him Nomius and Agræus, because of the Service he had done them, by his Industry in feeding their Flocks, and manuring their (43) Voss. de Theol. Gentil. lib. 7. cap. 10. pag. 350.

Lands (43). Be not surprized, to find, in this Place, that he caused the Mortality to cease, by calming the Winds; and to find, hereafter, that he caused it to cease, by raising the Winds; for thus ancient Traditions are contrived; one confutes, what the other affirms; one forgets the only Particular, which the other remembers. A complete Narrative might have informed us, that, by changing the Wind, he restored Health; but They, who knew not how to express the whole, observed only, that the Wind ceased; you must not expect the rest; or, perhaps, that the Wind rose; you are to know no more of it; they will not inform you, that the pestilential Wind ceased, and the healthy succeeded. The Correction, which I have read in Salmafus, of a Passage in Heraclides, seems to me an happy one; in the mean while I would not swear, that it is not said in the Original, that the Pestilence in the Island of Cea proceeded from the Wind. φθορὰς οὐρανὸς οὐλὴν καὶ ζωὴν διὰ τὸ πνεῦν ἑσέσιος (44). A Plague happening on Plants and Animals, occasioned by the Etesian Winds. Salmafus corrects the Passage thus. Δία ἡρώατο τὸ πνεῦν ἑσέσιος (45). He prayed to Jupiter, that the Etesian Winds might blow. Which agrees with what I shall observe in the Remark [F].

(44) Heraclides, de Politicis, pag. 20.

(45) Salmaf. in Solin. pag. 144.

(46) Diod. Siculus, lib. 4. cap. 84.

(47) Pausan. lib. 10. pag. 332. See likewise Silius Italicus, lib. 12. pag. 498.

(48) Id. ib.

[D] He sailed - - - towards Sardinia.] Diodorus Siculus says, that he settled in the Island of Cea, after the Death of Altheon, and afterwards went into Lybia, and from thence to Sardinia (46); but others pretend, that his Grief for the Death of Altheon gave him such a Disaffection to Bæotia, and the rest of Greece, that he went to reside in foreign Countries (47). They say, it was then, that he led a Colony into Sardinia. It is said, that Dædalus, having made his Escape from the Island of Crete, joined him in conducting this Colony (48); but Chronology refutes this invincibly. Dædalus was Contemporaneous with Oedi- pus, King of Thebes (49); he could not, therefore, be concerned with Aristeus, the Son-in-law of Cadmus. However it be, Accounts differ greatly. Pausanias says, that a Company of Lybians had settled themselves in Sardinia, and incorporated with the Natives of the Country, before Aristeus came thither; but Aristotle relates, that Aristeus was the first, who cultivated That Island; and that, before his Time, it served only as a Dwelling to great Numbers of monstrous Birds (50). Consult Bechart, who maintains, that This Voyage of Aristeus is a Fable (51).

[E] Arcadia. — was one of the principal Stations of Aristeus.] For This reason Virgil gives him the Epithet Arcadius, where he mentions the Invention of hiving new Bees:

Tempus & Arcadii memoranda inventa Magistri
Pandere, quoque modo caesis jam sæpe juvenis Infincerus apes tulit cruer (52).

*'Tis time to touch the Precepts of an Art,
Th' Arcadian Master did of old impart;
And how he flock'd his empty Hives again,
Renew'd with putrid Gore of Oxen slain.*

DRYDEN.

This Art was an Invention of Aristeus, and caused him to be honoured as a God in Arcadia. "Poët cā (Cea) relicta, cum Dædalo ad Sardiniam transiit fecit. Huic opinioni Pindarus refragatur, qui eum ait de Cea insula in Arcadiam migrasse, ibique vitam coluisse. Nam apud Arcadas pro Jove cultur, quod primus offenderit qualiter apes debeant reparari (53). — Afterwards, leaving this Island (Cea), he passed over with Dædalus to Sardinia. Pindar contradicts this Opinion, who says, that he passed from the Island Cea to Arcadia, and there resided. For the Arcadians worship him as Jupiter; because he first taught the Art of repairing the loss of Bees." Justin gives Aristeus a large Kingdom in Arcadia: I shall quote his Words in the following Remark. It is not true, what Mr Lloyd affirms, that Apollonius makes Aristeus go from Arcadia to the Island of Cea. He has copied this Mistake from Salmafus (54).

[F] The Astronomical Discovery, which was ascribed to Aristeus.] If we consider Justin's Words only superficially, we may be induced to think, that he ascribes the first Discovery of the Solstices to Aristeus; but They, who read him with attention, will easily perceive, that he speaks of the rising of the Dog-Star. "Aristeus in Arcadia late regnasse, eumque primum & apium & mellis usum & lactis ad coagula hominibus tradidisse, Solstitialisque ortus sideris primum invenisse (55). — Aristeus reigned over all Arcadia; and was the first, who taught Mankind the use of Bees, Honey, and Cheese, and discovered the rising of the Dog-Star." The most learned Critics have observed, that it should either be read Solstitialisque ortus Sideris, or Solstitialisque ortus Sideris (56). Either of these two Readings mean the Dog-Star, as they pretend. It is certain, that This Star had a particular relation to our Aristeus.

(49) Id. ib.

(50) Aristot. de Mirab. Auscult. pag. 281. Oper. Tom. 1.

(51) Bochart. Geograph. sacro. Part. II. lib. 1. cap. 31. pag. 632, 633.

(52) Virgil. Georg. lib. 4. ver. 283.

(53) Servius in Georg. Virg. lib. 1. ver. 14.

(54) Salmaf. in Solin. p. 99.

(55) Justin. lib. 13. cap. 7. pag. 313, 314.

(56) See the Justin, Varronius, or Mr. Grevius, on this Passage.

(6) See the Commentary of Germanicus, in Aratea Phenomena, cap. de Aquario, pag. 118.

Macris [G]. It has been said, that, in reward for the Services he had done Man-kind by his Knowledge of all the useful Arts, the Gods placed him among the Stars, and that he was the Aquarius of the Zodiac (c). The Conformity of his History with That of Moses has been curiously and learnedly shewn by Huetius (d). Al-moſt all that Lloyd has added to Charles Stephens, on this Article, he has taken Word for Word from the Commentary of de la Cerda (e) ; yet without quoting him.

(d) Huetius, Demonſtr. Evang. Prop. IV. cap. 8. n. 17. pag. 110.
(e) In lib. 4. Georgic. Virgili.

The Foundation of it was this. The Heats of the Dog-Days had laid waste the Cyclades, and produced a Plague, which the Natives intreated Arifteus to put a stop to. Upon which, he went into the Island of Cea, and, causing an Altar to be built to Jupiter, offered Sacrifices to That God : He offered likewise Sacrifices to the pestilential Star, and established an anniversary Worship of it. This produced a very good Effect ; for from thence the Etesian Winds took their Original ; Winds, which continue for forty Days, and which temper the Heat of the Summer :

Καὶ βαμὼν ποίνετο μέγαν διδὸς ἱκεταίοιο.
Ἰσὰρ τ' εὖ ἔρραξεν ἐν ἔρεσιν ἀνέτα κείνῳ
Σειρίῳ, ἀντὶ τὴν κεγνίδῃ διί. τοιο δ' ἔκπλῃ
Γαίαν ἱκετεύοντι ἐτήσιοι ἐν διδὸς αὐτοῖς
Ἡμέλα τασσαράκοντα. Κῆρ δ' ἔτι τῶν ἱερῆς
Ἀρ' ὀλέων περσάγειθε κυνὸς ῥέζουσι θυνάδας (57).

(57) Apoll. lib. 2. Ar-gon v. 524.

To Jove, the God, who bids the Dew descend,
An Altar on the Mountain's Brow be raised.
To Sirius, then, and Saturn's Son be pray'd.
Etesian Gales hence fan the glowing Earth ;
And hence, 'er Sirius lifts his scorching Rays,
The Coan Priests the sacred Rites perform.

Diodorus Siculus does not expressly enough declare, that the Etesian Winds were the Effect of Arifteus's Sacrifices (58). He seems to say, that, this Sacrifice having been made about the beginning of the Dog-Star, which falls in with the Season of The Etesian Winds, the Plague ceased. But it is certain, he pre-tends, that the raging Heat of That Star was abated by the religious Acts performed by Arifteus. He finds matter of Wonder in it, that the same Person, whose Son was torn to pieces by Dogs, should correct the Malignity of a Star, which is called the Dog. I leave out his Greek, and give only the Translation of Rhodomus. Singularem banc rerum conversionem, si quis penitus examinet, merito demiretur. Qui enim filium a canibus disceptum vidit, is caeleste fidem canis nomine appellatum, quod hominibus exitium adferre putatur, mitigavit, et mortalibus non paucis auditor salutis exiitit (59). Other Authors say, in plain and express Terms, that Arifteus's Devotions were the Cause of these Winds. "Canicula exoriens aestu

(58) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 4. cap. 84.

(59) Id. ib. pag. 268.

(60) So it should be read, and not eorum. See Salmat. in Solin. p. 144.

(61) Hygin. Poet. Astron. lib. 2. cap. 4. pag. 365.

(62) Schol. Apoll. in lib. 2. ver. 500.

(63) Germanicus in Aratea Phenomena. In Aquar. p. 118, 119.

(64) Apoll. lib. 2. ver. 528. you will find his Words, above, Citat. (57).

μοβήτῃσθε γὰρ τοῖς κώοις (read κείνοις) κατ' ἐν-αυλὸν μεθ' ὅπλων ἐπιπλεῖν τὴν ἐπὶ ὀλὸν τῷ κυ-νός, καὶ θύειν αὐτῷ (65). Cicero says, that they expected to foresee, by observing This Planet, whether the Year would prove healthful, or not. Ceas accipi-mus ortum caniculæ diligenter quotannis solere servare, conjecturamque capere, ut scribit Ponticus Heracli-des, salubrisne an pestilens annus futurus sit (66). Manilius imputes the same to the Cilicians (67). I know not whether the Inhabitants of Calabria, who offered up Vows to This Star, borrowed This Act of Religion, mediately or immediately, from Arifteus :

— sic cum stabulis & messibus ingens

Ira deum & Calabri populator Sirius arvi
Incubuit, coit agreflum manus inficia priscum
In nemos, & miseris dictat pia vota Sacerdos (68).

So when the Dog-Star o'er Calabria reigns,
And parches with excessive Heat her Plains,
The stupid Peasants, struck with annual Fear, Assembled in some ancient Groove appear ;
In superstitious Rites they pass the Day,
And, as the Priest directs, the Wretches pray.

What Superstition ! and yet This was not the most extravagant in Paganism. By the way, the Passage of Justin, which I have cited in the beginning of this Remark, will furnish us with an Incident here. Mr Faber thought himself the first, who understood it. "Justin, says he, does not pretend to say, that "Arifteus taught the use of Milk ; That would have "been contrary to Truth, and all Antiquity ; he "speaks only of the Art of curdling Milk : Sed "ostendisse hominibus qua arte coagulum ex lacte con-fici conformarique posset (69). Neither does he "pretend, that Arifteus invented the use of Honey ; "Milk and Honey served to nourish the greatest of "the Gods. Nam Jupiter, pater ille hominumque "Deumque, melle nutritus est & lacte (70). He "speaks, then, of the Art of curdling Milk with Ho-ney." Ergo aliud docuit Arifteus, scilicet coagu-lum fieri ex mixtura, seu, ut Græci vocant, cramate mellis & lactis. Hunc locum a nemine batienus intel-lectum arbitror (71). This Explanation seems to me very ingenious ; but the Reason, on which it is ground-ed, prove too much ; for, if the ancient Tradition con-cerning the Food, with which Jupiter was nourished during his Infancy, prevented Justin from saying, that Arifteus taught Men the use of Honey, he would not have affirmed, that Gargoris, King of the Cynetes (72), or Cunetes, was the first Inventor of Honey ; and yet he has said so plainly, and without leaving room to give two different Senses to his Words ; Quorum (Cunetum) Rex vetustissimus Gargoris mellis colligendi usum primus invenit (73). It cannot, I think, be pretended, that Justin paid such a Regard to poetical Traditions, that he was cautious of advancing things, which confuse them. A great Number of Authors have said, that Arifteus invented Honey ; their Words imply so much expressly, and cannot admit of this Signification, be invented a Mixture of Honey and Milk, which formed a Curd. It may reason-ably, then, be concluded, that Justin meant as They did, and that he considered not what the Poets had said concerning Jupiter's Milk and Honey. Observe, by the way, that Arifteus's Inventions consisted some-times in Mixtures ; for he was the first, who taught the Thracians to mix Honey with Wine. Arifteum primum omnium in eadem gente mel miscuisse vino, suavitatis præcipua utriusque naturæ sponte proveni-entis (74).

[G] His Daughter Macris.] Very few Authors mention her ; but This is Apollonius's Account of her (75). It was She, who set little Bacchus upon her knee, after Mercury had rescued him from the Flames ; and it was she, who fed him with Honey. She lived at that time in the Center of the Island of Eubœa ; she exposed herself to the Indignation of Juno, by the good

(65) Schol. Apollon. in lib. 2. ver. 528.

(66) Cicero, de Divinat. l. 1. cap. 57.

(67) Manil. Astronom. lib. 1. p. 13.

(68) Valer. Flaccus, Argon. lib. 1. ver. 682.

(69) Tanaq. Faber. Not. in Justin. l. 13. cap. 7.

(70) Id. ib.

(71) Id. ib.

(72) A People of Spain.

(73) Justin. lib. 44. c. 4.

(74) Plin. l. 14. c. 4. pag. 127.

(75) Apoll. Argon l. 4. ver. 1131, & seq.

good Offices she performed to This Child, and was forced to leave the Country, and hide herself in a Cave, in the Island of the Phœaciæ, where she was a great Benefactress to the Inhabitants.

— Καὶ ὡρὴν δ' ἄλκον ἀδίσφατον, ἰνναῖσιν.

(76) Id. ib.
ver. 1140.

Et infinitis insularios opibus beavit (76).

ARISTEUS, the Geometrician, lived before Euclid, and composed Works, which met with Esteem. See, below, a fine Passage of Pappus [A].

[A] A fine Passage of Pappus. I term it so, because it informs us of a very curious Particular relating to Euclid; which is, that this great Geometrician, (contrary to what Apollonius Pergæus had alleged) out of respect to Aristeus, and having a particular Esteem for All, who had contributed to the Improvement of the Mathematical Sciences, would not seem to be more expert in the Knowledge of Conics than He. I have taken Notice of this before (1). Let us produce the Words of Pappus. "Aristeus

(1) In Remark (D) of the Article APOLLONIUS (PERGÆUS), Citat. (31).

ARISTEAS, the Proconnesian. Mr Moreri, contenting himself with telling us, that he lived in the Time of Cyrus [A], and, that he composed the History of the Arimaspians, and a Treatise of the Origin of the Gods, the whole filled with Fables [B], has omitted what was most singular in This Article. Let us therefore supply it as follows, and say, That This Aristeas, dying in his own Country (a), was seen, the very same Day, and Hour, reading Lectures in Sicily. This Prodigy being several times renewed, and during several Years, obliged the Sicilians to build a Temple, and offer Sacrifices, to Him (b). Herodotus has spoken at large of this Miracle [C]. Pliny relates, that, in the Island of Proconessus, the Soul of

(a) The Island of Proconessus in the Propontia.

(2) Pappus, in Proconessus Mathematicæ Collect.

(b) Taken from Apollonius Dyscolus Histor. Comment. cap. 2.

[A] He lived in the Time of Cyrus.] This is proved by the Testimony of Suidas. Note, that Cyrus began to reign in Persia in the LVth Olympiad. Vossius infers from hence, that Suidas, in saying, on the one side, that Aristeas flourished in the Lth Olympiad, and, on the other, that This was in the Time of Cyrus, has not observed exactness (1). The Anonymous Author, who has settled the Olympiads, places Aristeas in the Lth. This does not agree with what others have said; viz. that Homer was his Disciple (2). Tatian makes him later than Homer (3), and was censured for it by Vossius, as too favourable, in this Point, to the Good Cause, to wit, that Homer's Age was considerably later than That of Moses (4). This Censure seems to me to be but weakly founded; for Tatian might justly make use of a Tradition, which was established among the Pagans. It has been said, we see, that our Aristeas was the Preceptor of Homer; and we read, in Herodotus, that Aristeas appeared in the World, three Ages after he had composed a Poem (5); so that it was not agreed, that he flourished in the Time of Cyrus. Observe, that Herodotus was born in the first Year of the LXXIVth Olympiad, and that he does not mention this last Appearance of Aristeas as a thing which had lately happened; but on the contrary, intimates, that the Tradition of the Metapontines, concerning this Adventure, was of long standing; for he does not say, that they marked the Time of it.

(1) Voss. de Hist. Græc. lib. 4. cap. 2. pag. 433.

(2) Strab. lib. 14. pag. 439.

(3) Tatian. Orat. ad Græcos, apud Voss. lib. 1. cap. 1. pag. 7.

(4) Voss. ib. pag. 6.

(5) Herod. lib. 4. c. 14.

[B] The whole filled with Fables.] Aulus Gellius relates, that, being at Brundisium, he saw several Bales of Books exposed to sale, and that he was permitted to purchase as many as he pleased at a low Price; that They were all the Works of Greek Authors, who had collected several surprizing and incredible Fables; as Aristeas, Ifigonius, Ctesias, Onesicritus, Polytæbanus, and Hegesias; that he bought several of them; out of which he made several Extracts, which he inserted in his Work. Fastes librorum venalium expositos vidimus. Atque ego avidè statim pergo ad libros. Erant autem isti omnes libri Græci miraculorum fabularumque pleni: res inauditæ, incredulæ: scriptores veteres non parvæ auctoritatis, Aristæas Proconnesius, & Ifigonius Nicæensis, & Ctesias, & Onesicritus, & Polytæbanus, & Hegesias. Ipsa autem volumina ex diutino situ squallebant, & habitu adspiciendi tetro erant. Accipis mira atque insperata precium sum: & adducis mira atque insperata villatæ, libros plurimos ære paucis emo; eoque omnes duabus proximis noctibus cursum transeo: atque in legendo

Let us conclude from hence, that Aristeas, Uncle-in-Law to Bacchus (77), was much elder than Bacchus himself. This does not confuse what Diodorus Siculus says concerning the Admission of Aristeas into the Orgies, &c. nor, what others suppose, that he commanded some Troops in Bacchus's Army (78); for Order requires, that the Superiority should ever belong to a Son of Jupiter, tho' the Younger Person.

(77) He was the Husband of Autonoe, Sister of the Mother of Bacchus.

(78) Nonimus, Dionysiacor. lib. 13.

"tradita sunt solidorum libros quinque, conicis coherentes vocavit ---- Euclides autem secutus "Aristeum scriptorem luculentum in iis quæ de "conicis tradiderat, neque anteverens, neque volens "eorum tractationem destruere, cum mitissimus "esset & benignus erga omnes, præterit eos qui "mathematicas disciplinas aliqua ex parte augere " & amplificare possent, ut par est, & nullo modo "inensus sed accuratus, non arrogans velut hic " (Apollonius Pergæus) quantum offendi potui de " loco per ejus conica memoriæ prodidit (2).

carpsi exinde quædam, & notavi mirabilia & scriptoribus fere nostris intentata; eaque his commentariis adpersi (6). The rest of this Chapter of Aulus Gellius is full of Chimerical Narrations, which he had read in Those Authors, or in Pliny. You are to know, that the History of the Arimaspians, composed by Aristeas, was a Poem (7). You will perhaps say, how do we know but the Author wrote it without intending it should be taken for Truth? Aristeas had no such Intention. Why do we not judge of the Ancient Poets, as of Him in this Point? I reply, that Aristeas had no Intention of diverting his Readers with Reports, which he designed should be looked upon as Fables, because his Aim, in these Stories, was to cure the Incrediblety he had observed in the People. No One believed he was a Philosopher; and the Reason was, because he denied having ever been instructed (8). He removed this objection, by pretending, that his Soul had left his Body, and that, taking its flight towards Heaven, it had surveyed all the Greek and Barbarian Countries, and finished its Course in the Hyperborean Climates. He boasted to have, by this means, discovered the Situation of Places, the Customs of the Inhabitants, the natural Qualities of the Elements, &c. and also to have observed the Heavens more exactly, than the Earth. Was not this producing his Tales as so many credential Letters? Did he not, by this, endeavour to establish an Authority, which should give credit to every thing else he had to say? He must, then, have proposed these Facts as true. And they were received as such; for more Credit was given to This Man, than to those Philosophers, who dogmatized without any disguise (9). Note, that Dionysius Halicarnassensis observes, that it was not universally believed, that our Aristeas was Author of the Books, which went under his Name (10).

(6) Aulus Gellius, lib. 9. cap. 4. pag. 229. Note, that Huetius, in Demonst. Evangel.

(7) Prop. 9. cap. 14. pag. 103. cites this Passage of Aulus Gellius, as importing, that what had been said of Aristæus was false. This is not the Thought of Aulus Gellius.

(8) Herodot. lib. 4. c. 13. 14. Strabo, lib. 1. pag. 15. & l. 13. pag. 405.

(9) Max. Tyrius, Differt. 22. pag. 223.

(10) Id. ibid. pag. 224.

[C] Herodotus has spoken at large of this Miracle.] This is the Sum of his Relation. Aristeas, one of the chief Men of the Island of Proconessus, went one Day into a Fuller's House, and died there. The Fuller shut up his Doors, and went and informed Aristeas's Relations of his Death. This News was soon spread all over the City; but, whilst this was the common Discourse, there came one, who affirmed, that he had met Aristeas going to Cyzicus (11), and that he had spoken with him. His Relations went to the Fuller's House, with Necessaries for his Funeral, but found him not, either dead, or alive. He appeared at the end of seven Years, and composed the Poem of the Arimaspians; after which

(11) Dionys. Halicarn. in judicio de Thucyd. cap. 25. pag. 384.

(12) According to Plutarch, in Romulo, pag. 35, there were, who affirm, that they saw him on the Road to Crotona.

(c) Plin. lib. 7. cap. 52. pag. 85.
(d) Strabo, lib. 13. pag. 405.
(e) See Remark [B].
(f) Longin. τῆς ὑπερβολῆς, §. 9. p. 20.
(g) Tzetzes chil. 7. Hist. pag. 144.
See Catull. on Athenæus, lib. 1. pag. 13.

Aristeas was seen to come out of his Mouth, in the Shape of a Raven (c). Others say, that his Soul went in and out of his Body at Pleasure [D]. Strabo makes This Aristeas one of the greatest Sorcerers that ever was (d). Some say, that, to overcome the Incredulity of the People, with Regard to his Doctrine, he persuaded them, that his Soul had travelled into several Countries, separate from his Body (e). Six of his Verses are found in the Treatise of Longinus (f). Some others are found in the Chiliads of Tzetzes (g). He is twice cited in Pausanias (h). By the way, They, who pretend, that he was not quite dead, when his Soul was travelling (i), do not much lessen the Wonderfulness of the Prodigy. It is unnecessary to observe, that Plutarch laughed at this fine Story (k). Gyraldus has been guilty of some Mistakes [E].

(h) Pausanias lib. 1. p. 224 & lib. 5. p. 84. 154.

(i) Maximus Tyrius, Orat. 28. p. 282.

(k) Plut. in Romulo, p. 35.

he disappeared. Two or three Ages after, he shewed himself to the Inhabitants of Metapontus (12), and commanded them to build an Altar to Apollo, and to erect a Statue, near it, in honour of Aristeas the Proconnesian. He told them, that they were the only Italians, whom Apollo had honoured with a Visit, and that he had accompanied him in That Journey, not in the Shape of Aristeas, but in That of a Raven; and, having said this, he disappeared. The Metapontines enquired of the Oracle at Delphi what this meant: They were answered, that they would do well to obey; accordingly they executed his Orders (13). The Historian testifies, that, in his Time, there was a Statue of Aristeas in the Market-Place of Metapontus, near the Altar of Apollo, surrounded with Laurel Trees. Let us add to this a Fact reported by Athenæus. After the return of Aristeas (14), the Metapontines dedicated a brazen Laurel to Apollo. This Laurel having spoken, at the Time when a Dancer of Thessaly approached the Market-Place of Metapontus, the Soothsayers, who were present, were immediately seized with such Fury, that they tore the Woman in Pieces. Note, that he had received a sacred Present from Philemelus, which was a golden Crown of Laurel; which the Inhabitants of Lampascus had consecrated in the Temple of Delphi (15).

Note also, that Aeneas Gazæus, citing the Narrative of Herodotus, adds this Circumstance; that the Sacrifices of the Metapontines were esteemed to belong in common to Apollo and Aristeas, as two Deities (16). Origen observes, that Apollo commanded This Aristeas to be honoured as a God by the Inhabitants of Metapontus (17). Meursius pretends, that Athenagoras reproached the Pagans with having honoured Aristeas in the Island of Cbio, and with having taken him for the same God as Apollo and Jupiter (18). Xiōi Ἀερίσαν τὸν αὐτὸν καὶ Δία καὶ Ἀπολλῶν νομίζουσιν (19). Cbio Aristeam, quem & Jovem arbitrantur & Apollinem. Huetius imagines, with much probability, that, instead Xiōi, it should be read Xéioi, and that the Passage relates to Aristeus, the Son of Apollo and Cyrene (20); for this latter was worshipped in the Island of Cea (21). Suffridus understands the Passage of Athenagoras of this latter (22). Huetius shews, that ARISTEUS and ARISTEAS have been often mistaken one for the other (23).

They, who will have all Romances founded on some true Story, may suppose, that Aristeas, having counterfeited the dead Man in the Fuller's House, found means to get out, in the Master's Absence, and to convey himself privately out of the Town; and that, having hid himself for some Years, he returned thither again, and produced a Poem, in which he celebrated his Extacies (24); which he was very well pleased should be taken in the literal, and not in the poetical Sense, in which we understand these Verses of Horace:

Quo me Bacche rapis tui
Plenum, quæ in memora aut quos agor in specus
Velox mente nova (25).

God of Wine, restless Pot'r, Whither will you hurry me,
Full of the Deity,
Transported with a Rage unknown before?
Whither, whither, must I rove?
To what wild Cave, what distant Grove?
Anonym.

(25) Horat. lib. 3. Ode. 25.

and several others, which Huetius mentions (26). I cannot easily agree with him, that Maximus Tyrius confirms the Conjecture, to wit, that Aristeas did not expect to be understood in a literal Sense (27). Maximus Tyrius supposes quite the contrary; as we have seen before (28). As for his Appearance to the Metapontines, we may suppose, that an Impostor persuaded them of what Herodotus relates; for they were Pythagoreans, and consequently believed the Transmigration of Souls.

[D] Others say, that his Soul went in and out of his Body at Pleasure. This was said by Hezychius Illustrius, and, after him, by Suidas. These are their Words. Ἀρίσταν τῷ Περικροννήσι παρὰ τὴν ψυχὴν ἐξίεναι ὅτε ἐβόλετο, καὶ ἐπανίεναι πάλιν (29). Aristeæ Proconnesii animam à corpore excessisse, ubi vellet, rursumque rediisse fabulatur. Τὴν παρὰ τὴν ψυχὴν ὅταν ἐβόλετο ἐξίεναι καὶ ἐπανίεναι πάλιν (30). Huius animam, quoties voluisset, exiisse & rediisse dicunt.

(26) Huet. ubi supra pag. 1038.

(27) Id. ib. pag. 1039.

(28) Citation (8) and (9).

[E] Gyraldus has been guilty of some Mistakes. I. He makes Strabo say, that the Eloquence and Address of Aristeas were of great Force. Strabo Aristeam facundia & blanditiis vehementem fuisse prodidit (31). This is to understand nothing of This Greek, ἀνὴρ γῶνς εἰ τις ἀλλῶ, second to none in Sorcery. II. He makes Herodotus say, that Aristeas, having ordered the Metapontines to erect, at the same time, an Altar to Apollo, and a Statue to himself, and having at last declared to them, that he was a Raven, was translated before their Eyes. This is misunderstanding Herodotus's Relation. I refer you to it (33). III. He says, that Plutarch approves of Herodotus's Narrative. This is false; Plutarch touches upon it but lightly, and makes a remarkable Change in the Circumstances of the Place; and then rejects the whole as a Fable.

(29) Hezychius Illust. de his qui Eruditionis fama clauere.

(30) Suidas in Ἀρίσταν.

(31) Greg. Girald. Di. III. de Historia Posteriorum pag. 85.

(32) Strabo, lib. 13. pag. 405.

(33) In the Remark [C] from the beginning to Citation (13).

ARISTIDES, surnamed the Just, flourished at Athens at the same time with Themistocles. They were greatly at variance; and it appeared, in their Case, that the being superior to another in Virtue is not always the Means of being so in Reputation [A]. The Vehemence of Themistocles's Eloquence made him triumph over the Justice of his Rival. It is remarkable, that one of Those, who voted for the Banishment

[A] The being superior to another in Virtue is not always the means of being so in Reputation. This Thought is borrowed from Cornelius Nepos; "In his cognitum est, quanto antistaret eloquentia innocentiae; quamquam enim adeo excelebat Aristides ab innocentia, ut unus post hominum memoriam, quod quidem nos audierimus, cognomine Justus sit appellatus, tamen à Themistocle collapsatus testula illa exilio decem annorum multatus est (1). - - - In Them was seen the Advantage of Eloquence above Innocence; for, though Aristides was so remarkably Virtuous, as alone (at least as far as I can remember) to have obtained the Surname of Just, yet, through the Influence, and by the Vote, of Themistocles, he suffered a ten Years Banishment." Be as honest as you please; if you are not Master of a noisy, blustering, Eloquence, you may depend upon being foiled, though you come in Competition with the basest Fellow of the Town.

(24) ἜΦΗ δὲ Ἀρίσταν ὡς ἀνίκητον καὶ ἰσχυρότατον πομπῶν λαμπρῶς γενόμενον. Aristeas memoravit se Phæbo infinitum venisse ad Isoleonas. Herod. lib. 4. cap. 14.

(1) Corn. Nepos, in vita Aristidis.

nishment of Aristides, gave as his Reason the great Reputation for Integrity, which he saw him enjoy [B]. But there is something still more remarkable. This great Man, who so exactly observed the Rules of Equity, in private Affairs, and between Man and Man, did not scruple to prefer the Useful to the Honest, in Affairs relating to the State [C]. He lived in great Poverty, and gloried in it [D]. He left neither sufficient to portion his Daughters, nor to defray the Expences of his Funeral. The Commonwealth was at the Expence of both (a). He was so generous, as not to join with the Enemies of Themistocles at a time, when there was Reason to believe they would crush him (b): For Themistocles, was condemned to Banishment, without Aristides's appearing against him. Authors differ about Aristides's Death (c); but Seneca has undoubtedly committed a gross Error in relation to it [E]. We shall observe, in the Article ARTEMIDORUS, that a Grandson of Aristides gained his Living by telling Fortunes by Dreams.

(a) Plut. in Aristide,
pag. 335.

(b) Ib. pag.
334.

(c) He died
the second Year of the LXXXVIIIth Olympiad; which was the fourth after the Banishment of Themistocles. Cor-
nel. Nepos, in ejus vita.

[B] One of Those, who voted for the Banishment of Aristides, gave as his Reason, the great Reputation for Integrity he saw him enjoy. A Citizen of Athens, who gave his Vote that Aristides should be banished, being asked his Reason by Aristides himself, answered very frankly; I have no Knowledge of the Man; but he displeases me by aspiring to the Surname of Just. "Cedenque animadverteret quemdam scribentem, ut patris pelleretur, quæssit ab eo dicitur: Quare id faceret, aut quid Aristides commississet, cur tanta poena dignus duceretur. Cui ille respondit; Se ignorare Aristidem, sed sibi non placere, quod cupide elaborasset, ut præter cæteros Justus appellaretur (2)." Thousands think like this Athenian, but have not his Candor. Every thing, which excels, displeases them: They have a more favourable Regard for a Common, than a distinguished, Virtue. The Reputation of Aristides, which the Athenians, one Day, gave such authentic Testimony of, in his Preface (3), has not experienced the Injury of Time, but has preserved itself in all Ages; Read this Passage of Ausonius:

(2) Id. ib.

(3) See the beginning of Remark [H] of the Article
AMPHI-RAUS.

(4) Auson.
in Mosella,
ver. 386.
pag. 415.
• Aristides.

Nec sola antiquos offentat Roma Catones:

Aut unus tantum justus spectator & æqui

Pollet Aristides, veteresque illustrat Athenas (4).

Nor Rome alone her ancient Catos boasts;

Nor He*, whose Virtues raised the Athenian Name, Claims the sole Merit, to be Good, and Just.

(5) In Remark [H] of the Article
AGESI-LAUS II.

(6) Apul.
Plutarch. in Arist. pag.
334. A.

(7) Cicero
de Officiis,
lib. 3. cap.
11. pag.
318.

(8) The People concluded, from seeing Aristides so ill elad, that he wanted Bread. Plut.
P.B. 334.

(9) Id. ib.

[C] He did not scruple to prefer the Useful to the Honest, in Affairs relating to the State. This is a fresh Example of what we have before (5) observed concerning PUBLIC RELIGION. Aristides had made the Athenians swear to perform a certain thing, and had himself taken an Oath in their Name. Afterwards he counselled them to act as they should think fit for the Publick Good, and leave the Weight of Perjury to him alone, whilst they themselves took Advantage of the favourable Circumstances, which Fortune presented them. This was his general Maxim, as Theophrastus observes: Καὶ ὁ ἄνθρωπος οὗτος ὅταν εἶδε τοὺς ἄλλους ἀνθρώπους ἐν ταῖς κοιναῖς πράξεσι πρὸς τὴν ὑπόδειξιν τῆς πάλαιδος ἐκ συχρῆς ἀδικίας δεομένην (6). This Great Man, says Theophrastus, in private Affairs, and towards his Fellow-Citizens, was Justice itself; But, in Affairs, which regarded the Commonwealth, he did many Things not strictly just, in compliance with the Exigencies of the State. Unhappy Condition of Those at the Helm! The Good of the State requires more than one or two unjust Actions in a Man's Life: perhaps Aristides did not come off for an hundred. Observe, that Cicero gives us a quite different Idea of him (7).

[D] He lived in great Poverty, and gloried in it. He had a very rich Relation, whose Name was Callias, who, finding himself publicly accused of not supplying him, wherewith to support Life (8), desired him to declare, before the Judges, whether it was not true, that he never would receive the Sums, he had offered him, at several Times, and whether he had not always replied, that he gloried more in his Poverty, than Callias in his Riches; he declared it was true. His Reason was, that there were numbers, who made either a good or a bad use of their Riches, but that it was rare to find a Person, who bore his Poverty with a noble Mind (9). It was a Principle, then, of Pride, or Singularity, will some say, which made him despise Riches. It is a pleasure to covetous and ambitious Persons to be able to object This to Those, who are not like themselves. But what do they gain by it? If it should be granted, that all Men act from a Principle of self-love, is it nothing to draw one's Glory rather from This Action or Conduct, than from That? And is not This a sufficient Motive to admire the one, and despise the other? Ælian relates a Particular, which, at first Sight, seems inconsistent with the notorious Poverty of Aristides: He says, that Those, who were betrothed to his Daughters, refused to marry them after his Death, when his extreme Poverty came to be known (10). He seems to me to be mistaken in his Reasoning; Aristides's Poverty was known in his Life time, but it was known, at the same time, that he was in great Credit. Now the most mercenary and interested Minds think it no disadvantageous Match, to marry the Daughter of a Favourite, in her very Shift, who has many profitable Posts at his Disposal. This might make Aristides's Daughters find Matches in his Life time without a Penny of Portion; but, after his Death, there was no more to hope for; so that they were cast off for want of Money. A Great Wit (11) puts this Judicious Reflexion in the Mouth of a Favourite; Such a Person would think himself honoured with my Alliance upon equal Terms, and yet thinks he makes a Sacrifice to my Favour, in demanding my Niece. So true it is, that, when any one courts the Alliance of a Person in great Credit, he considers more his own Advancement, than what Money he may gain by Marriage.

[E] Seneca has undoubtedly committed a gross Error in relation to his Death. Aristides, according to him, was condemned to die: All, who met him going to the Place of Execution, sighed, and turned down their Eyes to the Ground, except one Rascal, who spit in his Face. Aristides smiled, and said to the Officers, who guarded him; Advise that Fellow never to open his Mouth so villainously again. Thus Seneca relates the Matter. Ducebatur Athenis ad supplicium Aristides, cui quisquis occurreret, deiecit ab oculis, & ingemiscibat, non tanquam in hominem justum, sed tanquam in ipsam justitiam animadverteretur. Invenit est tamen, qui faciem ejus inspueret: poterat ab hoc moleste ferre, quod sciebat neminem id ausum puri oris. At ille absterxit faciem, & subridens ait comitanti se magistratui, admohe istum ne postea tam improbe officeret (12). Lipius has very judiciously observed, on this Passage, that Seneca has mistaken one Person for another, and has ascribed to Aristides, what he should have applied to Phocion. It was Phocion, who was condemned to die; it was He, who was spit on, as they were leading him to Prison, where he was to drink Poison; and it was He, who, turning himself to the Officers, who attended him, demanded, if none of them would chastize the Insolence of the Fellow (13). Seneca has given these Words his own Turn: Verba noster etiam per argutiam invertit (14). Probably this is not the first time he has altered both the Subject and the Words; it were to be wished he were the only Person, who has taken this Liberty. People are very apt to report a good Saying, not as it was spoken at first, but according to the Form, which they believe to be the best. That he is deceived in the main, is plain from Plutarch's Account. That Historian confesses, that some one had said, that Aristides died in exile, but he confutes it (15); what Seneca says, may be rejected, then, with much greater Reason, as a Fable. Note, that Lancelot of Peroussa has not censured this Mistake: perhaps

A REFLEXION on Self-love, and on the Desire of marrying the Daughters of Favourites.

(10) Ælian.
Var. Hist.
lib. 10. cap.
15.

(11) La Demoiselle des Jardins, in his Exiles of the Court of Augustus.

(12) Senec.
Consol. ad
Helviam,
cap. 13. pag.
785.

(13) Plut. in Phocione.

(14) Lip.
in Seneca, Consol. ad
Helviam,
pag. 785.

(15) Plut. in Aristide,
pag. 335.
perhaps perhaps he was aware of it, but chose to take it for granted, that he might have ground to maintain, that That Age was extremely unjust, since the Senate of Athens caused a Man of such eminent Virtues to be put to death (16).

(16) See
l' Hoggidi del Padre secondo Lancello da
Perugia,
Tom. 2. page
399, &c.

A R I S T O, a Native of the Isle of Cbios, departed a little from the Sentiments of his Master Zeno, who was Head of the Stoics, as may be seen in Moreri's Dictionary, together with some of his Doctrines. Not to repeat what is to be found there, I shall content my self with observing, that the Reason, why he rejected Logic and Natural Philosophy, was, because he judged That Logic was useless, and that Natural Philosophy was beyond our Comprehension (a). I add, that, having espoused Moral Philosophy at first, he afterwards retrenched much of it: For he would not have People teach any thing concerning the particular Duties of a Husband to his Wife, or a Father to his Children, or a Master to his Servants; but confine themselves to Lectures upon Wisdom in general. Seneca justly blames him for this [A]; and shews, that particular Precepts, and Sentences, may be of wonderful Use [B]. Aristo said, that the Nature of God was inconceivable [C]. This induces us to believe, that he absolutely neglected the Contemplation of Divine Matters. He oppo-

(a) Λέγων
τὸν μὲν εἶναι ὑπὲρ ἡμᾶς, τὸν δ' ἴδὲν
πρὸς ἡμᾶς.
Dicens alterum quidem esse supra nos, alterum vero nihil
ad nos. *Diog.
Laërt. lib.
7. n. 161.*

[A] He afterwards retrenched much of it: — Seneca justly blames him for this.] Read these Words: — “Aristo Chius non tantum superflvacus effe dixit naturalem & rationalem, fed etiam contrarias: morale quoque, quam folam reliquerat, circumcidit. Nam cum locum, qui monitiones continet, fustulit, & pedagogi effe dixit, non Philofophi: tantum quidquam aliud fit fapiens quam humani generis pedagogus (1). — Aristo the Chian fays, that Natural and Rational Philofophy were not only fuperfluous, but contradictory; and Moral Philofophy, the only Branch he left, be curtailed. For he took away the preceptive Part of it, faying, it belonged to Pedagogs, not to Philofophers: as if a Philosopher were any thing elfe, than a Pedagoge of human kind.” He confutes him at large in another place (2).

[B] Particular Precepts, and Sentences, may be of wonderful Use. They strongly affect the Mind, he says, when they are contracted in Verse or in Prose, and kindle the Seeds of Honour, which are natural to our Souls. "Ipsa, quæ præcipiuntur, per se multum habent ponderis: utique si aut carmini intexta sunt, aut profa oratione in sententiam composita. Sicut illa Catoniana: Emas, non quod opus est, sed quod necesse est. Quod non opus est, affertur carum est. Quæ sunt illa, aut reddita oraculo, aut similia: Tempori pare; Te nole. Numquid ratio nem exiges, cum tibi aliquis hæc dixerit verus?"

Injuriarum remedium est oblivio.
Audentes fortuna juvat.
Piger sibi ipse obstat.

"Advocatum ista non quærunt: affectus ipsos tan-
 "gunt, & natura vium suam exercente proficiunt.
 "Omnium honestarum rerum semina animi gerunt
 "quæ admonitione excitantur: non aliter quam scin-
 "tilla, flatu levi adjuncta, ignem suum explicat (3). ----
 "Precepts are of great Weight, when they are com-"prehended in a Verse, or reduced to a Sentence in "Prose. Such is That of Cato; Buy, not what is "expedient, but what is necessary; and What is use"less, is dear at the smallest Price. Such likewise are "these, either delivered by an Oracle, or seemingly "such; Improve Time; Know yourself. Do you "demand a Reason, when such Sentences as these are "repeated to you?

*Injuries are repaired by being forgot.
Faint Heart never won fair Lady.
Lazy Folks take most Pains.*

“ Such Sayings want no Advocate. They touch the Passions, and operate by the force of Nature. The Seeds of Virtue are implanted in the Mind, and are excited by Precept; in like manner as a Spark of Fire is kindled, by a Breath of Air, into a Flame.” He adds, that, sometimes, they discover their Force in the most ignorant; and that, Agrippa, the Favourite of Augustus, acknowledged himself very much indebted to an Apophthegm on Concord. “ Quis negaverit ferri quibulum præceptis effaciat etiam imperitissimos? velut his brevissimis vocibus, sed multum habentibus ponderis;

- - - - - nihil nimis.

Avarus animus nullo fatiatur lucro.

Ab alio expectes, alteri quod feceris.

“ Hæc cum istū quodam audimus, nec ulli licet dubitare, aut interrogare - - - - M. Agrippa, vir ingentis animi, qui solus, ex his, quos civilia bella claros potentelque fecerunt, felix in publicum fuit, dicere solebat, multum se huic debere sententie : - - - Nam concordia parvæ res crescunt; discordia maximæ dilabuntur. Hac fe aiebat et fratrem, & amicū, optimum factūm (4). - - - - Who weny deny, that the most ignorant have been effectually struck by certain Precepts; such as these short, but weighty, Sayings.

(4) Id. ib.
pag. 388.

Too much of one thing is good for nothing.

A covetous Mind is never satisfied with Gain.

The Measure you mete to others, expect to have measured to you again.

“We are struck, when we hear sub Sayings, nor is there any room for Doubt, or Question. ----- “Marcus Agrippa, a Perjon of a great Soul, and the only one, among those, who have rose by Civil Wars, who was [usefult] to the Public Good, was wont to say, that he was much indebted to this Saying :
“By Concord small Things encrease ; by Discord the greatest fall to Ruin. This, he said, made him the best of Brothers and of Friends.” This strongly confirms a Sentiment of mine in the Plan of this Work (5). I observed there, that a Sentence, taken out of Livy, or Tacitus, and delivered, as having formerly been serviceable in uniting the Senate of Rome, is capable of saving a State, &c.

(5) See Paragraph IX. at the end of Vol. IV.

[C] Aristotle said, that the Nature of God was inconceivable.] As he gave up Natural Philosophy, because he could not conceive the Divine Nature, it is probable he quoted Theology for the same Reason. Dinosaurum rerum quæm Iudæis videtur fuisse, commisit sæpe jactaret, quæ supra nos nihil ad nos, ut mirum sit Aristonem Theologos inter hic à Velleio ascribi. These are the Words of a Jesuit, who has given us a Comment on Cicero's Work of Natura Deorum (6). He commits a Fault, when he wonders, that Velleius, one of the Interlocutors, placed Aristo among the Theologists; for This Philosopher deserved That Rank as much as Those others, whose Opinions Velleius has mentioned. This is Aristo's Doctrine: "Cujus (Zeronis) discipuli Aristonis non minus magno in errore sententia est: qui neque formam Dei intelligi posse censent, neque in diis sensum esse dicat. du-

(6) Le'ciloprier in Cicero. de de Nat. Deorum lib. I.
pag. 60.

(7) Cicero
ib. pag. 60.

fed Arcefilas on the Hypothesis of Uncertainty: But, if any Credit may be given to Diogenes Laërtius, Scepticism seems to have been but poorly attacked, and as, poorly defended [D], in those Times. It is said, that Aristo was bald, and that his Baldness was the Cause of his Death; the Sun having scorched his Head (b). He was voluptuous in his Old Age: Eratosthenes, and Apollonides, his Disciples, inform us of this Particular, in Athenæus (c). I cannot tell, whether it was that he stooped to flatter a Philosopher (d), at That time, who was in great Credit at Antigonus's Court (e). His Sect continued but a short Time [E]. He was the Author of a Saying, which might render

(b) Id. lib. n. 164.

(c) Athenæus, lib. 7. cap. 6. pag. 281.

(d) He was called Perseus.

(e) Athenæus, lib. 6. pag. 281.

(8) Minucius Felice, pag. 154.

(a) Elementum in Minucium Felicem, pag. 154.

(10) Laër. Divin. Institut. lib. 3. cap. 19.

(11) Minucius Felix, pag. 112.

(12) Above, Citation (10).

(13) See Xenoph. Memorab. lib. 1.

(14) Ib. lib. 4.

(15) Citation (22).

(16) Diog. Laër. lib. 7. n. 162.

(17) Ib. lib. n. 13.

intelligendi desperatione senserunt (8). A certain Commentator is guilty of a childish Error upon this Occasion: He believes there is a Difference between the Person mentioned by Cicero, and him mentioned in the Passage of Minucius; I say, he believes it, because he supposes, that Minucius is speaking of one, whose Name was Aristus. "Quod Minucius Aristo Chio, id Cicero de Naturâ Deorum, lib. 1. tribuit Aristo (9). — What Minucius imputes to Aristus "the Chian, That Cicero, de Naturâ Deorum, lib. 1, "ascribes to Aristo." Elementorborst, for want of Attention, believed, that the Aristo of Minucius was a Dative or Ablative; whereas it is a Nominative. By the way, it is not impossible, but that Father Lescapier has imputed That to our Aristo, which belongs to Socrates. "Celebre hoc proverbium Socrates habuit, quod supra nos, nihil ad nos (10). — It "was a celebrated Proverb of Socrates; What is above "us, is nothing to us." Laërtius inferred from hence, that Socrates despised all Religion. Ejus viri (Socratis) quoties de cœlestibus rogabatur, nota responsio est, quod supra nos, nihil ad nos (11). Note, that, generally speaking, They, who acknowledge, that the Nature of God is inexplicable, are not to be suspected of neglecting Divine Worship, for it is a Reason with many for adoring God with the greater Humility and Reverence. So that the Observation, made against Aristo, has something personal in it, and is founded on it's being well known, that Incomprehensibility was, with him, a Motive of Neglect. I would not positively affirm, that he neglected Religion. I stop at Probability; for, with Laërtius's leave, Socrates's Maxim, which I have just mentioned (12), did not induce That Philosopher to neglect Theology. His Doctrine thereon was as good as could be expected from a Pagan (13); and it looks, as if he only desired to set Bounds to human Curiosity, by such Reasons, as our most pious Doctors make use of; namely, that we ought willingly to be ignorant of what God would conceal from us; for there is Danger in such profound Enquiries. "In a Word, "he would not advise a too curious Enquiry "into the admirable Art, with which the Gods have "disposed the Universe, &c. (14)." You will find the rest of this Passage in the Remark [S] of the Article ANAXAGORAS (15), where you will likewise find, that by Cœlestial Things, the Study of which Socrates dissuades from, he does not mean matters of Religion, but Astronomy.

[D] Scepticism seems to have been but poorly attacked, and as poorly defended. Aristo maintained the Doctrine of Evidence against Arcefilas; and, seeing a Monster, I mean a Bull with a Womb, he believed his Adversary would draw a very good Argument from thence in favour of Incomprehensibility. Wretch that I am, cry'd he, behold here a strong Proof for Arcefilas (16)! This informs us, that the Dogmatists, in order to maintain, that the Nature of Animals was clearly known, alleged, that the Males and Females of each Species are plainly distinguishable; there being certain Parts so proper to the one, that they are never met with in the other. If they argued after this manner, it is certain, that the Bull, which I have mentioned, served to confute them; but it must be allowed, that they employed a very weak Argument; for the Sceptics did not deny, that, according to Appearances, there was a distinction between the Males and the Females; they maintained only, that it was not known, whether their Nature was such, as it appeared to be. Now it signifies nothing to instance the Example of the Bull in this case. Might they not have replied, We cannot tell whether it is really a Womb, or not; it may be so only in Appearance. Aristo asked an Acateleptic one Day; Don't you see That Rich Man, who sits near you? the other answered, No: Who has put out your Eyes, said Aristo again (17)! This was a childish Defence;

since the Doctrine of Incomprehensibility does not suppose a Person deprived of the use of Sight. He might have replied to Arcefilas; The Resemblance of a rich Man sitting near me strikes my Sight; nevertheless I do not comprehend certainly, that This Man exists, or what his Nature is. It is observable, that, among all the Tenets of the Stoics, Aristo adhered chiefly to This, The Wife Man has no Opinion. There was a Philosopher in his Days, whose Name was Perseus, who, to attack him upon this Point, suborned Twin-Brothers; one of which trusted Aristo with a Deposit, and the other came, some time after, to demand it; and Aristo, being in suspense, was therefore confuted by Perseus (18). I can scarce comprehend the meaning of This. Did these Twins resemble each other so perfectly, that it was impossible to know them asunder; or were they as unlike, as generally Twins are? Diogenes Laërtius says nothing to this. His Brevity is sometimes so intolerable, that it may be said, we have only ill-digested Extracts of his History of the Philosophers. If these Twins were distinguishable; from whence could Aristo's Suspence proceed? If it was difficult to distinguish them, his Suspence was not to be blamed, and could not be alleged to confute him; for this very suspence was a Proof of his Regard for the Maxim above; The Wife Man has no Opinion.

[E] His Sect continued but a short Time. Cicero mentions it as One, whose Tenets were lost: "Sententiæ ----- Aristonis, Pyrrhonis, Herillii, nonnullorumque, aliorum evanuerunt (19). ----- We bear no more of the Opinions of Aristo, Pyrrho, Herillus, and some others. Sive, says de elyabere, "Aristotelem & Theophrastum ----- sequuti sunt, five ----- etiam Aristonis difficilem atque arduam, sed jam tamen fractam & convictam, sectam sequuti sunt (20). ----- Whether they followed "Aristotelem & Theophrastum ----- or the difficult and arduous, but now broken and confuted, Sect of Aristo. Such extravagant Opinions as his could hardly last long; he made no difference between any two things, except Vice and Virtue; and said, that other things were all alike, nor one preferable to another: His contrarius Aristo Cibus præfatus, ferreus, nihil bonum, nisi quod rectum atque honestum est (21). He went farther, than his Master Zeno; for Zeno did not deny but there were things distinct from Virtue, which were to be wished for, though they were of no use towards attaining to the Supreme Good. This Tenet was far from just, though it was less to be rejected, than That of Aristo; For who cannot apprehend, that Health is more to be desired, than Sickness? "Ut "Aristonis esse explosa sententia dicentis, nihil differre aliud ab alio, nec esse res ullas præter virtutes & vitia, inter quas quicquam omnino interesse; "sic errare Zenonem, qui nulla in re nisi in virtute aut vitio propensionem, ne minimi quidem momenti, ad summum bonum adipiscendum esse diceret. Et quum ad beatam vitam nullum momentum ea res haberet, ad appetitionem autem rerum esse in his momenta diceret: quasi vero hæc appetitio non ad summi boni adeptationem pertineret (22). ----- As Aristo was mistaken, in saying, that there is no difference of Things, except between Virtue and Vice; so Zeno erred, who thought, that nothing, except Virtue and Vice, had the least tendency towards procuring the Supreme Good; yet that Those Things, which had not This Tendency, were to be desired; as if the Accomplishment of This very Desire were not Part of the Supreme Good. It is no wonder, then, that This Sect did not continue long; since Aristo himself deserted it at an Age the most favourable to his Maxims. He became a Friend to Pleasures in his old Age (23), when it would have become him much better to have been rigid, and inflexible, præfatus & ferreus.

(18) Id. lib. n. 162.

(19) Cicero Tufcul. lib. 5. fol. 276. D.

(20) Id. Lib. 1. de Legibus, cap. 13.

(21) Id. in Hortensio, apud Nonium cum voce Præfatum.

(22) Id. de Finibus, lib. 4. cap. 17.

(23) Athenæus, lib. 7. pag. 281.

render Aristippus's Doctrine less odious, than it generally is [F]. Some Works were ascribed to him, which belonged to Aristo of Cea, a Peripatetic Philosopher [G]. We shall have some Mistakes of Vossius to remark [H].

[F] He was Author of a Saying, which might render Aristippus's Doctrine less odious than it generally is. He said, that a Philosopher might be of Prejudice to his Hearers, who should misunderstand his Words; that, for example, The Followers of Aristippus might become dissolute; Those of Zeno morose. Is not this to declare, that the Doctrine of These Philosophers did not produce such Effects, but when misunderstood? Aristo Chius dicere solebat, nocere audientibus Philosophos iis, qui bene dicta male interpretarentur; posse enim astutos ex Aristippi, acerbos a Zenonis Schola exire (24). He should have added that every Teacher is, therefore, obliged to avoid ambiguous Maxims, and to prevent false Glosses.

[G] Some Works were imputed to him, which belong to Aristo of Cea. Diogenes Laërtius, having given the Titles of several Works of our Aristo, adds, that Panaetius, and Socrates, ascribe them all, except one, to the Peripatetic Aristo (25). He does not say, that This Peripatetic was a Native of the Island Cea; but I conjecture, that we ought to suppose him of That Country, because it cannot be understood of Aristo the Alexandrian, another Peripatetic Philosopher, who lived under Augustus, and of whom, consequently, Panaetius could say nothing; for it can be proved, that he was not living in the Six Hundred and Fiftieth Year of Rome (26). So that Mr Moreri is deceived, when he says, that many have imputed the Works of Aristo of Chios to Aristo of Alexandria. The former wrote a Treatise of Senectute, which Diogenes Laërtius has not mentioned; perhaps it was but part of Another Book. "Hunc librum de Senectute ad te misi: mus: omnem autem sermonem tribuimus non Tithono, ut Aristo Chius, parum enim esset auctoritatis in fabula, sed M. Catoni feni, quo majorem auctoritatem haberet oratio (27)." I send you this Treatise of Old Age; The whole Discourse, to add the greater Weight to it, I put in the Mouth of Old M. Cato; not of Tithonus, as Aristo the Chian did; for Fable would have added but little Authority to it." Alodbrandinus quotes this Passage of Cicero, as if it should be read Aristo Ceus (28); but the best Editions give Aristo Chius. He is mistaken, then, in pretending, that Aristo of Cea, the Peripatetic Philosopher, was Author of the Book of Senectute. He might with more reason have applied this Passage of Cicero to Him. "Hujus (Stratonis) Lyfias & oratione locuples,

"rebus ipsis jejuniore; Concinnus deinde & elegans" hujus Aristo: Sed ea, quæ desideratur à magno Philo-
"lopho, gravitas in eo non fuit. Scripta sanè, & multa & polita; sed nescio quo pacto auctoritatem oratio non habet (29). ----- After Strato, Lyfias was copious in words, but, barren of Sense. His Disciple Aristo was Witty and Elegant; but, wanted, what is essential to a great Philosopher, Dignity: "He wrote indeed much and politely; but, I know not how, what he says wants Weight." This can only be understood of a Peripatetic Philosopher Aristo; Mr Menage therefore is to blame, in believing, that these Latin Words relate to our Aristo (30).

[H] Some Mistakes of Vossius, &c. He says, that Aristo of Alexandria, a Peripatetic Philosopher, in the time of Augustus, was Author of a Treatise concerning the River Nile (31). His Reason is, because Strabo observes, that he had seen two Books, in his Time, concerning That River; one of them composed by Eudores, and the other by Aristo the Peripatetic (32). But, continues Vossius, there having been two Aristos of the Peripatetic Sect, one of Alexandria, and the other of the Island of Cea; Why do I maintain, that he of Alexandria composed the Treatise of the Nile? because it is more probable, that an Egyptian should write of this River, than an Islander of the Egean Sea. He destroys This Reason immediately; for he confesses, that it is probable Aristo of Chios, or He of Cea, wrote a Book of the Nile; because the Scholiast on Apollonius quotes the Opinion of Aristo of Chios, concerning the Source of This River (33). He confounds, adds Vossius, Chius with Ceus. This Reasoning is not exact. But, This Learned Man may be farther censured, for not knowing the true Reason, why the Treatise of the Nile, mentioned by Strabo, ought rather to be ascribed to Aristo the Alexandrian, than Aristo of the Island of Cea; namely, that Strabo speaks of a Book, which was published in his Time. Now Aristo of Cea flourished a long Time before Strabo, as Vossius himself acknowledges; for he affirms, after Diogenes Laërtius, that Panaetius and Socrates (34) ascribed to This Aristo almost all the Books, which passed under the Name of Aristo the Stoic. Lloyd and Hofman have copied this long Passage of Vossius, word for word, not forgetting even to put Socrates instead of Socrates.

(29) Cicero. de Finib. lib. 5, cap. 5.

(30) Menag. in Diog. Laërt. lib. 7, n. 163. This Note is approved in the Commentary on Cicero de Senectute, Edit. Grævian.

(31) Vossius de Hist. Gr. lib. 2, c. 4. pag. 179.

(32) Strabo, lib. 17, pag. 544.

(33) Schol. Apollonii in IV. Argon.

(34) In Vossius it is Socrates.

ARISTO (TITUS) a Roman Lawyer, in the Reign of Trajan, was so Excellent and so Learned a Person, that he ought not to have been omitted by Moreri. He was perfectly skilled in Common and Civil Law, in History, and Antiquity [A]. If he did not readily answer to the Questions, which were put to him, it was because he would consider the Matter thoroughly, before he gave his Opinion. He was, besides, an Enemy to Luxury, and free from all Ostentation; one, who fought the Reward of a good Action in the Action itself, and not in the Applause of the Multitude

[A] He was perfectly skilled in — Law, in History, and in Antiquity. What Pliny says upon this (1), and on Aristo's Virtue, is so fine, that I shall not lose one Word of it. "Nihil est illo (Tito Aristone) gratius, sanctius, doctius: ut mihi non unus homo, sed literæ ipsæ, omnesque bonæ artes, in uno homine summum periculum adire videantur. Quam peritus ille & privati juris & publici (2)? quantum rerum? quantum exemplorum? quantum antiquitatis tenet? nihil est, quod discere velis, quod ille docere non possit. Mihi certe quoties aliquid additum quero, ille thesaurus est. Jam quanta sermonibus ejus fides? quanta auctoritas? quam pressa & decora cunctatio? quid est quod non statim sciat? & tamen plerumque hæsitat. Dubitat diversitate rationum: quas acri magnoque judicio ab origine causisque primis repetit, discernit, expendit: Ad hoc quam parvus in vestitu? quam modicus in cultu? Soleo ipsum cubiculum ejus ipsunque lectum, ut imaginem quandam præfæ frugalitatis, aspicere. Ornat hæc magnitudo animi, quæ nihil ad ostentationem, omnia ad conscientiam refert: recteque facti, non ex populi sermone, mercedem, sed ex factis, petit. — So excellent a Person is Titus Aristo, that not the Life of one Man alone, but Learning itself, and all useful Arts, seem to be greatly endangered in one Man. How skilled is he in every Branch of Law? How versed in Things, in Examples, in Antiquity? Whatever you can desire to learn, he can teach. For my own Part, whenever I would enquire into any abstruse Point, He is my Oracle. How securely may we rely upon his Opinion? What Authority has He? and how becoming is his Deliberation? What is there, which he does not immediately apprehend? yet he generally hesitates. His Doubts arise from the Variety of Reasons, which may be assigned; all which, with great Judgment, he traces to their Source, distinguishes and weighs. Add to this his great Temperance and Modesty in Dress. I am wont to consider his Bed-Chamber, and his very Bed, as a Kind of Representation of the Ancient Frugality. These Qualifications are set off by a Greatness of Mind, which avoids all Ostentation, and is satisfied with the Consciousness of having acted well; and which seeks the Reward of a good Action, not from the Applause of the People, but from the Action itself."

(1) Plinius, Epist. 22, lib. 1, pag. 63, 66.

(2) Add to this the Words of the 14th letter of the 3rd Book, which Pliny writes to Aristo: Cum se peritissimus & privati juris & publici -- peto ut me deariis scientiis tua, cui superfluit curæ se jura publica ut privata, sic antiqua ut recentia, sic rara ut affridua tractare.

itude (a). He did not profess himself a Philosopher [B]; but some of Those, who did, fell very short of him in the Practice of Virtue. He shewed an unparalleled Firmness of Mind in a tedious Fit of Sickness [C], and at last desired his Friends to ask the Physicians, whether it was possible for him to recover; and declared, that, if they judged him incurable, he would kill himself; but, if he might escape by suffering his Pains ever so long, he was resolved to live; this he agreed to, at the Intreaties of his Wife, the Tears of his Daughter, and the desire of Those, with whom he conversed (b). Pliny, the Younger, who was one of Them, made a good Reflexion upon this, and excellently describes the Tendernefs of his Friendship [E]. The Physicians gave him good Hopes of his Recovery (c). Some affirm, that Aristotle attained to a very great Age [F]; but the Proof they bring for it is weak enough. He was the Author of some Books [G].

[B] He did not profess himself a Philosopher. His Philosophy was put in practice two Ways; for his Manners were like Those of a true Philosopher; and he did not spend his Life in the Solitude of a Closet, or College, but in the Functions of the Bar. Let us hear Pliny. "In summa, non facile quis quæquam ex istis, qui sapientie studium habitu corporis præferunt, huic viro comparari. Non quidem gymnasia sectatur, aut porticus, nec disputationibus longis aliorum otium, suumque delectat: sed in toga, negotiisque versatur: multos advocacione, plures consilio juvat. Nemini tamen illorum callitate, pietate, justitia, fortitudine, etiam primo loco cesserit (3). ----- Upon the whole, it is not easy to draw a parallel between Those, who carry an outward show of Philosophy, and this Great Man. Indeed, he is not a Follower of the Schools, or Porticoes; nor does he entertain the Leisure of others, and his own, with tedious Disputations; but is conversant at the Bar, and in Business; is helpful to many, as an Advocate, to more by his Advice. Yet will he give the Preference to none of the Philosophers in Point of Chastity, Piety, Justice, and Greatness of Mind."

(3) Id. Epist. 20. lib. 7. pag. 66, 67, &c.

(a) See Remark [B].

(c) Plin. Epist. 22. lib. 1. pag. 67.

(6) Id. ib.

[C] He shewed an unparalleled Firmness of Mind in a tedious Fit of Sickness (4). "Helay still, and covered, in the Height of his Fever, and forbore drinking, though he had a violent Thirst upon him. Mirararis, si interesse, qua patientia banc ipsam consuetudinem toleret, ut dolori resistat, ut sitim differat, ut incredibilem febrem ardorem immo usque operisque transmittat (5)."

[D] Pliny ----- makes a good Reflexion upon this, &c. "It is common, he says, to fly to Death through an Impetuosity of Spirit; but a great Mind, having deliberated whether to live or die, weighs the Motives on both sides exactly, and by the Weight of Reason is determined to the one or the other. Id ego arduum in primis, & præcipua laude dignum puto. Nam impetu quodam, & instinctu, procurere ad mortem, commune cum multis: deliberare vero, & causas ejus expendere, utque susceperit ratio, vitæ mortisque consilium suscipere, vel ponere, ingentis est animi (6)."

[E] Pliny admirably expresses the Tendernefs of his Friendship for Aristotle. "He had a passionate Desire to retire to his Country-House at Laurentium, and to study there; but deprived himself of This Pleasure to keep Aristotle Company, who had been sick a long time; and he suffered a thousand Dis-quietudes at the Sight of this Object, which robbed him of the Leisure, and even Desire of "returning to his Studies." Let us hear himself. Diu jam in urbe hæreo, & quidem attonitus. Perturbat me longa & pertinax valetudo Titi Aristonis, quem singulariter & miror & diligo (7). This is the beginning of his Letter. He goes on. Et medici quidem secunda nobis pollicentur: Superest, ut promissus deus adnuat, tandemque me hac solitudine exolvat. Qua liberatus, Laurentinum meum, hoc est libellos & pugillares, studiosumque otium, repetam. Nunc enim nihil legere, nihil scribere, aut assidenti vacat, aut anxio libet. Habet, quid timeam, quid optem, quid etiam in posterum desinem (8). I cite this whole Passage, as well for the Honour of Aristotle, as for That of Pliny the Younger; for there appear in it Marks, of a good-natured Disposition; and it is a Proof, that Virtue has always found a Place of Retreat in Cities, which have been the most corrupted by long Prosperity, followed by tedious and cruel Civil Wars, and the Establishment of Tyranny; which was the Case of Rome at that Time.

(7) Id. ibid.

(8) Epist. 24. lib. 1. pag. 67.

[F] Some affirm, that Aristotle attained to a very great Age; but the Proof they bring for it is weak enough. This Proof is taken from Aristotle's having assisted at the Pleadings of Cassius; that is, of Caius Cassius Longinus, who was Consul in the Reign of Tiberius. Now they reckon sixty Years between Tiberius and Trajan; and it is certain, that Trajan consulted Aristotle in a Point of Law. This is Bertrand's Argument (9). He is confuted from hence; that Cassius lived till the Reign of Vespasian (10); and that, between the beginning of his Reign, and That of Trajan, there are at most but Twenty eight Years (11).

(9) See Bertrand in Vitis Jurisprutorum, l. 2. c. 295, 297.

(10) Pomponius affirms it; see Grotius in Vitis Juriscons. l. 2. c. 3. pag. 123.

(11) Grotius, ubi supra.

(12) Bertrand, and Grotius.

(13) Aulus Gellius, lib. 11. c. 18. pag. 302.

(14) Bertrand ubi supra, p. 299.

[G] He was the Author of some Books. The Pandects make mention of this; and you may see the Titles of them in both the Authors, whom I cite (12). See also Aulus Gellius, who had read, in a Work of Aristotle, that all manner of Theft was allowed among the ancient Egyptians, a People famous for the Invention of Arts and Sciences. Id etiam memini legere me in libro Aristonis jurisconsulti baudquaquam indolis viri. apud veteres Egyptios, quod genus boninum constat & in artibus rependiendi solertes existisse, & in cognitione rerum indaganda sagaces, furta omnia fuisse licita & impunita (13). Bertrand supposes it to be a Treatise Of Theft, since Aulus Gellius quotes it particularly, as knowing, that Aristotle was Author of several Books.

ARISTOTLE, commonly called the Prince of Philosophers, or The Philosopher, by way of Excellence, was the Founder of a Sect, which surpassed, and at length swallowed, up all the rest (a). Not but that It has had it's Reverse of Fortune (b) in it's turn; especially in This XVIIth Century, in which it has been violently shaken; though the Catholic Divines, on the one side, and the Protestant, on the other, have run (as to the quenching of a Fire) to it's Relief; and fortified themselves so strongly, by the Secular Arm, against the New Philosophy, that it is not like to lose it's Dominion of a long time. Mr Moreri met with so many good Materials in a Work of Father Rapin (c), that he has given a very large Article of Aristotle, enough to dispense with my Assistance. Accordingly, I design not to enlarge upon it as far as the Subject might allow, but shall content myself with observing, in the Remarks, some of the Errors, which I have collected, concerning This Philosopher. I think I have discovered some in Father Rapin's Account [A]. It is not a certain, that [A] I have discovered some Errors in Father Rapin's Account of Aristotle. This Remark will be pretty long; I shall therefore divide it.

I. To say that, Aristotle, though he had forsaken his Studies, out of meer Libertinism, and had abused his Tutor's Indulgence for some time, succeeded nevertheless in

(a) Aristotle, more Ottomano-sar, regnare se haud tuto posse putabat, nisi fratres suos omnes contrucidasset. ----- Aristotle, like the Turkish Emperor, thought he could not reign in Safety, till he had slain all his Brethren. Bacon, de Augment. Scient. lib. 3. cap. 4.

(b) See Mr Lamoignon's Book, de Variis Aristotelis fortuna.

(c) Comparison of Plato and Aristotle.

that Aristotle exercised Pharmacy in Atbens, while he was a Disciple of Plato (d); nor is it more certain, that he did not. Very little Credit ought to be given to a current Tradition, that he learnt several Things of a Jew [B], and much less to the Story

(d) See Remark [A].
n. 2.

in Poetry; witness the Poem, which he composed on the Death of the Heroes, who were killed at the Siege of Troy (1); is no just way of Reasoning; for, if Euphantius and Porphyry, who mention This Poem, do not expressly say, that Aristotle composed it in his Youth (2), we may imagine, that he wrote it after his return to his Studies; and then this Poem can be no longer alleged as a Proof, of the Progress which he made in Poetry, notwithstanding his Libertine Courses.

II. To say, that, having by his Debaucheries consumed part of the Estate, which his Father had left him, he lifted himself in the Troops of the Republic (3); is an improper, and a very indeterminate, Way of Expression. If the question were concerning a Person, who was born at Atbens, or Lacedemon, the Expression might be proper enough, but it relates to a Native of Macedonia. Athenæus knew of but one Author, who had said, that Aristotle, having consumed his Patrimony, lifted himself; and, finding, that the Profession of Arms was not his Talent, set up to sell Drugs (4). The sole Author of This Story was Epicurus. It is very probable, that Ælian had it from him (5). Aristotle, who rejected it, quotes only Epicurus (6). Be this as it will, none of the Authors, whom Father Rapin quotes, specify in what Troops Aristotle served; and all of them range Matters in this Order. First, Aristotle spent his Estate, then he went to the Wars, afterwards he set up a Shop, and at last addicted himself to Plato's Lectures. Father Rapin will have it, that he was at the same time both a Druggist, and a Disciple of Plato. The Authors, whom he quotes (7), say nothing of this Union of the two Professions. But he ought not, I think, to be censured for this; for it seems probable enough, that Aristotle, after he had spent his Estate, was forced to drive a small Trade in sweet Powder, and Medicines, at Athens, to subsist himself for some time. This Father Rapin says, in relation to the time when Aristotle studied Philology. Francis Patricius goes much farther; he believes, that Aristotle was Plato's Disciple till the Age of forty Years, and that he exercised Pharmacy all That Time for a Livelihood. Satis constat inter omnes ad quadragesimum usque ætatis annum Platoni fuisse auditorem; quo universo tempore pharmacopolii arte nec non etiam medicæ vitiis quæritasse satis est & historiæ & rationi conjunctum (8). He adds, that, formerly, Physicians exercised the Apothecaries Trade; and that three Reasons induce us to believe, that Aristotle was a Physician. He was of a Family for such a Profession; He composed a Book concerning Health and Sickness; and he excited Alexander to the Study of Physic, in which That Monarch acquired no small Skill, both in the Theory, and in the Practice (9). Lastly, Patricius alleges the Testimony of Timæus. This Historian has spoken very ill of Aristotle, and reproached him expressly with shutting up a Shop of most excellent Medicines. Τὸ πολὺ ἱμῶν ἰατρῶν ἀποκεκλειότα (10). Qui precioso tabernam medicam clausit. I know not whether I may be permitted to conjecture, that Timæus sneered in making use of the Epithet πολυῖμων. Without which, I cannot see how this Passage of Suidas is to be reconciled with what Eusebius cites from the same Timæus. He gives us a Fragment, in which a Peripatetic answers several Calumnies published against Aristotle, and particularly That of the Historian Timæus, who had said, that Aristotle, in his old Age, shut up his Shop of Medicines, which was grown into Contempt: Ἡ πᾶς ἀν τις ἀποδέξαστο τιμῶν τῶν ταυρομενῶν λέγοντος ἐν ταῖς ἰσότησιν, ἀδῶκε θυρὰς αὐτῶν ἰατρῶν καὶ τὰς τυχεύσας, ἐλὲ τῆς ηλικίας, καλεῖσθαι (11). This Passage has been very ill translated; for the Latin Translation makes Timæus say, that Aristotle, in his old Age, was hired to shut up the Shop of an Apothecary of small Reputation. Quis Timæum Taurorūm audit dum suis in historiis illum ait affecta jam ætate, neglectis obscuri cuiusdam Medici officinæ claudendis foribus præfuisse. Is not this an Employ highly worthy of Aristotle's old Age? What Honour to be Porter to an Apothecary, or Physician, scarce known to his next Neighbours!

III. Father Rapin (12) tells us, that Clemens Alexandrinus affirms, that Aristotle had Conferences at Athens with a Jew, with a Design of being instructed in the Religion of the Egyptians. Eusebius has said the same; and both believe it on the Testimony of Clearchus the Peripatetic. These Words stand in need of being greatly qualified; for, I. All that Clemens Alexandrinus affirms amounts only to this, that Clearchus the Peripatetic had said, that he knew a Jew, who had conversed with Aristotle. Κλέαρχος ὁ Περιπατητικὸς εἰδέναι φησὶ τινὰ Ἰουδαῖον ὃς Ἀριστοτέλει συνεγίνετο (13). Clearchus Peripateticus dicit se nosse quendam Judæum, qui cum Aristotele versatus est. As for the Place, and Subject, of these Conversations, you must enquire of any one else, rather than of Clemens Alexandrinus. II. It is not true, that Eusebius affirms any thing upon this Head; he only cites the Words of Clemens Alexandrinus. III. Clearchus, to whom he directs us, as the first Source, does not say, that Aristotle had any Conversation with a Jew at Atbens, but on the contrary, that it was in Asia (14); neither does he say, that they discoursed concerning the Religion of the Egyptians, or any other particular Subject. I believe, if we had his Book, we should find an exact Account of this Matter in it; but we have only a Passage of it, which was cited by Josephus, in his first Book against Apion, to shew, that the Jewish Nation was not unknown to the Greeks. If Father Rapin had consulted the Originals, would he have said, that, to avoid the loss of time, which must have been spent in travelling into Egypt, which was then believed necessary towards the acquisition of Learning, it is probable, that Aristotle was satisfied with being instructed in the Mysteries and Religion of the Egyptians? Was he not actually travelling in Asia, when he had these Conversations, if we may believe Clearchus? We shall see, in the Remark [B], whether he deserves Credit.

IV. It is not true, that Hermias gave his Sister Pythias in Marriage to Aristotle (15). See towards the end of the Remark [F].

V. Father Rapin's other Faults, which I have observed, are distributed in the following Remarks.

[B] Very little Credit ought to be given to a current Tradition, that he learned several Things of a Jew.] This Tradition has no other Foundation than the above mentioned Passage of Clearchus. This Passage would be of no small Authority, did it certainly belong to That Clearchus, who was one of Aristotle's most famous Disciples. But, according to all Appearances, it belongs to another Clearchus: For, first of all, the Author, quoted by Josephus, says, that Aristotle met with a Jew in his Travels in Asia, who had afterwards several Conferences with him, and with some other Men of Letters. ἡμῶν τε καὶ τῶν ἐτέρας τῶν σχολαστικῶν. Learned Men pretend, that, in Aristotle's Time, the Word σχολαστικὸς was not used to signify a Scholar, a Disciple, or a Student (16). However it be, as this Journey into Asia cannot be reconciled with Aristotle's History, it is not probable, that one of his Disciples should have invented a Story of This kind, which he himself, and others, knew to be false. It is therefore a more modern Clearchus, who supposed this Journey; and he might do it sincerely; for it is well known, that Solinus asserts, that Aristotle followed Alexander in his Wars against Darius (17). The anonymous Author of the Life of Aristotle (18) says the same thing. II. If it were true, that Aristotle had had many Conferences with so able a Jew, as He, who is mentioned in the Passage of Clearchus, would he have believed, what he says concerning the Origin of the Jews? Would he have said, that the Jews were descended from the Calatins, a People of the Indies, and that they took the Name of Jews in Syria, because they possessed a Province, which was called Judea? That is what Aristotle says, in the Passage of Clearchus, quoted by Josephus. Would his Jew have left him in such a childish Error? And should we have found so few Traces of Judea, and the Jewish Nation, in all Aristotle's Writings, after such full Information, as the

(12) Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, p. 304.

(13) Clemens Alex. Strom. lib. 1. p. 304.

(14) Τὸ τοῦ διατριβήσαντος ἡμῶν περὶ τῶν Ἀσίων. Notum in Asia forte degentibus. It is Aristotle, who speaks, in this Book of Clearchus, de Sorano, apud Josephum, lib. 1. contra Apionem, & apud Eusebium. Præp. 1. 9. c. 5. p. 410.

(15) Rapin's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, p. 306.

(16) Jonstus, de Script. Hist. Philo. p. 99.

(17) Cap. 14. apud Jonstium, ib. p. 100.

(18) Ammonius, according to Philoponus, according to others. See the Notes of Nunneus on this Life, n. 44.

(1) Rapin's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, p. 3-3.

(2) Father Rapin does not say, 't'at they make this Remark.

(3) Id. ib.

(4) Athen. lib. 8. pag. 354.

(5) Ælian. Var. Hist. 1. 5. c. 9.

(6) Apud Euseb. Præp. lib. 1. c. 2. p. 791.

(7) Aristoteles Messen. ex. Epist. Epicuri. Ælian. lib. 5. cap. 9. Athen. 1. 8.

(8) Fr. Patricius, Difficult. Peripat. Tom. 1. p. 3.

(9) Plutarch. in Alexandro.

(10) Timæus, apud Suidam, in 'Αριστοτέλει.

(11) Aristoteles, apud Euseb. Præp. lib. 1. cap. 2. p. 791.

Story of his pretended Conversion to Judaism. They, who pretend, that he was born a Jew, are much more grossly mistaken [C]. The wrong Pointing of a certain Passage occasioned this Mistake (e). They are deceived, who say, that he was a Disciple of Socrates for Three Years successively [D]; for Socrates died Twelve or Fifteen Years before Aristotle was born. Aristotle's Behaviour towards his Master Plato is variously related [E]. Some will have it, that, through prodigious Vanity and Ingratitude, he

the Jew might have given him? III. We read, in Diogenes Laërtius, that the Gymnosophists descended from the Magi, and that there were some, who gave the Jews the same Origin (19). These are two different Facts: As to the first, it is delivered on the Testimony of Clearchus, the Disciple of Aristotle; but no Authority is produced for the second. Was not This the most favourable Opportunity, and the most indispenable, for quoting Clearchus concerning This pretended Indian Origin of the Jewish Nation, mentioned by Josephus? If the Book de Somno, in which Aristotle speaks of their Indian Origin, had been the same Clearchus's, who is cited by Diogenes Laërtius (20), would he not have been alluded to? I pass over Jonfus's other Reasons; these three are sufficient to persuade me (21), that Aristotle never said what the Clearchus of Josephus would make him say. I must therefore agree in Opinion with those, who think it wrong in Cunæus to treat Aristotle so ill for a Piece of Folly, which he never was guilty of. "Petrus Cunæus lib. 1. de Repub. Hebr. cap. 4. "Aristotelem falsè nimis & temere perstringit, quod hic apud Clearchum statuat Judæos ab Indiæ sapientibus esse propagatos: Verba Cunæi hæc sunt. "Portentosum est & cum summa injuria consensum, quod Aristoteles apud Clearchum autumavit, Judæos esse ab Indiæ sapientibus propagatos, sed nomen mutavit. Quippe philosophos illos, qui apud Indos Callani appellantur, in cava Syria Judæos dici. "Pudet me antistitis, adeo hoc nihil est (22). . . . "Petrus Cunæus, in Book 1. of the Hebrew Republic, Chap. 4. censures Aristotle too severely and unjustly, for pretending, as cited by Clearchus, that the Jews sprang from the Indian Philosophers. Cunæus's Words are: It is monstrous, and attended with the greatest Ignorance, what Aristotle, in Clearchus, conjectures, that the Jews were descended from the Philosophers of India, but had changed their Name; for that Thof. Philosophers, who, among the Indians, are called Callani, in Cælo-Syria are called Jews." It may be objected, that Clearchus was acquainted with the Jew, who had converted with Aristotle; so that he must have been cotemporary with him; but I deny, that Clearchus had any Knowledge of him. Josephus does not say it; it is Clemens Alexandrinus, who adds this Clause; perhaps he quotes by Memory, which is the surest way to pervert a Passage, even as to the most essential Circumstances. See the Carelessness of Translators! He, who translated Eusebius (23), renders εὐδαιμῶν by wisdom; and the Translator of Clemens Alexandrinus is content with wise. It is not a necessary Consequence, that an Author lived at the same time with another Person, because it is said, that he knew one, who had done, or said This, or That; since his meaning might be, that he knew the Books, in which such Persons had said so or so; but when it is said, that an Author had seen such or such a one, the Consequence then is plain, that they must have been Contemporaries (24). This admits of no Difficulty; and, consequently, the Translator of Eusebius has taken a Liberty, which, being added to That of Clemens Alexandrinus, strangely falsifies the Consequences, which may be drawn from the Passage of Clearchus, as cited by Josephus. There are Jews, who affirm, not only that Aristotle had copied Salomon's Works, but that he became likewise a Proleptist of Righteousness (25). Not satisfied with this, They produce a Letter, which they suppose he wrote to Alexander to give him an Account of his Conversion. This Letter you will find in a Work of Rabbi Gedalia Ben Jacob, and in the Modern Theologia (26) Judaica of Mr Lent, Professor of Divinity at Herborn. Read also this Passage of Mr Cunæus. Father Bartolacci, pag. 471, of the first Volume of his Bibliotheca magna Rabbinnica "relates a Story, void of all probability, which the Rabbins tell us of Aristotle. Some of them pretended, that he was born of the Seed of Israel,

"and descended from the Children of Coba, of the Tribe of Benjamin. Others of them say, that he was not originally a Jew, but that, towards the end of his life, he embraced their Religion. They add, that he borrowed all his Philosophy from Salomon's Books, which were found in the City of Jerusalem, when it was taken by Alexander, and that he, afterwards, burnt them, to have all the Honour of the Wisdom, they contained. They add farther, that, to justify the change of his Religion, he wrote a Letter to Alexander, which is inserted entire in That Part of the Great Bibliotheca; and in which the Rabbins make him say, that Logic is an Iniquity, that Philosophy is Falshood and Deceit, and that Misery attends Those, who study it; because that, by means of the Disputes, which it leads them into, they go down to Hell (27)." Selden quotes Jewish Authors, who have affirmed, first, That, a little before Aristotle died, he communicated to his Disciples the Doctrine, which he had learnt from the Hebrews, concerning the Immortality of the Soul, and the Punishments and Rewards of a future State. Secondly, That, as to the Points, in which his Doctrine contradicted the Law, he was converted, and became another Man, by the Instructions of the High-Priest, Simon the Just (28).

[C] They, who pretend, that he was born a Jew, are grossly mistaken.] The Foundation of This Mistake is this. The Ancient Translation of Josephus by George of Trebizond runs thus; aque ille, inquit, Aristoteles Judæus erat, instead of aque ille, inquit Aristoteles, Judæus erat. Upon this Marsilius Ficinus ventured to say, that, according to the Testimony of Clearchus, Aristotle was a Jew. Clearchus Peripateticus scribit Aristotelem fuisse Judæum (29). Genebrard fell into the same Mistake. Es de causa fortasse Clearchus Peripateticus scribit Aristotelem fuisse Judæum (30). This Jonfus informs me of (31). I shall not imitate Schoockius, who has adorned himself with these Spoils, without giving the Honour where it is properly due (32). But, if we understand a Jew by Religion, and not by Birth, the Source of This Mistake must be searched for higher.

[D] They are deceived, who say, that he was a Disciple of Socrates for three Years successively.] The Life of Aristotle, ascribed to Ammonius, or to John Philoponus, contains this Error. The Learned Nunneus, who wrote Observations on This Life, says, that he met with no one among the Ancients, except Olympiodorus, who says, that Aristotle had been a Disciple of Socrates *. He adds, that Cardinal Bessarion † fell into the same Mistake, and that Leonard Aretin, in the sixth Book of his Letters, and Odavian Ferrarius, in his Work de Sermonibus exotericis, have shewed the Anachronism.

[E] Aristotle's Behaviour towards his Master Plato is variously related.] Diogenes Laërtius says, that Plato, seeing that Aristotle had deserted him, said; He kicks against us, as Colts do against their Dams (33). Ælian explains this Thought of Plato. The Colt, he says, kicks the Dam after being filled with her Milk: So Aristotle, having learnt the first Rules and Principles of Philosophy from Plato, and, finding himself well fed with the excellent Pasture, which his Master had supplied him with, spurned at him, and set up a School, to rival His (34). Consult Helladius, who changes the Ideas a little; for he employs the Comparison of a Horse, which bites his Sire. Ἀριστοτέλης ὁ τῷ περιπατῶν προπάτρης ὑπὸ Πλάτωνος ἰππῷ ἐκτροφέντῳ ἐναντιῶνται δὸκῶν τῷ δίδασκαλῷ καὶ γὰρ ὁ ἵππος τὸν αὐτῷ φιλοῦ πατέρα δάκνεν (35). Aristotle, Head of the Peripatetic School, was called by Plato The Horse, because he opposed his Master; it being common for the Horse to bite his Sire. But there is still something worse. Ælian relates, in another Place (36), that Aristotle offended Plato by going too magnificently

(e) See Remark [C].

(19) Diog. Laërt. in Proemio, n. 19.

(20) Tb. it is of Him, who was the Disciple of Aristotle.

(21) Notes, that Schoockius, Fabrice Hamelenius, part. 2. cap. 12. alledge, almost Word for Word, the fine Observations of Jonfus, without citing him.

(22) Jonfus, de Script. Hist. Phil. pag. 98.

(23) De Præp. lib. 15. p. 410.

(24) Provided always, that the Witness be sincere.

(25) Apud Buxtorf citante Konig. Bibl. p. 101.

(26) This Book was printed at Herborn, in 1694.

(27) Jornal des Sçavans, of the 14th of July, 1695, pag. 45. Edit. of Holland.

(28) See Seldenus, de Jure Naturæ & Gentium, lib. 1. cap. 1. pag. 14, 15. Edit. Lipsæ 1695.

(29) Marsili. Ficini de Christ. Relig. cap. 26.

(30) Genebrardi Chronol. ad Ann. 267.

(31) Jonf. de Script. Hist. Philol. pag. 100.

(32) Schoock ubi supra.

* Præxi XLII. in Gorgium Platonia.

† Lib. 2. Advect. Columniator.

(33) Diog. Laërt. lib. 5. n. 2. in vita Aristot.

(34) Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. 4. cap. 9.

(35) Helladius, apud Photii Biblioth. pag. 1589.

(36) Ælian. lib. 3. c. 19.

he set up Altar against Altar; that is, erected a School in Athens, during Plato's Life, and in opposition to him; others say, that he did not set up for a Professor till after his Master's Death. We are told some things concerning his Amours [F], which are not altogether to his Advantage. It was pretended, that his Conjugal Affection was Idolatrous; and that, if he had not retired from Athens, the Process for Irreligion, which the Priests had entered against him [G], would have been attended with the same Consequences, as That against Socrates. Though he deserved very great Praise, yet it is certain, that most of the Errors concerning him magnificently habited, by an Air of Raillery, and by talking a little too much; which made Plato transfer his Friendship to some other of his Disciples. Aristotle, having formed a Party, made use of an Opportunity, which the Absence of Xenocrates, and the Sickness of Speusippus offered him. These were Plato's Sword and Buckler, as we may say. It was easy, in the Absence of these, to insult him. Accordingly he went with a great Number of Disciples to Plato's School. The good old Man, being eighty Years of Age, had almost lost his Memory: Aristotle, taking Advantage of his Master's Infirmary, put several captious Questions to him, pushed him through every Retreat of his Logic, and proudly triumphed over him. After This Affront, the good Man taught no more in public, but kept at home with his Disciples. Aristotle took Possession of his Place: But Xenophon, at his Return to Athens, finding how things had passed, reprimanded Speusippus severely, for having suffered Aristotle to take Possession of the School; and gave the Uurper so much Disturbance, as obliged him to quit the Post, and re-established the first Master. If Aristotle acted thus, he deserved to be detested; but I believe the Story to be false. His Followers have maintained, that he wanted neither Respect nor Gratitude towards his Master. His having been the Author of another Sect of Philosophy was no Argument, that he was deficient in either. The other Platonists would have been in the wrong to have expected him to follow Plato in every thing. Did Plato add nothing to the Lights, which he received from Socrates? However this be, it is affirmed, in the Life of Aristotle, that he did not set up a School in the Lycæum during his Master's Life-time; and for this Reason, because Chabrias and Timotheus, who were both of them related to Plato, and at that Time very powerful in Athens, would not have suffered it. They add, that Aristotle erected an Altar to Plato, with an honourable Inscription, and that he did not teach in Athens, 'till after the Death of Speusippus, who succeeded Plato. Lastly, it is observed, that he did not take this Employ upon himself of his own mere Motion, but at the Solicitation of the Athenians, who sent Deputies to him for that Purpose. The old Latin Translation of this Life of Aristotle is sometimes more ample than the Original. As for Example; in the Place, where the Author denies, that Aristotle set up a School during Plato's Life, the Translation remarks, that it was a Calumny of Aristoxenus, and Aristoteles. The Greek has nothing of This. See what Eusebius cites from the seventh Book of This Aristoteles; you will there find a Passage of Aristoxenus, which seems to contain This Accusation against Aristotle, in general, and somewhat obscure Terms; and likewise see, that Aristoteles, having refuted several other Accusations, drops the Cause, as to the Ingratitude of This Disciple (37). So that Father Rapin was much deceived (38), when he said, that Eusebius justifies him entirely from This Repræch (39). I cannot conceive, why this Jesuit has joined Ammonius and Philoponus, as two different Apologists, with Eusebius; for the Life of Aristotle, which he cites, belongs but to one Author; to Ammonius according to some, to Philoponus according to others.

[F] We are told some things concerning his Amours. There is a strange Complication of Impurities on this Head. His Calumniators report, that He retired to Hermias, who commanded in Atarnus, a small Town of Myfia, near the Hellepont; and that Hermias had a very criminal Compliance for him; "Οὐ οὐ πὲν εἰς αὐτὸν ἦν ἡ ἀρετὴ αὐτῶν (40); Quem alii quidem delicias ad usus ipsius fuisse tradunt; that he gave him his Daughter, or his Niece, in Marriage; and that, finding him to be in Love with his Concubine, he made a Present of her to him (41); that Aristotle was so dotingly fond of This Lady, that, having married her, he offered a Sacrifice to Her, like That, which the Athenians offered to Ceres; and that he testified his Acknowledgment to Hermias, by an Hymn, which he composed in his Honour.

My Readers need not be told, that these Calumnies did not proceed from one and the same Pen; some told one Story, some another. One of Aristotle's Apologists has observed, that they did not all agree in charging him with one and the same Accusation; but that each Censor came with his particular Satire (42). This, it may be said, is a Sign they did not act in Concert; let me add, that it is a Sign they had no good Proof of any thing; for when a serious Accusation is once proved, all who write against the accused, eternally reproach him with it. The same Apologist observes, that the particular Accusations, which were drawn up against Aristotle, amounted to so great a Number of Crimes, that, if but one of them had been true, he would certainly have been punished by the Judges then in being. His Enemies gave out, among other things, that he had betrayed his Country, and that Letters were intercepted, which he had written to the Prejudice of the Athenians (43). To return to Aristotle's Wife; some pretend, that it was after her Death, that her Husband offered such Sacrifices to her, as the Athenians offered to Ceres. ὅτι δὲν Ἀριστοτέλει θύσας τέλει ἡκούσῃ τῇ γυναικὶ τοιαύτην Ἀθῆναιος τῷ Δῆμον (44). Scribit (Quod Cereræ ad Atheniensibus fecerat, demortuæ uxori facere solitum. Aristoteles answered, I. That Apellicon's Books, concerning the Intercourse of Hermias with Aristotle, fully justified these two Friends. II. That Aristotle had sufficiently justified himself as to his Marriage with Pythias, in the Letters, which he wrote to Antipater. This Pythias was the Sister of Hermias, and his adopted Daughter. Aristotle made it appear, that he did not marry her, 'till after the Death of Hermias; that she was a very virtuous Woman, but reduced to so deplorable a Condition, by the Death of her Brother, that he thought himself obliged to marry her out of a regard to Hermias.

[G] The Process for Irreligion, which the Priests had entered against him.] The Circumstances of this Affair are not known. Diogenes Laërtius has only told us (45), that Eurymedon, the Priest, accused Aristotle of Impiety, on account of an Hymn, which he had composed in Honour of Hermias, and an Inscription, engraved on the Statue of the same Hermias, in the Temple of Delphi. Phavorinus imputes the Accusation to Demophilus (46). It cannot be conceived by what Quirks of Law the Accusers could draw the least Shadow of a Proof from the Inscription to Hermias. It consists of four Verses, which have no Relation to Things Sacred, but are only leveled against the Perfidiousness of the King of Perfia to This unhappy Friend of Aristotle. Athenæus informs us, that the Ground of the other Accusation, to wit, the Hymn composed for Hermias, was unjust, since it was no Religious Poem, nor sacred Piece, as Demophilus pretended (47). Athenæus adds, that, to give the greater weight to the Accusation, Eurymedon had suborned Demophilus (48). It is probable, that Demophilus was some Person of Quality, and of great Authority in Athens. Perhaps he did not see to the Bottom of the Sacerdotal Craft; nor apprehend, that Eurymedon, the Priest, desired his Countenance, only to render poor Aristotle the more suspected. He expected, that People would Reason after this manner: If only the Priests had accused Aristotle, the Evil might be born withal; their great Piety makes them

(41) Aristoteles in primo de ant. quæ de licia libro apud Laërtium, ubi supra.

(42) Aristoteles, apud Euseb. Præp. lib. 15. cap. 22.

(43) Id. ib.

(44) Id. ib.

(45) In vita Aristot. lib. 5. n. 5.

(46) Phavorinus in omnimoda Historia, apud Laërtium, ibid.

(47) Athenæus lib. 15. cap. 16. pag. 696.

(48) See the Notes of Ca. lauson on Athenæus, pag. 584.

W H V A. J. Reas. to fear the Priests, his Accusers.

(37) Eusebii Præp. Evangel. lib. 15. cap. 22.

(38) Rapin's Compar. of Plato and Aristotle, pag. 305.

(39) It cannot be Eusebius, who justified him; it must have been Aristotle. But neither one nor the other justify him.

(40) Diogenes Laërt. in vit. Aristot. n. 3.

(f) Essey Pardies, in a letter from a Peripatetic to a Cartesian, says, that this is the Opinion of a great Wit; and cites in the Martin, Corn. de La-
pide, Pref.
in Ecclesi.

him are to be looked for in the extravagant Commendations, which have been heaped upon him: As for Example; Is it not a downright Falshood, to say, That, if Aristotle spoke, in his Natural Philosophy, like a Man, he spoke, in his Moral Philosophy, like a God (f): And that it is a question, whether, in his Moral Philosophy, he partakes more of the Lawyer, than of the Priest; more of the Prophet, than of the Prophet; more of the Prophet, than of the God (g)? I shall, in the Remarks, touch upon some Praises bestowed on him, which are still greater than these [H]. Cardinal Pallavicini scruples not, in some measure, to confess, That, if it had not been for Aristotle, the

(g) This is the Op. of a great Wit, a citing in Father
Pardies, ib.

(40) Art. en.
pag. 696. B.

(50) Id.
pag. 697. A.

(51) Diog.
Lacrt. vit.
Aristot.
li. 9.

(52) Nume.
Nec. in
vit. Arist.
pag. 147.

(53) Origen.
contra Cel-
sum, lib. 1.

(54) Ibid.
lib. 2.

(55) Albin.
lib. 3. cap.
36. See also Ammonius in vita Ari-stot. Origen.
contra Cel-
sum, lib. 1.
Diog. Lacrt.
in Aristot.
li. 9.

(56) Diog.
Lacrt. in
vit. Arist.
li. 8.

subject to be alarmed at the least Thing, which affects Religion: but here is Demophilus, who is so scandalized at Aristotle's Impiety, that he openly demands Justice against him; the Evil must needs be very great. The Hymn in question is preserved. It is to be found in Athenæus, and in Diogenes Laërtius; and there is not the least Trace of Irreligion in it. But, doubtless, his Accusers alleged, that Aristotle profaned the use of Divine Hymns, by employing them in the Praises of a Mortal Man. They maintained, that he sung This Hymn daily at his Meals (49). Aristotle, not willing to rely on the good Construction, which might be made of his little Poem, retired quietly to Chalcis, in Eubœa, and pleaded his Cause, in writing, at a Distance. Athenæus reports some Words of This Apology; but does not warrant them to be really Aristotle's (50). Phavorinus affirms, in Diogenes Laërtius, that Aristotle wrote a Speech, at that time, in the Judiciary Style, and that he was the first, who composed such Speeches in his own Cause; or that this was the first time he made them for himself (51). Nunneius affirms, that Seneca, de vita beata, observes, that Aristotle made but This one in his whole Life-Time (52). However it be, his safest way was to plead his Cause at a Distance; for his Accusers were Men, who would never have given him any Quarter, but have set all Engines at Work, till they had found one, which would have done the Business. It was impossible to great a Wit as He should not sometimes laugh at the Impertinence of the publick Worship of the Athenians, and speak his Sentiments of Priest-Craft. All, that he had ever said in Conversation, would have been raked up; Witnesses would have been heard; in a Word, he would have been effectually crushed. Besides, who knows, but, at some time or other, a Real Impiety might have elapsed him; when, intending to speak only of the immutuable Greatness of the Supremely-Perfect Being? Origen says, that The Action of Impiety, which his Accusers would have brought against him, was founded on some of his Doctrines (53). He says, in another place, that it is a Tenet of the Peripatetics, that Prayers and Sacrifices are useless (54). It is probable they built this Doctrine on This false Principle; that infinite Wisdom knows, at all times, what is fit to be done; and that it does not alter its purpose according to the Desires or Interests of Men; as if the Divinity stood in need of our Prayers, as Notices or Hints, not to do That, which we believe he is prepared to do. Such a Principle, if not rectified by the Lights of Religion, is a real Impiety. Aristotle could never have escaped the Athenian Priests, if they had held him to This Point. His Answer to those, who demanded the Reason of his Retreat, shews, that he feared, they would find good, or bad, Proofs against him. I would not willingly be the Cause of the Athenians being guilty of a second Injustice against Philosophy. The first Injustice was the Death of Socrates. Πρὸς τὸν ἐρώμενον ἰδὲ τὴν ἀπαιτῆς τὸς Ἀθηναίους, ἀπεκρίνατο ὅτι ὁ βέλτερος Ἀθηναίος δὲ ἐξέμαρψεν εἰς φιλοσοφίαν τὸ περὶ Σωκράτη παρὰ τοὺς ἀντιθέμενους, καὶ τὸν αὐτὸν κτείνον (55). Interroganti cur reliquistes Athenas, respondit: quoniam nolisset committere, ut Atheniensibus peccarent in Philosophiam: obsequere Socratis mortem imminere, & suum periculum. He made use of one of Homer's Verses, to signify, that it was not safe living in a City, where the Race of Informers never decreased, but one regularly succeeded another. We may reasonably suppose, that he acknowledged himself guilty of having personally offended Eurymedon, the Priest of Ceres (56), by some Stroke of Raillery; which kindled the Zeal of this Personage, who had suffered the pretended Impiety of the Hymn to lie dormant for twenty Years. It is more dangerous to offend these Gentlemen in their own Persons, than in the Persons of their Gods. See the Remark [R], where we shall relate the Opinions of some Authors concerning the Cause of Aristotle's Flight. I have observed, at the End of the Article, that Hesychius affirms, that he was actually condemned, and executed at Athens. I use no Hyperbole in the Expression of twenty Years; since Aristotle had taught thirteen Years at Athens, when the Process of Irreligion obliged him to retire to Chalcis (57). He did not return to Athens, till he had instructed Alexander, whose Preceptor he was not, till after the Death of Hermias.

[H] I shall touch upon some Praises, bestowed on him, which are still greater than these. "Acerroes has said, that, before Aristotle's Birth, Nature was incomplete; that, in him, it received it's last Accomplishment, and the Perfection of it's Being; that it could go no farther; that there was the Extremity of it's Power, and the Limits of human Understanding. Another Philosopher has outdone "Acerroes, by saying, that Aristotle was a second "Nature." Those are Balzac's Words, in the Four hundred and fifty ninth Page of the Discourses, which were printed after his Christian Socrates. This puts me in mind of the Scruples of an Author, who, seeing that Nature herself subscribed to Aristotle's Opinions, durst never doubt of what he had said. Rege & hoc Aristoteles, ut cetera; nec possum non assensum esse, ejus inventis nec ipsa natura dissentit (58). A Spanish Divine says, that, without the particular Assistance of an Angel, or Genius, the Wit of Man cannot penetrate to far into the Secrets of Nature, as Aristotle has done (59). He must have believed, then, that Aristotle had a good, or an evil, Angel, which instructed him in a thousand things, to which human Understanding could not attain. William, Bishop of Paris, mentions, "in several Parts of his "Works (60), that This Philosopher had a Familiar "Spirit, who directed all his Actions, whom he "caused to descend from the Sphere of Venus, by "sacrificing a strangled Lamb, and some other Ceremonies." Others have said, that he stood in no need of such Assistance. It was the "Opinion of "the famous Divine Henry de Asse (61), that Aristotle could have acquired as perfect a Knowledge "in Theology, by the Light of Nature, as That, "which was discovered to our first Father, when "he fell asleep in the Terrestrial Paradise (62), or to "St Paul, when he was snatched up into the Third "Heaven." A Council, which was held in France, under Philip Augustus, ordered Aristotle's Metaphysics to be burnt. An English Doctor, of the Order of St Augustin (63), has left in Writing, that it was commonly believed, in those Times, that none but Antichrist should be able thoroughly to understand Aristotle's Books; which he would make use of, to convince all those, who should enter into Dispute with him. Let us end this little Collection, with a Passage of Agrippa, who informs us, that the Divines of Cologne maintained, that Aristotle was the Fore-runner of the Messias, in the Mysteries of Nature, as St John Baptist was, in the Mysteries of Grace. "Dignissimus profecto hodie Latinorum gymnasium Doctor, & quem Colonienſes mei Theologi etiam divisim numerarent, librumque sub prælo evulgatum edere, cui titulum facerent de Salute Aristotelis (64); sed & alium versu & metro de vita & morte Aristotelis, quem Theologica insuper glossa illustrant, in ejus calce concludunt, Aristotelem sic fuisse Christi præcursores in Naturalibus, quem modum Joannes Baptista in Gratuitis (65). — "A most worthy Doctor of the Latin Schools, and whom my Countrymen, the Divines of Cologne, would even exalt to Divinity, and would publish a printed Work Of the Salvation of Aristotle; besides another "in Verse Of the Life and Death of Aristotle; which they have illustrated with a Theological Commentary, "at the end of which they conclude, that Aristotle was the Fore-runner of Christ in Natural Things, as John

(57) Ammon.
in eius vita.

(58) Ma-
crob. Natura.
lib. 7. c. 6.

(59) Medi- na, in Thom. Aquin. I. Secondæ.
Quest. 100.
Art. I. cited
by Naudé,
in his Ap-logy for great Men. pag.
317.

(60) De U- niverso Spi-ritu, Part. I.
cap. 92, 153.
& Part. II.
cap. 6. cited
by Naudé,
ubi supra,
pag. 328.

(61) Apud
Sibillam I.
Decad. peregri-Quest. cap.
8. Quest. I.
Quest. II.
IV. cited by Naudé, ubi supra, pag.
319.

(62) See Citation (11)
of the Art. de ADA M.

(63) Alex- ander Nec-cam, Lib.
de Natura Rerum, edited by la Mothe le Vayer, of the Fragments of the Pagans.
Oper. Tom.
5. pag. 103.
Edit. in 12mo.

(64) See the Remarks [R].

(65) Agrip- pa, de Van-nit. Scientiar. cap.
c. 4. pag. 95.
Baleus has copied this,
Cent. 14.
pag. 220.
See, below,
the Remark [U].

the Church would have wanted some of it's Articles of Faith [I]. The Christians are not the only People, who have authorized his Philosophy; the Mahometans (b) are little less prejudiced in it's Favour; and we are told, that, to this Day, notwithstanding the Ignorance, which reigns among them, They have Schools for this Sect [K]. It will be an everlasting Subject of Wonder to Persons, who know what Philosophy is, to find, that Aristotle's Authority was so much respected in the Schools, for several Ages, that, when a Disputant quoted a Passage from This Philosopher, He, who maintained the Thesis, durst not say Transeat, but must either deny the Passage, or explain it in his own way [L]. It is in this manner we treat the

(b) See Rapin's Comparison of Plot. and Aristotle, pag. 403.

(66) Tacit. in vita Agric. cap. 41.

(67) You will find many such, in the Speeches of Corningius, entituled Aristotelis Laudatio.

(68) See the Words of Suidas, below, Remark [Z], at the beginning.

(69) Plot. in Vita Phocionis, pag. 743. E.

(70) De Comparat. Platonis, & Aristotelis.

(71) Chap. 6. Art. 6. pag. 253.

(72) Pinacoth. I. pag. 204.

"John Baptist was in those of Grace." To speak impartially, and without any Prejudice, it may be said, that these extravagant Panegyrics do Aristotle's Memory more harm than good. These Words of Tacitus may, in some respect, be applied to them: "Pessimum inimicorum genus laudantes (66). — "Panegyristas are the worst of Enemies." So many just Praises may be bestowed on Aristotle (67), that they are inexcusable, who, not satisfied with them, have added others, which are hyperbolical.

Why were they not satisfied with saying, that he dipt his Pen in good Sense (68)? This is what all Philosophers ought to do, if the chief of the Stoics may be believed. "Ο Ζήνων ἐλάσεν ὅτι δέι τὸν φιλόσοφον εἰς τὴν ἀποκρίσιν/α παρέρχεται τὴν λέξιν (69). Zeno ait mente sinitum proferre Philosophum sermonem debere. They, who would see a Collection of the Praises given to Aristotle, would do well to read George of Trebizond (70). Pererius, in the first Chapter of the fifth Book of Principii; Justus Lipsius, in the fourth Differtation of the first Book Manuductionis ad Philosophiam Stoicam; Theodorus Angelutius, in his Answer to Francis Patricius, &c.

[I] Cardinal Pallavicini scruples not, in some measure, to confess, That, if it had not been for Aristotle, the Church would have wanted some of it's Articles of Faith.] The Author of the new Gospel of Cardinal Pallavicini does not fail (71) to make the most of these Words of the nineteenth Chapter of the eighth Book, n. 13. "Di cio si doveva in gran parte l'obbligazione ad Aristotele, il quale se non si fosse adoperato in distinguere accuratamente i generi delle ragioni, noi mancavamo di molti articoli di fede. — Great Thanks is due for this to Aristotle, who, if he had not taken the Pains to distinguish accurately the several kinds of reasonings, we should have wanted many Articles of Faith." This Encomium puts me in mind of a Passage of Nicetus Erythraeus, as great a Flatterer of Aristotle as any of them: He says, that was a vain Attempt, in the Subtle and Learned Patricius, to oppose the Doctrine of the Lycæum; a Doctrine, which can never be shaken, and which will always triumph over it's Rivals. "Altius Aristotelis auctoritas radices egit, quam ut cujusquam vim impetumque pertimefca: viget, semperque vigebit, hominis disciplina; tantumque quis existimabitur scire, quantum ex doctrinæ ejusdem fontibus haustum, intelligentia comprehension habuerit; ac nemo, cui cor sapiat, non satis esse ducet in iis, quæ ad Philosophiam pertinent, cum deo, ut ita dicam, philosophorum errare, quam cum aliis recte sapere, minorum gentium magistris. Itaque ille, omnibus in gymnasiis, ad sapientiam properantibus, dux semper habebitur: ille Theologorum quasi militiæ, adversus religionis nostræ hostes, definitiones, argumentorum copiam, & alia præclare dicta multa, tanquam amentatas hastas elargietur, quas illa Theologici lacertis ac viribus, de cælo suppedatis, torquet ac vibret (72). — Aristotle's Authority has taken too deep root, to fear the Attacks of any one.

The Doctrine of that great Man flourishes, and will for ever flourish; and each one will be esteemed learned, in proportion as he is versed in the Writings of this Philosopher; and indeed no Man of Sense, but would chuse, in Matters of Philosophy, to err with this God of the Philosophers, if I may be allowed to call him so, than to think right with Masters of an inferior Class. For this reason, he will be the Head of every School, which is in pursuit of true Wisdom; he will equip our militant Divines, against the Enemies of our Religion, with Definitions, Arguments, &c. which, as so many Weapons from Heaven, they may brandish by the Strength of their Theological Arms." To deal fairly, I think myself obliged to say, that Cardinal Pallavicini does not advance the Maxim alledged as from himself, nor as an Observation, of which he would inform the World, but only as a malicious Jest of Father Paul. He treats this Railery as impertinent, and says, that the Councils, in which Substance, Person, and Hypostasis, were so subtly distinguished, were equally exposed to it. In a Word, he does not deny the Fact, and is content to laugh at Those, who laugh at it (73). Father Paul, having set down the Decree of the sixth Session, shews what it was that had been censured in it, and, among other things, says, that they, who were versed in Ecclesiastical History, observed, that all the other Councils, put together, had not decided so many Articles, as That single Session, in which Aristotle had a great share, in having distinguished between the several kinds of Causes; and, that, without his Help, we should have wanted many Articles of Faith. In cbi haveva una gran parte Aristotele, coll' haver distinto esattamente tutti i generi di cause, a che, se egli non si fosse adoperato, noi mancavamo di molti articoli di fede (74). The Remonstrances of the Sorbonne, upon which the Parliament of Paris made an Order against Chymists, in the Year 1629, imported, that no one could oppose the Principles of Aristotle's Philosophy, without interfering with the Scholastic Divinity received in the Church (75). In the Year 1624, the Parliament of Paris banished three Persons, who ventured publicly to dispute against Aristotle's Philosophy; and forbade all Persons to vent the Propositions contained in their Theses, on pain of corporal Punishments, and to teach any Maxims contrary to ancient and approved Authors on pain of Death (76).

[K] To this Day the Mahometans — — — have Schools for This Sect.] The Peripatetic Philosophy "is so established every where, that no other is read in all Christian Universities. Even They, who are forced to receive the Impostures of Mahomet, teach the Sciences no otherwise than according to the Principles of the Lycæum, to which they are so attached, that Averroes, Alfarabius, Almubassar (77), and several other Arabian Philosophers, often iwerse from the Opinions of their Prophet, that they may not contradict Those of Aristotle, whom the Turks have translated into the Turkish and Arabic Languages, as Belonius * relates (78)." The Author, from whom I borrow these Words, says in another Volume (79), that, according to Olearius's Relation, the Persians have all Aristotle's Works, explained by several Arabian Commentators, who are wont to call his Philosophy the Goblet, or Drinking Cup, of the World. "Bergeron, says he, observes, in his Treatise of the Tartars, that they had Aristotle's Books translated into their Language, teaching his Doctrine, with as much Submission, as can be done here, at Samarcand, an University of the Great Mogul, and at present the chief City of the Kingdom of Uiber."

[L] Where a Disputant quoted a Passage from This Philosopher, He who maintained the Thesis, durst not say Transeat, but must either deny the Passage, or explain it in his own Way.] If any one think fit to contest this Fact, I refer him to several Courses of Philosophy, printed in the XVIth Century, where This Method is found to have been in use. The Author proves his Thesis, first by Authority, and afterwards by Reason. The Authoritative Proof are Passages out of Aristotle. The Answer to the Objections consists also of two Parts. First, Satisfaction given as to the Passages of Aristotle, which seem to oppose the Thesis, and which are Authoritative Proofs for the other Party: Afterwards an Answer is given to the Reasons; but great Care is taken never to say, I own that

(73) Ma quale stoltizia è quello Scherno, che di cio si doveva in gran parte l'obligatione ad Aristotele, &c. See Rapin's Reflexions on Philosophy, pag. 449.

(74) Father Paul's History of the Council of Trent. lib. 2. ad ann. 1547, pag. 234. Edit. of 1629.

(75) Rapin's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, p. 413.

(76) Marcure Francois, Tom. 10. p. 504.

(77) It should be Almubassar, or Almubassar.

(78) La Mothe le Vayer, of the Virtue of the Pagans, Tom. 5. p. 102.

(79) The 12th, pag. 245.

(i) See Remark [I], at the end.

(k) Hassel, in the Preface to the Anti-Spinoza of Wittichius, printed in 1690; and in the Preface to the Investigatio Epistolæ ad Hebraeos of the same Author, printed in 1692.

the Holy Scriptures in the Divinity Schools. The Parliaments, which have proscribed all other Philosophy, but That of Aristotle (i), are more excusable than the Doctors: For, whether the Members of Parliament were really persuaded, as is very probable, that This Philosophy was the best of any, or were not, the Public Good might induce them to prohibit New Opinions, lest the Academical Divisions should extend their malignant Influence to the Tranquillity of the State. What is most astonishing to Wise Men, is, that the Professors should be so strongly prejudiced in Favour of Aristotle's Philosophy. Had This Prepossession been confined to his Poetry, and Rhetoric, it had been less wonderful; but they were fond of the weakest of his Works; I mean his Logic, and Natural Philosophy [M]. This Justice however must be done to the blindest of his Followers, that they have deserted him, where he clashes with Christianity [N]. And this he did in Points of the greatest Consequence; since he maintained the Eternity of the World, and did not believe, that Providence extended itself to sublunary Beings. As to the Immortality of the Soul, it is not certainly known, whether he acknowledged it or no [O]. We shall take notice, in another Place, of the long Disputes, which have reigned in Italy, on This Subject. In the Year 1647, the Famous Capuchin Valerian Magni published a Work concerning the Atheism of Aristotle. About One Hundred and thirty Years before, Marc Anthony Venerius published a System of Philosophy, in which he discovered several Inconsistencies between Aristotle's Doctrine, and the Truths of Religion. Campanella maintained the same, in his Book de reductione ad Religionem, which was approved at Rome, in the Year 1630. It was, not long since, maintained, in Holland, in the Prefaces to some Books, that the Doctrine of This Philosopher differed but little from Spinozism (k). In the mean time, if some Peri-

patetics

that Aristotle believed so and so; nevertheless I deny, that my Thesis, wherein I maintain another Doctrine, is false. All Endeavours are made use of to give the objected Passages such a Sense, as may agree with the Matter in question. The same Method is still in use among Those of the Church of Rome, in the Divinity Schools, with regard to St. Austin, and Thomas Aquinas.

[M] The weakest of his Works; I mean his Logic, and Natural Philosophy.] To be convinced of the Weakness of these Works, we need only read Gassendus in his Exercitationes paradoxicae adversus Aristoteleos (80). He says enough there against Aristotle's Philosophy, in general, to persuade every unprejudiced Reader, that it is very defective; but he particularly ruins this Philosopher's Logic. He was preparing likewise a Criticism on his Natural Philosophy, his Metaphysics, and Ethics, in the same way; when, being alarmed at the formidable Indignation of the Peripatetic Party against him, he chose rather to drop his Work, than expose himself to their vexatious Persecutions.

Note, that no one pretends to deny, but that, in Aristotle's Logic, and Natural Philosophy, there are many things, which discover the Elevation and Profoundness of his Genius. This we may grant, and, at the same time, judge that Cassaubon's Elogium on him is somewhat too hyperbolic. "Ego pueros puto fuisse (socios in Logica) præ divino Aristotele; & eorum in hoc genere scripta ὁδὸν καὶ φάσμα præ Aristotelis Organo; quo opere omnia mortalium ingenia (divina aut de rebus divinis semper excipio) longe superavit (81). — I look upon the Logicians as Children, in Comparison of the Divine Aristotle, and their Writings on this Subject to be Trifles, when compared with Aristotle's Organum; in which Work he has surpassed all the Wits of Man; divine Subjects ever excepted. The same may be said of This Passage of Father Rapin; "Nothing appears to have been regular or settled in Logic before Aristotle". This great Genius, fraught with Reason, and Knowledge, searched so deep into the Abyss of Human Wit, that he penetrated all the Secrets of it by his nice Discernment of it's Operations. This vast Depth of human Thoughts had never yet been sounded: Aristotle was the first, who discovered a new Way of attaining to Science, by the Evidence of Demonstration, and by proceeding geometrically to Demonstration in the way of Syllogism, the most finished Production, and greatest Effort, of human Wit. This is, in Miniature, the whole Art and Method of Aristotle's Logic; which is so very sure a one, that there can be no perfect Certainty in reasoning but by this Method, which is a certain Rule for thinking right on what ever ought to employ our Thoughts (82)." This Philosopher's Treatise of Syllogisms may be commended as it deserves, without employing any such extravagant Expressions. There are several very sublime Questions in his Physics, which he discusses, and clears up, in a very masterly Way; but, in short, the main, the Grofs, of this Work is good for nothing; infelix operis summa. The chief Reason of This Defect is Aristotle's forsaking the Path, which the most excellent Naturalists took, who had philosophized before him. They believed, that all the Alterations, which happen in Nature, are only new Dispositions of the Particles of Matter; they admitted no Generation, properly speaking. This was the Doctrine, which he rejected (83); and, in so doing, was bewildered. For he was obliged to teach, that new Beings are produced, and others destroyed; he distinguished them from Matter; he gave them unheard-of Names, he affirmed, or supposed, things, of which he had no distinct Ideas. Now it is as impossible to philosophize justly without the Evidence of Ideas, as to sail without the Polar Star, or the Compass. To abandon this Evidence is to be beside one's self; it is to imitate a Traveller, who, in a strange Country, should dismiss his Guide; it is to feel one's Way in a strange House by Night without a Candle. Every one knows the many Forms, and Qualities distinct from Substance, which Aristotle's Followers have introduced; he had opened to them This Labyrinth: And if, in the XVIIth Century, Natural Philosophy began to appear again with new Lustre, it was by restoring the Ancient Principles, which he had forsaken, and by recurring to Evidence: In short, it was by excluding the great Number of Entities, of which our Mind has no manner of Idea, out of the Doctrine of Generation, and sticking to the Figure, Motion, and Situation of the Particles of Matter: Things, of which we have a clear and distinct Conception.

[N] This Justice however must be done to the blindest of his Followers, that They deserted him, where he clashes with Christianity.] I intend not to enter into Dispute with Luther, in behalf of the Divines of Cologne: He reproaches Them, and Those of Louvain also, with defending, or softening, Aristotle's greatest and most impious Absurdities, by their forced Interpretations. Aristotelem ipsi in summo esse pretio, et nihil ab eo dictum esse tam absurde vel aliud à nostra religione quod non defendant, quod non aliqua interpretatione quantumvis longe petita circumveſtiant, quo suus ille confect bonos atque nominis exſtimatione (84). What is not Prejudice capable of!

[O] As to the Immortality of the Soul, it is not certainly known, whether he believed it or no.] Pomponatius, and Niphus, had a great Quarrel on this Subject. The first maintained, that the Immortality of the Soul was inconsistent with Aristotle's Principles; the latter undertook to defend the contrary. See

(80) They are to be found in the third Volume of his Works.

(81) Casaub. in Perium, Sat. 5. ver. 86. p. 415.

* Aristotle's utriusque partis dialecticæ principia. — Aristotle, the Head of both the Parts of Logic. Cicero Topic. cap. 2.

(82) Rapin's Reflexions on Logic, n. 4. pag. 374, 375.

(83) See the first Book of Aristotle, De Generatione & Corruptione.

(84) Apud Sleidanum, de Statu Relig. & Reip. lib. 2. fol. 33.

patetics may be believed, He was not ignorant of the Myſtery of the Trinity [P]. He made a very good End [Q], and enjoys Eternal Happineſs [R]. He compoſed a very great Number of Books, a great Part of which is come down to us. It is true, ſome Critics raiſe a thouſand Scruples about them. We ſhall ſay ſomething of the Fate of theſe Books, in the Remarks on the Article TYRANNION (I). He was extremely honoured in his own City [S]; and there were Heretics, who worſhipped His Image jointly with That of JESUS CHRIST. I no where find, that the Antinomians bore greater Reſpect to This wiſe Pagan, than to the uncreated Wiſdom

(1) See, above, Remarks [B], [C], [D], of the Article AN-DRONI-CUS.

(85) It is in the fourth Page of the Preface to the Demonomania.

(86) He cites Philoponus, in the Life of Aristotle.

(87) He cites Plutarch and Diog.

(88) Sect. II. cap. ii. n. 10. to be cited by Naudé, in his Apology for Great Men.

(89) Emanuel de Moura, lib. de En-ſai. §. II. cap. iii. n. 29. apud Naudé, ubi ſupra, pag. 328.

(90) Tom. II. Traſt. XXIII. n. 3. apud Naudé, ibid. p. 329.

(91) Lib. II. de Compa-rat. Ariſtot. & Plat. cited by Naudé, ibid.

(92) The Circumſtance of Age would enervate the whole Proof of Moura; for they, who ſhould pre-tend, that Ariſtotle had denied the Exiſtence of Spirits, would not like him at the Age of 17 Years.

(93) Cap. 15. lib. 3. adverſus Ca-lumnias. Plat.

(94) Cael. Rhodig. l. 27. c. 34.

See the Diſcourſe of la Mothe le Vayer on the Immortality of the Soul (85); and Bodin, in the fifteenth Page of the Preface to the Demonomania.

[P] According to ſome Peripatetics, Ariſtotle was not ignorant of the Myſtery of the Trinity. Emanuel de Moura, diſputing againſt Thoſe, who accuſed Ariſtotle of Atheiſm, ſays, I. That a Woman wheedled him to that Degree, that ſhe made him conſult the Oracle of Apollo (86). II. That he ordered, by his laſt Will, that the Effigies of certain Animals, which he had vowed for the Health of Nicanor (87), ſhould be dedicated to Jupiter and Minerva. III. That he confeſſes, in the firſt Book of Cælo & Mundo (88). Se cum aliis obtuliſſe Diis trina ſacrificia, in recognitionem trinæ perfectionis in eis inventæ (89). -- That He, and Others, had offered to the Gods triple Sacrifices, in acknowledgment of the triple Perfection found in them. From theſe Paſſages it is inferred, not only that he believed the Exiſtence of Devils, and was ſuperſtitious, but that he was acquainted likewiſe with a Trinity of Perſons in an Unity of Subſtance; as Salmeron would have it (90); and George Trapezontius before him (91); which laſt wrote a whole Book concerning the Conformity of Ariſtotle's Doctrines with the Holy Scripture. Naudé, from whom I borrow this, obſerves, That Emanuel de Moura evidently miſrepresents Philoponus, who ſays no more, according to the Greek Text, and the Old Tranſlation, which agrees with That of Nunneſius, than that Ariſtotle, having attained to the Age of ſixteen Years, was admiſed, by the Pythian Oracle, to addit himſelf chiefly to Philoſophy — Naudé ſays, that the Three Sacrifices, which he offered to the Gods, and the Knowledge of the Trinity, which many Catholic Docters aſcribe to him, "are meer Chimeras," which "owe their Original to what he ſays in his firſt Book of Cælo, ſpeaking of the Trinary Number; Διὸς τῶν τριῶν θεῶν εὐαγγέλιον ὡς περ νόμος ἐκείνων καὶ ἀπὸς τὰς ἀγνείας τῶν θεῶν χρωμένον τῷ ἀεθμῷ τῶν. That is, Wherefore, even in ſacrificing to the Gods, we make uſe of this Num-ber, which ſeems to be dictated by Nature herſelf.

From which Paſſage nothing more can be inferred, "than that Ariſtotle ſays, that, in his Time, they made uſe of the Number Three in Sacrifices; which is alſo teſtified by Theophrastus." Afterwards Naudé obſerves, that Cardinal Beſſarion (93) laughs at Trapezontius for taking ſo much Pains to prove, from this Text, that Ariſtotle had a full Knowledge of the Trinity. The modern Schoolmen will bate nothing of theſe Pretenſions. See Piccinardi, Profeſſor at Padua, in his Dogmata Philoſophiæ Peripateticæ. The Journal of Italy mentions it under the Thirty firſt of Auguſt, 1674.

[Q] He made a very good end. Finding himſelf near his Death, he ſhed a Flood of Tears, and, full of Grief and Hope, implored the Mercy of the Supreme Being. He approved a Sentence of Homer extremely, which ſays, That it does not miſbecome the Gods to aſſume the Nature of Man, to the end that they may enlighten Human Kind. Theſe were Glimpses of the future Incarnation of the Son of God. "Proditum & illud monumentis eſt, quum philoſophus hic extrema ſibi ingruere præſenſiſſet, dolore ac ſpe in lacrymas amplius proſuſum primæ cauſæ miſericordiam intentum imploraſſet. Quin & Homeri ſententiam ex Odysſea vehementer approbaſſet, qua non eſt immortalibus diis indecorum pronuntiarum hominis induere naturam, quo ab erroribus ſe vocentur mortales. Qua in re CHRISTI præſenſile adventum augurantur nonnulli ejus viri gloriæ in primis additi." This we read in Cælius Rhodiginus (94). His Authority in Matters of this Nature is good for nothing. Others ſpeak very differently of Ariſtotle's laſt Hours. "They ſay, that he died of Vexation, becauſe he could not comprehend the Cauſe of the Ebbing and Flowing of the Eurippus. Upon which ſome Moderns have invented a Fable, which has been greatly in vogue, viz. that this Philoſopher threw himſelf into the Eurippus, with theſe Words, Let the Eurippus receive me, ſince I cannot comprehend the Eurippus (95)." Diogenes Laërtius quotes an Author, called Eumelus, who ſaid, that Ariſtotle, having fled to Chalcis, poiſoned himſelf there, at ſeventy Years of Age (96). Apollodorus ſeems to me more worthy of Credit, who ſays, that This great Man died of Sickneſs, at the Age of Sixty three Years (97).

[R] Enjoys Eternal Happineſs. Sepulveda, one of the moſt learned Men of the XVth Century, made no Scruple to rank him among the Bleſſed, and maintained his Opinion publicly in Writing (98). The Jeſuit Gretſerus rebuked him for his Preſumption, but confeſſed, that he was inclined to favour Ariſtotle as much as Sepulveda, whom he diſapproves only for his confident manner of Speaking (99). Add to this, what I have quoted from Cælius Rhodiginus (100), and what conſiderable Perſons have obſerved concerning the Reaſon, which obliged Ariſtotle to leave Athens. Albertus Magnus maintained, that they expelled him thence for his good Qualities; Propter morum reſtitutionem pulſus Athenis (101). Gretſerus, in his Diſpute with Sepulveda, about Ariſtotle's Salvation, does not queſtion, but he intended, by this voluntary Banishment, to avoid the Neceſſity, which they would have laid upon him, of paying That Worſhip to Idols, which he believed to be due to God alone (102). Thus we have, in his Perſon, an illuſtrious Refuge for the true Religion. Origen has given a favourable Interpretation to this Flight of Ariſtotle (103); for, in explaining the Precept, which our Saviour gives his Apoſtles, when persecuted in one City, to fly to another (104), he tells Cæſus, who denied it with his uſual Prophaneneſs, That Ariſtotle, withdrawing himſelf, as we have mentioned, was conformable to the Goſpel Morality, and that, being injuriouſly persecuted, he acted, as JESUS CHRIST had adviſed his Diſciples to do (105).

I have quoted (106) a Paſſage of Agrippa, where he mentions a Book of Salute Ariſtotelis. Volſius, who had ſo extenſive a Knowledge of Books, had never ſeen it; but knew pretty exactly the Time of it's Impreſſion. He ſays, in a Theſis, maintained by him on the fifteenth of December, 1638, that it was printed at Oppenheim, about One hundred and forty Years before, and that Francis Junius had ſeen a Copy of it (107). He adds, that one Lambertus Montanus Author, of a Commentary on Ariſtotle's Phyſics, (where, in the Year 1486, he is ſtiled Doctor of Divinity) had wrote concerning This Philoſopher's Salvation, and had made it probable from Scripture, and the Opinion of learned Men, that the Stagyrite was ſaved. Quæſtionem Magiſtralem ſatis acutum ſcripſiſſe, offendentem per autoritates ſcripturæ divinæ, quid juxta ſaniorum doctorem ſententiam probabilis dici poſſit de ſalvatione Ariſtotelis Stagiritæ (108). You will find, in a Treatiſe de Pietate Ariſtotelis erga Deum & hominem, which Fortunius Licetus dedicated to Innocent X, and which was approved by two general Inquiſitors, ſeveral Reaſons, by which he endeavours to prove, that Ariſtotle is not damned.

[S] He was extremely honoured in his own City. It had been ruined by King Philip, but, at Ariſtotle's Requeſt, was rebuilt by Alexander. In acknowledgment of ſo great a Benefit, the Inhabitants conſecrated a Feſtival to This Philoſopher; and, when he died at Chalcis, in the Iſland of Eubœa, they tranſported his Bones from thence; they built an Altar over his Tomb; they called the Place Ariſtotelis; and held their Aſſemblies there (109). Mandeville, in his fabulous Account of his Travels, ſays, that this ſubſiſted in his Time, to wit, in the XIVth Century (110).

(95) Fatler Rapin's Compariſon of Ariſtote and Plato, pag. 310; ubi cites Justin, in Adm. ad Gentem.

(96) Greg. Naz. con. 22 Jul. ſec. 25 Rhodigin. lib. 29. c. 8. At to the Ci-tatins of Rapin, ſee the Remark [Z].

(97) Apollod. apud Laërt. ibid. n. 10.

(98) Sepulveda, lib. 26. de An. 1, cited by la Mothe le Vayer, Tom. 5. pag. 114.

(99) Gretſerus, cited by la Mothe le Vayer, ibid.

(100) Agrippa, Cita-tion (94).

(101) Albertus Magnus, lib. 5. Ethic. cap. 1. cited by Rapin, pag. 310.

(102) Gretſerus, de variis cel. Luth. cap. 12. cited by la Mothe le Vayer, Tom. 5. pag. 109.

(103) Orig. contra Celſum, lib. 2. cited by la Mothe le Vayer.

(104) Matt. cap. X. ver. 23.

(105) La Mothe le Vayer, Tom. 5. pag. 103.

(106) In the Remark [H].

(107) Claſſ. Voct. Diſp. Theol. Tom. 2. pag. 622.

(108) Id. ib. ex Append. II. ad Tri-tem. de Script. Eccl. Edit. Col. 1546.

(109) Ammon. in Vita Ariſtot.

(110) Itinerar. c. p. 1. apud Hor-nium Hiſt. Philoſoph. lib. iii. cap. xv. p. 157.

dom [Y], nor that the Aëtians were excommunicated, for giving their Disciples Aristotle's Categories for a Catechism (m). But I have somewhere read, that, before the Reformation, there were Churches in Germany, in which Aristotle's Ethics were read every Sunday to the People, instead of the Gospel [U]. There are but few Instances of Zeal for Religion, which have not been shewn for the Peripatetic Philosophy. Paul de Foix, famous for his Embassies and his Learning, would not see Francis Patricius at Ferrara, because he was informed, that That Learned Man taught a Philosophy different from the Peripatetic (n). This was treating the Enemies of Aristotle as Zealots treat Heretics. After all, it is no wonder, that the Peripatetic Philosophy, as it has been taught for several Centuries, found so many Protectors [X], or that the Interests of it are believed to be inseparable from Those of Theology (o); for it accustoms the Mind to acquiesce without Evidence. This Union of Interests may be esteemed as a Pledge to the Peripatetics of the Immortality of Their Sect, and an Argument to abate the Hopes of the New Philosophers; considering withal, that there are some Doctrines of Aristotle, which the Moderns have rejected, and which must, sooner or later, be adopted again (p). The Protestant Divines have very much altered their Conduct; if it be true, as we are told, that the first Reformers clamoured so loudly against the Peripatetic Philosophy [Y]. The kind of Death,

(p) Such is the Hypothesis of moving bodies, necessary for the Doctrine of Vortices, under what general Lawssoever, and without a ruling and directing force, peculiar to each Planet, can never satisfy the Mind.

[T] There were Heretics, who worshipped his Image with That of JESUS CHRIST, &c.] Read this Passage of Father Rapin (111). "The Carpatians were condemned, for placing This Philosopher's Image next to That of JESUS CHRIST, and for adoring him, through an extravagant Zeal for his Doctrine". The Aëtians were excommunicated by the Church, and by the Arians themselves, from whom they sprung, for giving Aristotle's Categories to their Disciples, instead of a Catechism†. And the Antinomians proceeded to such Excess of Impiety, as to pay more Respect to "This wise Pagan, than to the Uncreated Wisdom‡". I never was so much convinced, as by this Passage, that This entertaining Writer did not give himself the Trouble of consulting Originals. I confess, Baronius says, under the Year, which Father Rapin quotes, that the Carpatians had Images, and, among others, That of JESUS CHRIST, (which they said was procured by Pilate) That of Pythagoras, That of Plato, and That of Aristotle; and that they paid them the same Veneration as the Pagans do to their Idols. But this should not have been alleged: For, besides that Baronius nowhere says, that These Heretics were condemned on this Account, it does not appear, that They had more Zeal for Aristotle's Doctrine, than for That of the other Philosophers, whose Images they venerated. My Edition of Baronius (112) does not contain one Word of what Father Rapin mentions under the Year 208: Nor is it possible, that Persons, who sprung from the Arians, should be driven from the Communion of the Church, in the beginning of the third Century. It is under the Year 356, that Baronius speaks of Aëtius: he quotes a long Passage of Suidas, in which we find, not that This Heretic gave his Followers Aristotle's Categories for a Catechism; but that he explained things to them, according to the Method of Aristotle's Categories; meaning, that he was well versed in Logical Disputations and Subtilties. Just, as if, at present, a Spanish Schoolman, who undertook to explain a Point of Faith, should follow the Method of the Schools. Could it be said, that he substituted Aristotle's Works in the room of our Books of Religion? To quote Eusebius, in the Twenty-seventh Chapter of his History, is an unwarrantable way of Citation. I do not believe That Author has said one Word of the Antinomians.

[V] In some Churches of Germany, Aristotle's Ethics were read - - - instead of the Gospel.] I shall quote my Author; he is Spanhemius, the Father, in the Secular Oration, delivered by him at Geneva, in the Year 1635 (113). "Quin & Philippus Melancthon, says he (114), vir candidissimus testatur diebus Dominicis, variis in locis, pro thematibus Dominicalibus, inde à Karoli M. ætate opera P. Guarenfridi, seculo octavo, in Cathedras Ecclesiasticas introductis, Ethica Aristotelis publice populo prælecta, & se Tubingæ in agro Wirtenburgico audita. - - - Philip Melancthon, a Man of great Candour, affirms, that, in several Places, instead of the Sunday Lectures, introduced into the Churches, from the Time of Charles the Great, in the VIIIth Century, by the Care of Guarenfridus, the Ethics of Aristotle were publicly read to the People, and that he himself had been present at the reading of Them, at Tubingen, in the Country of Wirtemberg." If another Witness be demanded, and Magirus may be admitted, I shall produce him. "Tubingæ quondam Monachus, says he (115), pro concione Aristotelis librum Ethicorum explicavit, & vulgo dicebat, quemadmodum Johannes Baptista Christum præcursum fuit in Theologicalibus, ita Aristoteles fuit præcursum Christum in Physicalibus (116). - - - A certain Monk, formerly, at Tubingen, explained Aristotle's Book of Ethics publicly to the People; and was wont to say, that, as John the Baptist was the Forerunner of CHRIST in Divine Things, so Aristotle was in Natural Things."

[X] It is no wonder, that the Peripatetic Philosophy found so many Protectors.] If All, who have embraced the Philosophy of Descartes, had been ended with That wise Moderation, which makes a Man stop, when he has attained to a certain Point; if they could have discerned, what was fit to be divulged, and what kept secret (117), they would not have raised such a Clamour against the Sect in general. The Method of the ancient Philosophers was founded on good Reasons. They had Tenets for the Vulgar, and Tenets for Disciples initiated into their Mysteries. Be that as it will, the applying, or endeavouring to accommodate, Descartes's Principles to the Doctrines of Religion, has been of great Prejudice to His Sect, and retards the Progress of it. This is an almost unavoidable Case. The ancient Fathers complained heavily of the Aristotelian Sect (118); and it is almost a general Complaint, that Philosophy does injury to Religion. But, on the other side, it is certain, that Divinity wounds Philosophy: They are two Faculties, which would seldom agree about their just Boundaries, did not the Secular, or Ecclesiastical, Powers, which are always in the Interest of the former, take the necessary Precautions, to reconcile them?

[Y] The first Reformers clamoured loudly against the Peripatetic Philosophy.] Here is another Passage of Father Rapin (119): "Nothing did more honour to This great Man's (120) Doctrine in the last Century, than the bitter Invectives of Luther, Melancthon, Bucer, Calvin, Pössel, Paul Sarpi (121), and all Those, who wrote against it, and against the Church of Rome. For Their Complaints against Aristotle are only because the solidity of his Method gives the Catholics great Advantage in discovering the Subtlety and Artifice of the false Reasonings, which Heresy makes use of to disguise Error, and destroy the Truth." In another Piece, This Author does not speak so much at random, and with so few Proofs. "St Thomas, says he (122), made use of Aristotle's Method, with so great Success, in explaining the Doctrines of the Church of Rome, that Bucer, one of the greatest Enemies of our Church, used to say; Suppreſſi Thomæ Works, and I will destroy the Church of Rome." It was This Method, borrowed from Aristotle, which rendered the Doctrines of our Religion so formidable to all the Innovators of these last Centuries; who, being unable to resist it, endeavoured to cry it down, by declaiming (116) Magirus in Eponymol. Critico, pag. 81, 82.

(117) He cites Greg. Michael in Not ad loc. Gaffarelli, Curioſit. inaudit. pag. 109.

(118) Finite Potestas denique quædam sit ratione utque alitè terminus herens, Luc. lib. 1. v. 77.

(119) See in Mr de Lamoi. de varia Aristotelis Fortuna. cap. 1, a long List of their Passages.

(120) Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, pag. 412.

(121) He speaks of Aristotle.

(122) How can it be said, that he wrote against the Church of Rome, in the XVIth Century.

(123) Reflections on Philosophy, pag. 450.

• Tolle Thomam, & Ecclesiam Romanam subvertam. Bucer, Father Rapin would have done well to have cited the Book and Page of Bucer.

(m) Rapin's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, pag. 392.

(n) Thuan. de vita sua, lib. 1.

(o) See the Remark [I].

(111) Rapin's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, p. 392.

• Baronius Annal. Eccles. ad Ann. 120.

† Ibid. ad Ann. 208.

‡ Euseb. Hist. c. 27.

(112) That of Antwerp, in 1597.

(113) It is intitled Geneva Restituta.

(14) Pages 17, 18.

"Justinus cognomento Martyr, & Gregorius Nazianzenus, qui primi, aut inter primos, hanc fabulam olim in scripta sua reulerunt, id vel studio Philosphie Christianæ (ita enim isti Græculi Christianissimum vocare solent) fecere; dum videlicet infanientem veterum Græcorum sapientiam obcurandam & premendam existimarent; vel fortasse etiam, (quidni enim veris locus sit?) prisce historię ignorantie. Nam ex Eumolpi, Apollodori, Favorinique scriptis, quæ illa etiam tempestate superflue scimus, facile didicisse Boni Viri poterant, rem longe se fecus habuisse, quam prodiderunt (128). — In Greece, as is done even at this Day, the Sacred Orators, if this Name be applicable to those noisy Haranguers of the Mob, commonly gave out, that Aristotle, when he could not discover the reason, why the Euripus ebbed and flowed seven times in a Day, took it so to Heart, that he threw himself headlong into That River. Justin Martyr, and Gregory Nazianzen, who first adopted this Fable in their Writings, did it for the sake of the Christian Philosophy, as they love to stile Christianity; being, forsooth, of Opinion, that the pretended Philosophy of the ancient Greeks ought to be eclipsed, and kept under; or perhaps, through Ignorance of ancient History. For

"the good Men might easily have learned from Eumolpus, Apollodorus, and Favorinus, whose Writings we know were extant at that Time, that the Matter was quite otherwise, than as they have related it."

Gyraldus had fathered it upon them before, and made a pious Reflexion upon the whole. I. He says, that Justin Martyr affirms, that Aristotle died, because he could not discover the Cause of the Ebbing and Flowing of the Euripus. II. That Procopius has said the same, in the fourth Book of his History. III. That Gregory Nazianzen, having observed, that Homer's not knowing how to resolve a Question proved fatal to him, immediately contemns Aristotle's Philosophy, with regard to the Variation of the Euripus, which was the Cause of his Death. IV. That the Greek Commentator on That Father relates, that the Philosopher cast himself into That Arm of the Sea, with these Words, Let the Euripus receive me, since I cannot comprehend the Euripus. Επειδὴ Ἄριστοῦς οὐκ ἔβη τὸν Εὐεῖπον, εὐεῖπον ἐχέτω τὸν Ἄριστον. Postquam Aristoteles non prebendit Euripum, Euripus habeat Aristotelem (129). V. That from hence we may conclude, that Fortune has been unpropitious to the impious, not only in the true, but also in the false Religions.

(128) Tanaq. Faber. Epist. part. I. pag. 49, 50.

(129) Lilius Gregor. Gyraldus Dialectic. xxx. pag. 912. Tom. II. Oper. Edit. 1696.

ARISTOTLE, a famous Architect in the XVth Century, was of Bologne, and of the Family of the Alberti (a). One of the most remarkable things related of him, is, that he could transport an entire Stone Tower from one place to another [A]. John Basilides, Great Duke of Muscovy, sent for him (b), and employed him in building of several Churches. There are Names, which are difficult to be supported. That of Aristotle is one of them. Yet we meet with above Thirty Aristotles [B].

(a) Leon. Alberti in Descript. Ital. pag. 516.

(b) See the Account of Muscovy, by Hercules Zani, in the Journal of Leipzig, 1601, pag. 476.

[A] He could transport an entire Stone Tower from one Place to another. Jonsius cites two Testimonies, Beroaldus, and Matthew Palmerius (1). The first expresses himself thus: "Non diu est, quod Aristoteles civis noster, mechanicus longe omnium præstantissimus, turrim ex fede sua movit, motamque arte mechanica in alium haud longe diffitum locum transportavit. Non est mendacius locus, cum adhuc superint qui videre 2). — It is not long ago, that our Countryman Aristotle, the most excellent of Mechanics, moved a Tower from its Place, and transported it, by Mechanic Art, to a Place not far off. The Truth of this is vouched by several, who were Eye-witnesses of it." These are the Words of Palmerius: "Aristoteles Bononiensis Architectura insignis habetur, qui lapideas turres in-

(1) Jonsius de Scriptor. Hist. Philol. pag. 68.

(2) Beroald. in Sueion. Vespat. cap. 18.

"tegras illas subjecis fundamento lapidibus ad alium traduxit locum (3). — Aristotle of Bologne is famous for Architecture; who transported Stone Towers, entire and unburnt, from one place to another, placing Stones under the Foundation."

(3) Matth. Palmer. Chron. ad Ann. 1455.

[B] We meet with above thirty Aristotles. See the Dilettations of Jonsius de Historia Peripatetica; and you will find Twenty one Aristotles in the first of them. The Author believed, at that time, that he had summed them all up (4); but he found, that Knowledge increases with Years. For, when he published his Treatise de Scriptoribus Historiæ Philosophiæ, he had eleven Aristotles more to add to the former. He had likewise something more to say of some of the Twenty one. What has been related in the preceding Remark, is one of these Additions.

(4) See the 12th Chapter of the Treatise of Jonnius, just cited.

ARIUS, the Head, and Founder, of ARIANISM, a Sect which denied the Eternal Divinity, and Consubstantiality, of the WORD, lived in the IVth Century. He was born in Africa near Egypt. Eusebius, Bishop of Nicomedia, much in Favour with Constantia, Sister of the Emperor Constantine, and Wife of Licinius, contributed greatly to the Propagation of this Heresy (a). He was a Man of a ready Wit, a true Court-Bishop, in short, perfectly well qualified to make the Fortune of a new Doctrine. He took Arius into his Protection; and brought him into favour with Constantia. For it has been always thought, that unless Women concern themselves in the Interests of a Sect, it can never make any considerable Progress. Arius's Party visibly gained Ground: There were Bishops, who publicly embraced it: Disputes were frequent in the Cities; and sometimes from Words they came to Blows: It was absolutely necessary, that the Emperor should remedy This Disorder. This he did, by convening the Council of Nice, in which the Doctrine of Arius was condemned in 325. This Heresiarch was banished by the Emperor, who, likewise, ordered his Books to be burnt; and prohibited them under Pain of Death [A]. Some pretend, that Arius, having abjured his Heresy in the Presence of the Council,

(a) Hieron. ad Ctesiphont.

[A] The Emperor — prohibited his Books under Pain of Death. Socrates gives us the Letter, in which Constantine ordered, that All, who should find any Book composed by Arius, and not burn it, should be immediately punished with Death. Εξείνο μὲν τοι παραδοῦναι, ὡς εἰ τις σύγγραμμα ὑπὸ Ἀρίου συνιστῶν φανερώσῃ κρυψας, καὶ μὴ εὐθὺς παρσηκεῖν πύρι καλανάκωσῃ, τὸ τοῦ θανάτου ἔσθαι ἡ ζημία, παραγγέλλω γὰρ ἄλλος ἐπὶ τούτῳ κεφαλικὴν ὑποσχέσεται τιμωρίαν (1). Illud etiam demuntio, quod si quis Librum ab Ario compositum occultasse deprehensus sit, nec eum statim ablatum igne cum-

(1) Socrat. Hist. Eccl. lib. I. cap. 9, pag. 31.

bufferit, mortis pœnam subibit. I do not remember to have read any Author, who has remarked this strange and surprising Extravagance of Constantine. He is satisfied with banishing this Arch-Heretic; he does not condemn those to Death, who adhered to Arianism; and yet threatens with Death Those, who should conceal any of Arius's Works. Was there ever a wider Disproportion between Punishments and Crimes? May not a Man be very Orthodox, and yet curious enough to see what Heretics can say for themselves, and to preserve scarce Books, as those generally are, which are condemned to the Flames? And yet, if an Orthodox cil, avoided the Sentence of Banishment [B]; but others assert, that he suffered Exile [C], and that the Emperor did not recal him 'till Ten Years after [D] (b). They contend, that some had induced That Prince to believe, that Arius was Orthodox at the bottom. They add, that Constantine, being confirmed in this Opinion by the Profession of Faith, which Arius presented to him, wrote in his Favour to the Bishops, who were assembled at Jerusalem, for the Dedication of the Temple; That the Bishops, who still remained in That City, when Arius arrived with the Emperor's Letter, were for the most part concealed Arians; so that they did not fail to declare his Doctrine Orthodox, and to re-admit him to the Communion of the Church; That, to compleat the Triumph, they were of Opinion, that Arius ought to be re-established in Alexandria, where he had received the first Strokes of the Church's Anathema; And that, as St Albanasius, who was it's Patriarch, and Arius's grand Adversary, was in Exile, they believed, that, in His Absence, it would be no difficult matter to re-instate Arius in the Communion of the Church of Alexandria; But that they were deceived; and that the People would never re-admit him; That Constantine, being informed of the Continuance of the Troubles, cited Arius to Constantinople, and prevailed upon him to subscribe the Formulary of Nice; That, afterwards, he sent him back to the Bishops, who were then assembled at Constantinople; I say, sent him back to them, to be received into the Communion of the Church, in That Imperial City; That He, who was then Bishop of Constantinople, would never give his Consent to it, though it was represented to him, that Arius had signed all that was required of him; That, notwithstanding, Eusebius procured, that the Sacrament of the Church should be administred to his Friend in the great Church of Constantinople; That he conducted him thither in a kind of Triumph, attended by a great Number of his own Party; but that, as they drew near the Great Square, Arius, pressed by a natural Necessity, retired in haste to a Public House of Office, and died immediately, all his Bowels gushing out, together with his Liver and Spleen, in the Year 336 (c). Some very Learned Men reject this Chronology [E]. Arius's Sect did not die with him; it subsisted a long time, and with Credit, in several Parts of the World. It cannot sufficiently be wondered at, that a Minister, who passes for a Learned Man, should be ignorant of so notorious a Fact

(b) See Maimbourg's History of Arius, lib. 1, 2.

(c) Taken from Maimbourg's History of Arius.

Orthodox Christian had been found with a Book of Arius in his keeping, though upon such a Principle, he would have been immediately hanged; whilst one, who made open Profession of Arianism, was suffered to live. What more ridiculous? Not to say, that it is a Contradiction to let Heretics live, and yet forbid them, on pain of Death, to keep the Books of their Founder. To this may be added, that Arius, and some Bishops, his Adherents, being banished, their Conversation was still more dangerous, than the reading of their Books. How came it then, that They, who should converse with these Exiles, were not threatened with the Punishment of Death?

[B] Some say, that Arius — avoided the Sentence of Banishment. Baronius affirms, on the Credit of St Jerom, that Arius made a shew of Repentance; and that, having subscribed to the Council of Nice, he was admitted to the Peace of the Church by That Council, and was not banished. It cannot be denied, but that St Jerom says, that Arius made his Peace with the Council of Nice (2); but much greater Credit is due to the Letter of That Council, than to the Opinion of a single Person, who lived after That Time. In This Letter is set forth how Arius's Opinions had been examined, and condemned; but as to what had been acted against his Person, and what became of him, they forbear to mention it, that they might not be thought to insult him in his Disgrace. Would they have spoken thus of One, in whose Recantation they had acquiesced? The learned Henry Valesius, reasoning on This Letter of the Council, commends their Moderation, because they did not anathematize Arius by Name, but Those in general, who taught such and such Heresies; and because that, instead of soliciting the Emperor to banish the Heretics, they expressed their Concern at their Banishment (3).

[C] Others assert, that he suffered Exile. Sozomen is of this Number; for he affirms (4), that Arius was recalled, a little after the Separation of the Council. Ἀρῖος ἐπὶ τὴν ἐξορίαν ἀπαχόμενος ἀνεκλήθη (4). Non multo post Synodum Nicenam Arius ab exilio revocatus est. The Submission of the two Bishops, who were deprived of their Churches, is a Proof of Arius's Banishment. I mean Eusebius, and Theognis. Philostorgius informs us, that these two Prelates were banished by Constantine, three Months after the breaking up of the Council (5); and affirms, that they obtained their Recal, three Years after. Now they obtained it by submitting to the Decisions of the Council in a Writing, which they sent to the Bishops; wherein they took notice, that He, who was the Principal in these Disputes, had been recalled from his Banishment; and that it would be absurd to pretend, that, after His Reconciliation, They could not make their own Innocence appear (6). Thus we have two Facts cleared up; one, that Arius was banished; the other, that he made his Peace with the Bishops, and that he obtained his Recal, before Eusebius and Theognis procured theirs; which fell out, according to Philostorgius, in 328; whose Opinion agrees very well with the History of those Times. It is false, then, that Arius was not recalled before the Year 335.

[D] That the Emperor did not recal him 'till ten Years after. Father Maimbourg has followed This false Chronology. We have already proved him to have been in an Error.

[E] He died in the Year 336 — very learned Men reject This Chronology. Valesius proves, that Arius was not living at the time of the Council of Jerusalem, which received Letters from Constantine, concerning the Reconciliation of some principal Members of Arianism. "Arius Hæresiarum die ante Synodum Hierosolymitanam e vita excesserat; ut certissimis argumentis probavi in libro secundo Observationum Ecclesiasticarum, Capite II (7). — Arius the Hæresiarch died long before the Council of Jerusalem, as I have proved by invincible Arguments in the second Book of my Eccles. Observ. Ch. II. It was not, therefore, Arius, the Arch-Heretic, who was recommended to This Council by Constantine, and who found the Bishops, assembled at Jerusalem, so favourable to him. In the mean time, Socrates says expressly, that the Council, which was transferred from Tyre to Jerusalem, for the Dedication of the Temple, received Arius and his Adherents into the Communion of the Church, by virtue of Letters from Constantine, which testified, that He was persuaded of the Orthodoxy of Arius, and Euzoius. Ἀρῖον μὲν καὶ τὸς περὶ αὐτὸν ἐδάξαντο τοὺς βασιλεὺς γράμμασι παθεῖν λατρίαν, δι' ἃν δεδωδωκεν αὐτοῖς πεποιθεῖν περὶ τῆς αἰρέσεως Ἀρῖου καὶ Εὐζοίου (8). Arium quidem una cum sociis in communionem recipiunt, obtemperare se dicentes Imperatoris literis, quibus certiores ipsos fecerat fidem

(f) Sozomen. lib. II, cap. 16.

(7) Valesii Note in Socrat. lib. 1, cap. 33.

(8) Socrat. Histor. Eccles. lib. 1, cap. 33.

(2) Hieron. in Dialogo contra Lucianum.

(3) Vales. in Sozomenum, lib. II, cap. 16, pag. 108.

(4) Sozomen. lib. II, cap. 16, Valesius observes, that, according to the Force of these Words, ἔτι τῶν ἐξορίαν, we must understand, that Arius was recalled, as he was going to the Place of his Banishment.

(5) Apud Vales. in Hist. Eccles. Socrat. lib. I, cap. 14, pag. 100.

a Fact [F]. He was ignorant likewise of another no less evident; for he pretends, that no Penal Laws were enacted against This Sect [G]. Another Thing, which he has advanced, has not a little perplexed him; for great Advantage has been made of what se Arii & Euzoii penitus persequam habere. Constantine had sent the Confession of Faith, which Arius and Euzoii had presented to him (9), to the Bishops, assembled at Jerusalem; and St Athanasius plainly says, that the Synod of Jerusalem received Arius and his Followers into its Communion. Ἐπαποῖσεν δὲ αὐτὸν Νεχὲβας Ἀπὸστολὴν καὶ τὰς αὐτὸν εὐ-τῶ (10). Scribentes suscipiendos esse Arium & Socios. Valesius solves the Difficulty, by saying there were two Arius's; one the Arch-Heretic; the other his Follower; they had both been excommunicated by Alexander, Bishop of Alexandria. He, who presented a Confession of Faith, with Euzoii, to Constantine, and was reconciled by the Council of Jerusalem, was not the Arch-Heretic, but the Other Arius. Valesius proves this, not only by Reasons, which shew, that the Arch-Heretic was dead long before the Year 335, but also by the Petition of Eusebius, and Theognis. These two Bishops implored Pardon, protesting their Innocence, in the Year 328, and alledged, that the Head and Author of these Controversies was reconciled and restored. This could not be said of That Arius, who was re-united to the Church, by the Synod of Jerusalem; for the Petition, or Confession of Faith, which He, and Euzoii, presented to Constantine, a little before That Synod, that is about the Year 335, testifies, that they were then in Exile and excommunicated. The sudden Death of Arius, in which the Orthodox have found so many Mysteries, happened after the Council of Jerusalem. It follows, then, that the Arius, who died in this manner, was not the Heresiarch, and that they have transferred to one Point of Time what happened at another Conjunction. It is strange there should be so little Order, and Exactness, in Ecclesiastical History; one cannot ascertain Arius's Exile, the Duration of it, and such like Particulars, but by arguing from different Facts, some attested by This, others by That Author. One good Historian might suffice to give the Thread of the principal Events, though all the rest were lost.

[F] Arius's Sect did not die with him; it subsisted a long time. — a Minister, who passed for a learned Man, was ignorant of so notorious a Fact. See what he says: "I am persuaded, that Arianism never made a great Party in the World. It is true, several Bishops made profession of it; but this Heresy did not spread among the People (11)." What he says elsewhere, is much stronger; for he asserts, that Arianism only passed through the Church like a Torrent. It cannot be pleaded, in his excuse, that This is one of those Errors, which escape by Surprise, and through want of Attention; for he remarks this Fact as fundamental and essential to his System. His Opinion, on the one side, is, that Heresies against the Mystery of the Trinity are fundamental and damnable; and, on the other, that God has never suffered such kind of Heresies to continue long, or make any considerable Figure in the World. "God, says he (12), cannot permit large Christian Societies to fall into damnable Errors, and persist a long Time in them; at least, to judge by Experience, we cannot believe it possible, since such a thing never yet happened."

Mr Nicolle was the first, who read him a Lecture on the Words of the Hundred and forty ninth Page. This he did without Bitterness, or Insult, in these Terms: "What Mr Jurieu says, is very true, if understood of the great Blaze of Arianism, which passed, indeed, like a Flash of Lightning: But it is less exact, when applied to the Times, which succeeded. Though the Church had recovered its former Splendor in most Parts of the World, yet there were several considerable Bodies, as the Vandals in Africa, the Goths in Asia, in Italy, in part of France, and in Spain, who openly professed Arianism, and where the Controversy was sufficiently enough cleared, for the People to take part in it (13)." Mr Pellissier came next to the Charge, in this manner. "Those Arians gave him some Trouble, as well as the Pbanatics and Socinians of these Times, and Those, whom he calls Pbotinians of Poland, and Transylvania. Some Remains of Modesty hindered him from associating himself with them, in one and the same Church. He found the means to get rid of them, without entering upon This Discussion, or calling in Maller Workmen, to know whether the Foundation was ruined wholly, or but in part. He does not pretend, he says, to comprehend, in This one extensive Church, Any but Those Societies, which form a visible Body. The Arians, it seems, never became a Body, at least a Great Body, (and this against the Faith of all History, which every where mentions their Communion, their Assemblies, their Basilicas, or Churches, as wholly distinct from Those of the Orthodox). The Pbanatics, the Socinians, the Pbotinians of these Times, have not, as yet, any regular Assemblies, or Policy, or Union with each other. They are, therefore, of no Account. But if, for the Punishment of our Sins, and unhappy Divisions, God should permit these common Enemies to multiply, and to regulate and form themselves into a Body, they are, then, agreeably to his own Principles, upon the same Foot with others; and there will be no Difficulty in supposing, that a Man may be saved among them (14)." The Author, in reply to Mr Nicolle, confesses, "That the Arians formed a GREAT Body," but maintains, that they continued but a very short Time, and that God suffered their Communion to perish, because it did not preserve the Fundamental Truths (15)." A third Censor has arisen, who maintains, like the two former, that Arianism was not only of great Extent, but also of considerable Duration, and that it was an Heresy, which spread among the People. See the Book, entitled, Janua Caelorum restructa (16). The Author makes it appear (17), that Arianism subsisted above Three hundred Years in splendor; that it was, for almost two Ages, the established Religion in Spain; that it was on the Throne in the East, and West, and that it reigned in Italy, France, Pannonia, and Africa. Never was Author driven from one vexatious Consequence to another more vexatious, as was the Author of the System, by the pretended Carus Larebonius (18). He plainly shews him, that, if God never suffered great Christian Societies to run into damnable Errors, and continue in them long, and if God destroyed Arianism, because it did not preserve the Fundamental Truths; it necessarily follows, I. That the Errors of the Church of Rome are not damnable. II. That Mahometanism has preserved the Fundamental Truths. The Author of the System pretends, that Mahometanism is not a Sect, which arose from Christianity, and therefore that he has nothing to do with its Extent or Continuance. These are Objections, which the utmost Chicanery can never answer. The Synods cannot pretend Ignorance, and yet they have never censured this Doctrine of the System; though it fully justifies the Church of Rome, and consequently convicts the Reformed of being Schismatics.

[G] He pretends, that no Penal Laws were enacted against this Sect. Let us cite a fine Passage of the Preservative against a Change of Religion. The Minister, of whom I speak, published this Book, whilst he was in France (19), and opposed it to the Catholic Expulsion of the Bishop of Condom. See what he says at the eleventh Page (20). "The Church has suffered Persecutions, but never exercised any. She has had the upper Hand of Paganism, as Paganism has had of her; but never returned her like for like. She did not employ the Authority of the Constantines, and the Theodosius's, to embrace the Temples of the false Gods with the Blood of their Worshipers, as the Pagans did the Swords of their Nero's, Maximin's, Decii, and Dioclesian's, to drench the Earth with the Blood of Christians. One must be very little versed in the History of the Church, to be ignorant, that, in all the Contest she had with the Arians, Eutybian's, and other Heretics, she made use only of Exhortations, Reasons, Councils, and such like Arms." The Au-

(9) It is inserted at length in Sozomen, lib. 2, cap. 27.

(10) Athanasius in libro de Synodis, apud Valesium in Secretis lib. 1, cap. 33, pag. 16.

(12) Jurieu's True System of the Church, pag. 149.

(13) Ibid. pag. 236.

(14) Nicolle, pag. 15, 26, of his Preface to the Unity of the Church.

(14) Reflections on the Disputes in Religion, Part II, pag. 429, 430.

(15) Jurieu of the Unity of the Church, pag. 364.

(16) It was printed at Amsterdam, in 1792.

(17) Pag. 87.

(18) This is the Name, which the Author of Janua Caelorum restructa assumed.

(19) The first Edition, I believe, was of Rouen, in 1680, there have been others since, in Holland.

(20) Edition of the Hague, 1682.

what he says concerning the Faith of the Fathers, who preceded the Rise of Arianism [H]. This Sect has been, by turns, Persecuting, and Persecuted [I], and fell at last by the Way of Human Authority [K]. I scarce meet with any Author, who does not esteem it a Crime in Arius, that he put his Opinions into Verse, to be sung by his Disciples. Both the Matter, and the Form, of the Poem, which he intitled thor of the Philosophical Commentary had reason to wonder, that a Professor of Divinity, who passed in France for a Man well versed in Ecclesiastical History, should betray such Ignorance as this (21). But he was still more astonished, that, after Father Thomas had set this Matter in the clearest Light, another French Writer, addressing himself to the Bishop of Meaux, should say, "One thing I must tell you, my Lord, Thou, throughout ancient and modern History, all Acts of Violence, exercised by Princes on the Score of Religion, have ever been looked upon as Spectacles of Horror, and that the Names of such Princes are never mentioned, even to this Day, without Execration." I add here the Reflexion of the Commentator. "What! Are the Constantine's, the Theodosius's, the Honorius's, the Marcian's, the Justinian's, who put in Execution so many Penal Laws against Sectaries, who condemned to Death those, who persevered in Pagan Idolatry, in Manicheism, &c. and even those, who read, or were in possession of, the Books of Heretics; are These, I say, Names, which are never mentioned, at this Day, without Execration? How will he prove this (22)?" The Divine, who published the Preservative, has, it seems, studied Ecclesiastical Antiquity better, since his Transplantation into Holland. He has there learned to refuse Toleration, by the Authority of the Constantines, the Theodosius's, and the Charlemagnes. "Paganism, says he (23), would have been still in being, and three parts of Europe would still have been Pagan, if Constantine, and his Successors, had not made use of their Authority to abolish it." In France he took it very ill, that the Secular Power should be made use of; and in Holland he takes it very ill, that it should not be employed. And now, after this, who dares pretend, that, by changing of Climate, one does not change Opinion?

Tbalia

Cœlum, non animum, mutant, qui trans mare currunt (24).

They, that beyond-sea go, shall sadly find,
They change their Climate only, not their Mind.
CREECH.

There is a local Faith, and a temporary Faith, which have not yet been mentioned in the Division of the Genus into its Species: See the Remark [H], of the Article St AUGUSTIN.

[H] Great Advantage has been made of what he says concerning the Faith of the Fathers, who preceded the Rise of Arianism.] He maintained, in his Pastoral Letters, that Those Fathers did not believe an Equality of Persons in the Trinity; and that they admitted a Temporal Generation of the Word, which had conferred on the Second Person his entire and perfect Existence. It is plain, that this Opinion differs in nothing from Arianism; and that it overthrows the Eternal Trinity of Persons. The Bishop of Meaux pressed Mr Jurieu to home upon this Point (25), that he obliged him to break the Silence, to which he had reduced him on some other Points: But his Reply did him more harm, than his Silence could have done; he was forced to contradict himself, and retract several Things, and still got nothing by it. The Bishop returned to the Charge; drove his Adversary before him, and obliged him to enter the Lists no more: So that, among the most distinguishing Elogies, which were bestowed on this Prelate, it was not forgot, that he had stopped the Mouth of the most daring Critic of the Age (26). Mr Jurieu was scarce got out of the Bishop's Hands, when he fell into those of Carus Larebonius, who shewed him, that if the Fathers of the three first Centuries held That Opinion of the Trinity, and the Generation of the Word, which he imputes to them, it must necessarily follow, that neither the Heresy of the Arians, nor That of the Socinians, were Damnable, or Fundamental (27). It must be carefully remarked, that the Victories, gained over this Minister, concern only his particular Opinions, and in no wise the Doctrine of his Church; of which The History of the Works of the Learned (28) advertised the Public. This is no Foreign Matter; it belongs of right to a Critical Dictionary; for it is false in Fact, that the Heresy of Arius was implicitly taught by the Fathers of the three first Centuries. It is something strange, that Mr Jurieu, having considered Arianism in so many Lights, should always view it in the wrong. It would be more difficult to find a Fencer, who could never hit a Bull. Taurum toties non ferire difficile est (29). We must not omit, that, as to the Matter of Fact, in relation to the Penal Laws of Constantine, and the Continuance and Extent of Arianism, the Authors, I have already cited, have shewn him his Error very civilly, and without having recourse to the Insults, and hard Language he himself would have made use of, in the like Case, against an Adversary.

[I] This Sect has been, by turns, persecuting, and persecuted.] It cannot be denied, that the Orthodox were the Aggressors; for we have seen, that Constantine banished the Ringleaders of Arianism, and threatened those with Death, who should not burn all the Writings of That Arch-Heretic; but it is certain, that Constantine, his Son, and Valens, who raised Arianism to the Throne, treated the Orthodox with more Rigor, than Constantine had done the Arians. Upon all other Occasions, the latter seem to have been of a more tolerating Spirit, than the former; and it is a Thesis, which the Philosophical Commentator has undertaken to prove, in the Supplement to his Work (30). Among other Reasons, he alleges this; that, at the time, when Recaredus extirpated Arianism in Spain, the Catholic Bishops were much more numerous than the Arians, though the Arian had been the predominant Religion, for near Two hundred Years before: A strong Presumption, that the Catholics were but little molested.

[K] And fell, at last, by the way of human Authority.] Mariana passes lightly over the Rigors, which Recaredus must needs have exercised, and excuses them from hence, that the Case required Severity, and that the People were not displeased with it. "Contigit autem Recaredo, quod haud scio an regum ulli, ut religione permutanda, quod propemodum necesse erat, motus existerent, sed neque diuturni admodum neque graves; & severitas animadversionis non modo invidiosa non esset, quia necessario suscipiebatur, sed etiam popularis, &c. cum bonis omnibus, tum infimo cuique gratissima (31).—It happened to Recaredus, as to scarce any other King, that, though the Change of Religion, in his Dominions, which was almost necessary, was attended with some Disturbances, yet were they neither of long Continuance, nor of ill Consequence; and so far was the Severity, which he exercised upon this Occasion, from being odious, that it was popular, and pleasing, not only to good Men, but to the meanest of the People." The Author, before-mentioned, observes, that, if the Complaints, which the Arians made, had been preferred to us, it is probable we should find in them a very long Detail of Acts of Violence; and that, after all, it was purely by Accident, that Arianism was ruined, without Persecution: For, as Mariana says, since Punishments were not made use of, but when Necessity required, we must conclude; I. That, if they were not often put in practice, it was because the Arians were not obstinate. II. That, had the Difficulties been ever so great, yet they would have been reduced, either by fair, or foul Means, to a Compliance (32). By the way, This Author (33) is guilty of a very gross Contradiction, into which Writers, who undertake to speak of Conversions, are apt to fall. They lay it down, as a general Maxim, that Obstinacy is the Character of Heresy; and yet, to cover the Violence

(27) See the Janus Cyclicum references, pag. 119, &c.

(28) For the Month of May, 1692, Article 9, pag. 391, &c.

(29) See Trebellius Pollio, in the Life of Gallienus.

(30) The 30th and 31st Chapters.

(31) Mariana, lib. V, cap. 14. Consult the Supplement to the Philosophical Commentary, pag. 313.

(32) Supplement to the Philosophical Commentary, p. 375, 376.

(33) Ibid. of pag. 377.

(21) Pag. 354, of the Supplement.

(22) Ibid. pag. 355.

(23) Droits de deux Souverains, pag. 280.

(24) Horat. Epist. 11, lib. 1, v. 27.

(25) In his Avertissement.

(26) See the Speech, made by Mr Bruyere, when he was admitted a Member of the French Academy.

Thalia, have met with Censure [L]. There might perhaps be some Prepossession in This. A Modern Author, who favoured This Heretic's Opinions, has wrote some Treatises to shew, that the Fathers of the three first Centuries held the same Opinions [M]. He was at no great trouble to compile Passages; for he found them ready collected to his Hand in the Dogmata Theologica of Father Petavius. Two English (d), and one French Divine (e), have wrote an Apology for the Ancient Fathers against Him.

(d) Gordner, and Bull.

(e) Mr le Moine, Professor at Leyden.

of the Converters, they tell us, that the Conversions were made with ease; and from this Facility draw a Proof of the Heresy of those converted. For the true Church, say they, is not so easily deserted; the Resistance, which the Arians made to King Rearedus, was so weak, and short, that this alone is enough to shew, that they contended for Falshood, and not for Truth, which alone is able to govern reasonable Minds, and inspire them with Fortitude (34).

(34) Thomassin, de l'Unité de l'Eglise, pag. 449.

[L] Both the Matter, and the Form, of the Poem, which he intituled Thalia, have met with Censure.] There has been great Reason to condemn Heresies; to pity Those, who profess them in good earnest, and to abominate those, who teach them, without believing them; for such Teachers are Monsters of Ambition, and Wickedness: but I cannot conceive, why it should be imputed as a Crime peculiar to heretical Teachers, that they make use of Methods suited to the Capacities of the Ignorant, in instructing them according to the false Lights of their Consciences. "After Arius had forsaken the Church, he formed "a Design of composing several Songs for Seamen, "Travellers, and Those, who work at the Mill; he had "also set such of them to Tunes, as he thought were "proper to affect his Followers, according to their "different Dispositions, endeavouring, by the Me- "lody of These Songs, to infuse his Impiety into the "most ignorant and stupid among the People — "But his Thalia was much more celebrated, than his "other Works. He borrowed the Title, and Mo- "del, of it from an ancient Poet, called Sotades — "This Burlesque Poet affected to wanton a Style in "his Song, and the Numbers of it were so effemi- "nate, that the Pagans themselves treated him with "the utmost Contempt; nor is this at all aggravated "in the words of St Athanasius; since the most un- "chaste Poets, and They, who write most licentiously, "blush at the Impurity of the Songs of this Infa- "mous Author. It was in imitation of this Poet, "that Arius gave his Work the Name of THALIA; "which properly signifies a Banquet, and Assembly "of young People, or a Song made to be sung in "Those kind of Feasts (35)." Afterwards Mr Hermant cites a very long Passage of St Athanasius, in which Arius is called an I know not what Sotades; ridiculous even to the Pagans themselves — and an Heretic, who had no emulation for any thing, but the ridiculous Discourses of Sotades (36). In the same Place we meet with the beginning of the Thalia, and another Fragment, which contains the Heresy of Arius concerning JESUS CHRIST. One cannot but condemn the ridiculous and insufferable Pride, which appears in the Exordium of the Thalia; but, once more, let us condemn Arius for being an Heretic, and not, upon this Supposition, for having put a Formulary of his Belief into Verse; otherwise we must allow Heretics and Infidels to condemn the Orthodox, not only for professing the true Gospel, but likewise for singing, besides the Psalms of David, several Hymns and Canticles, whose Verses and Airs may chance to resemble the most prophane and wanton Songs of an Opera. To speak in general, it is fitter, that every one, be his

(35) Hermant's Life of St Athanasius, lib. I. cap. 13, pag. 61.

(36) Ex O-rat. II, contra Arianos.

WHETHER we are to condemn Spiritual Hymns and Songs, which are set to the same Airs with prophane Ballads.

(a) This Word in Dutch signifies Old Water, and from thence the Name of Arminius's Country in the Titles of his Books is Vettraquone.

Religion what it will, should sing Pious, than wanton and satirical, Songs. The Sailor, and the Miller, under the Misfortune of being Arians, did better to sing their Catechism, than their Amours. To say, that the Pagans themselves laughed at Arius's Songs, is alledging a very weak Reason; for I believe the Geniles made no great difference between the Arians, and the Orthodox, but hated them both alike; the Arians were no more favourable to Pagan Idolatry, than the Orthodox. I cannot tell whether Mr Hermant had Reason to say, that the Pagans themselves treated Arius with the utmost Contempt as a ridiculous Fellow. For the words, which he cites a little after, shew plainly, that it was Sotades, and not Arius, whom St Athanasius meant, when he said, that he was ridiculous to the Pagans themselves. I say it, and repeat it; it is allowable to compose pious Verses in the same Metre, and of the same Measure, with the Songs of an Opera; consequently one might compose Hymns to the Sotadic Measure. The Evil does not lie in this Conformity; it is rather in the Handle, which is given to Scoffers to laugh at Psalmody. I let aside the Subject of the Poetry. And, to let the Proteflants, in particular, see what Judgment they ought to make of the Invektives against the Thalia of Arius, they must be informed of what Father Maimbourg published concerning the Psalms, translated into Verse by Clement Marot. He speaks as ill of them, as of the Thalia of Arius. What he says of the Thalia, is to be found in the Eighty first Page of the first Tome of his History of Arianism (37). What he says of the Psalms, in his History of Calvinism (38), is This: "These were the Psalms, which they sung at That time; "to which Beza afterwards added the rest of the "Psalter; and which were set to Tunes of a soft and effeminate Air, which have nothing in them of the Devotion and Majesty of the Music of the Catholic Church." We cannot deny what Varillas says (39), that the Airs were taken from the best Songs of the Times. See Jeremiah de Pours, in his second Book of Divine Melody, pag. 577. It is not without Reason, that I alledged the Songs of an Opera, as my Example: I would insinuate, that we should carefully avoid imitating the Airs of a Ballad in Spiritual Songs; otherwise Religion is too much exposed to Contempt and Laughter; as appears by the Book, which the Author of the Court Bishop so much ridicules (40). It is a Collection of Spiritual Songs, composed by a Jesuit, and by Father Martial de Brive, a Capuchin, and set to the most burlesque Ballad-Tunes; I fancy the Thalia of Arius might vie with the Impertinence of This Collection, printed with the Approbation of two Doctors of Divinity.

(37) Tom. I. pag. 81, E-dit. of Holl.

(38) Pag. 99.

(39) Varill. History of Heresy, Book XXI, pag. 49, ad Ann. 1559.

(40) See his tribi Dialogue, pag. 86, sec. Jacobi Edit. of Holl.

[M] A Modern Author — wrote some Works, to prove, that the Fathers of the three first Centuries held the same Opinions.] His Name was Sandius. What he wrote on this Subject is entituled Nucleus Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ, in 1668, in 8vo. The same Book was much enlarged in the Year 1676, in 4to. Appendix addendorum, confirmendorum, et emendendorum, ad Nucleum Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ, cum responsionibus ad Gardinerum, in 1678, in 4to.

ARMINIUS (JAMES) Professor of Divinity at Leyden, was born at Oude-water (a) in Holland, in the Year 1560 [A]. His Father died during his Infancy; and he was indebted for his first Instructions to a good Priest, who had relished the Opinions of the Reformed, and who, to avoid being obliged to say Mass, changed his Abode often. He followed his Studies at Utrecht, when Death bereft him of his

[A] He was born in the Year 1560. Bertius amuses himself with giving the Year of Arminius's Birth two Characters, which no doubt he thought worthy of Reflexion. He observes, that Philip Melancthon died in That Year, and that the Conference of Poissy was held in the same Year, in which the Protestant Deputies pleaded the Cause of two Thousand one Hundred and Ninety Churches, who humbly sued to the King for Liberty of Conscience (1). To say nothing of his Calculation, which, perhaps, is not the most exact, He is mistaken as to the Year; the Conference of Poissy began in the Month of September 1561. Begin the Year either at Easter, or on the first of January, you will never justify Bertius.

(1) Bertius, in Orat. Funer. Jacobo Arminio.

[B] He

his Patron. This Loss would have plunged him into great difficulties, if he had not fortunately met with assistance from his Countryman, Rodolphus Snellius, who brought him with him to Marpurg, in 1575. Scarce was he arrived there, when he received the News that Oudewater was pillaged by the Spaniards. This News threw him into a deep Melancholy; nor could he forbear returning into Holland, to be himself a Witness of the State of things there; but, finding, that his Mother, Sister, Brothers, Relations, and almost all the Inhabitants of Oudewater, had been put to the Sword, he returned to Marpurg, travelling all the way on Foot. Having heard, that an University was founded at Leyden, he soon returned to Holland, and studied in this new Academy with so great Application and Success, that he acquired a very particular Esteem. In 1582, he was sent to Geneva, at the Expence of the Magistrates of Amsterdam, to perfect his Studies in the Colleges there, where he chiefly followed the Lectures of Theodore Beza, who at that time expounded the Epistle to the Romans. He had the misfortune to displease some of the Principal Members of the Academy, by publickly maintaining the Philosophy of Ramus; and That with much heat; and even teaching it in private; for this he was obliged to retire, and went to Basil, where he was received with Applause. He read public Lectures there [B], and acquired such Credit, that the Faculty of Divinity would have given him the Degree of Doctor without any Expence. He modestly declined the Offer, and returned to Geneva, where, finding the Adversaries of the Ramists somewhat cooled, he moderated his own heat likewise. He had a great desire to see Italy, and particularly that he might hear the Philosophical Lectures of the famous James Zabarella, at Padua. He satisfied This Curiosity, and passed six or seven Months in his Travels; after which he returned to Geneva, and from thence to Amsterdam, where he found he had been sufficiently censured in relation to his Journey into Italy [C], which had a little cooled the Affection of the Magistrates, his Patrons

[B] He read public Lectures at Basil. "The Professor James Grynæus came often to them, and gave him great Commendations. Nor did he scruple, in maintaining a Thesis, to refer it to Him to answer Those Objections, which seemed the strongest; and was wont upon those Occasions to say, Let my Hollander answer for me." *Solent Basileæ feriis vindemiaibus doctores studiosi publicè interdum in Academia exercitiis grati aliquid extra ordinem ducere. Eam laborem Arminius noster haud inuitus suscepit, laudatus ab id à reverendo viro D. Jacobo Grynæo, qui etiam lectiones ipsius præsentia sua aliquoties cobonassevit: idem quoque in disputationibus publicis, si quid gravius proponeretur, aut dignus vindice nodus occurreret, non est veritus, bonoris causâ Arminium nostrum media in studioforum turba sedentem citare, & (ut Grynæi candorem agnoscat) dicere, Respondet pro me Hollander meus (2). Note, that he observed in him a Spirit too much inclined to refine upon things, and that he gave him very good Advice thereupon. Bertius is not the Author, who informs me of this, but Philip Pareus. He relates, that Theodore Beza advised one of his Friends to restrain the Subtility of his Genius, as what Satan had often taken advantage of to delude great Persons. "Do not engage yourself, continued Beza, in vain Subtilities; and, if sometimes certain new Thoughts arise in your Mind, approve them not, without first examining them to the bottom, how pleasing soever they may be at the first View. Calvin gave me this Advice; I have followed it; and have found the benefit of it." *Sicut magnopere se tortor, ut Dei dona in te collata omni studio excelas: ita cum te ἀγχινοία non vulgari donatum esse videam, quæ sæpe ad maximos decipiendo viros non irritò conatu Satanas est abusus, velim te diligenter coovere, ut nullis inanius argutis te ipsum irretias, & quoties nova quædam tibi in mentem veniant, diligenter illa, quantumlibet in initio tibi illa arriperant, excutere, priusquam approbes. In omnibus denique istis prompto & alacri ingenio tibi concessio modereris. Ego quidem certe per Dei gratiam non profus bebes de hoc ipso à magno illo viro beate memoriæ JOHANNÉ CALVINO admonitus ita facere statim ab initio studii, cum ad sacra studia me totum converterem. Neque me bujus consilii unquam parituit: nec, ut spero, paritabit (3). Philip Pareus had the Original of This Letter of Theodore Beza; and he adds, that "JAMES GRYNÆUS had given the same Advice to ARMINIUS, the Founder of the New Pelagianism, at the time when he studied Divinity at Basil; as Grynæus himself had informed him." In quam sententiam clarissimum & sagacissimum JACOBUM ARMINIUM, novi Pelagianismi instauratorem in Belgio, cum juvenis operam daret S. Theologie in Academia Basiliensi, gravior quoque admonitum fuisse à venerando senè D. JACOBO GRYNÆO, cujus memoria fit in benedictione! Ipsemet mihi, quando ad pedes ejus in Raurica discentium Synagoga sederem, narravit (4). If any one accuses me of inferring these Passages at length, only as Helps to swell out a large Book, he will betray a want of Judgment; for they are very fit to suggest useful Reflexions to several Persons, and very necessary for some Readers. Remember St Paul's Maxim, Knowledge puffeth up (5); but take notice, that there is another Talent which puff; up yet more. A Man of an unbounded Memory, and Reading, applauds himself on his Knowledge, and grows proud; but he prides himself, and presumes much more, when he fancies he has invented a new Method of explaining, or treating, Matters. We do not esteem ourselves so much Proprietors of That Knowledge, we have drawn from Books, as we do of an Explanation, or Doctrine, of which we are the Inventors. It is for such Inventions that we feel all the Force of Paternal Love and Tenderneß. It is here we find the most bewitching Charms; it is This, which blinds us; it is This, which makes us lose Ground. This is a Rock, of which young Persons of a subtle Wit cannot be too frequently warned.

[C] He had been sufficiently censured in relation to his Journey into Italy. Among the several Epidemical Distempers of the Human Mind, I know of none more blameable, and productive of bad Effects, than the Practice of giving the Reins to Suspicion. It is a very slippery Road. We are soon got a great Way from the Place we set out from. We easily pass from one Suspicion to another; we seldom stop at Possibility; we run forward to Probability, and to the greatest Probability; and, presently after, That which passed only for Probable, is reported as certain and incontestable; and in a little time, This pretended Certainty is spread over a whole Town. Great Cities are more subject to This Disorder, than others. It was reported, in Amsterdam, that "Arminius had kissed the Pope's Toe, whom he had seen only in a Croud; that he had contracted an Intimacy with Jesuits, whom he had never heard of; that he had made himself known to Bellarmino, whom he had never seen; and that he had abjured the Reformed Religion, for which he was prepared to die." These Reports were all false; and yet They made an Impression on the Minds of the Magistrates, who supported This young Man. Let us hear the Author of his Funeral Oration. "Inter damna itineris Italici (penebat) quod in amplissimi Senatus Amsterdamentis offensunculam ob id factam tunc temporis in-

(4) Philipus Pareus, ibid.

(5) 1 Cor. viii. 1.

(2) Id. ibid.

(3) Beza, apud Philip-pum Pareum, in vita Davidis Pa-rel, pag. 57. See also a Letter of the same Beza, among those of Arminius, pag. 26, Edit. 1684.

(b) Inferni quidam fratres factum illud perpetuo infecturi, & in circulis fuggillare. Bertius in Orat. Funer. Jac. Arminii.

(c) He was the first, on whom this Title was solemnly conferred in the University of Leyden. Bertius, ubi supra.

(d) Not on account of his Morals, but for his Opinions.

trons and Mecenas's. He easily justified himself with Persons of Understanding; but there were some weak and suspicious Spirits, who could not get over this Stumbling-Block (b), till he had made the whole Church sensible of his fine Talent at Preaching; by the means of which he regained the Love and Esteem of all the World. His own Colleagues paid Homage to his Understanding, and confessed, that his Sermons were useful and instructive even to Them. Martin Lydius, Professor of Divinity at Franker, judged him a proper Person to answer a Writing, in which the Doctrine of Theodore Beza, concerning Predestination, was opposed by some Ministers of Delft. Arminius, in compliance with his Request, undertook to refute This Work; but, during the Examination, and whilst he was ballancing the Reasons on both sides, he went over to the Opinion, he was to refute, and even carried it farther than the Ministers of Delft. He condemned, with Them, the Supralapsarian Beza, and afterwards acknowledged no other Election, but That, which was grounded on the Obedience of Sinners to the call of God by JESUS CHRIST. He was brought into trouble for This at Amsterdam; he was accused of departing from the received Doctrine; but the Authority of the Magistrates suppressed This Contest. He was advanced to the Professorship of Divinity, at Leyden, in the Year 1603; and it was with no small difficulty he obtained his Dismission from Those of Amsterdam. After he had removed the ill Impressions, which had been given of his Doctrine, he was admitted Doctor of Divinity at Leyden (c), and installed in the room of the Professor Francis Junius. He had exercised his Ministry in the Church of Amsterdam fifteen Years. The Disputes about Grace soon after grew hot in That University; and the States of the Province were obliged to appoint Conferences between Him and His Adversaries. He was summoned several times to the Hague, and went thither to give an account of his Doctrine. This Contest, his great Application to Business, and the Vexation to find his Reputation sullied by several Calumnies (d), impaired his Health in such a manner, that he fell into a Distemper, of which he died, the nineteenth of October, 1609 [D], with great Sentiments of Piety and Patience (e). It were to be wished he had made a better use of his Knowledge [E]; for, tho' his Intentions probably were good, yet it may be said, that he innovated

(e) Taken from his Funeral Orations, spoken by Peter Bertius.

"currisset, suffundentibus frigidam quibusdam, quos
"omnino praestitisset judicia in ipsius reditum sus-
"pendere. Hinc ergo, sumpta occasione, spargebatur
"in vulgus, illum Pontificis solemne deosculatum,
"quem non nisi in conferta turba, ut reliqui spe-
"ctatores, vidisset, nec foleat bellum honorem illum
"nisi Regibus ac Principibus deferre: Jesuitis ad-
"suevisse, quos nunquam audivisset: Bellarmino in"notuisse, quem nunquam conspexisset: Religio-
"nem orthodoxam abjurasse, pro qua paratus esset
"ad sanguinis usque profusionem decertare (6)."

(6) Bertius in Orat. Funer. J. Arminii.

[D] The Vexation to find his Reputation sullied
"----- impaired his Health, and brought him in-
"to a Distemper, of which he died, the nineteenth of "October, 1609.] There is reason to think, that this "Vexation contributed more to his untimely Death, "than any thing else. It was a bad Leaven, which
"soured the peccant Humours, and which complica"ted his Distemper a thousand Ways. "Quum in"domita mali pertinacia ipsi quoque arti (Medicinae)
"faceret opprobrium: Altius enim dehisca quam ut
"evelli posset, nova indies excitabat symptomata, fe-
"bres, tussim, hypochondrium extensionem, expi-
"randi difficultatem, oppressionem à cibo, laboriosos
"somnos, atrophiam, arthritidem; nullamque aegro
"pauisam vel requiem concedebat: accessere postea
"dolores in intestinis, ilio, & colo, cum obstructione
"nervi optici sinistri, & ejusdem oculi obfuscatione.
"----- The Stubbornness of his Disease baffled all "the Art of Medicine; for, being past cure, it every "Day brought on new Symptoms: Fevers, a Cough,
"an Extension of the Hypochondria, Difficulty of "Breathing, Oppression of Food, restless Sleep, Con"sumption, and Gout; nor had he any respite from "his Distemper; afterwards he felt Pains in his In"testines, with an Obstruction of the left optic Nerve,
"and a Dimness in the left Eye (7)."

(7) Bertius, ubi supra, fol. ij, verso.

Sometimes he was heard to sigh, and cry out, as formerly the Prophet did, Wo is me, my Mother, that thou hast born me a Man of Strife, &c. Let us produce a long Passage of Bertius. "Quid mirum, si commo-
"tus fuerit famae suae, salutis, & laborum dispendio;
"quum neque viro bono quicquam fama sua sit an-
"tiquius, neque Christiano salute, neque S. Theo-"logiae doctori petitis ex scriptura demonstrationi-
"bus? Oppressio, inquit Siracides, infanire facit sa-"pientem. Eadem huic dolore, ex dolore morbum
"conciliavit, ex morbo mortem. O tetrum, & vi"perinum, exque imo tartaro excitatum malum!

"Quoties illum ex Propheta privatim etiam cum
"gemitu exclamantem audivimus! *Ve mihi, mater
"mea, quare genuisti me virum discordiae in uni-
"versa terra? Nec seneravi, nec seneravit mihi "quisquam; & tamen omnes maledicunt mihi*. Re-
"vocavit tamen seipse ad rationis & tranquillitatis
"septa (8). --- *What Wonder, if the loss of his Reputa"tion, his Health, and his Labour, affected him; since
"a good Man sets the greatest Value on his Fame,
"a Christian on his Health, and a Divine on Proof
"fetched from Scripture?* Oppression, says the Son
"Sirac, maketh a wise Man mad. It was This very "Thing, which first afflicted him: Affliction next
"impaired his Health; and at last a Distemper killed
"him. O Thou Black, Poisonous, and most Hellish "Evil! How often have we heard him exclaiming
"to himself, with a Sigh, in the Language of the Pro"phet; *Wo is me, my Mother, that Thou hast born
"me a Man of Strife, and a Man of Contention
"to the whole Earth! I have neither lent on Usury,
"nor Men have lent to me on Usury; yet every "one of them doth curse me. However, by the "help of Reason, he recovered his Peace of Mind.*"
This we cannot reflect on, without deploring the "Vanity of human Things. We look upon Stupidity
"as a great Misfortune; and Fathers, who are not "blind to the Dulness of their Sons, are sensibly af"flicted at it: They want to discover in them a great "Genius, a sublime Understanding; and, if they find "them thus qualified, their Joy is inexpressible. This "is to wish we know what. Arminius had much better
"have been an errant Blockhead, than so great a Wit;
"for the Honour of giving his Name to a Sect, which "makes a Figure in the World, and which has "produced able Men, was but a chimerical Good,
"in comparison of the real Evils, the Vexations, the "Pains, and Bitterness, which he felt in his Life-time;
"which shortened his Days; and which he had ef"fected, had he been but an ordinary Divine, a little "Wit, or a Blockhead; in short, had he been One "of That Class of Men, of whom it is proverbially
"said, He will broach no Heresies". Juvenal would "have alledged an Example of this kind in his Tenth "Satire, if there had been Religious Disputes in his "Times, which had caused the Death of one of the "Disputants.

(8) Id. Ibid. fol. , ver- so.

* A Proverb in France, to denote a dull Wit.

[E] It were to be wished he had made a better use of his Knowledge.] I mean, that he had governed himself by St Paul's Rule. This great Apostle, inspired innovated without necessity, and under Circumstances, in which his Innovation proved a Source of Disorders, which ended in a Schism. He left seven Sons, and some Daughters, and a great number of Disciples, who continued the Dispute so warmly, that it was thought necessary to have recourse to a National Synod. They were condemned in it; but did not submit, and soon formed a separate Sect, which still continues, and which, by Degrees, has engaged itself in several other more considerable Errors. The Moreri of Amsterdam mentions some of the Authors, who give an account of this famous Quarrel. I add to them the Histories of Triglandius, and Boxbornius, and a new Work of a Professor of Tubingen (f). This grand Dispute produced Multitudes of Books on both Sides. A Professor of Divinity at Cologne, disguised under a fictitious Name (g), gives a List of them according to the order of Years, in a Work, which he intitled Pacificatorium discepti Belgii.

I question

(f) Johas. Wolfgangus Jager. His Work is intitled Historia Ecclesiastica Seculi XVII. The first Decad was printed in 1692.

(g) Ægidius Afhackerius. He assumed the Name of Salomo Theodorus. See Val. Andreas, Bibl. Belg. p. 22.

spired by God, and immediately directed by the Holy Ghost in all his Writings, raised to himself the Objection, which the Light of Nature forms against the Doctrine of Absolute Predestination; he apprehended the whole Force of the Objection; he proposes it without weakening it in the least. God hath Mercy on whom he will have Mercy, and whom he will be hardeneth (9). This is St Paul's Doctrine; and the difficulty, which he starts upon it, is This; Thou wilt say then unto me, why dost he yet find fault? For who hath resisted his Will (10)? This Objection cannot be pushed farther: Twenty Pages of the subtlest Molinist could add nothing to it. What more could they infer, than that, upon Calvin's Hypothesis, God wills Men to commit Sin? Now This is what St Paul knew might be objected against him. But what does he reply? Does he seek for Distinctions and Qualifications? Does he deny the Fact? Does he grant it in part only? Does he enter into Particulars? Does he remove any Ambiguity in the Words? Nothing of all this; he only alleges the Sovereign Power of God, and the Supremacy Right, which the Creator has, to dispose of his Creatures as it seems good to him. Nay but, O Man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the Thing formed say to him that formed it, why hast thou made me thus (11)? He acknowledges an Incomprehensibility in the thing, which ought to put a stop to all Disputes, and impose a profound Silence on our Reason. He cries out, O the Depth and the Riches both of the Wisdom and Knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his Judgments, and his Ways past finding out (12)! All Christians ought to find here a definitive Sentence, a Judgment final and without Appeal, in the Dispute about Grace; or rather they should learn, from this Conduct of St Paul, never to dispute about Predestination, and immediately to oppose This Bar against all the Subtilties of Human Wit, whether they arise of themselves in meditating on This great Subject, or whether others suggest them. The best, and the shortest, Way is early to oppose this strong Bank against the Inundations of Reasoning, and to consider this definitive Sentence of St Paul as Those Rocks, immovable in the midst of the Waves, against which the proudest Billows beat in vain; They may foam and dash; but are only broken against Them. All Arrows, darted against this Shield, will have the same Fate, as That of Priam.

Sic fatus Senior, tellumque imbelli sine ictu
Conjecit; rauco quod protinus ære repulsum,
Et fummo clypei nequicquam umbone pependit (13).

This said, his feeble Hand a Javelin threw;
Which, fluttring, seemed to loiter as it flew:
Just, and but barely, to the Mark it beld,
And faintly tingled on the brazen Shield.

DRYDEN.

Thus ought Men to behave, when the Dispute is between Christian and Christian. And, if ever we think proper to exercise our Wit on Points of this Nature, we ought at least to found a Retreat betimes, and retire behind the Bank I have just mentioned. Had Arminius acted thus, as often as his Reason suggested to him Difficulties against the Hypothesis of the Reformers, or whenever he found himself called upon to answer any Disputants, he would have taken a perfectly Wise and Apostolic Course, and employed the Lights of his Understanding just as he ought to have done. If he believed there was something too harsh in the received Doctrine; or, if he found it an ease to himself to adopt a less rigid Opinion, he might have enjoyed his particular Notion; but then he should have been content to have enjoyed it in Silence; I mean, without disturbing the Rights of Possession; since he could not do this, without raising a dangerous Storm in the Church. His Silence would have saved him a great deal of Trouble; and he should have remembered the old Apologue.

Sed tacitus pasci si posset Corvus, haberet
Plus dapis, & rixæ multo minus invidiæque (14).

But, could the talking Crow in quiet eat,
His Envy bad, been less, and more his Meat.

CREECH.

See the Remark [D] of the Article HALL (JOSEPH).

But, say some, would he not have been a Prevaricator, and unworthy of the Ministry, if he had neglected to instruct his Auditors, whom he believed to be engaged in a false Doctrine? I answer; That two capital Reasons would have excused his speaking out; one was, that he did not believe the Hypothesis, which he disapproved, to be contrary to Salvation; the other, that his new Method was useless towards removing the principal Difficulties, which occur in the Doctrine of Predestination. We may grant, that the least Truth, absolutely speaking, deserves to be proposed, and that there is no Error so inconsiderable, which it is not better we should be cured of, than retain; but, when the Circumstances of Time and Place will not permit any Novelty to be proposed, be they ever so true, without occasioning a thousand Disorders, in Universities, in Families, and in the State itself; it is infinitely better to leave Things as they are, than undertake to reform them: The Remedy is worse than the Disease. Our Conduct in this Case should resemble That towards certain sick Persons, to whom no Physic can be administered, without stirring several bad Humours, the agitation of which would be more pernicious, than the Coagulation (15). I except one Case; viz. where the saving of Souls is concerned, and the snatching them out of the Jaws of the Devil; for, in this case, Charity will not suffer us to stand idle, how great soever the Commotions may be, which by this means are accidentally raised: we must submit the consequences to the Care of Providence. Upon this foot, Arminius was no ways obliged to oppose the common Doctrine; he did not believe, that any one endangered his Salvation, by following the Hypothesis of Calvin. Let us consider the other Circumstance, which rendered him inexcusable. To a System, full of great Difficulties, he substituted another System, which, to speak truly, involves no less Difficulties, than the former. One may say of his Doctrine, what I have observed of the Innovations of Sauveter (16). It is better connected, and less forced, than the Opinion of Mr Amyraut; but, after all, it is but a palliative Remedy; for the Arminians have scarce been able to answer some Objections, which, as they pretend, cannot be refuted on Calvin's System; besides, they find themselves exposed to other Difficulties, which they cannot get over, but by an ingenuous Confession of (14) Horat. Epit. 17, lib. 1, v. 50.

(11) Ibid. ver. 20.

(12) Ibid. chap. xi, ver. 33.

(13) Virgil. Æneid. lib. 2, ver. 544.

(15) Expediebat quasi æque fuscæque Reipublicæ requiescere quomocunque ne vulnera curacione ipsa reciderent. ---- It was expedient for the Commonwealth, that the very Cause should tear open its Wounds. Florus, lib. 3, cap. 23.

(16) See Remark [E], of the Article A M Y. R A U T.

I question whether his Catalogue be compleat. It is difficult not to omit some in such a number of Pieces. As to the Works of Arminius [F], see our last Remark.

the weakness of human Reason, and the Consideration of the incomprehensible Infinity of God. And was it worth while to contradict Cabins for this? Why was Arminius so very difficult at first, when, at last, he was obliged to fly to This Asylum? Why did he not begin here, since here he must come sooner or later? He is mistaken, who imagines, that, after entering the Lists with a great Disputant, He shall be allowed to triumph, only for some small Advantage, which he had over him at first. An Athletic, who throws out his Antagonist in the middle of the Race, but has not the Advantage of him at the End, is not entitled to the Palm. It is the same in Controversy; it is not sufficient to parry the first Thrusts. Every Reply, and Rejoinder, must be satisfied, and every Doubt perfectly cleared up. Now this is what neither the Hypothesis of Arminius, nor That of the Molinists, nor That of the Socinians, is able to do (17). The System of the Arminians is only calculated to gain some few Advantages, in Those Preludes to War, in which the forlorn Hope is sent out, to skirmish; but, when it comes to a general and decisive Battle, This Detachment must retire, as well as the rest, behind the Intrenchments of Incomprehensible Mystery.

(17) See Mr. Jurieu, in his Judgment on the rigid and latitudinarian Methods of explaining the Doctrine of Grace.

[F] The Works of Arminius. These are the Titles of them: "Disputationes de diversis Christianæ Religionis capitibus. --- Orationes, itemque Tractatus insigniores aliquot. --- Examen modestum libelli Guilhelmi Perkinii, de Prædestinationis modo & ordine, itemque de amplitudine gratiæ diviniæ. --- Analysis capituli ix. ad Romanos. --- Dissertatio de vero & genuino sensu cap. viii. Epistolæ ad Romanos. --- Amica collatio cum D. Francisco Junio de Prædestinatione, per litteras habitæ. --- Epistola ad Hippolytum à Collibus, &c. --- i. e. Disputations on the several Heads of the Christian Religion. --- Orationes, together with some more remarkable Tracts. --- A Modest Examination of a Book of William Perkins, concerning the Manner and Order of Predestination, and concerning the Extent of Divine Grace. --- An Analysis of the ninth Chapter to the Romans. --- A Dissertation concerning the true and genuine Sense of the Seventh Chapter of the Epistle to the Romans. --- A Friendly Conference with Francis Junius concerning Predestination, held by Letter. --- An Epistle to Hippolytus à Collibus, &c."

ARNAULD, a Noble and Ancient Family of Auvergne. It is above Two Hundred Years, since a Daughter of this House was married to a Lord de la Fayette, the Grandson of Him, who was Marshal of France under Charles VIth. About the Year 1480, HENRY ARNAULD married Catherine Bariot, a Kinswoman of Him, who was Counsellor in the Parliament of Paris, and Master of the Requests in the Reign of Lewis XI (a). Soon after this Marriage, He settled at Riom, whither he was invited, with several other Persons of Merit, by Peter de Bourbon, Count of Beaujeu [A], who kept his ordinary Residence there. This Prince was married to Anna of France, Daughter of Lewis XI, who had an absolute Power over the Mind of her Brother Charles VIII, and was Regent during his Minority. Henry Arnauld insinuated himself into the Esteem of the Count and Countess of Beaujeu. He was made Master of the Horse to the Count, and Governor of the Town and Castle of Hermant. It was the Place of his Birth, and about eight Leagues distant from Riom, on the Frontiers of the Marche de Limousin, near Ussel. This Government was continued to him by the Constable of Bourbon, Son-in-Law to the Count de Beaujeu. The Office of Master of the Horse was also continued to him. He did great Service to the Constable, by causing his Horses to be shod backwards (b), when Francis I, who considered him as a Rebel, sent a Guard to take him. They, supposing by the Horses Tracks, that he was gone quite the contrary Way from the Place, where he had concealed himself, lost their time in searching for him where he was not. Henry Arnauld had contracted a very strict Friendship with Florimond de Robertet, Secretary to the Count de Beaujeu, and afterwards Secretary of State under Francis I; and it was wholly his own fault, that he did not procure a very advantageous Match for his Son, by the Generosity of this Friend; but he would return one Act of Generosity by another [B]. He left two Sons John and Anthony. The first died without Children: In the Parish Register of the City of Riom, in the Year 1542, he is stiled Commander of Hermant. His younger Brother, ANTHONY ARNAULD kept up the Family. His first Wife was Margaret Mosnier-Dubourg, a near

(a) From Him descended Mr. Bariot, Marquis of Moully, and Mrs. Bariot, Countess of Honneuil and Maury.

(b) We find in the Galleries des Rois de France, printed in Holland, in 1694, pag. 289, of the first Tome, that the Family of Arnauld was deprived of all for this Stratagem.

[A] He was invited to Riom, with several other Persons of Merit, by Peter de Bourbon, Count of Beaujeu. In Riom are yet to be seen the Houses of Montboissier, Montmorin, Chazeron, Florat, Chasteauguy, Marillac, Dubourg, Duprat, Forget, and Robertet; who were all chief Officers, and Favourites, of the Count and Countess of Beaujeu, and of their Son-in-Law, the Constable of Bourbon; by whom they were all successively advanced to the chief Dignities of the Sword, and of the Gown (1). Thus you see by what Accident it happened, that so many Auvergnats appeared at the Court of France in the highest Posts, under Charles VIII, Lewis XII, and Francis I. The Countess of Beaujeu had drawn them out of their Province, and had put in their Power to make their own Fortunes. Had it not been for her, they might all have died in obscurity; their great Talents would never have shone beyond their own Country. Conclude from hence, that the particular Glory of a Province, at certain times, depends wholly on Patronages of this kind. You will find a Supplement to

This in the Continuation of the Menagiana, pag. 304, and 305, of the Edition of Holland.

[B] He would return one Act of Generosity by another.] The Affair was this: Florimond de Robertet, leaving Montbrison, his native Place, settled at Riom, and became Secretary to the Count de Beaujeu. He governed him absolutely; as he afterwards did Charles VIII, and Lewis XII, after the Death of the Cardinal d'Amboise; and lastly, Francis I, to whom he was Secretary of State. He had such an Affection for Henry Arnauld, that, when he left Riom, to reside at the Court of Charles VIII, he took all his Children along with him, except his Eldest Daughter Jane de Robertet, whom he left at Riom with the Wife of Henry Arnauld, designing, that they should marry her to their Eldest Son John Arnauld, when she came of Age. But the Guardians did not think their Son a Match good enough for her; so they married her to the richest young Man of Riom, whose Name was Amable de Carriers, the Son of one Marillac (2).

(1) Taken from a Memoir, inserted in the Mercure Galant of December, 1693, pag. 42.

(2) Taken from the same Memoir.

[C] He

a near Relation of the Chancellor of That Name, Sister of the famous Annas Dubourg, Counsellor in Parliament, and of John Dubourg, Lieutenant-Criminal of Riom. He had but one Son by This Marriage, viz. JOHN DE LA MOTTE-ARNAULD, whom Ibuanus mentions with so much Praise in his History; and who, at the Head of a Troop of Horse, of which he was Captain, shut himself up in the Town of Tyffire, which held for the King against the League, and maintained the Siege of it a long time with the Lords of Chabanes, and of Chazeron; after which he made a vigorous Sally at the Head of thirty Troopers, and killed the Count of Randam (a) with his own Hand, who was Chief of the League in Auvergne. The Death of This Person occasioned the raising of the Siege, and the winning of a Battle, which was fought some time after, and which secured all Auvergne to Henry IV, on the same Day, and in the same Year, that he gained the Victory in the Battle of Ivry. The Father of this John Arnauld had followed the Profession of Arms from the beginning. He had raised a Company of Light-Horse, and was in several Actions. But Catherine de Medicis, knowing him to be an able and faithful Person, made him her Attorney-General, and the King's Attorney in the Presidial Court of Riom, which, at that time, had above forty Leagues of Extent (d). He distinguished himself greatly in these two Employes. In all the Acts remaining of him, he styles himself Lord of la Motte, Chantegrenelle, Fontainebleau, Pessac, and Bonnefilles, all Fiefs, and Castles, not above half a League from Riom. His second Wife was Anne Forget, Daughter of the Steward of the Household to the Constable of Bourbon (e). He lived to the Age of an Hundred and One Years, and died at Paris; whither Queen Catherine de Medicis had called him. He was buried in the Church of St Sulpice, and in the first Chapel, that had been built in it, of which he himself was the Founder. The Title of the Foundation imports, that he had the Office of Auditor of the Accompts, and Comptroller-General [C], and that he was Lord of Corbeville near Paris. From his second Marriage proceeded twelve Sons (f), one of whom was ANTHONY ARNAULD: I shall mention him in a separate Article; ISAAC ARNAULD, who was Intendant of the Finances; DAVID ARNAULD, a Captain, who was killed at the Siege of Jerzeau; LEWIS ARNAULD, Receiver-General of the Finances at Riom; another LEWIS ARNAULD, the King's Secretary at Paris; and PETER ARNAULD, who was the youngest of the twelve Brothers, and who distinguished himself most in the Profession of Arms. He was Marshal of the Camps, and Armies, of King Lewis XIII; Governor of Fort Lewis, and Colonel of the Regiment of Champaigne. He it is, of whom the Sieur de Pontis makes such honourable mention; who ventures to equal him to the most famous Commanders among the Greeks and Romans. He says, that he understood the Ancient Military Discipline the best of any Man, and made his Soldiers strictly observe it, who loved him even to Adoration. Isaac Arnauld, above-mentioned, was the Father of another ISAAC ARNAULD, who was Governor of Philippsburg, and Camp Master to the Carabineers, one of the bravest Men, and finest Wits, of the Age: He is celebrated in the Works of Voiture. His Sister was married to Manasses de Feuquiers, who commanded the King's Army before Tionville, in the Year 1639 (g).

(a) Mademoiselle de Senecy, Governor of the King, was his Daughter.

(d) The Presidial Courts of Guercy, of Clermont, and of Aurillac, were not as yet dismembered from it.

(e) Monf. Forget, Secretary in the Reign of Henry IV, was of the same Family.

(f) The Historical Discourse of the Life of Mr Arnauld, Doctor of the Sorbonne, mentions only eight Sons, which John de la Motte Arnauld had by two Wives, pag. 2, Edit. of Liege, 1702.

(g) Taken from a Memoir, communicated to the Author of the Mercure Galant, Decemb. 1693.

[C] He was Auditor of the Accompts, and Comptroller-General. Since the first Edition of this Work, I received a small Memoir, written by one of the principal Genealogists of Europe; in which I find as follows: "Anthony Arnauld, Sieur de la Motte, and Villeneuve, His Majesty's Attorney in the Seneschal's Jurisdiction of Auvergne, at Riom; Solicitor-General to the Parliament in 1568, and 1570; afterwards Auditor of the Accompts at Paris, and Attorney-General of Catherine de Medicis; was ennobled, in December 1577, by the Title of Auditor

"of the Accompts. He was the Son of Henry Arnauld, Bailiff of the Town of Harmant, in Auvergne, and of N. Colonges. He had married Anne Forget, Daughter of John Forget, Sieur de Bidoigne, the King's Attorney in Auvergne, and of Jane Godinet; and he died at the Age of an Hundred and One Years, about the Year 1591. See the Memoirs of Sully, Tom. IV. fol. 27." Read also the Continuation of the Menagiana, pag. 305, Dutch Edition.

(a) König calls him Marc Anthony. The Letter M, which He, and Others, met with before Anthony, in some French Books, in which it stands for Maître, or Monsieur, was, probably, the Cause of this Mistake.

ARNAULD (ANTHONY) (a) Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, the Son of another Anthony, whom I have mentioned in the preceeding Article, acquired a wonderful Reputation by his Eloquence. Henry IV, intending to shew the Duke of Savoy the Parliament, made Choice of a Day, when Arnauld was to plead a fine Cause (b). He gave this able Man a Breviate for Counsellor of State. The Queen Mary de Medicis made him her Advocate-General, and would have made him her Secretary of State; but he declined this Office, and told her Majesty, he could do Her more Service, in quality of Advocate, than if he was Secretary of State. This Fact is intimated in his Epitaph [A]. One Day the Advocate-General, Marion, was so well

(b) The Relation was, concerning the Punishment due to Slandrers. See in Matthieu's History of Henry IV. Tom. I. pag. 455, an argument on this Subject.

[A] He refused to be Secretary of State — This Fact is intimated in his Epitaph. Mr le Maître, Grand-Son, and God-Son of Anthony Arnauld, the Advocate, was Author of the Epitaph. They, who would read it, need look no further than this Page; and They, who have no such Curiosity, may pass it over.

Passant, du grand Arnauld revere la memoire. Ses vertus à sa race ont servi d'ornement, Sa plume à son pais, sa voix au Parlement, Son esprit à son siecle, & ses faits à l'histoire. Contre un second Philippe Usurpateur des lis Ce second Demosthene anima ses écrits, Et contre Emmanuel arma son éloquence.

(c) Taken from the Memoir, in the Mercurie Galant, for Decemb. 1693.

well satisfied with hearing him plead, that he took him home in his Coach to Dinner, and seated his Eldest Daughter Catherine Marion near him. After Dinner, he took him aside, and asked him what he thought of his Daughter; and, being answered, that she seemed to him a Lady of great Merit, he gave her to him in Marriage (c). One of the most famous Causes, which Anthony Arnauld ever pleaded, was That of the University against the Jesuits, in the Year 1594. We shall see hereafter how he was rewarded for it [B]. Some say, that he published a Book in 1602, to prevent their Re-call [C]. But, foreseeing, that they would return, and become formidable, he endeavoured to suppress it. He had been Counsellor and Attorney-General to Queen Catherine de Medicis. They, who have reported, that he was of the Reformed Religion, have reported a very great Falshood [D]. He had

Twenty

Il vit comme un neant les hautes dignitez,
Et prefera l'honneur d'oracle de la France
A tout le vain éclat des titres empruntez.

Passenger, whose'er thou art, revere the Memory Of the Great ARNAULD.

His Virtues were the Ornament of his Family,

His Pen of his Country, His Voice of the Parliament,

His Wit of the Age, and his Actions of History.

Against a second Philip, Usurper of the Lilly,

This second Demosthenes

Animated his Writings;

And arm'd his Eloquence against Emmanuel.

He despis'd the highest Dignities,

*And prefer'd the Honour of being
The Oracle of France*

To all the vain Splendor of borrowed Titles.

[B] How he was rewarded for it. He sent back the Present, which the University had ordered him; He would have it said, that so famous a Cause was pleaded gratis. The University drew up an Act in the most authentic Form, by which it engaged itself to an eternal Acknowledgment, not only to himself, but to his Posterity. These are the Terms of the Decree: "Quapropter, cum Consultorum diffinitimus & Difertorum consultius D. ANTONIUS ARNALDUS, in Foro Parisiensi spectatus à multis annis Patronus, pro Defensione juris Academici — tantopere defudavit: & longa compaque Oratione, quæ Doctorem manibus teritur, probavit — Cumque idem pro Defensionis laboribus & Patrocinii jure oblatum sibi ab Academia honorarium remisit, gratitatemque suam operam esse voluerit; ne apud Nos ingrati animi culpa residat, placuit Rectori, quatuor Facultatibus, & singulis Nationibus, ut perpetua tanti beneficii memoria publicis Tabulis consignata & testata apud posteritatem existeret, huicque Sacramento se omnes Academicæ Ordines obstringerent, se ea officia, quæ à bonis clientibus fido Patrono solent deferri, omnia IN ILLUM EJUSQUE LIBEROS ac posteros studiosè collaturos, nec eorum unquam honori, commodis, famæque defuturos (1). — Wherefore, since the most famous Lawyer, ANTHONY ARNAULD, many Years a celebrated Advocate in the Courts of Paris, has so greatly exerted himself in Defence of the Rights of the University; and proved, in a long and beautiful Oration, which is in the Hands of the Learned, &c. And, whereas the said Lawyer has declined accepting the Present, sent him by the University, in consideration of the Pains of his Defence, and as justly due to his Patronage; and desires to bestow his Labour gratis; Therefore, lest the Imputation of Ingratitude should rest upon us, it hath pleased the Rector, the Four Faculties, and every Order, that the Memory of so great a Benefit shall be preserved upon Record to Posterity, and that every Member of the University shall oblige himself, by an Oath, to discharge every Instance of Duty, usually paid by good Clients to a faithful Patron, to HIM and his CHILDREN, nor ever to be wanting to their Honour, Advantage, and Fame." You will find This at large in the Preface of a Book printed at Liege, in 1699, and entituled "Causa Arnaldina, seu Antonius Doctor & Socius Sorbonicus à censura Anno 1656, sub nomine Facultatis Theologicæ Parisiensis vulgata, vindicatus. — The Arnaldian Cause, or Anthony Arnauld,

(1) Prefat. Cause Arnaldinae, pag. xcviij.

"Doctor and Fellow of the Sorbonne, vindicated from the Censure, published, in 1699, in the Name of the Faculty of Divinity at Paris."

[C] He published a Book, in 1602, to prevent their Re-call.] It is a small Book, entituled, Le Franc & Veritable Discours. Father Richesme refutes him, in his Apologetical Complaint, in which he refutes likewise the Jesuits Catechism, which appeared at the same Time, and came from the Pen of Stephen Pasquier. I have read a Particular, in the Remarks on the Catholic Confession of Sancy (2), which I shall here transcribe: "The Advocate Arnauld returned no Answer; not that the Book entituled, 'The Truth defended' (3), had stopped his Mouth; but because he perceived, that the Interest of the Jesuits with Henry IV would carry it in the end against all the Reasons, which could be alledged for establishing the Decree of their Banishment. In effect, the poor Man was so much afraid, that he had gone too far in his little Book, that I have seen a Copy of it, wherein an able Man of those Times had made the following Observation with his own Hand. This Book (The Free and True Discourse) composed by Mr Anthony Arnauld, their good Friend: And a little lower, The Copies suppressed by the Author."

[D] They, who have reported, that he was of the Reformed Religion, were greatly mistaken.] The Author of the Amphitheatrum Honoris, disguised under the Name of Clarus Bonaricus, which is the Anagram of Carolus Scribanus, his true Name, speaks of the Advocate Anthony Arnauld as a known Calvinist. The Image Primi Saeculi Sac. Jesu does the same. The Author of the Apology of John Chabot says, pag. 205, that the Name of Arnauld comes from apryma, which signifies to deny or apostatize, and that it approaches near to That of Antichrist, in which is found the Name of the Beast. And, p. 206, A worthy Minister of him, to whom a Mouth is given, speaking great Things and Blasphemies, Rev. xiii. (4). Du Pleix had related the same Falshood, but retracted it publicly. He had said, in the first Edition of his History of Henry IV, speaking of the Trial, which the Jesuits had with the University of Paris, in 1564: "That Anthony Arnauld making Profession of Calvinism, the Choice, which the Agents of the University had made of him, was esteemed highly scandalous and unbecoming." But thus he recants. "Anthony Arnauld, a most eloquent Man, was Council for the Plaintiff (5). I formerly believed, upon false Information, that he was a Protestant; but, in truth, he never was. He left behind him most virtuous Children, and most zealous for the Catholic Religion." It is strange, that an Historian, who was none of the meanest, could be deceived, as to the Religion of so famous a Lawyer, who had taken the whole Parliament to witness of his Catholicism, in the same Plas, which gave Du Pleix occasion to speak of him. This is what he says in That Plas. "If perhaps They, and Their Favourers, have the Impudence to assert, that the Sorbonne was Heretical in the Year 1554: when it published This Decree against Them: Just as they have the Assurance to give out, among the Women of their Congregations, that all, who prosecute This Cause, are Heretics, sprung either from Geneva, or from England. If I myself, who speak, were not known to have been brought up, from my Infancy, in the Royal College of Navarre; and if my Profession, so notorious, and my Admission into such public and honourable Employments, in the Years 80, and 85, did not too manifestly secure me from their Impositions; they would

(2) Book II, chap. 6, pag. 535.

(3) The Author of the Remarks had said, p. 534, that Richesme, under the Name of Francis de la Montagne, had answered, in 1594, Pasquier's Plea, in a Book, entituled, La veritable Defense.

(4) Taken from the Question curieuse 6 Mr Arnauld est Heretique, pag. 13. i. e. A curious Enquiry, whether Mr Arnauld is a Heretic.

(5) That is, the University.

(d) Taken from the Memoir, inserted in the Mercure Galant, December, 1693.

Twenty two Children by his Marriage with Catherine Marion (d) [E], and died about the Year 1618. Observe, that one of his Daughters reformed the Abbey of Port-Royal [F].

He acquitted himself at the Bar, "with so much Honour (e), and in so extraordinary

(e) Perrault's Hommes Illustres, pag. 54, 55. Ed. de Holl.

"would no doubt pretend, that I came from thence 'likewise to plead against them.'" Experience convinced him, and convinces to this Day, that he was mistaken, in fancying himself sheltered from their Impositions; for, besides the Writers I have cited, there have lately arisen two new Accusers; the first is Father Hazart; the second, though the Name he gives himself be a fictitious one (6), produces a Letter from a Gentleman, whose Name is Mr de Heucourt (7), who affirms, that the Father of Mr Arnauld, Doctor of the Sorbonne, was born, and died, a Huguenot. I have reason to say, that Father Hazart has renewed the Accusation; for these are his Words, "The Recantation of Mr du Pleix does not affect me, nor debar me of the Liberty of taking 'his first Sentiment for the Legitimate Issue of his best Information, and the second as the Offspring 'of his Complaisance for the Relations of the Sieur Arnauld, who had Credit enough, at that Time, 'to gain over, or oblige, an Author, to any thing 'of This Nature (8)." It was replied, that one must be of a very perverse Spirit "to prefer, what 'an Historian acknowledges he had said on false 'Suggetions, to what he asserts, as certain and 'indisputable, upon better information. Were 'there many Persons of so wicked a Character, 'the Prejudice, which an Historian might do by 'publishing, from bad Memoirs, Falehoods to 'the Dishonour of his Neighbour, would be irreparable, 'since his Recantation would signify nothing (9)." It is but flying to Father Hazart's Answer. "See, by 'the way, concludes he, how well Mr du Pleix is rewarded for having been so partial to the Jesuits. They 'shew how much they love him, whilst they make 'him have so little Conscience, as that, having 'said nothing but the Truth, when he affirmed, 'that the Advocate, who pleaded against them, was 'an Huguenot, he should notwithstanding retract 'this afterwards, and establish a Lie out of meer 'Complaisance." I know not (10) of any Reply, which has been made to the Challenge of Him, who published Mr d'Heucourt's Letter: The Summons was very pressing; for thus the Author addressed himself to Mr Arnauld: "This Letter, the Original 'of which is put into my Hands to be sent to you, 'absolutely requires you to produce the Certificate 'of your Baptism; for the Jesuits, your Enemies, 'are not, it seems, the only Persons, who reproach 'you with being born a Huguenot." But the Publisher of this Letter was greatly confounded, when the World was informed, that Mr d'Heucourt disclaimed it.

The Public has seen This in the Journal of Mr Bajnage (11), and in a Book, which has appeared since the first Impression of this Article: I mean the Abridged History of the Life and Writings of Mr Arnauld. Observe how the Author treats this Matter, in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Pages. "We shall not 'here lose time in consulting the impertinent Author 'of the Important Advice to Mr Arnauld, &c. wherein 'an Extract is produced of a pretended Letter of the 'Marquis d'Heucourt, to prove, that Mr Arnauld 'and his Father were born Calvinists. All this is downright Imposture. For not only the Extract of the 'Certificate of Baptism, which the Adviser required 'might be produced, is at Hand, but also an Instrument in Form under The Marquis's Hand, dated 'from Brompton, near London, the 13th of May, '1692, wherein he declares, that he knows nothing 'of it, that the Letter never came from him, and 'that it is a Piece maliciously and falsely composed." It is very probable, that one of our Advocate Arnauld's Brothers turned Huguenot (12); for one, who must have known this very well, has informed me, that Madam de Feuquieres (13), and Madam d'Heucourt, her Sister, who were This Advocate's Nieces by the Father's Side, were of the Reformed Religion to their Death. The same Person informed me likewise, that ISAAC ARNAULD, Minister of Rochel, and Author of a Book, entitled The Contempt of the World, was of the same Family with Mr Arnauld. This Work was printed more than once; for the Edition of Rouen in 1637, imports, that it had been Revised, Corrected, and Augmented with three other Treatises by the same Author; to wit, Virtuous Resolutions; Of the Obedience due to the King; and Meditations on old Age.

[E] He had Twenty Two Children by his Marriage.—] The Name of the Eldest was Robert; The same, who became so famous by the Name of ARNAULD d'ANDILLI: See the following Article. The second died Bishop of Angers, in the Month of June, 1692. His Name was HENRY ARNAULD; who had acquired a great Esteem under the Name of the Abbot of St Nicholas, before he attained to the Mure. Being at Rome, he saved, by his Dexterity and Courage, the Honour and Estates of the Barberini, from the Attempts of the Creatures and Relations of Pope Innocent X. In acknowledgement of which, the Prince of Palestrina, and the French Cardinals, Anthony and Charles Barberini, not only caused a Medal to be struck, and his Picture to be drawn, which they hung up in all their Houses, but erected likewise a Statue to him in their Palace at Rome, with an Inscription, which Fortunatus had composed for St Gregory of Tours (14). He died in the Odour of Sanctity in his Diocels at Angers; which he had never left for near Forty four Years that he was Bishop of it. CATHERINE ARNAULD, the Eldest Daughter of Anthony, was married to Mr le Maître, one of his Majesty's Council, and Master of the Accounts at Paris, by whom she had Anthony le Maître, the Famous Advocate, and Isaac le Maître of Sacy, known by his Translation of the Bible, by That of the Imitation of JESUS CHRIST, the Life of Dom. Bartolomé des Martyrs, and his sacred Poems. ANGELICA ARNAULD, another Daughter of Anthony, perpetual Abbess of Port-Royal in the Fields, reformed That Abbey on the same Foot with That of Clairvaux, and made it Eleventh and Triennial. Five of her Sisters, with their Mother, took the Religious Habit in this Convent, and led a very austere Life there till their Death (15).

Observe, that, in the Abridged History of the Life of Mr Arnauld, pag. 20, it is asserted, I. That he was the Twentieth and last of the Children of Anthony Arnauld, and of Catherine Marion. This does not agree with the Memoir (16), which I have quoted, and which gives them Twenty Two. II. That, when the Father of so many Children died, there were but Ten of them alive, Four Sons, and Six Daughters.

[F] One of his Daughters reformed the Abbey of Port-Royal.] The Name of Port-Royal makes too much noise, the Arnaulds are so much concerned in it, and the Particulars of all this so little known, that I may well suppose the Curious will receive with pleasure any Information on this Subject. For this Reason I believe it will not displease my Reader, if I here insert what I have read in a printed Case (17). Pieces of this kind are seldom known to many Persons.

"Port-Royal is originally a Monastery of Bernardin Nuns, six Leagues from Paris. One of Mr d'Andilli's Sisters was made Abbess of it, in the beginning of this Century, when she was but Eleven Years of Age. This was a common Abuse at that time; from which God drew great Good. For, at the Age of Seventeen Years, God inspired her with so earnest a Desire to reform her Abbey, tho' there were none, either Men or Women, reformed in the whole Order of the Cisterciens, that she resolved and performed it with ease enough, God giving an extraordinary Blessing to her good Designs. She banished all Property from thence; all the Nuns, after her Example, bringing into the common Stock what they had before in their private Possession. She established an exact reclusive Life, perpetual Abstinence, the Office of the Night, Fastings, Labour, and Silence, according to the Rules of St Benedict. And it was this Odour of Sanctity, like the Perfume of the Spouse, which drew her Sisters, Nieces, and her Mother likewise, in their turns, to this House. The Design of so perfect a Reformation, undertaken so courageously, and executed so happily, acquired her so great an Esteem with the whole Order, that, when she was but Twenty seven, or Twenty eight, Years of Age, she was chosen to reform the famous Abbey of Ma-

(14) It is This. Alpius Arvernia veniens mons altior ipsa. The Barberini alluded to the Arms, and Country of the Arnaulds. This Family is of Auvergne, and has for it's Arms a Mountain. Memoire du Merc. Galant, Decemb. 1693.

(15) Taken from the same Memoir.

(16) That is the Mercure Galant, for December, 1693.

(17) The 17th Fascium of the Great Nephews of Janenius, against Father Hazart.

HISTORICAL Facts concerning the Abbey of PORT-ROYAL.

(6) That of St Foi, in the important Advice to Mr Arnauld, on the Preface of a new Bibliothèque of Janenius. This is a Letter, dated from Paris, the 28th of September, 1693.

(7) It should be so, and not Rencour, as in the printed Copy.

(8) See the 17th Fascium or Case of the great Nephews of Janenius, pag. 20.

(9) Ibid.

(10) This was wrote in 1694.

(11) That is, in the History of the Works of the Learned, for the Month of November, 1692, pag. 134.

(12) See Remark A [A], of the Article D'ARANT (SAMUEL).

(13) The Wife of Him who was known before Thionville.

"dinary a manner, that no Person since, except his Grandson Mr le Maître, "has been known to appear there with so much Reputation and Dignity. His "House was continually filled with Princes, and great Lords, who came to consult "him about their most important Affairs, and he was every where held in such Veneration, that, after his Death, they were forced to expose his Body for some "time on a Bed, to satisfy the People, who pressingly demanded it." They are mistaken, who impute to him an Apology for Phalaris [G].

"buiffon. She past Four or Five Years there; which "obliged her to leave to her Sister, who was afterwards called Mother Agnes, the Care of her House "of Port-Royal, as her Coadjutrix. It was about this "time, and while she was at Maubouffon, that she saw "St Francis de Sales, who was come to Paris, to "found there an House of the Visitation. She sent "to desire he would visit her, and put herself under "his Conduct; and it appears by this Saint's Letters
 "what an Esteem he had for his dear Daughter the
 "Abbess of Port-Royal."

The Author of the Faustum adds, that the Widow of Antony Arnauld, Mother of This Abbess, had a strong Desire to become a Nun, under the Conduct of her own Daughter; and that, as God had inspired her with this Desire, about the same time that the Abbess was advised to transfer her Monastery of the Fields to Paris; "She bought a very fair and large "House, and Gardens, in the Suburbs of St James,
 "which she bestowed on the Abbess, Convent, and "Nuns of Port-Royal, that they might settle there;
 "which they actually did, having, at a great Expence,
 "put the House at Paris into the Condition it is at "present in, by the Blessing of God on their Charity "and Disinterestedness. There it was, that this "happy Mother of so many pious Children took her "own Daughter for a Mother, consecrating herself "to God by a Religious Profession to live under her "Discipline: And, having done so for the space of "fourteen or fifteen Years, with very edifying Fer"vour and Humility, she had the Consolation, before "her Death, to give her Blessing to six Daughters,
 "and six Grand Daughters, who were all in the "Monastery, and all Nuns, except one, who died
 "young, and had been only a Pensioner." Lastly, it appears by This Faustum, that the Abbess of Port-Royal was Incumbent for Life, and one of her Sisters Coadjutrix; but that both of them, having only the good of their House in view, willingly parted with their Titles, and settled a triennial Election. Mr d'Andilly obtained the necessary Permission from the King, tho' it deprived him of the Means of keeping this Abbey always in his own Family. Add to this what we shall observe in his Article.

[G] They are mistaken, who impute to him an Apology for Phalaris. [The Words of Father Abram, which I am going to cite, have a visible Relation to our Arnauld. "De Phalaridis Agrigentorum Ty-
 "ranni immani crudelitate supervacaneum fuerit di-
 "cere, cum & pleni sunt aliorum libri, & ipse se
 "nefarium, immanem, & sceleratissimum in epistolis
 "sæpe fateatur. Unus inventus est Arnauldus, qui "non ita pridem orationem dicam, an nugæ de
 "ejus laude conscripserit. Videlicet ex eodem cala-
 "mo Phalaridis Apuleiique laudatio & Societatis no-"stræ criminatio manavit, ut quibus se similem esse
 "mallet, liquidius offenderet. — It will be su"perfluous to say any thing of the monstrous Cruelty
 "of Phalaris, Tyrant of Agrigentum, since other Au"thors have given a full Account of it, and *Pha-
 "laris* often acknowledges himself to be monstrously
 "wicked in his Epistles. Arnauld alone is found,
 "who lately wrote an Oration in his Praise. From "the same Pen flowed the Panegyric of Phalaris and "Apuleius, and the Accusation of our Society; that "the Author might more plainly shew, whom he would "resemble." The Mistake is a gross one; for the Author of the Apology for Phalaris was an Arnauld of Provence. See the Remark [M] of the Article EPICURUS.

(10) Abram.
 in Cloucon.
 Orat. Tom.
 1, pag. 103.

ARNAULD d'ANDILLI (ROBERT), Eldest Son of the preceding, was a Person of great Merit. See his Elogy in Moreri's Dictionary, and in the Illustrious Men of Mr Perrault. He married Mademoiselle de la Broderie, the Daughter of Him, who had been so long Ambassador in England, and Grand-Daughter to a Sister of the Chancellor de Sillery. This Marriage produced five Daughters, all Nuns at Port-Royal, (the Eldest of which, Sister Angelica of St John, passed for a Prodigy of Wit, Knowledge and Virtue) and three Sons. The Eldest is the Abbot ARNAULD, Commendatory * Abbot of Chomes (a), who, after having born Arms a long time in the King's Service, in the Regiment of his Cousin Isaac Arnauld, Camp-Master of the Carabineers, retired to his Uncle, the Bishop of Angers. The second is HENRY ARNAULD, Lord of Luzancy, who passed his Life in Solitude. The third is SIMON ARNAULD, Marquis of Pomponne, formerly Minister and Secretary of State, and still a Minister of State, known by his Embassies into Holland and Sweden (b). Mr Arnauld d'Andilly was sent early into the World. He had several Employs, which attached him to the Court, and to an Attendance on the deceased King; but he never suffered himself to be corrupted by the bad Air, which is usually breathed in such Stations [A]. The Difference he had with the President de Grammond, who had mentioned him, in his Latin History, otherwise than he ought to have done, may be seen in the Collection of his Letters.
 They, who forged the Romance of the Assembly of Bourg-Fontaine, denoted by the Letters A.A. one of the pretended Accomplices of the Design, which was supposed to have been taken there, of introducing Deism; and, when they perceived, that these Letters could not belong to Mr Arnauld, the Doctor, they applied them to

* One, who enjoys a Benefice in Com-mendam.

(b) Memoir of the Mercure Galant, for December,
 1693.

(2) He died in February, 1699.

[A] He never suffered himself to be corrupted by the bad Air, which is usually breathed in such Stations.]
 "He was a Frenchman, who, all the time he lived
 "at Court, in Paris, and in the Country, had the "best established Reputation, and was the most ge"nerally talked of for his Piety and Probity; there "being no one, who would not willingly subscribe
 "to what a famous Author wrote of him above fifty "Years ago, That he was never ashamed of the Gospel "Truths, nor made an Offentation of the Practice "of its Precepts." This is what we find in the fourth Faustum of Jansenius's Great Nephews (1). (1) At the Where we likewise find (2), "That, before he for- 12th Page.

 "took the World, and during his Residence at Court,
 "he dedicated his whole Genius for Poetry to the "Honour of his Saviour, and to the Design of giving "a Relish for the Christian Truths; for he had not "as yet retired from the World, when he wrote
 "his Poem (3) on the Life of JESUS CHRIST, and "his Stanzas on the Noblest and most Edifying
 "Truths of Religion." (2) At Page 18. (3) See, below, the Remark [C].
 Citation (9).

(c) In the Answer of Father Haurer to the Case of the Great Nephews of Janfenius. See their IVth Fa-ctum, p. 14. (d) See the Catalogue of them, at the end of his E-logy, in the Journal des Sçavans, of September, 1675.

to another Person, to wit, Arnauld d'Andilli, as was at last fairly explained (c). But the Author of the Faëta, or Cases, of Janfenius's Great-Nephews, made it appear by solid Reasons, that the second Application of the two A. A. was absurd [B]. Mr d'Andilli retired to the Monastery of Port-Royal in 1644, where he passed the Remainder of his Life in a continued Application to Works of Piety. He composed several Books there (d), which the Public received favourably, and which are so numerous, that they make eight Volumes in Folio (e). He died there on the 27th of September 1674, in the Eighty sixth Year of his Age (f). He left his Wife in the Year 1637. Balzac's Reflexion on this Loss is worth knowing [D].

(e) Perrault, Illustrious Men, p. 142. Edit. of Holl.

(f) Moreri, pag. 346.

[B] The second Application of the two A. A. was absurd.] I shall not repeat all the Reasons alledged to prove this; I shall only remark, that it is observed, among other things, that he had been present in all the Expeditions, which King Lewis XIII made, both before, and after, the Time of the chimerical Cabal of Bourg-Fontaine (4), "to quell Those of his Subjects, whom their false Religion had engaged in Rebellion (5). These were Occasions, continue they (6), of enflaming more and more his Zeal for the Catholic Religion, by the Averfion, which these kind of Wars inspire against Heresy; but it was not the way to become a Divine, having never studied Theology, as he could not have done, to sustain the Part, which they make the Authors of the Fable of Bourg-Fontaine act. He knew as much of Religion, as a Man of great Parts could learn of it, from his Catechism, from pious Books, from the Conversation of holy Persons, from reading the Word of God, and hearing it preached; but the less he knew of what was taught in the Schools, the more incapable was he of raising Doubts concerning the Truth of our Myfteries (7), having accustomed himself early to captivate his Understanding to the Divine Authority, which is visibly lodged in the Church; and sure never any Person was farther from cavilling with God, or pretending, by his weak and self-conceited Reason, to comprehend what we ought to believe with Faith and Humility."

(4) In the Year 1622.

(5) IVth Fa-ctum, &c. pag. 18.

(6) Ibid.

(7) These Words are very remarkable, and confirm what many suspect, that there are no Persons left persuaded, that they, who employ the most Time in disputing and teaching in the Schools.

(8) See his Judgment of Mr Arnauld d'Andilli, at the beginning of the Collection of Letters, published at Amsterdam, in 1694.

[C] He retired to the Monastery of Port-Royal.] Let us continue to quote the fourth Fa-ctum. "It was to Port-Royal in the Fields, that he retired in the Year 1644; whither his Nephews, the Advocate Mr le Maître, and one of his Brothers, who was a Soldier, had retired five or six Years before, when there were yet no Religious there; for it was not 'till the Year 1648, that the Houfe of Paris obtained leave of the Archbishop to send Part of their Religious to their Country Houfe." My Reader may choose between the Author of this Fa-ctum, and Mr Richelet (8), who says, that Mr Arnauld d'Andilli made his own Houfe of Pomponne his Retreat. I am satisfied with confronting these two Authorities; and pass on, with Pleasure, to cite what you are now going to read; because it contains some of Those Particulars, relating to the Lives of great Men, which so many are curious to know. "Arnauld d'Andilli ----- served the King and the State twenty Years. As a Reward of his Services, he had a Pension of Eight thousand

"Livres settled on him, which were afterwards reduced to six; with this he retired to Pomponne, a Village seven or eight Leagues distant from Paris, where, forsaking the Vanities of the World, and leading a truly Christian Life, he composed several Works: His Letters, and a Poem on the Life of JESUS CHRIST (9). ----- Josephus's History of the Jews, the Works of St Theresa, and Those of Davila, translated, are the Fruits of his Solitude. ----- The best of his Translations is That of Josephus (10). Some time after it had been published, Richelet went, one Day, to see him at Pomponne; after some Discourse, the Conversation fell on the manner of some Authors composing. And, knowing that Richelet was particularly acquainted with the famous D'Ablancourt, he asked him, how many times That excellent Man revised each Piece before he gave it the Publick: Richelet replied six times; and I, replied Mr Arnauld, revised the History of Josephus ten times; I carefully corrected the Style of it, and polished it more than any of my other Works. Arnauld d'Andilli ----- in his Retirement, after seven or eight Hours Study, every Day, used to divert himself with the Pleasures of the Country, and, above all others, with That of pruning his Trees. He had generally so good Fruit, that, every Year, he sent Presents of it to Queen Anne of Austria; and That Princess was so well pleased with it, that every Season the desired to have some." This Application to Gardening, and philosophizing profoundly on the Nature of Trees, is attested by Mr Perrault, in his Illustrious Men, pag. 143, Edition of Holland.

(9) This is contrary to what has been said, above, in the Remark [A], Citation (3).

(10) The Critic find great Fault with it. See the Opinion of some Divines of Holland. I have heard say, that Mr Arnauld, revised the History of Josephus ten times; I le Moine was desired by the Friends of dilli ----- to mark the Place, which he thought the Translator might mistake, and that he declined, upon fear of re-marking too many.

[D] Balzac's Reflexion on this Loss is worth knowing.] What he wrote concerning it is much for the Honour of our Robert Arnauld, and his Family. "The News of Madam d'Andilli's Death affected me sensibly. I interest myself in all the good and bad Success, of a Family which ought to be dear to France, and which arose for the Honour of the French Name. But I pity our Friend particularly, who, having never had any unlawful Passion, loses all his Mistresses, and Pleasures, at once, in his Wife. He is, nevertheless, so well skilled in the Christian Doctrine, and has so many learned Men of his Family about him, that he needs no Stoic Philosophy, nor any foreign Assistance, to defend himself against the Attacks of Fortune. All Reason, all Preach, all Persuade, That Family, and One Arnauld is worth a Dozen Epictetuses (11)."

(11) Balzac's Letters to Chapelain, in Book 2, Lett. 19, dated 14 Aug. 1637, p. 32.

ARNAULD (ANTHONY) Doctor of the Sorbonne, Son of Anthony Arnauld the Advocate [A], was born at Paris, the sixth of February, 1612, being the twentieth Offspring of his Father's Marriage with Catherine Marion. He studied Humanity and Philosophy

[A] Son of Anthony Arnauld the Advocate.] This Decent is undoubtedly the Origin of the great Hatred of the Jesuits towards Mr Arnauld, and of Mr Arnauld towards the Jesuits. The Author of the Question Curieuse (1) does not absolutely deny this, since he speaks in this manner. (2): "Mr Arnauld was born the sixth of February, in the Year 1612. His Father was Mr Anthony Arnauld, so famous at the Bar, and known in the History of the Jesuits, by the famous Plea, which he made against them, for the University of Paris, in 1594. ----- For the Reason, which I have mentioned, Mr Arnauld was born with a second Original Sin, which no Sacrament could efface; and, the Crime of the Plea having made the Father a Calvinist, and Minister of Antichrist, in the Minds of the Jesuits (3), though a good Catholic, and a good Christian, every where "else, the Son, in their Opinion, must necessarily be born a Child of Wrath, and be yet worse than a Heretic, before he could be a Christian." One of the Protestant Authors, who wrote against Maimbourg's History of Calvinism, believed, that Mr Arnauld's Averfion to the Jesuits proceeded from Education. These are his Words (4). "I have formerly compared him to Hannibal, too obliquely persecuted by the Romans (5). I cannot tell whether I may not compare him to the same Han-

(4) New Letters against Maimbourg's History of Calvinism, pag. 125.

(5) It is in the Vth Letter of the Critique Generale. Quand je me figure, &c. I. e. When I represent to myself this great Man, reduced to the hard Necessity of concealing himself, I recollect the famous Hannibal, and the last Words, which the unjust Persecutors of the Romans uttered from him. Liberum est tunc curia populum Romanum, quando mortem lenis expectatio longum confect, &c. ----- Let us free the Romans from a long Anxiety, free they wait with Impatience for the Death of an old Man. Livy, lib. XXXIX.

(1) See, in the Margin of the text of the Article, Citat. (b), what Book this is.

(2) Pag. 12.

(3) See Remark [D].

(a) It is sufficient to say, that the new Edition of the Sorbonne being built on its Ruins.

(c) This Thesis was dedicated to the Clergy of France, at that time, at Paris.

(d) Of these one thing, which the Author, whom I copy, does not distinguish is, that Mr Arnould did not begin to read this Course of Philosophy, till the 2d Year of his Licence.

Philosophy in the College of Cakvi (a), and afterward began to study the Law; but he was soon taken from this Study, and turned to That of Divinity, by the Care of his Mother, seconded by the Abbot of St Cyran. After this Determination, he applied himself to study in the College of the Sorbonne (b), and went through a Treatise of Grace under Mr l'Escot: But, not finding This Professor of the Sorbonne's Lectures conformable to the Doctrine of St Paul, he resolved to study This Point in St Ausin himself, and preferred This Father's System to That of Mr l'Escot. This he testified publicly in a Probation Thesis, which he maintained, in the Year 1636, in order to be admitted to his Degree of Bachelor (c). He employed an Interval of Two Years, which, according to the Laws of the Faculty at Paris, must pass between the Probation, and the Licence, in hard Study; after which, he began the Acts of his Licence, about the Easter of the Year 1638, and continued them till Lent 1640. He went thro' the Act of Vesperies the eighteenth of December 1641, and, the Day following, received the Doctor's Cap. While he was a Licentiate, he composed, and publicly taught, A Course of Philosophy (d). At the end of this Course of Philosophy, which he taught at Paris, in the College of Mans, he caused Theses to be maintained, wherein he gave a remarkable Instance of his Integrity, Docility, and Humility [B]. He was ordained Priest in the Ember Week of September, of the Year 1641, and celebrated his first Mass on All Saints Day, of the same Year, after a Retirement of Forty Days—He had began his Licence, without any design of becoming a Member of the Sorbonne—He would have been satisfied with enjoying the Rights of Hospitality, which gave him the liberty of lodging in the House (e). But The principal Doctors pressing him to think seriously of entering into it, and promising him, that, provided he would read a Course of Philosophy, no notice should be taken of the Circumstance of Time, he undertook the Affair without any regard to the Obstacles, which lay in his way, to wit, that, while he was performing the Acts of his Licence, the Time, in which the Statutes prescribed that the Course of Philosophy should be gone thro', was elapsed—The two Years of this painful Work being ended, he petitioned the House, that they would admit him to the Proof of his Course, and deliberate on the Honour he demanded of being received into That illustrious Body. Mr l'Escot found an Opportunity at this time of being revenged on him. As he had not taught his Penitent Cardinal Richelieu to forgive, He had himself learned of his Penitent never to forgive (f). He prevented Mr Arnould's Admission into the

(b) In the Year 1633.

(e) He was admitted the 1st of October, 1636. Prefat. Cause Arnould. pag. 227.

(f) He was Confeſſor to Cardinal Richelieu, and afterwards Bishop of Chartres.

"nibal, promising his Father, in his tender Years, that, as soon as he should be of Age to bear Arms, he would wage War against Those mortal Enemies of his Country. It is well known, that Mr Arnould is the Son of the famous Anthony Arnould, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, who pleaded so eloquently, for the University, against the Jesuits, in the Year 1594, and who omitted nothing to persuade the Judges, that they ought not to be tolerated in the Kingdom. This Action rendered him as odious to the whole Society, as the whole Society was to him, or more. It is very probable, that he inspired the same Sentiments, with regard to the Jesuits, into his Sons; it is very certain, at least, that in this they have not degenerated from the Virtue of their Father."

[B] He gave a remarkable Instance of his Integrity, Docility, and Humility. At the end of the Course of Philosophy, which he taught in the College of Mans, in the University of Paris, he made several of his Scholars maintain Theses: Among whom, was the Sieur Barbe, since a famous Professor of Philosophy in the same University, and Mr Wallon de Beaupuis, an Ecclesiastic of Brauvais, a Person of great Piety, who is still alive, and has delivered this Fact in Writing. This latter maintaining his Thesis, on the Twenty fifth of July, 1641, Mr de la Barde, a learned Priest of the Oratory, and at that Time Canon of the Cathedral Church at Paris, took up the Dispute, and pressed his Arguments so home, that the Professor was obliged to come in to the Assistance of his Scholar. But he was himself so hard pressed by the illustrious Disputant, that he found himself unable to Reply. It had been easy for him to have got off by some Distinction or other, as Professors often do. But this did not agree with his Sincerity, and Love of Truth. He told him, therefore, publicly, and without Ceremony, that he believed him to be in the right; that his Opinion appeared, in His Judgment, to be the most true, and that he himself would follow it for the future. He was as good as his Word; for, about three Years after, This same Disciple being to perform his Probation-Lecture in the Sorbonne, for his Degree of Bachelor, he desired Mr Arnould to compose his Thesis for him. He did so, and laid down the contrary Opinion to That in his own Philosophical Theses (6). An essential Part is wanting in This Narrative. We are not told what Opinion Mr Arnould had maintained, when he confessed his Error, upon the strong Objections of his Opponent. Let us supply this, and say, that the Thesis, which Mr de la Barde attacked, was this: Ens synonymè convenit Deo & creaturæ (7). The Author of the Narrative judges right, when he says, that this Action of Mr Arnould was Great before God, and Rare among Men, and that That, which proceeds from Integrity of Heart, from a constant and uniform Love of Truth, from a Greatness of Soul, which is above the Desire of Victory, and the Fear of lessening a Reputation, - - - is always great (8). But he seems to me to treat the Solutions, which may be given of Their Arguments, who maintain, that the Idea of Being is not applicable, synonymously, to God and his Creatures, with a little too much Dilidain. I formerly examined this Dispute, which is very famous in the Schools, and was of Opinion, that They, who deny the Univocation of Being, have the Crowd, the Many, on their Side;

(6) Abridged History of Mr Arnould. pag. 46.

(7) Prefat. Cause Arnouldine. pag. 271.

(8) Abridged History of Mr Arnould. pag. 47.

Defendit numeros, junctæque umbone phalanges (9); illos

but not the most solid Reasons; wherefore I chose the Opinion, which they oppose. I have maintained it often in public Disputations, but never found, that any Objection of Difficulty was proposed to me. My Adversary presently flew to the common Objection, that God is a Being ναὶ ἑξῆς, a self-existent Being, Infinite, and supremely Perfect; whereas the Being of Creatures is only precarious. I found no manner of Difficulty in this Objection; for the very Rudiments of the Doctrine of Universals instruct us, that the Ideas of the Genus are entirely distinguished from the Specific Properties, by an Abstraction of the Mind. But had I known, that Mr Arnould, having once been of this Opinion, had renounced it in Disputation, I should have suspected, that there were some Difficulties in it, which I had not met with in any of the Spanish School-men, whom I had examined. Let us remember, that it has been observed, that he was not necessitated to alter his Opinion. This imports

(9) Juven. Sat. 2, vers. 45.

the Society of the Sorbonne [C]. He had not the same Credit after the Death of the Cardinal: But, if he had the mortification to see this young Doctor admitted into That Society, in the Year 1643, He did not fail to promote his Exclusion, when an Opportunity offered. The Book concerning Frequent Communion, published by Mr Arnauld in 1643, greatly displeased the Jesuits. They represented it, both in their Sermons, and in printed Books, as fraught with the most pernicious Doctrines. The Controversy about Grace, which grew warm at that time in the University of Paris, served only to foment the Animosities between the Jesuits and Mr Arnauld. This Doctor strongly defended Jansenius, both by refuting the three Sermons of Mr Habert, and the Apology of this Preacher for them, and by replying to Mr le Moine, Professor of the Sorbonne (g), and some others. There was no room for a Judicial Censure, till he published Two Letters on an Adventure of the Duke de Liancourt, a great Friend of the Port-Royal [D]. Two Propositions were found in the second of these Letters, which the Faculty of Divinity condemned in the Year 1656. Mr Arnauld was at the same time declared excluded from the Faculty. There were many Irregularities in the Proceedings against him [E]. He had not appeared publicly for several Years before; for, from the time that he had been cited to Rome, on occasion of the Disputes about his Book concerning Frequent Communion, the Queen-Mother being with difficulty prevailed on to revoke the Orders she had given him to depart immediately, he passed his Time, either absconding here and there, or in Solitude at Port-Royal. This retired Life continued near twenty five Years, till the Peace of Jansenism, concluded in 1668. Mr Arnauld was included in This Peace; and, accordingly, went to pay his Duty to the King, and the Nuncio, and appeared as much as he pleased in Public, till 1679, when he voluntarily quitted the Kingdom, being informed, that his Enemies rendered him suspected to the King (b). It is not doubted, but he has lived ever since in the Low-Countries; tho' he has discovered himself but to a very few of his trusty Friends. He was put to Trouble at Liege in the Year 1690 [F]. The Reflexion, which was made on This Enterprize, deserves

(b) Taken from a Book, printed in 1690, and entitled, Question curieuse si Mr Arnauld Docteur de Sorbonne est hérétique. — A curious Enquiry, whether Mr Arnauld, Doctor of the Sorbonne, be an Heretic; or from a Book, which is a second Edition of this, much augmented, and published in 1695, with the Title of Histoire Abrégée de la vie & des Ouvrages de Mr Arnauld. — An abridged History of the Life and Writings of Mr Arnauld. See also the Preface to the Causa Arnaldina. — Mr Arnauld's Calic.

(g) The Title of this Refutation is, An Apology for the Holy Fathers of the Church, Defenders of the Grace of Jesus Christ.

ports, that he did not find his first Tenet indefensible; but only, that the Analogy of Being seemed to him a better Doctrine, than the Univocation. Erudito discipulo sub validissimorum argumentorum mole fatiscente (10), suppetias venit Magister, diuque confilatus, non cedens necessitate coactus, sed veritate & veritatis amore victus, victum se ultro professus est, & a sententia sua discessum publice spondendit. Promissis stetit, &c. (11).

[C] Mr l'Escot presented Mr Arnauld's Admission into the Society of the Sorbonne.] There were but two Doctors, who opposed Mr Arnauld's Request: "They alleged Statutes, and Custom, which required, that the Course should be performed before the Licence. And, as to this Difference, which was to be decided by a Plurality of Voices, they were of Opinion, that Cardinal Richelieu, Patron of the Sorbonne, should be appealed to, as Judge of what was against the Laws and Liberty of the House; and it would have been a Crime, at that Time, to have refused such a Judge. Monf. Hardiniers, Archbishop of Bourges, and Mr Habert, Doctor of Divinity, of the Church of Paris, were deputed to him (12). — The Cardinal did not judge it proper, that the Society should do any thing against their Statutes and Customs. But it was not so much a Zeal for the Orders and Rules of the House, which made him act in this manner, as the Knowledge he had of the strict Union between Mr Arnauld, and Mr de St Cyran; as Resentment, because Mr Arnauld had not sought his Protection, during his Licence; and, lastly, as the Influence, which Mr l'Escot had on his Penitent, the Cardinal. For This Doctor was One of the Two Opposers, and, as I have observed, had conceived a strong Prejudice against Mr Arnauld, from a meer Spirit of Jealousy, and Revenge. It was certainly more honourable for Mr Arnauld to be excluded the Society in this manner, than received into it, as most others are. He was, however, admitted after the Cardinal's Death; the Sorbonne, as well as other Societies, having, then, recovered its Liberty (13). Mr l'Escot, "made himself amends some time after, by getting him excluded both the House, and Faculty, by the Censure of 1656, of which He was the Promoter, together with Mr le Moine, who succeeded him, both in his Chair, and his Opinions (14).

[D] He published two Letters on an Adventure of the Duke de Liancourt, a great Friend of the Port-Royal.] This Duke sent his Grand-Daughter to be educated at Port-Royal, and kept the Abbot de Bourzeys in his House. In the Year 1655, he came to Confession to a Priest of St Sulpice, his own Parish, who declared, "that he could not give him Absolution, unless he promised to break off all Commerce with Those Gentlemen, to withdraw his Grand-Daughter from the Port-Royal, and dismiss The Abbot. — This Affair making a great Noise at Paris, and all over France, Mr Arnauld was desired to publish a Letter, in Justification of this Lord. — A great Number of Answers being published to this Letter, Mr Arnauld thought himself obliged to refute the Calumnies, with which they were filled, by publishing a second Letter, in which he answered nine of those Pieces (15)."

[E] There were many Irregularities in the Proceedings against him.] "Commissioners were appointed in Mr Arnauld's Cause, who were his declared Enemies, against whom he had written on these Subjects, and who were known by every one to have been the most zealous for his Ruin; and all the Representations he could make thereupon signified nothing (16). All the Doctors of the Community of St Sulpice, against whom Mr Arnauld's Letter was written, were so unjust as to continue his Judges, notwithstanding his Exceptions; whereas they wanted only a little Honour to have made them voluntarily decline it, as good Men do even in Lay-Tribunals (17). You will find several other Irregularities, Innovations, Contraventions to the Order, always observed on these Occasions, and Violations of Natural Right, in the Process of Mr Arnauld against the Faculty (18).

The Book, which was printed at Leige in the Year 1699, under the Title of Causa Arnaldina, may serve as a complete Account of the Proceedings of the Divines of Paris, and the Substance of the Doctrines, which they censured. Several Pieces are collected in This Work, which Mr Arnauld, and his Party, published at that Time, to support the Justice of his Cause.

[F] He was put to Trouble at Leige in the Year 1690.] Six Superiors attempted to issue out Canonical Warrants against him. These were the Guardian of the Franciscans, the Guardian of the White-Friars, the Sub-Prior Vicar of the Augustines, the Rector of the Jesuits, the Vicar of the Dominicans, and the Prior of the Jacobins. They tiled him One Arnauld; but, with submission, This did no Honour to their Communities; It was either an Ignorance unpardonable in Men of Letters, or an Affectation of Contempt unbecoming Persons, who are

(10) Observe, that, in France, they never preside in a Dispute, do not speak, till their Disciple has done. In other Countries, they speak incessantly, and scarce allow him time to repeat the Argument.

(11) Prefat. Cause Arnald. pag. xix.

(12) Abridged History of Mr Arnauld, pag. 50.

(13) Ibid. pag. 51, 52.

(14) Ibid. pag. 33.

(15) Question curieuse, pag. 58, 59.

(16) Ibid. pag. 69, 70.

(17) This Express n will be a Jest to some Persons, who think, that Civil Tribunals can be compared with Ecclesiastical, only as God with Man.

(18) At Page 71 of the Question curieuse. See in the Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, for June, 1636, Art. III. what Mr de Launoi thought of this Censure of the Sorbonne.

A REFLEXION on Mr Arnauld's being contempuously tiled One Arnauld.

(i) See Remark [A], of the Article BOSSU (JAMES).

deserves the Consideration of Those, who govern (i). He continued his Exploits of the Pen against the Jesuits with great force to his Death, as he did for some time against Those of the Reformed Religion; but a Minister, who was the most exposed to his Attacks, had recourse to a Stratagem, in the Year 1683, which put a stop to his Incursions on the Protestant Party. I mean the Author of the ESPRIT DE MR ARNAULD [G]. We might give a long List of Falshoods in point of Fact relating to This Doctor; but we shall content our selves with mentioning a Few of them. It has been pretended, that he was born an Huguenot (k). He has

(k) See Remark [D], of the Article ARNAULD (ANTHONY) the Advocate.

are dedicated to the Service of the Altar, and who make Decrees concerning the Faith. No Man of Letters can say, without exposing himself to the Laughter of the Learned, One Scaliger, One Sirmond, One Petavius, One Salmassius, One Grotius, One Selden, and (if the Question be about a Doctor of the Sorbonne) One Arnauld. The Disputes, in which this latter was engaged, have made so much Noise, and are remarkable for so many great Exploits on both sides, that all Men of Letters, who should but think themselves suspected of being ignorant of them, would have reason to oppose the four following Lines of Virgil to Suspicions so injurious.

Quis genus Æneadum, quis Trojæ nesciat urbem,
Virtutesque, virosque, aut tanti incendia belli?
Non obtusa adeo gestamus pectora Pæni,
Nec tam averfus equos Tyria sol jungit ab urbe (19).

(19) Æneid. lib. 1, vers. 569.

Who has not heard — — —
The Name and Fortune of your Native Place,
The Fame and Valour of the Phrygian Race?
We Tyrians are not so devoid of Sense,
Nor so remote from Phœbus' Influence.

DRYDEN.

Be this as it will, I cannot forbear producing here the Decree of the six Regulars of Leige (20); the Latinity of it is so exquisite, that it may serve to unbend my Reader a little. "Nos infra scripti Superiores Conventuales Regularium in Civitate Leodiensi, certiorati de Conventiculis, quæ habentur apud CERTUM ARNOLDUM, doctrinam suspectam spargentem, censemus D. Vicarium charitativè certiorandum, ut similia Conventicula dissipare, & prohibere non dignetur, etiam cum dicto Arnolde conversationes. Datum in Conventu Minorum hac 25. Augusti 1690. Ad quem effectum commissimus R. P. M. Ludovicum Lamet, Priorem Dominicanorum, ad nomen nostro accedendum D. Vicarium, & exponendum intentionem nostram. — We, the undersigned Conventual Superiors of Regulars in the City of Leige, being certified of Meetings held at ONE ARNAULD's, a Spreader of suspected Doctrine, are of Opinion, that the Vicar be charitably certified, that he would condescend to disperse and prohibit such Meetings, and even all Conversation with the said Arnauld. Given at a Meeting of the Minors this Twenty fifth of August 1690. To which effect we have commissioned Father Lewis Lamet, Prior of the Dominicans, to go, in our Name, to the Vicar, and declare to him our Intention." The Author of the Question Curieuse says indeed, that Father d'Yserin had boasted of having a Commission, or Permission, from his Highness the Bishop of Leige, to cause Mr Arnauld to be arrested wherever he should find him in his Diocess (21); but he treats it as an egregious Lye (22).

(21) Ibid. pag. 198.

(22) Ibid. pag. 200.

[G] I mean the Author of the ESPRIT DE MR ARNAULD. An hundred things may be said of This Work; but, as it is probable, I shall have other Occasions of mentioning it, I shall confine myself here to a very few Observations. The Author of This Book had published a Work, which met with great Success. They, who had the Care of the Impression, at the Hague, entituled it, The Politics of the Clergy of France. They are Dialogues, in which there is a great deal of Beauty and Politeness, but little Solidity of Argument, and very little Caution in the vending of several Facts, which are notoriously false. Mons. Arnauld refuted this Book (23) in a little too contemptuous a way, and in a manner so much the more disobliging, as he manifestly convicted his Adversary of having argued very weakly, and published several Untruths. He began with another Book of the same Author (24); and seemed inclined to reply to the Apology for the Morality of the Reformed concerning the Inamissibility * of Grace: In a Word, the Author of the Politics of the Clergy fore-saw, that he was like to have such an Adversary in Mr Arnauld, as would never allow him any Respite, nor ever pass by a Contradiction, a false Reasoning, or false Matter of Fact. This by no means agreed with one, who was determined to publish a great many Books, and who seldom gave himself the Trouble of revising what he had once written. He gave himself up to the Fire of his Imagination; and This was an inexhaustible Fund to him of false Logic, and gross Contradictions. He considered with himself, in what manner he might best prevent Mr Arnauld from sticking thus in his Skirts, and judged, that none could be more effectual, than to attack him personally; I mean, to impute all manner of personal ill Qualities to him. He executed this Design with all imaginable Passion, and, being in the full Career of Scandal, he stuck at nothing; he cast about to the Right and Left, to find still more subject for Satire; so that we may apply to him, in regard to Slander, what was said of Voiture, in respect to Love; he extended it from the Scepter to the Sheep-book, from the Crown to the woollen Cap. Mr Arnauld, not thinking proper to engage with a Person, who fought with such Weapons, resolved to be absolutely silent in relation to the Reformed; and thus, what the whole Society of the Jesuits could not compass, one single Minister contrived, and executed successfully; I mean the Secret of silencing This Doctor. This was not the only Advantage, which the Author of the Espirit de Mr Arnauld drew from his Satire; he struck such a terror into an hundred other Authors, who would have attacked him, and into several other Persons, to whom he was not the most agreeable, that they were afraid of drawing his Indignation upon them. This ought not to surprize us; for, in short, there are few Families, which may not be reproached with some Adventure (25), or who have not some Enemies malicious enough to publish some scandalous Story or other, especially if they can privately get it printed. The Espirit de Mr Arnauld seems to promise Publication to every little scandalous Story, which may be sent by the Post; whether it concerns a private Person, as Father Soulier, or a public Minister, as the late Mr Colbert.

(23) In an Apology for the Catholics, printed in 1682.

(24) Entitled, A Preservative against a Change of Religion.

* Impossibility of Ising.

(25) The Spaniards have a Proverb; No ay generation, do no aya puta ô lae drone.

A young Jansenist, considering the Effect of this Satire, compared Mr Arnauld to the ancient City of Troy, which the bravest Warriors, and a thousand Ships, could not conquer; but which fell by the Artifice of a Defenter, and a wooden Horse.

Talibus insidiis, perjurique arte Sinonis, Credita res, captivæ dolis — — —
Quos neque Tydides, nec Larissæus Achilles,
Non anni domuere decem, non mille carinæ (26).

(26) Virgil. Æn. lib. 2, vers. 195.

With such Deceits be gain'd their easy Hearts,
Too prone to credit his perfidious Arts.
What Diomed, nor Thetis' greater Son,
A thousand Ships, nor ten Years Siege had done,
False Tears, and sawning Words, the City won.

(27) Hæc delecta virum fortis corpora furum includunt æcœ lateri, penitusque cavernas ingentes, uterunque armato milite complet. Id. ibid. vers. 186.

DRYDEN.

"It is true, added he, this Comparison will not hold in all Points; for the Espirit de Mr Arnauld does not resemble the wooden Horse, which had the chief Captains of the Army in it's Belly (27); but rather Those Ships, which, by Hannibal's Advice, were provided with earthen Pots, filled with

"Scorpents."

been reckoned One of the Cabal of Bourg-Fontaine [H]. He has been made to go to Nocturnal Witch-Meetings [I]: He has been sent to command the Troops of the Vaudois [K]: He has been advanced to the Post of Squire to the Goliab Peter Jurieu

"Serpents." See Cornelius Nepos in the Life of That Carthaginian General.

[H] He has been reckoned one of the Cabal of Bourg-Fontaine.] Du Pleix's Calumnies, with regard to the Father, are nothing in comparison of the Falshood, which Mr Filleau, the King's Advocate in the Presidial Court of Poitiers; published concerning the Son, in the Year 1654; for there is no doubt, that he reckoned Mr Arnauld in the Number of the seven Doctors of the Assembly of Bourg-Fontaine (28). The Cafe, in short, was this: Mr Filleau, publishing a Judicial Relation, in the Year 1654, of what had passed at Poitiers, on occasion of the new Doctrine of Janfenius, declared, that an Ecclesiastic had assured him, that, in a Conference, which seven Persons had held at Bourg-Fontaine, in the Year 1621; They had consulted about the Means to abolish Christianity; that This Ecclesiastic had himself been one of the seven; that, some time after, he broke with the other six, only one of whom was then living, and whose Names were (J. D. V. D. H.) (C. J.) (P. C.) (P. C.) (A. A.) (S. V.) By certain Circumstances, attending this Narrative, and by the Character of certain Books, which we are given to understand were published purely in execution of the Engagements entered into at Bourg-Fontaine, every one believed, that the Letters of the first Name denoted John du Verger de Hauranne, Abbot of St Cyran; those of the second Cornelius Janfenius, Bishop of Ypres; those of the third Philip Cyprian, Doctor of the Sorbonne, Bishop of Nantes, and since of Lisieux; those of the fourth Peter Camus, Bishop of Bellay; those of the fifth Anthony Arnauld, the Subject of this Article; and those of the sixth Simon Vigor, Counsellor in the Great Council. Mr Filleau affirms, "That it was resolved, in this Assembly, to attack the two Sacraments, which are the most frequented by Adults, to wit, Those of Penance, and the Eucharist; and the Means, proposed for attaining this, was, to introduce a dispute of them; not by discovering any direct Design of making them less frequented, but by rendering the Practice of them so difficult, and clogged with Circumstances so incompatible with the Condition of the Men of Those Times, that they should remain in a manner inaccessible, and that, by this dispute of them, founded on such plausible Appearances, All Belief in them would by degrees be lost." The Public thought, that This was pointed at Mr Arnauld, because of his Book of Frequent Communion, and that therefore Mr Filleau certainly meant him, by the fifth of those dangerous Conspirators against the Christian Religion, marked (A. A.) (29).

As we are not concerned, in this Place, to examine into the Truth, or Falshood, of this Conspiracy, I shall content myself with saying, that Mr Arnauld looked upon this as one of the highest Excesses of Calumny, that had ever been known, and that, in particular, he perfectly cleared himself from the Accusation of being found in the Conference of These Deists (30). For he made it appear, that, having been born in 1612, he could be but nine Years of Age, when it was pretended, that this Conference was held. This justification is so strong, that not only the Silence of the Accuser, but even the formal Confession of one of the Accuser's Friends, made it appear, that nothing could be replied to it. On the other side, Father Meynier, pretending, that Mr Filleau's Account of the Conference of Bourg-Fontaine contained nothing but what was very certain, confesses, "that Mr Arnauld had given convincing Proofs, that he was not of this Assembly; but, adds he, he is deceived, in believing, that Anthony Arnauld is the Person meant by the Letters A. A. I assure him, in behalf of the Author of the Judicial Relation, that Those Letters denote Another, who is yet living, and is too good a Friend of Mr Arnauld's to be unknown to him (31)." Mr Pascal, who was then writing the Provincial Letters, pressed the Jesuits to name the private Betrayer of the Conference, the six Doctors, who had assisted at it, and particularly the Person denoted by the Letters A. A. and who, tho' not Mr Arnauld himself, was too intimate a Friend of his to be unknown to him. But these Challenges were disregarded; and it is but a few Years since, that a very famous Jesuit of Antwerp declared to the Public, that This Friend of Mr Arnauld was his own Brother Arnauld d'Andilli (32). This has been already confuted. See the Remark [B] of the Article ARNAULD d'ANDILLI.

[I] He has been made to go to Nocturnal Witch-Meetings.] I cannot tell in which of the two Assemblies Mr Arnauld would rather have been present, That of Bourg-Fontaine, or That, which the late Mr Maupas, Bishop of Evreux, has somewhere spoken of. "It is certain, that he affirmed to several Persons, that he had been informed by a converted Wizard, that he had seen Mr Arnauld, and a certain Prince of the Blood (33), at Nocturnal Witch-Meetings, and that Mr Arnauld had made a very fine Speech to the Devils (34)." If he must have a chosen between these two Extremes, and if the Speech might have tended only to excite the Devils to more Amendment of Life, I make no doubt, but the Doctor would much rather have harangued in this Meeting, than have given his Opinion in the Charter-house of Bourg-Fontaine, for the Abolishment of Christianity, and the Propagation of Deism.

It were to abuse the Patience of my Readers to expose the ridiculousness of this Tale, which this Prelate related to several Persons; it is one of Those Falshoods, which Mr Arnauld thinks no one ought ever to give himself the Trouble of confuting. These are his Words (35): "The Interest of Honour may be considered two Ways; either with regard to the Calumny itself, which possibly may be very heinous, of with regard to Those, who, being once prepossessed with it, may afterwards have a very ill Opinion of the Person calumniated. It is properly the latter Consideration, which obliges a Man to defend himself; for, how enormous soever it be in itself, it may safely enough be slighted, if it is of such a Nature, that no sober Person will give Credit to it. As for Example; what the late Mr de Maupas, Bishop of Evreux, had formerly said, that he was told, by a converted Wizard, that Mr Arnauld had been at their Nocturnal Meetings, and that the Devils had admired the Speech he made to them, was in itself an horrible Calumny; in the mean time, if any impertinent Fellow had inserted this in a Libel, would any one have the Doctor give himself the trouble of confuting it; and, in default of this, would there be any Reason to suppose, that it was the Possibility of answering it, which forced him to be silent, and that he had, in Effect, confessed it?"

[K] He has been sent to command the Troops of the Vaudois.] This Falshood has little more of Probability in it, than the former. There have been, of late, Manuscripts, which positively affirm, that the Arnauld, who is at the Head of the Vaudois, is Mr Arnauld, Doctor of the Sorbonne, who has at last declared himself, and does Wonders in Savoy, at the Head of the Troops of That Party (36). It would be a very surprising Metamorphosis, if, at the Age of Seventy eight Years, a Doctor of the Sorbonne, who has employed his whole Life in Study, and who has wrote so much against the Protestant Clergy, should himself become a Minister militant, and exchange his Pen for a Sword, and a brown Musket, endeavouring to make Arnauld's Carabineers still more talked of, than Those of One of his Uncles, very well known to the Robellers, under the Reign of Lewis XIII (37). The late Bishop of Leige was told, at his own Table, That Mr Arnauld had abjured the Catholic Faith at Boisleduc, and that he was married there (38). The greatest part of Those, who are called Zealots, fear nothing more than the Orthodoxy of Those, whom they accuse. They do not imitate God, who desires not the Death of a Sinner, but that he may be converted, and live. They would have the Person, they have once accused, apostatize in good earnest; and are angry, that he does not go over to the Enemies Party, to make their Accusations good. They would much rather

(28) A Character of Filleau, written 16 or 17 Leagues off Paris.

(29) The IVth Factum for the Relations of Janfenius, pag. 21, and 12, proves, that he was the Person designed in the Judicial Relation.

(30) In his Letter to a Duke and Peer, in 1655. See also the 5th Part of the IVth Factum for the Relations of Janfenius.

(31) Father Meynier, in the Book, entitled, Le Port-Royal & Geneve d'intelligence contre le St. Sacrement de l'Autel, printed at Poitiers, in 1656.

(32) Father Hazart, in his Answer to the Factum for the Relations of Janfenius. See the History of the Works of the Learned, 1688, and the 2d Part of the IVth Factum for the Relations of Janfenius.

(33) Probably the late Duke of Longueville.

(34) Fourth Factum, above mentioned.

(35) See Tom. III, de la Morale Pratique, cap. XI, pag. 257.

(36) Questionnaire, en curieuse, pag. 4.

(37) See the Memoirs of the Sieur de Pontis.

(38) Troisième Plainte de Mr Arnauld, p. 8.

Jurieu [L]. It has been said, that he was banished from France [M]; and that He wrote the Apology for the Catholics only to recover his Benefice [N]. Several Books

(39) General Criticism on Maimbourg's History of Calvinism, pag. 384, second Edition.

(40) Father Maimbourg has play'd upon the same equivocal Name of Arnould of Bresse, in his Decad. di l' Empire; and Theoph. Raynould has wrote a Book, entitled, Arnouldus de Brixia rediit in Arnaldo de Lutetia. . . . i. e. Arnould of Bresse re-visited in Arnould of Paris.

(41) This Title was given him, because he was a Natural Son of Philip IV of Spain.

(42) Religion of the Jesuits, p. 59.

(43) Morale Pratique, Tom. 3. pag. 773.

(44) He is called Abbé de Ville. See Nouvelle des Lettres, for July 1686. Art. 8.

(45) The Title imports, that it was at Cologne, by Abraham du Bois.

rather another should damn himself, than that themselves should pass for notorious Calumniators. See what a Modern Author says upon this (39).

[L] He has been advanced to the Post of Squire to the Goliath Peter Jurieu.] They, who place Mr Arnould at the Head of the Vaudois, certainly affront him less, than They, who represent him as Squire to the Goliath Jurieu. This the Bishop of Malaga did, in his Catholic Complaint, by applying, as well as he could, to these two famous Writers, a Thought of St Bernard, in relation to Peter Abelard, and Arnould of Bresse (40); which gives him an opportunity of drawing this Conclusion: "Illi qui modo furrexerunt, novus Goliath, & ejus armiger, PETRUS scilicet, & ARNALDUS, facili negotio exterminabuntur. — They, who have lately arisen, The new Goliath, and his Armour-Bearer, to wit, PETER, and ARNALDUS, will be easily exterminated." The Public has seen the Letter, which Mr Arnould wrote to this Prelate, wherein he tells him, that his Highness (41) must needs have been strangely imposed upon, to be told "that Dr Arnould was Squire to Mr Jurieu, the Goliath of the Protestants against the Catholic Party; for, continues he, if your Highness had known This Arnould, you could not have been capable of so great an Error in Judgment, as to take Two of the most declared Enemies in the World to be of the same Party, and to mistake Him, who has zealously supported the Cause of the Church against That Minister, for his Associate and Confident in the cruel War, which he wages against the Church." It is certain, that the two Authors, who have been taken, the one for a Goliath, and the other for his Squire, are both so far from being such, that it is not more false, that Mr Arnould assisted at the Conference of Bourc-Fontaine, or at the Nocturnal Meetings of the Wizards, or at the Irruptions of the Vaudois, than that he is the Squire of the Goliath Peter Jurieu. Nothing, then, can be more cold, or more remote from Truth, than the Allusions borrowed from the Passage of St Bernard.

This is what the pretended Goliath has reproached the Author of the Catholic Complaint with, no less than the pretended Squire. "If This Bishop, says he (42), had been of a discerning Taste, his violent Invektives would not have turned upon the silly Allusion to the Names of Arnould of Bresse, and Peter Abelard; meaning, that Monsieur Arnould is the Successor of Arnould of Bresse, and the Minister Peter Jurieu of Peter Abelard. He would not have called That Minister the Goliath-Enemy of the Church, and Arnould his Squire. That Arnould and This Minister are too much at variance, to conspire together: Besides, Mr Arnould is of a fitter Age, Size, and Strength, to be the Goliath, than the Squire. This He also pretends to, and no one will dispute the Honour of it with him."

I must here note a small Defect of Memory in Mr Arnould. He complains (43), that, after the weak Comparison of Arnould of Bresse with Arnould of Paris, and of Peter Abelard with Peter Jurieu, they make the Bishop of Malaga say, that This Doctor was the Goliath of the Party, and the Minister his Squire. We have seen, that he has been made to say quite the contrary.

[M] It has been said, that he was banished France.] A Doctor of the Sorbonne (44), a Savoyard by Nation, maintained, in a Book intitled Reasonable Prejudices against Janfenism, printed at Geneva in 1686 (45), that Mr Arnould had been banished France by the King's Order. The following Words, in the Advertisement to the Reader, import this: I thought I could not speak the whole Truth, without blaming the Conduct of this old Puritan, who, by the JUSTICE of the MOST CHRISTIAN KING, is a FUGITIVE in Holland. It is, nevertheless, certain, that he voluntarily quitted the Kingdom; and it cannot be doubted, after the Letters, which he wrote, in 1679, to the Chancellor, Mr le Tellier, and to the Archbishop of Paris, printed in the first Volume of the Espit de Mr Arnould, in the Year 1684. So that it is strange, that two Years after, the Abbot de Ville should be ignorant of a Truth, exposed to public View, in a Satire, for which there has been so great a Demand. But it is yet more strange, that, in the Year 1690, Mr Arnould should be obliged to get These two Letters printed, in order to confute Those, who published every where, that he was a Rebel to his King, and that he had been banished France, as a turbulent Fellow (46). I believe the Author of the Espit has reported a no less Falshood, in maintaining, That he was expelled Flanders. 'Tis this good Man, continues he (47), thinks his Adventures are unknown, yet we have certain Intelligence, that he was expelled the Netherlands by order of The Governour. The Term Chasser, which the Author of the General Criticism on Maimbourg's History of Calvinism makes use of, is a little equivocal. They have reported, says he (48), *that Mr Arnould's House was a Rendezvous of disaffected Persons; that caballing and seditious Conferences were held there; that they prepared Memoirs there for the Court of Rome; is a word, they have gained their Point, which was to expel him * with the rest of the Cabal*. This means no more, than that they procured certain Orders to be sent to Mr Arnould, which were the cause that he made choice of a Retreat in a foreign Country.

[N] He is said to have wrote an Apology for the Catholics, only to recover his Benefice.] Mr Jurieu was grossly mistaken, when he said, that Mr Arnould had wrote the Apology for the Catholics, in hopes of being restored to his native Country, that he might peaceably enjoy his Estate, and Benefices (49), and that the fear of having his Benefices confiscated engaged him in some false Steps. This could not be better refuted by a Geometrical Demonstration, than by the public Declaration, which Mr Arnould made, that he never had a Benefice; for it can never enter into the Mind of a reasonable Man, that a Doctor so jealous of his Reputation, as he is, and who could not expect to escape the most mortifying Confusion, if he falsely denied, that he ever had a Benefice, when he really had enjoyed one, should venture to publish such a Falshood in a printed Work. We need, then, only cast our Eyes on these Words of Mr Arnould, to be demonstratively convinced of his Adversary's Falshood.

"The seditious manner, says he (50), in which they presumed to speak of the Affairs of That Country, obliged the Ambassador of his Britannic Majesty to demand of the States a Condemnation of the most Vehement of their Libels, to which they were pleased to give the Title of Espit de Mr Arnould; tho' perhaps I am the least ill treated in it of a great Number of Persons, whom they pull to pieces, without their having any relation to me, but what is either Ridiculous or Imaginary; having almost nothing to reproach me with, but secret Intentions, often grounded on manifest Falshoods: As, when they say, that it was not out of Regard to Religion, that I wrote the Apology for the Catholics, but upon a Prospect of Interest, and for fear of losing my Benefice; I, WHO, ALL THE WORLD KNOWS, HAVE NONE." Thus he speaks, in a Letter dated the Twentieth of October 1684. He speaks no less positively in a Work printed in 1689. "As for the Book falsely entitled Espit de Mr Arnould, he (51) never had any thoughts of answering it; for, it having been sent him some time after it appeared, in opening each Volume in several places, he met with such things, as sufficiently acquainted him with This Minister's Genius; for instance, That idle Calumny (52), that they suffered the Children of Quality of twelve or thirteen Years of Age, who studied Humanity at Port-Royal, to read the Socinian Books; and another no less ridiculous, tho' less heinous; that Mr Arnould, who has NO BENEFICE, AND WHO NEVER SOUGHT ANY, wrote the Apology for the Catholics to preserve his Benefices. He concludes from hence, that so passionate and unreasonable a Calumniator, being unworthy of Credit, deserved no answer, and from that time till now he never read a word in the Book, before your Defence appeared (53)." So that what the Latins express by the Proverb, Cantherius in porta, has happened to the Author of the Espit de Mr Arnould: He has stumbled at the very Threshold.

Note, That Mr Arnould had once a Canonship in the Cathedral of Verdun, when he began his Licence in (46) Quæst. Curieuse, pag. 212.

(47) Espit de Mr Arnould, Tom. 1. pag. 38.

(48) Letter V.

* le CHASSER.

(49) Espit de Mr Arnould, Tom. 1. pag. 34.

(50) The second Addition to the Apology for the Catholics, p. 140.

(51) It is of Himself that Mr Arnould speaks.

(52) See the Refutation of this Story in Mr Arnould's Dissertation on the pretended Happiness of the Pious, printed in 1687.

(53) Tom. III, de la Morale Pratique.

Books have been ascribed to him, which he never wrote [O]. I shall take notice of some of them; and I doubt not but many others may be pointed out. His Silence has (54) Prefat. Cause Arnouldine, p. viii.

(55) Ibid. pag. xix.

in the Year 1638 (54), but he quitted This Benefice a little before he received Deacons Orders in the Year 1641 (55).

[O] Several Books have been ascribed to him, which he never wrote.] I shall divide this Remark into four Sections.

PERPETUITY of the Faith. A Dispute between Mess. Arnould and Claudi.

I. Without observing the Order of Time; As the first Falshood in relation to the Books ascribed to him, I shall mention That, which regards The Perpetuity of the Faith. For This Book has given occasion to the most famous Dispute, that was ever raised between the Roman Catholics and Protestants. Mr Claudi, who was Advocate for the latter, has gained the greatest Honour by it, that ever Minister gained: And Mr Arnould, who was principal Advocate for the former, perhaps never exerted the whole Force of his Genius with more Application, than on this Occasion. All that wait Wit, Eloquence, Reading, and Logic, can furnish of shining and strong, appeared on both sides in the Course of the Dispute; Each Party claims the Victory; nor can all the Pains and Expence, which the Port-Royal has been at, to procure a great Number of Attestations from the Levant, avail any thing against the Persuasions of the Reformed, touching the Faith of the Christians of Those Parts, with regard to the Eucharist. The Ignorance, which reigns among Those Christians, the ill Character of the Greek Nation, Time out of Mind, in Point of Sincerity, the mercenary Subscriptions, of which they are thought capable (56), &c. enervate, in the Eyes of Protestants, all the Attestations, which the Port-Royal has produced. But this does not prevent the Controversy's being looked upon (setting aside the Prejudices of Party) as one of the most memorable and glorious Transactions of Mr Arnould's Life. I had reason, then, to begin this Remark with the first Exploit of this great Contest.

(56) See, below, Remark [5].

(57) A. B. R.D.L.D.P. ubi ita, A-bel Rotolp, de la Devezze, Pasteur. He was formerly Minister at Castrès, and now at the Hague.

I could wish, that the Author, who has given us a good Abridgment of the Life of Mr Claudi (57), had, with the utmost Exactness, noted the Epoch of This War, since Mr Claudi has not dated the Preface of his first Book. This Defect may deceive several Persons; for example, I have Mr Claudi's first Answer, printed at Paris, by Stephen Lucas, in 1672. The Title does not inform me, whether it be the first or second Edition; and, in the first Line of the Preface, I find, that the Dispute had been depending about four Years, and that it was a Year since the Manuscript, which had been communicated at that time to Mr Claudi, was printed. Till I have better information, I find myself almost invincibly inclined to pass this false Judgment, that the Perpetuity of the Faith was printed the first time, in the Year 1671. In saying This, I am aware, that One is often mistaken in Conjectures of this kind, when the requisite Date is not prefixed to the Prefaces. My Edition of the Perpetuity of the Faith is the Fourth, and is of the Year 1666; but I am informed by it of the Date of the first; for I find, at the bottom of the Abstract of the Licence, that the first Edition of This Book was finished the fifteenth of July 1664. Mr Claudi's first Answer seems to me to be of the Year 1666 (58). The Author of his Life, not thinking exact Dates necessary in an Abridgment, was the Occasion, that the learned Men, who wrote the Journal of Leipfic, to the great Benefit of the Republic of Letters, and with much Honour to their City, which may justly be called the Athens of Germany, were mistaken with regard to the first Writings of this Minister. They pretend, that his first Answer to the Perpetuity of the Faith was printed, before he served the Church of Montauban (59); but the Truth is, The First and Second were both printed at the same time, after the first had been handed about, for four or five Years, in Manuscript, and after he had left Montauban. But to return to the Fact;

(58) That is, according to the Book-feller's anticipated Date; for I believe the Book came out in 1665.

(59) Acta Erudit. Lipsienf. 1083, pag. 639.

Mr de la Devezze does not affirm, that the Perpetuity of the Faith is a Work of Mr Arnould; but is satisfied with saying, that he is supposed to have been the Author of it. The Journalists of Leipfic keep within the same Bounds (60); but, in the Supplement of Moreri, in which is a very long Article of CLAUDE, taken in part from the Abridgment of his Life, it is positively affirmed, that Mr Arnould is the Author of the Perpetuity of the Faith. In the mean time, the most common and probable Opinion ascribes This Work to Mr Nicolle, the Three large Volumes of the Perpetuity defended to Mr Arnould, and the General Answer to the second Book of Mr Claudi to Mr Nicolle. The Question curieuse says nothing positively of it; because the Catalogue, which we find in it, of the Writings of the Gentlemen of Port-Royal against the Protestants, does not distinguish Those of Mr Nicolle from Those of Mr Arnould.

(60) Acta Erudit. Lipsienf. 1613, pag. 441. sicq. affert it.

Observe, that the first Volume of the Perpetuity defended was printed in the Year 1669, and that the Author, having hesitated for a Year, whether he should answer Mr Claudi's Book, began to do it in January 1667, and finished The first Volume in June 1668 (61). Observe also, that it is ascribed to Mr Arnould in some of the Approbations at the Head of the Work. This is sufficient to remove all uncertainty.

II. The Author of the Espit de Mr Arnould ascribes the second Volume of the Moral Pratique to This Doctor, but gives no manner of reason for it. Mr Arnould gave him the Lye publicly. "It is certain, says he (62), that Mr Arnould is not the Author of the Moral Pratique. The Jesuits have ascribed it to him — on the Faith of Mr Jurieu only; a Person decried for his Falshood and Lying, and who alone ascribes This Book to "Mr Arnould, as he does many other Pieces, in which every one else knows he never had the least share." From That time the Accuser never endeavoured to justify what he had said; so that Equity must judge it to be a false Imputation. The Proofs must needs be very difficult, since the Bishop of Malaga speaks but doubtfully of it, on the sole Authority of Mr Jurieu; for he says (63): modo fit ARNALDUS, ut innuit PETRUS JURIEU in suo SPIRITU. — If ARNALDUS be the Person, as PETER JURIEU intimates in his SPIRITUS. The Author of the Defence of the new Christians, who is thought to be Father le Tellier, one of the best Pens of the Order, was more decisive, than the Prelate, though he seems to have no other Authority than Mr Jurieu: For which Mr Arnould gives him a smart Reprimand, and accuses him of judging rashly; which wounds Charity and Justice, if the Circumstances of it be well considered. The only Reason, adds he (64), why you make him the Author of it, is the Testimony of a Man, who, in your own Esteem, is unworthy of Credit, and so notorious for his Falshoods, that he is only fit to call the clearest Truths in question, when he advances them.

THE second Tome of the Morale Pratique — Practical Morality.

(62) Letter of a Divine, on the Defence of the new Christians, pag. 2.

(63) Catholic. Quer. m. pag. 103.

(64) Morale Pratique, Tom. III. pag. 36.

III. The Journal of Leipfic ascribes The Lawful Prejudices against the Calvinists to Mr Arnould (65). Yet, according to the general Opinion of Those, who are best informed in these Particulars, Mr Nicolle is the Author of it; and the Abbot de Ville ascribes it to him by Name (66), in the Preface of the Book before-mentioned; where he retorts on the Gentlemen of Port-Royal the Prejudices, which they made use of against the Reformed. The Proof, which the Gentlemen of Leipfic employ, is not a good one; for, tho' the Bishop of Condom, and He of Grenoble, give their Approbation, in One and the same Act, to the Prejugex Legitimes, and three other Books, one of which is certainly Mr Arnould's, yet they do not suppose, that the others are so too. They were joined together, because they came all four from the Port-Royal at the same time. These four Books; are the Prejugex Legitimes — Lawful Prejudices; the Reponse Generale à M. Claudi; — General Answer to Mr Claudi; the Renversement de la Morale, — Overthrow of the Morality; and the second Volume of the Perpetuite defendue, — Perpetuity defended.

PARJURE Legitimes — Lawful Prejudices.

(65) Acta Erudit. Ann. 1683, pag. 438, 450, and in the Index, p. 561. Anna. 1690, pag. 18, 595.

(66) Fyni-fake he calls him Nicol. which is justly ascribed, says he, to Mr Nicol, one of the most polite Writers of Port-Royal.

IV. In the Year 1669, A Work called A Defence of the Church, against Mr Claudi's Book, intituled, A Defence of the Reformation, was printed at Antwerp (67). The Journalists of Leipfic conjectured, that it was a Piece of Mr Arnould's (68); but it came from another Hand, viz. from Peter d'Antecourt, a Religious of St Genevieve, and Chancellor of the University of Paris, as another excellent Journalist informs us (69).

THE Defence of the Church.

(67) The 77. le Page imports, at Cologne, for Peter Marteau.

1690, pag. 18, and in the Index, pag. 611. (69) History of the Works of the Learned, August, 1689, pag. 514; September, 1689, pag. 34.

(68) Acta Erudit. Ann. the Works

has been imputed to a false Reason [P]. Some have given him Spectacles, and a faithless Servant [Q]. The chief Works, written by him, since his quitting France, relate to the System of Nature and Grace, by Father Mallebranche; the Philosophical Sin; the Practical Morality of the Jesuits; and some Propositions of Mr Steyart. In this last Book, he vigorously attacks Father Simon, in defence of the New Testament of Mons, and in relation to the Inspiration of the Sacred Writers, and the Translations of the Scripture into the Vulgar Tongue [R]; as also in favour of the Attestations

I pass by an Error of the Jesuit Papebroch; which is That of ascribing the Books, which have appeared under the Name of Petrus Aurelius, to Mr Arnauld. Petrus Aurelius vero nomen est Antonius Arnauldus (70). I know not what to say to a Fact, which I have met with in a Pamphlet (71), intitled, A Defense of the Mandate of my Lord the Bishop of Arras, of the thirtieth of December, 1697, against a Libel intitled, The ancient Heresy of the Jesuits renewed, &c. The Author of the Defence pretends to prove, that the Jansenists have acknowledged the Authority of the Church in determining the Sense of a Book. And This is what he says at the Twenty fourth Page; "Among several, whom I could produce, I shall content myself with one Author, who may serve instead of all the rest. It is Mr Arnauld, the Head and Oracle of Jansenism. After having, in the fourth Part of the Apology for the Nuns of Port-Royal, exceeded all that ever has been said against the Infallibility of the Church, in ascertaining the Sense of Books; and, in a new Work, in defence of the Apology, and others of his Writings, being reduced to an Impossibility of justifying himself from the Reflexion cast upon him, that his Arguments tended to destroy the Certainty of Tradition; he found himself necessitated, in spite of himself, to make this important and decisive Acknowledgment, which ruined, in a few Lines, all his Labours for so many Years. "There are certain Matters of Fact, says this Writer", "from which the Truth of a Doctrine must necessarily be concluded: And these are They, which contain the Tradition of the Church. For instance, from the Fathers having unanimously taught, that such a Doctrine is Matter of Faith, it follows, that this Doctrine is Matter of Faith — and thus it is plain, that the Church being infallible in the Decision of Doctrines, she is likewise so in the Decision of such Facts, as necessarily follow from those Doctrines, and which are the necessary means, by which she attains to the Knowledge of the Truths of Faith. Thus far Mr Arnauld." This is clear and express. It is positively affirmed, that The Apology for the Nuns, and the Confutation of one of Father Annat's Books are two of our Doctor's Pieces. I do not pretend to deny it; though, on the one side, the Style of the Apology seems to me more correct than His, and on the other, less lively, and less vehement. This Apology is a pretty large Quarto, divided into four Parts, and printed in 1665. Observe, by the way, the Fate of Disputes: It scarce ever happens, in supporting an Opinion, that we are at full Liberty to make use of Maxims, which are purely universal. We have some other Opinions to manage, which oblige us to Restrictions; but This is a very inconvenient Restraint; for The Adversary makes his Advantage of our Exceptions. This supplies him with Arguments ad hominem, and gives him great Advantage; and it is, generally, by this Means, that he recovers himself, after he has been fairly thrown. The Jansenists are an Example of This in the Apology for the Mandate of the Bishop of Arras. I would willingly see how they will get off. Both Parties are Sufferers in this Affair. The Infallibility of the Church cannot be maintained as to Facts; and, unless this be admitted, one is exposed to a thousand Inconveniences. As to the Book des deux chefs qui n'en font qu'un; — Of two Heads, which make but one; I shall speak of it in another Place. It is a Work falsely ascribed to Mr Arnauld. This Imputation is in an anonymous Piece, printed in the Year 1688, and supposed to be Father le Tellier's. The Title of it is An Apologetical Letter for Mr Arnauld, &c. It would be more reasonable to say, that the Doctrine itself, of the two Heads which make but one, was maintained by the Doctor of the Sorbonne, in the Preface to his Book of Frequent Communion; but even This wants Proof. See the Abridged History of his Life (72).

[P] His Silence has been imputed to a false Reason.] The Difficulties proposed to Mr Steyart make it appear, that the Author of the Voyage to the World of Des Cartes had not exactly consulted the Period of Time, as to the Quarrel between Mr Arnauld and Father Mallebranche, when he said, that the first engaged in it purely to have a Pretence for not answering two Books, which had appeared against him, one composed by a Minister, and the other by a Jesuit. It must be confessed, that the Public is scarce yet recovered from the Astonishment, which the first Year's Silence of this Doctor raised with regard to these two Books; but it is certain, whatever the subtle and polite Traveller to the New World may say of it, that he was engaged with Father Mallebranche, before the Espriu de Mr Arnauld, and the Observations of Father le Tellier, appeared (73). I must not dissemble, that the Reasons Mr Arnauld gave for this Silence pleased some; but they are very far from pleasing all Readers. I have already cited a Passage, which relates to these Reasons (74); here is another; "As for Mr Jurieu, he is become so famous all over Europe for Slander and Calumny, that he is no longer able to hurt Those, whom he attacks. I know that two Persons, both Protestants, have wrote to Mr Arnauld about him, as a Man decried among his own Party, and whose Passions have made them ashamed of him; and that they have offered to send him Memoirs, which would discover what he is. But it is no wonder Mr Arnauld did not take them at their Word, or that he would not throw away his Time in writing against a Man formidable only by Abuse and Slander (76)." He immediately produces some Facts, which he pretends were nothing but monstrous Calumnies, published by This Minister. The Reasons he gives for his Silence, as to Father le Tellier (77), have satisfied but few Persons.

[Q] Some have given him Spectacles, and a faithless Servant.] The Writings published on a Correspondence by Letter between a pretended Arnauld, and a Professor of Douay, contain Matters, which may be thought à propos to a Work of this kind; however I shall only observe the manner, in which Mr Arnauld refutes the Complaint imputed to him of having been robbed by his Servant, and being scarce able, by reason of his great Age, to read a small Character. How could I complain of a Servant, says he, who robbed and betrayed me; I, who never had any, but what were very faithful, and who have had none at all for twelve Years past, since I left Paris (78). In a Note on Mr de Ligny's Letter, it is said, That Mr Arnauld never made use of Spectacles, and that he could read the smallest Character as easily as the largest. These are little Particulars, which deserve to be communicated to Those, who are curious in the History of illustrious Persons. As to the Intrigue of the False Arnauld, it is one of the finest Comedies, has ever been acted; and had as much Success as the Authors could expect. Perhaps there is no Instance of a Mortality, which, in so short a Time, swept away so many Professors in a University, as This Affair did in That of Douay; perhaps no Discharge ever cleared the Ranks so well. This may serve to put us in Mind of these Words of the Psalmist; And Thou shalt renew the Face of the Earth.

[R] He vigorously attacks Father Simon, in Defence of — The Inspiration of the Sacred Writers, and the Translations of the Scripture.] I have elsewhere (80) produced two Propositions of the Jesuits, which were censured by the Faculties of Divinity of Lowain and Douay. They are Propositions, which seem to limit or qualify the Inspiration of the Scriptures. Upon this, Mr Simon took part against the Censors (81), and was refuted

(70) Papebroch. Eliensis Histor. Actor. in Controversia Carnolica, pag. 135.

(71) Printed at Cologne, by Van Buning, 1708. It contains 57 Pages in 12mo.

* Refutation of a Book of Father P. Annat, &c. pag. 5.

(72) Page 85, &c.

(73) See the Difficulties proposed to Mr Steyart, Part I, pag. 59, &c.

(74) Above, Citat. (53).

(75) It is at the 23rd Page of the 3^d Tome of the Morale Pratique.

(76) Diffutation on the pretended Happiness of the Pleasures of Sense, pag. 122.

(77) Morale Pratique, Tom. III, p. 266, 267.

(78) Premiere Plainte, pag. 9.

(80) In the Article FATHER ADAM, a little before Citation (9).

(81) See Chap. 23, 24, of The Critical History of the New Testament.

Attestations of the Greeks [S], &c. — He died in the Night between the eighth and ninth of August 1694, Aged Eighty two Years, six Months, and two Days. At this great Age, he received two signal and uncommon Favours from Heaven; for the Sickness, of which he died, continued but a Week, more or less, and never prevented his saying, or hearing, Mass, and rebearding his Breviary almost at the ordinary Hours (l). His Agony was mild, calm, and short. On the other Hand, he had as great strength of Mind, and Memory, and wrote as well the last Year of his Life, as at forty or fifty Years of Age. These are Blessings, which rarely attend learned Men. Some few Months before his Death, he wrote four Letters against Father Mallebranche (m), and one to his old Friend Mr du Bois, full of Reflexions on the Eloquence of Preachers (n). The Public has seen these last Works, and found no signs in them of a declining Judgment. Mr du Bois did not long survive either his Admission into the French Academy, or the reading of these Reflexions, from which he might have learned, that he understood nothing of St Austin's Rules concerning the Eloquence of the Pulpit (o). I question whether the Public will ever see what Mr Arnauld wrote, about the same time, in Favour of Mr Boileau [T]; I doubt not but his Letter to him is admirable. There

(l) Abridg'd History of Mr Arnauld, p. 279.

(m) See the Journal des Scavans, of the 28th of June, 1684.

(n) Abridg'd History, pag. 294.

(o) What he has said on this Subject, is to be found in the Preface to his French Translation of some Sermons of St Austin. See the Journal des Scavans, of the 7th of June, 1694.

(82) Printed at Paris, in 1695, in 4to.

(83) In the New Observations on the Text, and Versions, of the New Testament, from pag. 46, to pag. 584.

refuted by Mr Arnauld, from page 113, to page 236, of the Difficulties proposed to Mr Stoyaert. He defended himself in his New Observations on the Text and Versions of the New Testament (82), from Page 33, to 91. Many Things may be learned, by exactly comparing the Reasons of the one with Those of the other. It is well known, that, of all the Catholic Writers, Mr Arnauld was the Man, who most learnedly and solidly supported the Usefulness of the Translations of The Scripture. What he said, as to the Reason of the thing, on this Subject, is admirable: And what he has said as to Fact; I mean, to shew, that, in the Intention of the Church, the Laity were never excluded from reading the Word of God in the Vulgar Tongue, is fine and curious; but if you read Mr Simon's Answer (83) attentively, you will not know what to think as to the Church's Opinion in This Matter. The Sentiments of Doctors, the Judgments of Universities, and Mandates of Prelates, in a Word, the public Acts alledged on both sides, form such a strange Variety, and especially when we examine the Motives and Principles laid down by Those who condemn, and Those who allow of, the reading the Translations, that, upon the whole, the People, according to the Church's Intention, ought to be both forbid, and permitted, to read the Holy Scriptures. There are few Facts, which may be more easily reduced to historical Pyrrhonism, than This Question: Does the Church disapprove, or approve, the reading of the Scripture, in the Vulgar Tongue, by the Laity? How strange is it, that no positive Decision can be given of this Question, either in the Negative or Affirmative? Should not a Body, which boasts of Infallibility, be more uniform in it's Proceedings? Mr Arnauld would, with the Torrent of his Eloquence and Learning, carry away a great Number of Readers to a Belief, that the Church of Rome was calumniated, when it was so often reproached with prohibiting the Laity the reading of the Word of God; I say he would induce them to believe this, did not Mr Simon oppose his Banks to These Torrents. Thus, in the same Communion, one Doctor defeats the Labours of another: The common Enemy makes his Advantage of this, and has reason to cry out;

Sæpe, premente Deo, fert Deus alter opem.

Oppress'd by One, Another God befriends.

[S] — As also in favour of the Attestations of the Greeks. I have observed before (84), that the Protestants despised them, as things easily obtained from That mercenary Nation. "Emendaticis undique per Legatos Regios, Consules, Missionarios, Græcorum hac de re testimoniiis, a quibus nihil non pretio extorqueas (85). — Attestations of the Greeks, of whom Money will buy any thing, having been begged up and down by Ambassadors, Consuls, and Missionaries. Mr Arnauld produced several Attestations from Greek Priests, to shew, that, in this Point, they followed the Doctrine of the Romish Church; but it is, nevertheless, true, that most of them were obtained by Money. Mr Wheeler affirms, that, in his Travels thro' Greece, he spoke with several Papas, whom Mr de Nointel, Nephew of Mr Arnauld, endeavoured to corrupt in "this manner (86)." Here are two Evidences of the Fact I had asserted. Note, that Mr de Nointel was not Mr Arnauld's Nephew. They call him so there, in all probability, from having read, in Mr Claude's Answer (87), that Mr de Pomponne, Nephew to Mr Arnauld, and at that time Ambassador in Sweden, had procured him Materials. However it be, Mr Simon confessed, that there were even Catholics, who did not rely on this great Number of Attestations (88), and he assigns the reason of their Doubts. Mr Arnauld examines all this with extraordinary Zeal, and gives the Sum of what he had replied to Spanhemius, in his Apology for the Catholics (89).

[T] What Mr Arnauld wrote in Favour of Mr Boileau. The Criticism on the tenth Satire of Boileau (90), falling into Mr Arnauld's Hands, put him upon "writing a Differtation, in the form of a Letter, in which he undertook the Defence of the Satire, with That Force of Wit, and Style, which never failed him: The Party for the Ancients was proud of it; and this occasioned Boileau's writing Those fine Verses on Mr Arnauld, in which he prefers the Apology, which This Doctor wrote, for his Satire to all the Honours he enjoyed, and even to That of being the King's Historiographer. — The rigid Jansenists, or the Rigidists, were not pleased with this last Piece of Mr Arnauld. What! a Doctor, grown grey in serious and grave Disputes, to write, at above Eighty Years of Age, of Poetry, Women, and Romances! How unbecoming! The Party were vexed at it, and whispered, that their Head demeaned himself. Poetry, as they represented it, was a frivolous Art, which ought not to have employed the Thoughts of so great a Genius for a Moment. This came to Boileau's Ears; upon which he set about his Poem Of the Love of God, to shew, that Poetry can reach the most sublime Subjects." These Particulars have been communicated to me by a Person of great Wit and Learning (91), very well known to Boileau. Let us here produce a Passage, in the tenth Epistle of This great Poet, where he addresses himself to his own Verses.

Mais des heureux regards de mon Astre étonnant
Marquéz bien cet effet encor plus surprenant;
Qui dans mon souvenir aura toujours sa place:
Que de tant d'Ecrivains de l'Ecole d'Ignace
Étant, comme je suis, ami fi déclaré,
Ce Docteur toutefois si craint, si révéré,
Qui contre Eux de sa plume épuise l'énergie,
Arnaud, le grand Arnaud, fit mon apologie (92).
Sur mon tombeau futur, mes Vers, pour l'énoncer (93),
Courrez en lettres d'or de ce pas vous placer.
Alléz jusqu'où l'Aurore en naissant void l'Hydaspe,
Chercher, pour l'y graver, le plus précieux jalpe.
Sur-tout à mes Rivaux sachez bien l'étaler.

But observe the still more surprising Effect of the happy Influence of my wonderful Star; an Effect, which shall ever hold it's Place in my Memory; that, being a declared Friend, as I am, to so many Writers of St Ignace's Province, (86) Bibliothèque universelle, Tom. XI, p. 445.

(87) Claude's Answer to Preliminary Discourse, Book IV, chap. III, pag. 48.

(88) In his Critical History of the Faith of the Levant.

(89) Difficulties proposed to Mr Stoyaert, Par. 6, pag. 276, &c.

Boileau inserted it in his Edition of 1722. This Piece has appeared since, in all the subsequent Editions.

(90) It is his Satire against Women.

(91) Mr. Marais, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris.

(92) Mr Arnauld wrote a Differtation, in which he is to be seen my Countryman, and in his last Work.

(93) It is this in the Edition I made of his Poems, published in June 1700 of the United Kingdom's Province.

(p) Prefat.
Cause Arnaud pag.
ix. See the Abridg'd History of his Life, pag.
20.

There is another Happiness to be considered in his Life, which surpasses Those I have observed; to wit, his having always been very exact in the Practice of the Exercises of Piety, which his Priesthood required of him; and, what is yet more difficult, his abstaining, in his very Youth, from sensual Pleasures, and ever preserving a Purity of Manners, without Taint or Blemish (p). It does not appear, that his Adversaries ever attacked him on this Head; tho', in point of Orthodoxy, they have endeavoured to defame him all manner of ways. If the reading of bad Books could produce the same Effect in the Minds of all young Persons, as it did in his, it would not be amiss to recommend it to them [U]. The Protestations he has made of his Adherence to the true Faith, and of his Zeal for God, appear in several parts of his Works, particularly in the Spiritual Testament [X], which he made, the sixteenth of September 1679, wherein he calls God to witness with what Dispositions he engaged in writing such and such Books. The Court of Rome did, at last, acknowledge his Merit [Y]; and it was purely his own fault, that he was not a Cardinal. It is unnecessary to observe, that he opposed all relaxation of Morality, and that he was always a Teacher and Director of Austerity. It appeared, indeed, that he swerved a little from the strait Path, in an Affair, which gave occasion to a Fatum, or Case, of Mr Des-Lyons [Z]. Note, that the Place, where he died, is unknown. It is believed tius's School, This Doctor, so ever dreaded, and revered, who exhausts the whole Force of his Pen against them, Arnould, I say, the Great Arnould, writes my Apology. My Muse, inscribe this Event in Letters of Gold on his future Tomb. Fetch from the distant East, where Aurora, rising, salutes the Hyades, the most precious Jasper, to engrave it. But be particularly careful to display it to my Rivals.

TO

[U] If the reading of bad Books could produce the same Effect in the Minds of all young Persons, as it did in his, it would not be amiss to recommend it to them. This is his own Account of this Matter. "I remember to have formerly read (when I was very young) in a Book, entitled, if I remember right, The Muses Rally'd, something very wicked on this Subject. The Poet glories in having obtained, what he could not ask without a Crime; and the Reason he gives for obtaining his Desire is altogether abominable. It was, Because, says he, the Lady had too solid a Judgment, not to look upon Those old Stories of Honour, which arise in the Brains of married Men and Mothers, as meer Chimeras. I am certain, that what is here in Italic was in His Verses. For I was so greatly shocked at it, that it has ever since remained in my Mind. This Poet, then, must have supposed, that nothing but the Consideration of Honour could have prevented This Lady's satisfying his Desires; and that she had got over This Consideration by the Force of Reason (94)."

(94) Arnould's Cinquieme de noncation du peche philosophique, pag. 57, 58.

[Y] The Court of Rome did, at last, acknowledge his Merit. Pope Clement X, having read some of Mr Arnould's Works, commended them extremely, and declared, that the Author would do him a great Pleasure, if he would send him Copies of them, or deliver them to his Nuncio (95). Cardinal Altieri, who had shewed the Pope these Books, could not sufficiently commend the Author, and often concluded his Praises with this honourable Testimony: Mr Arnould has done the Church great Service; it were to be wished, that Death would never deprive it of such a Man. — De Ecclesia optime meritis est Arnouldus; optandum esset, ut talem virum mors illi nunquam ereptura esset (96). The Esteem and Affection of Innocent XI for This Doctor is not unknown to the Public. See the Letter, which he caused to be written to him by Cardinal Cibo, the second of January, 1677; it is printed at the end of the Letter, which Mr Arnould wrote to the Bishop of Malaga, the second of December, 1683. There is also a Letter of Mr Favoriti, That Pope's Secretary, dated from Rome the third of April, 1680, which contains great Commendations of him, and lively Expressions of the Pope's Grief, on account of the Persecutions of Mr Arnould (97). He had an Intention of promoting him to the Purple; and it was wholly the Doctor's Fault, that it was not done, "De Arnaldo in purpuratum Procerum Ordinem adlegendo aliquando Sanctitatem suam committit, est certum est; pluribus notum, nollem

(95) Prefat.
Cause Arnould, p. LXX.

(96) Ibid.
pag. LX.

(97) Ibid.

"tamen hic commemorare, nisi Eminentissimus Cardinalis intimorum Romanæ Aulæ consiliorum testis locuples, id nuper Parisiis evulgasset, afferissetque per unum Arnaldum stetit quominus is Eminentissima illa dignitate ornaretur (98). — Though the Intention of his Holiness to have made Arnould a Cardinal be certain, and known to many, yet I should have taken no Notice of it here, had not a very Eminent Cardinal, who is perfectly acquainted with the Councils of the Court of Rome, of late publicly declared it at Paris, and asserted, that Arnould might, if he pleased, have been invested with That high Dignity." Alexander VIII, who had a great Kindness and Esteem for Mr Arnould, before he was Pope, did not alter his Dispositions, after he was raised to St Peter's Chair. He granted him some Favours, and would have done him many more, if he had lived longer, and Mr Arnould had given him Opportunities of doing it (99).

(98) Ibid.
pag. LXXI.

Take notice, that the Bishop of Malaga caused almost all the Copies of the first Edition of his Querimonia Catholica to be burnt, as soon as he understood, that, without his Privy, Mr Arnould was called an Heretic in it. He, who burnt the Copies with his own Hand, gave a formal Attestation of this (100).

(99) Ibid.
pag. LXXII.

(100) Ibid.
pag. LXXIV.

[Z] He swerved a little from the strait Path, in an Affair, which gave occasion to a Fatum, or Case, of Mr Des-Lyons. A Niece of Mr Des-Lyons, Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Dean of Sensis, dexterously engaged Mr Arnould in a Conduict, not altogether to his Honour. She sued her Father; and Arnould patronized her in the Suit as much as possible. This did not become a rigid Calvinist. Besides, she was so whimsical in her Devotions, and of so wrong a Turn, that Mr Arnould had but little of That Faculty, which is called The Discernment of Spirits, when he suffered himself to be deceived by This Hypocrite. Mr Jurieu, who had heard of the Fatum of Mr Des-Lyons, passionately desired to procure a Copy of it, and applied several Times to a Person, who might have lent it him. He chiefly employed the Bookseller's (101) Intercession, who printed his Justification of the Morality of the Reformed, at the Hague, in the Year 1685. This was applying himself to a proper Person; for, if any one could have obtained it, it was doubtless This Bookseller; but The Person, who had the Fatum in his Hands, would never part with it to a Writer, whom he knew disposed to draw from it whatever new Matter he could for Insult, and Invective. He was not ignorant, in what manner This Author poisoned every thing, when the Business was to pull Mr Arnould to pieces. Observe the Artifice of Mr Jurieu! Having failed this way, he would persuade the Public, that he set no Value on the Advantage he might have made of This Fatum, and had even been so moderate, as voluntarily to renounce it. These are his Words; "To convince the World, that we are not very solicitous in enquiring after every thing, which may serve to render Mr Arnould odious, we omit all that the Fatum of Mr Des-Lyons might have supplied us with against him (102)." There are several Falshoods in Prefaces, which pass

(101) He is alive, and perfectly in Health; and any one may require of him, whether I speak the Truth. I wrote this on the 2d of April, 1699.

(102) Jurieu's Preface to the Justification de la Morale des Reformez. Paris, chez la Hague, 1685.

to be a Village in the Country of Leige. It is still less known, where he was buried; and this is one point of Conformity, which his Friends have observed, between His Fate, and That of Moses (q). He desired, that his Heart might be carried to Port-Royal (r). This was accordingly done; but Mr Santeuil's Verses on this Subject raised a furious War [AA]; which gave great Diversion to several Persons. There for venial Sins, not only at the Bar of the Republic of Letters, but even at the Bar of the Church; but This can plead Privilege at neither of These Tribunals. The Jesuits did not let the Fatum of Mr Des-Lyons fall to the Ground; they maliciously weighed the Circumstances of it, and drew Matter of much Reflexion and Railery from it. See a Piece, which is supposed to have come from Father le Tellier, and which appeared in the Year 1688, entitled; An Apologetical Letter for Mr Arnauld, written to an Abbot, a Friend of His, on three of the last Books, which were written against That Doctor. I. The Esprit de Mr Arnauld. II. Observations on the New Defence of the French Translation of the New Testament printed at Mons. III. An Answer of Mr Des-Lyons, Doctor of the Sorbonne, Dean and Prebend of Senlis, to Mr Arnauld's Letters.

(r) Perrault's Illustrations Men, p. 57.

WAS

[AA] Mr Santeuil's Verses on this Subject raised a furious War.] The Ladies of Port-Royal received Mr Arnauld's Heart, "with all imaginable Transports of Joy, and deposited it in the most honourable Place they could think of. The Heart being thus disposed of, an Epitaph was wanting. No Person was thought more capable of writing one, than Mr Santeuil. — As the Business was of a delicate Nature, the Nuns considered, that they must take Mr Santeuil at an Advantage. For this Purpose, they invited him to come and pass a few Days at Port-Royal, with one of his Brethren, who was its Superior (103); and, during his Abode there, he composed the following Verses.

Ad Sanctas rediit sedes ejectus & exul:
Hosce triumphato, tot tempestatibus actus,
Hoc portu in placido, hac sacra tellure quiescit,
Arnauldus, veri defensor, & arbiter æqui.
Illius ossa memor sibi vindicet externa tellus;
Huc cœlestis amor rapidis cor transtulit alis,
Cor nunquam avulsam, nec amatis sedibus absens (104).

Mr de la Fêmas gave this French Translation of it.

Enfin, après un long voyage,
Arnauld revient en ces saints lieux:
Il est au Port malgré les envieux,
Qui croyoient qu'il seroit naufrage.
Ce Martir de la vérité
Fut banni, fut persécuté,
Et mourut en terre étrangère;
Heureuse, de son corps d'être depositaire,
Mais son cœur toujours ferme, & toujours innocent,
Fut porté par l'amour, à qui tout est possible,
Dans cette retraite paisible,
D'où jamais il ne fut absent (105).

In English thus.

Here rests in ballowed Earth, secure from Spight, Arnauld, great Arbitrer of Truth and Right;
Arriv'd in Port, and landed safe on Shore,
The Fox subdued, and the wild Tempest o'er.
Tho' in some distant Land his Bones be laid,
His Heart, on rapid Wings by Love convey'd, Enjoys the dear Retreat, from which it never strays'd.

No sooner were these two Pieces printed together, and dispersed in the World, but the Jesuits complained of Mr Santeuil's Proceedings. — He turned a deaf Ear to them, flattering himself, that the Murmurs, then raised, would insensibly die of themselves (106). But, finding himself attacked in a Piece, supposed to be sent out of the Country (107), — he began to think of making Satisfaction. "He was Thunder-struck, and ran immediately to the Jesuits College, to beg Pardon in the most humble and moving Terms, conjuring all Those he met with not to undo him; that he had always been a Friend to the Society, and that the Epitaph in question was not His, but had been forged in his Name by his Enemies, to ruin him with the Jesuits. They replied, that they wished what he said were true, but that bare Protections were not sufficient; and that he must undeceive the Public by an authentic Confession; which they required of him, as an Earnest of his Sincerity. He promised all they would have him; but the Difficulty was how to perform his Promise (108). The Flattering Panegyric, which he wrote, on their Society, did not serve his turn (109); they perceived, "the little Artifice, he made use of, to elude his Promise; they treated him as a double Dealer, and a Knave; in a Word, he found himself overwhelmed with Epigrams, which came pouring upon him from all Parts; and in which the young Jesuits of the College, whom he somewhere calls Pubes Jesuitica Sagittaria, had no small Share. On the other hand, the Jansenists took no less Offence at his Cowardice, than the Jesuits at his Insincerity; and they gave him Marks of it, in a Piece in Burlesque Verse, which they published against him, and which begins, Santeuil, ce renommé Poëte, &c.

Santeuil, That far fam'd Bard, &c.

"Thus he found himself sadly out in his Reckoning, and perceived, that, by endeavouring to keep fair with all the World, he had disoblged all." Having thoroughly considered the whole Affair, He resolv'd to sacrifice the Jansenists to the Jesuits, and made an humble Confession of his Fault to These, by Letter; but This would not satisfy them; they demanded a Recantation (110). He was pestered with Epigram upon Epigram, which he received Day after Day (111). He wrote a Letter to Father la Chaise, in which he interpreted some Terms of the Epitaph in the softest manner he could. The Answer, he received from this Jesuit, encreased his Disquiet (112). He was obliged to think of a second Apology (113). The Tenderest Point, and That, in which all the Difficulty lay, was his having said of Mr Arnauld;

— Istus illo fulmine (Vaticano)

Trabeate Doctor, jam mihi non amplius Arnalde, faperes.

"That is; If you had been struck with the Thunder of the Vatican, I should absolutely have disclaimed you. Now this was saying nothing at all. The Jesuits would have had him put Sapias, instead of Saperes (for all was brought to the Text, before the Copies were printed off). To have put Sapias would have been to have declared Mr Arnauld excommunicated and condemned. One of his Friends, with whom he advised about it, gave him a Hint for finding out a Medium between Saperes and Sapias; which was to put Sapias, which might equally be taken in the sense of the other two Words; but he found, that he could not give up the Saperes, without offending the Jansenists. At last, after long Deliberation, he resolv'd to please each Party as near as possible. He got two kinds of Copies printed; in some of which was Sapias, for the Jesuits; telling them, viva voce, that he took it in the sense of the Sapias; and Saperes in the others, "to please the Jansenists." To this he added an Explanation of some other Parts of the Epitaph. But he neither satisfied the Jesuits, nor the Jansenists. The latter published a very bitter Piece against him (114), and the latter attacked him no less vigorously. At last Father Commire entered the Lists. He had lain by hitherto, as a Body of Reserve, "but at last ap-

(108) History of the Troubles, caused by Mr Arnauld, after his Death.

(109) Ibid. p. 10.

(103) History of the Troubles, caused by Mr Arnauld, after his Death; or The Quarrel between Mr Santeuil and the Jesuits, p. 8. 5. Edit. 1696.

(104) Ibid. p. 40.

(105) Ibid. p. 41.

(106) Ibid. p. 7.

(107) Entitled, Santeuil's Vindictatus.

(114) Entitled, Santeuil's Pontifical History of the Troubles, &c. p. 20.

was a great Clamour raised against the Jesuits, for procuring an Order, that Mr Perrault should be obliged to suppress the Sheet, in which he celebrated Mr Arnauld, in his Collection of the Portraits and Elogies of the Illustrious Men of the French Nation [B B]. I must not forget the Esteem, which this Doctor of the Sorbonne gained with (114) Ibid.

P. 33.

"peared in the Field of Battle; and, to break off a Dispute, which there was no end of, and to prevent Mr Santeuil from so often contradicting himself, he seized him, and put a Gag in his Mouth, which has ever since been very troublesome to him. "I mean the Linguarium, which all the Learned ascribe to This great Poet (115)." A Poet of the University, and no Friend to the Jesuits, entered the Lists, and wrote a Piece entitled Santuius pendens, Santeuil on the Gibbet. It is One of the best, which appeared during This long Poetical War. I think Three Accounts have appeared of this Quarrel: I have not seen the first; That, which I have quoted, is the second: The third is of the Year 1697, and posterior to the Death of Mr Santeuil: It contains the Letters, which were written to This Poet by several Jesuits, and differs from the second in some Circumstances.

(116) Ibid.
P. 3: 4.

It is certain, that This Quarrel made a great noise; for which reason the Author of the Relation thought himself obliged to make use of this Preamble (116). "It is the Fate of Those, who have occasioned great Troubles in their Life-time, to occasion others after their Death. That of Alexander did not extinguish the War in Asia; on the contrary, it broke out again with greater fury, thro' the Ambition of his Lieutenants, who long disputed the Crown. "Something like this happened to Mr Arnauld; if it be proper to compare a Doctor with a Conqueror. His Death, which seemingly ought to have put an end to all the Troubles, he had occasioned in his Life-time, on the contrary raised new ones. Every one knows, in how unworthy a manner the Jansenists exclaimed against an Holy

(117) The Alce of la Trappe.

Abbot (117), for explaining himself too freely on this Occasion, and saying, with regard to the great Head of a Party, which fell in the Person of Mr Arnauld, Happy is He, who has no other than Jesus. CHRIST. This was what the first News of Mr Arnauld's Death produced. But, his Heart being afterwards carried back to France, could not re-enter it without scattering still farther Seeds of Dissention, by the Quarrel, which it occasioned between Mr Santeuil and the Jesuits. Many will here recollect a Complaint of Balzac against Father Gaul's Epitaph (118); but if the Jesuits, on the one side, might say, that the very Tomb of Mr Arnauld insulted them, the Jansenists might exclaim, on the other, that They did not suffer this Divine to rest even in his Grave.

(118) See Remark [M], of the Article P. GOULU, General of the Bernardine Mendicants.

Et ce n'est pas assez de paier en la vie,
Il faut encor paier au dela du trepas (119).

Even Death from farther Payment cannot save;
The Debt must be discharged beyond the Grave.

(119) These are two Lines of the Opera, which was acted in 1674, entitled, as I take it, Le Triomphe d'Alceste. — The Triumph of Alceste.

(120) Letter of a Lady of Quality to another learned Lady, p. 24, 25.

[B B] Mr Perrault was obliged to suppress the Sheet, &c.] The following Passage we meet with in a Letter, published in the Year 1697 (120). "Mr Perrault, of the Academy, has presented the Public with a Book intitled, The Elogies of the Illustrious Men of this Reign. Mr Arnauld and Monf. Pascal justly had a Place in it. Baptiste, and Moliere, hold their Rank in it, as illustrious Persons of their kind: The Book was printed by Authority; the Portraits engraved. It was to have been published four Months ago; but the Fathers Jesuits have applied so strongly to the higher Powers, that they have ordered the Author and Bookfeller to retrench Monsieur Arnauld and Monsieur Pascal's Articles, and suppress their Elogies. — Monsieur Arnauld was one of the greatest Men of This Age: He did the Church service in opposing Calvinism, and defending the Faith of the Eucharist. He lived and died in the Communion of the Church, and in perfect Obedience to the Holy See, which would certainly have rewarded his great Deserts, if the profound Humility of This learned Person had not several Times made him refuse one of the most eminent Dignities of the Church. Moliere lived impiously, and died excommunicated, like a Reprobate: In "the mean time Monsieur Arnauld is struck out of the Number of Illustrious Men, and Moliere holds his Rank among them." Such Reflexions were made all over France, and in foreign Countries; and what Tacitus said, on the Statues of Cassius and Brutus not appearing at Junia's Funeral, was not forgot on this Occasion; Præfulgebant Cassius atque Brutus eo ipso quod effigies eorum non visibantur (121). — Cassius and Brutus outshone the rest for this very Reason, because their Statues were not exposed. This Thought was applied to Messrs. Arnauld and Pascal. The Verses, which were made on this Occasion, have been spread all the World over; for they have been inserted in the Nouvelles Historiques & Politiques, printed every Month at the Hague. Let us add, that several were of Opinion, that the Jesuits did not act over prudently in this Affair; since the surest way to draw the Eyes and Attention of the Public on These two famous Persons, was to oblige Mr Perrault to suppress their Elogies and Portraits. This Conduct served only to enhance the Merit, which it strove to efface; it led directly to the Passage of Tacitus; and could only occasion Exclamations, and Censures, in favour of the Persons suppress'd, and against the Instruments of their Suppression. But all are not agreed as to the supposed Imprudence in this Point: Skillful Persons have maintained, that the Faction, which all along oppos'd Mr Arnauld, did nothing but what favoured of the justest and most refined Policy. What! say they; do you think Tiberius did not foresee the Reflexions, which would be made, on his not exposing the Statues of Brutus and Cassius, among so many others, in a Funeral Ceremony? He knew the Advantage, which their Absence might give them; but thought the Inconvenience greater in letting these two Assassins of Julius Cæsar appear among the Images of his Family; this would have been in some measure vindicating their Memory; and it was not his Interest to make the least step that way. There is no question, but the Jesuits likewise foresaw the Advantage, which Mr Perrault's suppressing the Elogies of these two great Men would give them. But, all things considered, they thought this would be a much less Inconvenience to themselves, than the giving the opposite Faction room to make their Advantage of Mr Arnauld and Mr Pascal's appearing, with Privilege, on the Theatre of Illustrious Men. By procuring them to be struck out, they armed themselves with a new AG, which might be useful in the Course of the Process: They kept them in Disgrace; and prevented any one's alledging the Licence, obtained by Mr Perrault, as a Proof of their being restored; but, what was more considerable, the Public was prevented from imagining, that the Jesuits had not the same Credit as formerly. The Public would scarce conclude, that, if the Characters and Elogies of These two Gentlemen had full liberty to appear in a privileged Book, it was because the Jesuits had no Inclination to make any Opposition to it. It would be much more natural to think, that it was out of their Power to prevent it. Now such an Opinion is to be guarded against; the Effects of it may be of ill Consequence; for the Influence of Reputation is of great Efficacy, either in advancing or retarding Events. Who knows not, that, in Matters of Trade, a Merchant, who passes for rich, and is not so, is generally more successful, than One, who is really rich, but passes for poor? All other Conditions of human Life are the same in this respect. If it be Imprudence to engage in certain things, it is still greater Imprudence to abandon them, after having once engaged in them. Upon the whole, Honour and Glory are here both concerned. This Principle is no less active in the Wars at the Bar, than in those properly so called (122). Lastly, every one knows, that, in all Suits of great Importance, each Party provides against all the Proceedings of the other. Good Policy, then, required, that They should not, by their Silence, acquiesce in any Proceedings of the Jansenists. They were to guard against Epitaphs, and the Authors of Elogies, the better to maintain the grand Process, and sup-

(121) Tacit.
Annal. Lib.
III, in fine.

(122) Marcellus multa magni ductibus sicut non aggreddenda, ita semel aggreffus non dimittenda esse dicendo, quia magna fame momenta in utranque partem fiunt, tunc ne incipio abire. — Marcellus confirmed him in his Undertaking, by saying, that, many things, as they ought not to be undertaken by great Generals, so, when once undertaken, are not to be dropped. Titus Livius, lib. IV, Decad III.

Mr Des Cartes [CC]. I have heard some, who were admitted to an Intimacy with him, say, that he was of great Plainness of Manners, and that, unless some Question was proposed to him, or some Information desired, he said nothing out of the Road of common Conversation [DD], or which might create a Suspicion of his being a learned Man; but, when he was obliged to answer Those, who put him upon some Point of Learning, he seemed to be quite another Man; he said an hundred fine Things, with all the readiness imaginable, and had a particular Gift of making himself intelligible to the meanest Capacity. I propose, in part of my Work (1), to insert a Letter, which it is supposed the King wrote to him, in the Year 1678. By the way, They, who were the occasion of his resolving on a voluntary Exile, lost more than they gained by it; for he never wrote against them in Paris, but religiously observed the Conditions of Peace; till seeing himself driven by force out of the Kingdom, he published a great number of Pieces, which have done the Jesuits no small Prejudice (1). It is pretended, that he became the Apostle of Jansenism in Holland [EE].

(1) See Remarques [1.] of the Article YPRES.

(1) See the Abridged History of his Life, pag. 179.

port the Discussion of the Problem, or Curious Enquiry, whether Mr Arnauld be an Heretic; a strange Question indeed, and which some Roman Catholics affirm, and others deny daily, with Impunity. This shews, there is a Source of Anarchy in the State of Man, which can never be wholly rectified. It is chiefly to be seen in Ecclesiastical Bodies; for, since the Church of Rome has not the Secret of determining between the Affirmative and the Negative, what other Church can ever expect to have it? Other Churches have not, like That, Tribunals, which are acknowledged to be infallible. They are not governed with such an Air of Authority, and high Reputation, as That is. It is, therefore, less to be wondered at, that the Protestant Ministers accuse each other of Heresy in printed Books, than that a Doctor of the Sorbonne should be torn to pieces, as an Heretic, by the Faction of the Molinists, whilst three Popes honoured him with their Friendship, Esteem, and Praises, and the most famous Prelates set their solemn Approbations at the Head of his Works. It is near fifty Years, since this Dispute began (123); and there is still as much room as ever to deny or affirm. Protestant Controversies are not of such long Continuance. They are generally adjusted after three or four Pamphlets of a Side, and the Reputation of Orthodoxy, which they would take from each other, is secured to both. But even this smells a little of Anarchy, and of That State of Nature, in which the Aggressor has nothing more to fear, than the Resistance of the Attacked, and not the Punishment of a common Judge. Bodies Politic are not subject to such Disorders. No one is permitted to call another Knave, or Rascal; Thief, Traitor, Murderer, Prostitute, or Liar (124). Reputation is here something better fixed.

(123) This dispute lasted in 1699.

(124) This must be understood with regard to publick Accusations.

For the rest, the Suppression, enjoined Mr Perrault, hindered not, but that the Copies of his Book, published in Holland, contained the Elogies of Medicurs Arnauld and Pascal. It only occasioned some small Confusion in the figuring the Pages, which the Edition of Holland has set right.

[CC] The Esteem, which Mr Arnauld gained with Mr Des Cartes.] He was the Author of four Objections against This Philosopher's Speculations; and they are judged by all to be the solidest, that have been proposed against That Work. Mr Des Cartes himself gave this Judgment of them: see his Life composed by Mr Baillet (125). I must observe, that Mr Arnauld had taught the same Philosophy at Paris, with That of Mr Des Cartes, before the latter had published his first Essays (126). So that he was as falsely called a Cartesian, as a Jansenist. Read what follows: "He had fetched his Opinion of Grace from the Source; that is, from St Austin's Works, before ever the Book of Mr d'Ypres appeared.

(125) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. 2. pag. 174, &c. See also Perrault's Illustrations Men, pag. 57, 58.

(126) Id. ib. pag. 543. See also pag. 528.

"He had publicly maintained them, in the Presence of Bishops, four or five Years before That Prelate's Book was published (127). He had embraced them without so much as knowing, that Jansenius was writing on Grace ———." Scarce did he know, that there was such a Man, as Jansenius, in the World (128).

[DD] He said nothing out of the Road of common Conversation.] This must be understood with some Restriction; otherwise it cannot be reconciled with what we find in the Account of his Life; we there meet with some Hours of Conversation after Meals, in which much was to be learned from him; because, being qualified for Reflexion, he always made such as were very solid, either on human Events, on the Conduct of Life, on the Rules of Morality, or on Matters of Learning, and public Affairs. These Conversations were often employed in perusing new Books; and he always judged so rightly of them, that the Opinion he gave (tho' rarely with a decisive Air) was decisive of itself, and without Appeal. His Memory, as things were read or spoken in Company, supplied him always with something of what the best Authors had said on the same Subject: And it was surprizing to hear him repeat a great number of Latin, and French, Verses, which he had read only in his Youth, or several Years before. He was a Master of the Latin Poets, and applied the finest Passages of them with great Justness, and a great Presence of Mind, according as occasion offered in Conversation (129). Let us say, then, that his Conversation was plain and vulgar, only when he was with Persons, who were not intimate with him, or who did not engage him by their Questions to exert his Talents.

(127) Abridged History of Mr Arnauld, pag. 35.

(128) Ibid. pag. 31.

(129) Ibid. p. 287, 288.

[EE] It is pretended, that he became the Apostle of Jansenism in Holland.] There appeared a small Book (130) in the Year 1698, in which it is affirmed (131), that Mr Arnauld "having wandered for some time in the Catholic Netherlands, at last took Refuge in Holland. Mr Neerkassel, Bishop of Castoria, and Apostolical Vicar in the United Provinces, received him as a Man of God, and lodged him in his Nunnery of Delft; where Mr Arnauld lived some Years without being known to any, but his intimate Friends. In this Place he governed the Mind of That Prelate absolutely, who took great delight in recommending all the young Divines, in whom he discovered any Genius, to Him for Instruction. His most constant Companions were Mr de Coddæ, the present Archbishop of Sebastia, and Successor of the Bishop of Castoria in the Apostolical Vicarship; Mr van Hussen ——— So that Jansenism in Holland proceeded, properly speaking, from the Nunnery of Delft, about the Year 1698.

(130) Intituled Memoirs concerning the Progress of Jansenism in Holland.

(131) Pages 8, and 5.

ARNGRIMUS, a learned Man, and a Native of Iceland. Look for JONAS.

ARNISÆUS (HENNINGUS) born at Halberstadt, and Professor of Physic in the University of Helmstadt, was a Philosopher, and Physician, very much esteemed towards the beginning of the XVIIth Century. His Political Works are in great Repute, in which he has established a Tenet directly opposite to That of Althufsius [A]. He was invited to Denmark, and went thither; where he had the Honour to be

(1) See the Article ALTHUSIUS. VOL. I.

[A] He established, in his Political Works, a Tenet directly opposite to That of Althufsius (1). For he maintained, that the Authority of Princes ought never to be violated by the People. See his Book de Autoritate

(a) Witte, in Diario Biogr. ad Ann. 1635.

(b) Arniseus, Præf. libr. de Jure Majest.

be the King's Counsellor, and Physician (a). The University of Helmstadt lost greatly by this Retreat [B]. It is falsely pretended, that he was Professor at Jena [C], and that he left his Library to the University of That Place. It might have been said, without a Falshood, that he read Lectures in the University of Frankfort on the Oder, before he read Any in That of Helmstadt (b). He had travelled into France and England (c). He died in the Month of November 1635 (d). I shall give the Titles of several of his Works [D].

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Witte, ubi supra.

(2) Bofius de comparanda Prudentia Civili, n. 2.

(3) Boeclerus in Grot. de Jure Belli & Pacis, lib. I. cap. 3. n. VIII. pag. 236.

(4) Id. ib.

(5) Grot. de Imperio Summar. Potestatum circa Sacra, cap. III. n. 8.

(6) Conring. de Civili Prudentia, cap. 14.

(7) Id. in Dedicat. Exercit. de Rep. Imperii German.

ritate Principum in populum semper inviolabili, printed at Frankfort, in the Year 1612. See also his three Books of Jure Majestatis, printed at the same Place in 1610, and his Prælectiones Politicæ, printed also at Frankfort, in the Year 1615. He did not finish this last Piece, which however appeared to be very fine. Opus præclarum, sed imperfectum (2). He gave a Catalogue of Those, who have maintained, that the Sovereignty resided in the People; a most pernicious Doctrine, in the Opinion of Boeclerus, and the Hinge of Rebellion. A fatali hoc & pestilenti errore — suspensa est omnis illa rebellandi licentia, quam variis vocabulis præscribit (3). Boeclerus adds, that it is a deplorable Consideration, that there are very great Men in This List, and remarks the different Passions, which lead them to take this Side. "Patrons & Præcones nefariæ philosophiæ recentis fuit Arniseus principio libri de auctoritate principum in populum semper inviolabili. Fuisset in illis magnos viros, dolendum: quorum aliquos animus arrogans, elatus, indomitus, ad fingendam & pingendam libertatem stoico supercilio forte impulserit: alios metus oppressionis & tyrannidis eo evibraverit, ut potestatem civilem bene constitutam negarent, nisi populo subjiaceret: nonnullis commentitæ sapientiæ species placuerit, ut tali tanquam terribiliamento reges, ne in tyrannidem elaberentur, retentatos cuperent" (4). — Arniseus, in the beginning of his Book, Of the Inviolable Authority of Princes over the People, reckons up the Patrons and Preachers of the contrary wicked Doctrine. It is melancholy to consider, that there are many great Men among Them; some of whom, perhaps, were prompted, by an Arrogant, Elate, Unconquerable Disposition, to conceive and describe Liberty with all the Pride of Stoicism; others were driven, by the fear of Oppression and Tyranny, to deny any Government to be well constituted, which is not subject to the People; and some were pleased with a kind of pretended Philosophy, which taught them, that Kings should be kept in Awe, lest they degenerate into Tyrants." If such a Catalogue were to be made in this present Year 1699, it would be much larger; for the Doctrine of the Supreme Authority of the People is of late grown into Fashion. Grotius praises a Political Piece of Arniseus very highly (5).

[B] The University of Helmstadt lost much by His Retreat. This is testified by Conringius, who styles Arniseus, æternum Julii Academiæ & incomparabile ornamentum (6). — The Perpetual and Inimitable Ornament of the Julian Academy. "Vir incomparabilis, jays he, in another Book (7), à quo civilis philosophiæ in Academiâ Julia, ut alibi nusquam, fuit exulta, & simul Imperii quoque, ut aliarum Rerum publicarum veterum recentumque, historia etiam ipsarum quidem, accurate tamen satis est inculcata — illius in Daniam discessu simul utrumque hoc studiorum genus fuerit heic quasi confesultum. — An Incomparable Man; who

"caligated Politics in the University of Helmstadt, beyond what it had ever been elsewhere; and, at the same Time, inculcated the History of the Empire, as also of other Republics both ancient and modern, accurately enough, though scattered here and there. — By his Departure to Denmark both these kind of Studies were at once buried in this University."

[C] It is falsely pretended, that he was Professor at Jena. This we find in an Edition of a Work of Bofius, de comparanda prudentia civili. But This Edition was disclaimed by Bofius's Widow. See the Advertisement, which she inserted at the beginning of this Book, when she published it free from the Errors, which disfigured the former Edition.

[D] The Titles of several of his Works. Besides the Poetical Treatises, which I have already mentioned (8), he wrote a Book of Subjectione & Exemptione Clericorum — Of the Subjection and Exemption of the Clergy: Another of potestate temporali Pontificis in Principes — Of the Temporal Authority of the Pope over Princes: Another of Translatione Imperii Romani — Of the Translation of the Roman Empire: Another of Repubblica — Of Civil Society: Another of Jure Connubiorum (9). — Of the Rights of Marriage: The Title of another is Doctrina Politica in genuinum methodum, quæ est Aristotelis, reducia & ex probatissimis quibusque Philosophis, Oratoribus, Jurisconsultis, Historicis, &c. breviter comperta & explicata (10). — Political Institutes reduced to Aristotle's Method, and briefly compiled and explained from the most approved Philosophers, Orators, Lawyers, Historians, &c. He wrote also on Physic: His Observationes aliquot Anatomicæ — Some Anatomical Observations; were printed at Frankfort in the Year 1610, in 4to. His Dispute de Lue Venerea cognoscenda & curanda — Of the Knowledge and Cure of the Venereal Disease; was printed the same Year at Oppenheim, in 4to. I do not know the date of the first Edition of his Disquisitiones de partibus humani legitimis terminis — Enquiries into the lawful Bounds of Human Birth; nor of his Books of Preservatione à peste — Of a Preservative against the Plague: de Hydropum essentia & curatione — Of the Essence and Cure of Dropsies: de apoplexia & epilepsia cognoscendis & curandis (11). — Of the Knowledge and Cure of the Apoplexy and Epilepsy. As for his Philosophical Writings, we are to know, that he wrote Annotations on Crellius's Logic: Epitome Metaphysicæ ad mentem Aristotelis — An Abridgement of Metaphysics according to the Principles of Aristotle: De constitutione & partibus Metaphysicæ — Of the Constitution and Parts of Metaphysics: Vindicia pro Aristotele de subiecto Metaphysicæ & Natura Entis — Aristotle vindicated on the Subject of Metaphysics, and the Nature of Being: Disputationes viii Metaphysicæ — Eight Metaphysical Disputations: Epitome doctrinæ Physicæ — An Epitome of Natural Philosophy.

(8) In Remark [A].

(9) See the Diarium Biograph. of Witte ad Ann. 1635.

(10) See Linæus renovatus, pag. 390.

(11) Witte, ubi supra.

(a) See Remark [A].

(1) Hieron. in Chronico Ecclesiæ ad Ann. II. Cap. p. 276.

ARNOBIUS, Professor of Rhetoric, at Sicca, in Numidia, towards the end of the III^d Century, was brought over to the Profession of Christianity by Dreams (a). He applied himself to the Bishops for admission into the Church; but They, remembering how violently he had always opposed the true Faith, distrusted him, and, before his admission into the Number of Catechumens, would have him give Proofs of his Sincerity [A]. To satisfy them, he wrote a Book against the Gentiles, where-

in

[A] The Bishops—before his Admission into the Number of Catechumens, would have him give Proofs of his Sincerity. St Jerom furnishes us with these Particulars. Arnobius Rhetor, jays he (1), clarus in Africa habitur: qui quum in civitate Siccæ ad declamandum juvenes erudiret, & adhuc Ethnicus ad credulitatem somniti compelleretur, neque ab Episcopo impetraret fidem quam semper impugnaverat, elucubravit

"adversus pristinam religionem luculentissimos libros, & tandem velut quibuscum obfidibus pietatis fœdus impetravit. — Arnobius is a famous Rhetorician of Africa; this Person taught Oratory in the City of Sicca, and was converted from Heathenism by Dreams; but being distrusted by the Bishops, as having hitherto opposed the Faith, he wrote an excellent Work against his former Religion, and, at last, upon in he very powerfully confuted the Absurdity of their Religion, and the Ridiculousness of their false Gods. He employed all the Flowers of his Rhetoric, and displayed much Learnings, in it; but, as he had a laudable Impatience to be admitted into the Body of the Faithful, He made a little too much haste in composing this Work [B]; which is the true Reason, why It is not so justly and beautifully disposed, as could be wished. The worst is, that, not having a full Knowledge of the Christian Truths, he vented very dangerous Errors [C]. It is not known what became of him afterwards, nor at what time he died. His Work contains Seven Books, and

"upon giving these Hostages of his Sincerity, was admitted to the Peace of the Church." He was looked upon as an Enemy, who had a Mind to enter into a Treaty of Peace; but, before the Conclusion of it, they expected Security for his good Behaviour; Hostages were demanded, and he gave them: These were Seven Invectives against the Pagans: He was afterwards looked upon as a good Brother; and received into the Peace of the Church.

[B] He made a little too much haste in composing this Work.] Let us Comment upon this by a Passage of Baronius. "Quod verò opus illud, ut inter Fideles admitteretur, quasi fidei suæ vadem festinus absolvit; hinc plane est quod in eo (ut ait Hieronymus) fuisse visus est inæqualis & nimius, & absque operis sui partitione confusus. Rursus, verò quod nondum plene esset scientia rerum Christianarum imbutus, utpote cum non solum non fuerit baptismate illustratus, sed nec in Ecclesiam inter catechumenos acceptus; venia dignus est, si aliquibus nævis visus esset commentarius ille esse reperiendus (2). — The Reason of that Inequality, Prolixity, and Confusion, which St Jerom observed in this Work, which he wrote as a Pledge of his Faith, in order to be admitted among the Faithful, was the haste, with which he composed it. Again, if this Commentary be interspersed with some Errors, the Author may in excuse say, that he had not as yet a full Knowledge of Christianity, having neither been enlightened by Baptism, nor received into the Church among the Catechumens (3)."

[C] He vented very dangerous Errors.] We have just seen, that Baronius imputes the Heterodoxy of the Seven Books of Arnobius to the Precipitation, with which they were written: For the Author could not defer writing them, 'till he had leisure to be better instructed in all the Points of the Christian Faith. The Annalist would have us excuse the Errors of Arnobius, as being of no Consequence; but it is certain, that the Inquisition would, at this Day, condemn Those to be burnt, who should publish such Doctrines. I own, we ought to make great Allowances for Arnobius; but it is no less true, that his Opinions concerning the Origin of the Soul, and the Cause of Natural Evil, together with some other capital Matters, are very pernicious. This I have observed elsewhere (4). In regard to our Mysteries, he might have pleaded what Persius confesses with Regard to Poetry, that he ventured to write, before he understood his Subject.

Nec fonte labra prolui Caballino:
Nec in bicipiti somniaffai Parnasso Memini, ut repente sic Poëta prodirem.
Heliconidasque, pallidamque Pyrenen
Illis remitto, quorum imagines lambunt
Hederæ sequaces. Ipse semipaganus
Ad sacra Vatum carmen afferro nostrum (5).

I never did on cleft Parnassus Dream,
Nor taste the sacred Heliconian Stream;
Nor can remember when my Brain inspired
Was by the Muses into Madness fired.
My Share in pale Pyrene I resign,
And claim no part in all the mighty Nine.
Statues, with winding Ivy crown'd, belong
To nobler Poets, for a nobler Song:
Headless of Verse, and hopeless of the Crown,
Scarce half a Wit, and more than half a Clown,
Before the Shrine I lay my rugged Numbers down.

DRYDEN.

Read here Mr Du Pin's Judgment. "It is plain he was not as yet thoroughly instructed in the Mysteries of our Religion. He attacks the Religion of the Pagans more solidly, than he defends That of the Christians. He discovers the Folly of Paganism more happily, than he proves the Truth of Christianity. But this ought not to be thought strange; for it is common to all new Converts, who, being as yet full of their own Religion, are better able to detect the Errors and Folly of it, than to display the Proofs and Excellency of That, which they embrace (6)." I meet with no Author, who speaks so tenderly of Arnobius's Errors, as Dr Cave. He says, that, perhaps, there are Doctrines in him something different from the True Faith. "Dogmata quædam habet FORSAW minus Catholica, quæ hominibus Gentilium tenebris recens erumpenti, & nondum Christianæ fidei elementis satis instructo, condonanda sunt (7). — He advances some Doctrines perhaps not altogether Catholic, which may be pardoned in one but just emerged from the Darkness of Paganism, nor yet fully instructed in the Elements of Christian Faith." This is carrying the Indulgence much farther, than was done in the Preface to the Edition of Leyden in 1651, where it was thought sufficient to say, that Arnobius swerved a little from Orthodoxy. "Aliis in locis à veritate Christiana NONNIHIL recedit. Sed hoc condonandum illi, qui ex Ethnicismi tenebris recens ad veritatem Christianam pervenerat. Idem huic Autori evenit, quod is solet, qui ex carcere tenebricoso in lucem perducti visum adhuc dubium habent (8). — In other places, he recedes a little from Christian Truth. But he is excusable in this, being then but just arrived from the Darkness of Heathenism to Christian Truth. Our Author's Case is the same with Theirs, who, being brought out of a dark Dungeon into Light, cannot immediately distinguish Objects with certainty." Once again; let us excuse This Father, but not be so simple, as to call the Doctrines, he advanced, by the soft Name of Small Errors. If we consider them right, they merit the same Treatment as would be given them, at this Day, if any Doctor should at present advance them. It must be owned, without a Cavil, that a Modern Author read a good Lecture for his Censor upon this Subject. Let us hear him. "Mr Jurieu weighs Errors in a false Balance. He judges of the Doctrine by the Persons, and not the Persons by the Doctrine. One and the same Error alters its Nature, according to the Circumstances of Place, and Time. It is monstrous Hereby, according to the Subject in which it is found, and the Age in which it reigns. This Partiality of Mr Jurieu appears in all his Disputes against the present Sectaries, in whom he pardons nothing; at the same time that he carries his Indulgence for the Fathers to a prodigious Excess (9). The respect we have for Persons should not make us respect their Errors, when they are capital. On all occasions of the like Nature, we should call A Spade, a Spade, &c." Mr Jurieu willingly excuses Origen's Errors, on account of his great Zeal; but, if any Modern should presume to put us off with the Dreams of the Ancients, Mr Jurieu would not think himself obliged to bear with them. "If These visionary Notions be Heresy and Impiety, which change Hell into a Purgatory, and by this means destroy the Dread of Eternal Punishment, and the Fear of God, why ought they to be suffered in Origen (10)? — The Tenderness, with which Mr Jurieu speaks of St Hilary's, and St Jerom's Errors, is certainly not edifying." He excuses them, by saying they are Mistakes, and Oversight. "But, should a Divine of this Age think fit to maintain the same Opinions, Mr Jurieu would think himself obliged to call them Extravagancies, and Impieties. "What a notorious Partiality is This! The same Things, which are Extravagancies, and Impieties, in our Age, are only excusable Mistakes, and Oversight, in the (6) Du Pin, Biblioth. des Auteurs Eccles. Tom. I. pag. 204. Col. 2. Edit. of Holland.

(7) Guelmi Cave Histor. Literar. pag. 112.

(8) Pref. Arnobii in Edit. Lugd. Bat. 1651.

(9) Sanrin, Examen de la Doctrine de Mr Jurieu, pag. 681.

(10) Id. ib. pag. 683.

(2) Baronius ad Ann. 302. n. 67. pag. 733.

(3) Mr du Pin is not of this Opinion. He composed, says he, (Biblioth. des Auteurs Eccles. Tom. I. pag. 203.) when he was but a Catechumen, VII Books.

(4) Consult the Table of this Dictionary, at the Word ARNOBIUS.

(5) Persius, in Prologo.

and not Eight, as was believed for some time [D]. They have been commented on by learned Men, and printed several times [E].

(11) Id. id.
pag. 684.

(12) Id. ib.
pag. 687.

"IVth Century. Why (11)?" This Author pretends to have discovered the source of these double Weights. Let us hear him again (12). "Mr Jurieu forgives them Those Errors, as light and trifling "Faults, which, in Persons of our own Age, would be "Infernal Heresies. It is common for us to shew "great Respect, and an high Esteem, for Those, "who have had the happiness to live several Centuries "before us; tho' we discover in them all Those "Weaknesses, and bad Qualities, which we cannot "suffer in the Moderns. If we cannot esteem the "Ancients, we think ourselves at least obliged to "love them; and, by judging with Christian Cha- "rity, to put the most favourable Construction we "can upon their Words. Whereas, on the contrary, "we glory in an enflamed Zeal against our Cotem- "poraries; we forgive them nothing, but are lavish of "our Anathema's against them. And yet, the Inte- "rests of Religion once preserved, Charity should "rather be exercised towards the Living, than Those, "who have been dead for several Ages past. The "Charity, we have for These, costs us little; be- "cause their Merit does not excite our Jealousy and "Envy, nor do we consider them as our Rivals. But "we must mortify Self-love not a little, to judge "charitably of an Adversary, who speaks and writes "against us, and whose Reputation eclipses our "Glory; and this is a Sacrifice, which we do not "easily make. As Mr Jurieu had no Quarrel against "Origen, and as he has personal Enemies in the So- "cietarian Party, no wonder, if he has more indulgence "for the former, than the latter."

[D] Seven Books, and not Eight, as was believed for some time. Every one knows, that the Title of the small Work of Minucius Felix is Octavius. It is found, in several ancient Manuscripts, joyned with the Books of Arnobius, which occasioned it's passing for One of His; and, without doubt, the Word Octavius, taken for Octavus, mislead many a Reader. Let us cite the following Words of Mr du Pin. "This "Book (13) passed a long Time for the eight Book "of Arnobius; for, being found in an ancient Ma- "nuscript of the Vatican, with the seven Books of "Arnobius, it was four times printed under That "Name", without any one's knowing it's true Au- "thor. The learned Civilian Baudouin was the first, "who discovered This vulgar Error, and caused This "little Treatise, with a learned Preface, in which "he restores it to it's proper Author, to be separate- "ly printed at Heidelberg, in the Year 1560. Now, "tho' the Honour of having made the first Discovery "be due to This famous Civilian, yet, Thirty three "Years after, Ursinus, causing Arnobius's Works to "be printed at Rome, whether he had not seen Bau- "doin's Edition, or would assume the Honour of "This Remark to himself, separated Minucius's Book "from Those of Arnobius, without any Intimation "that it had been done before, thus ascribing to him- "self the Honour of the Discovery (14)." We find "the same thing in the Preface (15) to the Minu- "cius Felix, printed at Leiden in the Year 1652. "We there find likewise, that, almost at the same time "that Francis Baudouin made it appear, that the pre- "tended eight Book of Arnobius was the Work of "Minucius Felix, another Critic had some Suspicion "of the Mistake. "Eodem fere tempore id ipsum "subulit etiam Hadriano Junio (16). — About the "same time Hadrian Junius began to suspect the same "Thing." This is not exact: It should have been "said, that Francis Baudouin was not the first, who "discovered it; for He did not publish what he knew "of the Matter, till four Years after another had com- "municated This Thought to the Public. His Minuci- "us appeared in the Year 1560. Now we find the "following Passage concerning this Matter, in a Piece, "which Hadrian Junius published in the Year 1556. "Arnobio, qui septem duntaxat adversus gentes libros "edidit, octavus accrevit, quum fit Minucii Felicis "Octavus, ab interlocutorum uno ita vocitatus, nova "ratione obliterandi auctoris (17). — An Eight "Book was insensibly tacked to the seven Books of Ar- "nobius against the Gentiles, which was indeed the "Octavus of Minucius Felix, so called from one of "the Interlocutors; a new Way of concealing the Au- "thor." The following Year, Baudouin was not cured of the common Error; for he cited the Treatise of Minucius as the eight Book of Arnobius. "Sic "ille apud Arnobium Cecilium Christianus dicitur cum "coeunt infantis occisi sanguinem lambere (18). — "Horribilis profecto est oratio Cecilii illius leguleii "Romani qui apud Arnobium libro octavo hæc ad- "huc Christianis objicit (19). — Thus the Cecilius "in Arnobius pretends, that the Christians, when "they come together, drink the Blood of a murdered "Infant. — It is a shocking Speech of That Cecilius, "the Roman Lawyer, who, in the eight Book of "Arnobius, still charges the Christians with This "Practice." Lewis Carrio ascribed to Junius the Honour of being the first, who had restored the Octa- "vius to it's True Author; and, in a Book, which he published, at Paris, in the Year 1583, he speaks thus. "Illi (Minucio) Octavum adversus gentes "librum Junius noster in Animadversis suis princip- "jam olim vindicavit (20). — Our Junius, the First, "who made the Discovery, had before, in his Animad- "verses, restored the eighth Book against the Gen- "tiles to it's True Author, Minucius Felix." Read these Words of Mr Joly: "Minuti Felicis vetustissi- "mi scriptoris Christiani dialogus elegantissimus "contra idolorum vanitatem tam diu pro octavo "Arnobii adversus gentes libro habitus est, quia Minu- "tius cum sub nomine Octavii protulerat, donec "à Francisco Baldino Jurisconsulto, anno 1560, "Arnobio abductus, & genuino Auctori redditus est, "veluti Nicolaus Rigaltius in præfatione ad eundem "Minutium observavit (21). — The most elegant "Dialogue of Minucius Felix, against the Vanity of "Idolatry, was so long thought to be the eighth Book "of Arnobius, adversus gentes, because he had in- "scribed it Octavus; till Francis Baudouin, in "Lawyer, took it from Arnobius, and restored it to "the true Author, as Nicolaus Rigaltius observed in "the Preface to the same Minucius." Here are two learned Men, who were ignorant, that Junius was before-hand with Baudouin in the Discovery of the true Author of the Octavius. However I think Mr Joly had no reason to place This Book in the List of the Pseudonymous. He pretends, that, in publishing it, the Author disguised himself under the Name of Octavius; I think it were better to say, that Octa- "vius is the Title of the Book, and not the supposed Name of it's Author. It would be improper, to say, that Plato's Dialogues were published under the False Names of the Persons, from whom they are entituled. Minucius Felix imitated Plato; he would have his Dialogue carry, for it's Title, the Name of The principal interlocutor.

[E] His Works — have been printed several times.] If I had the necessary Books, I would give an exact account of the Editions of Arnobius; but I must give up this Design, and confine myself to some critical Observations on Those, who have given us Catalogues of these Editions. The Author of the Preface to the Arnobius, printed at Leiden, in the Year 1651, says, I. That the first Edition of This Father is That, which Francis Priscianensis, a Florentine, published at Rome; but does not say in what Year; a Fault of Omission, which cannot be excused. II. That Sigismund Gelenius altered several things in this Edition, not by the Assistance of Manuscripts, but by trusting to the Conjectures of his own Genius. III. That Theodore Canterus, in publishing Arnobius with Additions, complained of Gelenius's Boldness. IV. That Godescalc Stewechius laboured with Success on This Father. V. That Elmenhorst added to his Commentary the various Readings, collected as well from the Manuscripts, and the Edition published at Rome, in the Year 1542, from an ancient Manuscript of Francis Sabauus (23), as from the Edition of Fulsius Ursinus. VI. That Desiderius Heralduus published Annotations on the Seven Books of Arnobius. I have three things to offer against all this: In the first Place, the List of the Editions is very imperfect; in the second Place, the Edition of Rome, 1532, is the same with the First, though it be mentioned here as different from it. In the third Place, it is not true, that the Annotations of Desiderius Heralduus followed the Edition of Elmenhorst. The latter is of the Year 1610, and Heralduus's Edition appeared at Geneva, in the Year 1597, and at Paris in the Year 1605. Let

(18) Franciscus Baldouinus ad edita veterum principum Romæ de Christianis, pag. 47. Edit. Basil. apud Opportunum, 1557.

(19) Id. ib. pag. 50.

(20) Lodov. Carrio, E. mendat. lib. II. cap. 18, fol. 52.

(21) Claudius Joly, Differat. de Verbis Uf-nardi, pag. 134. This Book was printed in 1663.

(22) Rigaltius, and Joly.

(13) Tovey, That of Minucius Felix.

• The first by Sabauus, from the Manuscript of Rome, in 1542. The second, in Germany by Gelchius. The third in Holland, at Leiden, in 1552. The fourth at Basil by Erasmus in 1560.

(14) Du Pin Bibl. des Auteurs Ecclesiast. Tom. I. pag. 119, col. 2.

(15) Written by James Ouzellius.

(16) Jacob. Ouzellius in Præf. Minucii Felicis.

(17) Hadrianus Junius, Animadvers. lib. VI. c. 1.

(23) His Name was Faustus, and not Francis.

(24) It is at the 20th Page, C. l. i. of the first Tome of his Bibliotheca Edu. Holl.

(25) I make use of the Edition of Holland.

(26) Pocci-antius de Scriptor. Florentinis, pag. 69.

(27) Ludov. Carrio E-menstat. lib. I. cap. 9. fol. 18. Mr. Du Pin affirms it, pag. 110. Tom. I. Biblioth.

Let us now examine Mr du Pin's List (24). I observe, in the first Place, that the proper Names in it are very much disguised (25). There we find Carrerus, instead of Carterius; Hermenborfius, instead of Hermenborffius; Stewechius, instead of Stewechius. Besides, I observe, that he mentions one Theodorus Prifcianenfis, as the Printer of the first Edition. This is certainly a mistake. We have seen, that the Florentine Franciscus Prifcianenfis was the first, who published the Works of Arnobius. Now he was no Printer. Pocciantius does not give him this Appellation; he only makes him a good Philologist, and Author of some Italian Books (26). I am persuaded, that Fauftus Sabæus, Library Keeper of the Vatican, communicated the Manuscript to him, from which the Edition of Rome was printed, in 1542. Therefore, in the Preface of the Edition of Leiden, it was wrong to make a Distinction between the Edition of Franciscus Prifcianenfis, and That, which was published from the Manuscript of Sabæus. Note, that Lewis Carrio is of Opinion, that the Manuscript of Arnobius, which is in the Library of the King of France, is That, which was employed in the first Edition (27). He imagines, that, because it was dedicated to Francis I., the Manuscript was likewise sent him. In the third Place, I observe, that it is not true, that the seven Books of Arnobius were printed with the Notes of Heralduus, in 1583; nor that the Edition of Hamburg, in 1610, ought to be distinguished from That before-mentioned; I mean from That, which was accompanied with the Commentary of Elmenborff.

Lastly, I observe, that Stewechius did not publish an Edition of Arnobius, at Duëy, in the Year 1634; his Edition is of Antwerp, in 1686, and he had been dead a long time, when his Electa in Arnobium were reprinted at Duëy, in the Year 1634, Cum paratilis seu Summaris Leandri de Sancto Martino. You will find a like Mistake at Citation * of the Remark [D], where Mr Du Pin says, that Erasmus published Arnobius in 1560; whereas He died in 1536.

Let us take some Notice of Father Labbé (28). He thinks the Edition of Leiden a very good one; but wonders, that The Undertakers of it, did not insert the Arnobianus Criticus of Meurfus, which was printed at Leiden, in the Year 1598, cum Hypercritico Minutiano. He would at least have had them take Notice of it. They, who should retort upon him, that he himself ought to have remembered the Eloge ad Arnobium of Julius Caesar Baulenger (29), would not have the same Reason; for That Book is of no use, either in correcting the Text of Arnobius, or in unfolding the literal Sense; it is nothing but a Series of Quotations, explaining some Thoughts of Arnobius. The same Jesuit reflects upon the great Salmafius, for promising a Commentary on This Author, and not keeping his Word. Salmafiani autem illi Commentarii tandem expectati, tam sæpe ejus amicorumque literis promissi atque jactati, in fumum tandem ventosque evanuerunt (30). I believe such a Piece of Salmafius would have made finer Discoveries, than his learned Commentary on the Treatise of Tertullian de Pallio.

(28) Labbé, Differt. de Scriptor. Eccl. Tom. I, pag. 105.

(29) Printed at Toulouse, in 1612, in 8vo.

(30) Labbé, ubi supra.

ARNOLDUS (NICHOLAS) Professor of Divinity at Franecker, was born at Lefna, a City of Poland, the Seventeenth of December 1618. His Mother being left a Widow, when he was but three Years of Age, took all imaginable Care of his Education, and dedicated him to Learning. He went through his Humanity Studies in the College of Lefna, under Comenius, among other Regents, who at that time read his Janua Linguarum to his Scholars. He was ordained Acolyth (a), in the Synod of Ostrowog, at Fifteen Years of Age, and, in this Station, accompanied Orminius (b), for two Years, in visiting the Churches of Poland; after which, he was sent to Dantzic, in the Year 1635, and there applied himself to the Study of Eloquence and Philosophy. He sometimes experienced the ill Humour of John Botsac, who was grieved, that a young Man of such Hopes should be a Calvinist. In the Year 1638, he returned into Poland, and studied *Sermonary Theology, under the Direction of Orminius, and, a Year after, was sent to Podakia, to be Rector of the School of Jablonow. Having exercised This Employ during three Months, he discharged the Ministerial Functions at the House of a great Lord (c) for two Years successively. It being observed, that his Talents might be of great Use to the Church, it was thought proper to give him an Opportunity of improving them in the most famous Universities. He began his Travels in the Year 1641, and came first to Franecker, where he made a great Progress under his Countryman Macovius; and under Cocceius. The Year 1643 he spent in the Universities of Groningen, Leiden, and Utrecht, and soon after returned to Franecker; where he applied himself to study French and English. The following Year he went over into England; but, finding it impossible to get to Oxford, the Roads being stopped by the King's Forces, or by Those of the Parliament, he went on Foot to Cambridge; but could hear no Divinity Lectures there, the Professors being all under Confinement in Trinity College. Being on his Return to Franecker, he applied himself to Preaching, even in Dutch; and his Sermons were so well relished, that, in hopes of retaining him in Friesland, they dissuaded him from revisiting Poland. He was judged very capable of the Ministry by the Claffical Synod of Franecker, who had examined him; and the Praises they gave him induced a young Gentlewoman of That Country to accept of him for a Husband [A]. He was married to her in the Year 1645, and soon after

* A System of Divinity compiled from Sermons.

(c) Johannes de Potock Potocki, Succemari-rius Terre Halicicæ.

(a) The Reformed Churches of Bohemia retain'd this Part of Ancient Discipline. — An Acolyth is an Under Diacon, the lowest Order of Priests.

(b) Superintendent of the Churches of Great Poland.

[A] The Praises they gave him induced a young Gentlewoman of That Country to accept of him for a Husband. This we are informed of by the Author of his Funeral Oration. "Fecit paulo post, says be (1), tanta omnium laus, ut nobilissima in Frisia Virgo Remigia à NITZEN facili in conjugales ejus rueret amplexus anno 1645. — Soon after, This general Approbation induced a Noble Lady of Friesland, Remigia of NITZEN, readily to meet his Embraces in Wedlock, in the Year 1645." This Lady was to be commended for preferring Reputation and Merit to Riches. There are other Examples of Matches of this Nature; for it is certain, that many Protestant Divines, recommended only by the Credit of their Eloquence, or Learning, have married to great Advantage, and rendered themselves very considerable by the Rank of the Family, into which they have married. The great Probability, that they may, sooner, or later, be raised to distinguished Benefices, or considerable Professorships, may have contributed towards it. Be this as it will, the Wife of our Arnoldus is to be commended. She died in the beginning of the Year 1652, and left no Children. In the Year 1653, he married again to the Widow of an Advocate of Leeuwarden, whose Name was Anne Pybinga, the Daughter of a Burgo Master of Franecker, who brought him nine Children, five Sons (2) and four Daughters, and survived him

(2) The second and third were Twins. See the Program-ma of the Rector of the University. It is printed before the Orat. Funer.

(1) Marckius, in Orat. Funer. Arnoldi, p. 38.

Note, that the Precepts of This Rabbi do not at all agree with the Advice of Physicians; who pretend, that a Child, conceived under Distraction of Mind, I mean under ferious, grave, and spiritual Thoughts, will be simple, foolish, and weak (5). They give very different Advice to Those, who desire Children (6); but any Man of tolerable Sense must grant, that They lead Mankind into a very bad School of Chastity; Their Precepts are calculated only for Those, who would confine every thing to Animal, Earthly, Sensual, and Epicurean Life. We must go to our Rabbi's School, if we would learn to demean ourselves, in this part of our Duty, like Creatures endowed with a Spiritual Soul, and not deserve the Censure;

(5) See Remarks [C] of the ASSISIA (FRANCIS d').

(6) See Roderic de Castro, de Naturis, lib. 3. cap. 5.

(7) Persius, Sat. II. ver. 36.

O curvæ in terras animæ, & cœlestium inanes (7) !
O foetid Minds, of Heavenly Thoughts devoid !

We shall the better comprehend how excellent and sublime the Morality of This Jew is, if we remember, that it is directly opposite to the Maxims of Those Doctors of Impurity, who have filled their Poems with so much Wantonness. These dangerous Poisoners are far from advising Silence; and it is This, which furnished a Modern with a Confirmation of the Interpretation he has given of the Words of a Greek Poet, which contain a Description of the Grotto of the Nymphs. As for the agreeable Murmuring, says he (8), mentioned by Homer, they are without doubt the obliging Words of Lovers, the ohi me cor mio (Oh! my Heart!) of the Italians; the ζων και ψυχην (My Life and Soul!) of the Greeks; and the alma de mi alma (Soul of my Soul!) of the Spaniards; such as attend upon the most favourable Privacies, and which made the most knowing, of all the Poets, in the Art of Love, to say;

(8) Hexameron's unique, IV Journee, p. 112, &c.

* Ovid. de Arte Amandi, lib. II. ver. 723.

Accedant questus, accedat amabile murmur,
Et dulces gemitus, aptaque verba juro *.

*And, whilst in Bliss together you expire,
Let Sighs, and gentle Murmurs, fan the Fire.*

Hear what he says in another Place;

Et mihi blanditias dixit, dominumque vocavit,
Et quæ præterea publica verba juvant †.

† Id. Amor. Lib. III. Eleg. 6. ver. 11.

*She list'd soft Flattery, my Desires to move,
And try'd the Force of Words, to kindle Love.*

I will not inform you, that the Term juvare is altogether Erotic, and consecrated to the last Delights of Love, which are again expressed, as well as the Murmurs, in these two Verses of the same Author;

‡ Id. de Arte Amandi, Lib. II.

Me voces audire juvat sua gaudia lassas,
Uique morer, me, me, sustineamque roget ‡.

ARRERAC (JOHN d') Counsellor in the Parliament of Bourdeaux, towards the end of the XVIth Century, is Author of a Book, which I shall take notice of below [A].

[A] He is Author of a Book, which I shall take notice of below. It is intitled La Philosophie Civile & d'Etat, divisée en l'Irenarchie & la Polemarchie. — Civil and Political Philosophy, divided into Irenarchy and Polemarchy; and was printed at Bourdeaux, by Simon Millanges, in the Year 1598, in 8vo. It consists of two Volumes, only the first of which I have seen (1). The Author gives us this Idea of it (2). "I have borrowed my Subject from the Laws of the first Book of the Pandects, which the Doctors universally despise, either because they do not understand them, or because they look upon them as of but little use toward Chancery, of which they are more Slaves, on account of the Gain they hope from it, than Lovers of Virtue and Honour. This Book is so rich and fruitful of excellent Laws, that I am much mistaken, if I do not prove in mine, that it contains the greatest Part of the Laws of Nature, and of both Moral and Civil Philosophy, together with the Order of the Roman Magistracy

(1) It contains 721 Pages.

(2) J. d'Arrerac, Epistle Dedictory to the Cardinal de Joyeuse.

*Give me the Girl, who dies upon the Kiss,
In Murmurs soft, expressive of the Bliss;
Who courts my Stay; whose Beauties never cloy, Inspire new Raptures, and revive the Joy.*

— The famous Epithalamium of the Emperor Gallienus, which Trebellius Pollio persers to Those of an hundred other Poets, who all exerted their Pens on the same Subject, wonderfully expresses these soft and obliging Murmurs, and the Careless, which are inseparable from them. It is said, that, holding the Hands of two of his Brother's Children, when he married them, he pronounced these Verses of his own Composition;

Itē, itē, o pueri, pariter sudate medullis
Omnibus inter vos, non murmura vestra columbæ,
Brachia non hederæ, non vincant oscula conchæ.

*Now go, my Children! prove the Tails of Love;
In Murmurs soft surpass the cooing Dove;
Cling, like the Tendrils of the curling Vine;
And close each Kiss, as sticks the Shell-fish, join.*

It is difficult to conceive any thing more pathetic, or passionate, on this Head. To be diametrically opposite to These false Doctors, the Bane of Youth, is no small Praise; it is a just Presumption, that the Morality, which one advances, is of admirable Purity. Add to all this the judicious Answer of the famous Mr Drelincourt to a Bishop, who had made an Observation altogether unbecoming. I will not say a Person of his Character, but even a Layman, who is not over fond of a wanton Stile. These are Mr Drelincourt's Words (9); "Instead of washing out, with his Tears, those ways of speaking, that the Virgin Mary is the Spirit and Life of Christians, he defends them with a Rallery, which would better become Those, who tread the Stage. You Gentlemen, says he, Passion of the Protestant Church, who have your dear Counterparts, not so much inseparable Accidents of your Substance, as Bone of your Bone, and Flesh of your Flesh, nay, who are but one Flesh in two Persons, use indeed much more endearing Terms to Those Souls of your Souls, Those Lives of your Lives, Those Lives of your Hearts and Souls, Those Souls of your Lives and Hearts, than the World knows of; for you are Those Spiritual Persons, who judge the whole World, nay the very Angels, and with much more Reason the Romanists, without being subject to be judged by any. I know not whence he had his Information, and shall not answer for the Expressions of Those, who have Wives by stealth. But a grave Person, who lives in a chaste Marriage, does not study such extravagant Rhetoric." The Prelate replied in a manner so Burlesque, that nothing could exceed it (10).

(9) Drelincourt's Avant-coureur de la République à Mr le Camus, Evêque de Belley, pag. 36, 37.

(10) See his Answer to the Avant-coureur of Mr Drelincourt, pag. 156.

and Jurisdiction. I have added to this first Book the two first Titles of the second, upon which I have discoursed of the Rights of Jurisdiction, as well according to the Roman Policy, as our own French and Ecclesiastical Law; and of This Law of Nature; quod quisque juris in alium statuerit, ut ipse eodem jure utatur." This relates to the first Tome, or the Irenarchy, that is, State of Peace: what follows concerns his Polemarchy, or State of War. It is a small Volume, containing, in four Books, the Qualities and Perfections of the General of an Army, the Artifices and Stratagems of ancient Commanders, the Uses to be made of Occurrences in War, and the Way to preserve a Victory, after it is obtained (3). This Author had read much, and is not sparing of his Quotations; but, generally speaking, he says but little on each particular Subject, which gives him room to treat of a great Number. He frequently attacks the most celebrated Lawyers, as Accursius, Alciatus, Budæus, Cujacius, &c. and, from Time to Time, he makes uncommon Observations.

(3) Ibid. pag. 2.

ARRIA, the Name of some Roman Ladies, whom I shall mention in the Remarks of the Article PAETUS.

ARRIGA (RODERIC d') a Spanish Jesuit, was born at Lucrona, the Seventeenth of January, 1592. He entered into the Society on the Seventeenth of September, 1606, and taught Philosophy, with great Applause, at Valladolid, and Divinity at Salamanca; and, being informed, by Letters from the General of The Order, that it would be more for the Glory of God, that some Spanish Jesuits should go into Bohemia (a), to teach the sublimer Sciences there, he offered himself for This Employ. He arrived at Prague in the Year 1624. He taught Scholastic Divinity there for the Space of thirteen Years, and was Director-General of the Studies twenty Years successively, and Chancellor of the University for twelve Years. He solemnly received the Cap of Doctor of Divinity, and acquired much Reputation. The Province of Bohemia deputed him three times to Rome, to assist there at the general Congregations of the Order (b). He was several times intreated to return into Spain, but to no purpose. He was very much esteemed by Urban VIII, Innocent X, and the Emperor Ferdinand III. He died at Prague on the Seventeenth of June 1667 (c). He published several Books [A], in which he discovered much Subtlety, and Wit. He seems to have succeeded much better in confuting what he denied, than in defending what he affirmed; and it is pretended, that thereby he became a Favourer of Pyrrhonism, tho' he always declared, that he was no Pyrrhonist [B]. It would certainly be the highest Injustice to suspect him of the least Prevarication, or of betraying the Dogmatists; for, if, on one hand, he exerted all his Strength in confuting a great number of Opinions; he employed it on the other, in supporting the Opinions, which he had embraced: It was easy to see, that he acted with Sincerity, and exerted himself to the utmost; and, if his Proofs are weaker than his Objections, the blame must be laid on the nature of the Things. The Diligence, with which he confuted the Subtleties, which have been invented by the Schoolmen, to prove, that two contradictory Propositions are sometimes true, and sometimes false [C], is a sufficient Demonstration, that he was passionately in the Interest

(a) The Jesuits had newly made this Country a Province of their Order, diff'ng from That of Austria. Sotuel, Bibl. Script. Socier. Iesu, pag. 728, 729.

(b) At the 8th, 10th, and 11th.

(c) Taken from Sotuel, ubi supra.

[A] He published several Books. A Course of Philosophy, in one Volume; and a Course of Divinity, in eight Volumes. The Course of Philosophy, printed in Folio, at Antwerp, in the Year 1632, has been reprinted several times. The Edition of Lyons is augmented. The first and second Volume of his Course of Divinity were printed in the Year 1643; the Third and Fourth in the Year 1644; the Fifth in the Year 1649; the Sixth in Year 1650; the Seventh and Eighth in the Year 1655. They are All in Folio, printed by Baltazar Moret, at Antwerp (1). He had The ninth Volume in hand, when he died: It was That de Jure & Justitia (2). Don Nicolas Antonio makes Arriaga the Author of a Book, De Oratore, printed at Cologne in the Year 1637, and of The Brevis Expositio Literar Magistri Sententiarum, cum Quaestionibus quae circa ipsam moveri possunt, & Authoribus qui de illis disputant. — A Brief Exposition of the Letter of the Master of the Sentences, with the Questions, which may be started thereupon, and the Authors, which controvert them; printed at Lyons, in the Year 1636, in 8vo, after other Editions (3); but, as Father Sotuel does not mention These two Books, tho' the first was ascribed to This Jesuit by Alegambius, there is reason to believe, that Don Nicolas Antonio is mistaken.

(1) Nicolas Antonio, Biblioth. Hispan. Tom. II. pag. 299. & several of these Volumes were printed likewise at Lyons.

(2) Taken from Sotuel, in Biblioth. Script. Soc. Iesu, p. 729.

(3) Nicol. Anton. Biblioth. Script. Hispan. Tom. II. p. 209.

(4) Petrus de Villemandy in Sermone deo deb. 170, cap. I. pag. 15.

(5) Id. ib. cap. IV. p. 32.

[B] It is pretended, that thereby he became a Favourer of Pyrrhonism, tho' he always declared, that he was no Pyrrhonist. This is the Opinion of Mr de Villemandy: "Sua alii, sibi de (4), qui periculosus adhuc sollicitant (jaeratora fidei dogmata) cujusmodi Arriaga suis in disputationibus Theologicis: nihil enim non moliantur ut aliorum quorumcunque placita reflexionibus & objectionibus suis destruant, ipsi autem nihil fere adferunt — Celebris est inter Romanenses Scholasticos Rodericus ille Arriaga — Is multis Volum. Fol. & Philosophiam & Theologiam est persecutus; jam autem singula quaeque sic tractat ut aliorum fere omnium opinionem variis rationibus infirmare studeat, suas autem levissime sufficiat. Si ex hac methodo ingenii conditio dijudicetur, verè Pyrrhonius potest haberi; cum tamen placita sua quantum potest firmet, iisque constanter inhaereat, non potest legitime eo nomine donari (5). — There are some, who yet more dangerously shake the most sacred Articles of our Faith, such as Arriaga, in his Theological Disputations; for they take a great deal of Pains to overthrow the Opinions of others, but establish nothing themselves —

"This Roderic Arriaga is famous among the Roman Catholic Schoolmen. He treats of Philosophy, and Divinity, in many Folio Volumes; but handles them in such a Manner, that he endeavours to weaken the Opinions of almost all others by a Variety of Arguments, but makes but a poor Defence of his Own. If the Author's Way of Thinking may be judged of by this Method of Proceeding, he is a thorough Pyrrhonist; but, when he labours to establish his own Opinions, he cannot fairly lay claim to This Appellation." It may be affirmed, that, if the Reading this Jesuit's Writing inclines us to think him a Pyrrhonist, it is purely by Accident, and against his Intention; for he is as Dogmatical as any One, and as zealous to confirm his Decisions; but, whether thro' the Weakness of human Understanding, or the Difficulty of the Subjects, he found himself in the Case of a great numbers of Authors, who can discover the weak Side of a Doctrine to admiration, but never where the Force of it lies. They are like Those Generals, who destroy the Enemy's Country with Fire and Sword, without being able to put their own Frontiers in a Posture of Defence. Mr Ancillon thought This Jesuit "very singular in his Way of Writing, and much freer than others, who, thro' a base Servitude, dare not forsake the Opinions of the Writers of Their Society, and who scrupulously follow them as infallible — Reporting the Opinion of Vajquez, he says plainly, that, in the main, he lays but little stress on Father Vajquez's Solutions (6). Mr Ancillon adds, "In reading Arriaga and Oviedo, I have observed, that, when one of these two Jesuits maintains the Affirmative of a Proposition, the other maintains the Negative; which is not very usual among the Doctors of the Romish Religion in general, and which I have seldom observed, except in Cornelius à Lapide, and Estius." It is no uncommon thing for the Jesuits to confute each other on a great number of Questions, as well in Philosophy, as School-Divinity. Witness Suarez and Vajquez.

[C] The Subtleties of the Schoolmen, to shew, that two contradictory Propositions are sometimes true, and sometimes false. He has very well distinguished These Sophisms: See his second Disputation on the Summulae of Logic (7). I have seen some Professors very much puzzled, when these Objections were made to them; which, in truth, ought only to pass for Cavils, unluckily invented by Perions of too much leisure,

(6) See the Mélanges Critique de Littérature, Tom. I. p. 208.

(7) Sect. V. Subsect. III, & IV. p. 19, &c. Edit. Paris 1639.

Interest of the Dogmatists, against the Pyrrhonians. He gave up most of the received Opinions of the Schools in Points of Natural Philosophy, such as the Composition of the Continuum, Rarefaction, &c. and therefore undertook to defend The Innovators in Philosophy (d). It is pity so refined and penetrating a Genius had not had a better Notion of right Principles; for he might have carried them very far. A small knowledge in Hydrostatics would have discovered to him the reason of a Phenomenon, in the Explanation of which he took a great deal of Pains to no purpose. His Efforts, and his Zeal in this Matter, make it lamented, that he ran with such force out of the right Way.

(d) In the Preface to his Course of Philosophy.

leisure, but who never pretended, like Heraclitus, that one and the same thing effectually is, and is not. They only intended to exercise their Wit. Observe, that Aristotle does not believe, tho' Heraclitus said this, that he really thought so. Ἀδύνατον γὰρ ὄντιν τὰ αὐτὰ πολλαχῶς εἶναι καὶ μὴ εἶναι, καθάπερ τινὲς οἰοῦνται λέγειν Ἡράκλειον. καὶ γὰρ ἀναγκαῖον εἰ τις λέγει, τὰ αὐτὰ καὶ ὑπολαμβάνειν (8). — It is impossible for any One to think, that the same Thing is and is not, as some believed Heraclitus to have affirmed. For it is not necessary we should believe every thing we say.

(8) Aristot. Metaphys. lib. III, cap. 3, pag. 667.

[D] The Reason of a Phenomenon, in the Explanation of which he took a great deal of Pains to no purpose. The Phenomenon was, that a Piece of Timber, which is lighter than Water, does, nevertheless, not float on the Water, with regard to its whole bulk, or thickness. A Beam, floating in a River, lies partly under, and partly above, the Water. This cannot be explained according to the common Principles of Gravity and Levity, and hence proceeded the Vanity of the Efforts of Arriaga (9). The new Philosophers find no difficulty in this. See the System of Mr Gadrosi.

(9) Arriaga Disputat. 4. de Generat. Sect. 5, de Element. Subsect. VI. pag. 519.

ARSENIUS, a Deacon of the Roman Church, famous for the Nobility of his Family, but much more for his great Learning, and Piety, was chosen by Pope Damasus to be sent to the Emperor Theodosius, who wanted a Preceptor for his Son Arcadius. He came to Constantinople in the Year 383, and was very well received by the Emperor, who was offended, one Day, both at the Disciple and the Master, because he found the latter standing, and the other sitting, at his Lesson. He ordered, that his Son, tho' he had already been declared Augustus, should stand uncovered, while Arcadius instructed him, and lay aside the Marks of Imperial Dignity during That time. Arsenius, employing all his Endeavours to accomplish his Disciple in Learning and Virtue, found himself at last obliged to add Chastisement to Censure. Young Arcadius was so incensed at it, that he desired one of his Officers to rid him of his Preceptor (a). The Officer advertised Arsenius of it, who retired privately into the Deserts of Egypt, where he passed several Years with the Anchorites of Scetis, in the most fervent and austere Exercises of Devotion. He died there at the Age of ninety five Years [A]. Theodosius, hearing with grief of Arsenius's Retreat, ordered him to be sought for every where, without being able to discover him (b). There are some Faults in Moret's Dictionary relating to this Article [B]. I have met with some likewise in other Writers [C].

(a) Taken from the Annals of Baronius, ad Ann. 383, n. 22, 23. He cites Metaphrasis under the 26th of May, and Surius under the 19th of July.

(b) Flechet's History of Theodosius, pag. 273, 274.

Several

[A] He died there at the Age of Ninety five Years. Hear how Mr Arnould d'Andilli (1) divides this long Life of Arsenius. He says, that, "He passed forty Years in the Court of the Emperor Theodosius, forty in Scetis, ten in Troché, which is above Babylon, over against the City of Memphis, three in Campus of Alexandria, and two in the fame Town of Troché, whither being returned he finished his Course in the fear of God." This Expression, He pass forty Years in the Court of Theodosius, is very improper; for, unless we will find a notorious Error in it, it must be taken in this Sense; He was forty Years old, when he quitted the Court of Theodosius. In effect, to take it in the proper and natural Signification of the Words, Arsenius must have lived to above One hundred and twenty Years of Age. His Age, at the time when he went to Constantinople, upon being chosen Preceptor to Arcadius by Damasus, ought to have been added to the Ninety five Years. This Pope would not have chosen a young Man of twenty: Besides, Theodosius reigned but about sixteen Years, and he did not receive Arsenius till the fourth Year of his Reign.

(1) D'Andilli's Lives of the Fathers Solitary, p. 204.

(a) Baronius, ad Ann. 383, n. 22.

(1) It is in the 11th Tome of the Lives of the Fathers Solitary, by Arnould d'Andilli, p. 118, of the Edit. in 8vo. of 1676.

(4) Lib. III, n. 37.

(5) Ad Ann. 385, n. 26.

(6) Part II, cap. 36.

[B] There are some Faults in Moret's Dictionary. I. Arsenius could not have been sent to Theodosius, in the Year 383, to be Preceptor to Arcadius and Honorius, since Honorius was not born before the Year 384. Baronius had remarked this Fault to Those, who wrote the Life of Arsenius, and ascribed it to one, who knew, in general, that Theodosius had two Sons; aliquis quod sciret duos fuisse Theodosio filios, adjectis Honorium (2). This Error remained in the Life of Arsenius, written by Mr d'Andilli (3), who quotes Rufinus (4) as his Authority. II. I confess, that Baronius (5), on the Credit of the Lives of the Fathers, says (6), that Arsenius was Godfather to the two Sons of Theodosius; but this does not agree with Rufinus, who says, that they were put into Arsenius's Hand presently after their Baptism (7). Besides, Baronius himself has observed, that it is a Mistake in the Life of Arsenius, where it is said, that he was sent by Damasus to be Preceptor to Arcadius and Honorius. The latter was not yet born; and the other was but about eight Years old. And it is not probable, that Arsenius continued at the Court of Theodosius, till the Time that Honorius stood in need of a Preceptor. III. Mr Flecbier says plainly, that Theodosius ordered Arsenius to be searched for throughout the whole Empire. It is very improbable then, that Arsenius did not leave the Court till after the Death of Theodosius, in the Year 395. I say, this is very improbable, tho' it be advanced as a certain Fact, in the first and third Volume of The Dictionary. IV. He should not have suppressed the Circumstances, which Mr Flecbier had expressly remarked, to wit, that the Officer, whom Arcadius employed to kill Arsenius, gave This Preceptor notice of it. The Supplement to the Dictionary supposes, that Arsenius was divinely forewarned of it. V. Arcadius was not associated to the Empire at six Years of Age, but at the Age of seven or eight; as Baronius, and Flecbier observe. "Erat tunc Arcadius annum ætatis agens octavum, natus nimirum sub consulatu Gratiani quarto & Merobaudis, triennio ante Theodosii patris Imperium (8). — Arcadius was then eight Years of Age, having been born in the fourth Consulship of Gratian and Merobaudes, three Years before the Accession of his Father Theodosius to the Empire." VI. Socrates should not have been quoted; for what he says of Arsenius has scarce any relation to the Article of the Supplement. However, if any, the Twenty third Chapter of the third Book should have been alledged.

(7) Apud Arnould d'Andilli, ubi supra.

(8) Baronius, ad Ann. 383, n. 22.

[C] Some Mistakes in other Writers. Matthias, in his Historical Theatre (9), supposes perpetually, that

(9) Pag. 713. Edit. Amstel. 1668.

(c) See the first Volume, printed at Paris, in 1677.

Several of Arsenius's Actions, and Sayings, are to be found among the Apophthegmata Patrum, published by Mr Cotelier (c).

that Arsenius was Preceptor to Honorius, as well as to Arcadius, and That at the same Time. He does not consider, that Honorius was not born, when Arsenius was sent to Theodosius, to instruct Arcadius: He never so much as dreams, that Honorius, being nine Years younger than his Brother, was very unfit to assist at the Lectures, which were read to Arcadius, during the Life of Theodosius. Observe this Circumstance well; because Matthias was not ignorant, that Arsenius absconded before the Death of the Emperor; for he remarks, that Theodosius ordered him carefully to be searched for. He quotes the Twenty third Chapter of the fourth Book of Socrates, where nothing of what he says is to be found. He adds, that Arcadius, after the Death of his Father, was informed where Arsenius lay concealed, and sent to desire his Pardon for what had passed, and his Holy Benediction. Doujatius, being carried away with the Stream, joins Honorius with Arcadius (10). Charles Stephens knew our Arsenius only under the Quality of Patrician; and supposes him not to forsake the Court, but only his Estate, to go into a Monastery, being admonished by a Voice from the Clouds, commanding him to fly, and live in Silence and Peace. Hofman has added to this only the Post of Preceptor to Arcadius. Lloyd has suppressed the whole Article. Observe, that Nicephorus, the Son of Callistus, affirms, that Theodosius appointed Arsenius Preceptor to his Sons (11).

(10) Arse-
nus, non il-le Arcadii & Honorii
Preceptor....
Arse-nus, non the Preceptor of Arcadius, and Honorii.
ut. Doujatius Prænot. Canon. p. 429.

(11) Nice-
phor. Histor.
lib. XII, cap.
23.

ARSENIUS, Patriarch of Constantinople in the XIIIth Century, was a Native of That City. He was educated in a Monastery of Nice, and was likewise Superior of it: But he renounced This Dignity to addit himself wholly to a Monastic Life, either in the Monasteries of Apolloniade, or Those of Mount Albos. He was taken from this way of Life, in the Year 1255, by the Emperor Theodorus Lascaris, who made him Patriarch of Constantinople. Four Years after, the same Emperor, before his Death, declared him one of the two Preceptors of his Son John. The other Preceptor was George Muzalon; who, discovering Designs very contrary to the true Interest of the Young Prince, gave Arsenius a dislike to his Employment, which was the cause of his returning to a Monastic Life. But, in the Year 1261, when the Greeks had recovered Constantinople, under the Conduct of Michael Palæologus, Arsenius was recalled to resume the Patriarchate, and fill That See, from which the Patriarchs had been excluded for above fifty Years. The next Year, the Emperor Michael Palæologus caused the Eyes of John Lascaris, Son of the Emperor Theodorus, to be put out. Arsenius, offended at so barbarous an Action, committed on his Pupil, excommunicated Michael, who, to disperse these Ecclesiastical Storms, assembled a Council, and, on false Accusations, caused Arsenius to be deposed, and banished him to the Island of Proconnesus. He lived a long time in This Exile; but it is not certainly known in what Year he died. He was a good Man, but wholly unqualified for Business (a). He is an Author [A].

(c) Taken from Cave's Historia Literaria Scriptor. Ec-
cles. p. 725.

[A] He is an Author. He wrote a Nomo-Canon, or Collection of Canons, divided into One hundred and forty one Titles, to each of which he adds some Articles or Heads of the Imperial Laws. It is inserted in Greek and Latin in the Bibliothèque of Canon-Law, published by Messieurs Jussel and Faet. We have also the Testament of Arse-nius, published in Greek and Latin, by Mr Cotelier, in the second Volume of his Monuments of the Greek Church (1).

(1) Cave's
Histor. Libe-
rar. p. 725.
Doujat. Præ-
not. Canon.
p. 429.

ARSENIUS, Archbishop of Monembasia, or Malvasia, in the Morea, in the XVIth Century, passed for a learned Philologist. He was an intimate Friend of Paul III, and wrote very elegant Letters to him; in one of which he complains of the little Affection of the Church of Rome for the Greek Nation [A]. He submitted to the Church of Rome, which made him so odious to the Greek Schismatics, that Pachomus, Patriarch of Constantinople, excommunicated him; and the Greeks reported, that Arse-nius, after his Death, was Broukolakas, that is, that the Devil hovered about his Corps, and re-animated him (a). We have some Works of His [B].

(a) See Guillet, Lacedæ- mon Ancienne & Nouvelle, p. 527, and Crusius
in his Turco- Græcia.

[A] He complained of the little Affection of the Church of Rome for the Greek Nation. See the Words of Mr Guillet. " Arse-nius wrote some elegant Letters to Pope Paul III, which are still extant. In one of them he complains much of the little Affection the Church of Rome has for the Greek Nation, in that it hath not raised any of them to the Dignity of Cardinal. Paul was made " Pope in the Year 1535 (1). If this Complaint be taken for general, Arse-nius is guilty of a Falshood; for it is certain, that Cardinal Bessarion was a Greek: we must, then, believe, that Arse-nius's Reproaches were like Those of Masurius. The latter complains bitterly, that not one Greek had a Share in the numerous Promotions, which Leo X, had newly made (2). Paul III, was elected Pope in the Month of October, 1534.

(1) Guil-
Laced. Anc.
& Nouv. pag.
327.

(2) See the Article MU-
SURIUS.

I have been informed by Mr de la Monnaie, " That no Letter of Arse-nius to That Pope is to be found, except That, which serves as a Dedication " to the Scholia of Euripides. It is there he com- " plains, that, among so many Cardinals of all Na- " tions, there are not, at least, two or three Greeks. " Καίτοι ἰδὲ πολλοὶς ἢ ἑνα ἢ δύο τῶν Ἑλλή- " νων ἐν τοσούτοις καρδινάλιοις ὑπεριστάδα " τῶν Καρδινάλων." Nothing is more useful, or necessary, than to have recourse to the Fountain-head.

[B] We have some Works of his. A Collection of Apophthegms, printed at Rome, in Greek: Another Collection of Scholia on seven Tragedies of Euripides, printed at Venice, 1534. He says, in his Epistle Dedicatory to Pope Paul III, that he had composed it in the Isle of Candy, at Venice, and at Florence. See the Bibliothèque of Geshar.

ARSENIUS, A Greek Monk, wrote a Letter against Cyrillus Lucar, Patriarch of Constantinople, which was published in Greek and Latin, at Paris, in the Year 1643, with the Acts of the Council, wherein Parthenius, Patriarch of Constantinople, caused the Confession of This Cyril to be condemned in the Year 1642. Every one knows, knows, that the Confession of Cyril was conformable to the Opinions of Genev. Mr Claudé maintained (a), that This Condemnation was a spurious Piece. The Catalogue of the Library of Oxford has confounded Arfenius, Author of the Nomo-Canon, with our Greek Monk.

(a) Claudé's
Answer to Mr Arnauld,
lib. III, cap.
12, p. 473.

ARSINOE. There have been several Queens of This Name. Mr Moreri has mentioned the Principal, not without some Mistakes. He is a little too short on Arfinoe, the Sister of Cleopatra: We shall make amends for this Brevity in the Article PTOLOMY AULETES (a).

(c) Remark
[A]

ARSINOE, the Wife of Magas, King of Cyrene [A], dishonoured herself by her Lasciviousness. A little before Magas died, he contracted their only Daughter Berenice to the Son of Ptolomy, King of Egypt. Immediately after his Decease, Arfinoe, who was not pleased with this Contract, considered how to break it. She caused Berenice, with the Kingdom of Cyrene, to be offered to Demetrius, Brother of Antigonus (a). This Offer was accepted: Demetrius immediately embarked, and had so favourable a Passage, that he soon came to the sight of Berenice. He was a handsome Man, and valued himself the more upon it, as he soon perceived the Impression, which his Beauty had made on the Heart of Arfinoe. He neglected the Daughter, to make himself more acceptable to the Mother: He treated the Soldierly with Contempt; in short, he rendered himself so odious, that the whole People turned their Thoughts on the Son of Ptolomy. It was resolved to make away with Demetrius; and the Means of doing it were concerted with Berenice (b). Ruffians were set to murder him, at a Time when he had appointed to lie with Arfinoe [B]. This Lady, hearing her Daughter's Voice, who stood at the Door, and commanded them to spare her Mother, covered her Gallant's Body with her own, as well as she could; but her Endeavours were in vain. He lost his Life; after which the Marriage of Berenice with the Son of Ptolomy was consummated (c). Justin, if I mistake not, is the only Historian, who informs us of this: I am surprized at it; for an Action of this Nature highly deserved to be taken notice of. What is still more strange, is, that no one informs us what became of Arfinoe, nor whence she sprung, nor what became of Berenice; and, so far from any one's relating, that Ptolomy Evergetes, the Son of Philadelphus, married her, it is on the contrary affirmed, that he married Cleopatra (d). Note, that Ptolomy Evergetes had a Son, called Magas (e), from whence it may be conjectured, that his Wife's Father's Name was Magas, as Justin reports. I shall remark some Errors of Mr Moreri [C], and one of Mr Menage [D].

(d) See Mat- thias The-
atr. Histor.
pag. 363.
He cites no Author; but we find in Josephus
Antiq. lib.
XII, cap. 4,
that the Wife of Ptolomy Evergetes was called Cleopatra.

(e) Plut in Agide & Cleomene,
pag. 820.

[A] The Wife of Magas, King of Cyrene. In the Editions of Justin, he is called Agas; but good Critics have observed, long ago, that it must be read Magas; they add, that Pausanias, Polianus, and Athenæus call him so (1). It may be objected, perhaps, that He, whom Pausanias mentions, was not the Husband of our Arfinoe; for He was Brother, by the Mother's side, of Ptolomy Philadelphus; whereas the Husband of Arfinoe was the Brother of Ptolomy Evergetes. This is the History of Magas, according to Pausanias. He was the Son of Berenice, and of Philip, a Macedonian of mean Extraction. Eurydice, Antipater's Daughter, having been married to Ptolomy, the Son of Lagus, carried This Berenice into Egypt; who lay with Ptolomy, and, among other Children, brought him Ptolomy Philadelphus, who reigned after his Father. She caused the Government of Cyrene to be given to her Son Magas; who married Apama, the Daughter of King Antiochus, and had a great Difference with Ptolomy Philadelphus. This is the Magas of Pausanias (2). Is it not plain, then, may any one say, that This cannot be the Magas of Justin, who was married to Arfinoe, and who died about the time that the Son of Pyrrius was restored to the Kingdom of Epirus (3). The Critics may reply, that Magas, King of Cyrene, having reigned fifty Years (4), he might very well have lived till the Restoration of the Son of Pyrrius, which the best Chronologers place in the Year of Rome 493 (5), which was the Twenty fifth of the Reign of Ptolomy Philadelphus. So that, instead of saying, as is commonly done, that Justin (6) speaks of Ptolomy Evergetes in his Twenty sixth Book, it must be asserted, that he speaks of Ptolomy Philadelphus; and that it is to him that he gives Magas, King of Cyrene, as a Brother: that, if he calls Arfinoe the Wife of Magas, it is no proof, that His Magas differs from This of Pausanias; since the same King of Cyrene might have been successively married to Apama, the Daughter of Antiochus, and to our Arfinoe. By the way, the Wars, wherein he was engaged against Ptolomy Philadelphus, according to Pausanias, agree very well with the Magas mentioned by Justin. "Rex Cyrenarum Agas decessit, qui, ante infirmitatem,

"Berenicem unicam filiam, ad finienda cum Ptolomæo fratres certamina, filio ejus deponderat (7). — Agas, King of Cyrene, died, who, before his Weakness, had betrothed his only Daughter Berenice to the Son of his Brother Ptolomy, in order to put an End to all Contests." I confess, this does not seem to agree with the Magas, mentioned by Athenæus; for he was one, who, enjoying Peace, was immersed in Pleasure and Idleness, and grew so fat with eating, that his very Grease choked him (8). But this Objection is not unanswerable; may not a Prince, in the space of fifty Years Reign, be engaged in some Wars, and live afterwards in a long Repose?

(7) Justin,
lib. XXVI,
cap. 3.

(8) Athenæus,
lib. 12, pag.
550.

[B] Ruffians were set to murder him, at a Time when he had appointed to lie with Arfinoe. The Jewish Bisellius thought this Circumstance matter of Admiration. "Adulteris autem, says he (9), duobus illis, Berenice cæ filiâ mœchæ concia, tenæ per dispositos percussores ita sunt insidiæ (quod mireris) ut in ipso flagrantis sceleris ardore deprehensis superveniens adulteræ filia, mœchique conjunx, Berenice pro thalami nefandi foribus subsistens, &c. — The Two Adulterers (which is surprizing) were so betrayed into the Hands of Assassins by Berenice the Daughter, who was conscious of the Intrigue, that, in the very Arder of their enormous Guilt, Berenice, the Daughter of the Adulteress, and betrothed to the Adulterer, surprizing them, and standing at the Door, &c." But neither the Circumstances of Time, nor Place, have any thing wonderful in them. It was easy to observe, when Demetrius went to Arfinoe's Chamber, and it was the most plausible Opportunity that the Conspirators could take.

(9) Bisellius, Rutnar. Illustrum Decade IV,
pag. 1336.
Justin says, Cui (Demetri- us) cum in lectum focens commissit, percussores immittuntur.

[C] Some Errors of Mr Moreri. I. This way of expressing himself is not exact; Magas gave his Daughter Berenice in Marriage to Ptolomy: The Latin says Berenicem — filiam deponderat (10). — Betrothed his Daughter Bernice. Moreri's Words conceal a Fact, which is not unravelled in the Sequel of his Narrative; to wit, that Berenice continued with her Father and Mother. Quite a different thing was intended, where we read, that he was given in Marriage to the Son of a King of Egypt. That he might not therefore mislead his Readers, he should have

(10) Justin,
ubi supra.

have used the word dependere in the strictest Sense. This Observation is small in itself; but the Application of it may be of Importance to Those, who Translate. They can never too scrupulously follow This Rule; to wit, that they should avoid equivocal Expressions, and all that may hinder the Reader from entertaining the Ideas best suited to the Nature of each Subject. II. It is not true, that Justin says, that our Arfinoe was Daughter of Antiochus Soter. III. Nor, that her Husband's Name was Magus (11). IV. Nor, that this pretended Magus was the Son of Ptolomy Lagus (12). V. Nor, that she obliged her Daughter to marry Demetrius. VI. Nor, that she had a Design of setting the Crown on his Head. VII. Nor, that she was deposed. Can we sufficiently censure so bold a Liberty? This Narrative is at pleasure, without any Authority. And yet he quotes his Author. I know, that, in taking an Historian of so little Judgment, as Justin, for a Guide, there is a Necessity of supplying several Circumstances; but then notice should be given, that they are supplied, and not imposed on us as a Translation of Justin. I have often said, that this Abbreviator had but little Judgment; and I am certain, that Trogus Pompeius would exclaim a thousand times against him, did he but know in what a sad Condition his Work is left by this Epitomizer. He would lose himself in the Errors of his Abbreviator. Almost all the Antiochus's, the Ptolomy's, and the Antigonus's, appear in his History without their Marks of Distinction: It is uncertain, whether he speaks of the Father, or the Son, or the Grand Son; and it must be guessed at for the most part: He has not taken the Trouble to tell us, whether This Marriage of Berenice was consummated or no. A fine Question, you will say! And yet he ought expressly to have affirmed, or denied, it; for it is not improbable, that One, who observed, with Joy, that he was beloved by the Mother, should readily agree, to defer his Marriage with the Daughter. You will answer me, perhaps, that Justin gives Arfinoe the Title of Mother-in-Law to Demetrius; nimis placeat sacri caperat; but I reply, that, after this, he gives Berenice the Title of Virgin; que res suspensa primo virgini; and, consequently, one of these Phrases overthrows the other; which is a shrewd Suspicion, that he does not employ his Terms in the most exact Sense: Justin's Index, in the Edition of Mr Grævius, gives Berenice only the Title of Betrothed (13). However that be, Justin, and many other Epitomizers, never consider, that Abridgments ought to resemble Pygmies, who have all the Parts of a perfect human Body, tho' each of them in Miniature. Contract the Parts of a Narration in an Abridgment as much as you please, but cut off none. Let us reckon Mr Moreri's contradicting himself for the eighth Fault. He will have it here, that Berenice, the Wife of Ptolomy Evergetes, was the Daughter of Magus, and yet affirms elsewhere (14), that she was this Ptolomy's own Sister.

[D] I shall observe one Error of Mr Menage.] It is in his Annotation on these Words of Diogenes Laërtius: Δημήτριος τὸ πλυνσάριον εἰς Κυρηνεὶν ἐπὶ πλὴν νεοθίναι λυγίσαι (Ἀρετσίλαος) (15). Demetrius qui Cyrenem (16) navigavit amasse plurimum dicitur (Arcefilas). "I do not wonder, says "Mr Menage, that This Philosopher, who was so fond of young Boys, should fall in love with Demetrius, whose Beauty seems to have been very extraordinary, and was, at last, fatal to him, for he "was killed in the Embraces of his Mother-in-law." In novæ concubitus casus est. Justin, cited by Mr Menage, gives no Authority for saying, that Arfinoe had such a Relation to the Minion of Arcefilas. It had been much better for him to have taken notice of the Faults of the Latin Interpretation (17).

(13) Demetrius à SPONSA sua interficitur, 26, 3, 7.

THE Qualifications of a good Abridger. See Remark [A] of the Article DOMITIA.

(14) In the 2d Article BERENICE.

(15) Diogenes Laërtius in Arcesilaus, lib. 4, n. 41.

(16) The Editions have it, cum in Cyrenem navigasset; which is false; for the Answer of Arcefilas as did not commence after the Voyage to Cyrene.

(17) See the preceding Marginal Note.

ARTABANUS, the Son of Hyrtaspes [A], and Brother of Darius I, of That Name, King of Persia, is represented to us, by Herodotus, as a wife Man, who always opposed those pompous Expeditions, which were so fatal to the Persian Monarchy (a). He was not of Opinion that Darius ought to attack the Scythians (b); and much less that Xerxes should engage himself in a War with the Greeks. Herodotus has preferred to us the solid Reasons, on which his Advice was grounded [B], and the Judgment he gave on the prodigious Army both for Sea and Land Service, with which Xerxes prepared to pass from Asia into Europe (c). The Difficulties, which Artabanus represented to him, made the King choose to send him back into Persia, to command there in his Absence, rather than have his Attendance in the Expedition (d). The Event demonstrated how judiciously, and faithfully, he had advised. He did not however always preserve This Fidelity; for he conspired against Xerxes, and slew him (e); and afterwards drew in Artaxerxes, the Son of Xerxes, to make away with his Brother Darius: he drew him into it, I say, by making him believe, that Darius was the Murderer of Xerxes. But Artaxerxes discovered the Truth soon after, and killed Artabanus as he was pulling off his Cuirass (f). Diodorus Siculus differs from Justin, as to the manner of Artabanus's being punished for his Crime (g). We shall see, in the Remark [B], how This Prince reasoned on Dreams, and upon the Duration of human Life.

[A] The Son of Hyrtaspes.] I cannot imagine where Mr Moreri had read, that Artabanus was a Native of Hircania. The two Authors he has quoted (1) say nothing like it. Ctesias makes the Father of Artabanus to have been a Favourite of Cambyses, named Artasgras, who, at first, favoured the Usurpation of the Magus, and afterwards the Design, formed by the seven great Lords, to expel the Magus (2).

[B] Herodotus has preferred to us the solid Reasons, on which his Advice was grounded (3).] One would think Herodotus had made it his Business to do Honour to Artabanus's Prudence and fine Sense. He never indulges his Imagination more, than when he makes This Prince argue. Xerxes, after putting himself into a great Passion, and violently abusing him, submitted to his Reasons, and thought no more of the Expedition; but two Dreams, one upon another, pushed him on to prosecute it (4). He went to Artabanus, and told him his Dreams; adding, withal, I will try whether you will have the like; take my Robes, sit on my Throne, lie in my Bed. Artabanus answers, That he was not worthy of so much Honour; and then reasons very judiciously upon Dreams, saying, That, if there be any thing Divine in these Dreams of Xerxes, his Majesty had Reason to think, that he should have the like; "for what could we think, if a God, who had a War at Heart, and came at Night to injoin it some Monarch, who had resolved to live in Peace, should not appear, and give the same Orders, to his first Minister of State, when nothing less can make it certain whether this God does indeed desire the War? But, continues he, do not imagine, that it is therefore necessary I should take your Habit, and lie in your Bed. That I know not what to call it, which appeared to you in a Dream, is not so ignorant a Being, as to mistake me for you, by seeing me dressed in your Robes; and, if he does not think fit to address himself to Me, your Garments will no more influence him to do so, than my own." Xerxes would be absolutely obeyed: Artabanus dreamed in Conformity with his Master, and opposed the War no longer, but became the Promoter of it, though he remained greatly diffident of the Success (5). If these Things were true, ought we not to conclude, that they had for their Author That Spirit, which was a Liar and a Murderer from the beginning; for Xerxes was threatened with great

Disgrace,

(11) His Name, in the Editions of Justin, is Agas; his true Name is Magas.

(12) He was the Son of one Philip, and the Mistress of This Ptolomy.

(a) Herodotus, lib. 4, cap. 83.

(b) Id. ibid.

(c) Ibid. cap. 49, & seq.

(d) Id. lib. 7, c. 52, 53.

(e) Diodorus, lib. 11, Justin, lib. 3, cap. 1.

(f) Justin, lib. 3.

(g) Diodorus, lib. 11, Siculus, lib. 11.

(1) Diodorus Siculus, lib. 11, and Justin, lib. 3. It should have been Justin, lib. 3, cap. 1.

(2) In Persia, cap. 13, 14, 20.

(3) Herodotus, lib. 3, c. 10.

(4) Id. lib. 7, cap. 15, & seq.

A REFLECTION of Artabanus on Dreams, and on the Duration of human Life.

(5) Herodotus, lib. 7, c. 47.

(6) Id. ib.
cap. 14.

Disgrace, if he desisted from That Enterprize (6). At another Time, Artabanus reasoned, in a very uncommon manner, on the Shortness of human Life; a Subject, which had caused Xerxes to weep, at the Sight of his numberless Army (7). "We live but too long," says he; our Life, short as it is, is long enough to turn our Brain, and make us often wish for Death, as an easy Refuge from the Miseries that overwhelm us. If Life is, nevertheless, seasoned with an agreeable Relish, it is an Argument, that God is envious of human Happiness."

Would not the Greek Philosophers have said of this way of thinking, as Pyrrhus, upon his viewing the Roman Army; The Order of Battle of these Barbarians, said he, and their Manner of encamping, have nothing of the Barbarian in them (8)? Christianity only can rectify this. It is to be observed, that Herodotus was very well acquainted with the Vanities, and Miseries, of Mankind; but he affected a little too much to trace the Causes of them in the Envy, or Malignity, of the Gods. Plutarch has condemned him for it (9).

(8) Plutarch, in Pyrrho, pag. 393.

(9) See Remark [K], of the Article PERICLES, towards the End.

(a) About 240 Years before CHRIST.

ARTABANUS I, King of Parthia, the seventh from Arfaces, Founder of the Monarchy (a), was the Son of Priapatus, and Brother of Phrabates and Mithridates [A], who had all three reigned successively over the Parthians. He succeeded his Nephew Phrabates, and died soon after of a Wound in the Arm, which he received in the War he made against the Tibogarians (b).

(b) Justin, lib. 42. c. 2.

[A] He was the Son of Priapatus, and Brother of Phrabates, and Mithridates. Mr Moreri makes him the Son of Phrabates I, and Uncle to Phrabates II; but these are two incompatible Relations; for Phrabates II was the Son of Mithridates, who was Brother to Phrabates I; how then could a Son of Phrabates I be Uncle to Phrabates II? This is the Reason, why, though Justin gives Priapatus but two Sons, I have given him a third, namely, Artabanus I. When Authors explain themselves ill, we must take this Liberty with them. Justin relates two Things (1). I. That Priapatus, dying in the Twenty fifth Year of his Reign, left two Sons, the elder of whom, named Phrabates, reigned before his younger Brother Mithridates. II. That Phrabates, the Son of Mithridates, reigned after his Father, and that his Paternal Uncle Artabanus was his Successor (2). How confused is this! He mentions Mithridates, and Phrabates, as the only Sons of Priapatus, and yet intimates, that he had another, since, otherwise, Artabanus could not be Paternal Uncle to Mithridates's Son. I have, in vain, searched for a Solution of this Difficulty, in several Commentators on Justin, and also in the Notes of the last French Translator (3).

(2) Id. lib. 42, cap. 1, 2.

(3) He takes the Title of Monfieur D. L. M. His Translation was printed at Amsterdam, 1694, from the Paris Edition of 1693.

(v) Justin, lib. 41, c. 5.

ARTABANUS II, King of Parthia, when he was only King of the Medes [A], was called by the Parthians, to reign over them, in Exclusion of Vonones, whom they had sent for to Rome, and whom Tiberius had very freely granted them (a). Artabanus was of the Race of the Arfacidæ as well as Vonones, and had this farther Advantage, that he was not become obnoxious to That People by a Roman Education (b). The first Battle was fortunate to Vonones; but he came off so ill in the second, that he was forced to fly into Armenia [B]. The victorious Artabanus would not let him rest there; and, as Tiberius had not promised Vonones the necessary Protection (c), he was forced to quit Armenia, and retire to Silanus, Governor of Syria. This contributed greatly to secure the Crown on the Head of Artabanus, which he received about the Seven Hundred and sixty ninth Year of Rome, and sixteenth of the 1st Century. However, he was not easy at the Continuance of his Rival in Syria (d); for the Communication of Intelligence, being quick and easy, kept up the Spirit of Faction: He therefore sent an Embassy to Germanicus to renew the Alliance between them, and insisted, at the same time, that Vonones should be obliged to leave Syria. The Success of This Embassy is not known; but it is certain, that, after the Death of Germanicus, the King of the Parthians grew very haughty towards the Romans, and cruel to his own People (e). He was so elated with his good Fortune in the Wars he had waged with several neighbouring Nations, that, without any regard to Tiberius, whose grey Hairs he despised, he seized upon Armenia [C], and

(a) Joseph, Antiq. lib. 18, cap. 3.

(b) Tacit, Annal. lib. 2, cap. 2.

(c) Id. ib. cap. 4.

(d) Id. ib. cap. 58.

(e) Id. ib. lib. 6. c. 31.

[A] When he was only King of the Medes. Moreri and Hofman have both said, that Tacitus makes him King of the Dacians. This is what That Historian never dreamed of; he only says, that Artabanus had been educated among the Dabæ; Artabanus Arfacidarum sanguine apud Dabas adultus exiit (1). There is a great deal of Difference between the Dabæ and the Dacians; and he must have his Thoughts otherwise employed, (to say no worse,) who could believe, that a Parthian Prince had been educated near the Danube.

[B] Vonones — his Competitor came off so ill in the second Battle, that he was forced to fly into Armenia. Mr Moreri has published two other Falsities. He has made Vonones obtain two Victories over the Parthians, who yet had the better of his Competitor but once (2); and he attributes one Defeat of Artabanus's Army to Vitellius; a Defeat, I say, followed by other Losses of Artabanus, towards the Year 36. But I. It is false, that Vitellius defeated the Troops of this King of the Parthians; II. It is certain, that the Mischief Vitellius did him, by Intrigues and Money, was not 'till after other Losses. Mr Hofman also ascribes two Victories to Vonones, and one to Vitellius, which, he says, was the Cause of Artabanus's abandoning Armenia. A Mistake; yet infinitely more excusable, than what this Writer has committed after Lloyd and Charles Stephens, in saying, that Artabanus, being a great Enemy to Tiberius, seized upon Armenia, and was killed by a Persian Soldier, whose Name was Artaxerxes; after whom there were no more Kings of the Parthians, but only of Persia. A prodigious Anachronism! See the Article ARTABANUS IV.

[C] Without any regard to Tiberius — he seized upon Armenia. It is impossible to be more insulted, than This Emperor was by Artabanus; who no sooner perceived, that his Invasion of Armenia was an Injury, which Tiberius did not revenge, but he attacked Cappadocia (3). But what can be more feverish, than the Letters he wrote to him? Let us here Suetonius; "Quin & Artabani Parthorum regis laceratus est literis, parricida & caedes & ignaviam & luxuriam obiectis, monentisque ut voluntaria morte maximo iustissimoque civium odio quam primum satisfaceret (4). — He was also stung with Letters from Artabanus, King of the Parthians, reproaching him with his Indolence, Luxury, Murders, and Parricides, and advising him, by laying violent Hands on himself, to give immediate Satisfaction to the extremest Hatred, and just Resentment of his Subjects." There was, certainly, some personal Averision in the Case; for Artabanus behaved very civilly, and even very humbly, towards Tiberius's Successor. Let us hear Suetonius again. "Artabanus Parthorum rex odium semper contemp-

(3) Dion, lib. 58, sub. fin.

(4) Suet, in Tiber, cap. 66.

(1) Tacit, Ann. lib. 2, cap. 3.

(2) Joseph, Antiq. lib. 18, cap. 3. Tacit ibid.

and gave it to his Eldest Son Arfaces [D]. He sent to demand all the Treasures, which Vonones had deposited in Syria and Cilicia (f), and, in rodontade, gave out, that, if all that Cyrus and Alexander had been posselt of were not restored to him, he would come and take it by force. The Malecontents at Court deputed private Messengers to Tiberius, desiring him to send them Pbrabates, the Son of King Pbrabates (g). This was readily granted; and, when it was known, That this Prince, endeavouring to live after the manner of the Partians, to which he had been a long time disused, had fallen sick, and was dead, Tiridates, who was of the House of the Arfacidæ, and nearly related to Pbrabates, was substituted in his Place. Another Adversary was at the same time stirred up against Artabanus, namely Pbarasmanes King of Iberia. Artabanus was worsted from this Quarter; for, after his Son, King of Armenia, had been poisoned, his other Son Orodes, whom he had sent into Armenia, was defeated there by Pbarasmanes. Some time after, he was beaten there himself, and being obliged to advance towards the Provinces, which Vitellius, Governor of Syria, threatened (b), there remained no Obstacle to hinder Mitbridates, Brother of Pbarasmanes, from becoming King of Armenia (i). This Loss of Artabanus was soon followed by a greater. Vitellius, by his Money and Intrigues, obliged him to quit That Country, and retire into Hircania, where he was reduced to live upon what he could get by Hunting (k), while Vitellius put Tiridates in Possession of his Kingdom. But so powerful a Party was formed against the new King, that it was no hard matter for Artabanus, who was recalled, to compel so weak a Prince as Tiridates, to retire (l). This happened in the thirty sixth Year of the 1st Century. Artabanus's former Pride was now sufficiently mortified: He courted the Friendship of Caligula (m), and when he found that his Design of carrying the War into Syria (n), was in danger of miscarrying thro' the Diligence of Vitellius, he agreed to an Interview with This Roman, and to a Treaty of Peace, the Conditions of which were to the Advantage of Caligula. Ten Years after, he was deposed, and forced to retire to Izates, King of Adiabene (o), by whom he was received in a most generous manner, and not with bare Compliments. For Izates negotiated the Matter with the Partians, in such a manner, that he obliged them to set him again upon the Throne; and Cinna himself, who had been advanced in his Room, was the Person, who replaced the Diadem upon his Head. There is Reason to believe, that Artabanus died a little after; but whether by the Treachery of Gotarzes his Son, or Brother [E], or otherwise, is uncertain.

(f) In the Year of Rome 783.

(g) Tacit. lib. 6, cap. 32, & seq.

(b) Id. ib. cap. 36.

(i) Dio, l. 8. sub fin.

(k) In Hircania reportur est inluvie obitus, & alimenta arcu expeditionis. Tacit. Annal. lib. 6. cap. 42.

(c) Id. in Calig. c. 14.

(6) Dio, lib. 59.

(7) Joseph. Antiq. l. 18. cap. 6.

(8) Id. ib. cap. 3.

(9) Fama occidit falso creditur exterruit Partios, victoriamque concecit. Tacit. Annal. lib. 6. c. 35.

(10) Joseph. lib. 18. c. 3.

(11) Tillem. Hist. des Empere. ad Ann. 47. pag. 56. Edit. de Bructius.

(f) Id. ib. cap. 44.

(m) Sueton. in Calig. cap. 14. See Remark [C].

(n) Dio, lib. 59.

(o) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 20, cap. 20.

"tumque Tiberii præ se ferens, amicitiam Caligulæ ultro petit, venitque ad colloquium legati confusus, & transfretus Euphratem aquilas & signa Romana Cælarumque imagines adoravit (5). — Artabanus, King of the Parthians, always discovering an Hatred and Contempt of Tiberius, industriously sought the Friendship of Caligula, and came to confer with the Consular Embassadors, and passing over the Euphrates, he paid Adoration to the Roman Eagles and Standards, and to the Images of the Cæsars." Dion remarks, that Vitellius obliged Artabanus to sacrifice to the Statues of Augustus and Caligula, and to give his Children for Hostages, after having agreed to the Treaty of Peace, which he prescribed to him (6). This shews Josephus to be mistaken, in believing the Interview between Vitellius and Artabanus, with all it's Consequences, to have happened under Tiberius (7). According to Him, it was to Tiberius, that Darius, the Son of Artabanus, was sent as an Hostage, with rich Presents, and a Giant, a Jew by Nation, and Elazar by Name, who was seven Cubits high.

[D] He gave Armenia to his Eldest Son Arfaces.] Thus Tacitus and Dion name him. Josephus calls him Orodes (8), confounding one of Artabanus's Children with the other. His Son Orodes was not King of Armenia, but was sent thither to revenge the Death of his elder Brother Arfaces, and had like to have been killed in the Attempt; for having, in the Battle, engaged personally with Pbarasmanes, King of Iberia, he was dangerously wounded, but not killed, as was immediately given out, to the great Discouragement of the Partians (9), and as Josephus has since affirmed, in his Jewish Antiquities (10).

[E] Artabanus died — by the Treachery of Gotarzes, his Son, or Brother.] The manner, in which the exact Mr de Tillemont expresses himself, is fallacious. Artabanus, says he (11), died soon after, by the Treachery of Gotarzes, his Brother, according to Tacitus, or rather his Son, as Josephus affirms.

Every Reader will imagine, from these Words, that Josephus lays, that Artabanus was put to death by his Son Gotarzes, when not a Syllable is to be met with to this Purpose. So far from it, he mentions Artabanus as dying of a Distemper, and succeeded by his Son Varadanus, whose Successor he makes to be Artabanus's other Son, Gotarzes. It is strange, that Tacitus and Josephus should agree so little in the main Circumstances of Matters so near their own Time! The latter gives Artabanus a peaceable Death, and several Sons: The former makes him perish with his Wife and Son by the Treachery of his Brother; which seems to import, that Artabanus had but one Son. One cannot tell which side to take, considering that Tacitus is not wholly free from Contradiction. First, he will have Gotarzes to be the Brother of Artabanus; a little after he makes him the Brother of Bardanes, and intimates very clearly, that Bardanes was the Son of Artabanus; for he represents him in a great Rage with the Seleucians, not so much because they did not submit to him, as because they had been Rebels against his Father. In quos, ut patris sui quoque desultores, ira magis quam ex ipse presentis accensus (12). Who is this Father, if not Artabanus? I should be almost tempted to believe, that this Artabanus, mentioned by Tacitus (13), was the Son, who had already succeeded, or who was to succeed King Artabanus, and that Gotarzes, another Son of King Artabanus, murdered this Brother, to make his own way to the Throne, and, for the greater Security, involved the Mother and Son in the same Destruction with the Father. This Conjecture clears all Contradictions. But there are other Differences between Josephus and Tacitus. The latter makes Gotarzes die a natural Death, and gives him Vinnes for Successor, and his Son Vologes after him (14). Josephus makes Gotarzes perish by the Treachery of his Subjects, and his Brother Vologes to be his immediate Successor (15).

(12) Tacit. Annal. l. 11. cap. 8.

(13) Inter Gotarzes pleaque secula (qui necem fratri Artabanus conjungit ac filio ejus properaverat, [ut] se read prepararent) unde metus ejus in ceteros accituerat. Tacit. lib. 18. c. 3.

(14) Idem, lib. 12. cap. 14.

(15) Joseph. lib. 20. c. 2.

ARTABANUS III, King of the Partians, Successor, and perhaps Son, of Vologes, whom Suetonius mentions as a great Friend of Nero and Vespasian, lived in the Reign

Reign of the Emperor Titus. This is what Zonaras informs us of after this manner (a). He says, that an Assiatic, whose Name was Terentius Maximus, pretending to be Nero, prevailed with some of his own Countrymen, and a great many other Persons towards the Euphrates, to believe it, and at last retired to Artabanus, King of the Parthians, who, being then displeased with Titus, received the Impostor very kindly, and prepared to re-inthronise him [A].

[A] Received the Impostor very kindly, and prepared to re-inthronise him.] Although there were more than one counterfeit Nero, yet few will believe this Terentius Maximus to have been any other, than the Impostor, mentioned by Suetonius. And, if it be objected, that the latter did not appear 'till twenty Years after the Death of Nero, that is, in the seventh Year of Domitian; it may be answered, that Zonaras is not incapable of confounding one Reign with another; and that, after all, it must be something surprizing, that, in so short a time, two Impostors should meet with so great Encouragement in the same Country, or, if they did, that they should not both be recorded by the Historian, who speaks of One of them, as of a singular Adventure. The Impostor, mentioned by Suetonius, was very powerfully protected by the Parthians. "Cum post viginti annos adolefcente me extitisset conditionis incertæ qui se Neronem esse jactaret, tam favorable nomen ejus apud Parthos fuit, ut vehementer adjutus & vix redditus sit (1). — Twenty Years after the Death of that Emperor, when I was a Lad, a Person, of unknown Condition, gave out, that he was Nero, and was so strongly supported in his Pretensions by the Parthians, that he was defeated with great Difficulty."

(a) Zonaras in Tito ad Ann. circiter, 80.

(1) Sueton. in Neron. sub. finem.

ARTABANUS IV. was the last King of the Parthians; for Artaxerxes, a Persian by Nation, having deprived him of his Crown and Life in the Year 229, took upon him the Title of King of Persia, which his Successors continued as long as That Monarchy lasted. The Reign of Artabanus had been glorious enough, and had given some Trouble to the Romans, who were not at all behind hand in making suitable Returns. He was so imprudent as not to keep upon his Guard, while the Emperor Severus ravaged the Neighbouring Countries; and was taking his Rest under the Security of a Peace, when he found the Roman Forces on a sudden pouring in upon his Dominions. All that he could do was to save himself with a small Guard (a). The City of Ctesiphon, in which he kept his Residence, was plundered, and all his Treasures and Moveables fell into the Hands of the Enemy (b). But this foul Play was nothing in comparison of the perfidious Trick, which Caracalla played him. This Emperor sent Ambassadors to him with rich Presents to demand his Daughter in Marriage, and alledged an hundred fine Things, which would result from That Alliance, to the Honour and Advantage of both Nations (c). Artabanus at first rejected the Proposal, foreseeing no Concord in This Marriage, considering the Difference of Language and Customs, between his Daughter and a Roman Emperor. At last Caracalla's repeated Instances, his Oaths, his Proteftations of Love for his future Ennephres, obtained the Father's Consent. But, all this while, Caracalla was meditating such a Scene of Villany, as may be taken for the Model, or at least the rough Draught, of the St Bartholomew of Catherine de Medicis. He marched with his Army into the Country of the Parthians, and was every where received as the King's Son-in-Law; and, upon his advancing towards the Capital, Artabanus went out to meet him, accompanied with an infinite Number of his People. The Parthians thought of nothing but shewing their Joy, in Feasting, Singing, and Dancing, when Caracalla gave the Signal to his Soldiers to fall on This unarmed Multitude. They killed as many of them as they pleased, there not being any in a Condition to resist. Artabanus had much ado to save himself. From that Day Caracalla did nothing but plunder and burn; till, tired with his Ravages, he returned into Mesopotamia, where he was assassinated. Artabanus, being eager to revenge the Injury which he had suffered, marched with all possible Expedition against the Roman Army, which had elected Macrinus in the room of Caracalla. The Battle, having continued two whole Days from Morning till Night, was renewed upon the Third, and, in all probability, would have lasted till one or other Army had been quite destroyed, if Macrinus had not found means of acquainting Artabanus with the tragical End of Caracalla, and of declaring, that he himself disapproved what had passed, and was willing to restore all the Prisoners and Booty then in his Possession, and to live in Peace with him. Artabanus accepted these Offers, and a Peace was concluded between Him and the New Emperor in the Year 217. He was the first, who took upon him the Title of The Great King, and wore a double Diadem [A]. His evil Destiny

(a) Herodian. lib. 3, cap. 9.

(b) In the Year 220, according to Calvisius.

(c) Herodian. lib. 4, cap. 10, & seq.

[A] He was the first, who took upon him the Title of the Great King, and wore a double Diadem (1).] I have cited my Author, and it is very true, that Herodian, in the place cited, has these Words: Ἀρταβανὸν τε τὸν πρῶτον καλούμενον τὸν μέγαν βασιλέα, καὶ οὕτως διαδήμασι χρῶμενον ἀποκρίνας (2). Aque Artabano, qui rex magnus primus appellatus est, duplicique diademate utebatur, necem intulisse. But I believe his Meaning is, that, before Artabanus IV. no King of Partia assumed this Title of The Great King; and he would be much mistaken, if he should say absolutely, that he was the first Prince, who called himself so; it being certain, that the ancient Kings of Persia used This Style, as appropriated to themselves. See the Twenty fourth Verse of Æschylus's Persians, and Stanley's Observations upon It. He quotes the Testimonies of Dion Chrysostome, Orat. 3. of Josephus, in Antiquit. lib. 11. cap. 6. of Herodotus, lib. 8. and lib. 5. of Xenophon, in Expedit. lib. 1. of Aristides, in Romæ Encomio, of Suidas, in μέγας βασιλεύς. Mr du Rondel informed me of This Passage of Stanley. We may add, to these Authors, Plato, in Gorgia, pag. 321. C. Plutarch, in Vita Cimonis, pag. 485. E. The Book of Esther, cap. xvi. ver. 1. Read also the Panegyric of Isocrates, and you will find in it the Complaint of That Orator against the Greeks of his Time, who, in their common Discourse, gave the pompous Title

(1) Herodian. lib. 2, cap. 2, pag. 257.

(2) Id. ibid.

Destiny raised him up a formidable Enemy in the Year 226; I mean That Artaxerxes, who maintained his Rebellion with such Courage and Success, that, in three Years Time, he put an end to the Partbian Monarchy.

of The Great King to the Monarch of Persia. Οὐ βασιλῆα τὸν μέγαν αὐτὸν ἀποκαλοῦμεν, ὡς περ αἰχμάλωτος γεγνημένος (3). Do we not call him the Great King, as though we were his Captives? Note, that the Kings of Persia were not the first, who assumed this Title. The Kings of Assyria had used it, as may be collected from the eighteenth Chapter of the second Book of Kings (4), where we find the Words of the Ambassadors of Sennacherib.

(4) Verfes 19, and 28.

I remember the Answer, which Father Goulu made to a Criticism upon a Passage of his Translation of Socrates's Apology. Let us first produce the Words of the Critic. "Je ne sçay de quoy l'acuser; si ce n'est d'une ignorance volontaire, en un passage de son Apologie de Socrates, où il lui fait dire: Je m'affure que quand ce seroit le Grand Seigneur, & non pas une personne de basse condition, qu'il préféreroit une nuit semblable à celle-là à toutes les nuits & à tous les autres jours de sa vie, &c. Je voudroy bien luy demander si ce Grand Seigneur n'est pas le Turc; & si c'est lui, comment Socrates en pouvoit parler, si ce n'estoit par prophétie, puis qu'il n'y peut pas avoir huit cent ans que les Ottomans ont commencé leur Tyrannie, & qu'il y en a plus de treize cens du siècle de Socrates au leur, à compter depuis l'année quatriesme où il est né dans la soixante & dixseptiesme Olympiade (5). — I am at a loss how to charge him, except with wilful Ignorance, in a Passage of the Apology of Socrates, where he makes Socrates say: I am persuaded, that, were he the Grand Seigneur, and not a Person of mean Condition, he would prefer a Night like That before all other Nights and Days of his Life, &c. I would fain know of him whether this Grand Seigneur of his be not the Turk; and, if he be, how Socrates could speak of him, except by way of Prophecy; since the Turks began their Empire not quite Eight hundred Years ago, and the Age, in which Socrates lived, was above Thirteen hundred before That, reckoning from the fourth Year (in which he was born) of the LXXVIIIth Olympiad." Here follows the Refutation of this Criticism. "Un habile Homme m'auroit épar- gné une réponse, en ne me faisant pas une demande si fotté. Mais, Patience; répondons à cet ignorant. Ouy, Paladin (6), le Turc est aujourd'hui celui qu'on nomme Grand Seigneur. Mais, du tems de Socrates, c'étoit le Roy des Perles, qu'on appelloit de la sorte, & qu'on ne nommoit point autrement. Aus autres Rois, dit Suidas, on donne la titre des Etats & des pais qui sont de leur Obeissance, & pour ce on dit le Roi de Macedoine, & le Roi des Lacedemoniens. Celui des Perles se qualifie simplement le Grand Roi, ou le Grand Seigneur, μέγας βασιλεύς, μέγας δεσπότης. Et, comme il portoit le titre de Grand Seigneur, ses Sujets prenoient le qualité d'esclaves, & la Cour s'appelloit la Porte, ses Courtisans οἱ ἐπὶ θύραις βασιλέως, ceux qui estoient à la porte du Roi. L'Empereur de Turcs lui a succédé au Titre de Grand Seigneur, aussi bien qu'en la meilleure partie de ses Roiaumes, & en la forme de son Gouvernement. De façon que, sans révélation & sans prophétie, Socrates à pu parler du Grand Seigneur, de quoi le Paladin ne l'a pu reprendre sans decouvrir son avarice. Mais, de le renvoyer à Herodote, à Thucydide, & aus autres bons Auteurs, pour apprendre la vérité de ce que je dis, ce seroit à moi pêne perduë. Car le pauvre malheureux confesse qu'il n'a point de livres, n'i d'argent pour en acheter; & à pêne ceux qui ont des Bibliothèques lui voudroient confier les leurs; & puis, il n'y entend du tout rien. Je me contenterai donc de l'envoyer étudier l'Histoire des Turcs au bout de pont neuf; où les colporteurs estallent leurs images, à fin que, sans qu'il lui coûte rien, il apprenne dans les Cartes, où les Empereurs des Turcs font figurez en taille douce, depuis quel temps les Ottomans sont devenus Grand Seigneurs, s'il y a 800 ans, comme dit le Paladin, ou bien si c'est depuis trois siècles seulement (7). — A Man of tolerable Sense would have spared me an Answer, by not asking so foolish a

(5) Discours d'Ariflarque à Nicandre sur les fautes de Phylarque, p. 120, 121.

(6) He makes use of this word, because he had to do with Javerfac, against whom a Satire had appeared intitled, La défaite de Paladin Javerfac, i. e. Javerfac the Knight-Errant defeated. See his Article.

(7) Achatas à Palemon pour la Défense de Phylarque, pag. 43.

Question. But, Patience; let us answer this ignorant Fellow. Yes, most renowned Don Quixote, the Turk is at this Time called the Grand Seigneur. But, in Socrates's Time, the King of Persia was called so, and by no other Name. Other Kings, says Suidas, take their Titles from the Dominions and Countries under their Obedience; and therefore we say, the King of Macedonia, and the King of the Lacedemonians. The Persian Monarch calls himself only the Great King, or the Grand Seigneur, μέγας βασιλεύς, μέγας δεσπότης. And, as he bore the Title of Grand Seigneur, his Subjects took upon them the Quality of Slaves; his Court was called the Port, and his Courtiers οἱ ἐπὶ θύραις βασιλέως, They who stood at the King's Gate. The Emperor of the Turks has succeeded him in the Title of Grand Seigneur, as well as in the best part of his Dominions, and in the Form of his Government. So that Socrates might speak of the Grand Seigneur, without Revelation or Prophecy; and our Don's Criticism does but discover him to be an arrant Ass. But it would be loss of Time for me to refer him to Herodotus, Thucydides, and other good Authors, for the truth of what I say; because the poor unhappy Creature confesses he has no Books, nor Money to buy any; and they, who have Libraries, will hardly trust him with the use of them, nor does he understand any thing at all of the Matter. I shall content myself therefore with sending him to study the History of the Turks, at the Foot of the Pontneuf, among the Printjellers, where, without any Charge, he may learn, from the Prints of the Turkish Emperors, how long it is since the Ottomans became Grand Seigneurs; whether Eight hundred Years ago, as this de la Mancha Knight pronounces, or only Three hundred." I have copied this long Passage, that the Reader, at a small Expence, and without consulting the Pieces of this famous Controversy of the General of the Feuillans, may see the coarse, rude, Manner of the Paper Wars of Those Times (8). But we must not let pass the Legerdemain of Father Goulu, who, not finding his Account in μέγας βασιλεύς, cunningly adds μέγας δεσπότης as the Words of Suidas. This will never acquit him with learned Readers; it only serves to impose on the ignorant, and brands him with Forgery in the Opinion of all others. Upon the whole, the Criticism upon his Grand Seigneur appears to be just.

To conclude; The Pride of Eastern Monarchs was not so well flattered with the lofty Title of King of Kings, as with That of The Great King; for we see, that Artabanus IV, to enhance his former Character, caused himself to be styled the Great King, rather than continue That of King of Kings, which he had received from his Predecessors. In Pompey's Time, This was commonly given to the King of Parthia; and, if Pompey did not observe This Form in writing to him, it was from a Regard to those other Kings, who were come to pay him Homage (9). Ptolemaeus assumed it in a Letter, which he wrote to Augustus (10). Suetonius has given it to the King of Parthia, who was Cotemporary with Germanicus, in the Place, where he mentions the Sorrow, which was exprest for the Death of That illustrious Roman. "Regulus quosdam barbarum possuisse, & uxorum capita rasisse ad indicium maximi luctus. REGUM ETIAM REGEM & executione venandi & convictu Megistanum abstinuisset, quod apud Parthos iustitiae instar est (11). — Several petty Kings had their Beards taken off, and their Wives Heads Shaved, as a Mark of the deepest Mourning. The King of Kings also abstained from Hunting and Feasting with his Nobles, which, among the Parthians, is like shutting up the Courts of Justice, in some public Calamity." I do not wonder at Artabanus's Taste, when I consider, that the Title of King of Kings had been much more common, than That of the Great King. The Title of King of Kings was given to Agamemnon (12). Diodorus Siculus affirms, that Oymandus and Sejoftris were so styled, the one in his Epitaph (13), the other in Inscriptions on Pillars (14). Both had reigned gloriously in Egypt. The same Title was given to Cyrus

OF THE Title of King of Kings.

(9) Plot. in Pompeio, p. 639. C.

(10) Dion. lib. 55. ad ann. 748. pag. 636.

(11) Sueton. in Caligula, cap. 5.

(12) Cicero. Epist. 14. lib. 9. ad fam. lib. p. 37. Livius, lib. 45. c. 27.

(13) Diodor. Siculus, lib. 1. cap. 47.

(14) Id. ib. cap. 55.

ARTABAZUS. ARTAVASDES. 515

(15) Strabo in his Epitaph (15) and also to Tigranes, King of Armenia (16). The Holy Scriptures apply it to Nabuchodonosor (17). Note, that the Kings of Persia, who succeeded the Kings of Partbia, continued to style themselves Kings of Kings. See Sapor's Letter to Constantius, in Ammianus Marcellinus (18), and the Annotations of Valesius on That Place. See also Trebellius Pollio, in the Life of Aurelian, and the Notes of the Commentators. Some Authors will have it, that the Emperors of Constantinople carried this Title still farther. They bore, in their Achievement of Arms, four B's, termed in Heraldry Fusils (19), which stood for βασιλεύς, βασιλεὺς βασιλεῶν βασιλεύσι, that is to say, King of Kings, reigning over Kings: Let us note, by the way, that the giving the Title of King to a tributary Prince was out of pure Pride.

(19) Bodin, de la Republique, liv. 1. ch. 9. sub. fin. pag. 211.

(18) Ammian. Marcell. lib. 17. cap. 5. pag. 163. ad. ann. 357. Biffeliius, Ruinarum Illustr. dec. 4. pag. 645. affert falsum, ubi Capitolinus has taken Notice of this Letter.

ARTABAZUS, the Son of Pharnaces, commanded the Partbians, and the Ghorasmians, in the Expedition of Xerxes (a). It was He, who, after the Battle of Salamis, escorted the King his Master as far as the Hellepont with 60000 select Soldiers (b). As soon as Xerxes was passed into Asia, Artabazus returned back, and, in his way, thought himself obliged to punish the City of Potidaea, which had cast off the Persian Yoke on the News of their ill Fortune. He besieged it a very long time, without being able to take it, by reason of Innundations, arising from tempestuous Weather. He was more fortunate in the Siege of Olinthus. He disapproved the Resolution taken to leave Mardonius in Europe (c), and it was wholly against his Advice, that Mardonius engaged in the Battle of Platea, which was so fatal to the Persians. Artabazus, who had foreseen what happened, preserved the 40000 Men, whom he commanded, and with much Prudence brought them back into Asia [A]. Mr Moreri shews no Discernment in this Matter. See the Remark.

(a) Herodot. lib. 7. c. 66.

(b) Id. lib. 8. cap. 126.

(c) Id. lib. 9. cap. 65, 88.

[A] Preserved the Forty Thousand Men, whom he commanded, and with much Prudence brought them back into Asia. Mr Moreri says, that Artabazus gathered together the broken Remains of the Army. This is not understanding the Author, whom he quotes. Herodotus plainly informs us, that Artabazus kept these Forty Thousand Men apart as a Body of Reserve, and that, when he was going to lead them to Battle, he perceived, that Mardonius was routed, and fled another way. If Mardonius had survived the Loss of That Battle, he would not have failed to have said, in his Vindication, that Artabazus had sacrificed him; that he had either been a Spectator only, or a Run-away; that, having given his Advice against the Battle, he had contributed what lay in his Power to the Loss of it, in order to raise a Trophy to his own Prudence. Artabazus would not have been the only Person, who, by such a Conduct, had maintained the Opinion he had given in a Council of War. It is a strange Oversight to say, as Mr Moreri does, that the Greeks lost That Battle. And The Siege of Potidaea, naked and unfinished of all manner of Circumstances, what does it do there? Of what use is it to a Reader?

ARTAVASDES I, King of Armenia, Son and Successor of That Tigranes, who was conquered by Lucullus and Pompey, in the War with Mitridates, betrayed the Romans basely, in the Expedition of Crassus (a); for, after having been to wait upon That General with 6000 Horse, and promising him a Supply of 40000 Men, he broke his Word, and excused himself on Pretence of the War he was obliged to maintain in his own Country against the Partbians (b). Crassus, finding himself abused, threatened very severely (c), but was not in a Condition to punish This Treachery; on the contrary, Artavasdes had a great Share in the Rejoicings, which were afterwards made, at the Court of the King of Partbia, for the Destruction of the Roman Army. He had fixed the Marriage of his Sister with Pacorus, the Son of Orodes, King of the Partbians (d), and was at the Court of Orodes, during the excessive Joy occasioned there by so great a Victory. He saw a thousand Diversions full of Insults on the Romans; he was present at their Feasts and Comedies, and heard Euripides's Verses applied to the Disaster of Crassus, whose Head was brought in upon the Stage, while the Bacchantes of That Poet was represented. This gave Plutarch occasion to say, that Orodes understood Greek, and that Artavasdes composed Tragedies, Orations, and Histories [A], some of which were preserved to his own Time. I take This Artavasdes to have been the same, who deceived Marc Antony [B]. He persuaded him to turn his Arms against

(a) Dio, lib. 40.

(b) Plutarch in Crasso, pag. 554.

(c) Id. pag. 556.

(d) Id. pag. 564. Cleora Epist. ad Fam. lib. 3. l. 15.

[A] Artavasdes composed Tragedies, Orations, and Histories. Here is a Greek Poet and Historian, who has been forgot by Vossius, as a Poet, but not as an Historian (1); tho' Mallinrot places him in his Collection of Historians never before taken notice of. Mallinrot observes, that Appian has cited the History of our Artavasdes, but has differed a little as to the Author's Name. He adds, that he was the first Prince of That Name, who reigned in Armenia (2). This may be true, altho' the Conjecture of several Critics on a Passage of Justin should be good. They pretend, that we ought to read Artavasdes, and not Orodes, in the second Chapter of the Forty second Book. So that there must have been a King of Armenia called Artavasdes, in the time of Mitridates the Great, King of Partbia. This Mitridates was deposed, and succeeded his Brother Orodes, who obtained That memorable Victory over the Romans. Our Artavasdes, indeed, reigned at the same time with Orodes; yet nothing hinders, but he might have begun to reign before him, and his Father Tigranes be dead before the deposing of Mitridates the Great; in which Case Artavasdes might have been at War with the latter. It is true, that, to make Justin agree with Plutarch (3), and Dion (4), it must be supposed, that His Mitridates the Great is the Pharabates. These make to reign in the Time of Tigranes. [B] I take this Artavasdes to have been the same, who deceived Marc Antony. My Reasons are these: He, who betrayed Crassus, was the Son of Tigranes, as Dion affirms (5). He, who deceived Marc Antony, was the Son of Tigranes, as Josephus says (6), whose Testimony, if there were occasion for it, might be confirmed by Strabo, who not only affirms, that He, whom Marc Antony punished for his Perfidy, reigned after Tigranes (7), but also that he was His Son (8). So then He, who deceived the Romans in the Time of Crassus, is the same, who deceived them in the Expedition of Marc Antony. Mr Moreri did not understand it so; He would have us acknowledge Two Artavasdes's. Had he stoped here, his Opinion would not have been thought so strange; but what follows can never be enough wondered at. He will have it, that One of These Artavasdes's was He, who composed Histories and Poems, and that the other was He, whom Marc Antony led in Triumph to Alexandria, in the Year of Rome 720. He says, that the latter left a Son of his own Name, the same, perhaps, mentioned by Plutarch, who

(3) Plut. in Pompejo.

(4) Dio, lib. 37.

(5) Id. lib. 40.

(6) Joseph. lib. 15. c. 5.

(7) Strabo, lib. 11. sub. finem.

(8) Id. ib. lib. 11. pag. 365.

SEVERAL Mistakes of Mr Moreri.

(1) Voss. de Hist. Grec. pag. 154.

(2) Mallinrot, Paralipomenon de Hist. Gr. pag. 11. de 8. coll. b. m. with Vossius, Artavasdes. Mr Ryck, upon Tacit. pag. 28. pretends, that Plutarch calls him Artabazus; but it is certain he calls him Artavasdes.

(e) He was called Artavasdes.

(f) Dio, lib. 49. Strabo, lib. 11. pag. 561, 366. Plutarch, in Anton. pag. 933.

(g) Dio, lib. 51. See Remark [C] Circulation (11).

(h) Cicero, ad Attic. Epist. 21. l. 5.

(9) Plutarch does not say, that he had much, or so much, Wit.

(10) Strabo, lib. 11, sub finem.

(11) See Tacitus, Ann. lib. 2. c. 3.

(12) Id. ib.

(a) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 5.

(b) Dio, lib. 49.

(c) Artavasdes vi regnumque tutatus est. Tacit. Ann. lib. 2. cap. 6.

(1) See Lipsius on Tacit. Ann. lib. 2. c. 3.

(2) Tacit. ibid.

(3) Horat. Epist. 12. lib. 1. v. 26.

against the King of Media (e), and by that means engaged him in an Enterprize, which had a very bad Issue, and in which he never seconded him (f). Marc Antony, deferring his Revenge till a more convenient Season, dissembled for the present; but, two Years after, viz. in the Seven Hundred and twentieth Year of Rome, he used for many Artifices and fine Promises, that at last he drew him to a Conference, and then, keeping him Prisoner, loaded him with Silver Chains [C], and led him in Triumph to Alexandria. Artavasdes's Wife and Children were also forced to adorn Marc Antony's Triumph. They were all led in Chains of Gold, through the midst of the People, to Cleopatra; but neither Promises nor Threats could prevail on them to fall on their Knees before her, or make Supplications to her: they called her only by her Name, which was the occasion of their being more severely treated. Some time after, Artavasdes was put to Death, and his Head sent to the King of the Medes. It was Cleopatra, who sent him This Present upon her return to Alexandria, after the loss of the Battle of Actium (g). She fancied, That this Head would induce the King of Media to enter into a stricter Alliance with Marc Antony against Augustus. We shall find, in the following Article, what became of the Sons of Artavasdes. He had a Daughter, married to King Dejotarus (h).

had so much Wit (9), and betrayed Crassus. What Blundering is here! Crassus was betrayed in 701; He, who betrayed him, was actually King of Armenia; how then could he be the Son of a King of Armenia, who was dethroned in the Year 720? Mr Moreri remarks, that This dethroned Prince died some time after in Prison. This is forgetting a very essential Circumstance; for he was killed. Ἀρτάβης οὐρανὸν ἐπὶ τῷ Ἀκταίου πολέμῳ (10). — He was taken off upon the breaking out of the War of Actium. Cleopatra, according to Dion, was returned to Alexandria, from the Battle of Actium, when this Murder was committed (11). He adds, that he left a Son named Artavasdes. No such thing; his eldest Son, who succeeded him, was called Artaxias; his other Son Tigranes. And as to That other Artavasdes, who, according to Mr Moreri, quoting Tacitus, soon lost Armenia, which Tiberius had given him, he was not the Son of the former, but the third, or fourth, King after him. It is moreover false, that Tacitus says, that Tiberius gave him Armenia. What he says is this: "Dei iussu Augusti impoſitus Artavasdes, & non sine clade nostra deſectus. Tum C. Cæſar compendendæ Armeniæ deligitur: Is Ariobarzanem origine Medium ob insignem corporis formam & præclarum animum volentibus Armeniis præfecit (12). — Afterwards, by Augustus's Order, Artavasdes was set over them, who lost not his Kingdom, without the Defeat of our Forces. Then C. Cæſar was appointed for the settling Armenia. He pitched upon Ariobarzanes, of Median extraſſ, and excellent Endowments both of Body and Mind, to be their King, whom the Armenians very willingly received." Lastly, what Mr Moreri says, that Augustus sent a Son of Agrippa thither, who was soon dethroned, is very false; for Caius Cæſar, the Son of Agrippa, was not sent into Armenia till after the Destruction of the last Artavas-

des. Nor was he sent to take it for himself, but only to settle That Kingdom: accordingly he placed Ariobarzanes on the Throne, and afterwards continued to visit the East with a Magnificence becoming the presumptive Heir to the whole Roman Empire. If one would endeavour to commit Mistakes, is it possible to make more than Mr Moreri has done, who has been guilty of seven or eight or sixteen Lines? Mr Hoffman makes but three, in this Article. He says, I. That Artavasdes assisted Crassus against the Parthians (13). II. That Tiberius gave Armenia to another Artavasdes. III. That Augustus had before given it to Artabazus, the Son of Agrippa, who was soon deposed. Mr Lloyd has supposed this whole Article, tho' it stood very fair in Charles Stephens.

[C] Marc Antony — loaded him with Silver Chains.] Dion remarks, that the Choice of this Metal was to avoid dishonouring Royal Majesty with Chains of Iron (14). Paterculus says, that, in order to render them more honourable, they were made of Gold. "Catenis, sed ne quid honoris deesset, aureis vinxit (15). — He ordered Chains to be put on, but, that they might be as honourable as possible, they were of Gold." The same Ceremony had been used to Darius (16). But what shall we say to Mr Ryck, who treats a Fact, advanced by Lewis d'Orleans to reconcile Paterculus with Dion, as a meer Fiction (17)? The Fact is this; that Artavasdes was loaded with Silver Chains in Prison, and with Chains of Gold on the Day of Triumph. Mr Ryck maintains, that neither of these two Historians have mentioned either Prison or Triumph, and therefore can never admit of any such Reconciliation. But yet it is very true, that Dion, in the same Page, where he speaks of Silver Chains, mentions also those of Gold, which were put upon Artavasdes, and his Family, on the Day of Triumph. The Slips of Memory are sometimes very surprising.

(13) Charles Stevens joins to too.

(14) Dio, lib. 49. circa fin.

(15) Paterculus, lib. 2. cap. 82.

(16) Curt. lib. 5. cap. 12. Vide ibi Freinheimium.

(17) Ryck, Animadv. ad Tacit. Ann. lib. 2. cap. 3. pag. 28, 29.

A RTAVASDES II. was established King of Armenia by Augustus. Between the Death of Artavasdes I, and this time, had preceded Artaxias, Tigranes, and the Children of Tigranes. Artaxias, the Eldest Son of Artavasdes I, had made his Escape, when his Father was put in Chains (a); but not before he had endeavoured to maintain himself on the Throne, with his Troops, and the Towns, which had proclaimed him King, after his Father was taken (b). He had the Misfortune to be beaten by Marc Antony, and then took Refuge among the Parthians, by whose Assistance he reigned at last in Armenia (c); but, upon the Complaint of his Subjects, and their Request to have his Brother Tigranes, who was educated at Rome, Augustus ordered Tiberius to depose Artaxias, and confer the Kingdom on Tigranes (d). Artaxias was murdered by his own Subjects, before the Approach of Tiberius [A], so that he had no

(d) Dio, lib. 54.

[A] Artaxias was murdered — before the Approach of Tiberius.] Dion, who informs us of this Circumstance, is mistaken in the Name; for he calls him Artabazes, instead of Artaxias (1). Tacitus imputes the Death of Artaxias to the Treachery of his Relations; occiso Artaxia per dolum propinquoꝝ (2); but Horace ascribes it to the Valour of Tiberius.

This is no wonder; Poets know too well how to give an agreeable turn to Events: Every thing, in their Hands, becomes Matter of Panegyric, and furnishes Flowers to crown Princes with. Josephus says only, that Artaxias was depoted by Archelaus, and Tiberius (4). Suetonius, without mentioning Artaxias, contents himself with observing, that Tiberius placed Tigranes on the Throne. "Duſto ad orientem exercitu regnum Armeniæ Tigrani reſtituit, ac pro Tribunali diadema impoſuit (5). — Leading the Army into the East, he restored the Kingdom of Armenia to Tigranes, and on a Throne impoſed him

(4) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 5.

(5) Suet. in Tiber. c. 9.

— Claudii virtute Neronis Armenius cecidit (3).

By brave Tiberius' Arms Armenia's Monarch fell.

(c) Id. ib.

no hard Task to infall Tigranes (c). This happened in the Year of Rome 734. Neither Tigranes, nor his Sons, enjoyed their Royalty long (f); they gave place to Artavasdes II [B], whose Reign was also short (g). Augustus, who had advanced him, being made acquainted with the Confusions of Armenia, dispatched thither his Grandson Caius Caesar, to compose them. This young Prince made Ariobarzanes their King, with Universal Satisfaction.

(f) Nec Tigrani diuturnum Imperium fuit, nec liberta ejus. Tacit. ubi supra.

(g) Id. ib.

(6) Παρσιων, armis subjugavit, receptum ad dedicationem compulit.

"with the Diadem." The Term restored does not seem properly applied, because Tigranes, who was the younger Brother of Artaxias, had never been in possession of the Crown of Armenia, nor could he have any Right to it during the Life of his Elder Brother. Scaliger, who very rightly observed the Mistake of Eusebius, in using an Expression, which implies the Conquest of Armenia by Tiberius (6), when the Armenians desired nothing more, than to have Tigranes for their King: I say, Scaliger, who justly censures this Impropriety of Eusebius (7), ought himself to have avoided the restitut of Suetonius, and not given Artaxias the Title of Usurper (8). There is another Impropriety, or Mistake, in Eusebius, and in his Translator St Jerome, which has not been noted by Scaliger. They affirm, that Tiberius seized on Armenia, καπεχθησα, occupavit Armeniam: Now he only gave the Armenians the Master they desired. It is also certain, that he introned him, and put the Diadem upon his Head, and, if there had been occasion for it, would have assisted him with his Forces: how comes it then, that Scaliger says, Armenia was given to Tigranes without any Act of Tiberius? What does he mean in maintaining, that St Jerome, when he affirms, that Tiberius seized on Armenia, occupavit, ought to have believed, that it belonged already to the Romans? I confess I understand nothing of this Logic. But why does he not condemn Paterculus, as well as These two Fathers of the Church? Paterculus, tho' an Historian, flatters Tiberius like a Poet, and has complimented him upon having reduced Armenia under the Power of the Roman Empire (9). This is not his only Error: he calls Him Artavasdes, whom Tiberius crowned King of Armenia, when his true Name was Tigranes.

(7) Scaliger in Euseb. pag. 170.

(8) He calls him Artabazes by mistake, in imitation of Dion. Fratre ejus Artabazae, says he, regni infensore ab Armeniis occiso. --- His Brother Artabazae, who had usurped the Throne, being killed by the Armenians.

[B] Tigranes and his Son --- gave place to Artavasdes II.] Here the Authors of The Supplement to Moreri have been no less faulty, than Moreri himself. I omit their asserting, that our Artavasdes was the Son of Artaxias, and consequently the Nephew of Tigranes: There is nothing of this in the second Book of Tacitus's Annals, the only Author whom they have quoted; but let that pass. They add, that the Sons of Tigranes were stiled Kings by Tiberius, and that Artavasdes II, their Cousin, succeeded soon after to the Crown, by the Order of the same Emperor. Tacitus, their only Evidence, confutes them; for he expressly

(9) Redacta Armeni in potestatem populi Romani, regnum ejus Artavasdi tradidit. --- Having reduced Armenia under the Power of the Roman Empire, he made Artavasdes their King. Paterculus. lib. 2. cap. 96.

FAULTS of Moreri's Supplement.

says, that all this was done by Augustus. Instead of affirming with them, that the Romans took Arms against this Artavasdes, and at last destroyed him, his Words are, non sine clade nostra defunctus, which rather signify the contrary, that he was deposed in spite of the Romans, who supported him, and by the Defeat of their Succours. See the Article ARTAVASES, King of Media. Lastly, they say, that Tigranes, the Uncle of our Artavasdes, was beheaded at Rome, under the Emperor Tiberius. This is absurd; for the Intalling of Tigranes, whom they would have to be the Uncle of Artavasdes II, was performed in the Seven hundred thirty fourth Year of Rome, and his Reign lasted but a very short time. The Execution of Tigranes under Tiberius happened in the Year 789: So that, according to these Gentlemen, That Prince must have lived above fifty Years after he was deposed, and attained to such an Age, as would not have escaped the Observation of the Historian, who mentions the Indignity of his Death. It is to be observed, that Tigranes, created King of Armenia in the Year 734, had been taken Prisoner, together with his Father, by Marc Antony in 720, and was then a Youth full grown (10). Observe also, that a little after his Coronation, he married his Children to one another (11), according to the Custom of those Nations. But, what is yet more observable, He, whom Tiberius caused to be put to Death, was Herod's Grandson. Josephus tells us, that Alexander, the Son of Herod, had, by his Wife Glaphyra, the Daughter of Archelaus King of Cappadocia, two Sons, one of whom, named Tigranes, reigned in Armenia, and was impeached before the Romans (12). This without doubt was He, of whom Tacitus speaks in this manner. "Ne Tigranes quidem Armenia quondam potitus, ac tunc reus, nomine regio supplicia civium effugit. --- Not even Tigranes, who had been King of Armenia, when accused and sentenced as a Criminal before the Romans, could escape Punishment on account of his Royal Dignity (13)." Mr de Tillemont's Conjecture, that This Tigranes was King of the lesser Armenia, which Augustus had given to Archelaus (14), might be admitted, if it could be reconciled with Josephus, who says, that the Descendants of Alexander and Glaphyra reigned in the greater Armenia. Η δὲ Ἀλεξάνδρου γυνὴ τῆς μεγάλης Ἀρμενίας ἐκαλεῖτο (15).

(10) See Josephus, lib. 15. cap. 5.

(11) Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap. 3.

(12) Josephus, lib. 18. c. 7.

(13) Tacit. Ann. lib. 5. cap. 40.

(14) Hist. des Empereurs. Tome I. not. 11. sur Tibere.

(15) Josephus de Bello Jud. lib. 2. c. 19.

ARTAVASES, King of Media, was attacked by Marc Antony, at the Solicitation of another Artavasdes, King of Armenia. This Enterprize proved very fatal to Marc Antony; and, as he believed himself betrayed by the Adviser of it, he turned all his Rage against him, and entered into an Alliance with the King of Media. He gave him part of Armenia, as soon as he had taken it from the other Artavasdes, and cemented This Peace by the Marriage of his Son Alexander with Jotape, Daughter to the King of the Medes. The Troops, with which he supplied him, made him victorious over the Partians, and over Artaxias, the Son of Artavasdes, King of Armenia; but, as soon as he recalled them, and detained those which his Ally had lent him, This Prince, unable to resist his Enemies, fell into their Hands. Dion relates this under the Seven Hundred and twenty first Year of Rome (a). It is probable he was not long a Captive, and that he was the same King of Media, to whom Cleopatra sent the Head of Artavasdes, King of Armenia, in the Seven Hundred and twenty fourth Year of Rome (b). The Supplement to Moreri is here very erroneous [A].

(a) Dion, lib. 49.

(b) Id. lib. 51.

[A] The Supplement to Moreri is here very erroneous. We find there I. That this Artavasdes, King of Media, Son and Successor of Darius, maintained a vigorous War both against Artavasdes, King of Armenia, and against Pompey: II. That he was at last defeated by the Parthians, and that he took Refuge at Rome under Augustus, who conferred on him the lesser Armenia, instead of Media, which he had lost. Plutarch is quoted, and Dion in his Forty ninth Book. But, to confute this the retrograde way, by one obvious Remark: Does not the bare citing Plutarch look like banting the World, and resolving to assert Falsities with Impunity? For who would not much rather give over criticizing, than read two great Volumes in Folio, to discover the Truth of one inconsiderable Fact? It is certain, Dion, in his Forty ninth Book, no where says, that This Artavasdes fled to Rome; nor that Augustus made him a Present of the lesser Armenia. I know of no Author, who says so. I find indeed, in Tacitus, that Augustus ordered one Artavasdes to reign in Armenia after the Son of Tigranes; but not that it was to make him amends for Media. It is likely, That they, who wrote the third Volume of Moreri, have made use of this Passage of Tacitus

(1) See Remark [B] of the Article ARTAXATA. VASDES II.

Tacitus for a double Purpose; on the one side, to assert, that Tiberius gave Armenia to an Artavasdes, the Son of Artaxias, and Nephew of Tigranes (1); and on the other, that Augustus conferred it on Artavasdes, the deposed King of Media. Lastly, how careless is it to say, that he maintained a vigorous War against the King of Armenia, and against Pompey? This War against the King of Armenia had no such need of being vigorously maintained, considering that the Treachery of That Prince to Marc Antony, was later than the War, which Pompey made in That Country, by about Thirty Years. Nor have I observed, either in Plutarch, or Appian, that any Artavasdes, King of Media, was attacked by Pompey: I find only, in Appian, that Pompey subdued Darius King of Media (2).

(2) Appian. in Mithrid.

(a) Plot. in Lucull. pag. 513. Strabo, lib. 11. pag. 364. See the Article ARTAXATA. AS I. Citation (c).

ARTAXATA [A] was the Capital City of Armenia, on the River Araxes. Hannibal was the Person, who not only drew the Plan, but also surveyed the Building of it, at the Request of Artaxias, King of Armenia, to whom he retired after the Defeat of Antiochus (a). We may be sure, that a Situation, made choice of by so able a General, was very advantageous [B], both in time of War and of Peace. This City was burnt by Corbulo, in the Eight Hundred and eleventh Year of Rome (b). That great Captain would not have proceeded to such Extremity against the Inhabitants, who brought him the Keys of their City, upon his first investing it, if the Laws of War had not made it absolutely necessary [C]. For so great a City could not be kept without a great Garrison, which he could not spare without weakening his Army to such a degree, as must have disabled him from any farther Enterprize; And, to have abandoned it in the Condition he found it, would have been giving up both the Glory and Advantage of the Conquest. He resolved therefore to raze it, and was encouraged thereto by a great Miracle [D], si credere dignum est. The City was covered all on a sudden with a thick Cloud, from whence issued abundance of Lightning, while the Sun continued to shine all round it to the very Composts of the Walls. Some time after, This City was rebuilt by Tridates, who called it Neronea in Honour of Nero (c), from whom he had received at Rome a thousand Civilities, upon his going thither to pay him Homage in the Year of Rome 819.

(b) i. e. 58 of CHRIST.

(c) Xiphil. in Nerone.

(1) Plot. in Lucull. pag. 513.

(2) It is probably through an Error of the Press, that we read Artaxata, in Mr. Baudrand.

[A] ARTAXATA. Plutarch observes, that this City took its Name from That of King Artaxas, (or Artaxias), to whom Hannibal proposed the Building of it (1). What Mess. Lloyd and Baudrand note, that Tacitus calls it Artaxia, is not true; for he calls it constantly Artaxata. What they add, that Strabo names it Artaxiasata (2), is not accurate; for this is plainly insinuating, that he calls it nothing else, or, at least, that it is the principal Name he gives it. Now it is certain, that he commonly calls it Artaxata, and only once observes, that it was also called Artaxiasata. Pinedo had reason to alter Ἀρταξιαστὰ to Ἀρταξιαστὰ in Stephanus Byzantinus, who doubts whether used the Expression of Strabo, since he quotes him. It is certain, at least, he never called This City Artaxia, as Ortelius falsely affirms both of Him, and of Tacitus. The Omission, which Pinedo accuses this Stephanus of, is indeed inexcusable; for that Hannibal, a Refugee in Armenia, observing a very advantageous Situation, advised the Prince, whose Guest he was, to build a City there, and took upon himself the Direction of the Work, is a Circumstance, which ought not to have been suppressed in a Dictionary of Cities. I am inclined to believe, that Stephanus Byzantinus, having Strabo before his Eyes, when he composed the Article of Artaxata, did not overlook what he found there concerning Hannibal; but that his Epitomizer, a Person of much less Judgment, ought to be charged with this Neglect, which Pinedo so justly complains of. There is, perhaps, no Work, which requires more Discernment, or a better Taste, than the abridging a large Book (3). I cannot forbear making this Remark, because I am myself daily perplexed by the Negligence of Abreviators; while by their means I meet with Difficulties and Obscurities in an hundred Places, which probably were intelligible in the Authors, whom they have abridged. See what Mr. Gronovius observes of the Authors of the Synopsis Criticorum (4).

(3) See Remark [C] of the Article ACHILLES, at the end; and Remark [C], No VII. of the Article ARSINOE

(4) Gronovius in Tractatu de Julii proditoris. Consult. de la Rep. des Lettres, May 1684, Art. 6. pag. 276.

(5) Pinedo in Stephan. de Urbib. pag. 117.

[B] Its Situation was very advantageous. Strabo informs us, that Artaxata was built in a Place, where the River made a Peninsula; so that the Walls were surrounded with the River, in form of a Circle, wanting but little of being perfect. His Translator entirely mistakes his Meaning, and is justly reprimanded for it by Pinedo (5). If the Version only be consulted, we must believe this City to have been without Walls, except in the Place, where the River did not surround it; Cincta muri loco flumine, nisi quæ isthmus est. — It was encompassed by the River instead of a Wall, except only at the Isthmus. The Greek tells us quite another story; Τὸ τεῖχος κύλας περιέχοντων τὸν ποταμὸν πλὴν τῷ ἰσθμῷ. — The Wall was surrounded by the River in form of a Circle, except only at the Isthmus.

[C] It was burnt by Corbulo, — which the Laws of War made absolutely necessary. The more we consider the inevitable Consequences of War, the more we shall detest Those, who are the Causes of it. Here is Corbulo, who reduced a great and fine City to Ashes, and made an infinite Number of Women, Children, and old Men, miserable, who never did him any Injury. Inquire of Those, who understand the Trade of War best, whether he did well, they will tell you, he did very well; and that, in case he had not acted so, he must have been esteemed a very weak General, for the Reasons alleged by Tacitus. "Artaxatis ignis immixtus" delectaque & solo æquata sunt, quia nec teneri "sine valido præsidio ob magnitudinem morum, nec id nobis virium erat quod firmando præsidio & capessendo bello divideretur, vel si in-tegra & incustodienda relinqueretur, nulla in eo utilis aut gloria quod capta essent (6). — Artaxata was burnt down, and razed to the Ground, because "so large a City could not be defended without a strong Garrison, which was not to be spared out of an Army, but just sufficient for carrying on the War; and, to leave it entire, and ungarrisoned, would have been throwing away both the Honour, and Benefit, of taking it." The Insults, which a General suffers, when he leaves his Conquests without putting them out of a Condition to hurt him, or keeps them to the too great weakening of his Army, make him so despicable, that, to maintain his Reputation, one of the main Springs of War, he must give occasion to no such Insults. So that it is by a fatal and an unhappy Necessity, that the hard Laws of War oblige us to deprive an Enemy of That, which can be of no Advantage to ourselves.

(6) Tacit. Ann. lib. 13. cap. 41.

[D] And was encouraged thereto by a great Miracle. Tacitus, with all his great Wit, has swallowed the Marvellous with as much Relish, as Those of meaner Capacities are used to do such sort of Dainties. Doubtless the Inhabitants of Artaxata endeavoured to comfort themselves on the Destruction of their City, among other Reasons, by some Miracle, which might assure them, that the Gods were displeased with it; and therefore every thing, which could be represented in this Light, was easily believed. But what Notions they had of this Matter we want some Historian of theirs to inform us of. The Romans, on their Part, did not want Persons, who knew how to turn the Tables in favour of their Country. For this Particular we are obliged to Tacitus. "Adjicitur Miraculum velut numine oblatum, nam cuncta

- " cuncta extra tectis luculentis sole inlustrata fuere, " to enjoy the brightest Sunshine, all within was so
 " quod momentis cingebatur ita repente atrâ nube " suddenly covered with a black Cloud, darting forth
 " cooptum fulguribusque difcretum est, ut quasi " Lightning on all Sides, that the City was thought
 (7) Id. lib. " inferantibus Deis exitio tradi crederetur (?) — " to be marked out for Destruction by the Anger of " Heaven itself seemed also to appear in it by a Mi- " the Gods."
 " racle's jar, while all without the Walls continued

ARTAXIAS I, King of Armenia, while he was only one of the Generals of Antiochus the Great, made a Partition of Armenia between himself, and another of That King's Generals [A]. That Prince suffered them both to enjoy their Sovereign Authority (a). They took Advantage of his Complaisance; and, when he was defeated by the Romans, they submitted to the Victors, and obtained from them the Title of King (b); after which, They endeavoured to enlarge their Dominions, as much as they could, at the Expence of their Neighbours. Tigranes, who made himself so famous in the Wars of Mitridates, whose Daughter he had married, was descended from Artaxias. Plutarch relates, that Hannibal, being retired to Artaxias, after the Defeat of Antiochus, gave him a great deal of good Advice; and that, having found out a Place, which no account was made of, very proper for building a City, he drew a Plan for it, shewed Artaxias the Ground, and persuaded him to build it. Artaxias was very much pleased with the Proposal, and desired Hannibal to undertake the Direction of the Work. His Request was complied with, and hence arose a large and beautiful City, which, in Honour of the Founder, was named Artaxata (c). This is all I find, in the two Authors, quoted by The Supplement to Moreri (d): As to his rebelling against his lawful Prince, upon a Confidence in the Friendship of the Romans (e), I find no shadow or trace of it, any more than of his practising all possible Methods, to maintain himself in his Usurpation, or of his dying in Prison under Antiochus Epiphanes. These are meer Chimeras, without the least support from any Quotation.

- [A] He made a Partition of Armenia between himself, and another of the Generals of Antiochus the Great] In the Editions of Strabo, he is called Θαλασσιος in one Place (1); and Ζαπιάδης, or Ζαπιάδης, in another (2). It was easy for those, who had the Direction of these Editions, to have inserted the same Word every where; and I wonder Casaubon has made no Remark upon this, since he has made some, which are not more material.

ARTAXIAS II, King of Armenia, Eldest Son of Artavasdes, as we have already said (a), was proclaimed King by his Father's Army [A], upon his Father's being taken Prisoner with his Queen, and other Children (b). This Eldest Son endeavoured to support himself against Marc Antony, and gave him Battle; but was defeated, and forced to fly into the Country of the Partians. He returned some time after into Armenia, and reigned there. This was undoubtedly after the taking of Artavasdes, King of Media: For, before the Partians took That King (c), they were beaten by him, and Artaxias bore a share in the Disgrace. He disgusted his Subjects in such a manner, that they impeached him at Rome, and desired his younger Brother Tigranes for their King (d). Augustus, having this Tigranes in his Custody, sent him to them, and ordered Tiberius to in-throne him. But Artaxias was murdered by his Relations, before the arrival of Tiberius.

- [A] He was proclaimed King by his Father's Army.] The Continutors of Moreri make Tolophus, or Tacitus, say, that it was Marc Antony who placed Artaxias upon the Throne; than which nothing is more false. They add, that Artaxias, having been defeated, was sent into Exile among the Partians. Which is another Mistake; for he retired thither himself for Refuge. If Marc Antony had been in a Condition to have banished him after his Victory, he would not have sent him to the Partians, but have brought him bound Hand and Foot to Alexandria.

ARTAXIAS III, King of Armenia, was the Son of Polemon, King of Pontus, and was named Zeno. He took such a pleasure, from his Infancy, in imitating the Customs of the Armenians, that he thereby gained the Affections of the Nation. So that Germanicus thought he could not cast his Eye on a fitter Person, to supply the Place of Vonones, whom the Armenians had driven out. He went therefore to Artaxata, and, in the presence of all the People, gave the Diadem to This Zeno, in the Year of Rome Seven Hundred and seventy one. At the same instant, the Assembly proclaimed him Artaxias, after the Name of the Capital City. Tacitus, who informs us of all these things (a), mentions his Death under the Year Seven Hundred and eighty eight (b).

ARTEMIDORUS, He, who wrote on Dreams, was a Native of Ephesus; nevertheless, in That Book, he gives himself the Surname of Daldianus, in Honour to the Country of his Mother [A]. But, in his other Books, he continues to call himself The Ephesian.

- [A] He gives himself the Surname of Daldianus, in Honour to the Country of his Mother.] Ephesus, " says he, of which Place I have, in the Title of " several of my Books, declared myself a Native, " is sufficiently renowned of itself, and has been " justly celebrated by many able Pens; but the small " Town of Daldia (1), has hitherto remained in obscurity for want of Panegyrista. I am resolved there- " fore " in Lydis (*) Artemid. lib. 1. cap. 28. See also chap. 66. of the same Book.

Epheſian. He lived under Antoninus Pius, as he informs us himself, where he ſays, that he knew an Athlete, who, having dreamt, that he had loſt his Sight, obtained the Prize (a), in the Games, which That Emperor ordered to be celebrated. No Author ever took more pains on a uſeful Subject, than Artemidorus has done upon a very trifling one [B]. He was not contented to buy up all that had been written on the Explication of Dreams, which amounted to ſeveral Volumes [C], but he ſpent many Years

“ fore, ſince it happens to be my Country by my Mother’s Side, to acknowledge my Obligations to “ it in this manner.” This would be more liable to a Suſpicion of Vanity, had it been delivered with more Formality and Method; but this Author expreſſes himſelf with ſo much Ingenuity, that it ſeems rather to have been the manner of That Age to uſe theſe Words with different Ideas from what they would now be underſtood to import. Τὴν δὲ ἐπιγροῶν καὶ θαυμάσιος διότι Ἀρτεμίδωρος Δαλδῖαν καὶ οὐκ ἔφησε ἐπιγροῶν. ὅτι πολλὰ τῶν ἡδὴ εἰς ἄλλας περὶ μαλαίας πεποιμένων μοι βιβλίων. τὴν μὲν γὰρ ἔφησον συμπερίεχεν καὶ αὐτὴν δὲ ἐαυτὴν περιώνυμον εἶναι καὶ πολλὰν ἀξιολόγων κερύκων τετυχηκέναι. Δαλδία δὲ, πόλις Ἀνδρίας, καὶ ἡ σφόδρα ἐλλογμένη. διὰ τὸ μὴ τοῖς τῶν ἀνδρῶν τετυχηκέναι, ἀγνοῶν τὸ μέχρι εἰς ἐμὲ μεμνημένη. διδὲ δὲ τὴν ἑσθὴν ἔσθῃ μοι παλῖδι πρὸς κερύκεν ταῦτα ἀποδίδωμι αὐτῇ (2). Wonder not, that, in the Title of this Book, I call myself Artemidorus the Daldian, and not the Epheſian, as my other Works have it. For Epheſus has had the good Fortune, not only to be famous in itſelf, but alſo to be highly complemented by many eminent Perſons. While Daldia, a little Place in Lydia, and not very conſiderable, for want of ſuch Patrons, continues yet unknown. Therefore, as this is alſo my Country, ſince I owe it to my Mother, I thus repay the Debt.

(2) Artemid. lib. 3. ſub fin. p. 193.

Rigaltius ought to have kept to this Reaſon, and not have fought for two others: one of which is, that Apollo inſpired Artemidorus, in the City of Daldia, with the Deſign of interpreting Dreams; the other is, that, there having been another Artemidorus of Epheſus, the Interpreter of Dreams ought not to have uſed the Title of Epheſian, which was already in the Poſſeſſion of another (3). This laſt Reaſon, though the worſt of the two, was nevertheless adopted by a Man of Learning (4). Artemidorus himſelf confutes it beyond Contradiction, ſince he declares, that he ſtyled himſelf the Epheſian, in a great Number of Books. So that he did not then think of preventing his being confounded with Artemidorus the Geographer. Without doubt he was much better known by the Title of Epheſian, than by That of Daldian (5).

(3) Rigalt. Not. in Artemid. p. 1.

(4) Mr de Tillemont, in the ſecond Tome of his Hiſt. des Emp. Part II. pag. 731. Edit. of Bruxelles.

(5) Lucian in Philopat. cites him. Ἀρταμίδωρον τὸν τῆς Ἐφεſίας.

(6) The extraordinary Dreams, mentioned in Scripture, are out of the Queſtion.

(7) Compare with this the Reſcription of A. R. TABANUS the Son of Hyſippos. See the Remark [C] of his Article.

(8) Virgil. Æn. lib. 1. ver. 427.

Quid natum toties crudelis tu quoque falſis
Ludis imaginibus (8)?

Ab, cruel Mother, ſuch Deceits to uſe,

And with deſuſive Forms thy Son abuſe!

What I am moſt ſurprized at, is, that Artemidorus ſhould take ſo much Pains to eſtabliſh a Doctrin, which might give him ſo much Vexation: For muſt

he not be afraid of dreaming, what his Art might repreſent to him as ominous? He had found, by his Studies, that, when a Traveller dreams he has loſt the Key of his Houſe, it is a Sign that ſome Body has deſeached his Daughter (9). If Artemidorus had dreamt ſuch a Dream, while he was abroad, would he not have believed there was a fine Trade driving at Home? Could this Knowledge have been agreeable to him? Or had he not much better have been without it? He tells us, that, having dreamed, his Wife had inſulted him (10), he was much troubled the next Day, when he perceived a Man coming towards him, who was not his Friend. Obſerve how, by Virtue of his Onirocrify, he turned an imaginary Evil into a real one.

(9) Artemid. lib. 5. pag. 255. n. 170.

(10) Δέξας ὁρῶ τῆς ἑμῆς γυναῖκος δι’ ὀφθαλμοῦ. Conſarius tranſlates it thus, per ſomnium viſum ſum mihi ab uxore mea vituperari & plagia impetiri. I dreamed my Wife ſeemed to and beat me. Artemid. lib. 2. cap. 52. pag. 144.

The Objection, which I have juſt hinted, and which I ground on the Notions the Chriſtian Doctors give us of the Angelical Natures, ſeems very ſtrong to me, on a Suppoſition of the Truth of theſe Notions; but, if we eſtabliſh a different Syſtem, and which has no repugnancy to the Poſſibility of things, That Objection is much weakened. That is, if we believe there are Spiritual Beings, not only more limited than Man in certain Reſpects, as to the manner of making themſelves underſtood, but even more ſickle and capricious. How can we tell, whether they do not love to divert themſelves at our Coſt, and make us run after Enigma’s, in which they mix ſomething puerile and frivolous, on purpoſe to make the Scene more ridiculous? How do we know but we ſerve to divert them, as Beaſts do us? And perhaps, when they would correſpond with us, they may meet with ſuch Difficulty, in the Motion of our animal Spirits, as may render the Attempt impracticable? See the Remark [D] of the Article MAJUS. Be it as it will, Reaſon gives us a ſufficient Caution againſt eſtabliſhing any ſuch Art, and ſhews all Pretence to it to be a moſt vain and chimerical Undertaking.

(11) See, how I, too, the Poſſibility of Ter-tullian, Citation. 14.

(12) Rigalt. not. in Artemid. pag. 5.

(13) And. Schot. on Seneca’s Controv. IX. & Joſeph de Script. Hiſt. Phil. pag. 329. call him Geminus Pyrius. Rigaltius’s Edition of Artemidorus, lib. 1. cap. 40. has τὸς Τυρί-.

(14) Tertull. lib. de Anim. cap. 46. See alſo Fulgentius, lib. 1. Myth. cap. 13. & ibi Mander.

(15) And. Schotus in hac verba Seneca Controv. 9. An-tipho-nis li-bros vocabat, tantum in illis ſer-mo-nem eſt.

[C] He bought up all that had been written on the Explication of Dreams, which amounted to ſeveral Volumes.] I have already expreſſed my Aſtoniſhment at ſome Perſons, who have laboured hard to convince themſelves of the pretended Science of Dreams. I ſhould not wonder, that ſeveral, who call themſelves Diviners, ſhould boaſt of being Maſters of it; they may maintain themſelves by it, and, not having any Faith themſelves in the Art they profeſs, may be great Gainers by the Dreams of others, without being at all diſquieted with their own. But I cannot judge thus of Artemidorus, nor of ſeveral other grave Authors, who have written on the Interpretation of Dreams (11). They were themſelves the firſt deceived. Thoſe, named by Rigaltius (12), are as follows, Artemon Mileſius, Antiphon, Apollodorus Telmiſſenſis, Apollonius Aitalenſis, Ariſtander Telmiſſenſis, Ariſtarchus, Alexander Myndius, Cratippus, Demetrius Phalerus, Dionyſius Rhodius, Epicharmus, Epaphroditus Tyrius (13), Hermippus, Nicoſtratus Epheſus, Phæbus Antiochenus, Philochorus, Panyasus Halicarnateſis, Serapion, Strato. Theſe, according to Rigaltius, were all prior to Artemidorus. Tertullian names only ſome of them, when he ſays (14), “ Quanti autem commentatores & adſcriptores in “ hanc rem, Artemon, Antiphon, Strato, Philocho- “ rus, Epicharmus, Serapion, Cratippus, & Diony- “ ſius Rhodius, Hermippus tota ſæculi literatura.

— How conſiderable are the Commentators and “ Authors on this Subject, Artemon, Antiphon, Stra- “ to, Philochorus, Epicharmus, Serapion, Cratippus, “ Dionyſius Rhodius, and Hermippus, the whole “ Learning of the Age.” Andrew Schot adds, to ſome of thoſe beforementioned, Aſtrampychus, Cæſius Maximus, & Dionyſius Heliopolita (15). He ſays, that Artemidorus has quoted theſe two laſt; but, as to Cæſius Maximus, I do not ſee, that Artemidorus, who has dedicated the three firſt Books of his Work to him, ſpeaks of him otherwiſe, than as a Man, who was curious in this Science (16), and might (16) Artemid. lib. 3. init. pag. 164. lib. 4. init. pag. 197.

(d) i. e. Interpreters of Dreams. See this Passage of Tertullian cited above (14). But we have no Remains of them [H]. Tertullian has not taken notice of him in That Passage, where he quotes several Onirocritic Authors (d); but Lucian does not forget him, tho' he names but two Writers of This Class (e).

(e) In Philopator.

115. A little after, he addresses him in this manner; "Audisti, Maxime, quorum pleraque scilicet legeras apud antiquos philosophorum. — The greatest part of what thou hast heard, O Maximus, thou hast read thyself amongst the ancient Philosophers." Elsewhere (30) he says to him; "Multa fando, Maxime, audisti, & plura legendo didicisti, non pauca experiendo comperisti; — Many things, O Maximus, thou hast heard in Discourse, more thou hast learned by Study, and not a few thou hast discovered by Experience." And again (31); "An quod multo præstabilis est, tua doctrina, Claudii Maxime, tuæque perfectæ eruditione fretus, contemnâ stultis & impolitâ ad hæc responderé. — Much rather had I rely, O Claudius Maximus, on thy great Learning, and despite giving any Answer to the ignorant and illiterate." He seems also to have been at first a Philosopher by Profession, but to have raised himself by his long military Services. "Erras — si eum fortunæ indulgentiâ non ex philosophiæ censurâ metiris: si virum tam AUSTERE SECTAE, tamque diutina militiæ non putas amiciores esse: cœcitate mediocritati quàm delicatæ opulentia (32). — You are mistaken — if you think, the Favours of Fortune have more weight with him, than the Dictates of Philosophy; or that a Person of so AUSTERE A SECT, and so old a Soldier, will not rather take the Part of contented Mediocrity, than of effeminate Opulence."

[H] He wrote a Treatise of Auguries, and another of Chiromancy; but we have no Remains of them.] Vander Linden falsely affirms, even in his Edition of Merklinus, that Aldus has printed them in Greek, that Cornarius translated them into Latin, and that Rigaltius published them in both these Languages (33). We must search a little higher for the Original of this Mistake; nor will the Inquiry be useless; it may serve to let those, who write Abridgments, see, into what a Multitude of Errors they are apt to lead their Readers. Geyner had said; "Artemidorus — scripsit de somniorum interpretatione libros 4, item de auguriis & manuum inspectione. Suidas. Hujus autoris quinque libros Aldus Græcè excudit (34). — Artemidorus — wrote four Books of the Interpretation of Dreams, and also of Auguries, and of Chiromancy. Suidas. Five Books of this Author are printed in Greek, by Aldus." He had observed, afterwards, that these five Books were only concerning Dreams. See how Simler has abridged this Text. "Artemidorus — scripsit de somniorum interpretatione lib. 4. Item de auguriis & manuum inspectione. Eos Aldus Græcè excudit. — Artemidorus — wrote four Books of the Interpretation of Dreams. Also of Auguries, and Chiromancy. These Aldus has printed in Greek." Is This abridging, or misinterpreting, an Author? It looks more like the latter than the former.

(33) De Script. Medicis.

(34) Ceph. Bibliothec. fol. 96, verso.

ARTEMISIA, Queen of Caria, and Daughter of Lygdamis [A], accompanied King Xerxes, in Perion, in his War with the Greeks [B]. She was a Woman of great Capacity, and perfectly Masculine Courage. So that, happening to be possessor of Sovereign Authority, as well by being Widow of the late King, as on account of the Minority of her Son (a), during the Preparations of Xerxes, she took this occasion to signalize herself, and voluntarily engaged in That famous Expedition. She distinguished herself in it very particularly both by her Counsel and Conduct. The Reasons, on which she grounded her Advice, against engaging in the Battle of Salamis (b), were extremely just. She saved herself very artfully in That Battle; for, seeing herself pursued by an Albeman Ship, without any hope of escaping, she attacked a Persian Ship, commanded by Damastibymus King of Calyndus, with whom she had a quarrel, and sunk him (c). This made Those, who were in chace of her, believe, that her Vessel was of their own Party [C], and so quit the Pursuit. By good fortune for her, not one of Damastibymus's Men was saved. So that she got rid of an Enemy, without the least suspicion of having destroyed him; and escaped being taken, with the honour of having sunk a Greek Ship. Xerxes was much mistaken on this occasion; for he cried out, that his Men had behaved themselves like Women, and his Women like Men [D]. He intrusted her with the Government of his Children, the young Princes

of

[A] She was Daughter of Lygdamis [Herodotus does not say, what Moreri fathers upon him, viz. that Lygdamis was King of Halicarnassus (1). He only says, that Artemisia was of Halicarnassus, by the Father's side, and of Crete by the Mother's Side. If the same Historian had not declared, that Lygdamis, who assisted Pisistratus, and to whom, after Pisistratus was re-established in Athens, he gave the Command of the Isle of Naxos, was a Native of That Isle (2), I should have taken him for our Artemisia's Father, or Grand-father. Blancardus, in his Edition of Harporation (3), has continued the Error of Those, who went before him, viz. Damis, for Lygdamis (4). Valesius's Annotations point out the proper Correction, which Gronovius has actually made, upon publishing Harporation, in the Year 1696.

[B] She accompanied King Xerxes, in Person, in his War with the Greeks (5). Suidas says, it was against the Persians she took Part (6); but this Passage may, perhaps, have been mangled; for That piece of Wit of Xerxes, mentioned immediately after, by Suidas, that the Men were become Women, and the Women Men, would be unintelligible, if Artemisia had been in the Greek Army, where the Men fought like Lions. Mauffac supposes, that Suidas wrote, as it is in Harporation, κατὰ τὰ Περσικά (7). In the Persian War.

[C] She made those, who chased her, believe, that her Vessel was of their own Party. Herodotus has forgot a very essential Circumstance, for want of which his Narration loses much of it's Probability. He ought to have told us, as Polyænus has done, that Artemisia caused her Persian Colours to be taken down (8). Polyænus makes her follow the Conduct of Those Pirates, who hoist all sorts of Colours, according as they have occasion. When he gave Chace to a Greek Ship, she hung out Barbarian Colours; but, if a Greek Ship pursued her, she display'd Greek Colours. He has turned the Engagement of this Queen so many Ways, that he makes three or four different Actions of it, and tells us of a Spindle and Distaff, sent by the King of Persia to a Captain of a Ship, which there is no making Sense of, since the Ship, which Artemisia engaged with, was sunk, and all the Men in her lost.

[D] Upon her Account, Xerxes cried out, that his Men had behaved themselves like Women, and his Women like Men. Let us see what Herodotus says: ἑτέρον δὲ στρατὸς λέξις ἀπὸς τὰ ἑκατόμυρα, οἱ μὲν ἄνδρες γυναικῶν μοι γυναικῶν. αἱ δὲ γυναικῶν, ἄνδρες (9). Xerxes, upon hearing this Account, is reported to have cried out, "My Men are become Women, and my Women Men." To this let us add, what Justin says: "Artemisia regina Halicarnassi, quæ in auxilium Xerxi venerat, inter primos duces bellum acerrimè ciebat, quippe ut in viro muliebrem timorem, ita in muliere virilem audaciam cereretur (10). — Artemisia, Queen of Halicarnassus, who joined her Forces with Xerxes, appeared

(8) Polyænus. Strat. lib. 8, cap. 53.

(9) Herodotus. lib. 8, c. 83.

(10) Justinus. lib. 2, c. 12. See also Polyænus, ubi supra, and Pausanias, lib. 3, p. 93.

(a) He was called Pisistratus. See Remark [E] of the Article MAUSOLUS.

(b) Herodotus. l. 8. c. 67.

(c) Cap. 87.

(1) Herodotus. lib. 7, c. 99.

(2) Id. lib. 1, cap. 61, 64.

(3) That of Harporation, 1083.

(4) In Ap. τριπύρα.

(5) Herodotus. lib. 7, c. 99.

(6) Ἡρόδοτος κατὰ Περσικά. — See below briefly against the Persians.

(7) Mauffac. Not in Harporation.

of Perſia, when, according to her Advice, he quitted Greece to return into Aſia. The Athenians were ſo incenſed at a Woman's making War againſt them, that they promiſed a great Reward for the taking Artemiſia, and ordered all their Captains of Ships to endeavour it (d). Her Statue was erected at Lacedæmon, among thoſe of the Perſian Generals, in the Portico, built with the Spoils of That Nation (e). The Stratagem ſhe uſed, to make herſelf Miſtreſs of Laiſmus, is as much to be commended upon the Principles of Macchiaveliſm, as to be condemned upon Thoſe of Chriſtianity. She placed her Troops in Ambuſcade, and then went in a devout Proceſſion, with Eunuchs, Women, Trumpets, and Drums, to celebrate the Feaſt of the Mother of the Gods, in a Wood, which was conſecrated to her, near That City. The Inhabitants, charmed with this Zeal, ran thither to admire her Piety; and, in the mean time, Artemiſia's Army took Poſſeſſion of the Town (f). Theſe great Qualities did not preſerve her from amorous Foibles [E]. She was paſſionately in Love with a Native of Abydos, whoſe Name was Dardanius, and was ſo enraged at his ſlighting her, that ſhe put out his Eyes while he ſlept (g). The Gods, to puniſh her, cauſed her Paſſion to grow yet more violent; inſomuch that being adviſed by the Oracle to go to the Promontory Leucas (h), the Refuge of Lovers in deſpair, ſhe went thither, took the Leap, but did not recover it. She was buried in that Place. Many Writers prepoſterouſly confound her with the Artemiſia I am going to mention [F].

(12) Herod. lib. 1. c. 95.

(c) Pausanias, lib. 3. pag. 93.

(f) Polystratus, Stat. lib. 2. cap. 53.

(g) Ptolemy, Hephæst. apud Phot. cod. 190. p. 491.

(h) See the Article LEUCAS.

"appeared among the forwardest Commanders in the hottest Engagements; and, as, on the Man's side, there was an effeminate Cowardice, on the Woman's was observed a masculine Courage."

[E] Her great Qualities did not preserve her from amorous Foibles. All Heroines are not like Agrippina, who overcame the Weakness of her own Sex, by imitating the Fortitude of the other. "A- grippina, æqui impatiens, dominandi avida, virili- bus curis femininarum vitia exuerat (11). — Agrip- pina, impatient of an Equal, and eager for Rule, by manly Thoughts put off the Woman's Weakness." Semiramis, who was ambitious and warlike to the highest Degree, was prodigiously lascivious. It is observed, that most great Warriors are of an amorous Complexion: Of which the mystical Commentators may give Homer the Honour, for so naturally describing the Intercourses of Mars and Venus; but I believe this is not so generally true, in the Case of Women, who seem best secured against the Follies of Love by the Pursuits of Ambition.

[F] She is preposterously confounded with Artemiſia, the Wife of Mausolus. It seems Pliny is guilty of this Fault; for he says, that Artemiſia, the Wife of Mausolus, gave her Name to the Herb called Parthenis (12). Now, since the Herb Artemiſia, (which we call Mugwort), is mentioned by Hippocrates, and the Wife of Mausolus was not born till after Hippocrates; Pliny, in that Passage, has mistaken one Artemiſia for the other. If one of them gave her Name to the Herb Mugwort, it must be the Daughter of Lygdamis, the great and courageous Artemiſia, who accompanied Xerxes. Mr Chevreau, to whom I owe this Remark against Pliny, observes, that Leo Allatius, from whom he has it, has, with Reason, censured Robert Stephens, for saying (13), That Artemiſia, the Wife of Mausolus, signalized herself in Xerxes's War against the Grecians (14). Mr Chevreau has remarked the same Mistake in the Historical Theatre of Christian Matthew: he adds, That it was not without Reason, that Pliny, in the Passage alluded, gave Mausolus the Title of Rich. I find, indeed, This Epithet in De Pinet's Translation; but not in the Pliny of Father Hardouin: And I find, that Pliny, in another Place (15), describing the Magnificence of the Mausoleum, says only, that Mausolus was a petty King of Caria, Carice regulus. Father Hardouin endeavours to help out his Author, by suggesting, that all the Kings of Caria assumed the Name of Mausolus, as all the Kings of Egypt did the Name of Ptolemy; and, therefore, that Artemiſia, the Wife of Mausolus, to whom Pliny imputes the Vanity of giving her Name to an Herb, is She, who lived in the Time of Xerxes: But he must give me leave to say, that, in this Case, his Author would be very liable to confound another Account; namely, for characterizing a Queen by a Tide, which must have been common to her with all the other Queens of That Country. Father Hardouin grounds his Conjecture on a Passage, where the two Artemiſia's are styled Queens of Caria (16). I shall pass by this reasoning of his, and observe, that Tzetzes is a little puzzled (17). According to him, one of the Artemiſia's was the Wife of Mausolus, and the other the Wife of Hecatomnes; the first of whom he makes the Companion of Xerxes. Now all Authors agree, that She, who built a magnificent Tomb for her Husband, was the Daughter of Hecatomnes, and Wife of Mausolus; and that the Artemiſia, who joined the Perſians against the Greeks, was the Daughter of Lygdamis. The great Scaliger will not pass Muller here: He has too apparently taken the one for the other (18), and Thatin a Place, where it was not easy to make such a Mistake: For it is in the Abstract of a Book, the Author whereof has declared, in plain Terms, that he speaks of one Artemiſia, the Daughter of Lygdamis, who took up Arms against the Perſians (19). Scaliger, suppressing all these particular Descriptions, has substituted That of the Widow of Mausolus, which can only be applied to That Queen of Caria, who so much honoured the Memory of her Husband. This celebrated Writer has led another great Man into an Error, having occasioned Valſius to affirm, that, after the Death of Mausolus, Artemiſia, seeing herself slighted by Dardanius, whom the loved, put out his Eyes, and, finding herself afterwards still more in Love, went to take the Leucadian Leap, by which the lost her Life (20). By comparing This Passage with That of Scaliger, it plainly appears, that the one is a Transcript of the other. This stumble of Valſius is so even a Road, and the Difference he observes between Theopompus, who makes Artemiſia die of Grief for the Loss of her Husband, and Ptolemy, the Son of Hephestion, who makes her die for Love of another Man, as Valſius pretends, are so much the more amazing, as he had, but two Lines before, quoted the seventh Book of this same Ptolemy, to prove, that Artemiſia's Father's Name was not Damis, but Lygdamis. Balthazar Bonifacius, who gives the same false account of the Wife of Mausolus (21), confesses he took it from Scaliger. Habemus confitentem reum: The Criminal pleads Guilty. And it may be properly said of this Way of propagating Faults, — dedit hanc contagio labem,

Et dabit in plures: sicut grex totus in agris
Unius scabie cadit, & porrigine porci;
Uvaeque conspecta livorem ducit ab uva (22).

Infection, from one single Case begun,
Soon spread their Poison, and thro' Numbers run.
So, one Sheep touch'd, some of the Flock escape;
And the whole Bunch rats from one smitten Grape.

Mr Merrage, having said a great many fine Things of Artemiſia, the Wife of Mausolus, and particularly of the Honour done her, in proposing her as a Model of conjugal Love, goes on in this manner: Yet Ptolemy, the Son of Hephestion — says, that Artemiſia was so smitten with the Love of one Dardanius, &c. And, having repeated the whole Story, he proceeds thus: "There were two Artemiſia's, both Queens of Caria, as Suidas informs us; She, who was married to Mausolus, and another more ancient: and, if this Story be true, it is most probable, that it happened to the first Artemiſia, and that This Ptolemy, the Son of Hephestion, in applying it to the Wife of Mausolus, (11) Tacitus, Annal. lib. 6. cap. 25.

(12) Plin. lib. 25. c. 7.

(13) In his Theſaurus Lingue Lat. I have met with the same Faults in his Dictionarium Novissimi Propriorum, &c. printed in 8vo at Cologne, 1558.

(14) Chevreau Hist. du Monde, Tome 4, pag. 33, of the first Dutch Edit.

(15) Lib. 36, cap. 5.

(16) This Passage is in Hecatomnes; but we should ascribe it to Xerxes, if we follow exactly the Expression of Hardouin, Tom. 4, pag. 398.

(17) Tzetzes, chil. 12, lib. 455.

(18) Scaliger, Aulonar. Lector. lib. 2, cap. 18. See Aulonar. Tullian. pag. 329.

(19) Ptolemy, Hephæst. apud Phot. n. 190. pag. 491.

(20) Valer. Not. in Harpocrat. Lexicon, pag. 111.

(21) Hæc Ptolemaeus Hephæstionis filius apud Juniorum Scaligerum recenset. — Thus Ptolemy, the Son of Hephæstion, has it, according to Scaliger junior. Balth. Bonifacius. Hist. Ludic. lib. 3. c. 87.

(22) Juven. Sat. 2. v. 78.

(23) Meneg. Observat. fur Malherbe, pag. 53.

"Mausolus, was mistaken (23)." The Conjecture of this learned Man is very just; but he was in the wrong in charging Ptolemy with fixing this Adventure on the Wife of Mausolus. Sarasin, introducing Mr Menage in the Dialogue, upon the Question, whether a young Man ought to be amorous, makes him say, that Artemisia, the same Artemisia, who was so afflicted for the Death of her Husband, who drowned herself in Tears, and reproached the Stars, which could not help it, (24) Sarasin's Works, pag. 131.

With all that Rage can make one say, When Reason flies, and gives it way (24).

(25) See the Nouveaux Dialogues des Morts, 2. part. p. 17. Dutch Edit.

fel], at last, in Love with Dardanus, and that the most professed Coquette would be ashamed of the Passion of That Queen. Upon this he quotes what Scaliger says; so that we see one, or rather two, ingenious Men, Mr Sarasin and Mr Menage, deceived by the learned Scaliger. The witty Author of the New Dialogues of the Dead has made That Artemisia, who lamented her Husband so much, in Love with a young Man (25).

(a) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 437. Suidas in 'Apropru-cia.

(b) Plin. lib. 36. cap. 5.

(c) Lib. 7. cap. 3.

(d) Diodor. Sicul. l. 16.

(e) Strabo, l. 14. p. 471.

(f) See Remark [D].

ARTEMISIA, Queen of Caria, the Daughter of Hecatomnes (a), Sister and Wife of Mausolus, immortalized herself by the Honours she paid to the Memory of her Husband. She caused a very magnificent Tomb to be built for him, in Halicarnassus, which was called Mausoleum, and was one of the seven Wonders of the World; from whence the Appellation of Mausoleum has ever since been given to all sumptuous Structures of this kind. Pliny has left us a particular Description of this stately Monument (b). It may be seen in French in the History of Mr Chevreaux (c), and in the Supplement to Moreri. Artemisia lived but two Years after her dear Husband (d), who died without Children (e), after he had reigned twenty four Years, towards the End of the CVIth Olympiad [A]. She died of Grief and Melancholy (f) [B], before the Mausoleum was finished (g). It is said the mixed her Husband's Ashes with Water, and drank them, that the might serve him for a living Tomb (h). It must not be forgot, that she caused excellent Panegyrics to be made on him, and proposed a Prize of great Value for him, who should acquit himself best (i). Theopompus obtained it. They say, that his Master Isoocrates was one of the Orators, who entered the Lists [C]. Theodectes of Pbafelides, who was another of the Competitors, composed a Tragedy called Mausolus, which had better Success, than his Prose. Nor must we forget, that, instead of Lamentations and Tears, in which most Writers

(26) In Officina. (27) Valerius Maximus Variorum, It pag. 395. Edit. 1655.

(g) Plin. lib. 36. cap. 5.

(h) A. Gell. l. 10. c. 18. V. Maxim. lib. 4. c. 1.

(i) A. Gell. lib. 10. c. 18. Plutarch. in Vita 160r.

[A] Mausolus, her Husband, died — towards the End of the CVIth Olympiad. Most Editions of Pliny make Mausolus, King of Caria, die in the second Year of the CVI Olympiad, and the Three hundred and second of Rome (1). But Father Hardouin, according to the best Manuscripts, has fixed his Death to the second Year of the CVIth Olympiad, and the Four hundred and second of Rome. Obiit Olympiadis centesima sexta anno secundo; Urbis anno 402. Mr Chevreaux observes, that Ulper judged this Passage of Pliny to be corrupted, and that Mausolus died in the fourth Year of the CVIth Olympiad, Anno Mundi 3661 (2). This agrees very well with these Words of Father Hardouin: "Quid quod & Diodorus non "ad Olympiadis cvi annum alterum Mausoli obitum, "sed ad quartum refert, lib. 16. ver. 435 (3)." But "Diodorus places the Death of Mausolus, not in the "second, but fourth, Year of the CVIth Olympiad: and with the Duration of the Reigns of Those, who succeeded Mausolus, till Alexander's Expedition. See the Remark [A] of the Article ADA. It is certain, that Mausolus was dead, and Artemisia, who did not survive him above two Years, living, when Demosthenes made an Oration for the Liberty of the Rhodians. Now he spoke this Oration in the second Year of the CVIth Olympiad, as may be collected from Dionysius of Halicarnassus (4). Mausolus, then, died in the last Year of the CVIth; and the anonymous Author, who described the Olympiads, was mistaken, in placing Mausolus's Funeral Oration, by Theopompus, in the first Year of the CIIIth Olympiad. Valesius has committed the same Mistake. Hec Artemisia in funere Mariti agones celebravit Olympiade ciii (5). — This Artemisia solemnized her Husband's Funeral with Prize Contests in the CIIIth Olympiad. They, who, after the Example of Caepion, Mr Lloyd, and Mr Hofman, &c. would refer us to the seventh Book of Herodotus, for an Account of the Mausoleum, can never have rightly consulted the Chronological Tables, which must be very false indeed, if the Death of Mausolus be found in them, before That of Herodotus. [B] She died of Grief and Melancholy. We have several great Authorities for this Fact, no less than a

It would be too tedious to point out all those, who have confounded the two Artemisias. Ravifus Textor (26) In Officina, and the Authors of the Theaurus Fabri are of This Number. Olivier, who wrote a Commentary on Valerius Maximus, is also one of them; though he knew, that Strabo and Herodotus did not agree about the Genealogy of The Artemisia, whom they mention (27). He innocently imagined, that one of the two must be in the wrong, and never dreamed, that they spoke of different Persons, and were both in the right. It is true, Mr Hofman gives two Articles of Artemisia; but, in the first, he has huddled together confusedly, what should have been distinguished under the two different Heads; and he is doubtful, whether the Wife of Mausolus, and the Daughter of Lygdamis, are not one and the same Person. Besides, he quotes Vitruvius for Facts, which he never once mentions. Mr Lloyd led him the way in That false Quotation from Charles Stephens, which he has not corrected; And from whom he has very surprisingly pirated the whole Article of That Artemisia, who followed Xerxes; which Article was very correct.

Theopompus, a Cicero, and a Strabo. Theopompus's Account is very full. "Ην φησι Θεόπομπος ὀβιβάς νόσῳ ἀπεθῆσθαι διὰ τὴν λύπην ἐπὶ τῷ ἀνδρὶ καὶ ἀδελφῷ Μαννολῷ, ἀποθανεῖν (6). Who is said, by Theopompus, to have died of a wasting Distemper, contracted through Grief for the Loss of Mausolus her Husband, and Brother. That of Cicero. "Artemisia illa, fays he (7), Mausoli Cariae Regis uxor, quae nobile illud Halicarnassi fecit sepulchrum, quam diu vixit, vixit in luctu, eodemque etiam confecta contabuit. Huic erat illa opinio quotidie recens, quae tum denique non appellabatur recens cum vetustate exaruit. — That Artemisia, the Wife of Mausolus of Caria, who built The famous Monument at Halicarnassus, lived in Sorrow, and pined away with it to Death. To her, the same Sentiment "was always new, which was then only not esteemed "new, when quite worn out with Age." It is almost certain, Cicero was ignorant, that Artemisia survived her Husband but two Years; otherwise he would not have used such Expressions as signify a very long Sorrow. But let us see what Strabo says: φθίγει δ' ἀποθανίσθαι διὰ πένθος τῷ ἀνδρὶ (8). She died of a Consumption, through Grief for her Husband.

[C] They say Isoocrates made a Panegyric on him. I have quoted two good Vouchers (9); and can add a Third, of great Weight, which is Theopompus: He publicly boasts of having carried the Prize from his Master Isoocrates (10). But I am not ignorant, that Suidas, without mentioning Isoocrates, the Athenian, speaks of another Isoocrates, Disciple and Successor of the former, and born either at Heraclea, or Apollonia, on the Euxine Sea. Suidas says, it was He, who disputed the Prize of Eloquence with Theodectes. Theopompus, and Erythreus (11). This latter was of Naucratis in Egypt, which will make Aulus Gellius guilty of a Mistake, in the Place, where we read, that Theopompus, Theodectes, and Naurites disputed That Prize (12). Naurites is not the proper Name of One of Those Competitors; it is only his Name derived from the Town, where he was born, a little altered; for it should have been Naucratis (13). Olivier names them Theopompus, Theodotes, and Naucratis (14). But

(6) Apud Harpocrat.

(7) Cicero. Tusculanae. 3. This Passage is warranted in Val. Max. Variorum. The last Period in Roman Character is without the Paratich non, which makes it intelligible Norjense.

(8) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 452.

(9) Plutarch. in Vita 160r. A. Gell. lib. 10. cap. 18.

(10) See Eusebius Praep. Evang. l. 10. cap. 3. pag. 464.

(11) Suidas in 'Isona-
745.

(12) A. Gell. lib. 10. cap. 18.

(13) Moreri and Hofman have it Naurites.

(14) Olivier. in Val. Max. pag. 395. Edit. Lugd. Bat. 1655.

(1) Plinius, lib. 36. c. 5. pag. 280. & cap. 6. pag. 283.

(2) Chevreaux. Hist. du Monde, lib. 7. cap. 3.

(3) Hardouin. in Plin. Tom. 5. p. 280.

(4) Dion. Halicarn. Epist. de Art. & Script. D. moeth.

(5) Vales. Not. in Harpocrat. Lexicon, pag. 93.

bury Artemisia during her Widowhood, there are those, who affirm, that she made some very heroic Conquests [D].

if Aulus Gellius is to be preferred before Suidas, as in my Judgment he ought to be, then we must own, that the latter is mistaken in the Place, where we read, ἡμεῖς τῷ Ἐρυσθραίου Ναυαγιστῆρι δινυνοῖσθαλο (15); he contended with Erythraeus, the Naucrator. Plotius favours Aulus Gellius, by saying, that Naucrator of Erythraea was one of Theopompus's Competitors (16). On one side, or the other, they have mistaken the proper Name for the Name derived from the Town. Observe, that Cicero (17), Dionysius Halicarnassensis (18), and Quintilian (19), speak of One Naucrator, a Disciple of Isocrates. However, Amiot has translated the Passage of Plutarch in a quite different manner from Wolffius, and Xylander: according to These, Isocrates's Panegyric on Mausolus was lost; but, according to Amiot, it was preserved. Isocrates, says he, contended for the Prize, which Queen Artemisia instituted on account of the Tomb of her Husband Mausolus; and the Oration, which he made in Praise of the deceased, is still extant. Without doubt the different Manner of Accenting has produced These different Translations: some read τὸ δὲ ἐγκώμιον ἔσώζεσθαι, but this Panegyric is not preserved; others read τὸ δὲ ἐγκώμιον ἔσώζεσθαι, And this Panegyric is there preserved. See what sport Fortune makes with Manuscripts; one single Point, either taken away, or added, or altered, turns the Affirmative into the Negative.

[D] There are some, who affirm, that she made some very heroic Conquests. I say nothing of Demosthenes's Oration, which has been quoted before (20), though it is certain, from the manner of That Orator's expressing himself, that Artemisia was not represented in Athens as a disconsolate Widow, pining away, and neglecting the Affairs of her Kingdom, to confine her Thoughts wholly to the Memory of her Husband. The Athenians considered her as a Woman in a Condition to make herself feared; for one of the Arguments, which Demosthenes had to confute, was drawn from the Motions which Artemisia might make, if the Athenians should espouse the Interests of the Rhodians. But I leave this, to pass to something more close to the Point. Vitruvius tells us, that, after the Death of Mausolus, the Rho- dians, disdaining, that Caria should be governed by a Woman, attempted to dethrone her (21). Their Design was defeated by a Stratagem of Artemisia's, which was presently followed by another, executed by herself, in Perion, with so much Vigour and Success, that, in a very short time, she made herself Mistress of Rhodes. She caused two Statues in Brals to be erected there, as a Trophy of her Victory; one of them represented the City of Rhodes, the other Artemisia marking That City with a hot Iron. Vitruvius adds, that the Rhodians never durst remove This Trophy from it's Place, (for That was a thing forbidden by their Religion), but they encompassed it with a Building, which concealed it from public View. Does this look like the Conduct of a disconsolate Widow, entirely employed in sighing and groaning, and so lavish of Life, as to sacrifice it to sorrow in two Years Time? It is in vain to pretend, that Vitruvius speaks of the other Artemisia: I am sensible Mr Chevreau has thought so (22); but there are two incontestable Arguments to the contrary. For, I. the Artemisia of Vitruvius was the Wife of Mausolus; and, II. she possessed herself of a City, which was not built till the Time of the Peloponnesian War, when Xerxes and Artemisia were no longer in Being. 'H δὲ ὕν πάλαι ἐκίχον κατὰ τὰ Πελοποννησιακά ἐπὶ τῷ αὐτῷ ἀρχιτέκτονι, ὡς φασιν, ὅφ' ἔκλειψεν (23). The City, that now is, was built in the Time of the Peloponnesian War, they say, by the very same Architect, who built the Piræum. It is not, therefore, without Reason, that Tzetzes makes both the Artemisias Commanders of Armies, and Women of Martial Spirit, ἀμφὶ δὲ στρατηγείδας, γενναίας ἀρχοῖσπας. What can we think of Authors, who give us such inconsistent Accounts of one, and the same, Queen? One Person, greatly obliged by her, might be sufficient to make the World believe, that her Grief for her Husband was the Cause of her Death. Writers would repeat it an hundred Times, from one to another, not only as a Rarity, but also, as an Example worthy of Imitation. The most singular Embellishments are given, sooner or later, to such sort of Traditions.

ASCLEPIADES, a Native of Phlia (a) in Peloponnesus, made a great Figure among the ancient Philosophers. He was a Disciple of Stilpo (b), and brought over Menedemus to the same School; Menedemus, I say, with whom he contracted such an intimate Friendship (c), that it might, perhaps, be compared to That of Pylades, and Orestes [A]. After having studied together under Stilpo, at Megara, they went to Elis, where they conferred with the Disciples of Phædon (d). They were both very poor, and forced to earn their Living with the Sweat of their Brows [B]; however, they found Time for their Studies, and became great Philosophers. Menedemus was younger than his Friend (e); but they had no Regard to the Difference of their Age, when they came to a Resolution of marrying. Their Design was to live and keep House together, even after quitting their State of Celibacy. To this end they judged it necessary to choose their Wives, with a Precaution most likely to secure their domestic Quiet, and believed this End would be answered in a Family, where there was a Mother and her Daughter, both marriageable. Menedemus married the Mother, and Asclepiades the Daughter (f). The latter being dead, Menedemus surrendered his Wife to his Friend, and married a rich Maid; but would have Asclepiades's Wife continue Mistress of the House. It was no hard Matter for him to find out a good Match; because he had the chief Authority in the Town, where he lived (g); I mean Eretria, the Place of his Birth. Asclepiades died there very old (h). He had lived very temperately, amidst the great Plenty of his Friend's Table (i), and bore the Misfortune

[A] His Friendship for Menedemus might be compared to That of Pylades and Orestes. These are the Words of Diogenes Laërtius; φίλον τε ἦν μάλα (Μενέδημου) ὡς ἦσαν ἐκ τῆς ἀπὸς Ἀσκληπιάδου συμπαροίας, ὡς ἦν τε διαφερόμενος Πυλάδου φιλοσοφίας (1). — Menedemus was remarkable for his Friendship, as appeared from his Conjunction with Asclepiades, no way inferior to That of Pylades with Orestes. After this, our Author says, that Archeopolis, intending to make them a Present of a considerable Sum, his Generosity was of no service to them; for a laudable Disagreement happened between them, about the taking last, and, as they could not settle this Point, neither of them took any thing.

[B] Both he, and his Friend, were forced to earn their Living with the Sweat of their Brows [B] They hired themselves, as Labourers, to a Mason. Asclepiades was not so much ashamed of it, as Menedemus; he did not value who saw him, naked (2), carrying up Mortar to the Top of the House; but Menedemus hid himself, when he saw any Body pass by (3). Athenæus, who says nothing of this, tells another, yet more remarkable, Story. "The Areopagites, says he (4), caused Menedemus, and Asclepiades, two young Students in Philosophy, and very poor, to be summoned before them, and demanded of them, How come you to be so fat? you have no Estate, you follow no Employment, but spend all

(17) Vitruv. de Architect. lib. 2. cap. 8.

(22) Chevreau, lib. 7. cap. 3. p. 34.

(23) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 45.

(24) Tzetzes, chil. 12, vers. c65. hilt. 455.

(h) Id. ibid. n. 138.

(i) Συζήσας τὸ Μενέδημου σφῆδρα ὑπελάσας ἀπὸ μεγάλων --- He lived with Menedemus very sparingly in the midst of great Opulence.

(2) Ischæus is to be understood of a d. n. literally of an ab. his Nakedness, but of the usual meaning of stripping of his raiment.

(3) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 131.

(4) Athen. lib. 4. c. 13, pag. 168.

(17) Suidas in 'Eρυσθραίου.

(16) Photius in Biblioth. cod. 1. 6. p. 32.

(17) Cicero de Orat. lib. 3. & in Oratione.

(18) Dion Halicarn. in 'Ισοκράτους, p. 228.

(19) Quintil. lib. 3. c. 6. init.

(20) That de Libertate Rhodiourum, at page 78 of his Works; Edit. Genev. 1607. folia.

(a) Φιλία, ἢ φίλος, a Philon. Diog. Laërt. de Vita Phil. lib. 1. 2. in Menedem. circa init. p. 153. Edit. Amst. 1692.

(b) Id. ibid.

(c) Id. ibid. pag. 159. n. 137.

(d) Id. ibid. pag. 153. n. 126.

(e) Id. ib. p. 8. 159. n. 137.

(f) Id. ibid.

(g) Id. ibid.

(1) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 137.

yet greater admiration [B]. He engaged to renounce the Title of Physician, if ever he should be sick, and won the Wager; for he died by a Fall, at a very great Age. It was at Rome he became so famous. He came thither to teach Rhetoric (g); but, not finding That Employ profitable enough, he applied himself to the Practice of Physic; and, not being acquainted with the Remedies then in use, he took occasion to condemn them, and invent new ones. He contrived easy Methods, and such as any one might use without the Help of a Physician. This made them very acceptable; and all the World ran to him, as to one sent from Heaven [C]. One Thing, which favoured his gaining so great a Reputation, was the foolish Credulity of That Age as to the Magic Virtue of certain Plants; for it being easy to demonstrate, that most of those Virtues were chimerical, it was no hard Matter for Asclepiades to destroy all the Credit of the ancient Prescriptions [D]. He held, that the Soul was not distinct from Matter (h). He composed several Books, which are all lost. Pliny, Celsus, and Galen have quoted some of them. He had also many famous Disciples (i). Pliny's Niceneſis seems to be carried too far; he could not bear, that a Man, who had only studied Physic for Profit, should be allowed to give Rules of such consequence

(g) Id. ibid.

(h) See Terullian, in his Book de Animâ, cap. 15.

(i) See their Names in the 46th Letter of Reineſius to Ruperus, pag. 395.

" deep a Lethargy, that her Husband, and those about her, believed her dead. They wrapped her up only in Linnen, according to the Custom of poor People in That Country, and had her carried out to be buried. As they were going to Church, one of her Bearers went so close to a Bush, that the Thorns pricked her, and roused her from her Lethargy. Fourteen Years after, she was dead again, at least supposed so. As they were carrying her to the Grave, and coming near the old Place, the Husband cried out, two or three times: "Pray keep a little farther off the Bush (5)."

(5) Menges, p. 117, 118. of the 1st Dutch Edition.

[B] The Wager, which he laid against Fortune, made him be cried up with yet greater Admiration. I do not believe, that the most pretending Quacks, of our Days, dare lay any such Wager, especially if they were obliged to deposit a Sum of Money. However, I am persuaded, that the Reader will not be displeased to find Pliny's Text here: "Summa autem Asclepiadi Prusensi (fama est) — maxime sponſione facta cum fortuna, ne medicus crederetur, si unquam invalidus ullo modo fuisset ipse: & victor, suprema in senecta lapſu ſcalarum exanimatus est (6). — Asclepiades, the Prusian, gained the biggest Reputation, — chiefly by staking his Credit, as a Physician, against his ever being sick himself; he carried his Point, and died, in an extreme old Age, by a Fall down Stairs." It was a surprizing Temerity in Our Physician; but the good Fortune, in not being belied by the Event, appears, to me, yet more extraordinary. I observe, that, in some things, he was a meer Quack. He administered Wine in some Distempers, and boasted so much of his Remedy, that he said, the Power of the Gods was hardly equal to That of Wine. Asclepiades utilitatem vini æquari vix Deorum potentia pronuntiavit (7).

(6) Plinius, lib. 7. c. 37. pag. 58, 59.

(7) Id. ibid. 23. cap. 1. pag. 251.

[C] All the World ran to him, as to one sent from Heaven. We may conceive, from the Words of Pliny, an Idea of the Ascendant some Physicians have, even in our Days. "Torrenti ac meditata quotidie oratione blandiens, omnia (remedia) abdicavit: totamque medicinam ad causam revocando, conjecturæ fecit, quinque res maxime communium auxiliorum professus abſtinentiam cibi, alias vini, frictionem corporis, ambulationem, gestationes: quæ cum uniusquique semetipsum sibi, præstare posse intelligeret, fœventibus cunctis ut essent vera quæ facillima erant, universum prope humanum genus circumegit in se, non alio modo, quam si cœlo emissus advenisset (8). — Soothing the People every Day with a fluent and premeditated Oration, he banished all Medicines; and, reducing the whole Art of Physic to the Test of Reason, he proved it to be but conjectural. Five Things, of most common Benefit, he held to, Abſtinance from Meat, at other Times from Wine, the use of the Fleſh-Bruſh, the Exercise of Walking, and of Riding: Which, as every one believed he could prescribe for himself such Remedies as these, and as it is natural to wish those Things true that are most easy, made all People flock to him, as to one sent from Heaven."

(8) Id. ibid. 26. cap. 3. pag. 444.

[D] Most of the Magic Virtues of Plants being chimerical, it was easy for Asclepiades to destroy the Credit of ancient Prescriptions. It is the Nature of Man to run into Extremes. Shew him but some Truths, and he shall believe all the Falsities you think proper to couch under them. Undeceive him but of some Falsities, by evident Demonstration, and he shall question the Truth of every Thing. Thus, by exploring the Impertinence of the Remedies called Magical, Asclepiades was enabled to overthrow even those Things, which might be better grounded. Pliny very naturally describes this Inclination for Extremes, so remarkable in Human Nature. "Super omnia, says he (9), adjuvere eum (Asclepiadem) Magicæ vanitates, in tantum eveſcæ, ut abrogare herbas fidem cunctis poſſent. Æthiopiæ herbâ amnes ac stagna ſiccari conſectæ, tactu clauſa omnia aperiri. Achæmenide conſectâ in aciem hoſtium, trepidare agmina, ac terga vertere. Latæcen dari ſolitam à Perſarum rege legatis, ut quocunque veniſſent omnium rerum copiâ abundarent, ac multa ſimilia. Ubinam iſtæ fuere, cum Cimbrî Teutonique terribili Marte ulularent, aut cum Lucullus tot reges Magorum paucis legionibus ſterneret? Curve Romani duces primam ſemper in bellis commerciorum habuere curam? Cur hercè Cæſaris miles ad Pharfaliæ famem fenſit, ſi abundantia omnis contingere unius herbæ felicitate poterat? Non fatius fuit Æmilianum Scipionem Carthaginiſ portas herbâ patefacere, quam machinis clauſura per tot annos quætere? Siccentur hodie Æthiopiæ Pontinæ paludes, tantumque agri ſuburbanæ reddatur Italiæ. Nam quæ apud eundem Democritum invenitur compoſitio medicamenti, quo pulchri bonique & fortunati gignantur liberi, cui unquam Perſarum regi tales dedit? Mirum eſſet proſpecto, hucusque proſpectam credulitatem antiquorum, ſaluberrimis ortam initiis, ſi in ullâ re modum humana ingenia noviſſent, atque non hanc ipſam medicinam ab Asclepiade repertam, ſuo loco probatûr eſſemus eveſcæ ultra Magos etiam. Sed hæc eſt omni in re animorum conditio, ut à neceſſariis orſa primò, cuncta pervenerint ad nimium. — The greatest Assistance, Asclepiades received, was from the Magical Superſtitious, which were carried to ſuch an Height, as made it eaſy to aboliſh all Sort of Faith in Plants. That the Æthiopian Plant would dry up Lakes and Rivers, if thrown into them, and force open Doors, or the ſtrongeſt Securities, by the Touch of it. That the Achæmenian Plant, by being caſt at the Enemy, would make their Troops tremble, and turn their Backs. That the Plant, called Latæce, uſed to be given by the Perſian King to his Embaſſadors, that they might always be ſure of Plenty, wherever they went: and many more of this Nature. But where were theſe Virtues, when the Cimbrî, and Teutoni, thundered at their Gates, and when Lucullus, with a few Forces, overthrew ſo many Kings of the Magi? Or why were the Romans, in their Wars, ſo careful, in the firſt Place, to ſecure their Supplies? How came Cæſar's Soldiers to ſall ſhort of Proviſions at Pharfalia, if one Plant only could make plenty? Would Scipio Æmilianus have lain, ſo many Years, battering the Walls of Carthage, with his Engines, if he could have forced open the Gates with a Plant? Let the Æthiopian Herb dry up the Pontine Lake at this Day, and reſtore to Italy ſo great a Tract of loſt Land. Did ever That Composition of Medicine, reported by the ſame Author Democritus, to have been ſo ſerviceable towards beguiling handſome, diſtful, and fortunate Children, produce any ſuch Effect in any one of the Perſian Kings? It would be wonderful indeed, that the Credulity of the Ancients, which at firſt had ſome reaſonable Foundation,

(9) Id. ibid. cap. 4. pag. 446.

consequence to Mankind [E]. Suidas, who has confounded our Physician with one Asclepiades, a Grammarian of Myrlea, has been reprov'd for it by Mr Moreri agreeably to the Observations of Vossius. Therefore I shall mention it no farther, but content myself with pointing out the Causes of it. I shall only remark the Mistakes of some other Authors [F]. Those of Mr Moreri are not very considerable "Foundation, should be stretched to such a Pitch, if human Nature knew how to observe a Medium in any thing; or, if this very Reformation in Physic, introduced by Asclepiades, had not been carried, as we shall shew in it's proper place, to a greater height of Extravagance, than even That of the Magi. But such is the Impertinence of our Minds, that, though we set out reasonably, yet we carry every thing to an Extreme." Father Hardwin repeats this in the Place, where Pliny describes the great Power, which certain Physicians had gained over the People, at the same time that they mutually condemned one another's Practice. "Hinc illæ, says he (10), circa ægros miseræ fœnentiarum concertationes, nullo idem consente ne videatur accessio alterius. Hinc illa infelicitas Monumenti inscriptio, turba se medicorum perijisse. Mutatur ars quotidie toties in populo, & ingeniorum Græciæ statu impellimur. Palamque est, ut quique inter istos loquendo polleat, imperatorem illico vitæ nostræ necique fieri. — Hence arise those wretched Wranglings of Physicians about their Patients, no one caring to come into the Sentiments of another, for fear it should look like giving him the Preference. Hence That unlucky Epitaph, The Dissembler he died of was the Number of his Doctors. The Art is always changing, by such daily Innovations, and the Wits of Greece turn us which Way they will. And we see, that every one of them, who has a Talent for talking, presently assumes over us the Power of Life and Death."

[E] Pliny — could not bear, that such a Man should be allowed to give Rules of Physic Consequence to Mankind. His Words are remarkable. "Id solum possumus indignari, unum hominem de levissimâ gente, sine opibus ullis orsum, vestigialis sui causæ, repente leges salutis humano generi dedisse, quas tamen postea abrogare multi (11). — This one Thing is enough to raise our Indignation, that one of so very mean an Extraction, and of no Fortunes, should, for his own Profit only, so suddenly take upon him to give Rules of Health to Mankind, which, by the Way, were afterwards exploded by several of his Successors."

[F] The Mistakes of some other Authors, concerning Asclepiades, &c. Meursius has been reprimanded for taking Asclepiades of Myrlea, and Asclepiades of Niceæ, for two different Persons. "Malè Meursius hunc *Myrleæ*anum & *Nicenæ*um tanquam duos distinctos recenset (12). — Meursius has erroneously distinguished this Asclepiades the *Myrleæ*an, and *Niceæ*an, into two different Persons." Jonfius affirms it to be a Mistake, and that the same Asclepiades, who was born at Myrlea, and whose Family was of Niceæ, is indifferently named *Myrleæ*an, and *Nicenæ*us. Pinedo fell into the same Error with Meursius (13). In the List of Authors, quoted by Athenæus, Asclepiades of Myrlea is understood to be meant in these Words of the tenth Book: Ἀσκληπιάδης ἐν τοῖς τελεσθῶμενοις (14). Dalechamp has translated them, Asclepiades libro de iis quorum nomine editæ sunt tragædiæ. — Asclepiades, in his Book of those, in whose Names have been published Tragedies. Cajaubon censures him for This, and makes it appear, that the Title of That Work was not of the Masculine Gender τελεσθῶμενοις, but of the Neuter Gender τελεσθώμενα, and that Plutarch also has quoted it so (15). He does not say where the Quotation is to be found. But, to supply This Defect, I shall observe, that it is in the Life of Iocastes, as we shall see presently. He might have added, that the same Work of Asclepiades is quoted in the Neuter Gender, by Stephanus Byzantinus, and by Photius, as we shall make appear by and by. This Critic understands That Work of Asclepiades to have treated of the great Actions, which served the Tragic Poets for their Subject-matter. I am altogether of the same Opinion, and take Dalechamp to be mistaken. The Latin Translator of Plutarch has also misunderstood the Title of That Book; for these Words of Plutarch, Ἀσκληπιάδης ὁ τὰ τελεσθώμενα συγγραψάς, he has thus rendred, Asclepiades tragædiæ scriptor (16).

— Asclepiades, a Writer of Tragedy. This shews clearly enough, without consulting exactly what follows (17) in the Translation, that he took Asclepiades for a Tragic Poet. Andrew Schot makes the same Slip in his Translation of Photius. Photius speaks thus. Ἀσκληπιάδης δὲ τὰ τελεσθώμενα συγγραψάς (18). i. e. according to Andrew Schotus, Asclepiades, qui Tragædiæ scriptor. — Asclepiades, who wrote Tragedies. But it is all a Mistake; the Asclepiades, there mentioned, is not represented to us as such an Author. Observe, by the way, that he was the Disciple of Iocastes, from whence you may judge of the time, in which he lived. Pinedo under stood the Sense of the Word τελεσθώμενα better than the Translator of Plutarch, and has rendred Ἀσκληπιάδης ὁ τὰ τελεσθώμενα γράψας ἐν τῇ βιβλίῳ (19); Asclepiades qui de rebus in Tragædia decantatis sex libros scripti. — Asclepiades, who wrote six Books of those Things, which have been made the Subject of Tragedies. These Greek Words are taken from Stephanus Byzantinus, where he informs us, that the Asclepiades, who composed those six Books, was of Tragile, a City of Thracia. Cajaubon should have censured Dalechamp, for imagining, that Athenæus means Asclepiades of Myrlea, in the Passage above cited. Gesner has fallen into the same Error (20). Stephanus Byzantinus would have justified such a Censure. You will find in Pinedo two grand Mistakes: I. He says, that Asclepiades of Myrlea, a Disciple of Apollonius, was a Grammarian, who taught at Rome, under Pompey the Great, and had lived, in his Youth, at Alexandria, under Ptolemy IV. II. He proposes it as a Question, whether he is the same Asclepiades, who taught Grammar in Turdania, a Province of Spain (21). On the first Head, I must observe to him, that a Man, who had lived under Ptolemy IV, and had taught at Rome, in Pompey's Time, would have been a Prodigy; for between the last Year of That Ptolemy, and the Death of Mithridates, who was vanquished by Pompey, there are no less than an Hundred and forty Years. On the second, I shall only observe, that Strabo plainly says, that Asclepiades, of Myrlea, taught Grammar in Turdania (22). The Sieur Pinedo had observed it himself, in another Place (23). How comes he then to make a Query of it?

Let us examine, in two Words, an Observation of Father Hardwin. He says, that Asclepiades, of Prusa, was a Friend of Cicero, and proves it from a Passage of the first Book De Oratore. He quotes only a little part of it (24); but this is the whole Passage. "Neque verò Asclepiades is, quo nos medico amicoque usi sumus, tum quum eloquentiâ vincebat ceteros medicos, in eo ipso quod ornatè dicebat, Medicinæ facultate utebatur, non eloquentiæ (25). Nor did Asclepiades, who was both my Friend and Physician, though he excelled all other Physicians in the Art of Speaking, make no use of his Eloquence, but only of his Physic." We ought to observe, that it is not Cicero, who speaks, but the Orator Craffus: Asclepiades therefore was the Friend and Physician of Craffus, and not of Cicero. Besides, Cicero makes Craffus speak thus in the Year of Rome 662 (26), and mentions Asclepiades as then dead. This furnishes us with an Objection against Pliny, for saying, that Asclepiades, gaining but little by the Profession of Eloquence, turned Physician in the Time of Pompey (27). It is certain, that, in 662, Pompey was but a young Lad. See the following Remark, Number IV.

Jonfius supposes, that there were two Asclepiades's of Myrlea; that the first was a Disciple of Apollonius, the Grammarian, and Author of a Book entitled φιλοσόφων βιβλίων διορθώσις, Philosophorum librorum emendationes (28). — Emendations of the Books of the Philosophers: and that the second wrote some Books concerning Grammar and Grammarians (29). I cannot conceive upon what he can found this Distinction. The best Thing he can say for it is, that Asclepiades, of Myrlea, refused, in his Grammar, a (16) Plut. in Vita Iocast. pag. 837. C.

(17) Which confirms, that he took Tragile for a Writer of Tragedies.

(18) Photii Biblioth. Cod. 260, pag. 1456.

(19) Steph. Byzant. verbo τράγικοι.

(20) Gesner in Biblioth. fol. 97.

(21) Pinedo, in Steph. Byzant. pag. 757.

(22) Strabo, lib. 3, pag. 208.

(23) Pinedo, in Steph. Byzant. pag. 479.

(24) Eloquens Medicus dicitur Cicero, lib. 1. de Orat. pag. 283. qui se eo medico & amico usum esse gloriatur. Hardwinus in Indice Autor. Plinii, pag. 99.

(25) Cicero, lib. 1, de Orat. fol. 61. C.

(26) See Fabricius, in Vita Cicero, ad Ann. urbis 662.

(27) Plin. lib. 26, c. 3.

(28) Jonfius, de Script. Hist. Philof. pag. 167.

(29) Id. ibi, pag. 205.

(10) Id. lib. 29. cap. 1.

(11) Id. lib. cap. 3. pag. 445.

(12) Jonfius de Script. Philofoph. pag. 167.

(13) Pinedo, in Steph. Byzant. pag. 479, n. 15, & pag. 757.

(14) Athen. lib. 10. 456.

(15) Calaub. in Athen. pag. 769.

siderable [G]. There was another Asclepiades, a famous Physician, under the Emperor Adrian [H].

Sentiment of Dionysius of Thrace. "In isto opete
"Dionysii Thracis de partibus Grammaticæ senten-(30) Id. ib. tiam refellit, teste Sexto Empirico (30). — In "That Work, he confutes an Opinion of Dionysius,
"the Thracian, concerning the Parts of Grammar,
"as Sextus Empiricus witnesses." This Dionysius, according to Suidas, taught at Rome in Pompey's Time, and had been a Disciple of Aristarchus. It must therefore follow, you will say, that the Ascle- piades, who refuted him, was not He, who was a Disciple of Apollonius. I grant the Consequence; but I suspect some small Mistake in Suidas. It seems to me, that a Disciple of Aristarchus (31) would have been too old to teach in the Time of Pompey (32).
I am therefore of Opinion, that Dionysius of Thrace, the Disciple of Aristarchus, did not live till Pompey's Time. In which case it would be possible, that Ascle- piades, a Disciple of Apollonius, might confute him; for this Apollonius, having been Keeper of the Alexandrian Library, after Eratosthenes (33), who died in the Beginning of the CXLVth Olympiad (34), might very well be cotemporary with Aristarchus, and have Disciples at that time cotemporary with those of Aristarchus. Consequently there is no necessity for finding out another Asclepiades, the Confuter of Dionysius of Thrace, younger than Ascle- piades, the Disciple of Apollonius. I cannot tell why Vossius acquiesces so readily with Suidas's joining the Character of a Disciple of Aristarchus with That of Professor at Rome in Pompey's Time (35). He is justly censured for saying, that Asclepiades, of Alexandria, wrote a Book about the People of Attica, and quoting the Scholiast of Aristophanes to prove it. Asclepiades Alexandrinus * τὸς καὶ δὲ δῆμον ἀρχοῦντας consignavit, ut auctor Scholiastes Aristophanis in nubes (36).
Jonfus shews him, that the Scholiast says no more, than that Asclepiades called the Demarches τὸς καὶ δὲ τὸν δῆμον ἀρχοῦντας (37).
[G] Those of Mr Moreri are not very considerable. I. The Ancients do not ascribe the History of Alexander the Great, quoted by Arian, to Ascle- piades of Myrlea, as he affirms. II. His saying, Strabo adds, that Asclepiades of Myrlea had taught Grammar in Spain, is making Strabo father the other Particulars, which Moreri had mentioned before. But this is groundless. III. He questions, without any manner of Reason, whether the Relation to Spain concerns another Asclepiades; for Strabo affirms it expressly of Asclepiades of Myrlea. IV. He ought not to have asserted so positively, that Mithridates was at War with the Romans, when he endeavoured to get Ascle- piades the Physician to his Court; for we have seen, above (38), that Cicero speaks of This Physician as of one, who was not alive in the Year of Rome 662.

at which time Mithridates, strictly speaking, had not made War with the People of Rome. This shews, that Mr Moreri might well be mistaken, in affirming, that Asclepiades was in Esseum at Rome in the Time of Pompey the Great; — that is to say, when That great Man was at the Head of the Republic. Does he not place the Birth of This Pompey on the last Day of September, of the Year of Rome 648? How will he reconcile this with the Passage in Cicero, where Asclepiades is mentioned? I know very well, he may shelter himself under the Authority of Pliny, and that Jonfus may be brought in for a Second. But how comes Pliny to be of more Credit than Cicero? And can he be sure, that Jonfus is not mistaken? "Asclepiades Medicus quidam" behold a quidam very ill employed: This Asclepiades is too famous to deserve so slighting an Epiteth (39), "Prusianus" in Bithynia Philophiscus cognomine sub Pompeio
"M. vixit teste Strabone lib. 12. (40). — Asclepi- des, a certain Physician of Prusis, in Bithynia, fir-
"named Philophiscus (from his Love of Philosophy),
"lived under Pompey the Great, as Strabo testifies
"in Book 12." But I find nothing more in the twelfth Book of Strabo, than that Asclepiades, of Prusis, was a Physician (41). Father Hardouin has quoted Strabo (42), to prove this Point as well as Jonfus. V. The Asclepiades, mentioned by Plutarch in the Life of Isocrates, was not a Tragic Poet (43), as Mr Moreri affirms.

[H] There was another ASCLEPIADES, a famous Physician, under the Emperor Adrian.] He was of the same City as the former (44), and flourished under Trajan, Adrian, and Antoninus; he was made free by one Calpurnius, and obtained the Rights of a Roman Citizen, and several other Privileges. We learn all this from an Inscription: See the Letters of Reinesius (45). He wrote several Books about the Compositions of Medicines, both Internal, and External (46).

ASPASIA of Miletus, Mistress to Pericles. We shall give her History in the Remark [M] of the Article PERICLES.

ASPASIA of Phocæa, Mistress to Cyrus the younger. We shall give her History in the Remark [C] of the Article of That Prince.

ASTYANAX, the only Son of Hector and Andromache [A], gave the Greeks Uneasiness in the midst of their Victories, tho' he was then but an Infant. Being hindred, by contrary Winds, from returning home after the Destruction of Troy, Calchas declared, they ought to throw Astyanax headlong from the Top of the Walls, because, if he lived to Man's Estate, he would not fail to revenge the Death of his Father, and even exceed him in Valour. Whereupon Ulysses went to search for him; and having found him, notwithstanding all the care his Mother took to hide him, he executed the Sentence Calchas had pronounced (a). Others say, that Menelaus was the Executioner (b). Others attribute his Death to Pyrrhus alone, without intimating, that the Greeks, or Calchas, had judged it necessary (c). However it be, the Poets, and Writers of Romances, found means to restore him to Life again, or rather to make him escape out of the Hands of the Greeks [B].

[A] He was the only Son of Hector and Andromache.] Homer affirms This expressly; for, without question, they, who translate Ἐκτοῦ δὲ δῆμον ἀρχοῦντας (1), the only Son of Hector, are in the right; so the Scholiast understands it. The Grief of Andromache, in the Twenty second Book of the Iliad, plainly shews, that she had only This Son. Hector gave him the Name of Scamandrius, and the Trojans called him Astyanax, because Hector was the sole Defence of the City (2).

[B] The Poets, and Writers of Romances, found means to restore him to life again, or rather to make him escape out of the Hands of the Greeks.] They have said, that the same Son of Hector, whose Name was Astyanax, or Scamander, was called, also, Francion, and that from him the Kings of France are derived (3). The Manetho of Annus of Viterbo makes Francus, the Son of Hector, King of the Celtæ, that is, of the Gauls. The Forger of That Piece, in his Notes, cites Vincent of Beauvais, who says, that This Francus, retiring among the Gauls, after the Destruction of Troy, became so great a Favourite of the King, that He married his Daughter, and succeeded him in his Crown. I do not find, in Manetho (4), what Du Pleix quotes from him, viz. that Francus succeeded Rebmus, King of the Gauls, whose Daughter he

(38) Cicero
(25) (26)

(39) Com- pare this with what has been said above, at the beginning of the Remark [F], of the Article AR-NAULD (ANTHO-NY) The Doctor.

(40) Jonfus,
de Scriptor.
Histor. Philo-
sof. pag. 207.

(41) Pag.
390.

(42) Hard.
in Indice,
Autor. lib.
12, pag. 566.

(43) See the preceding Remark.

(44) OffPrus- is in Bythinia.

(45) Epist.
Reinesii ad
Hoffman-num & Rupertum, pag.
394.

(46) Ibid.
pag. 395.

(a) Servius
in Aen. lib.
3. ver. 489.

(b) Id. lib. 2.
ver. 457.

(c) Paulus
lib. 10.

(1) See Rom- and, at the beginning of his Francide.

(4) Ant- werp Edit.
in 8vo. 1552.

(5) Du Pleix, Mémoires des Gaules, lib. 2, cap. 24.

(6) Ditya Cretensis, in his 6th Book, says, that Pyrrhus took Laodamas, the Son of Hector and Andromache, Prisoner.

he had married (5). Neither do I find it in the Commentator upon Manetho. Du Pleix adds, that Tritemius, alledging as his Authority, Hunnibaud, who lived under Clovis I. and who names, for his Authors, Dorcy, and Walthald, two Scythian Historians, says, that Hector had two Sons, one of which, called Afyanax, or Scamander, perished at the taking of Troy, the other, named Laodamas (6), or Francion, escaped out of the Enemies Hands, and fled, with a great Number of Trojans, into Pæonia, which was afterwards called Pannonia; and that, being kindly received by the King of the Pæonians, he settled in that Country, on the Frontiers of Scythia, and there built the City of Sicambria, where he, and his Posterity, reigned, till the Days of King Antenor, who was killed by the Goths. Four hundred and twenty Years before CHRIST. The Violences of the Goths obliged the Trojans, or Sicambrians, to retire into Germany, where they divided themselves into two Branches: one of which, afterwards, founded the Fresh Monarchy among the Gauls; the other remained in Germany, and there founded Francia, or Eastern France. What Chimeras are these! Mr Moreri, not considering, that the Authors of these Legends are charged with a sufficient Number of Fables, fathers upon them others, which they never advanced. He ascribes to the false Manetho, and to other Authors of that Stamp, the making Francion, or Francis (7), the Son of Hector, the first King of the Gauls. But they are so far from saying this, that they affirm, that the King of the Gauls gave him his Daughter. Besides, how thoughtless is it to describe Andromache only as the Mother of this Francion, and never once to mention her undoubted Son Afyanax! There are two Faults in Moreri; to which we shall add a third. He says, that Afyanax was thrown down, headlong, from the Walls, by order of Ulysses, and quotes for it Virgil's Æneid. Now this Poet has said nothing like it in all his Works.

(7) This is an ill Translation of the proper Name Francus.

(a) Baron. Annal. Ecclesiæ. Tom. 2. pag. 226, ad ann. 179. n. 39, 40.

ATHENAGORAS, an Athenian Philosopher, flourished after the middle of the 11d Century: He was a learned Man, and very zealous for Christianity. All Which appeared from the Apology, which he addressed to the Emperors Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, and Lucius Aurelius Commodus. This happened, according to Baronius (a), in the Year 179; or, according to Mr Dodwell (b), in the Year 168. It is no easy matter to give a Satisfactory Proof, that the last Opinion is more probable, than the first [A]. I find all agree, that Athenagoras was deputed by the Christians to the Imperial

(b) Dodwell. Differt. Cypricæ. 1. 1. 2. 37, 38. pag. 261, & seq.

(1) Dodwell. Differt. Cypricæ. 1. 1. 2. 37.

[A] He presented — his Apology in the Year 179, — or in 168. — It is not easy to prove, that the last Opinion is more probable, than the first. Many Reasons are alledged on both sides. These are Mr Dodwell's (1). The Apology of Athenagoras is addressed to two Emperors, to whom the Author gives the Titles of Armeniacis, Sarmaticis, & quod maximum est, Philippis. This is applicable to Marcus Aurelius, and to his Brother Lucius Aurelius, but not to his Son Lucius Aurelius. He was never called Philosopher; And the second Apology of Justin shews That Title to have been common to Lucius Aurelius, and to his Brother, Marcus Aurelius. Hunc Titulum cum Marcus Lucium verum habuisse communem constat à secundâ Apologiâ Justinî (2). Father Pagi, Differtat. Hypat. pag. 216. makes use of the same Argument, and quotes Eusebius, lib. 4. cap. 12. Now this Lucius Aurelius died towards the end of the Year 169. So that the Apology must have been presented before That time. I wave the particular Reasons, which induced Mr Dodwell to make choice of the Year 168 for the Epochæ of This Work. It is objected against him, that the Complement of Sarmaticus cannot belong to Lucius Aurelius, who died before the Sarmæ were attacked; but he answers, that this might be a Slip of the Transcriber, instead of That of Partibus, which was given to the two Brothers, together with That of Armeniacus, after the War of Armenia (3). He adds, that the profound Peace, on which Athenagoras congratulates the Emperors (4), cannot agree with the time of Marcus Aurelius, and his Son reigning together. He makes no answer to the chief Objection; and yet something may be said to it, as will appear presently. We must not forget his Observation, that Athenagoras intimates, that his Apology was made in the same Olympiad, that Peregrinus burnt himself (5). This Action of Peregrinus, according to Messieurs Dodwell, and de Tillemont (6), belongs to the Year 165; but Scaliger places it in the Year 166 (7). He grounds his Notions on this, that Peregrinus exhibited this Spectacle during the Celebration of the Olympic Games. He is of opinion, that Athenagoras's Work was presented to the Emperors in the same Olympiad: His Reason is, because Peregrinus threw himself into the Fire three Years before the Death of Lucius Verus, one of Those Emperors. This Argument is preferable to Mr Dodwell's, grounded on the Words of Athenagoras; for they note only the Place, and not the Time, of this Man's burning himself. Περί τῆν Ολυμπιαν (8); Near the City Olympia. See Mr de Tillemont (9). The Proof, drawn from the profound Peace of the Empire, is of such a Nature, that it serves both Parties: Cardinal Baronius makes use of it, to shew, that the Apology could not have been presented under the Reign of Marcus Aurelius's Brother, nor in any other time, but in 179 (10). Mr de Tillemont does not rightly understand This Cardinal's Argument, since he represents him as inferring, that This Apology must have been written in the Year [176, or] 177, because it intimates, that the Empire was then in profound Peace (11).

(10) Baron. ad Ann. 179. n. 40. pag. 226.

(11) Tillemont. Hist. des Emp. pag. 1066.

These are the principal Reasons of Those, who pretend, that the Apology of Athenagoras was not presented before the Year 177, which was That of the Promotion of Commodus, the Son of Marcus Aurelius, to the Dignity of Augustus (12). They maintain, that He, who is associated with Marcus Aurelius, in the Inscription of the Apology, was the Son, and not the Brother of That Emperor; and prove it from the Words, which compare these two Princes to God the Father, and God the Son. "Ipia quidem oratio longè validius nobis præbet argumentum. Vos quidem, subjicit Vir disertus, in summa Imperii Majestate adeo conjunctis animis orbem regitis, ut inde Cælestis etiam Regni contemplationem animo quis completi queat. Ubi enim Patri & filio in potestate sunt omnia, regno in Vos divinitus collato, (Regis enim anima, inquit Spiritus Propheticus, in manu Dei est) sic uni Deo & Filio ejus, hoc est Verbo, subjeta sunt omnia. Nullus hic est cavillatious locus: Imperatores non tantum alloquuntur, sed etiam comparationem instituit duos inter terrenos Reges, quibus omnia humanitus loquendo parebant, ac summum Cæli & Terræ Dominum, qui simul cum suo Unigenito Imperii Orbis universi habens moderatur (13). — The Apology itself furnishes us with a much stronger Argument. Your Imperial Majesty, says the learned Author, govern the World with such perfect Harmony, as in some sort resembles That of the Cælestial Government. For, as the suprem Power on Earth is, by the Grant of Heaven, (the Life of Kings, as the Prophet says, being in the Hand of God,) committed to your Majesties, Father, and Son; so the suprem Power of the Universe is lodged in one God, the Father, and his Son, the Word. Here is no room for Controversy: be not only addresses the Emperors, but also makes a Comparison betwixt two earthly Kings, to whom all things, humanly speaking, are subject, and the supreme Governor of Heaven and Earth, who, together with his only begotten Son, commands the Universe." See how strongly Mr de Larroke has stated this Argument. Mr de Tillemont has seconded it with another Passage. "Athenagoras† tells Those two Princes, he wishes, that the Son may succeed the Father: ἵνα αὐαὶς παρὰ πατρὸς διαδέχησθαι τὴν βασιλείαν. [He speaks, therefore, to a Father, and (12) Mr de Larroke, following Eusebius, has placed this Promotion under the Year 179. Daniel Larrogianus Martini & filii, Differt. de Legionis fulminatrice, p. 642.

(13) Id. ib. pag. 649.

† Athenag. Leg. 40. a.

— a Son,

(2) Id. ib. pag. 262.

(3) Capitol. in Vita Marci Aurelii, cap. 5.

(4) Ἡ οὐρανοῦ αἰὲς ἀνέμῳ τῇ οὐρανόθεν βαθείας ἐπὶ πύλιν ἀπολαύουσιν — The subtle World, by the Wisdom of your Government, enjoys a profound Peace. Athenag. pag. 14.

(5) This was the 23th.

(6) Tillemont. Hist. des Emp. Tom. 2. pag. 753.

(7) Scal. Animad. in Euseb. n. 2182, pag. 220.

(8) Athenag. pag. 244.

(9) Tillemont. Hist. des Emp. Tom. 2. pag. 1067.

perial Court, and that he actually presented their Apology [B]; but there is Room to † Ibid. pag. 17, d.

¶ Pagi, 177, § 8.

(14) Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 2. pag. 1066.

(15) Pagi, in Baron. ad Ann. 177.

(16) Athenag. sub fin. pag. 318.

(17) In the Article P.A.R.I.S.

(18) Scellig. Animadv. in Euseb. num. 1282, pag. 320.

(19) Labbé de Script. Eccles. Tom. 1. pag. 123.

(20) Chevre. Hist. de Monde. Tom. 2. pag. 533, of the first Holland Edition, fixes the presenting the Apology in the Year 165.

Mr de Larroque, in his Differt. de Legione fulmin. p. 648, represents him as placing it in the Year 175.

Perhaps he made use of some other Edition.

(21) Suffrid. Petri Comment. in Athenag. pag. 100. He pitches upon the Year 179.

(22) Petav. apud Pagi Differt. Hypat. pag. 116. He locates it the Year 171.

(23) Du Pin, Biblioth. p. 176, apud Larroque, num. Differt. de Legione fulmin. He takes the Year 178.

(24) Grotius de Verit. Relig. Christian. p. 128, apud Larroque, num. ibid.

(25) Baronius ad Ann. 179, n. 39. pag. 220.

(26) Labbé, Differt. de Script. Eccles. Tom. 1. pag. 123, 124.

"a Son, of whom the first only governed the Empire, though the other might have the Title of Emperor; that is to say, to M. Aurelius, and his Son Commodus, and not to two Brothers, who reigned in Conjunction. It is yet clearer in another place †, where he says, All is submitted to your Majesties, to the Father and the Son: ως ὑμῖν πατρὶ καὶ υἱῷ πάντ' αὐτὰ κειμήσια" which Father Pagi † had no other way of getting over, but by saying, that Athenagoras will have Lucius to be the Son of M. Aurelius, though he was only his Brother, purely to make a more exact Allusion to the two Persons of the Trinity, the Father, and the Son (14)." Father Pagi has made use of an Evasion, in this Place, which is not likely to do much Mischief. He had better have said, that Athenagoras was not ignorant, that Lucius Aurelius had married the Daughter of Marcus Aurelius, and that, therefore, as he addressed himself to the Father-in-law, and Son-in-law, he might justly consider them as Father, and Son. It is thus, in effect, that Father Pagi has answered this Objection (15). He observes, also, that Mr Tornard is of the same Sentiment. The other Passage, which Mr de Tillemont quotes, is not conclusive: we may understand it in this Sense: We put up our Prayers for your Empire, that the Son may relieve it from the Father, as Justice requires. Περὶ μὲν τῆς ἀρχῆς τῆς ὑμετέρας εὐχόμεθα, ἵνα παῖς μὲν παρὰ πατρὸς κατὰ τὸ δικαιότατον διαδέχῃ τὴν βασιλείαν (16). This Thought is very reasonable, whether we suppose the Apology addressed to Marcus Aurelius, and his Brother, or to Marcus Aurelius, and his Son. It is a Prayer, which, according to Baronius, does not respect Commodus, who was, already, associated in the Empire, but his Descendants. It is a Wish, that Marcus Aurelius's Family might always possess the Imperial Dignity, according to the Order of lawful Succession, in a direct Line. Note, that Father Pagi quotes this Prayer as a Proof, that the Son of Marcus Aurelius was not yet Emperor. I shall, in another Place (17), confute the Inference, which is drawn from what Athenagoras has said of one Alexander.

We may conclude two things from all this: First, That the Foundation of the Controversy is, that one side makes the Brother of Marcus Aurelius, the other his Son, to be his Partner in the Empire. Secondly, That their Arguments, on both sides, are far from conclusive, since the Dispute continues yet undecided. Scaliger (18), Father Labbé (19), Father Pagi, Mr Dodwell, Mr Chevreau (20), &c. are for the Brother: Suffridus Petri (21), Baronius, Petavius (22), Mr du Pin (23), Mr de Larroque, Mr de Tillemont, and several other learned Men, are for the Son.

Let us observe, by the way, a Mistake of Grotius. Flouris Athenagoras, says he (24), circa ann. Christi 190, ut ex libri inscriptione apparet. This is not just; for, Marcus Aurelius being dead in the Year 180, the Title of a Book, dedicated to him, can never prove, that the Author flourished towards the Year 190.

[B] It is agreed, that Athenagoras was deputed to the Court — and that he actually presented their Apology; but there is Room to doubt of these Facts: These are the Words of Baronius. "Orientis quoque Ecclesias eadem esse clade vexatas, LEGATIO pro illis ab Athenagorâ Atheniensî — tunc ad Imperatores SUSCEPTA, & Apologia pro eisdem tunc scripta ac dictis principibus OBLATA, manifestam certamque fidem faciunt (25)." That the Eastern Churches were under the same Persecution, the DEPUTATION, then UNDERTAKEN, on their Behalf, by Athenagoras, the Athenian, to the Emperors, and the Apology composed for them, and PRESENTED to those Princes, sufficiently demonstrate." Father Labbé expresses himself as fully. "LEGATIONEM SUSCEPIT pro Christianis inter annum 165 — & annum 170 — non defuit tamen qui anno dumtaxat 177 OBLATUM librum illum Imperatoribus afferant (26)." He UNDERTOOK A DEPUTATION for the Christians, betwixt the Year 165, and 170. But there are some, who affirm, the Apology was not PRESENTED till the Year 177." Mr Moreri, translating this Passage of Father Labbé, uses these Words. He presented an excellent Apology for the Faithful to the Emperor Marcus Aurelius Antoninus. — He had been Deputy at Rome for the Christians, from the Year 165, to 170. He did not rightly understand his Original; for the Words of Father Labbé do not signify, that the Deputation of Athenagoras lasted from the Year 165, to 170, but that it happened in some part of That Interval. They, who know the frequent Journeys of the Roman Emperors in those Days, would never venture to expose themselves, by affirming, that This, or That, Person was deputed to them at Rome, without being very well assured of it. It must be allowed therefore, that Mr Moreri has quitted his Guide a little too unadvisedly, in determining both the Duration and Place of this Deputation; when Father Labbé has not said one Word of either. Mr Dodwell, who conjectures, that Athenagoras discharged this Deputation (27), upon the Return of the Emperor Lucius Verus to Rome, to triumph there (28), is not in the least concerned in this little Criticism, in Regard to his determining the Place; because he has not done it, without a very learned Deduction of proper Circumstances. But I can hardly agree with him, that This Christian Philosopher did really ever discharge this Deputation at all.

My first Reason is taken from the Silence of all the Ancients. Is it possible, that such a Deputation, which the Circumstance of the Time, the Merit of the Deputy, and the Strength of the Apology presented to the Emperors, must have made so memorable, should never be once mentioned by any one Author? In the second place, It does not seem probable, that, when the Christian Name was so hated and persecuted, Athenagoras should present himself at the Imperial Court, as deputed by That Body, or that he should obtain Audience there, and even deliver to the Emperors a long Writing, in which, notwithstanding his respectful Moderation, he represents the Pagan Religion in so ridiculous and scandalous a Light, as would have been most likely to have inflamed the Rage of the Persecutors. I shall add, that the Title of This Writing, the strongest Proof that can be urged against me, is, in my Opinion, no Proof. Ἀθηνάγορας Ἀθηναῖος φιλοσόφος Χριστιανὸς ἀποστολὴ πρὸς Κεῖσαντον: The Deputation of Athenagoras the Athenian, the Christian Philosopher, in behalf of the Christians. This is the Title of the Piece. But, you may, if you please, observe, I. That some Manuscripts, after ἀποστολὴ, add ἡ ἀπολογία, or Apology (29); and that others, instead of ἀποστολὴ, read ἀπολογία. II. That the Word ἀποστολὴ not only signifies an Embassy, or Deputation, but also an Address, or Petition; τὴν ἀποστολὴν non modo Legationem, sed & Deprecationem ac Supplicationem apud Græcos significare notum est (30). III. That the Title of Embassy is not given to an Ambassador's Speech, but to the whole Account of his Negotiations. So that it would be very improper to take the word ἀποστολὴ here for Embassy. Lastly, I observe, that Mr de Tillemont expresses himself differently from other Writers. It appears plainly, says he (31), that the Faith was then persecuted in the East, seeing Athenagoras was obliged to compose an Apology there, under the Title of A Legation for the Christians, which he address to both the Augustus's. He does not mention any Journey, or Deputation, or the presenting of any Apology to the Emperors; he speaks only of a Piece composed in the Author's Study, and address to Marcus Aurelius, &c. Every body knows the difference between a Writing actually given into the Hands of a Monarch, and a Writing only address to This Monarch. I confess, Mr de Tillemont's Authority seems here to be very good: for he lays it down as a Rule, not to extend the Testimonies of Authors beyond what they clearly import; And he keeps himself scrupulously within the limits of his Proofs. From whence I infer, that he found no manner of ground for This Deputation of Athenagoras, nor for the actual presenting of his Apologetical Writing.

To reduce what I think of this matter into a narrow Compass, I am not ashamed to own, that I take Athenagoras to have been like those modern Writers, who, without stirring out of their Studies, have spread Pieces of their own composing all the World over, (27) Legationem exit pro Christianis. Dodwell. Differt. Cyprian. 11. n. 37. pag. 251.

(28) Id. ib.

(29) See the Commentary of Suffridus Petri in Athenagor. Apolog. p. 91.

(30) Adam Rechenberg. Not. in Athenagor. pag. 2.

(31) Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 2. pag. 766, 757. Edit. de Brucklæ.

(c) Father Labbé, Disser- de Script. Eccl. Tom. 1. pag. 65, affirms it, and so does Moser.

to doubt of these Facts; and we may with a great deal of probability believe the same Thing of This Writing, which was known to be true of an infinite Number of Petitions of the Protestants in France, which have been printed without ever being presented to the Prince [C]. I cannot imagine on what ground Athenagoras is said to have been a Priest (c). It is something surprising, that he should be unknown to Eusebius, St Jerome, and to almost all the other Fathers; for we find him no where quoted, except in a Work of St Epiphanius [D]. He was not entirely clear from Heterodoxy [E]; but, this excepted, the two Pieces, which we have of his, are very valuable (d).

(d) The other is a Treatise de Refutatione.
The

(32) See the following Remark.

under the Title of A Petition of the Protestants presented to the King. They, who shall read these Compositions an hundred Years hence, will not question but that they were actually presented; but we know better. We know, there was handed about, in 1680, a printed Piece, which had all the Air of a Petition, actually presented to the King of France by Thole of the Protestant Religion (32). An infinite Number of People in foreign Countries, and in the Provinces remote from Paris, believed it. Yet I am credibly informed, that it never was presented, and it is certain, that the Deputies of the Churches, who drew it up, disowned the Publication of it. There appeared in Print another such Piece, during the Conferences at Ryfwick, in the Year 1697, which was handed about without being owned; but which may one Day be placed among authentic Acts, since it does not appear from the Petition itself, that it was not actually delivered into the Hands of Lewis XIV. Without doubt the Primitive Christians acted in the same manner. They composed Writings, addressed to the Emperors, and published them, in hopes that some of the Copies might come to the Hands of Those Princes, and incline them to put a stop to their Persecutions, by shewing the Accusations to be false. To conclude, I am persuaded, Athenagoras did, in the 11d Century, what Calvin did in the XVth. Calvin, lurking in a little Chamber at Basle, dedicated his Christian Institution to Francis I, which neither He, nor any Body else, ever presented to him.

(33) He is a Scotchman, a Doctor of Divinity, the Author of some English Books against Bourgeoisie.

It ought not to be concealed, that, the very Day I finished this Remark, I communicated it to Mr Cockburn (33), who offered immediately to consult Mr Dodwell upon it. He has done me the favour to communicate to me the Answer he received, which is full of excellent Learning, in support of Arguments, brought in favour of the Sentiment I have now been opposing. These Arguments have some Weight. The Letter of That learned Man deserves to be printed, and I would willingly have inserted it here, if I had had his Permission; but, not having That, I ought also to deprive myself of the Liberty of the Dispute.

[C] An infinite Number of Petitions of the Protestants in France, have been printed without ever being presented to the Prince] The Public is so well apprized of this, that it were a very needless Task to go about to prove it. But, as for what concerns the Petition, which was handed about in the Year 1680, I have reason to believe, that my Readers will imagine I have gone too far, in denying, that it was ever presented. Therefore it is but just, that I should give my Reasons. I begin, by distinguishing this Petition from several others, which were drawn up at different Times; and I say it is the same, which was composed by a Priest, called Soulter. The Answer, which he gave to it, was printed without his Name. This Answer is mentioned in Page 6 of The last Efforts of oppressed Innocence, and in Page 305 of the History of the Edicts of Pacification (34), and in Volume III of the History of the Edict of Nantes (35). In this last Book is also found a Summary of This Answer, as of a Writing, whose Author was unknown. This Historian of the Edict of Nantes affirms (36), that the Petition was presented, and adds, It happened, I know not how, that, some time after, it was printed, and publicly dispersed abroad. I believe he is mistaken, and that it was printed and dispersed, before it could be presented. Now after it had appeared in public, to be sure the King never received it. See, in the Life of Mr du Bos, how the Council was offended, because the Deputies of The Protestants had published a Petition, which they had presented, but which the King had not yet answered (37). This Prince was so displeased at the printing of This Petition, that he condemned it without seeing it, and ordered two of the Deputies to be clapt into the Bastille (38). This passed about the Year 1671. How is it probable then, that, nine Years after, that is to say, at a Time, when things were much worse, the Deputies of the Churches durst publish a Petition, after having presented it to the King, and before the receiving his Answer? The Author of the History of the Edict of Nantes might elude this, by maintaining, that the Millionaries got the Petition of the Protestants printed. This, though possible, is against all Probability. But here is a Fact which is more home to the purpose. In a very little time, after This Petition was seen in public, Mr Jurieu composed a Book, wherein he speaks of it only as of a Petition, THAT WAS DESIGNED to be presented (39). Does he not deserve more Credit in such a Point, than the Historian of the Edict of Nantes, who did not write 'till many Years after This Event? Upon observing the Difference between these Writers, I caused three of the chief Deputies of the Churches to be consulted, and particularly Him, who passes for the Author of the Petition. The Answers, which I received from them, agree perfectly in this, that they do not remember whether it was presented or not. They excused their Forgetfulness, by reason of the great Number of Affairs, which then passed through their Hands, and the long, and very troublesome, Time, that has elapsed since. I have no reason, then, to fear, that any reasonable Person will accuse me of Rashness, in taking up with this Opinion; for, besides the Proofs I have alledged, I remember, that the freshet, and, as it were, original Tradition, was, which Mr Jurieu has also followed, that the Petition was published without ever being presented by the Deputies.

[D] We find him no where quoted, except in a Work of St Epiphanius. We must even correct the Text, to make out this Quotation of him: Τὶ ἐν ὁ διαβολῶν λέξις; πνεῦμα αἰετὶ τὸν ὕλον ἔχον, καθάπερ ἐλεχθῆν, ὁ Ἀθηνάγορας, γινώσκον ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ (40). What then shall we understand the Devil to be? A Spirit conversant about Matter, as it has been said, O Athenagoras! created by God. This is what the Editions of Epiphanius say; and, according to this, it ought rather to be understood of another Athenagoras, who had been introduced, as one of the Speakers, in the Dialogue, from which Epiphanius gives some Extracts. Now it is a Dialogue, composed by Methodius against Origen, and in which Methodius is one of the Interlocutors. But the Critics have very justly conjectured, that, instead of ὁ Ἀθηνάγορας, we ought to read τῷ Ἀθηνάγορα, by Athenagoras (41).

[E] He was not entirely clear from Heterodoxy. He admits two sorts of bad Angels; the one comprehends those, whom God created, and who acquitted themselves ill in the Commission, which was given them, to govern Matter, and to preside over the Production of Forms; the other comprehends those, which the former begot by carnal Conversation with Women: It comprehends, I say, the Souls of Giants, who were begot by This Copulation (42). Suffridus Petri observes, that Athenagoras supports his Hypothesis by two Passages of Scripture, which he has misunderstood. "Testimonia sunt potissimum duo, sed male intellecta, quibus niti videtur Athenagoras." — The principal Authorities, which Athenagoras seems to build upon, are two, but both misunderstood. He misunderstands, and misapplies, much in the same manner, That Passage of the Gospel, which condemns those, who repudiate one Wife to marry another; for he makes use of it to condemn second Marriages, which he calls, without mincing the Matter, a specious Adultery. "Ἡ οἷα τις ἐτίχθη, μίαν, ἢ ὅτι ἐν γάμῳ. Ὁ γὰρ δεύτερος, εὐπρετής ἐστὶ μοιχεία. ὅς γὰρ ἀν' ἀπολύσει, φησὶ, τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ, καὶ γαμήσῃ ἄλλαν, μοιχεύει."

(38) Ibid.

(39) See the Derniers Efforts de l'Innocence opprimée, p. 6.

(40) Epiphanius advert. Heret. n. 64. p. 544. Tom. 1.

(41) Fabius Leopoldus, Emendat. lib. 19. c. 9. Petri in Athenagoras advert. Heret. n. 64. p. 544. p. 260, 261.

(42) Athenagoras, p. 227, & seq.

(43) Suffridus Petri in Athenagoras, p. 218.

(34) Of the Holland. Edition 1682. The Sieur Soulier is Author of this History, and has put his Name to it. He has owned himself Author of the Answer to the Petition. Ib. pag. 305.

(35) Lib. 16. pag. 403, and the following.

(36) Ibid.

(37) Life of Mr du Bos, p. 31.

The Style of them is good, and Attic enough, but a little too much clogged with Parentheses, and Transpositions. They have been printed a great many times, as may be seen in Mr du Pin, who has, nevertheless, forgot some Editions [F]. I shall mention a Romance ἕτε ἀποδύει ἐπιτρίβων ἢ ἐπανασί τις τὴν παρδόναν, ἕτε ἐπιγαμνεί. ὁ γὰρ ἀποσπῶν αὐτὸν ἡς περὶ τὰς γυναῖκας, καὶ εἰ τὸ θῆκε, μοιχὸς ἔστι παρὰ κεκαλυμμένῳ, παρὰ βαίνων μὲν τὴν χρῆσιν τῆ θῆς, ὅτι ἐν ἀρχῇ ὁ θεὸς ἐν ἁνδρά ἐπέλασε καὶ μίαν γυναῖκα (44). Let every one either continue in the same State he was born in, or content himself with once marrying. For a second Marriage is but a specious Adultery. For the Scripture says, Whofoever shall put away his Wife, and marry another, committeth Adultery. Neither permitting the putting away of Her, whose Virginity has been enjoyed, nor the marrying of another. And whofoever quits his first Marriage, although his Wife be dead, is in some measure an Adulterer, by exceeding God's own Appointment, who, in the Beginning, made one Man, and one Woman. You see he imposes the same Law on all Men, which God prescribed to the chief Priest alone; if they will marry, it must be only with a Maid (45). He is not contented, that they have their Virginity themselves, but will also have them choose none but Virgins for their Wives. But this is erring consistently; Because, if second Marriages were criminal, it would be criminal even for a Bachelor to marry a Widow, and every time he discharges the matrimonial Duty would be committing a fresh Crime. For this would be causing his Wife to sin, and, according to the Rules of Morality, whofoever causes others to sin sins himself.

The same may be said of a Maid, who should marry a Widower. I don't know, says Mr de Tillemont (46), Whether the Expression "which Athenagoras uses concerning the Prophets, at a time, when the Extasies of Montanus began to trouble the Church, may not give ground to suspect, that he was engaged in That Party. However, neither Scultetus, nor Mr du Pin, † have observed That Place to be liable to any bad Construction. I do not find, that there is the least Reason to suspect him of Montanism on this Account. How many of the Orthodox are there, who believe, that the ancient Prophets were in Extasies, and that their Tongues, or their Pens, were the Instruments of the Holy Ghost? What then could they find fault with in these words of Athenagoras? Νομίζω καὶ ὑμεῖς οὐκ ἀνοήτως γενομένοις οὐτε τῶν Μωσῶος, οὐτε τῶν Ἰσαΐου καὶ Ἱερემίου καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν προφητῶν, οὐ κατ' ἐκστάσιν τῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς λο-γισμῶν κηρύσσας; αὐτοὺς τὴ θῆν πνεύματι;
αὐτοὺς ἐν ἁνδρά ἐξερῶντας συζητοῦσάν τε πνεύματι; ὥστε καὶ ἀλλήλους ἀλλήν, ἐμπεύ-σαι (47). I suppose that even you — are not ignorant of the Transfactions either of Moles, or of Iliasis, and Jeremias, and the rest of the Prophets, who, by an Extasy of Thought, the Divine Spirit moving them, spoke as they were inspired; the Spirit operating on them, in like manner as the Musician on his Flute. It is true, the Comparison of the Holy Ghost with one, who plays on a Flute, is mean, but the Foundation of it is right.

(44) Athe-
nag. p. 298.

(45) Levi.
xiii. 13, 14.

(46) Tillemont, ubi
supra, pag.
759.

• Athenag.
Leg. p. 9, d.

† Scult. pag.
52. Du Pin,
Tom. 1. p.
215.

(47) Athe-
nag. pag. 72, 74.

A REPRIS-ALION ON THE JEWISH High Priest not being allowed to marry unless with a Virgin.

(48) See 1
Pet. ii. 5, 9.

on the High Priest. The Law, prescribed to him, would these Jesters say, ought to command something mortifying to his Pleasures; whereas, on the contrary, it obliges him to the most delicious Relish of them, and not to take up with a second-hand Dish. The Rest of the People may make shift with the leavings of others: He only is taught to be nicer, and of a daintier Palate. Poor insipid Raillery! for it is in reality a Slavery, not to have the liberty of marrying where we please; and how many sensual Persons, in a full Liberty of Choice, would prefer a Widow before any other Mistress? But, besides, is it not meer Blindness, not to see the Wisdom of the Lawgiver in this Prohibition? Did not This Law warn the great Pontiff to abstain, more than others, from the least Irregularities? For, if a Woman ceased to be worthy of him, the moment she left aspiring to That supreme Degree of Perfection and Honour, which she might have attained by preferring a chaste Widowhood before a second Marriage; if the sole want of This height of Virtue, if, I say, this sole want, which is not so much a real Fault, as a bare Privation of distinguished Merit, was sufficient to make her unworthy to marry with the High Priest, was not this a Proof, that God required of him a more exact Conduct? Read these Words of a great Man: "Quin & illa ad declarandam insignem vitæ mundiciem pertinent, quod si quis de stirpe Aaron teneatur profuvio sanguinis, vetatur ad sacerdotis meniam accedere sacrificii vesci panibus: item quod quicumque vitio maculâve corporis essent deformati, submoventur à sacris ministris: rursus quod ipse pontifex jubetur virginem suæ gentis ducere, à vidua, repudiata, ac prostituta, abstinere. Non statim quod plebi licet, licet & sacerdoti: multitudini multa conceduntur, à sacerdote summa requiruntur puritas in omni vitæ porcione (49). — Now these Things are intended to point out a more particular Purity of Life, That, if any of the House of Aaron be taken with an Hemorrhage, he should not be permitted to come to the Priest's Table, or to taste of the consecrated Bread: Also, that such as were defective, or deformed, in their Bodies, should be incapable of the Priesthood: Again, that the High-Priest himself is commanded to abstain from a Widow, a Wife divorced, and a Prostitute, and to marry, if at all, to a Virgin of his own Nation. Not every thing, that is lawful for the People, is also lawful for the Priest: Many things are allowed to the Multitude, but from the Priest is required the strictest Purity in every Station of Life." The same Spirit reigned in the Christian Discipline, even at the time, when married Persons were not excluded from the Priesthood (50); for it excluded Those, who had married either two Wives successively, or a Widow, or who had been dishonoured by the Adultery of their Wives; and, if This dishonour happened to them in the Time of their Priesthood, they were obliged either to free themselves from it by a Divorce, or abdicate their Character. "Verba synodi Neocæsar. cap.
8. hæc sunt: si cujus uxorem adulterium commi-sisset, cum esset laicus, evidenter fuerit probatum, hic ad ministerium ecclesiasticum admitti non potest. Quod si in clericatu eo jam constituto adulteravit, dato repudio dimittere eam debet: si vero retinere ejus consortium velit, non potest suscipere ministerio perfrui. cap. si cujus, 34. distin. (51). —
In Chap. 8. of the Council of Neocæsarea, are these words: If it proved, by good Evidence, that the Wife of any Layman has committed Adultery, he cannot be admitted to the Ecclesiastical Function.
But, if the Wife of a Priest commit Adultery, he must divorce her: or, if he will retain her, he must renounce his Ministry." See Mr Morin's Dissertation, or the Abstract given of it in the News from the Republic of Letters (52).

[F] Mr du Pin has forgot some Editions of Athenagoras. His List is very large (53), but not every where rightly pointed, in the Edition of Amsterdam (54). This confounds our Understanding. He has not taken Notice of the Edition of Oxford, nor That of Leipzig: The first appeared in the Year 1682, the second in the Year 1703.

(49) Erasmus in Ec-clesiast. l. 1.
pag. 45, 47.

(50) See
Duaren de Sacris Eccl.
Minist. ac
Benefic. lib.
4. cap. 8.
pag. 386.

(51) Id. ib.
pag. 387.

(52) For the Month of July, 1684, art. 6. pag.
517.

(53) See the first Tome of his Nouvelle Bibliothèque primée in 1686.

(54) I speak of that, as not being That in of Paris.

(e) It is the third of the second Time of his Apparatus ad Bibliothecam maximam Veterum Patrum.

a Romance, which appeared under the Name of Athenagoras [G]. If I could have consulted the Dissertation, published by Father le Nourry (e), it would have furnished me, without doubt, with some good Materials for this Article; but his Work is not yet come to our Hands (f), tho' it was printed in the Year 1697. I have seen some account of it in the Journal des Sçavans (g), and in the Acta Eruditorum of Leipsic (b).

(f) I write this in April 1699.

(g) Of May 13, 1697, pag. 331.

in 12mo, by the Care of Dr Fell, Bishop of Oxford; and the latter, in the Year 1684, in 8vo, by the Care of Adam Reichenberg. They are both of them in Greek and Latin, with Notes. Neither has he mentioned the Commentary of Keribolt on the Works of Athenagoras. This Piece was printed at Kiel, in the Year 1675, in Folio, and was inserted, with Additions, in the Edition of Juslin Martyr, of Athenagoras, &c. at Leipsic, in 1686. Note, that Guy Gauffart, Prior of St Foi, at Coulemmiers, published a French Translation of the Apology of Athenagoras, and subjoined the Annotations of Suffridus Petri. This was printed at Paris, in 8vo, in the Year 1574. Du Verdier Vau-Privat, who is my Author for this (55), mentions a French Translation of two Pieces of Athenagoras, done by Arnould du Ferrou (56), but does not say when, or where, it was printed (57).

(55) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Francoise, p. 533.

(56) He wrote a Continuation of Paulus Emilii in Latin.

(57) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Francoise, p. 57, 58.

[G] I shall mention a Romance, which appeared under the Name of Athenagoras. According to Dr Cove, we have, hitherto, only seen the French Translation of it, printed at Paris, by Daniel Guillemin, in the Year 1612, with this Title: Of the true, and perfect, Love, written, in Greek, by Athenagoras, an Athenian Philosopher, containing the chaste Loves of Theogenus and Charida, of Pherecides and Melanigenia. Martin Fumée, Lord of Genille, was Author of This Translation, and sent it, in the Year 1569, to Mr de Lamané, Secretary to the Cardinal of Armagnac. It was found among the Papers of Bernard de Sanjorjy, who published it in the Year 1612 (58). Consult Huetius (59), who speaks largely of This Book, and who supposes, that Philander is its true Author. He informs us, that This Fumée boasted, that he had procured the Greek Original, by the means of Lamané, Protonotary of the Cardinal of Armagnac.

(b) For Dec. 1698, pag. 554.

(58) Taken from Dr Cave's History. Literar. de Scriptor. Eccles. pag. 49.

(59) Huet. de l'Origine des Romans, pag. 42, & seq.

Note, that the Edition, mentioned by Dr Cove, and which he had seen in the Library of Vassius, is not the first. I have one, printed at Paris, by Michael Sonnius, in 1599, 12mo. The Title differs but very little from That, which we have seen above (60). The Preface is of Bernard de Sanjorjy, and dated from Castres, the first of October, 1596. It informs us, that Sanjorjy being almost Seventy, had found, among his Papers, a Copy of This Work, which he had got transcribed from That, which had been sent to Mr de Lamané, and, that he had desired Monsieur de Fombourz, who was going to Court, about some Affairs of his own, to do him the Favour to carry this Work with him, and to take the Trouble of communicating it to some Printer, as he passed through Paris.

(60) Instead of Theogenus, my Edition has Theogenes, and instead of Pherecides, it has Pherecydes.

A T H E N Æ U M [A], was a public Edifice in Rome, built by the Emperor Adrian [B], to serve for an Auditory to the Learned, and to those who chose to recite their

[A] A T H E N Æ U M. This Name comes from Minerva, in Greek Ἀθηνᾶ, The Goddess of all polite Arts, and Sciences. It was thought fit, that an Edifice, built in favour of the Learned, should bear the Name of That Goddess. Some have thought, it was a Temple, consecrated to her; but Aurelius Viſtor does not give us That Idea oft. "Gymnasium," sia, says he (1), speaking of the Emperor Adrian, "Doctoresque curare occupat, adeo quidem ut etiam ludum ingeniarum artium, quod Athenæum vocant, constitueret. — He began to shew a great Regard to Exercise, and Professors, in all learned Arts and Sciences, inasmuch, that he built them Schools, which are called the Athenæum." Other Historians, who speak of this Edifice, represent it only as a Place for Lessons, Declarations, and Lectures. "Ad Athenæum audiendum & Græcorum & Latinorum rhetorum vel poetarum causa frequenter proceſſit. — He frequently went to the Athenæum, to hear the Greek, and Latin, Rhetoricians and Poets." Lampridius speaks thus of Alexander Severus. This Passage is quoted in Calepin, a little after having said, that the Athenæum was consecrated to Minerva, and that the Poets, and other Greek Writers, brought their Works thither, as the Latin Authors brought theirs into the Temple of Apollo. Judge by this of the Exactness of Those, who composed, or corrected, That great Dictionary. Cruquius makes use of the same Division; he sends the Latin Poets to the Temple of Apollo, and the Greek to the Temple of Minerva, which he calls Athenæum (2). But let us go on in observing what the Ancients have said of the Place in question; "Cum Pertinax eo die processerem quam ad Athenæum paraverat, ut audiret Poetam, ad sacrificii prælagium distulisset (3). — When Pertinax, by reason of some ill Omen in the Sacrifices, put off the Procession he intended to have made, that Day, to the Athenæum." Another says, that Gordian, the Emperor, had declaimed, in the Athenæum; ubi adeo, in Athenæo controversas declamavit (4). Philoftratus says, that the Sophist Adrian, who was in great Esteem at Rome, had no sooner declared, that he would make a Declaration, but the Senators, Knights, and every body, flocked to the Athenæum. Δρόμοι ἐχέοντες τὸ Ἀθηνᾶιον ὄρεον παρὸς (5). They ran to the Athenæum with great eagerness. Let us add these Words of St Jerom: Quando omne Athenæum Sibi-

(1) Aurelius Viſtor, in Hadriano.

(2) In Horat. Sat. 1., lib. 1.

(3) Julius Capitolinus in Pertinax.

(4) Capitolinus in Gordiano.

(5) Philoftr. in Adriano.

lasticorum vocibus personabat (6). — When the whole Athenæum rang with the Voices of the Professors: And those of Sidonius Apollinaris: Dignus omnino quem plausibilibus Roma foret ulnis, quoque recitante crepitantis Athenæi subellia cuneata quaterentur (7). — Worthily, in the biggest Manner, of the greatest Applause, Rome could give, and to shake the crowded Seats of the echoing Athenæum with his Repetitions. The Etymology, Dion gives us, is a new Argument against Those, who have taken the Athenæum for a Temple of Minerva; he says, that the Place was so called, from the Exercises of the Learned, there performed, ἀπὸ τῆς ἐν αὐτῷ πειραστικῆς ἀσχολίας (8). He informs us also, that the Consul assembled the Senate, in the Athenæum, when he understood, that the Prætorian Cohorts had seized the Murderers of Pertinax. The Objection, which might be drawn from the Senate's never meeting but in Places consecrated by the Augurs, does no way balance the Reasons, which prove, that the Athenæum was not a Temple of Pallas. To conclude, They, who pretend, that the first Place, which was called Athenæum, was a Building in Athens (9), will have much ado to prove it. Good Mr de Marolles has a very wrong Notion of This Word; for, in his Translation of Aurelius Viſtor, he says, that Adrian invited learned Men from all Parts, as if he intended to transplant Athens to Rome.

(6) Hieronymus de Obitu Pauline ad Pamachiam.

(7) Sidonius Apollin. Epist. 14. lib. 9. See also Epist. 9. ejusd. libri, & Epist. 8. lib. 4.

(8) Xiphil. in Didio Juliano sub nomine Xylander translat: Adrianus by Templum Minervæ.

(9) The Theophrastus Fabri, Edit. 1692.

I shall observe, occasionally, that, in the City of Athens, the Rhetoricians, and Grammarians, met in the Temple of the Muses, upon Trials of Skill. Ἀρχαῖοι παρὰ τὸ τέμενος τῶν Μουσῶν ἐνθα ποιεῖσαι καὶ ῥήτορες καὶ τῶν γραμματικῶν οἱ καλῆς ποιήσεως ποιῶναι τὰς ἐκδιδέχοντες. He leads away to the Temple of the Muses, where the Poets, Rhetoricians, and Grammarians Scholars often resort to shew their Parts. Thus speaks an Author of the VIth Century of the Practice in his time; I mean Zachary, of Mitylene, in his Book de Mundi officio. See the Three hundred thirty ninth Page of the eleventh Volume of the Bibliotheca Patrum, printed at Paris in the Year 1644.

[B] Built by the Emperor Adrian.] This I have proved by the Passage of Aurelius Viſtor: Cassaubon has also very good Reason to laugh at Theodorius Marfilus (10), whom he treats roughly enough, without naming him. This Author spends a great many Words, in his Commentary on Persius, to prove, that the

(10) Cassaubon Comment. in Capitol. Vit. Pertinax.

their Works in Public. It appears from the beginning of Juvenal's Satires, that these sort of Lectures were very frequent, and that Fronto lent his House and Gardens to those Poets, who had a mind to recite their Verses before a numerous Audience (a). Many others were also willing to lend their Houses for the same Purpose (b); but, unfortunately for the Poets, these Favours were often very expensive [C]: for He, who was to read his Work, was to fit up the Room, and pay the Hire of the Seats. It is very probable, that the Emperor Adrian, who loved and underfooted the Sciences, had This View, among others, in building the Athenæum, viz. to free Authors from these great Incumbrances. Without doubt This Place served also for a College (c); for it was not only used for reciting of Compositions, but likewise for reading of Lectures. I find too, that the Senate sometimes met there (d). The Name of this Place has been applied, in a general Sense, to signify all kind of Universities, or Seminaries of Learning, appropriated to the teaching of Languages; for they are called in Latin Athenæa. Some are also of Opinion, that Libraries have been called Athenica (e).

(a) Frontonis platani convulsi marmora clamant, Semper & affiduo rupte lectore co-lumne.

(b) Stella, in Martial. Ep.
fig. 6. l. 4.
Titianus Capito, in Pliny, lib. 8.
Epist. 12.
Quadratus,
in Arrian's Epict. lib. 3.
cap. 23.

(11) Vossius
de Imitat.
p. 36.

(12) Horat.
Sat. ult. lib.
2. ver. 37.

(13) Savar.
in Sidon. Apollon. Ep.
24. lib. 9.

(14) Lipf.
Epist. 48.
Centur. 3.
ad Belg-

(15) See Vossius de Imitat. p. 61.

(16) Juven.
Sat. 7. ver.
45.

(c) See Remark [A].

(d) Ibid. towards the end.

(e) Salmast.
in Trebell.
Pollion. de triginta Tyrannis.

the Athenæum, and the Temple of Apollo Palatinus, were one and the same. Vossius (11) has repeated the same Accusation against him, and has given him, for an Accomplice, Father Raderus, on the seventieth Epigram of the tenth Book of Martial. He might have added Savaron for a second Accomplice, who, by these Words of Horace,

----- hæc ego ludo,

Quæ nec in æde sonent certantia iudice Tarpâ (12);

These idle Lines shall ne'er in Judgment come Before the learned Audience of Rome;

understands, that Horace would not have his Verses read in the Athenæum (13). He gives This Interpretation as the very Words of an ancient Scholiast. Lipfius makes use of the same Authority, though he confesses, that another ancient Scholiast understands there by ædem the Temple of Apollo Palatinus (14). If That learned Man had remembered the Passage of Aurelius Victor, he would not have preferred the Interpretation of the first of these Scholiasts to That of the latter (15). See the Article TARPA, in it's Place.

[C] These Favours were often very expensive: The Author of the Dialogue de Causis corruptæ Eloquentiæ is my Evidence, where he says, Domum mutuatur, & auditorium exfruit, & subellia conducit, ut beatissimus recitationem ejus eventus consequatur. — He borrows a House, builds an Auditory, and hires Seats, that his Repetitions may meet with the most favourable Reception. Juvenal will serve for a second Witness, where he threatens the Poets with the Mortification of not finding any Great Man, who will re-imburse them the Expences they have been at.

Nemo dabit regum quanti subellia constent,
Et quæ conducto pendent anabathra tigillo,
Queque reportandis posita est orchestra cathedris (16).

*With no kind Patron now the Poet meets,
To pay the Hire of Pulpit and of Seats.*

I do not deny, but they sometimes repeated in an hired House, but cannot forbear saying, that Vossius maintains it without any ground, since the Testimonies, he alleges, mean nothing less, than what he pretends. The first Passage, he quotes, is That of the Dialogue de Causis corruptæ Eloquentiæ, where we have just now met with domum mutuatur, which signifies a borrowed, and not an hired, House. The second is of Juvenal, in these Words:

— cum jam celebres notique Poëtæ
Balneolum Gabiis, Romæ conducere fûrnos Tentarent (17).

*When now the celebrated Wits, for need,
Hire Bagnios, to the Cryer's Trade succeed,
Or get their own, by baking others Bread.*

CHA. DRYDEN.

which denote only the dismal Poverty of the Trade, which had almost forced the Poets to become Bankrupt to the Muses, and to seek their Living by some mechanic Employ, as one may call That of a Bath-Keeper, a Baker, or a Cryer. The third Testimony is taken from these Words of the same Juvenal:

Ipse facit versus, atque uni cedit Homero
Propter mille annos; & si dulcedine famæ
Succensus recites, Maculonis commodat ædes (18).

*Himself writes Verse, which he to your's prefers,
And only yields to Homer's for their Years:
But, to your Share to try what Fame will fall,
Any great Man will lend an empty Hall.*

It is so plain, that, neither in this, nor in the foregoing Passage, are Poets said to have hired the Chamber, where they recited their Verses, that it is unaccountable how such Mistakes should escape the Sight of the learned Vossius. Observe, that they are found in a Book, which was printed in the Author's Life-time (19), the Title whereof is, De Imitatione cum Oratoriâ tum præcipuè poëtica, deque Recitatione Veterum. This latter Subject has been amply treated by Crescilius, in his Theatre of the ancient Sophists.

WHETHER the Poets repeated in a hired House.
Errors of Vossius.

(17) Juven.
Sat. 7. v. 3.

(18) Juven.
Sat. 7. ver.
38.

(19) At Amsterdam 1647, with the Instructions Poëtiques.

ATHENÆUS, a Greek Grammarian, born at Naucratis in Ægypt, flourished in the III^d Century [A]. He was one of the most learned Men of his Time; he had read

[A] Athenæus — flourished in the III^d Century. Faber has censured Helvicus, who, in quoting Suidas, places Athenæus in the Reign of Antoninus Pius (1). Here are two Faults, for Suidas makes him flourish under Marcus Aurelius, though he does not deserve to be copied in this, since Oppian, who dedicated a Poem to the Emperor Caracalla (2), died before Athenæus. Helvicus ought not then to have placed Oppian fifty Years after him. Faber reproves him for this Mistake, and maintains, that Athenæus lived at the same time with Herodian, who finished his History in the Year 238. It is certain, Athenæus places himself after Oppian, in point of Time. Καὶ τὸν ὀλίγον χρόνον ὑμῶν γενομένων Ὀππιανὸν τὸν Κιλικίαν. (3). And Oppian, the Cilician, who lived a little before our Time; says he, speaking of several Authors, who had treated of Fishing. Without doubt it will be objected, that he elsewhere says (4), that he knew the Poet Panocrates, who received some Present from the Emperor Adrian: But This raises no great Difficulty; it is sufficient to suppose, that This Panocrates was very young, at That time, that he lived eighty Years, and died before Athenæus had attained to the twentieth Year of his Age. You will find, by this, that the latter might very well have lived 'till the Reign of Gordianus. If Mr de Tillemont had recollected the Greek Passage of Athenæus, which I have quoted, The Age, which he thought due to This Writer, would have appeared still more surprizing to him; for he supposes him very aged, by imagining only, that his Work was written after the Death of Commodus; and the Reason, he

(1) Id. lib.
15. p. 677.

(1) Tanaq.
Faber Epist.
63. lib. 1.
p. 211, 212.

(2) Wetstein killed in 217.

(3) Athen.
lib. 1. p. 13.

(a) See the Preface of Cafaubon in Athenæus.

read so much, and had so good a Memory, that he may justly be called the Varro of the Greeks (a). Of all his Works [B], there remains only That intituled the Deipnosophists, that is to say, the Sophsists at Table (b), where he introduces a number of learned Men, of all Professions, who converse upon various Subjects, at the Table of a Roman Citizen, called Larensius. There is an infinite Variety of Facts and Citations in this Work of Athenæus, which makes the reading of it very pleasant to Those, who have skill enough to love Antiquity from a rational Motive. But, without doubt, the learned Men, who were cotemporary with the Author, did not judge of this Work so favourably, as we do in this Age. Those learned Men could consult the Originals, and there find most of the things, which Athenæus presented them with; for which Reason they considered his Book in a bad Light, as nothing else but a tedious Collection from others. But, for our part, who can come at but a very few of the Authors referred to by Athenæus, and have no other Opportunity of meeting with a hundred particular Curiosities, mentioned by him, but in his Collection, we look upon it as a very precious Treasure: we regard it with a favourable Eye, and transfer to the Author all the Esteem we have for the Rarities recorded by him, which are indeed become such, only because the Books, out of which he took them, are lost. For this same Reason, such a Compiler, whom our Age might not esteem in the least, would be greatly admired a thousand Years hence, if there should happen, in the Republic of Learning, such Revolutions as destroyed most of the Works of the ancient Greeks and Romans. We cannot answer, that nothing like this will ever happen again. Let us, then, not blame those, who compile; they labour perhaps more usefully for future Ages, than the Authors, who borrow nothing from others. We find, in the Deipnosophists of our Author, a great many Touches of Slander, Fragments of scandalous Reports, and obscene Stories. No Book has been worse treated by Transcribers, than This of Athenæus [C]; all the Editions we have of it are very imperfect [D]. Somebody made an Abridgment of This Work [E]. Mr Moreri could

(b) Δειπνοσοφιστῶν Βιβλία τὰντῶν καὶ Σίθη. Of the Deipnosophists, 1. Books. Vossius should not have employed, two or in the same Page (viz. p. 232, of his de Hist. Gr.) the Term Δειπνοσοφιστῶν.

(c) Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 2. p. 309.

(6) Cafaub. in Athen. pag. 958.

(7) Ἐν τῷ περὶ Ἀλεξανδρου βιβλίῳ. In his book concerning Alexandria. Athen. lib. 15. p. 676.

(8) Ibid. lib. 5. pag. 211.

(9) Voss. de Hist. Gr. p. 232.

(10) Athen. lib. 3. c. 13. in fine.

he gives for it, is, That Athenæus had known the Poet Panocrates, famous in the Time of Adrian (5). He finds no Fault with Suidas, who placed him under Marcus Aurelius; tho' he ought to have censured him, in consequence of the Greek Passage above-mentioned. I would not have it pretended, that it is not Athenæus, who boasts of having known the Poet Panocrates, but that they are the Words of Callixenus, the Rhodian, whom he had quoted a little before. This Supposition will not pass. Cafaubon perceived plainly, that these are not Callixenus's Words, in the Book of Athenæus (6); but he has omitted a very strong Reason for proving this Point. It is, that the Passage in question begins thus; Since I have mentioned the City of Alexandria. Now Callixenus would never have spoken thus, in a Work of his own, concerning That very City (7). It is therefore Athenæus himself, who makes use of these Words, after having finished the Relation of what he had borrowed from Callixenus.

[B] Of all his Works. One was concerning the Kings of Syria, as himself informs us (8). Vossius ascribes to him another, concerning Illustrious Men, and Generals of Armies, who had fought Duels (9). He grounds his Opinion on these Words of the fourth Book. Ὅτι δὲ καὶ οἱ ἐνδοξοὶ καὶ οἱ ἡσυχρότεροι ἐμονομάχουν καὶ ἐκ περὶ κλισίας τῶν ἐπὶ οὐκ ἐν ἀλλοῖς ἐπρηκαμέν (10). But that Illustrious Men, and Generals of Armies, have fought Duels, upon Challenge, we have in another Place discoursed. This Subject would be very proper for a particular Treatise, but it might also be inserted as an Episode in another Work, and chiefly by an Author, who ran so much Ground in a little Time, and who loved Rhapsody so well, as Athenæus. Therefore Vossius's Opinion is not very certain.

[C] No Book has been worse treated by Transcribers, than This of Athenæus. The Omissions, Transpositions, and false Reasonings, are not to be numbered. These are Faults of the Transcribers; but, as to the loss of part of the Work, there is no Reason to lay That to their Charge. The two first Books, the beginning of the third, and most part of the last, are wanting. To supply this loss as well as possible, they have printed the Abridgment of what was lost, together with what was preserved entire; for, as I shall shew presently, we have still an Abridgment of the whole Work.

[D] All the Editions we have of it are very imperfect. The first is That of Aldus Manutius, in the Year 1514. Marcus Musurus, a Greek by Nation, assisted him with his Care and Skill. However, for want of good Manuscripts, and a due Exactness in correcting it, there remains an infinite Number of Faults in their Work. The Basil Edition of Joban Valderus, in Folio, which followed next in the Year 1535, by the Care of James Bedrot, and Christian Herlinus, was little better. Natales Comes ventured to translate Athenæus into Latin. His Learning is very well known. It appears by his Mythology, that he had read and studied much; but, as he was ignorant in Criticism, it is certain, that his Translation is most wretched. It is the first that was published. "Ante omnes alios (nam de Sanga Romano vereor ut credendum sit Paulo Jovio) Latinum fecit Athenæum (11). Quamvis rumor "spargeretur Sangam patritium Romanum, virum, "ut aiunt, eximie doctrinæ id præstitisse (12)." Cafaubon does not cite the Place, where Paulus Jovius says this: It is in the Book of Piscibus Romanis. These are the Words: Sanga Romanus, Poeta lapidatus, cuius beneficio Athenæum Latinum legimus (13). But these five last Words are left out of the Basil Edition, in 1561, by Henry and Peter Perna: which shews, that Paulus Jovius had corrected his Mistake. Dalechamp, a famous Physician, published a second, which exceeds That of Natales Comes, and might have been much better than it is, if the Author had met with less Practice. But, as he kept close to his Profession, and spent only the leisure Hours, his Patients left him, on Athenæus, he has not done all that might be expected from him, though for near thirty Years he dedicated all his spare Time that way (14). And thus it remained ever since. The Edition of Dalechamp, the Greek on one side, and the Latin on the other, with the Volume of Cafaubon's Annotations, is the best Athenæus extant. The Abbot of Marolles has translated this Greek Author into French. I do not question but he followed the Latin Translation as his only Model, and has committed many Mistakes. I know nothing of this Work, but from the Journal des Sçavans (15). It is in 4to, and was printed at Paris, in the Year 1680. It is the first French Translation from the Original, and the last Performance of the Translator. I have been informed, that it sold so well, that it is very scarce at the Book-sellers, and bears an excessive Price. As to what has been said concerning a Translation by Sanga, see, above, Citation (11), (12), and (13).

[E] Somebody made an Abridgment of This Work. Cafaubon confesses ingenuously, that This Abbréviation is unknown to him, and that he can neither tell his Name, nor Country, nor the Age he lived in (16). However, he places him above Five hundred Years before himself, and is very certain he ought to be placed before Eusebius (17), because Eusebius

(11) Cafaub. Pref. Animadv. in Athen.

(12) Dalechamp. Ep. Dedic. Athenæi.

(13) P. Jovius de Piscibus Romanis, cap. 31, pag. 104. Edit. 1531, ex Officina Froben.

(14) Ex Prefat. Cafaub. in Athenæum.

(15) Of May 1680.

(16) Cafaub. Animadv. in Athen. inæ.

(17) Id. in Prefat. & in Animadv. p. 3.

could not forbear saying something of it, but was grossly mistaken [F]. All that he has said of Athenæus, and of two other Persons of the same Name, is erroneous [G]. See the last Remark of this Article.

has, upon several Occasions, made use of the Abridgment of Athenæus, in Preference to the Original, which led him into some Errors (18). Casaubon fancies, that this Abbreviator was some Grammarian, who undertook the same thing on Athenæus, which Hermolaus had done on the Work of Stephanus Byzantinus, for which, in some Respects, he deserved to be commended for his Learning, and in others, to be condemned for his want of Exactness (19). The Manuscripts of Athenæus were very much corrupted, even when this Abridgment was made. This is proved by two Reasons: There appears several Faults in the Abridgment, answering to those in the Manuscripts: And the Abbreviator confesses, that he passes over several things, because they were corrupted (20). Casaubon had a Manuscript of the Abridgment (21), which David Hoefhelius lent him: It wanted the first Book, and part of the second; so that they had retrenched from the Beginning of it almost all that had been inserted in the Editions of Athenæus, to supply what was lost from the Original of the Deipnosophists.

[F] Mr Moreri — was grossly mistaken. These are his Words; Athenæus composed a Work of the Deipnosophists, in fifteen Books, which Hermolaus of Byzantium abridged, according to Suidas. I pass by his Sin of Omission: No doubt he ought to have told us, whether That which is extant be the Work itself, or only the Abridgment he is speaking of. We shall only take notice of his Sins of Commission. I. It is false, that Hermolaus of Byzantium abridged Athenæus. II. It is false, that Suidas says so. III. It is false, that Suidas mentions any Abbreviator of the Deipnosophists. At first I took Casaubon to be the Cause of this Mistake, I mean a very innocent Cause; for who would ever imagine, that any one could stumble at these Words? "Putem confectam Constantinopoli ante annos quingentos & amplius hanc epitomen ab aliquo Grammatico, qualis fuit Hermolaus Byzantinus, auctor eorum Excerptorum, quæ hodie pro "Εἰρηκῶν Stephani libris in doctorum manibus versantur (22). — I suppose this Epitome was composed at Constantinople, above Five hundred Years ago, by some such Grammarian, as Hermolaus of Byzantium, who is the Author of Those Extractions, which now pass among the Learned, for the original Work of Stephanus the Ethnicus." But afterwards I found, that it was Charles Stephens, who deceived Mr Moreri. I think Volaterran is the first, who falsely makes Suidas say, that Hermolaus of Byzantium had abridged Athenæus. This Fault of Volaterran was taken notice of in the Edition of Athenæus, in 1535, as may be seen, without consulting That Edition, if we cast but an Eye on Gesner's Bibliotheca. How easy soever it was to avoid the same Error, since Gesner observed it, yet it is certain, that Charles Stephens, Lloyd, and Hofman, are fallen headlong into it; and they assure us, which is worse, that we have no other Athenæus, but the Abridgment of Hermolaus of Byzantium: Opus, quod ad nos sanè baud-ququam integrum pervenit: ejus epitome ab Hermolaus Byzantio TANTUM reliâ: Auctore Suida.

[G] What has been said — of two other Persons of the same Name, is very erroneous. These are Athenæus the Historian, and Athenæus the Philosopher. Mr Moreri says, that the first Athenæus wrote the History of Semiramis, and that this History is to be found in the second Book of Diodorus Siculus, and that Muretus has copied it, without citing the Author. It is easy to see, that these Words contain I know not how many Contradictions. Is it usual for an Historian to crowd into a small Corner of his Work all that another Historian has wrote on a long Reign, a Reign fruitful of Events? Could such a Critic, as Muretus, include the whole Life of Semiramis in one of his short Chapters (23)? This is absurd. He ought, therefore, to have expressed himself in this, or some such manner: Diodorus Siculus relates an Action of Semiramis, and quotes an Author, whose Name is Athenæus. Muretus mentions the same Action, without quoting any Author. To conclude from hence, that this Athenæus had composed the History of Semiramis, and ought consequently to be ranked among the Historians, is going a little too fast: According to this Rule, Seneca must have wrote the History of almost all the great Men in the World; for there is scarce one of them, who is not recorded by him, for some memorable Action, or Sentence. This may be said against Vossius, who, at a venture, places Him, whom Diodorus Siculus mentions, in the Number of Historians; but he has taken care not to say, positively, that the same Athenæus wrote the History of Semiramis. As to Athenæus, the Philosopher, it is false, that Strabo, cited by Mr Moreri, says, that he taught Aristotle's Philosophy at Rome; that, being returned home again, he was accused of a Design to form a Republic, and that he was taken into Custody. This is what Strabo says of him (24). "Athenæus, a Peripatetic Philosopher, a Native of Seleucia, in Cilicia, had a Share in the Government, and was a Demagogue in his Country for some time. Afterwards he became an intimate Friend of Murena, and fled with him, upon the Discovery of Murena's Conspiracy against Augustus. He was taken in his Flight; but the Emperor, not finding him guilty, set him at Liberty. Athenæus returned to Rome, and to those, he first met with, repeated these Words of Euripides:"

Ἦκα νεκρῶν κευθμῶνα καὶ σκότος πύλας Λιπύειν.

From Death's wide Caverns, and Hell-Gates, I come.

One can hardly guess at the Original of these Mistakes of Mr Moreri; for it seems more difficult to corrupt things in this Manner, than to deliver them as they are found.

AT R A X, or ATRACIA (a), a City of Thessaly (b), on the River Peneus, had it's Name from Atrax, the Son of Peneus, and Bura, who was it's Founder (c). It must have been considerable, since the Poets have sometimes made use of the Epithet Atracian, to signify Thessalian [A]. Pliny places the Atracians amongst the People of Ætolia (d); but we must not from thence infer, that he would be understood to speak of them, as different from the Inhabitants of the City Atrax, which he assigns to Thessaly (e). The Divisions of Nations, and Boundaries of Provinces, have often been altered; so that the same District, which belonged, at one Time, to Ætolia, might, at another, be esteemed part of Thessaly. The River ATRAX, whose Mouth opened into the Ionian Sea (f), passed thro' the Country of the Atracians.

[A] The Poets have sometimes made use of the Epithet Atracian, to signify Thessalian. Ceneus, who was killed in the Quarrel between the Centaurs and Lapithæ, at the Wedding of Pirithous, is called Atracides, by Ovid (1); not to represent him as the Son of Atrax; for he had a little before called him the Son of Elacus (2); but, in general, as a Thessalian. I am not unaware, that some Authors (3) say, he was the Son of Atrax. The same Poet calls the Wife of Pirithous only Atracis.

Define mirari posito quod candida vino

Atracis ambiguos traxit in arma viros (4).

No wonder Beauty ev'n a Centaur warms,

And makes him quit the Nuptial Cup for Arms.

In another Place, he gives her proper Name Hippodamia; but he adds to it the Epithet Atracis.

(23) It is the 17th of the 16th Book, Variarum Lectionum. Moreri has cited it, but it is in his Article of Athenæus the Physician.

(24) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 461.

(18) Id. in Animadv. pag. 1, 2.

(19) Ibid. pag. 3.

(20) Id. in Prefat.

(21) Id. A. animadv. init.

(22) Ibid. pag. 3.

(a) Steph. Byzant. verbo "Ατράξ.

(b) Strabo, lib. 9. pag. 303.

(c) Steph. Byzant. ubi supra.

(d) Plinii Histor. Nat. lib. 4. c. 2.

(e) Ibid. c. 8.

(f) Ibid. lib. 4. cap. 2.

(1) Ovid. Met. l. 12. ver. 209.

(2) Proles Elateæ, ib. ver. 89.

(3) Antonini Liber. I. Metam. c. 17.

(4) Ovid. Amor. lib. 1. Eleg. 4. v. 7.

(5) Ovid. E-pist. Helen-circæ fœnem. ver. 247.

An fera Centauris indicere bella cœgit Atracis Hæmonios Hippodamia viros (5) ?

*Offended Beauty cruel Wars can wage;
The Centaurs felt the Force of Female Rage.*

(6) Valer. Flacc. Argon. lib. 1. ver. 141.

Valerius Flaccus describes her by the Words Atracis Virgo (6).

We cannot suppose Ovid takes her to be the Daughter of Atrax; this would prove too much. For then Ceneus must also have the same Father; whereas he makes him the Son of Elatus, and does not say one Word of Ceneus being Brother to the Bride; an unpardonable Omission, if he had understood him to be Brother-in-law to Piritibous.

I take it, that Apuleius imagined, that Atracis was the proper Name of the Wife of Piritibous; for, as he wrote in Prose, he would not have called her by That Name, if he had thought it only a figurative and poetical Expression. Sic instar Atracis, says he (7), vel (read est) Piritiboi displicet disturbatque Nuptiæ. Beroaldus very well understood it of Hippodamia, (or Hippodamia,) Wife of Piritibous; but when he adds, that she was called Atracis, because she was the Daughter of Atrax, who was the first Inventor of Magic amongst the Thessalians (8), he affirms, what he ought to have proved; for we nowhere find, that Atrax established Magic. It is very true, Magic has been called Art Atracis (9); but this means no more, than Art Thessalica, and signifies only Magic in general, because Thessaly was famous for That Art (10). We are to understand in the same Sense These Verses of Valerius Flaccus:

*Quamvis Atracis lunam spumare veneno
Sciret, & harmoniis agitari cantibus umbras* (11).

*Tho' by Thessalian Arts the Moon be slain,
And calls up Spirits by his Magic Strains.*

The Scholiast of Statius is the only one, if I am not mistaken, who has said, that Atrax was the Father of Hippodamia. It is thus I would correct the Word, Hippocattæ, and not, as Barbicus makes it, Hippocrææ (12). The Scholiast of Homer, on the Twenty first Book of the Odyssey: Eustathius, on the same place; and Hyginus, at cap. 23; say, that the Wife of Piritibous was called Hippodamia, and was the Daughter of Adrastus. I do not know whether the Genitive Ἀδρασίου might not have been changed into Ἀδράς. If this was the Case, Atrax, the true Name of the Father of Hippodamia, would be lost in That of Adrastus. The Transcribers have made Mistakes full as great as This. I shall give an Example, not foreign to our Subject. All the Manuscripts of Lycophron, at present, read ἀτραξας λύκος, Rapaces Lupos, Ravenous Wolves (13); this signifies the Argonauts; but the Copy, which Stephanus Byzantinus made use of, read ἀτραξας λύκος (14), Atracenses lupos, that is, Thessalian Wolves. It is thus Eustathius has cited this Place of Lycophron (15).

What Barbicus pretends, that Atracis ora, in Propertius (16), signifies a very distant Place, and that Catullus has used the Word Atracis in the same Sense (17), is not very ingenious. Some Critics, in Catullus, read Atacis, a River in Gaul, instead of Atracis, a River in Greece; but, however that be, we ought to understand literally the Words of Catullus and Propertius (18). As to the Supposition of Barbicus, that they allude to the Art of Magic, it is altogether ridiculous.

(12) See the Commentary of Barthius on Statius, Tom. 2. p. 37, 38.

(13) Lycoph. Alexandr. ver. 1309.

(14) Steph. Byzant. at the Word "Ατραξ".

(15) See Canter. on the Words of Lycophron.

(16) Propert. Eleg. 8. l. 1.

(17) Catull. Epigr. 96.

(18) See Scaliger on this place of Propertius.

ATTALUS, the Name of some Kings of Pergamus. See PERGAMUS.

ATTICUS (TITUS POMPONIUS) has the Character of one of the most honourable Men in ancient Rome. He behaved himself so prudently, that, without forfeiting his Neutrality, he preserved the Esteem and Affection of the Two contrary Parties [A]. The intimate Friendship, which he had for Cicero, did not hinder his having a very strict Union with Hortensius; and he brought Those Two Rivals in Eloquence not only to forbear all mutual Reflexion, but even to keep up a good Understanding [B]. He never had the least Difference, either with his Mother, or his

[A] He preserved the Esteem and Affection of the two contrary Parties. He sent Money to the Son of Marius, who was a declared Enemy to the Republic; and insinuated himself so far into Sylla's Favour, that this Roman General would always have him near him, and did not take it ill, that Atticus excused himself from following him to Rome, on account of his resolving to observe a Neutrality (1). "Noli, oro," te, inquit Pomponius, adversum eos me velle ducere, cum quibus ne contra te arma ferrem, Italia reliqui (2). — Ask me not, says Pomponius, "to go against those, whom because I would not follow against you, I left Italy." He kept himself quiet in Rome, during the War between Cæsar and Pompey; this was not displeasing to Pompey (3), but extremely pleasing to Cæsar. After the Death of the latter, he sent Money to Brutus, when the Party for Liberty began to grow weak, and did a thousand good Offices to the Wife and Friends of Marc Antony, when his Party seemed ruined beyond all Recovery. Marc Antony was not ungrateful; for, though he exerted a furious Hatred against all the Friends of Cicero, yet he wrote, with his own Hand, a very obliging Letter to Atticus (4). He afterwards promoted the Marriage of Atticus's Daughter, with Agrippa, the Favourite of Augustus (5). Lastly, notwithstanding the cruel Divisions, which broke out between Marc Antony and Augustus, our Atticus maintained himself in both their Friendships. One of them (6) never set out any where, without sending him a particular Account, by Letter, of what he was doing, what he was reading, and where he was going; and, when he was at Rome, he wrote almost every day to consult him on some Question; the other (7) acquainted him with all his Affairs. Without doubt it was difficult to preserve, at the same time, the Friendship of two such Antagonists. "Hoc "quale sit facilius existimabit is, qui judicare poterit, quantæ sit sapientiæ eorum retinere ulum benevolentiamque, inter quos maximarum rerum non solum æmulationi, sed obtestatio tanta intercedebat, quantum fuit incidere necesse inter Cæsarem atque Antonium, cum se uterque principem non solum urbis Romanæ, sed orbis terrarum, esse cuperet (8). — What this was, he is best able to judge, who is sensible of the great Prudence, requisite to preserve the Correspondence and Friendship of those, who were not only Competitors for the greatest Things, but such Enemies to one another, as Cæsar and Antony must necessarily be, when each of them aspired to be Emperor, not only of Rome, but of the whole World."

[B] He brought Cicero and Hortensius — to keep up a good Understanding. They, who are sensible, how much an Emulation in Eloquence influences and stirs up the other Passions, will conceive no mean Idea of the Conduct and Merit of a Man, who knew how to keep the Peace between the two most famous Orators of Antiquity. It was not sufficient, that Pomponius Atticus could insinuate himself agreeably into People's Affections; he must also have some remarkable Qualities to deserve so great an Esteem. What I am going to quote, is, therefore, very proper to describe his Merit. "Utebatur intimæ Quintus Hor-tensio, qui iis temporibus principatuum eloquentiæ tenebat, ut intelligi non posset uter eum plus diligeret Cicero an Hortensius, & id quod erat difficile limum, efficiebat ut inter quos tantæ laudis esset æmulationi, nulla intercederet obtestatio, essetque talium virorum copula (9). — He was very intimate with Quintus Hortensius, who, at that Time, was acknowledged Supreme in Eloquence, so that it was hard to say which loved him most, Cicero or Hortensius; and, what was most difficult of all,

(8) Idem, cap. 5.

(9) Id. ib.

(1) Corn. Nepos, in Vita Attici, cap. 2.

(2) Idem, cap. 4.

(3) Idem, cap. 7. yet Cicero, Ep. 6. lib. 11, ad Atticum, says, that Pompey would have been an Enemy to Atticus, if he had conquered.

(4) Idem, cap. 10.

(5) Idem, cap. 12.

(6) Namely, Augustus. Corn. Nepos, cap. 20.

(7) Namely, Marc Antony. Corn. Nepos, cap. 20.

his Sister [C]. He always behaved himself generously to his Friends, and opened his Purse to them in their Necessities. This he could well afford; for, besides the great Fortunes, which fell to him by Succession [D], he found ways to lay out his Money to a very great Advantage. The Troubles, which arose at Rome, between the Parties of Cinna and Sylla, made him resolve, in his Youth, to go to Athens, where he lived a long time. He was so very much beloved by the Albaniens [E], that the Day he left their City was, in some Manner, a Day of Mourning. He loved Learning extremely, and had, in his Family, several Librarians (a), and very good Readers. He had always something read at his Table, even when he entertained his

(a) See, below, Citation (38).

"he brought it about, that, between these two so great Rivals, there was not only no Contention, but even an Union."

[C] He never had the least Difference either with his Mother or his Sister. When he was Sixty seven Years of Age, he lost his Mother, who was ninety Years old, and had a Sister near the same Age with himself. He declared, at his Mother's Funeral, that he had never any Occasion to seek her Reconciliation, and that there never had been any Quarrel between his Sister and himself. "Hoc ipsum verè gloriantem audierim in funere matris suæ, quam exulit annorum 90, cum esset septem & 60, se nunquam cum matre in gratiam rediisse, nunquam cum forore suâ in similitate, quam propè æqualem habebat; quod est signum aut nullam unquam inter eos quærimoniam intercessisse, aut hunc cæ fuisse in suos indulgentiâ, ut quos amare deberet irasci eis nefas duceret (10). — This I heard him deservingly glory in, at the Funeral of his Mother, whom he buried at ninety Years of Age, being sixty himself; that he had never stood in need of her Pardon, or been at Variance with his Sister, who was about the same Age with himself; which is a Sign, either that there was no Complaints among them, or else that he had so great an Indulgence for his Family, as to think it a Sin to be angry with those he ought to love." I do not mention this Circumstance of Time to swell my Book, or rather to fill up a Sheet of Paper: every one sees it is essential to this Remark; for, if the happy Temper of Atticus appears here to be so very singular, it is chiefly on account of the Number of Years he passed with his Mother and Sister without the least Brawl. It is pity the History did not add how he lived with his Wife. He does not boast at all on this Head (11); and this may create some Suspicion, that his Conduct, or Patience, could not signalize themselves so much in this respect, as towards his Mother and Sister, who perhaps, on their Part, contributed very much to That good Agreement, and did not oblige him to make great Advances. The Matter, on this Supposition, would lose much of its Singularity with regard to Atticus, but, taking it all together, it would not be less, but rather more extraordinary. See, in the following Remark, that Atticus kept always in Favour with an Uncle, whose Temper was so humourfome, that no other of his Relations were able to bear it. Let us return to the Wife of Atticus. It is strange, that Cornelius Nepos should say nothing of her, neither good nor bad, and that we must have recourse to other Authors to know that her Name was Pilia, and that Atticus married her in the Year of Rome 697 (12). He was far from young; he was Fifty three Years of Age. He had made no great haste to inlist himself in That Warfare. We may collect from one of Cicero's Letters (13), that Pilia loved her Husband; for, as to That other Passage (14), from which some have concluded, that she had Thoughts of a Divorce, it is plain it ought to be read other-ways, and only signifies, that she was threatened with the Palli. Mr Sarazin affirms, in his Translation of the Life of Pomponius Atticus, that the City of Athens erected also Statues to Pilia, the Wife of Atticus: but it is evident, he made use of a bad Edition; for you must not read Pilia in Cornelius Nepos. Atticus's Marriage was too long after his Return from Athens, for the Athenians to think of erecting Statues to his Wife. Would Cornelius Nepos have been so senseless as to speak of the Statues of Pilia, without saying who she was? The Family, Pilia, makes no manner of Figure in the ancient History of Rome.

[D] The great Fortunes, which fell to him by Succession. Quintus Cæcilius was his Uncle by the Mother's Side. He was a Man of an insupportable Temper; but Atticus humoured This perverse Spirit of his so well, that he kept in his Favour, without any Interruption, to the very last. He found his Account in this Compliance; for Cæcilius made him his principal Heir, and left him near a Million of Money. Atticus's own Patrimony was about Two Hundred Thousand Li. res. In Severus's vices quod a Patre acceperat (15). In short, Cæcilius having adopted his Nephew by Will, it became necessary for Atticus to take upon him from that time the Name of Q. Cæcilius Pomponius Atticus. Let us see what Cornelius Nepos says of the peevish Temper of this Uncle. "Habebat avunculum Q. Cæcilius equitem Romanum, familiarem L. Luculli (16), divitem, difficilimâ naturâ, cujus sic asperitatem veritus est, ut quem nemo ferre posset hujus sine offensione ad summam senectutem retinere benevolentiam: quo facto tulit pietatis fructum: Cæcilius enim moriens testamento adoptavit eum, hæredemque fecit ex dodrante. Ex qua hæreditate accepit circiter centies L. L. S. (17). — He had an Uncle by the Mother's Side, named Q. Cæcilius, a Roman Knight, an intimate Friend of L. Lucullus, rich, and extremely ill-natured, whose Temper he was so fearful of offending, that, though no Body else could please him, he kept in Favour with him to the last; by which means he reaped the Fruit of his Dutifulness; for Cæcilius, at his Death, adopted him in his Will, and made him his Heir to three Parts in Four. He made of this Inheritance about 100000 Sesterces.

[E] He was very much beloved by the Athenians. He had carried thither the best part of his Effects, and, both by Loans and Presents, very much obliged the City of Athens (18). They were not ungrateful, but complimented him with all sorts of public Honours. He refused the making him a Citizen, and the erecting a Statue to him; but, after his Departure, they erected several. There was a very great Concern shewn at his leaving them. "Quo factum est ut huic omnes honores quos possunt publice habere, civemque facere studeant, quo beneficio illi uti noluist: quod nonnulli interpretantur, amitti civitatem Romanam, alia adscita. Quamdiu affuit ne qua sibi statua poneretur refutit, absens prohibere non potuit — Tranquillitas autem rebus Romanis remigravit Romam — Quem diem sic universa civitas Atheniensium prosecuta est, ut lacrymis desiderii futuri dolorem indicaret (19). — For which reason, they studied to heap on him all possible public Honours, and were desirous of making him a Citizen; but he declined This Favour: some think, because this new Freedom would have taken away his Privileges, as a Citizen of Rome. Whilst he continued there, he would never suffer any Statue to be erected to him, but, when he went away, he could not prevent it — The Distractions of his Country being composed, he returned to Rome — Which Day the whole City of Athens did so stridly observe, that they expressed, by their Tears, the greatness of the Loss they were going to suffer." He spoke the Greek Language so perfectly well, that one would have taken him for an Athenian (20). Some think his Surname of Atticus came from thence. Volaterran affirms it, as a thing related by Cornelius Nepos (21); but he is mistaken. The Abbot St Real says, that Atticus called himself so, because he was very learned in Greek, and lived most of his Time at Athens (22). He has been told, that he ought only to have said, on account of the long Stay he made at Athens, in his Youth; since it is certain, that he lived most part of his Life in Italy, or Epirus, where he had an Estate, as appears by his Life, written by Cornelius Nepos, and by several Passages in Cicero's Letters (23).

(15) Corn. Nepos, c. 14.

(16) Valer. Maximus, lib. 7. c. 8. n. c. Jays, that Cæcilius was bad provided to make Lucullus his Heir, and that, having desired him, his Corpse was dragged through the Streets.

(17) Corn. Nepos, c. 5.

(18) Ibid. cap. 2.

(19) Ibid. cap. 3. & 4.

(20) Ibid. cap. 4.

(21) Volaterran, lib. 18 pag. 666.

(22) Remon-lez in Cicero's Epistles to Atticus, in the Bibliothèque Universelle, Tom. 20. pag. 78.

(23) The Author of Bibliothèque Universelle, ibid.

(20) Corn. Nepos, in Vita Attici, cap. 17.

(22) See the beginning of the foregoing Citation.

(12) See the above Epistle of Cicero ad Quintum Fabrum, lib. 2. and Fabrianus in the Life of Cicero ad annum urbis 697.

(13) The 2nd of the 9th Book to Atticus.

(14) Of the 7th Epistle of the 16th Book to Atticus.

(b) Nata est Attico neptis ex Agrippa cui virginem filiam collocavit. Hanc Cæsar vix anniculum Tiberio Claudio Nepoti Drusilla nato privigno suo desponsavit. --- Atticus had a Grand-daughter, by Agrippa, who had married his Daughter, Cæsar, when she was scarce a Year old, betrothed her to Tiberius Claudius Nero, who was born of Drusilla, by his Son-in-law. Nepos in Vita Attici, cap. 19.

his Friends [F]. He never had a Thought of advancing himself above the Rank he was born to, which was That of a Knight. He might have attained to great Offices in the Republic; but he chose rather to decline them [G]; because, in the Corruption, which then reigned, he could neither obtain, nor exercise, them legally. He never had a Law-Suit in his Life. He never impeached any one, nor seconded Those, who did. The Emperor Augustus was related to him; the manner of the Relation was thus. Atticus had married his Daughter to Agrippa. That Marriage produced a Daughter, whom Augustus betrothed to Tiberius almost as soon as she was born (b). I believe the Wife of Atticus was of no great Family (c). He deserves a Place in the List of good Authors [H]. He attained to the Age of Seventy seven Years almost without knowing what Sickness was. He had lived for Thirty Years together without any occasion for Physic. At last he fell sick, and, for Three Months, his Distemper was but slight, but, afterwards, his Pains were excessive. He sent for his Son-in-Law Agrippa, and two other Persons, and declared to them, he was resolved to put an end to his Life by abstaining from all Nourishment; he desired them to approve of his Resolution, and not oppose it, since all their Exhortations would be in vain. Agrippa, however, employed both his Prayers, and his Tears, to prevail with him to live, but all to no purpose. After two Days Abstinence, his Fever ceased, and his Pains were much abated; yet Atticus persisted in his Resolution, and died three Days after (d). This was in the Year of Rome 721. He is fallen, in our Times, into

(c) See Remark [C] towards the end.

(d) Ex Cornelio Nepote, in Vita Pompeii Attici.

(24) Corn. Nepos, c. 14.

[F] He had always something read at his Table, even when he entertained his Friends. If he had kept an open Table for all sorts of Guests, this Custom of Reading would have been very disagreeable to a great many People; but he invited none, but those of his own Taste. "Nemo in convivio ejus aliud acroama audit quam anagnosten ---- Neque unquam sine aliqua lectione apud eum coenatum est, ut non minus animo quam ventre convivæ delectarentur, namque eos vocabat quorum mores a suis non abhorrerent (24). ----- No Body heard any other Music at his Entertainments, but Reading. Nor did any Body eat with him, without something being read; so that his Company were entertained in their Minds, as well as Bodies; for he invited those only, who were of the same Taste with himself."

[G] He might have attained to great Offices in the Republic, but he chose rather to decline them. This was certainly the strongest Proof he gave of his Virtue. There was no attaining to Offices in those Times but by ill Practices; nor could they be exercised according to the Rules of Justice, and for the public Good, without running the Hazard of some Violence from a great many ill Persons. He chose therefore rather to live in a private Condition, than to purchase Dignities at the Price of his Conscience. How good and rare is this! If all the World were of Atticus's Mind, there would be Room to apprehend a State of Anarchy; but we may sleep very quietly on this Score: there never will be wanting a Number of Persons, corrupt enough to accept of Employments, upon any sort of dishonest Terms, greater than the Number of Places to bestow on them. I have been told, that a Person, who had travelled all his Life-time, answered those, who made a Jest of his unsettled Temper, that he would willingly have fixt in some Town or other, if he could but have found one, where Power and Credit were in the Hands of honest Men. Another Traveller, happening once to declare, that he would ramble no longer, than till he could meet with a Town governed by Men of the most Merit, was answered, YOU WILL DIE THEN IN YOUR TRAVELS. "Honores non petiit cum ei paterent propter vel gratiam vel dignitatem; quod neque petiit more majorum, neque capi possent conservatis legibus, in tam effusis ambitus largitionibus, neque geri à republica sine periculo, corruptis civitatis moribus (25). ----- He declined all public Offices, tho' both his Interest and Authority were great enough to have got him any Thing: Because they could neither be applied for, according to the Custom of his Ancestors, nor procured, without breaking through the Laws by excessive Bribes, nor discharged with Integrity, even under the Sanction of the Government, without very great Danger, from so general a Degree of Corruption." Compare with this what was said, above, in the Article of ALEXANDER AB ALEXANDRO.

(25) Ibid. cap. 6.

[H] Atticus deserves a Place in the List of good Authors. He composed Annals, wherein he observed an exact Chronology, and cleared the Genealogies of the Roman Magistrates in the plainest Manner that could be. This Work comprehended seven Centuries; from whence we may easily conjecture, that it principally concerned the Roman History. I say principally; for no doubt but the Author, in his Chronological Series, gave an abstracted Account of several other States. Cicero puts it beyond all Question: "Cognoscat etiam, jays he (26), rerum gestarum & memoriar veteris ordinem maxime scilicet nostræ civitatis: sed & imperiosorum populorum & regum illustrium: quem laborem nobis Attici nostri levavit labor, qui conservatis notisque temporibus nihil cum illustre prætermitteret, annorum septingentorum memoriam uno libro colligavit. ----- Let him be well acquainted with the Chronological Order of the Customs and Actions of Antiquity, chiefly of our own City, but also of other considerable States, and illustrious Princes: which will now become an easier Work, by the Pains our Atticus has taken, who, by an exact Observation and Distinction of Times, without omitting any Thing remarkable, has included an Account of Seven hundred Years in one Book. These Annals seem to have contained a kind of Chronological Tables. "Habuit ille liber Attici & nova mihi quidem multa, & eam utilitatem quam requirebam, ut explicatis ordinibus temporum uno in conspectu omnia viderem (27). ----- This Book of Atticus had indeed many Things new to me, and such a Convenience as pleased me, by digesting the Order of Times in such a manner, that I could see every thing at one View." I have already said, that Atticus observed the Genealogical Order very exactly: I shall add here, that he wrote particular Treatises on some Families, and composed Inscriptions, of four or five Verses each, to be placed under the Portraits of eminent Persons; and that his Talent was much admired in expressing so many things in so few Words. "Attigit quoque Poëticen, credimus, ne ejus expertus esset suavitatis. Namque veribus qui honore rerum que gestarum amplitudine ceteros Romani populi præstiterunt exposuit, ita ut singulorum imaginibus facta magistratuumque eorum non amplius quaternis quinisque versibus describeret, quod vix credendum sit tantas res tam breviter potuisse declarari (28). --- Moris etiam majorum summi imitator fuit antiquitatis amator, quam adeo diligenter habuit cognitam, ut eam totam in eo volumine exposuerit, quo magistratus ornavit. Nulla enim lex, neque pax, neque bellum, neque res illustris ejus populi Romani, quæ non in eo suo tempore fit notata, & quod difficillimum fuit, sic familiarium originem subtexuit, ut ex eo clarorum virorum propagines possimus cognoscere. Fecit hoc idem separatim in aliis libris, ut M. Bruti rogatu Juniam familiam a stirpe ad hanc ætatem ordine enumeravit, notans qui a quo ortus, quos honores, quibusque temporibus cepisset. Pari modo Marcelli Claudii de Marcellorum; Scipionis Cornelii, & Fabii Maximi de Corneliorum, & Fabiorum, & Æmiliorum quoque, quibus libris nihil potest esse dulcius eis qui aliquam cupiditatem habent notitiæ clarorum virorum (29). --- He attempted something also in Poetry; very likely, that he might be no Stranger to it's Harmony. "For (26) Cicero in Oratore.

(27) Licinius in Bruto.

(28) Cornelius Nepos, cap. 18.

(29) Ibid.

into the Hands of a very severe Cenſor [I]; but he has not been left undefended againſt the Rigour of theſe Cenſures [K]. We have ſomething to correct in Mr Moreri's Dictionary [L]. I forgot to mention, that Atticus was of the Sect of Epicurus (c), and that we may deſy the moſt zealous Defenders of That Doctrin, which holds it impoſſible, that Men, without the Belief of a Providence, can equal in Virtue Thoſe, who acknowledge a Jupiter, a Neptune &c. to ſhew a better Man, than Atticus, among the greateſt Bigots of Paganism.

(c) See Gaſſendus de Vita Epicuri, lib. 2. cap. 6.

"For he deſcribed, in no more than four or five Verſes, under each Picture of ſome of the moſt famous Romans, all the Offices and Actions, for which they had been eminent, and expreſſed ſo many Things in ſo few Words, as is ſcarce to be credited. — He was alſo a ſtrict Imitator of the Cuſtoms of his Anceſtors, and a Lover of Antiquity, which he ſo perfectly underſtood, that he wrote a full Account of it, in the ſame Work, which he compoſed concerning Magiſtrates. For there is not a Law, a War, a Peace, or any one remarkable Thing relating to the Roman People, which he did not mention in it, together with the Time when each happened. And, what was moſt difficult of all, he has ſo nicely traced the Original of Families, that it is eaſy to ſee from what Stocks our great Men are derived. He compoſed particular Pedigrees in other Books; one for the Junian Family, at the Requeſt of M. Brutus, from the very Beginning of it, in exact Order, down to our Times, remarking every Branch, from whence ſprung, what Honours, and in what Times, each had enjoyed. In like manner, he obliged Marcellus Claudius with the Genealogy of the Marcelli, and Scipio Cornelius, and Fabius Maximus, with thoſe of the Cornelli, the Fabii, and the Æmilii; which Book, afford the greateſt Pleaſure imaginable to ſuch as are curious to know the Particulars concerning eminent Men." It is pity theſe Books are loſt; they would clear up a very great Number of Difficulties. I ſay nothing of the Hiſtory of Cicero's Conſulſhip, which Atticus had wrote in the Greek Language (30), and in a plain Style (31).

the Ties of Friendſhip, occaſioned by This Marriage; ſince Cornelius Nepos obſerves very particularly, that Atticus had more kindneſs for Cicero, than for his Brother-in-law Quintus Cicero. "Erat nuptia ſoror Attici Q. Tullio Ciceroſi, eaſque nuptias M. Cicero conciliarat, cum quo ſi condiciplatu vivebat conjunctiſſime, multo etiam familiarius, quam cum Quinto, ut judicari poſſit plus in amicitia valere ſimilitudinem morum quam affinitatem (34). — Atticus's Siſter was married to Q. Tullius Cicero; the Match was made by M. Cicero, with whom he had lived in the greateſt Intimacy from the Time of their being Schoolfellows; and much more familiarly, than even now with Quintus; whence we may judge, that Friendſhip is not ſo much governed by nearneſs of Relation, as by ſimilitude of Manners." Pomponia, the Siſter of Atticus, did not always live well with her Husband (35); ſo that ſhe was not very fit to tie the Knot of Friendſhip between her Husband, and Brother. III. Cicero did not dedicate a Volume of his Letters to Atticus; it ſhould have been ſaid, that he kept a continual Correſpondence with him by Letters, and that we have a Collection of the Letters, he wrote to him, divided into ſixteen Book. Cornelius Nepos mentions it (36), and ſays, that they comprehend the Hiſtory of thoſe Times, and, in ſome ſort, a Prophecy of what was to follow. "Ut nihil in ſiſ non appareat, & facile exiſtimari poſſit prudentiam quodammodo eſſe divinationem. Non enim Cicero ea ſolum quæ vivo ſe acciderunt futura prædixit, ſed etiam quæ nunc uſu veniunt cecinit ut vates. — That nothing was omitted in them, and it may be truly ſaid, that his Judgment was, in ſome ſort, prophetic; for Cicero, like a true Prophet, did not only foretel what would happen in his own Time, but alſo what is now come to paſs in ours." IV. It is carrying the Point too far, to ſay, That Atticus had no other Servants, but ſuch as were fit to read to him. It was ſufficient to have ſaid, that he had ſeveral ingenious Domeſtics, who could read, and write, very well, and bind Books; and that every one of his Footmen could do This (37). Cornelius Nepos ſays no more of it; Who, therefore, in the XVth Century, would take upon him, to make twenty times as much of it? Has he not expreſſy obſerved, that, beſides his Domeſtics, who might be Readers, and Librarians (38), Atticus had others, all very well inſtructed, and born, and bred, in his Houſe? "In ea (familia) erant pueri literatiſſimi, anagnoſtæ optimi, & plurimi librarii, ut ne diſſiliquus quidem quiſquam eſſet qui non utrumque horum pulchre facere poſſet. Pari modo ARTIFICES CETERI quos cultus domeſticus deſiderat apprime boni. Neque tamen horum quemquam, niſi domi natum domique factum, habuit (39). — He had, in his Family, very learned Youth, excellent Readers, and many of them Librarians, and every one of his Lackeys had both theſe Qualifications. He had, alſo, OTHER ARTIFICERS, moſt ſkillful in their kind, for all domeſtic Uſes; and every one of them born, and educated, in his Houſe." The firſt, and third, of theſe four Miſtakes, are not in the Holland Edition.

(34) Corn. Nepos, c. 5.

(35) See Cicero's Epiſt. to Atticus, l. 5. Epiſt. 11.

(36) Cap. 16.

(37) We find the Names of ſome of theſe Domeſtics of Atticus, in the Epiſtles Cicero wrote to him.

(38) This Word means both Perſons tranſcribing, and making up of Books, or binding them, according to the manner of thoſe Times.

(39) Corn. Nepos, c. 13.

(40) In Camp. Catal. nica.

(30) Ibid.

(31) Cicero, Epiſt. 1. lib. 2. ad Atticum.

(32) In the 2.16 Tome of the Bibliotheque Universelle, p. 73. See alſo the Journal des Sçavans for Febr. 12, 1691.

(33) Of Dec. 1685. Art. 4. p. 1405.

[I] He is fallen, in our Times, into the Hands of a very ſevere Cenſor.] It is the Abbot of St Real. See the Book entitled Ceſarism, ou Entretiens divers. It was printed at the Hague, from the Paris Edition in 1685. It is divided into four Days, the third of which contains a very ſevere Cenſure on Pomponius Atticus, and his Panegyriſt Cornelius Nepos. I have been informed, that the Author of This Work perſiſted in the ſame Sentiments, and that it appears by the Remarks he has added to the Tranſlation of the two firſt Books of Cicero's Letters to Atticus. That Tranſlation is mentioned in a Book very well known (32), and I have always wondered, that the Booksellers of Amſterdam did not counterfeit it; for I don't queſtion but much may be learned by reading This Work.

[K] But he has not been left undefended againſt the Rigour of theſe Cenſures.] In the Year of 1686, there appeared a little Book in Holland, entitled, Le retour des pieces choiſies, ou bigarrures curieuſes, which, amongſt other Things, contains an Apology for Pomponius Atticus againſt the Attacks of Ceſarism. The Author of the Apology conceals his Name; but it is no Secret, that it was the late Mr Reinſant, his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's Cabinet-keeper of Medals. The News from the Republic of Letters (33) enlarged on this Piece of Mr Reinſant's, in ſuch a manner as was not pleaſing to the Abbot of St Real.

[L] We have ſomething to correct in Mr Moreri's Dictionary.] I. It is falſe, that Cicero married Atticus's Siſter. It was Cicero's Brother, who married her. II. He ought not to have mentioned

ATTILA, King of the Huns, ſurnamed the Scourge of God, lived in the Vth Century. He may be reckoned among the greateſt Conquerors, ſince there were but few Provinces in Europe, which did not feel the Weight of his victorious Arms. He would not grant the Emperor Theodoſius a Peace, on any other Condition, than of becoming his Tributary [A]. The Battle, he loſt in Champagne (a), in the Year

[A] He would not grant the Emperor Theodoſius a Peace, on any other Condition, than of becoming his Tributary.] According to the rodonoutado Maxim, That we ought to give Things an honourable Name, what the Emperor was obliged to pay, every Year, to Attila, was not called a Tribute, but a Penſion. Theſe are the Words of a modern Author. "He forced the Emperor Theodoſius, the younger, ſhamfully to beg a Peace of him; neither could he obtain it, without buying it, by paying him down Six thou-

451, did not weaken him to such a degree, but that he soon found himself in a Condition to proceed to ravage Italy; and, if the Prayers of Pope Leo had not stopped him, he would infallibly have taken the City of Rome. We must not believe what is reported of the Apparition of an old Man standing with a naked Sword in his Hand by St Leo's side, and threatening Attila. This King of the Huns was of a small Stature (b); but That did not hinder his striking a Terror into the most courageous, by his lofty Carriage and fierce Countenance. He knew very well how to join Craft with Force [B]. Superstition was one part of his Politics [C]. He was an artful, subtle, Dissembler, wise in Council, and daring in Execution, cruel to his Enemies, but merciful enough to those, who submitted to him in the Posture of Supplicants. He is also said to have made it a Point of Honour, to keep his Faith inviolably with those, whom he had once received into his Protection (c). He would not suffer extravagant Flatterers (d). The most common Opinion about the Manner of his Death is, that he was suffocated, by a Bleeding at the Nose, on his Wedding Night [D]. We shall relate in another Place (e), how greatly he was courted

(b) Maimbourg Hist. de l'Arianisme, Tom. 3. pag. 5. ex Jorandae, cap. 25. & à Paulo Diacono in Miscell. lib. 15.

(c) Maimb. ubi supra. See Remark [E].

(d) See the Article MARULUS of Cœlabria.

(e) See the Article HONORIA.

* Six Hundred Seventy eight Thousand Crowns.

† One Hundred thirteen Thousand Crowns

(1) Maimbourg Hist. de l'Arianisme, Tom. 3. pag. 4. ex Paulo Diacono in Miscell. lib. 15.

(a) Maimb. Histoire de St Leon, lib. 3. pag. 220. He cites Sulpicius.

(3) Corde-moi, Hist. de France, Tom. 1. pag. 116. ex Jorandae. See also Maimb. Hist. de l'Arianisme, Tom. 3. pag. 9.

(4) Jorandae de reb. Goth.

(c) Maimb. Hist. de l'Arianisme, Tom. 3. pag. 6.

(6) See Remarks [A] and [B] of the Hist. d'ARISTANDER, and also the AGRIPPA Remark [P] num. 1. at the end.

(7) Callimachus Expositio, in Attila.

"and Pound Weight of Gold", and obliging himself to pay him One thousand more every Year †: So that the Emperor of the East, whatever Recourse he had to the specious Title of Pension, to save his Honour, became Tributary to the Huns (1). The same Author relates, that "Attila, having seen a Picture, in the Palace of Milan, which represented an Emperor on his Throne, with the Scythians, in Chains, at his Feet, ordered it to be taken away, and another put in its Place, wherein he himself was drawn, sitting on a Throne, surrounded with Emperors, laden with Bags of Gold and Silver, which they emptied at his Feet, in a very submissive Posture; in ending to shew thereby, that, as he had obliged Theodosius to pay him Tribute seven or eight Years before, he would force the Emperor Valentinian to do the same, to save his Life, and the miserable Remains of his Empire (2)."

[B] He knew very well how to join Craft with Force. This appears by the Intrigue, which he managed in his Expedition against the Gauls. He endeavoured to divide the Romans, commanded by Attilus, from the Vigobis, under their King Theodoric. For this Purpose he sent Word to the Emperor Valentinian, that he had no Thoughts of committing any Acts of Hostility against the Subjects of the Empire, that he only intended to chastise the Franks, and the Vigobis, whereof the former had been so audacious as to invade the Territories of the Empire, and the latter were only Slaves to Valentinian. At the same time he let Theodoric understand, that he had made the King of the Vandals believe, that he came into Gaul against the Vigobis: but, that it was only a Pretence to deceive the Emperor; that his true Design was to divide the Empire, between the Huns, and the Vigobis, and that he would fall upon Italy, if Theodoric would attack the Gauls (3). Valentinian and Theodoric easily discovered this Snare, and jointly repulsed This crafty Conqueror. "Homo subtilis, antequam bella gereret, arte pugnabat, cetera epistolas blandimentis opplevertat, rudens fidem adhibere mendacio (4). — An artful Man, before he engaged in a War, he fought with the Weapons of Policy, he filled his Letters with Compliments, the better to cover his Dissimulation."

[C] Superstition was one Part of his Politics. He found means to possess the Minds of his Soldiers with a superstitious Belief, that he had something in him divine, on which his good Fortune depended; for, whether he believed it himself, or rather only pretended so, he made them believe, he had found the Scymitar of Mars, who was worshipped by That People, and that the Fates had promised the Empire of the World to Him, who should be possessed of That fatal Sword (5). This is one of the most prevailing Stratagems, that a General of an Army can make use of, to manage, and move, his Soldiers, by the Springs of a mysterious Superstition, which fills them either with Resolution, or Fear, according as the Case requires; with Resolution, when there is occasion for Fighting, and with Fear, when they are inclinable to Mutiny. It is very well for a Soldier to be persuaded, that his General has a Guardian Angel, who delivers him out of all Danger (6). Attila was superstitious himself: "Religionis persuasionibusque de Diis à sua gente susceptis utique ad superstitionem additus (7). —

Additus much to Religion, and a Belief in all the Notions of his Country, concerning the Gods, even to a Degree of Superstition;" for, a little before the Battle of Cbalons, "he consulted his Diviners, who told him, that, in truth, they could discover nothing advantageous to the Huns, from all their Observations; but that the Enemy's General would be killed in the Battle. This was enough to deceive Attila; he imagined, the Death of Attilus was certain, and that, the Obstacle being thus removed, his Way would be open to the Conquest of the Empire. He did not value the Loss of his Soldiers, being fully persuaded, he should always have a sufficient Number left, provided he survived That Great Commander (8)." But he was deceived, for Attilus was not so much as wounded in the Battle."

[D] He was suffocated, by a Bleeding at the Nose, on his Wedding-Night. It is reported, that, after Pope Leo's Prayers had prevailed with him to spare the rest of Italy, he returned into Pannonia, laden with the Spoil, and that, though he had a great Number of Concubines, yet he would take one more, who was the Daughter of the King of the Bastrians. She was a perfect Beauty; and he loved her so passionately, that he would honour her with all the Ceremonies of Marriage, and give her the first Rank among his Wives. He kept his Wedding with great Solemnity; but he drank so much, and afterwards heated himself so excessively, in the Embraces of his new Wife, that, being at last fallen asleep, he was taken with a Bleeding at the Nose, which suffocated him. "Idlico puella ei fuit præ ceteris gratissima, Bastrianorum regis filia mira pulchritudine & incomparabili venustate, cuius amore succensus eam primariæ uxoris loco habere con-suevit. Comparatis pro regis dignitate nuptiis, per omnem intemperantiæ licentiam in conjugal convivio sibi indulgit, Baccho ac Venere corpus ita ea nocte consecit, ut, inter dormiendum supino corpore, profluvio sanguinis è naribus continuo suffocatus interierit (9). — A Virgin, named Idlico, charmed him above all the rest, Daughter of the King of the Bastrians, and an incomparable Beauty, with whom he was so passionately in Love, that he determined to give her the first Place among his Wives. The Nuptials being solemnized suitably to the Royal Dignity, he gave himself up to all possible Intemperances at his Wedding Feast, and so inflamed his Body, that Night, with the Excesses both of Bacchus and Venus, that, as he lay sleeping on his Back, a Bleeding at the Nose suddenly suffocated him." This Story would All be probable enough, if they had not added, that Attila was then One hundred and twenty four Years of Age. It is hard to believe, that, at such an Age, a Man should be capable of so great Excesses with the Fair Sex. A Friesland Historian has alleged this Fact, in favour of the Histories of his own Nation, which make their Kings very long lived. He does not borrow it from Boethius, but from Michael Rithius. "His adde testimonium Michaelis Rithii, qui libro de regibus Hungariæ primo scribit, Attiliam Italianicæ præda optimique spoliis onustam in Pannoniam se recepisse, uxoremque superduxisse regis Bastrianorum nomine Milzoth, est plures alias haberet in matrimonio, eumque cum nuptiales epulas apparatusse celebrasset, liberius solito crapulatum

(8) Corde-moi, p. 220. ex Jorandae.

(9) Boethius, Hist. Hungar. Decad. 1. lib. 7. pag. 75.

by the Sister of Valentinian III. His Life was written, in the XVth Century, by an Italian Refugee in Poland, named Callimachus Experiens. Others have wrote it since [E].

It is said, he was ambitious of abolishing the Roman Language, and establishing his own in its stead [F].

"in cubiculum se recepisse, erumpenteque à naribus
" sanguine in os dormientis ext. actum esse, anno " ætatis suæ 124, regni sui 44. Si tantam ætatem
" in hoc libidinoso tauro Scythico credimus, cur non
" & eandem Fratri accidere potuisset censuamus (10)?

" — To these we may add the Testimony of Michael Rithius, who, in his first Book of the Kings of Hungary, says, that Attila, laden with the Spoils and Wealth of Italy, retired into Pannonia, and married a Wife, named Milnoth, of the Family of the King of the Bactrians, though he had already a great many others; and that, celebrating his Nuptial Entertainment, with the greatest Solemnity, he drank so much harder than usual, that, after he got to bed, a Bleeding at the Nose seized him, as he slept, and suffocated him, in the One hundred and twenty fourth Year of his Age, and the Forty fourth of his Reign. If this lustful Scythian Bull could attain to so great an Age, why might not the same Thing happen in our Country of Friesland? Lastly, some have related, that Attila did not die in this Manner; but that his new Wife, who did not love him, finding him drunk, and fast asleep, like another Holophernes, stabbed him with a Knife (11).

[E] Others have wrote it since. Nicholas Olabus, Archbishop of Strigoniom, wrote the Life of Attila, much more fully than Callimachus Experiens. He composed it, while he was Counsellor to Mary of Austria, Queen of Hungary, Governors of the Netherlands. You read, in it, the Speech, which Attila made to his Army, a little before the Battle of Châlons. That Speech is formed on all the common Places, as appears by the marginal Notes. Sambucus has inserted This Work of Olabus, and That of Callimachus Experiens, in his Edition of Bonfinius. The Sieur Ottobroch (12), who published a Book on the Origin of the Hungarians, makes ample mention of Attila, chiefly taken from the Relation of Prisius, who had accompanied the Ambassadors sent by Theodosius to This King of the Huns, in the Year 448. He draws divers Observations from That Relation, to shew, that Attila was a very honourable Person; He does not forget the Reproaches, which That Prince caused to be made to the Emperor Theodosius, on the Eunuch Chrysaphius's endeavouring to engage Edecom, Attila's Envoy at the Court of Theodosius, to murder his Master. This Envoy pretended to undertake it for a great Sum of Money, which was promised him; and afterwards discovered all to Attila. The Money was brought, and the Plot proved; the King of the Huns complained of it to Theodosius, in a grand Manner, and with an Air suitable enough to the Character given him, of Baseness to his Suppliers, and Steadiness to his Word. "Supplicibus propè ad molliorem faciliis, & qui in fidem semel receptos in perniciem uique suam tueretur (13). — Easy, (13) Callimachus Experiens, almost to a Degree of Weakness, to his Suppliers, and a Protector of those, whose Cause he had once undertaken, even to his own Prejudice."

[F] It is said, he was ambitious of abolishing the Roman Language, and establishing his own in its stead. I have met with this, in a Piece of Alecyonius, where John de Medicis, who was Pope Leo X, is introduced speaking these Words. "In Bibliotheca nostra asservatur Liber incerti auctoris Græcè scriptus de reb. à Gotis in Italiâ gestis; in eo memini me legere Attilam regem post partem victoriam tam studiosum fuisse Gothicæ linguæ propagandæ, ut edicto sanxerit ne quis linguâ Latinâ loqueretur, Magistrosque insuper à sua provinciâ accivisse, qui Italos Gothicam linguam docerent (14). — In our Library is preserved a Book, of an uncertain Author, written in Greek, concerning the Adventures of the Goths in Italy, in which I remember to have read, that King Attila, after his Conquest, was so set upon propagating the Gothic Tongue, that he prohibited the speaking Latin, by an Edit, and sent for Masters from his own Country to teach the Italians this new Language." In the Article of the Emperor CLAUDIUS (15), you will find some Collections, concerning the Zeal of several Princes, for the Language of their Country.

ATTILIUS, a Latin Poet, lived, according to all appearances, in the Beginning of the VIIth Century of Rome. Volcatius Sedigitus has given him the fifth Place among the Ten Comic Poets. Yet he was but a mean Author; his Style was as hard as Iron (a), not only according to Cicero's Taste, but even according to Licinius's, who had nothing near so delicate an Ear as Cicero. The Translation of Sophocles's Electra by Attilius was good for nothing; and yet Cicero judged it worth the Reading (b). Suetonius observes, that some Passages were taken out of it to be sung at Julius Cæsar's Funeral, because they were applicable to the Murderers of That Emperor (c). Casaubon and Torrentius have in vain altered That Passage of Suetonius [A]. They have only given an Example of the Confusion, which Criticism may sometimes occasion.

[A] Casaubon and Torrentius have in vain altered That Passage of Suetonius. Casaubon, having found, Ex Electra Attilii alia ad similem sententiam, in all the Copies of Suetonius, was, nevertheless, of Opinion, that This Attilii ought to be changed for Attili. "Sic emendavimus, says he, corruptam omnium librorum lectionem Attilii. — We have thus corrected the corrupt reading of Attilii in all the Books." Torrentius is not satisfied with putting out Attilius, in favour of Attili; he puts out Electra also, upon Pretence, that Suetonius has mentioned but one Piece of Attilius, intituled, Armorum judicium, like That of Pacuvius, which he had but just quoted. The Reason Torrentius gives for his Emendation, is, that the Manuscripts vary extremely, as to the Name of This Poet, but that the greatest Number of them have Acicius, or Attius. Thus we see the Critics do not agree on the Readings of the Manuscripts, which is a Matter of Fact. Casaubon confesses, he found Attilius every where. Torrentius says, on the contrary, that he met with Attilius but seldom. Peter Crinitus complained, that the Grammarians had put Acicius, instead of Attilius, in That Passage of Suetonius (1). But let us come to something of more Substance. Though Casaubon has not given us his Reason for changing the Text, we need not doubt but it was the same with That of Torrentius. Now Torrentius's Reason is this: He did not remember to have read any thing concerning the Electra of Attilius, nor concerning a Poet, whose Name was Attilius. It is not so surprizing, that a learned Man should suffer himself to be hurried away to the Denial of a Fact, upon so weak a Principle as This, as that two such excellent Critics should be ignorant, that Cicero mentions the Electra of Attilius; that he treats Attilius as a very harsh Poet; that Volcatius Sedigitus speaks handsomely of him, in Avulus Gellius; and that Varro quotes him in his fifth and sixth Books of the Latin Tongue (2). I say nothing of Crinitus, nor of Gregory Gyradius, who have remembered him in the Lives of the Latin Poets, by such Tokens, that the latter has falsely charged Cicero with calling him a Tragic Poet (3). I shall not meddle with the Complaints, which have been made against those, who alter the Reading of Manuscripts, according to the Model of their own Understandings. This would be entering upon That Subject very unseasonably, considering the great Services, which Casaubon has done to the Republic of Learning, by his vast and judicious Erudition. Torrentius's Merit is not of so high a Stamp; but it has its Value, which I would not in the least depreiate.

(10) Bernardi. Furmerius Annal. Plurificor. lib. 3. cap. 9. pag. 243.

(11) Maimb. Hist. de l'Arianisme, Tom. 3. pag. 35. ann. 453, ex Calliodoro.

(12) He is a Protestant Divine, an Hungarian Refugee. His Book, entitled Origines Hungaricæ, was printed at Frankfort, in 8vo, in 1693.

(a) See Remark [I] of the Article ACCIUS, at the beginning.

(1) P. Crin. de Poet. Lat. c. 14.

(13) Callimachus Experiens.

(14) Petrus Alecyonius, in Medicis Legato postestore, fol. h. iij, vers. 60.

(15) Remark [A].

(b) See the same Remark.

(c) Sueton. in Cæsare, cap. 94.

(2) See Ref. n. f. u. s. Var. Lect. lib. 3. cap. 3. p. 379. apud Sueton. Grævi, in Cæsare, cap. 94.

(3) Vossius, de Poet. Lat. pag. 7.

(a) For the 14th of March
1695, page 115, & 164 of the Holland Edition.

AUBERI (N.) Author of an History of Cardinal de Richelieu [A], and of Cardinal Mazarin; see the Journal des Sçavans (a). If some particular Reason does not hinder me, I shall always make use of such a Reference as This, when the Book to be referred to is easily to be met with, and only contains the Life of a Person in a very compendious manner.

[A] AUBERI, Author of an History of Cardinal de Richelieu. It was printed at Paris, in Folio, in the Year 1660, with two other Volumes, containing Letters, Instructions, and Memoirs. Anthony Bertier, Bookseller of Paris, who printed them, had collected the Pieces contained in the two latter, with great Care; but he represented to the Queen Mother, That he durst not publish them, without her Majesty's particular Authority and Protection, because there were several Persons in favour again at Court, whose past Conduct not having been regular, and appearing very much to their Disadvantage, in those Memoirs, would certainly occasion him a great deal of Trouble. Go on, said the Queen to him, finish your Work without Fear, and make Vice so much ashamed, that nothing but Virtue may show its Face in France (1).

(1) LaCaille,
History of Printing, p.
235, 236.

AUBERTIN (EDMUND) in Latin Edmundus Albertinus, Minister of the Church of Paris in the XVIIth Century, was a very learned Man. He was born, at Châlons on Marne, in the Year 1595. He was received into the Ministry at the Synod of Charenton, in the Year 1618, and appointed to the Church of Chartres, from whence he was transferred to Paris in the Year 1631 (a). He wrote, properly speaking, only one Book [A], but acquired more Reputation by That one, than other Learned Men have done by printing an hundred Volumes. The Subject of this Work is the Controversy of the Eucharist. It appeared in the Year 1633, under the Title of the Eucharist of the ancient Church. The Agents of the Clergy of France complained of Mr Aubertin before the King's Council [B], and obtained a Warrant to take him into Custody, for having styled himself Pastor of the Reformed Church of Paris. This Process was dropt; the Time was not yet come to push these sort of Matters too far (b). Whether the merit of the Piece, without the assistance of This Accident, made it sell so well, or that People concluded it must be excellently well done, because the Clergy chose to attack it by way of the Secular Arm; it is certain, the Author had reason to be contented with the Success of his Book [C].

This

(a) Preface of his Book de Eucharistia, written by David Blondel.

(b) I have heard, that,
after this,
for some Expression he used in the Pulpit, the Court suspended him from preaching for two or three Years.

(1) This Book was printed in the Year 1626; the Title of it is, Conformity of the Relief of the Church with That of St Augustin, on the Sacrament of the Eucharist; it contains above 500 Pages
in 8vo.

(2) David.
Blondellus, in Pref. libri Albertini de Eucha-ristia.

[A] He wrote, properly speaking, only one Book. For the Essay, which he published on St Augustin, to show, that the Sentiments of That Father, concerning the Eucharist, were not conformable to Those of the Church of Rome, but to Those of the Protestants (1), ought only to be looked upon as a small Specimen of the Book, which he published in Folio, in the Year 1633. I say this after the learned Blondel. "Augustinus quem oborto collo in partes trahere conabatur Perronius abducenti fortiter extorsit, vindicatumque in Dei castra feliciter reduxit. Hoc in signi virtutis Specimine dato, & tirocinio, ut sic dicam, posito, de patrum universorum causa afferenda serio cogitans, Antiquæ Ecclesiæ Eucharistiam nobis accuratius studio representavit (2). — He rescued St Augustin out of the Hands of Perron, who had forced him into his Service, entirely against his Meaning, and brought him back again to his Post, in the true Cause of God. Having given this glorious Specimen of his Zeal, and, as it were, his first Essay on the Subject he was considering, the Vindication of the Fathers, he has since more fully described the Eucharist of the ancient Church." I never saw the Observations he wrote, out of respect to the Abbot of Marolles, on a Book of Mr de la Millietiere, who pressed him for an Answer to some difficult Questions; but I have been told, it is a Book of Two hundred and Twenty fix Pages, which was printed in the Year 1648, concerning the Controversy of the Eucharist. The Abbot of Marolles mentions it in the List of the Presents he had received from Authors.

[B] The Agents of the Clergy of France complained of him before the King's Council. They represented, in their Petition, that Mr Edmund Aubertin, Minister of the pretended Reformed Religion at Charenton, had caused a Book to be printed, where-in he took upon himself the Title of Pastor of the Reformed Church of Paris, and addressed his Preface to the Faithful of the Reformed Church of the said City of Paris; and that, in the Approbation of This Book, the other Ministers of Charenton filed themselves Pastors of the Churches of the Isle of France, Champagne, and Country of Chartres; and, in their Subscriptions, wrote themselves Maitreizat, and Dre-lincourt, Pastors of the Reformed Churches of Paris, and Daillic (3). Minister of the Holy Gospel of the said Church. The same Agents complained, that, in the Title of the Book, the Cardinals Bellarmine and Du Perron, were called Adversaries of the Church. The King ordered, that Aubertin should be seized, and imprisoned in the Bishop's Fort, if he could be taken; and, if not, that he should be summoned by the public Crier, with a short three Days Warning, that his Effects should be seized, and inventoried, according to the Decree, in order to proceed to his Trial; and that the said Maitreizat, Drelincourt, and Daillic, should be summoned to appear in Person to be heard, and interrogated, on the Facts mentioned in the Petition. His Majesty commanded the Ministers, and others professing the pretended Reformed Religion, to use the Titles given them by the Edicts, and no others, forbidding them to call the Catholics Adversaries of the Church (4). This Arrest was given in the King's Privy Council, the fourteenth of July, 1633 (5). The Author of the History of the Edict of Nantes informs us (6), that this Affair, which made much Noise to little Purpose, was ended almost as soon as it was begun, and produced, for that time, only some verbal Prohibitions (7). He adds, That the Book was the greater in request for it, and that the Success encouraged the Author to revise and enlarge it, and to treat the Subject completely in a large Latin Volume, which did not appear 'till after his Death, and the unjustified Catholic Doctors never durst consult it Paragraph by Paragraph.

[C] He had reason to be contented with the Success of his Book. We have just now shewn the Judgment passed upon it by the Author of the History of the Edict of Nantes. He only followed That of Mr Daillic, the Son, whose Words are these: "The Name of Mr Aubertin is immortal, here below, and will live for ever in That great and incomparable Work of 'The Eucharist', which remains, to this Day, superior to all the Attacks of Those of the other Communion; not one of whom has dared to oppose him fairly, or undertake him Face to Face, if we may so say. Even They, who pass among them for the Pillars and Heads of the Party, could only give him some indirect Blows, according to the Rules of this

(3) They have mistaken the true Names of Maitreizat and Daillic.

(4) See Remark [B] of the Article
BOCHART (MATTH) towards the end.

(5) It is in the Collection of the Arrests obtained for the Affairs of the Clergy during the Agency and the Pursuit of the Sieurs, the Abbot de Paimpont, and the Prior de Moutiers.

(6) Tome 2,
pag. 534.

(7) This ought not to be understood of the Prohibitions contained in the Arrest of the 14th of July, 1633.

"new

This obliged him to revise, enlarge, and complete, it, with so much Application, that he seems to have made it his whole Business and Study. He composed his new Book in Latin, but had not the Satisfaction to see it published. After his Death, it was printed at Deventer, by the care of David Blondel (c). When this Book began to be forgot, there arose a Quarrel between Messieurs de Port-Royal, and Mr Claudé, which made known the Name of Aubertin, and the Character of his Work [D], to a great many Persons, who had never heard of it before, or remembered it no longer. Mr Claudé had a thousand occasions to mention the Merit of this Book [E]. Mr Aubertin died at Paris, the fifth of April 1652, aged Fifty seven Years. He was exposed, in his Agonies, to the Insults of the Curate of St Sulpice [F], and, in spite of his drowiness, which was one of the principal Symptoms of his Distemper, he had his Mind free enough to declare, when That Missionary questioned him, that he died in a full Belief of the Truths he had always professed. He had had much Access to the Duke de Verneuil, who was at that time Abbot of St Germain des Prez. That Prince would often have him at his Table: He found him very entertaining, of an Universal Conversation, well skilled in the Culture of Fruit-Trees, and Flowers, in Music, &c. One of Mr Aubertin's Sons was Minister of Amiens.

(c) In the Year 1654. It is a Folio, with near 1000 Pages in two Columns.

(8) Life of Mr Daillé, pag. 28.

WHAT Judgment the Port Royal makes of Aubertin.

(9) He means the Supposition of Blondel, that Transubstantiation was never thought of till a long time after Berenger.

(10) In the Preface of the Perpetuity defended.

(11) Perpetuity defended, lib. 1, cap. 3, p. 5.

PLAN of Mr Aubertin's Book.

"new Art, which they have invented, and which the Despair of their Cause has made them put in practice, under the specious Name of a Method of Prescription (8)." Mr Daillé means here the Divines of Port Royal, who, in their Book of The Perpetuity of the Faith, instead of opposing Mr Aubertin's whole Work, have only combated his History of The Innovation of Faith: Neither have they done this, by opposing Facts to Facts, but Arguments only. See the second Chapter of the first Book of Mr Claudé's great Answer, wherein he shews, that the Author of The Perpetuity of the Faith attacked Mr Aubertin's Book in an oblique and indirect manner.

[D] A Quarrel between Messieurs de Port Royal, and Mr Claudé, made known the Name of Aubertin, and the Character of his Work [The Author of The Perpetuity of the Faith, out of this great Work of our Minister, attempts only to confute the History of the Innovation. This gave occasion enough to produce on the Stage the Name and Work of Aubertin. See here a Passage in The Perpetuity of Faith. "Aubertin also, perceiving, that there was no way to maintain a Notion so evidently ridiculous (9), thought it necessary to alter The Plan. Observe, then, in what View we ought to consider, whatever this Minister, who unhappily spent his Life in searching, among the Writings of the Ancients, for all possible Helps towards obscuring the Truth, has found most plausible to prove to great a Degeneracy from the ancient Faith, which he is obliged to make out, that he may not himself pass for an Innovator." Mr Arnauld has treated him much more unhandlome, though he confesses (10), that it is greatly to be wished, that some ingenious Person would undertake to confute the Books of the new Ministers, and, amongst others, That of Aubertin, and Those of Mr Daillé. He maintains, "That Aubertin's Work is very contemptible; that This Minister was a Man of low Parts; a mean Critic, without any loveliness of Style, or Judgment; who had read much, because That required only Eyes and Leisure, but who had read without Penetration, or Understanding; who does not distinguish between good and bad Reasons; who exclaims every Moment on the weakest Proofs; who has corrupted common Sense, by the Habit of repeating always the same Absurdities, and who, far from having obtained a fair Victory over the School of Rome, has only discovered the Weakness of the Calvinists (11)."

[E] Mr Claudé had a thousand Occasions to mention the Merit of This Book.] In favour of Those, who, without any other Trouble, than That of reading this Article, desire to know Mr Aubertin's Plan, I shall copy these Words of Mr Claudé. "Mr Aubertin's whole Book is a Body of Controversy on the Subject of the Eucharist, which is divided into three Parts. In the first, he considers it from the Holy Scriptures, and from Human Reasoning. He produces his Passages, and his Arguments, he confutes the Answers, which are made to them; he relates the Passages and Arguments of Those of the Communion of Rome, and answers these, and almost every Thing else, which has hitherto been said considerable in This Controversy. In the second, he examines the Belief of the Church, for the first six Centuries, by an exact Discussion of all the Passages on both sides; and he makes it appear, that Transubstantiation, and the Real Presence, were unknown Doctrines in all That time. In the third, he gives the History of the Introduction of Those Doctrines (12)." Mr Claudé had already said, in his first Answer, that Mr Aubertin, after having examined to the Bottom all the Questions concerning the Eucharist, "By the Holy Scriptures, and by Reasoning, and having obtained a fair Victory over all the Subtilties of the School of Rome, examines very particularly all the Passages of the Fathers, which have hitherto been produced on this Subject by both sides; thus discovering, to all the World, the alteration the Church of Rome has made, by perpetually comparing the ancient and new Doctrines: To which he adds the History of the Rise and Progress of Transubstantiation, and the Real Presence (13)."

[F] He was exposed, in his Agonies, to the Insults of the Curate of St Sulpice.] At nine o' Clock in the Evening, he came to the sick Man's Door with the Bailiff of St Germain's. The Mob, to the Number of Forty, followed him with Arms. He knocked at the Door, and pretended to be the Physician, in order to gain Admission. As soon as the Door was opened, the whole Troop rushed violently into the House, affirming, That the sick Person desired to make his Abjuration before a Priest; but that he was hindered, which was the Reason of their coming to deliver his Conscience from such Slavery. The eldest Son of the agonizing Minister defended the Stairs, as well as he could, but, at last, to hinder the Mob from breaking the open Chamber Door, it was agreed, to let the Curate and Bailiff, only, come into the sick Person's Chamber. The Cries and Shoutings of their Guard, recovered Mr Aubertin a little out of his Lethargic State, so that he declared, very distinctly, his Perseverance in the Reformed Religion. The Curate and Bailiff went out, and had much ado to make the Mob retire; who, in a little Time after, returned again, crying out, That the Curate and Bailiff had been forced out of the House; and would have broke and plundered it, if two Persons of Note had not inter-treated them to desist. "Vicini non latuit ex tremâ hæc calamitas, quæ pii viri spiritibus adhuc spoliis ejusvis illudere parati injuriæ exponebat. Lamentabili ista occasione infeliciter usus præfidi sed tumultuosi zeli vir Joannes Jacobus Ollerius, Basilicæ S. Sulpicii Curatus, & Sodalitatis quæ de propaganda fide dicitur primipulus, &c. (14)."

— The whole Neighbourhood were witnesses of this extreme Violence, which exposed to the insults of his Enemies the yet breathing Remains of the pious Man. He who unhappily made use of this melancholy Occasion, was John James Ollerius, a Man of too hot and tumultuous a Zeal, Curate of the Church of St Sulpice, and Chief of the Society de propaganda Fide, &c. Can any one think of this, without remembering That pathetic Exploitation of Lucretius?

(12) Mr Claudé's Answer to Mr Arnauld's Book, lib. 2, chap. 2, pag. 25.

(13) Claudé's Answer to the second Treatise, chap. 1.

(14) David Blondellus, Prefat. Libri Albertini de Eucharistia.

Tantum Religio potuit suadere malorum ?

What can escape Religion's hot-brained Zeal ?

Trifidus haud illo monstrum nec fœvior ulla
Pestis & ira Deum Stygia sese extulit undis (15).

*Monsters more fierce offended Heaven ne'er sent,
From Hell's Abyss, for human Punishment.*

DRYDEN

It will not suffer Men even to die quietly. After having tormented them all their Life-time, it lays Snares for them, even in the Height of a Distemper, which robs them of the use of their Reason. It takes advantage of those Moments, when the Soul is as sick as the Body, and where

Claudicat ingenium, delirat linguaque mensque (16):

Reason grows weak, delirious Thought and Speech.

(16) Lucret.
l. 3. v. 454

AUBIGNÉ (d')

(1) Mercure Galant, Jan-lant, Jan-
1705, pag.
233, & seq.

(2) Henry
IV.

I have read, in the Mercure Galant, for the Month of January 1705 (1), That John d'Aubigné was Favourite and Chancellor to Jane d'Albret, Queen of Navarre, and Mother of Henry IV, and in great Favour with That Prince; that he died at Geneva, after having left his Prince, on his renouncing his Religion; that he was then in the Posts of Admiral of Brittany, Governour of Oleron, and Maillezais, and Gentleman of the Bed-chamber to the King; that we have now remaining of his, an History of France, much commended, both by his Contemporaries, and Successors, for its Impartiality; that it is esteemed a Master-Piece in History; and that some Authors set as great a Value on it, as on The Celebrated History of Thuanus; that, according to the Remark of Otto, he let drop his Pen, when he came to the Death of That great Prince (2), and could proceed no farther; that This History is in two Volumes in Folio; that it was revised, and carefully corrected, by himself, and printed on very fine Paper, and with a beautiful Letter, at Maillezais, where he was Governour; that his Son Constant, Vice-Roy of the American Islands, whither he went in 1643, was Father to Madam Maintenon, and the Count d'Aubigné lately deceased, Knight of the King's Orders, and Governour of Berry (3). In the Mercure Galant for the Month of February 1705 (4), the Christian Name of d'Aubigné is corrected, from John to Agrippa. His universal History is also said to be in three Volumes, the last being very scarce, and printed at London. His Life is said to be written by himself with great Exactness, and a Manuscript of it to be at Paris, of his own Hand writing, a very curious Piece. The Marquis de Tigny, Brother to the Bishop of Noyon, is Head of the eldest Branch of the Family of Aubigné. He is Father to the Count d'Aubigné, to whom the King has given the Royal Regiment (5).

(3) He only left a Daughter, who is married to the Duke of Noailles.

(4) Mercure Galant, Febr. 1705, pag. 207.

(5) Ibid. Jan. 1705, p. 232, 233.

(a) Sammarthanus, E-log. lib. 2.

(b) Reliquis, præter ea quæ commemoravi Poëmata, filiarum aliquot libris, qui lucem expectare poterant ab ejus Hærede, &c. He left, besides those I have mentioned of, some Poems called Sylvæ, in several Books; which we might have expected to have seen published by his Heir, &c. Sammarthanus, Elog. lib. 2.

AUDEBERT (GERMAIN), President in the Election, or Court, of Affessors of Subsidies in Orleans, was a Man of much Merit, and a good Latin Poet, in the XVIIth Century. He was Alicius's Disciple at Bolonia for some Years, and returned from Italy so well pleased with the Country, and the People he there conversed with, that he employed his whole skill in Poetry in the Description of Rome, of Venice, and Naples (a). These three Poems have been inserted in the first Volume of the Delicia Poëtarum Gallorum of France. We shall see, below, in what manner the Venicians rewarded his Description of their City. He composed other Poems, which would very probably have been published, if his Son, who was Counsellor in the Parliament of Britany, had survived him long enough (b). Scævola Sammarthanus has composed the Elogium of our Audebert with his usual Eloquence, He gives him the most essential Qualities of a good Man. Mr Moreri has faithfully reported the substance of This Elogy. I question not but he was ignorant of the advantageous Consequences, which the Protestants have drawn from That Chapter of Scævola Sammarthanus, to justify one of their most famous Ministers from an horrid Accusation. We can never sufficiently deplore Mens Malice or Ignorance, when we remember, that Theodorus Beza was accused of an abominable Crime, on so frivolous a ground as his Epigram, de sua in Candidam & Audebertum benevolentia. Mr Maimbourg renewed This Accusation in his History of Calvinism. He is very fully refuted by an examination of the Piece it self, without forgetting to strengthen the Apology from the great Merit of Audebert (c). Theodorus Beza had already made use of This Argument [A]. Mr Graverol, the Minister, had a design of publishing the Epitaphs of This illustrious Magistrate, in a Latin Dissertation, which he published about That time (d); but received them too late. He has communicated them to me, and this is a very convenient opportunity to publish them [B]. The History of our Audebert may be seen there, such

(c) Jurieu's Apology for the Reformed, Part 1, pag. 141, & seq.

(d) De Juvénillibus Theod. Beze Poëmatis, Amst. 1683, in 8vo.

[A] His great Merit was made use of in Justification of Beza — who had already made use of This Argument.] It is in his second Apology against Claude de Saintes. He says, that, when he composed the Epigram, Audebert was then Advocate in the Parliament of Paris. This is his Latin; "Quid" quum eo usque proverbis ut meum cum honestissi-
" mo viro, & jam tum in Senatu Parisiensi Advoca-
" to, quem vocant, nunc vero in civitate Aureli-
" ensi magnâ cum dignitate versanti, amicitiam &
" familiaritatem summam ad nefarium & execrandum
" illud scelus transferas, quod à nobis ne nominari
" quidem sine horrore potest, à vobis autem in vestris
" illis gurgustiolis, ut omnes norunt, pro ludo &
" joco ducitur, quis te ipsum vir honestus non ex-
" cretur (1)? — What, when you are transported " to such a Pitch, as even to confute my most intimate " Friendship and Familiarity, with a Man of the high" est Honour, at that time Advocate, as the Title is,
" in the Parliament of Paris, and now in great Dig" nity at Orleans, into so wicked and abominable a " Crime, as I cannot so much as mention without " Horror, though it serves you in your Cells for

" Jest and Sport, must you not be detested by all
" good Men?"

[B] This is a very convenient Opportunity to publish the Epitaphs of Audebert.] Not to let it slip therefore, I shall insert here, word for word, what the Person above mentioned has wrote, and sent me.

" I beg your favourable Acceptance of the true
" Copy I send you, of the Epitaphs of *Germain Au-
" debert*, and of his Son. If I had received them
" at the time they were promised me, I would have " added them to the small Latin Apology of *Theo-
" dorus Beza*, which a special Occasion obliged me " to publish. Such an authentic Piece alone seems " to me capable of putting an end to the abominable
" Calumny, which has hitherto been charged on the " Memory of That excellent and religious Man,
" whatever evasion may be invented to elude it's " Force, and you will do a signal Piece of Service " to Truth, by presenting the Public with This new " Vindication of him.

" Here lies Messire Germain Audebert, Native of " This City of Orleans, Prince of the Poets of his " Time, who, for his Virtue only, was ennobled
" with

(1) Beza O-
p. 100,
Tom. 1, pag.
100.

such as an Historical Dictionary ought to give it. The Sieur Konig has split this Author into Two [C]. Sammarthanus is not the only Person, who has wrote This great Man's Elogy [D].

"with all his Posterity, by the Most Christian King of France and Poland, Henry III. and made a Knight. And, to crown his Honours, his Majesty gave him two Golden Flowers-de-luces, to be born on a Chief in his Coat of Arms, for their additional Ornament. He was also made a Knight by our Holy Father Pope Gregory XIII. and by the Doge and Republic of Venice; the latter also sent him into France, by their Ambassador, the Order of St Mark. And, notwithstanding all these great Honours, he continued still to act as an Assessor in That Jurisdiction for the space of fifty Years; so great a Lover was he of his Country. In consideration of which, his said Majesty, having created and appointed a President, and a Lieutenant, in each Court of Subsidies in France, he exempted the said Messire Germain Audebert, and would have him prebide and precede both the one and the other. He wrote three Books of the City of Venice, one of Rome, one of Naples, and two of Sylva: He died in the Year 1598, the Twenty fourth of December, aged about eighty Years.

"And, under the same Marble, lies Messire Nicholas Audebert, one of the King's Counsellors in his Court of Parliament of Britany, Son of the said Messire Germain Audebert, a great Imitator of his Father's Virtues, who died five Days after his Father, in the Forty second Year of his Age. May their Souls rest among the Blessed.

Audebertorum, Germani Patris, & Nicolai filii Tumulus.

Audebertorum si quis depingere laudes
Cogitat, ille sibi nihilo plus explicet, ac si
Insane sapiens solum illustrare laboret.
Parcendum verbis igitur, vanoque labori.
Sit dixisse satis, situs hic jacit Audebertus,
Et pater, & gnatus patris cito fata secutus.
Nominat hæc quisquis sincerâ nomina linguâ
Virtutum & laudum gazas simul eruit omnes:
Quas qui nescierit communis luminis expers
Credatur survis semper vixisse sub antris.

The Tomb of the Audeberts, Germain the Father, and Nicholas the Son.

To gild with Verse the Audeberts Renown,
You might illuminate the Sun at soon.
Words are but lost on such transcendent Fame,
Tis all summ'd up in one great Word, their Name.
Who this repeat, their Virtues amply praise:
Ignorance of This Ignorance itself betrays.
The Audeberts lie here, Father and Son, Scarce parted in their Deaths, and in their Tomb but One.

"These three Epitaphs are found written in Letters of Gold, on a Black Marble, affixed to the Wall of the Gallery, in the Church-yard of the Church of the Holy Cross of Orleans, about sixty Paces in the Gallery, as you enter on the Left-Hand. They have been copied word for word from the Original, by a Person to be depended on."

Here ends the Copy of Mr Graverol's Letter. We may conclude, from what is said of the Office of Audebert, in the first of these Epitaphs, that Mr Jurieu is mistaken, when he says, that Audebert died, after having gone through all the great Offices of the long Robe (2). Sammarthanus might have saved him from this Slip; for he expressly observes, that Audebert was so modest, that he contented himself with an Office very much below his Merit. "Nec fisci quidquam, says he (3), de solitâ modestiâ detraxit, contentus ea quam apud suos jamdudum exercebat vectigalium indictionumque præfecturâ, humiliter fortasse illâ & obscurâ, si hominis dignitatem respicias, sed quam eo tantum animo susceperat, ne nullam Reipublicæ partem attigisse, sibi quæ vixisset diceretur. — Nor did he abate any thing of his usual Modesty; for he contented himself to continue the Office, he had a long Time before enjoyed, of President in the Court of Assizes of Taxes and Subsidies; mean, indeed, and obscure with regard to his Dignity, but which he chose to discharge, that he might not be said to throw up all concern for the Public Service, and to live for himself only."

[C] Konig has split this Author into Two.] He gives us one Germanus Audebertus, and one Aurelius Audebertus. For the first he refers us to the Hundred and ninety first Page of Sammarthanus's Elogies; and he says of the second, that he composed three Poems in the Year 1603. Scriptis Venetias, Romam, Partbenopen, carmine, An. 1603. — On Venice, Rome, and Naples. This Date is a new Mistake; since Audebert died in the Year 1598. It is true, Those three Poems were printed at Hanau in 1603; but This was not the first Edition. We may see, by this, that it is not so easy to compose a Dictionary of Authors, as some may think. They, who are ignorant of the Chronology of Editions, and the Difference of Christian Names, or Those of the Country, are very liable to Mistakes. Germanus is Audebert's Christian Name, and Aurelius is his Name from his Country. What is most to be admired is, that Mr Konig refers us to an Author, whom he had not seen himself: For, if he had taken the Pains to cast his Eye on the place of Sammarthanus, which he quotes, he would there have seen, that it was Germanus Audebertus, who composed the three Poems on Venice, Rome, and Naples: Venetias, & Romam, & Partbenopen — ea carminis majestate descripsit — He described the Cities of Venice, Rome, and Naples, — in such beautiful Poetry. — When we send a Reader to consult an Author, it is but reasonable to set the Example, and consult him first ourselves.

[D] Sammarthanus is not the only Person, who has wrote Audebert's Elogy.] An Advocate of the Council, who called himself in Latin Radolphus Botereus, has praised Audebert magnificently, in his History of France (4). He does not forget the Honours, which the Pope, and the Republic of Venice, paid him; but, whereas the Epitaph ascribes the Honour Audebert, received from the Court of Rome, to Gregory XIII. He attributes it to Gregory XIV. He mentions the Place, where the Ambassador of Venice conferred on him the Knighthood of St Mark, and before what concourse of People. "Gregorius XIV, ac Veneti illum civitatis jure & equestris ordinis dignitate donarunt: effusus Veneti, qui per Oratorem suum in suburbano Tybure Gentiliaco, assidente spectaculo & convivio longa corona hominum literatissimorum, Audebertum torque aureo Divi Marci insigniverunt. — Gregory XIV, and the Venetians, presented him respectfully with the Privileges of their City, and the Order of Knighthood. But the Venetians more remarkably, who, by their Ambassador at Gentilly near Paris, at a public Feast, and before a large Assembly of learned Men, invested Audebert with the golden Collar of the Order of St Mark."

(2) Jurieu's Apology for the Reformed, Part 1, pag. 145.

(3) Sammarthan in Elégies.

(4) Botereus, lib. 5, pag. 467, & seq. ad Ann. 1598.

AUDIGUIER (N. d') Author of several Books [A], much read, when first published, but now not taken notice of, flourished in the beginning of the Reign of Lewis

[A] Author of several Books.] He published The true and ancient Usage of Duels, which was printed at Paris, by Peter Billain, in 1617. It is a Book of Five hundred thirty two Pages, in 8vo, and de-
VOL. I. No. XXVII.

servés a Place in Libraries. He published also some French Poetry, The Amours of Lylander and Calista, Those of Aristander, and Cleonicé, Flavia, Minerva, &c. These were Romances, which had a great run

(a) It is the Title of a Romance, the Author of which calls himself Molliere.

(b) Sorel's Remarks on the Berger Extravagant, (Extravagant) Shepherds, Book 23, pag. 413, Edit. of Rouen, by Osmont, in 1646, in a Fols 3vo.

(c) Ibid. pag. 486.

(d) See the Christian Spectator of Balzac, Discours 17, pag. 263.

(1) Note, that Sorel has criticised the two first, in his Remarks on the Berger Extravagant, chiefly in the 13th Book of the Remarks.

(2) Sorel, Bibl. Franç. pag. 261.

(a) They were the Sons of Albert the Wise, Duke of Bavaria.

(1) Voûlus de Hist. Lat. pag. 635.

(2) These two Names do not seem to answer each other. Therefore, perhaps, in one of them some Error of the Press.

(3) Zieglerus in Vita Joannis Aventini.

(4) Bullart, Académie des Sciences, Tom. 1. p. 147.

Lewis XIII. The Sieur Sorel, having said, that the Author of Polyena (a) might one Day produce something better, unless he had AUDIGUIER's ill Fortune, adds, that they both of them fell by the Hands of Those they took to be their Friends (b). "I believe, says he, elsewhere (c), Audiguier was a Man of Wit; but he was more of the Soldier, than the Scholar, as appears in all the Dedications of his Books, where he is almost always speaking in a military way: They say also, that, to express his negligent Air in writing, he one Day said, by way of Bravado (d), that he made his Pen with his Sword. Some say he received this Repartee, that then it was no wonder he wrote so ill; but This is too satirical. Undoubtedly This Boast has a great deal of Beauty, and deserves a Place amongst the French Apophthegms." D'Audiguier had a Nephew, who passed for the Author of the Translation of Siratonis, an Italian Romance; but it was believed, that Malleville was the real Author, and had made him a Present of it, as being his particular Friend (e). There was one d'AUDIGUIER, an Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, who published some Pleadings (f). I do not know, whether he was the same with the Nephew, who was Malleville's Friend; but I am certain, he lived in the XVIIth Century (g); and I believe This Nephew was the Author called Audiguier, junior, and who published, among other Works, Eromené. From a Passage, cited below, I am induced to believe, that our d'Audiguier was killed in the Year 1630 [B].

(e) Peliffon, Histoire de l'Académie Franç. pag. 292.

(f) Mallet, Mémoires, p. 41.

(g) Mallet, Dénombrement des Auteurs, pag. 40.

run (1). He translated into French the Spanish Novels of Michael Cervantes. Sorel, in a Work published a long time after his Berger Extravagant, passes this Judgment on our Author. "I do not think, says he, that we ought absolutely to despise the Sieur d'Audiguier, Author of the Adventures of Lyfander and Calista. Though he had not much Learning, he wrote in very sprightly and clear Style for That Time, as we see in several Romances, and some Letters, and Triflections, which he was the Author of. His first Work, which he called the Soldier's Philosophy, was a little too much upon the Galconade; but he improved himself so much by translating Cervantes's Novels, and a Book of Rodriguez, of Christian Perfection, that we may allow him to be one of our best Translators. His last Work, called The Amours of Aristander and Cleonice, was none of the worst of his Time (2)."

[B] From a Passage — I am induced to believe, our d'Audiguier was killed in the Year 1630. [This Passage is taken from one of Balzac's Letters, dated the twentieth of August 1630. D'Audiguier is not named in it, there being nothing but Asterisks, instead of the Person's Name; but, however, I make no doubt but it was The Author, whose Article I have here given. I take his Character to be very justly drawn in the following Words (3). "Yet it is better to be innocently merry in the Hotel de Venice, than to lose one's Life in the Temple Morfesi, as poor * * did. I lament him, on account of his Misfortunes, and manner of Death, and am sorry he had not time to think of his Salvation, or to ask Pardon for his Sins. But to imagine, that one of the great Lights of France is extinguished, or that we have lost one of our most considerable Men, I knew him too well to conceive so high an Opinion of him. He was truly a Man of Spirit, and had some Flights of Fancy, that would have passed off agreeably enough, if they had not been printed. But he is not to be mentioned among our Modern Authors, or in a Collection of the Poetry of these Times. However, he set no Value at all on his Courage, and other military Virtues, but piqued himself entirely on his Abilities in speaking and writing. He had so great a Conceit of his Merit this way, that, for my endeavouring, one Day, to cure him of this troublesome Symptom, he never forgave me to the Day of his Death."

(3) Balzac's Letters, Book 8, Lett. 42. p. 38, 388, Tom. 1. of Balzac's Works, Edit. of Paris by Joly, 1665, in 2 Vols 8vo.

AVENTINE (JOHN), famous for his Annals of Bavaria, flourished in the XVIth Century [A]. He was of mean Birth, the Son of an Inn-keeper of Abenpurg in Bavaria [B]. He studied first at Ingolstadt, and afterwards in the University of Paris, under Faber Stapulensis and under Josse Clifton. Being returned into Germany, in the Year 1503, he stayed some time at Vienna, where he taught, in his Chamber, Eloquence and Poetry. He went from thence into Poland, in the Year 1507, where he publicly taught the Greek Grammar at Cracow: He returned into Germany, and passed some time at Ratisbon, from whence he went to Ingolstadt, in the Year 1509, where he explained some Books of Cicero. As he was esteemed a very ingenious Man, he was sent for to Munich, in the Year 1512, to be Preceptor to Prince Lewis and Prince Ernest (a). He travelled with the latter of these two Princes (b). After this, he undertook to compose the Annals of Bavaria [C], and

(b) See the History of Bavaria, of the Sieur le Blanc, Tom. 3, pag. 414, 415.

[A] He flourished in the XVIth Century. He was born in the Year 1466, and died in 1534. Whence Vossius very justly infers, that Gnebrard is mistaken, in making this Historian flourish in the Year 1366 (1). Father Gaultier followed Gnebrard's Fault. In the Epitome of Gesner's Bibliotheca, the Death of Aventine is falsely placed in the Year 1529.

[B] He was of mean Birth, the Son of an Inn-keeper of Abenpurg in Bavaria. Jerom Zieglerus says, That this Man's Name was John Thurmair, and that from thence it comes, that Leonard of Eck, in an Epigram, gives the Name of Thurmairus (2) to John Aventine (3). He adds, That the Name of the Annalist of Bavaria was Aventinus, because the ancient Name of Abenpurg was Aventinium. The Emperor Antoninus, continues he, calls it in his Itinerary Abusina. Mr Bullart did not well understand This: The City of Abenpurg, says he (4), is sufficiently celebrated in the Roman History, but principally by the Emperor Antoninus, who, in his Itinerary, calls it Aventinium. This Author would find it very difficult to prove, that This City was sufficiently famous in the Roman History. The learned Lambecius believed it would be found to have had no other Name than That of Abusina, which is given it in the Itinerary of Antoninus; and for this reason blames the Author of the Annals, for not having called himself Abusinensis. Patria ejus fuit Abusina, unde salvò, cum se nominare debuisset Abusinensem, cognomine ulius est Aventini (5). But would That Name have sounded as agreeably as That of one of the Hills of Rome?

[C] He undertook to compose the Annals of Bavaria. He had a Pension for it, and began it a little before the Death of the Emperor Maximilian. The Work consists of seven Books, and extends to the Year 1533. Vossius observes all these Things: "Annales Bojorum libris 7 reliquit — Terminatur ejus historia anno 1533. Extremis Maximiliani temporibus jam cœperat historiam suam scribere auspiciis & liberalitate fructus Guljelmi & Ludovici, Bavarie ducum,

(c) Lambec. Biblioth. Cæs. lib. 2. cap. 6. pag. 41, in Not. Margin. n. 2, apud Magistrum Eponymol. pag. 91.

was encouraged to it by the Assurances, the Dukes of That Name gave him, of bearing all his Charges. He omitted nothing that might answer the Expectation of his Masters; he consulted the Records of Germany as carefully as possible, and applied himself wholly to That Work. He did not lose his labour; for he acquired by it a great Reputation. In the Year 1529, he received an Affront, which troubled him all the rest of his Life. He was taken out of his Sister's House, at Abensperg, by Force, and imprisoned. No One ever knew the true Reason of This Violence, which would have been carried yet farther, if the Duke of Bavaria had not taken this learned Person under his Protection. The invincible Melancholy, which possessed Aventine ever after This Affront, was so far from making him resolve to continue the single Life he had lead to the Sixty fourth Year of his Age, that it rather, perhaps, put him upon Thoughts of Marriage. This new Inclination was not so strong, but it gave him Time to consult the Holy Scriptures, and his Friends, what was best for him to do. He met with nothing but Counsels full of Uncertainty [D]; and therefore found it necessary to resolve this Question for himself, which he accordingly did in favour of Marriage [E]. There remained nothing more to do, but to seek out a Match, which he was so imprudent as to leave to a crafty old Woman, who deceived him basely [F]; for she brought him a Woman of the Country of Suabia, who had three great Imperfections; for she was poor, ugly, and peevish; which gave him an opportunity of making many Experiments [G]. After his marriage, he hired a House

at

(6) Vossius, de Hist. Lat. pag. 655.

" ducum, qui patri suo Alberto successerunt anno 1508 (6). — He left the Annals of the Bavarians in seven Books — His History ends at the Year 1533. He began it about the latter End of the Reign of Maximilian, under the Auspices, and Generosity, of William and Lewis, Dukes of Bavaria, who succeeded their Father Albert in 1508." These Annals did not appear before the Year 1554. They were published by Jerom Zieglerus, Professor of Poetry in the University of Ingolstadt: But, as he consulates himself in the Preface, he left out the Invectives relating to the Clergy, and several Stories not at all material to the History of Bavaria. " Multa sine dubio emendasset (Aventinus), pleraque forsitan mutasset etiam, si per fata licuisset — Invectivas quoddam contra Ecclesiasticas personas, item fabulosas narrationes nihil quidquam ad historiam facientes non fraude ledi judicio omisimus (7). — Many Things, without doubt, Aventine himself would have corrected, and many, perhaps, entirely changed, had Fate given him Leave — Some Reflexions upon Ecclesiastical Persons, and also fabulous Relations, not at all material to the History, I have taken the Liberty, on mature Deliberation, without the least ill design, to omit." The Precaution of Zieglerus, and his Sincerity in owning the Mutilations, did not tally together; for this Confession excited the Curiosity of the Protestants, and put them upon searching for what had been suppressed; and they sought so diligently for a Manuscript of These undismembered Annals, that at last they found it. It was published at Bajl, in the Year 1580, by the Care of Nicolas Cifnerus. The Title of This Edition is Johannis Aventini annalium Bojorum libri vii. ex authenticis manuscriptis codicibus recogniti, restituti, aucti diligentia Nicolai Cifneri. Cifnerus could not forbear shewing his Anger at the Edition of Cifnerus. See what he says: Aventine is an Author not to be credited in these Ecclesiastical Matters, having no other aim in his Annals, than to dishonour the Clergy; and he is particularly exceptionable in the History of Gregory VII. — The Incontinency of his Pen, in these Matters, was the Cause that Zieglerus, who first published him, retrenched many of his lying Narratives, and Invectives against the Clergy, in that Impression; but the Protestants, who turn their Ears from the Truth, to listen to Fables, not being able to bear This Correction, have published These Annals with all their Filth (8).

(7) Zieglerus in Pref. Cifnerus, in his Preface, that if Aventine had lived, he would not have altered what Zieglerus pretends he would have altered.

(8) Coëteteau's Answer to the Mystery of Iniquity of the State du Fleiss, pag. 63.

[L] On the Subject of his Marriage, he met with nothing but Counsels full of Uncertainty. This is what Mr Bullart relates concerning the Answers he received from Books. " Socrates left him in Suspence, by his Advice formerly given to a young Man, under the same Irresolution. Marry, or not marry, you will be sure to repent either of the one or the other. He would have needed no other Council, if he had taken That of Diogenes, who told young Persons, that it was too soon to marry; and old ones, that it was too late. Euripides loathed his Inclination, by remarking, That a Wife is a great Comfort to her Husband, in Sickness and Adversity, but discouraged him with several other Sentences, he has elsewhere pronounced, against That Sex (9)." This is a meer Romance, and only begging an Opportunity to shew a little Common-place Reading; for the Life of Aventine says expressly, that he examined only some Passages of Scripture, for and against Matrimony, with two of his Friends; Sapius multos locos ex sacris literis suadentes & dissuadentes matrimonium protulit.

(9) Bullart, Acad. mic. des Sciences, pag. 148.

[E] He concluded for Marriage. Let us hear the same Mr Bullart once more. " Aventine, being tired with consulting both the Dead and the Living, and hoping to find a Wife to his Wishes, cried out on a sudden; I am old, and have need of a Companion to assist and take care of me in the Infirmary of my Age." So says Zieglerus; Senectutem suam omnino considerans, tandem prorumpens in hæc verba dixit, " senex sum, mihi ministrari opus est." His Conclusion was according to the Rule of Logic, Conclusio sequitur debiliorem partem. — The Conclusion follows: the weaker Part. On one side, his Books and his Friends advised him to deliberate all his Life-time; on the other, his Infirmary counselled him to marry. By his Conclusion he took the weaker Side. But, had he not two Children in few Years, and This in spite of the Ugliness, and Brawls, of his Devil of a Wife, which could be no Provocatives That way? He was wrong, then, to say, he wanted a Wife for the Infirmary of his Age: He had much more need of one for the Remains of his Youth.

[F] Who deceived him basely. His Historian has not done him Justice here; for see how he expresses himself: " Duxit Suevam, morosam mulierem, illepidam, & omnino pauperem, deceptus ab antiqua quadam, quæ ei illam ut famulum saltem adduxerat. — He married a Suabian, ill natured, disagreeable, and poor, a certain old Woman having deceived him, by bringing her to him, at least, for a Servant." The old Woman did not bring him this Suabian for a Wife, but only for a Servant. Wherein, then, did the deceive him? Zieglerus ought to have told us; for, if we take his Account right, the old Woman is very excusable, and the old Man not to blame. It is very likely, that, being resolved to marry, and having lost too much Time already, considering his Age, he took the first Female that came to hand, which was his own Servant; and so became a fit Subject to increase the List of the Colletts, and of all such as have married their Servants (10).

(10) See the Menagiana, pag. 27, and the Remark [E. of the Article] BRISEIS.

[G] His Wife gave him an Opportunity of making many Experiments. " Having surmounted all Obstacles, and decided all Doubts, by his Marriage, he had nothing more to do, but to meditate on his new State of Life, and to consider which was the easier Task, to bear with the Expence of a Wife that is poor, or with the Pride of one that is rich; to be secure in an ugly one, that is a Temptation to no body, or to have the Trouble of guarding a handsome one, that is a Temptation to every Body. As his Wife was, at least, as bad as Socrates's Xantippe, That great Philosopher's Example might also give him Consolation at Ratisbon, and afterwards was called to Ingolstadt, in 1533, to be Preceptor to the Son of one of the Duke of Bavaria's Counsellors (c). He was desirous of bringing his Wife thither, and for that purpose made a Journey to Ratisbon in the Christmas Holidays, where he arrived very ill of a Distemper, which had seized him on the Road by the way, of which he died the Ninth of January 1534, aged Sixty eight Years. He left but one Daughter, who was not above two Months old (d). He was buried there in the Church of St Hemeran, where his Epitaph gives him the Encomium of a good Catholic (e). But the Jesuits have discovered, by their Inquiries, that, under the Mask, he was a good Lutheran [H]. It is by This, that Those of the Church of Rome endeavour to weaken the force of his Evidence against the Conduct of the Popes, and the bad Lives of the Priests; for the Protestants have quoted Aventine's Annals

" tion

(c) Leonhardus ab Eck.

(d) He had buried a Son.

(e) Taken from his Life, written by Jerom Zieglerus. It is prefixed to his Annals.

(11) Bulhart, Acad. des Sciences, pag. 148.

(12) Conringius, de Rebuspubl. a. p. Magnum, Eponymol. Critic. pag. 90.

(13) Rara est alicuius concordia fortunae, Atque pudicitiae. . . . So seldom Chastity and Chastity agree. Juv. Sat. 10. ver. 207. Lis est cum forma magna pudicitia. . . . Beauty and Modesty are still at strife. Ovid. Ep. 16. v. 238.

(14) Fastus inest pulchris, inquit, turpe laborum formae. . . . Beauty is attended by its Handmaid, Pride. Ovid. Fast. lib. 1. v. 419.

(15) Ita ille solent quæ viros laudare vixi sibi potulant dote trete feroce. . . . The Hughtings of large Dowries demands not too great a Subjection from the Husband. Plaut. in Menech. Act. 3. Sc. 2, ver. 16. See the Electra of Philip Pareus, at the Word Conjugium.

(16) Magna Periculo custoditur quod multis placet. . . . It is very dangerous keeping what pleases every Body. Publus Synta.

"tion (11)." Certainly This learned German was extremely disappointed; he thought to get into a safe Harbour, and to shelter himself from a thousand Inconveniences, but exposed himself to a continual Storm, even tho' his Wife had been rich and handsome; but he had nothing for her Portion, but Ugliness and a quarrelsome Disposition. "Aventinus vir doctus, magni judicii integritatisque, sed fortuna admodum tenui, quam corruptit ulterius ducta uxore rixosa & malorum morum, ut cum duobus malis pauperate & uxore mala ipsi fuerit conficiendum (12). — "Aventine was a learned Man, of great Judgment and Integrity, but little Fortune, which was made yet less by a quarrelsome, cross-grained Wife; so that he had two great Evils to contend with, Poverty, and a scolding Wife."

We shall, perhaps, do him Justice, if we suppose, that he did not marry this Wife without having seriously considered all Inconveniences. She could not deceive him as to her Ugliness, so long as he had Eyes. She was brought to him as a Servant, so that he could not think her rich. These two Defects, therefore, he could be no Stranger to, her want of Beauty and Fortune. Nor ought this Knowledge to condemn him for Imprudence; for it might promise to exempt him from a thousand Inconveniences. As he had read much, he knew the general Maxims of the Ancients, on the Discord between Beauty and Chastity (13), and on the Pride, which attends Beauties (14), but perfectly possesses Fortunes (15). These Maxims are taught in the College, and there are a thousand occasions to apply them every Day; which makes them remain strongly imprinted in the Memory, and This increases the Fear of experiencing the Truth of them, when once we come to run the hazard of them. It is very probable, then, that Aventine considered, that by marrying a handsome young Wife, he should expose his Forehead to a shameful, and very uneasy Disgrace. Without doubt he knew, that Beauty did not exclude a very sincere Resolution of Chastity; but, on the other Side, he imagined, that it makes it very difficult to execute This Resolution. The Couplings, which are almost unavoidable in such a Case, are of wonderful Force, to conquer the strongest of these Resolutions. When he considered his Age, he could not but be still more alarmed: His Sixty fourth Year added to his Fears; and, perhaps, he might reflect with himself; If these things happen where the Wood is yet green, what can be hoped for, where it is quite dry? A young Man is not exempt from This Misfortune, and how should I avoid it, who am old? And yet, as natural as it is to fear these real Evils, in the Case of an old Husband, who has a handsome young Wife; it is much easier to avoid These, than imaginary ones. I mean, that such a Husband has more reason to fear the Torments of his own Jealousy, than the Disloyalty of his Wife. It happens oftener, that a Man is jealous of his Wife, without a Cause, than that she is dishonest, without his suspecting it. There is, then, some likelihood, that Aventine was more distrustful of himself, than of a handsome Wife, and that he argued with himself thus: I grant he may be really chaste; but am I sure I shall not be so weak as to suspect her, when I perceive how agreeable she is to my Friends and Neighbours, and Thy to her (16). Let my Jealousy be as ill grounded as one would wish, it's Stings and its Torment will still be the same. The safest Way is to run no Hazard, but marry This Servant, whose Homeliness will make me easy; for

The Nymph may be chaste, that never was try'd.

If she should be ill inclined, where could she find Gallants? Besides, as she is poor, I shall have no reason to fear she will be imperious: This will preserve my Authority, and secure me from Noise and Contradiction. Do not I know what the ancient Poets have said (17)? If we suppose he considered the Matter thus, we shall find him more unfortunate, than imprudent: For, in short, the Reasons, which determined his Choice, are specious and plausible; but we must, at the same time, suppose, that the third Defect was not known to him, and that his Servant had the Wit to hide her peevish, muttering, morose, scolding Humour. She took care not to discover it; for the quickly perceived, that her Master was resolved to marry at any rate, and, without doubt, it was not long before he gave her some Intimations, that he would not look for a Wife out of his own House. As it is wrong to judge by the Event, let us not condemn him for Imprudence, because his Marriage was unhappy. The wisest are caught in it Cato was deceived by his own Arguments, in a like Case (18). In a Word, two things must be known, before we can say, that Aventine was imprudent: I. That he did not weigh the Reasons before mentioned, on both sides. II. That, by marrying a young, rich, and beautiful Wife, he would not have met with so many Vexations, as by marrying his Servant. These are the two Sources of the rash Judgments; Persons are condemned, without knowing either the secret Motives, which, upon due Deliberation, determined them, or what would have happened if they had made a contrary Choice.

[H] The Jesuits have discovered, that, under the Mask, he was a good Lutheran. I say under the Merry of his Mask, for, as he was buried in a Catholic Church, with the usual Ceremonies, and that the Character of Veræ Religionis amator,—A Lover of the true Religion, is inserted in his Epitaph, we cannot suppose, that he had ever declared openly for the Protestants, no not PORCIUS at the Point of Death, in That decisive Moment, which takes away all Pretences for Dissembling. It is true, also, that the Style of his History is altogether Roman Catholic, if Those Places be excepted, where he speaks so freely against the Tyranny of the Popes, and the Immorality of the Clergy (19). It ought not to be thought strange, then, that Mr Du Pleffis objects him to Those of the Church of Rome, as an Evidence, who was of their own Religion. Mr Du Pleffis was ignorant of the secret Memoirs, which Father Gretzer had published. See here a Passage of That Jesuit: "Addit Pleffius Invektive Aventinianæ hanc clausulam; hæc quidem licet professio Romanus, plura forte, si licuisset, dicturus. Professione Romanus, hoc est Catholicus, non fuit Aventinus, sed hæreticus; cujus criminis ut alia probamenta desunt, id tamen satis superque liquerit ex Epistola Melancthonis ad Aventinum quam ex ipso Autographo recitavi, lib. 2. contra Calvinianum replicatorem, cap. 19. (20) — Pleffis, to Aventine's Invektive, subjects This Clause; He has said thus much, notwithstanding he was of the Romish Persuasion, and probably would have said much more, if he durst. Aventine was not of the Romish, i. e. Catholic, Persuasion, but an Heretic; this Crime might be proved upon him, if there were no other Evidence of it, from an Epistle of Melancthon to Aventine, which I have given from the Original itself, lib. 2, against the Calvinistic Author of the Reply, chap. 19." Coiffeteau did not know This Circumstance; nevertheless he positively asserts, that Aventine was an Heretic: He says (21), "As for Du Pleffis

(17) One of them has said, Sponsum sine dote non habere loquendi libertatem. — A Wife, without a Portion, has not the Liberty of Speech.

And Plautus says, in Aulus. As. 3. Sc. 5, ver. 60. Quæ indotata est ea in potestate est viri, Doteque maculant de malo & damno viros. . . .

She that has no Portion is at the Mercy of her Husband; but he, that marries a Fortune, must be at the Mercy of his Wife.

(18) See Remark [I], of the Article had ever declared openly for the Protestants, no not PORCIUS (MARCUUS).

(19) See Rivetus, in his Answer to Coiffeteau's Replique of Du Pleffis. Tom. 2, pag. 167.

(20) Græter, in Examen mine Mytelii Pleffiani, cap. 45, pag. 354.

(21) Græter, in Examen mine Mytelii Pleffiani, cap. 45, pag. 354.

casta est quam nemo rogavit :

Annals a thousand times, to shew the Disorders of the Church. The other Writings of this Author have very few of them been printed [I]. Mr Moreri has succeeded very indifferently in this Article [K].

"Pleſſis making Aventine of the Romiſh Profeſſion, "we will never agree to it: His Language diſcovers "him, and throughout his Annals he ſhews how his "Paſſion tranſports him againſt the Holy See. There- "fore, to cut him ſhort, all that they object a- "gainſt us, from him, is not worth a Cheſnut Leaf, "and I judge him no more worthy of an Answer, "than the Impoſitor Benno, by whoſe Memoirs he "wrote the Life of That Pontiff (22)." Aventine has been treated as a Lutheran Author, in the Liſt of prohibited Books; Fromondus, however, does not believe him to have been an Heretic, but only one, who, like Eraſmus, ſpeaks too freely againſt the Irregularities of the Monks. "Liberrimæ enim linguæ (hæreticæ "dicere non auſim, neque puto) & plane Eraſmicæ "in Monachorum & Eccleſiaſticorum vita fuit A- ventinus. Plus etiam nimio favens Schiſmaticis, & parum integra fide res Rom. Pontificum "prodiſſe perhibetur, ideoque meruit in claſſe au- "ctorum cauſe legendorum ab Indice expurgatorio "recenſeri (23). ----- Aventine was a very free "Declaimer, (a Heretic I dare not ſay, nor do I think he was,) and, like Eraſmus, ſaluted the Vices "of the Monks and Clergy. He is alſo ſaid to have "ſhewn too much Favour to the Schiſmatics, and to "have betrayed the Cauſe of the Popes, through "want of Zeal, and therefore deſerved a Place in the "Index Expurgatorio, among the Authors, who "are to be read with Caution." Men of the greateſt Memory often forget what others remember commonly enough. I am going to give an Example of it. Conringius had forgot, that They, who publiſhed Aventine's Annals at Ingolſtadt, had retrenched what did not appear agreeable to the Character of a good Catholic (24). He ſays (25), "Libri ejus poſt mortem demum ab iſtis pontificiis Ingolſtadii ſunt editi, ut hinc appareat primos ſaltem editores non im- "probaſſe quæ ibi reperiuntur. ----- After his "Death, his Books were, at laſt, publiſhed at Ingolſtadt, by the Popiſh Party, whoſe ſeeks, that the "firſt Editors, at leaſt, found nothing there, but "what they approved of." He confeſſes, that Aventine held a Correſpondence, by Letters, with ſeveral Proteſtants, and with Melancthon by Name, and that he inclined to their Side, which did not hinder him from dying in the Romiſh Communion. "Vixit ſuperiori ſæculo quando maxima illa ſacrorum mutatio fieret, & multa pontificiæ religionis dogmata impropavit. Per literas familiaritatem coluit cum Proteſtantium nonnullis, & cum Philippo quoque Melancthone: Reperire tamen non potui reliquæ cum penitus Eccleſiam Romanam ut in Proteſtantes videatur propenſior: Vixit enim & mortuus eſt in illa Eccleſia, ſepultuſque Reginoburgi in Monafterio S. Emerani ceremoniis pontificiæ Eccleſiæ uſitatis (26). ----- He lived in the laſt Century, when That great Revolution happened in Religion, and diſapproved of many of the Papal Doctrines. He correſponded, by Letters, with ſeveral of the Proteſtants, and particularly with Philip Melancthon. Yet I could never find, that he had abſolutely renounced the Romiſh Church, how much ſooner he might ſeem more inclining towards the Proteſtants: For he lived, and died, in That Church, and was buried at Ratiſbon, in the Monaftery of St Himeran, with the uſual Romiſh Rites and Ceremonies." I obſerve, that Aventine's Fate may juſtly be compared with That of Father Paul.

[I] The other Writings of this Author have very few of them been printed. Voffius obſerves, that Aventine informs his Readers, in the Two hundred and thirty ſixth Page of his Annals (which is the Three hundred and forty fourth in the Edition of 1580) that he had publiſhed the Hiſtory of Oſtingen, a City of Suabia; publicatæ à ſe hiſtoriæ Utinenſium meminit (27). Geſner has not mentioned This Hiſtory. He ſpeaks only of a Grammar, publiſhed by Aventine, in the Year 1519, and of a Book concerning the manner of counting on the Fingers, publiſhed at Ratiſbon, in the Year 1532; to which the Author had ſubjoined the Summary of a great Work, which only required the Aſſiſtance of a Mæcenæ for its Publication. This is the Title of the Book, printed in 1532. Numerandi per digitos manuſque (quin etiam loquendi) veterum conſuetudinis Abacus, ſive Explicatio ex Bedæ cum piſturis & imaginibus, unâ cum capitibus rerum quibus illuſtrabitur Germania ab Aventino, modo contingat benignus Mæcenæ. Geſner gives an exact Account of This great Work of Aventine; whereby it appears, that the ſame Author had formed a very fine and large Plan, to illuſtrate the Antiquities of Germany. The general view alone of the Subjects, which he undertook, is ſufficient to create Aſtoniſhment. See the Letter, which he wrote to Vadianus, in 1530 (28). He intended very ſoon to have publiſhed ſuch another Chronicle, as That of Eufebius; an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory from the beginning of the World to his own Time; ſome ancient Grammarians, a Greek and Latin Dictionary, Annotations on Claudian (29), &c. But it is not known what is become of Theſe Works. To comprehend how he could be able to go through with ſo many Writings, we muſt know, that he began to ſtudy by break of Day, and oftentimes returned again a little after Supper, and continued 'till Midnight (30). As he broke the Ice for Thoſe, who have treated of the Antiquities of Bavaria (31), it is no wonder, they have diſcovered Faults in his Annals (32). He would have found more in theiſ, if they had lead him the way, as he has done them. Lambecius has corrected him in many Things (33).

[K] Mr Moreri has ſucceeded very indifferently in this Article. I. He is excuſable for placing Aventine under the Letter I, in his firſt Edition; but a Repetition of the ſame Fault is unpardonable. He could not be ignorant of the general Complaint of his having ranked his illuſtrious Perſons according to their Chriſtian Names. Why, then, was not the Occaſion of This Complaint avoided in the following Editions? II. Aventine was born in the Year 1466, and not in the Year 1460. III. Having once committed This Miſtake, as Aventine died in the Year 1534, he ought not to have given him Sixty eight Years of Age. He ſhould have committed one Miſtake more, and made him live Seventy four Years; becauſe, for want of adding this ſecond Miſtake to the firſt, he has left an intolerable Blunder, in reckoning but Sixty eight Years from the Year 1460 to the Year 1534. IV. It is not true, that Nicholas Geſner publiſhed Aventine's Annals. He ought to have ſaid Nicholas Cifer (34). V. To ſay, that Nicholas Cifer publiſhed theſe Annals, with Additions, is very improper; for This ſeems to imply, that he had added, to them, ſomething of his own. But This he has not done. His Performance was only This: He publiſhed Theſe Annals after a Manuſcript of Aventine, Paſſages, which had not been caltrated; ſo that his Edition is more ample, than That of Zieglerus, becauſe it contains all Thoſe, which Zieglerus had ſuppreſſed. The Words of Voffius, which Moreri has ſumbled at, would not have deceived an attentive Reader: They intimate clearly enough, that Cifer only reſtored to Aventine, what had been taken from him. Annales Boiorum libris vii. reliquit: quos ex authenticis Codd. reſtituit & auxit Nicholaus Cifer (35). Voffius was a little to blame in not mentioning the caltrated Edition: had he done That, what I have now quoted would have been much clearer. VI. A Prielt, as Moreri was, acts but a ſtrange Part, when he calls Nicholas Cifer's Additions conſiderable; ſince Thoſe Additions conſiſt only of Invectives againſt the Popes, and the Romiſh Clergy. VII. The other Pieces, which Aventine left, are not Thoſe, which Cardinal Baronius did not eſteem very Orthodox. It was againſt the Annals of Bavaria, That Cardinal was ſo much incenſed. VIII. He ought not to have quoted Baronius T. IX. Anni A. C. 772 (36); for This looks as if Baronius had written, at leaſt, nine Volumes upon this one Year 772.

(28) It is the 496 of the Century publiſhed by Göttdat.

(29) See Geſner, Biblioth. fol. 386.

(30) Zieglerus in ejus Vita.

(31) Conringius, apud Magir. Eponymolog. Crit. p. 904.

(32) Brunerus, in his Annals of Bavaria, criticet him off. See Zeller de Hiſtor. p. 134.

(33) Latribec. Commen. Biblioth. Cæſ. lib. 2, cap. 7, 2. See Magir. Eponymolog. page 91.

(34) In the Holland Edition, it is Nicholas Geſner.

(35) Voffius de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 655.

(36) Voffius, the only Author that Moreri has quoted concerning Aventine, might alſo be a preferred from this Miſtake, ſubſtitutet it a very place, ex T. IX. ad Annv 772.

(22) Gregory VII.

(23) Libert. Fromondus, in libro de Orbe Terræ immob. pag. 24, 25.

(24) See Remark [C].

(25) Conringius apud Magirum, Eponymol. Critic. p. 90.

(26) Id. ib.

(27) Voffius de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 655.

(a) See all his Names, in Remark [C].

(b) It is falsely said in the Lindenius Renouatus, that Corduba is a City of Arabia.

(1) Nandæ's Apology for great Men accused of Magic, chap. 24, p. 354. He quotes Ægidius, Quodlibet 9. See also Petri Pettii Medici Parisiensis Observationes Miscellaneæ pag. 191.

(2) Reinesius Ep. 15. ad Hofmann. pag. 32.

(3) Hotting. Biblioth. Theol. pag. 279.

(4) Bartoloci. Biblioth. Rabbinica, Tom. 1. pag. 13. He quotes Cacerius in Chronolog. Compendio.

(5) Ludovicus Vives, de Cui a corruptar. Arrium, lib. 5. pag. 167.

AVERROËS (a), one of the most subtle Philosophers that appeared among the Arabians, was of Corduba (b), and flourished in the Twelfth Century [A]. He had an extraordinary esteem for Aristotle, and commented upon his Works so very learnedly, that he was called The Commentator by way of Excellency. It has been thought wonderful, that, without knowing any Thing of Greek, he could penetrate so well into the Sense of the Original; and it is believed, not without reason, that, if he had known That Language, he would have perfectly understood Aristotle's Thoughts. Qui Græcè nefcius feliciter adeo mentem Aristotelis perspexit, quid non fecisset si Linguam scisset Græcam (c)? This some learned Men say; but others affirm, that he has interpreted Aristotle very indifferently [B], not only for want of Learning, but also of Capacity. He was Professor in the University of Morocco [C], and became very skillful in Physic; but he understood the Theory of it better than the Practice [D]. He is looked upon as the Inventor

(c) Vossius de Philosophorum sectis, pag. 90. See Keckerman's Words in the Remark [F].

[A] He flourished in the XIIIth Century.] I see no other Proof of it than this; that his two Sons were seen, by Ægidius, at the Court of Frederic Barbarossa (1). "Ætatem ex eo colligimus quod Ægidius Romanus in nono Quodlibeto refert se duos ejus filios vidisse in aula Frederici Barbarossæ. Is vero regere cœpit Anno 1130. et imperavit Annos xxxvii. — The Age he lived in may be gathered from hence, that Ægidius, in his ninth Quodlibet, affirms he saw two of his Sons at the Court of Frederic Barbarossa: Who began his Reign in the Year 1152, and reigned thirty seven Years. These are Vossius's Words in the One hundred fourteenth Page of his Book de Philosophia, chap. 14. See also the seventeenth Chapter of his Treatise de Philosophorum sectis, page 91, where he proves, by the Evidence of the Conciliator, and of This Ægidius, that Averroës flourished in the Year 1150, he refers us to the Quodlibets of Ægidius, lib. 2. Quæstione de unitate intellectus. Reinesius observes, that the Death of Averroës is placed in the Five hundred ninety fifth Year of the Hegira, which is the Eleven hundred ninety eighth of the Christian Era (2) I with Mr König, who refers us to Reinesius, had not placed This Death in the Year 1225. He ought to have referred us to Hottinger, and to have rectified him; for That learned Swiss, having said, after John Leo, that Averroës died in the Six hundred and third Year of the Hegira, makes That Year answer to our Year 1225 (3). This is a great Mistake; it answers, Part of it, to our Year 1206, the other Part to our Year 1207. The Bibliotheca Rabbinica of Bartoloci says, that Averroës flourished from the Year 1131, to the Year 1216, which was That of his Death; that his Commentaries on Aristotle's Philosophy were finished at Seville, in the Year 1187, and that Those on his Metaphysics were written in the Year 1192 (4).

[B] Some of the Learned affirm, that he has interpreted Aristotle very indifferently — for want of Learning.] This was the Opinion of Ludovicus Vives. "Nomen est commentatoris nactus, sibi se (5), homo qui in Aristotele enarrando nihil minus explicat, quam eum ipsum quem suscepit declarandum. Sed nec potuisset explicare etiam si divinus fuisset ingenio, quum esset humano, & quidem intra mediocritatem. Nam quid tandem adiebat, quo in Aristotele enarrando posset esse probe instructus? Non cognitionem veteris memoriz, non scientiam placitorum præcipuæ disciplinæ, & intelligentiam sectarum, quibus Aristoteles passim scatur. Itaque videas eum pessime philosophos omnes antiquos citare, ut qui nullum unquam legerit, ignarus Græcitatæ ac Latinitatis, pro Polo Ptholomæum ponit, pro Prothgora Pythagoram, pro Cratyllo Democritum, libros Platonis titulis ridiculis inscribit: & ita de iis loquitur, ut vel cæco perspicuum sit literam eum in illis legisse nullam. At quàm confidenter audet pronuntiare hoc aut illud ab eis dici, & quod impudentius est, non dici: Quum solos videret Alexandrum, Themistium, & Nicolaum Damascenum: Et hos, ut apparet, verfos in Arabicum perverissimè ac corruptissimè. Citat enim eos nonnunquam, & contradicit, & cum eis rixatur, ut nec ipse quidem, qui scripsit intelligat. Aristotelem verò quomodo legit, non in sua origine purum & integrum, non in lacunam Latinam derivatum, non enim potuit linguarum expert, sed de Latino in Arabicum translatum. — He has gained the Name of Commentator, tho'

he is very far from explaining his Author Aristotle, or deserving That Title. This would have been too great a Task, for one of an extraordinary Genius, much more for him, who had but a moderate one, nay, to say the Truth, a mean one. For what Quæstions had he for undertaking a Commentary on Aristotle? He had no Knowledge of Antiquity, nor of it's several Doctrines, and Sects, with which Aristotle every where abounds. So that you find him cite all the old Philosophers in such a wretched Manner, as proves he never could have read one of them. Through his Ignorance of Greek and Latin, he puts Ptholomæus for Polus, Pythagoras for Prothgoras, Democritus for Cratylus, and miscalls the Titles of Plato's Books very ridiculously; and speaks of them so, that even a blind Man may see he had never read a Letter of them. But what a prodigious Degree of Assurance is it, for him to pronounce, that such a Thing is said by them, or, what is still more shocking, that such a thing is not said by them: when he had seen only Alexander, Themistius, and Nicolas Damascenus: and these only in blundering Arabic Translations. For he sometimes cites them, and contradicts them, and raises such Controversies with them, as he himself does not at all understand. But how does he read Aristotle? not pure and entire in the Original, nor even in his first Debasement in a Latin Translation, for he understood neither of these Languages, but degenerated again out of Latin into Arabic." He afterwards proves the Inability of this Interpreter of Aristotle, by an Example (6). See Cælius Rhodiginus, who, in general, says almost the same thing (7). We must not trust to Father Rapin, who makes him say This of Averroës (8). For That Jesuit did not always quote from the Original. However, what he is going to say is by no means contemptible: "As Averroës understood nothing of Aristotle, but by an unfaithful Translation, he fell himself into such terrible Misconstructions of his Sense, that Bagolin, a Philosopher of Perona, Zimara, and Mantinus, undertook, in vain, to correct him (9)."

[C] He was Professor in the University of Morocco.] It was under the third King of the Race of the Almohades, after the Expulsion of the Almoravides. Read this Passage of Reinesius: "Quem Averroëm appellat vulgo scholæ, ejus nomen intergrum est Abual-Walid Mohammed, ebn Achmed, ebn Mohammed, ebn Roshd: Docuitque in Academia Marocana auspiciis Jacobi, tertii ex Almohadis, post ejectos Almoravides, regis (10). — The true Name of Him, who is called, in the Schools, Averroës, was Abual-Walid Mohammed, ebn Achmed, ebn Mohammed, ebn Roshd: And he taught in the University of Morocco, under the Reign of James III, of the Almohades, after the Expulsion of the Almoravides."

[D] He became very skillful in Physic; but he understood the Theory of it better than the Practice.] His principal Work in Physic is That, which is called Colliget. He there treats of This Science in general; and it cannot be amiss to give here a Piece of the Preface: "Ex præcepto nobilis Domini Audelach Avloait, qui pro consilio suorum Philosophorum Amvolait & Avenchalit injunxit mihi ut conscriberem opus, quod Arabico sermone totam Medicinæ Scientiam contineret, ad approbandum judicandum sententias veterum, collegi hoc opus Colliget, id est, Universale, sic inscriptum propter ordinem doctrinæ observandum, qui paulatim ab universis libris

(6) That is, by a Translation of a Passage out of Aristotle's Metaphysics.

(7) Cælius Rhodiginus Antiqu. Lect. lib. 3. c. 2, pag. 110.

(8) Rapin's Reflexions on Philosophy, a. 150. pag. 330. 34. Holl. Edition.

(9) Id. Ibid.

(10) Reinesius Ep. 15. ad Hofmann. pag. 32.

Inventor of an Opinion both very absurd, and very contrary to Christian Orthodoxy [E], but which, nevertheless, made such a formidable Progress among several (11) Pref. Averroës apud Gesnerum, in Biblioth. fol. 101.

(12) Symphorianus Campejus apud Gesner, ibid. fol. 100. See Cælius Rhodiginus, lib. 3, cap. 12, pag. 1684. and Scaliger against Cardan, Exerc. 63, n. 5.

(13) Pet. Petrus, Different. de Homeris Nepenthe. pag. 89.

(14) See the same Petri Petri Miscell. Observat. lib. 3, cap. 18.

(15) Id. ib. lib. 2, cap. 7. pag. 99, 300.

(16) Vossius de Philosophia, cap. 14, p. 114.

(17) Tz. Dignity in not properly Latinized.

(18) Mercklinus in Lindenio renovato, p. 94.

(19) Symph. Campejus, de claria Medicis.

"ad particularia procedit. In hoc enim libro universales regulas inchoavi, & deinceps favente Deo alium librum de his quæ particularia sunt instituiam, &c. (11) — At the Command of my noble Lord Audelach Sempke, who, by the Advice of his Physicians, Avofait and Avenchalit, obliged me to undertake a Work, in the Arabic Language, which should comprehend the whole Science of Physic, that I might judge and approve of the Opinions of the Ancients, I have composed this Work Colligat, that is, Universal: So entitled, on account of the Order to be observed in Teaching, which proceeds by degrees from Universals to Particulars. For in this Book I have given such Rules as are Universal; and hereafter, if Providence permits, I shall write one concerning Particulars, &c." To make it plain, that he valued himself for his great Skill in Physic, it will be sufficient to observe, that he was a Rival of the great Avicenna, and so great an Enemy to him, that he avoids naming him in his Writings: Avicenna Medici amulus & inimicissimus fuit, ut eum nominare in suis Libris crearetur (12): his Affectation was undoubtedly the Reason, why, in consulting a Doctrine maintained by Avicenna, he attacked it only as the Sentiment of Galen. I speak of the Doctrine, which asserts, that the Animal Spirits, which cause Joy are bright, and Thole, which cause Melancholy, black. Mr. Petit has taken notice of this Affectation of Averroës. "Nunc quibus mentis pertrationibus Averroës hanc Avicennæ opinionem impugnet, videmus: quamquam eo loco directe Avicennam non petit, sed Galenum, spontaneum melancholicorum metum ab humoris, qui in eis abundat, nigredine repentem; verum quæ ibi Galeno objicit, pari impetu in memoratam Avicennæ opinionem redeunt (13). — Let us see now what Arguments Averroës brings against this Opinion of Avicenna; though he does not there directly attack Avicenna, but Galen, who ascribes the spontaneous Timoroufness of melancholy Persons to a black Humour abounding in them, but what he there objects against Galen falls with equal force on this Opinion of Avicenna." Averroës, either on purpose, or through forgetfulness, has behaved in a quite contrary Manner, with regard to Avicenna; for he names him as the Author of a Remark, which he might have read in Philoponus (14). This is only by the by. Now, that he was more learned in the Theory, than the Practice, he himself confesses, as Mr. Petit observes. "Averroës fatetur de se ultro in septimo eorum librorum, quos Colligat vulgus appellat, cap. 6. Ego, inquit, non Rudui ei Scientiæ (Medicinæ) ut videar mihi in ea esse sufficiens: Et alibi negat se in eorum numero esse qui ægris remedia adhibent (15). — Averroës makes this Confession of himself, in the seventh of those Books, commonly called Colligat, cap. 6. I have not, says he, studied This Science (of Physic) in order to make myself perfect in it: And, elsewhere, he denies himself to be in the Number of those, who administer to the sick." This Passage of Mr. Petit is much more exact, than these Words of Possius. "Averroës Cordubensis, cognomento Commentator, medicus non tam practicus, quam theoreticus. Fuit medicus Memorolini regis (16). — Averroës of Corduba, surnamed the Commentator, a Physician, not so much in Practice, as in Theory. He was Physician to King Memorolini." The last Words weaken, instead of confirming, the former; for, to be a Prince's Physician, requires great Practice. I say nothing of Memorolini (17), which was not a proper Name, but a Name of Dignity, and consequently not fit to be joined with the Word regis. Mercklinus was not aware of This, when he said, Videtur Medicus fuisse regis Miramolinus (18). — He seems to have been Physician to King Miramolinus. Symphorian Campejus was the Original of This Error; he had said, that Averroës lived at Corduba, in the Time of King Miramalinus, tempore Miramalinus regis apud Cordubam (19). Observe, that the Physicians of Paris, great Favourers of Phlebotomy, would not easily agree, that Averroës was not much skilled in the Practice of Physic; for it is said, that his Example contributed much to extirpate an Error, which they disapproved. Read these Words of Stephen Pasquier. "How many Ages have we practised Physic, with the Notion, that Children ought not to be bled, 'till fourteen Years of Age, and that bleeding of them before That Time was not a Cure, but certain Death? A Heresy, which we should have lived in to this Day, if it had not been for Averroës, the Arabian, who ventured to make the first Experiment of it on a Son of his own, about fix or seven Years of Age, whom he cured of a Pleurisie (20)." [E] He is looked upon as the Inventor of an Opinion, both very absurd, and very contrary to Christian Orthodoxy.] I think it would be more proper to say, that he has cleared and explained it, and, by maintaining it with more application than ever, has given a kind of new Life to it; for the same Pomponatius, who affirms, in his fourth Chapter, that it is a Monster forged by Averroës; Pigmentum & Monstrum ab Averroës confictum (21); has also said, in the third Chapter, that Themistius and Averroës taught the same thing. "Averroës itaque & ut existimo ante eum Themistius concordare possent animam intellectivam realiter distingui ab anima corruptibili, verum ipsam esse unum numero in omnibus hominibus, mortalem vero multiplicatam (22). — Averroës therefore, and, I think, before him Themistius, maintained an intellectual Soul really distinct from the corruptible Soul, that the former was only One in all Mankind, but the Mortal One as numerous as the Individuals." The Jesuits of Coimbra go higher; for they will have it, that Theophrastus understood the Doctrine of his Master Aristotle in this Sense. "Occurrit alia sententia existimantium in disciplina Aristotelis ponendam esse unam duntaxat animam intellectivam, five unum intellectum qui omnibus hominibus afflatur, ut folia lumen univerfitali. Sic enim Aristotelem interpretati sunt ejus discipulus & Scholæ successores Theophrastus, Themistius, Simplicius, Averroës, alique non pauci, etsi non omnes eodem modo de hujusmodi intellectu locuti fuerint (23). — There occurs another Opinion of Those, who, according to the Doctrine of Aristotle, maintained only an intellectual Soul, or one Intellect, which serves all Mankind, as the Light of the Sun does the Universe. For so has Aristotle been interpreted by his Scholars, and Successors in his School, Theophrastus, by Themistius, Simplicius, Averroës, and others, tho' they have not all expressed themselves alike, concerning this Intellect." They add, that several Moderns have owned, that, according to Aristotle's Hypothesis, the Understanding of all Men is one and the same Substance. "Hoc quidem Argumentum permovet etiam ad prædictam Intellectus unitatem in Aristotelis doctrinâ afferendam non paucos & recentioribus peripateticis in quibus sunt Thom. Anglicus, Achillinus, Odo Jandunus, Mirandulanus, Zimara, Vicomercatus, & quidam alii (24). — This very Argument induced many of the modern Peripatetics to assert this Unity of the Intellect, according to the Doctrine of Aristotle, amongst whom are Thomas Anglicus, Achillinus, Odo Jandunus, Mirandulanus, Zimara, Vicomercatus, and others." But that some among These Moderns will have it to be, in all Men, as an assistant Form, others as a constituent Form. The latter is the Opinion of Mirandulanus (25), and of Achillinus (26). But observe here a Mistake like This of Pomponatius. The Jesuits of Coimbra elsewhere ascribe the Invention of the Unity of the Intellect of all Men to Averroës. This will appear the more surprising, when the Words are seen, which preceded Thole, where they affirm it. "Secunda (sententia) fuit Avicennæ 9. Metaph. cap. quarto, & in lib. Natur. part. 5. Avicenna in epistola de lumine, & Græci ejusdem Marini cujus mentionem facit hoc loco Philoponus, agentium intellectum agentem esse substantiam quandam separatam, quam Avicenna Choclozæam nuncupabat. Idem placuit Averro in libello de beatitudine animæ, cap. 5. & in epitome Metaph. tractatu 4. qui errori errorem subnectens, aliorum vestigia secutus, unum, (20) Pasquier, in the second Volume of his Letters, Book 19, pag. 548.

(21) Pomponatius de Immort. Animæ, c. 4, pag. 9.

(22) Id. ib. c. 3, p. 7.

(23) Conimbricenses in 2. lib. de Anima, cap. 1. Quest. 7. Art. 1. pag. 59.

(24) Ibid.

(25) Mirandulanus, de Eversione singularis certaminis, lib. 32, c. 1. & lib. 31, p. 2, & 6.

(26) Achillinus lib. de Intelligentiis.

several Italian Philosophers, that it became necessary to condemn it by the Pope's

(27) Conimbricenses in lib. 3, de Anima, cap. 5. Quest. 1. Art. 1. pag. 226.

(28) Commentator ipse Comm. 10, l. 3, de Anim. ponit ipsam esse ultimam Intelligentiam.

Pompon. de Immortalitate Anim. c. 7, 4. pag. 11.

(29) Calius Rhodigin. Antiq. Lect. lib. 3, c. 2, pag. 109.

(30) Conimb. in lib. 2, de Anima, cap. 1. Quest. 7. Art. 2. pag. 60.

(31) Pomponatius de Immortal. Anim. c. 4. pag. 7.

(32) E. lib. 1. c. 5.

"unum omnium hominum fixit communem intellectum, ut alibi retulimus (27). ----- The second [Opinion] was That of Avicenna, in his Metaphysics, lib. 9. chap. 4. and in his Book de Natur. Part 5. of Avempace, in his Epistle de Lumine, and of Marinus, a certain Greek, mentioned here by Philoponus; who held, that the acting Intellect is a certain separate Substance, which Avicenna calls Chalcodæa. Averroës is of the same Sentiment, in his Book de Beatitudine Animæ, chap. 5. and in Epitome Metaphys. Tractat. 4. who, adding Error to Error, in imitation of others, has pretended, that there is but one Intellect, in common to all Men, as we have elsewhere related." That is to say, That the Unity of the Intellect is a Fiction; yet Averroës has added to the Errors of others; yet nevertheless it is plain, this Fiction does not at all differ from the Doctrine they attribute to Avicenna, &c. We must remember, that, according to Averroës, the Intellect of Men is the lowest Degree of Intelligences, and occupies the lowest Place of the Universe (28). "Esse mentium infimum omnium, & unicam. Nam sicuti cœlestes globi singuli singulas habere mentes videntur, ita & orbis hic inferior unum, ut ipse vult, habet, quæ non hujus hominis sit, vel illius: Sed humanæ speciei mens sit, & dicatur, ut speciei unicæ unicuique sit intellectus in hoc orbe inferiori, ut plerique intelligent, ubique totus compingi (29). — It is One only, and That the lowest of Intelligences. For, as each of the celestial Orbs seems to have it's particular Intellect, so has this inferior Globe it's Intellect, which he will have to be One, and not appropriated to This, or That Man; but to be the Intellect of the whole human Species, that there may be to One Species One Intellect, in this lower Orb, as most understand it, that the whole is contained every where." Be this as it will, these Jesuits, in confuting this pretended Unity of the Intellect of all Men, attack This Philosopher only; so much do they, at least, esteem him the chief Defender of This Chimera. They observe, that Scotus had said, that Averroës became worthy to be excommunicated by human Race; and that others say, that his Doctrine is such a dreadful Monster, that the Forests of Arabia never produced a greater. "Hæc Commentatoris seu commentoris potius de unitate intellectus sententia adeo stulta est, ut merito Scotus in 4. d. 43. q. 2. dixerit dignum esse Averroem qui ob has ineptias ex hominum communione averruncetur. Alii vero hoc ejus figmentum monstrum vocarint quo nulum majus Arabum sylvæ genuerint. Certe hoc unum lat esse debuisse ad eos coarguendos qui filium Rois tanti faciunt, ut ejus animam Aristotelis animam esse dicant (30)." The last part of this Passage informs us, that, among other Elogies, That of having Aristotle's Soul was given to This Arabian. The Jesuits of Coimbra will have it, that, to confute this, it is sufficient to consider only the Doctrine of the Unity of the Intellect. But This Observation is false; for, as several of the Moderns have owned, This Doctrine is only an Enlargement and Explication of Aristotle's Principles. I could prove this by many Remarks, but shall content myself with this, that, according to the Hypothesis of our Philosopher, the Multiplication of Individuals can have no other Foundation, than Matter; from whence it follows, that the Intellect is but One, since Aristotle makes it separate and distinct from Matter. Videntur Aristotelem simpliciter probare intellectum possibilem esse immixtum & immaterialem (31). This is the Observation of Pomponatius. "Quod vero unicuique sit intellectus in omnibus hominibus five possibilis ponatur, patere potest ex eo quoniam apud Peripateticos est celebrata propositio, multiplicatio nem individuum in eadem specie non posse esse nisi per materiam quantam, ut dicitur 7 & 12 Metaph. & 2 de Anima (32). — But that the Intellect in all Men is but One, or may be supposed so, appears from hence, that the Peripatetics have a celebrated Maxim, that the Multiplication of Individuals can be only by Matter and Quantity, as is said in 7 and 12. Metaph. & 2. de Anima." But how much sorer This Opinion of Averroës may be grounded on Aristotle, yet it is impious and absurd at the bottom. It is impious, because it leads to a Belief, that the Soul, which is properly the Form of Man, dies with the Body (33), it is absurd, because nothing can be more senseless, than to maintain, that two Men, who are directed by their respective intellectual Operations to kill each other, have the same Soul? What can be imagined more chimerical, than that two Philosophers, one of whom affirms, and the other denies, the same Thesis, at the same time, are but One only Being, as to the Intellect? We will examine what an Adversary of Pomponatius, advanced against This Extravagancy.

First, He confutes it, as it supposes, that the Intellect is not in Man, and afterwards, as it supposes that all Men have but one and the same Intellect. On the first Point, he enquires why an Intellect, which ought to unite it's Operation to That of the Man, in the most intimate Manner possible, should think it a Dishonour to unite itself with the Organs, to compose with them one Individual (34)? You will easily apprehend the intimate Union there mentioned, if you take notice, that, according to the Averroës, the Soul of Man is not capable of Understanding without the help of This assisting Intellect. This Intellect then must supply, by it's Operation, what the Soul of Man wants; and consequently our intellectual Acts depend on two Principles, whereof one is only passive and defective, the other is active and perfect. These two Principles therefore concur and terminate in the same effect; and consequently the Action of the Intellect of the Averroës unites it self, in a most intimate manner, with the Soul, which understands. But this difficulty is not great; for the Union objected is not more intimate, than That of the Operation of God, with the Operation of the Creature, according to the Doctrine of Co-operation; and yet it does not follow from hence, that these two Causes must be personally united. The Author pretends to obviate this Answer, by saying, That the Operation of the Intellect of the Averroës is immanent and particular, which cannot be said of the Co-operation of God (35); but this may easily be answered; so that his Disputation is not so victorious as to the first Point, as it is with regard to the second; for observe how he prefixes Averroës: That Intellect, of which you speak, is either God, or a Creature. If it is God, I ask this Question, Does he act within or without himself? If without himself? what a Monster would not an Operation of the Understanding be, which is placed without the Intellect, and in another Person (36). This proves too much; for from hence it must be inferred, that the Divine Intellect cannot produce an Act of Intelligence in the Soul of Man, without producing the same in itself. Now This is false and absurd. The other Branch of the Question reduces the Averroës to the last Extremity. If God forms in himself the Acts of Intelligence, which are in Man, how many Errors must he entertain? Sed neque intra Deum contineri potest (intellectio) quod im-
"menfos in eum errores toties inveheret, quoties opinione suâ falleretur homines; neque enim prorsus ulla valeret excusatio, quin prima ac summa veritas à se ipsa monstruose deficeret, si assignanda ipsi essent, si in sinu ejus & complexu reponenda quæcunque esse possint falsa hominum judicia (37). — Neither can it [the Intellect] be contained within God, since it must produce in him such prodigious Errors, as often as Men are deceived in their Opinions; nor can any Salvo be found sufficient to explain, how the supremum Verbum can avoid degenerating from itself in a monstrous Manner, if it must be charged with, and made to entertain, all those false judgments, to which Men are liable." If they answer, that this Intellect is created, the Author replies, that a Creature does not seem sufficient to regulate so effectually all human Souls at the same time (38). Besides that the contrariety of Opinions, which reign among Men, cannot lodge together in one single Understanding. Quomodo in unam & eandem intelligentiam simul cadet contrarietas illa opinionum & sententiarum, quam toties in hominibus experimur, cum unus ait, alter negat de eodem idem? Quæ eadem quæstio impedire potest advertarium in ref-

(33) See Remarks [H] towards the End.

(34) Antonius Sironius de Immortalitate Animæ adversus Pomponatium & Affectus, p. 368.

(35) Id. ib. pag. 369.

(36) Quid hoc potest intellectio ut extra intellectum consistat & quidem toto ab ea disjuncta supposito? Id. ib. d. pag. 370.

(37) Id. ib.

(38) Id. ib. p. 371, 372.

Pope's Authority [F]. This Opinion is, That there is an Intelligence, which, without

"ponfione jamjam explofa de intellectu divino. —
"How can That Contrariety of Opinions, and Notions,
"which we fo often observe among Men, concerning
"one and the same Subject, ever juftify in one, and "the same, Intellect? Which very Objection fhews
"also the Abfurdity of That long exploded Notion of "the Divinity of This Intellect." This laft Obje"ction has the same force againft Thofe, who affirm,
"that This Intellect is God. Thus is alfo Spinozifm

(39) See the Article SPI-NOZA.
Remark [N]
n. III.

(40) Anton.
Sirmondus
de Immort.
Anim. pag.
372.

(41) Id. ib.

(42) Ibid.
Pag. 373.

(43) That of The Truth of the Chritian Religion, chap. 15.

(44) Malle-branche's Inquiry after Truth, Book
7, chap. 1, & feq. of Part 2.

(45) Confil-
m. in lib. 5.
de Anima,
cap. 1,
Quæft. 1,
Artic. 1.
pag. 226.

invincibly confuted (39). It is remarkable, that the Author owns all the strength of his Objection to con-fist in his having proved, that the Operation of the Intellect of the Averroïfs on the Souls of Men is inherent (40). But I think, there is no Reason for them to allow, that he has proved This Point. As to what remains, he declares, that he should have nothing to fay againft Averroë's Sentiment, if That Philosopher had only fpoke of the Operation of the Divine Intellect, confidered as the first Cause. "Reftat ergo, ut fua iftud fom-nium integrum Averroëi fonnii loco & mendacii
"haberi finat, aut certe interpretetur ipfe de aétione
"intellectus divini, qua parte non intellectus qui-dem præcife, fed eft prima caufa, in omnes
"caufarum fecundarum, adeoque inferiorum intel-
"ligentiarum effectus ex virtute fua influens aliquid
"(41). — An ita poffit accipi, non difputo, illud
"contentus ostendiffe, quod nifi quid fimile fonet
"ejus doctrina, inanis ac fulta fit, fi quid autem
"fimile, ne pilum quidem nobis adveniantem ha-
"beat (42). — It remains therefore, that Aver-roës muft either give up this whole Chimerical No"tion of his for a Dream, and a Fiction, or interpret
"it of the Act of the Divine Intellect, not as it is "the Intellect, but the first Cause operating on all "second Causes, and confequently in fome Degree in"fluencing by it's Agency the Effects of inferior In"tellects. — Whether or no it can be fo explained,
"I fhall not undertake to difpute, being content "with having fhewn, that, unlike his Doctrine he "conftituted after fome fuch manner as this, it is "empty and abfurd, but, if it be fo conftrued, I have "nothing to object againft it." He tells us, That he has not meddled with the Objections, which Thomas Aquinas started againft the Hypothefis of This Arabian. You may find it perfectly confuted in a Work of Mr Du Pleffis Mornay (43).

It is furprizing, that fuch great Genius's, as Ariftotle and Averroës, fhould invent fo many Chimera's concerning the Intellectual Faculty; and yet I will venture to fay, that the Superiority of their Parts was the very Cause of it. It was by their great Penetration, that they difcovered fuch Difficulties, as obliged them to leave the common Road, and defpife many other ways, where they did not meet with what they fought. The moft certain Knowledge they had of the Nature of the Soul, was, that it is capable of thinking fucceffively of a thoufand things; but, how it reduced this Capacity into Action, they could not comprehend: The Operation of Objects, their Species, their Images in the Brain, as much refined as you pleafe, nothing of all this feems fufficient to give the Soul an actual Intelligence. See with what Force Father Mallebranche confutes all that has been faid of the Manner of our knowing things (44). He could find no other Expedient, than to affert, that we fee them in God, and that the Ideas are not produced in our Souls. Some ancient Philofophers have faid, that God is the general Intelligence of all Spirits;
that is to fay, that he diffufes Knowledge on them, as the Sun does Light on Bodies. Read thefe Words of the Jefuits of Coimbra: "Prima fententia fuit
"Alexandri libro fecundo de Anima, cap. 20. & 21.
"exiftimantis intellectum agentem effe intellectum
"universalem omnium conditorem, hoc eft Deum;
"quod etiam Platonis dogma libro fefto de repub-
"lica fuiffe creditur, qui intellectum agentem no-
"ftros animos cælis irradiantem comparavit foli,
"ut ex Themiftio hoc in lib. refert divus Thomas
"1 part. quæft. 79. articulo quarto. In eundem er-
"rorem lapfus fuif Prifcianus Lydus afferens, intel-
"lectum agentem non effe partem anime, fed men-
"tem primam atque divinam, vel Ideam boni (45).
"— The first was the Opinion of Alexander, in "his fecond Book de Anima, cap. 20, 21, who held
"the acting Intellect to be the univerfal Intellect,

VOL. I.

"the Creator of all things, i. e. God; which is al-
"fo eftemed to be the Doctrine of Plato, in his feventh
"Book de Republica, where the acting Intellect, ir-"radiating our Minds, is compared to the Sun, as "St Thomas relates from Themiftius, in this Book, "Part 1, Quæft. 79, Art. 4. Prifcianus Lydus is "fallen into the fame Error, in afferting, that the "acting Intellect is not part of the Soul, but the fu"pream and divine Mind itfelf, or Idea of Good." When a Subject is very obfcure, it is no wonder, that the greateft Philofophers fpeak of it a little out of the way, and on Suppofitions not eafily to be apprehended. Now there cannot be a more difficult Subject, than This of the Formation of Thought.
It is, perhaps, more fo, than That of the Original of the Soul. This is going a great way; for it is a very wife Reflexion Bartholin makes on a Story reported of St Anfelm. This Archbishop of Canterbury, finding himfelf near Death, at the Age of Seventy fix Years, is faid to have begged a fhort Refpite, that he might finifh a very obfcure Inquiry, he had begun, into the Original of the Soul (46). If he had obtained Seventy fix Years more, fays Bartholin, I doubt he could fcarce have made an end of fo obfcure a Queftion. Valde dubito, fi vel totidem annos quot vixerat illi addidiffet Deus vitæ arbitrat, ad finem quæftionis dubie unquam potuiffet pervenire (47). Obferve, that moft of the Cartefians; teach, that, as there is none but God, who can give Motion to the Body, fo there is none but God, who can modify the Spirits. They except Thofe Actions of the Soul, which are criminal. But, as to all what we call Senfation, Imagination, Paffion, Memory, and Idea, They pretend, that God is the efficient and immediate Cause of thefe, and that the Action of Objects, or the Motion of our Animal Spirits, is only the occafional Cause. This Opinion is but an Extenfion of That attributed to a famous Interpreter of Ariftotle, and which Mr Du Pleffis Mornay confutes by fpecious Reafons, but fuch as our Cartefians would not embarafs themfelves with. Let us fee fomething of what he advances: "As to the Opinion of A"lexander (Aphrodisienfis) who maintains, that there "is an univerfal acting Intellect, which impreffes
"the poffible Intellect, i. e. every one's Capa"city, and reduces it into Action, moft of the "Reafons produced above, againft Averroës, will "hold, alfo, againft him. But, becaufe, by this "acting Intellect, he feems to mean God himfelf,
"there is this yet farther to be objected, That God,
"who is all Good and all Wife, would not imprint
"on our Understandings the Follies and Vices we "find in it, neither would he leave it in fo much "Ignorance and Obfcurity, as we feel in it, but "conquer in all Men That Contagion, which This "Body brings with it; and, though he fhould not in-
"fpire or influence fo many things to the one,
"as to the other, according to the feveral Capa"cities of This rafa Tabula, This blank Paper, yet
"he never would produce in any fuch a World of falfe
"Images, as every Man may perceive within him"felf. Farther, This Influence muft either be con"tinual, or interrupted. If continual, we fhould "underftand all that our Imagination could repre-
"fent to us without Trouble or Application: If in"terrupted, we could not, of ourfelves, under-
"ftand any thing whatfoever, nor will when we "would. Now, on the contrary, we find it diffi"cult to apprehend fome things, and are forced to "overcome the Ignorance of our Underftanding,
"as it were, Step by Step; and there are others,
"which we can apprehend as foon as they offer
"themfelves, and whenever we pleafe (48)."

[F] Which made fuch a formidable Progreff — that it became neceffary to condemn it, by the Pope's Authority. I have reported, in another Place (49), the Words of one of the Bulls of Pope Leo X, which was approved in the Lateran Council. I fhall add here, that Raimond Lully made great Influence to Pope Clement V, to condemn Averroës's Commentaries on Aristotle; and that he endeavoured to engage Philip the Fair, King of France, to do the fame. He represented Thefe Books as full of pernicious Errors, and fuch as will lead young Perfons, by Degrees, to Impiety: He prayed, petitioned, and wrote a Book on this Subject, but found both

(46) See the Article AN-SELMUS, Remark [A]

(47) Tho.
Bartholinus;
Differtat. 6.
de legendis
Libris, pag.
564.

(48) Du Pleffis Mornay, Of the Truth of the Christian Religion,
chap. 15,
pag. 208.

(49) In the Article SPI-NOZA. Remark [D] at the End.

without multiplying it self, animates all the Individuals, of Human Species, so far as they exercise the Functions of the reasonable Soul. There is scarce any Book, of Averroës, which discovers better Sentiments, than That, which is intitled Destructionum Destructionum contra Algazelem [G]. Very disadvantageous Reports have been spread of This Philosopher's Religion [H]; for he is said, not only

(50) Theoph. Raynaudus, Erem. de malis ac bonis Libris. n. 340, pag. 200, he quotes

Charles Bouille, in the Life of Raymondus Lullius.

(51) Id. ib.

(52) Lud. Vivez, de Causis corrupt. Artium, lib. 5, pag. 167.

(53) Clavigny de Sainthe Honorine, of the Use of Suspected Books, pag. 48, 49.

(54) I find nothing more of it in Paul Jorjous, Elog. Viror. bellic. castr. virtute illustr. lib. 4, pag. 334, than that Bajazet II, Peripatetic Averroës opinionibus oblectabatur; — was much delighted with the Opinions of Averroës, the Peripatetic.

(55) Cardanus de Subtilitate, lib. 9, pag. 682.

the Pope, and the King of France, deaf to all his Solicitations (50). At present, there is no Occasion to desire this, or to pray, that, at least, this Philosopher may be prohibited from passing for an Oracle; for his Authority is now void, and no Body wastes time in reading him; but some Centuries have been much infatuated with his Doctrine. Read what follows. "Congruenter & exauditu facilius fuisse petitio, pro qua nunc, (quæ Dei benignitas est,) non est satagendum. Nimirum ne Averroës oraculi loco esset in Scholis: Quod cum superiore sæculo, & paucis anterioribus, invaluisse, præsertim in Italia, ut Canus, lib. 10, de locis, cap. 5, notavit; occasio fuit magnorum in oris illis errorum, & inutilis diligentie, qua aliqui non minus in pervoluendo Averroës collocabant operæ, quam in sacris literis ponant, qui iis maxime delectantur: Nec fidei minus Averroës tribuerant, quam optimi quique fideles Canonici scriptoribus: Quod indignissimum fuisse, nemo non videt. Nunc Averroës in scholis depontatus evasit (51). — It had been a proper Petition, and much easier to have been obtained, though now, thank God, we have no occasion for it, That Averroës should not pass in the Schools for an Oracle: for his being so esteemed in the former Age, and some few preceding ones, especially in Italy, as Canus in lib. 10, de Locis, cap. 5, has observed; occasioned, in those Parts, great Errors, and an useless Industry, some having taken as much Pains in turning over Averroës, as the greatest Divines ever bestowed on the Holy Scriptures themselves: Nor have the Canonical Writers met with greater Faith from the most zealous, than Averroës has from his Followers: which all must agree to have been a high Indignity. But now Averroës is quite exploded the Schools." Ludovicus Vivez complained very much of the Authority, which This Arabian Professor had obtained. "Quem Philosophi de nostrâ Scholâ, qui post eum scribere, ita sunt amplexati, ut penè autoritate Aristoteli adæquarint, nec solum qui longo post intervallo vixerunt, sed qui illius quoque ætate: Quod factum est & ignorantia meliorum, & admiratione mercimonii linguæ & sensus peregrini: Ut gratiam ei conciliaret apud primos novitas, apud posteros vetustas (52). — Who is so bigbly esteemed by the Philosophers of our Schools, who have wrote after him, that his Authority has been almost made equal to That of Aristotle, not only by Those, who have lived long after him, but even by Those of his own Time; which has happened through Ignorance of better Writings, and out of a Humour of admiring such as are foreign, both in Language and Sentiments. So that he came into Favour with the former Ages for his Novelty, and with the latter for his Antiquity." He observes here a remarkable piece of good Fortune: Some lucky Genius's please at first for their Novelty, and at last for their Antiquity. Let the Reader examine, if he pleases, this reasoning of a Modern. "We need not wonder to see, that Men have had so much esteem for Averroës, since Cardanus's Father, who dealt in Magic, assures us, that the Devils themselves have admired his Doctrine, and that Bajazet diverted himself with it, in his greatest Pains of the Gout; which is as great a Proof of it's Merit, as it's being admired by the Intelligentes (53)." If what relates to Bajazet is of no better Credit than the rest, I question it much (54). In respect to Cardanus's Father, it ought to have been said, that one of the Spirits, which appeared to him, professed himself to be an Averroësist, and not that Averroës was admired by the Intelligentes; and it ought to have been added, that Cardanus himself insinuates, that This Story of his Father was fabulous. "Ille verò palam Averroësistam se professus fuit. Hæc seu historica seu fabula sit ita se habuit. Quod fabula videretur satis Argumento esse debet quod, &c. (55). — He openly professed himself an Averroësist. This is a true Relation of "this Story or Fable. But that it is a Fable, sufficiently appears from hence, that, &c."

[G] No Book of Averroës discovers better Sentiments, than his Destructiones Destructionum contra Algazelem. Or rather, Destructionum Destructionum. The Arabic Title is, Habapalah Alatabalah (56). In This Piece, Averroës confutes the Metaphysical Opinions, which Algazel had maintained against the Philosophers. Most of These Opinions of Algazel are very pernicious; for Example, he denied, what the Philosophers held, that the World is the Work of God, that God is an Agent, that he is a One, Simple, and Incorporal, Being, and that there cannot be two uncreated Natures (57). Since Averroës takes the part of the Philosophers in all these Propositions, it cannot be denied, but that he labours in favour of Orthodoxy. In Father Rapin's Opinion, it is one of his best Pieces (58). But, on the other side, can This good Cause receive any great Service from such a Defender, who denies the Possibility of the Creation, and maintains, that all spiritual Beings are eternal, and that God does not know particular things, nor extend his Providence over the Individuals of this World (59)?

[H] Very disadvantageous Reports have been spread of This Philosopher's Religion. You will find, in Moreri's Dictionary, that, according to His Opinion, Christianity was an impossible Religion; that Judaism was a Religion of Children, and that Mahometism was a Religion of Swines; and that he afterwards cried out, Moriatur anima mea morte Philosophorum; that is, Let my Soul die the Death of the Philosophers. Behold, how he has imitated Balaam, who said, Let me die the Death of the Righteous, and let my last End be like his (60). Mr Moreri does not exactly relate his Opinion concerning Christianity; Averroës called it, says he, an impossible Religion, because of the Mystery of the Eucharist. It is certain, that This Philosopher did not speak so obligingly of it, when he reflected on the Practice of the Communion of Rome. Read these Words of Mr Daillé, which he addressed to Father Adam: "The wife Men of the World have not excused you this strange Belief, any more than the Jews; witness the Words of the Philosopher Averroës, which Cardinal Du Perron relates, on the Credit of Sarga, one of the Fathers of your Society; that he said 'no Sect worse, or weaker, than That of the Christians, who, themselves, eat, and break to pieces, the God, whom they adore' (61)." Before I go any farther, I shall make two Remarks against This learned Minister. I. That Cardinal Du Perron is not, properly, the Person, who relates these Words on the Credit of one of Father Adam's Fraternity; he only relates them, as cited by Mr Du Pleſſis; for it is This latter, who alleges, on This Subject, what the Jesuit Sarga observes concerning the Sentiment of This Arabian Philosopher (62). II. That, instead of Sarga, he should have said Sarga. We shall here relate a Passage of another Minister: "If we should receive the holy Sacrament kneeling, — — — we should be a Scandal, and a Stumbling-block to the Weak: But we should give the Infidels occasion to blaspheme the sacred Name of God, and to have an Abhorrence for Christianity. For we cannot forget the sad Example of the Pagan Philosopher †, who, having seen the Sacrament eaten, which had before been adored, said, That he had never seen a more foolish, or more ridiculous Sect, than That of the Christians, who adore That, which they eat; and for that reason this unhappy Man cried out, Let my Soul be with Those of the Philosophers, since the Christians adore what they eat (63)." The same Minister alleges, elsewhere, a Passage of Cicero, very agreeable to This Sentiment of Averroës (64). "Ecquem tam amentem esse putas, qui illud quo vescatur, Deum credat esse (65). — And who do you think is so senseless, as to believe, that what he eats, is God?" Cicero spoke thus, on account of giving the Name of Ceres to Corn, and

(56) See Reinherm, Epist. 15, ad Holm. pag. 33.

(57) See Gesner's Bibliotheca, fol. 100 verso.

(58) Rapin's Revisions on Philosophy, n. 30, pag. 303.

(59) See Wolfen's Bibliotheca Selecta, lib. 12, cap. 36.

(60) Numm. xxiii, 10.

* Du Perron, de l'Eucharist. lib. 3, cap. 29, p. 973.

(61) Daillé's Reply to Father Adam, and to Calixtus, Part I, chap. 16, pag. 116.

(62) Du Pleſſis's Treatise of the Sacrament, pag. 1106.

† Averroës.

(63) Drelincourt, Dial. 9, against the Missionaries on the Service of the Reformed Churches, p. 305, 306.

(64) Id. Dial. 6, p. 236.

(65) Cicero de Nat. Deor. lib. 3, cap. 16, pag. 413.

That

only to have despised the Jewish, and the Christian, but also the Mahometan, Religion, which was what he outwardly professed. Several Authors have taken the Pains

That of Bacchus, to Wine: "Cum fruges Cererem, vinum Liberum dicimus, genere nos quidem sermonis utimur usitato (66). — When we call

(66) Id. ib.

"Corn Ceres, and Wine Bacchus, we use them only as customary Expressions." Father Lescaupier confesses, that This illustrious Pagan is very rational, when he argues in This manner, in regard to Ceres, (67) Lescaupier in Cic. de Nat. Deor. pag. 622.

and Bacchus: "But, adds he (67), it is an extraordinary Wisdom, under Christianity, to eat what we believe to be God, and we look upon Those as guilty of a most senseless and stupid Infidelity, who do not take the Words of Jesus Christ, This is my Body, literally, and who, by way of Ridicule, object to us these Words of Cicero. Amen-

(68) Id. ib.

tissimæ ac solidissimæ infidelitatis damnamus hæreticos homines, qui Christi Domini, hoc est ipsius veritatis, planissima disertissimaque verba, &c. (68). — Illud Academicum sublatum cachinnis procaciter usurpant, Academicorum, non Fidelium nepotes: Eque-

(69) Id. ib.

quem tam amentem esse putas qui illud, quo vestatur, Deum credat esse? At cum Apolocho Catholici respondemus: Nos fulti propter Christum; utinam vos sitis prudentes in Christo (69). — They, who reproach us with This Academic Fear, are the Defendants of the Academics, and not of the Faithful. Who, think you, can be so mad, as to take That, which he eats, to be God? We Catholics answer, with the Apostle, We are Fools for Christ's sake, would to God ye were wise in Christ. It is not our Business to examine here into the Merits of these Reflexions; we are only considering the Sentiments of Averroës. I observe, that Possius has only spoken in general of this Philosopher's Contempt of the Christian Religion; he has not considered it in particular, as arising from Transubstantiation. "Quam parum viderit tantus Philosophus in verâ & unicâ salutis viâ, arguit illud quod diceret, malle se animam suam esse cum (70) Vossius de Philosoph. Sectis, cap. 17, pag. 91.

Philosophis, quam cum Christianis (70). — How little so great a Philosopher understood of the true and only Means of Salvation, is evident from his saying, That he had rather his Soul were with the Philosophers, than with the Christians." Some say, that Averroës was born a Christian, but that he first turned Jew, and afterwards Mahometan. De Christianis Judæis, de Judæo factis est Mahometanus (71). Others say, that he wrote against the three great Legislators, Moses, JESUS CHRIST, and Mahomet; and that he supplied the Materials of the Book de tribus Impostoribus — of the three Impostors (72).

(71) Anton. Simonius, de Immortal. Animæ, pag. 29.

Others observe, That he never believed there were any Devils (73); and that therefore Cardan does violence to his Doctrine, when he introduces an Evil Spirit, who calls himself one of his Disciples and Followers (74). Nothing can be pronounced with greater Warmth, than This Sentence, or With, of Erasmus: Utinam prodisset ingens illud opus adversus Averroën impium, καὶ τῆς κατάρατος (75). — Would to God, That great Work were once published against the impious, and thrice accursed, Averroës. He wrote this to one, who had informed him, that his great Book against Averroës was printed. "Alterum magnum opus sectum in libros sex & quadraginta ex Peripateticâ disciplinâ consecimus adversus Averroë, quod etiam excusum est (76). — The other great Work, containing Forty six Books, on the Doctrine of the Peripatetics, we have composed against Averroës; and it is now printed." How comes it, then, that Erasmus wishes for the Publication of it? Is it not a Sign, that, in answering his Friends, he had not always their Letters before him, and so forgot some Particulars in them? Be it as it will, his Wish puts me in mind of one of Petrarch's Letters, wherein he exhorts a learned Divine to confute Averroës, That mad Dog, who barks so furiously against JESUS CHRIST. Petrarch adds, that he had made some Collections for such a Work: but, that he neither had the Leisure, nor Knowledge, which was required for it. He calls the Silence of so many great Men, on this Occasion, impious; and desires that the Work, which he exhorts his Friend to compose, may be dedicated to himself, though he should happen to be in his Grave. "Extremum quæso, ut cum primum perveneris, quod suspiras, quod citò

(72) Erasmus, Epist. 20, lib. 10, pag. 532.

fore confido, contra ætatem illum rabidum Averroë, qui, furore canis insando, contra Dominum suum CHRISTUM, contraque Catholicam Fident latrat, collectis undique blasphemis ejus, quod æ scis, jam cœperamus, sed me ingens semper, & nunc solito major occupatio, nec minor temporis, quam scientiæ, retrahit inopia, totis ingeni viribus ac nervis incumbens, rem à multis magnis viris impie neglectam, opusculum unum scribas, & mihi illud inscribas, seu tunc vivus ero, seu interitum abiero (77). — My last Request is, that, as soon as you are settled to your work, which I hope you will be very shortly, you will undertake, with your whole Strength, what has hitherto been so impiously neglected by so many great Men, a Work against That mad Dog Averroës, who, transported with an impious Rage, barks against his Lord CHRIST, and against the Catholic Faith, wherein the World may see a full Collection of all his Blasphemies, which, you know, I had begun myself, but have been prevented by a continual Interruption of Business, now greater than ever, and by want of Leisure, as well as of Ability. Which Work I beg you will dedicate to me, whether living or dead, at the Time of its Publication." Let us also quote Mr du Plessis; "Aristotle is said by many to have had but little Religion, and his Interpreter, Averroës, none at all — (78). We all know how particularly Averroës presses the Eternity of the World, and an Universal Intellect, which can never be consistent with Piety (79)."

(73) Ambrósio Leo, Epist. ad E. rasm. This Letter is the 28th of the 10th Book, among those of Erasmus, &c. 531.

To finish This Picture of Averroës's Irreligion, we must not forget the Touches, which may be given it, from his Hypothesis concerning the Soul of Man. It is certain, he did not admit of any Rewards, or Punishments, after this Life; for, to speak properly, he taught the Mortality of the Human Soul. I am sensible, he acknowledged, that the Understanding was of an eternal Nature, and never died: But then, in this Respect, he did not consider it as a Substance appropriated to every Man; and, consequently, tho' he confessed, that the first Cause of the Intellectual Operations of Peter and Paul subsisted after their Death, yet, nevertheless, he believed, that all that had particularly belonged to Peter and Paul, as well to the Body, as the Soul, ceased to live, when they died. So that he denied Heaven and Hell. Vossius, who very well understood This Doctrine, ought not to have charged it absolutely on Mirandulanus, since That Author does not adopt it as true in itself, but only as a lawful Interpretation of Aristotle's Words (80). Durst any one have declared, in Print, for an impious Opinion, which must expose him to the Fires of the Inquisition? The Passage of Vossius, which I am going to quote, will serve to shew, that the most learned Writers do not always distinguish as they ought to do. Sometimes they impute to a Philosopher, not what he absolutely believes, but what he says must be believed, in consequence of the Opinions of Aristotle, or of some other Founder of a Sect. "Bis: nam jubet considerare hominis intellectum (Averroës), ut est intellectus, & ut est forma, quam obtinet, dum nobis unitur. Priori modo ait cum à morte nostrâ superesse, quippe æternum: nec dare homini essentiam, sed uni illi per operationem suam phantasmatum interventu. Hanc sententiam etiam sequitur Antonius Mirandulanus evers. singul. certam. lib. xxxii. sect. 1. & lib. seq. sect. ii. & vi. Similitere Cardanus; quem propterea reprehendit, ac refellit Cæsar Scaliger. Exercit. cccvi (81), sect. 30. Et sanè æ sententia Scripturis è diametro averfat; ut quæ suam cuique animam, sua etiam à morte præmia, & pœnas adsignent (82). — He (Averroës) considers the Intellect of Man in two Lights, as it is the Intellect itself, and as it is the Form, which is produced by its Union with us. In the first respect, he says, it survives us, being eternal; nor does it make the Essence of a Man, but is only united to him in its Operation, by the Intervention of Ideas. This Opinion is also followed by Antonius Mirandulanus, evers. singul. certam. lib. 32. sect. 1. & lib. 33. sect. 2. & 6. And also by Cardan, who is animadverted on, and confuted by Cæsar Scaliger Exerc.

(77) Franc. Petrarcha, Epistolâ ultimâ Libri sine titulo, pag. 656.

(78) Du Pless. Morali, of the Truth of the Christian Religion, cap. 23, fol. 238, verso.

(79) Id. ib. fol. 239.

(80) Sre, a-bove, Remark [E], Citat. (23), what I have quoted from the Œuvres of Cœsar.

(81) It should be cccvii.

(82) Vossius de Origine & Progressu Idololatriæ, lib. 3, cap. 42, p. 952.

Pains to translate his Works into Latin [I]. I was in hopes, that, before This Article went to the Press, I should have had the Pleasure of consulting the Volume, where Don Nicholas Antonio has spoken so very amply of Averroës; but find myself disappointed of it, and confined to the Abstracts only of the Journalist of Paris. You are going to see what I take from thence. "Averroës, of Corduba, was instructed, by his Father, in the Knowledge of the Law, and in the Religion of his Country. He was excessive fat, tho' he allowed himself but one Meal a day; He passed all his nights in the study of Philosophy; and, when he found himself tired, diverted himself with reading some Book of Poetry, or History; He was never seen to play, or seek any other Amusement. The Errors he was accused of gave occasion for a Sentence, which deprived him of his Estate, and obliged him to recant. After his Condemnation, he took a Voyage to Fez, and returned afterwards to Corduba, where he continued, till, at the earnest request of the People, he was recalled to Morocco, where he passed the remainder of his Life, and died in "1206 (d)." The Journalists of Leipsic intimate, That Don Nicholas Antonio, in this part of his Work, made great use of a Book of John Leo, published by Hottinger (e). So that, as to This I can go to the Fountain Head as well as He. I find, therefore, in this Work, that the People of Corduba raised Averroës to two high Offices, which his Father and Grandfather had enjoyed [K]: They were Those of Chief Justice, and

(d) Journal of the Learned of the 28th of July, 1697, pag. 475. Edit. of Holland.

(e) Acta Erudit. Lips. 1697, pag. 305.

"Exerc. 306. sect. 30. And indeed this Opinion is directly opposite to the Scriptures, which assign to every one his own respective Soul, and his own respective Rewards and Punishments after Death."

[I] Several Authors have taken the Pains to translate his Works into Latin. Here is a Passage of Huetius, which will inform us of the Names of some of These Translators, and at the same time of a Mistake of Scaliger. "Vix ulos Averroës Arabicos codices in Europa reperiri posse putabat Scaliger, solamque conversionem ab Armegando Blasio, Jacobo Mantino, Johanne Francisco Burana, Abrahamo de Balmis, Vitale Nisso, Calo Calonymo, Johanne Bruyerino Campegio, Paulo Israelita, aliisque adornatam in lucem venisse. Ego tamen his versavi manibus Arabicum Averroës librum, ex oriente huc olim à Postellio devesctum; quod miror Scaligerum fugisse, Postellum olim amicitia, & literaria consuetudine conjunctum. Eo libro continentur in Logicam, Rhetoricam, & Poeticam commentaria; quæ ad Jacobi Mantini, & Abrahami de Balmis interpretationem à me expensa, fidem eorum & artem aperte mihi comprobant (83). ----- Scaliger believed, that there was scarce such a Thing as an Arabic Copy of Averroës, to be met with in all Europe, and that we had nothing more than the Translations of him, by Armegandus Blasius, Jacobus Mantinus, Johannes Franciscus Burana, Abrahamus de Balmis, Vitalis Nissus, Calus Calonymus, Johannes Bruyerinus Campegius, Paulus Israelita, and others. But I myself have seen an Arabic Averroës, which was formerly brought thither, out of the East, by Postellus; and which one would wonder that Scaliger should never hear of, who was his intimate Friend and Correspondent in Learning. In this Book are contained the Commentaries on Logic, Rhetoric, and Poetry; which, upon my Examination of it, along with the Translations of Jacobus Mantinus, and Abrahamus de Balmis, has convinced me both of their Fidelity and Ability."

(83) Huetius, de Clariss. Interpretibus, p. 185.

(84) See the Bibliotheca Rabinica of Father Bartolucci, Tom. 1, pag. 33, & seq.

(85) Postellus, Biblioth. Select. lib. 12, cap. 16, pag. 43. Tom. 2.

(86) Id. lib.

Note, that certain Rabbins have translated some of Averroës's Works into Hebrew (84). It is proper to observe here, what we meet with in Poestlin. That Jesuit affirms, That They, who were so fond of This Arabian Philosopher, could only read him in pitiful Translations, before the Edition, which John Baptista Bagolin got printed at Venice, by the Junta's in the Year 1552 (85). That Edition, continues he, cannot be worth much; for, as to one part of Averroës's Works, Bagolin made use of a Translation of a Jew, named Jacobus Mantinus; and, as for the other part, the preceding Translations were made use of, and even Those, which Niphus and Zimara had never corrected in their Labours on Averroës. The Translator Mantinus followed the Steps of Abraham de Balmis, who had succeeded very indifferently. So that we cannot promise ourselves, that a Translator who had such bad Guides, has rightly expressed the Original: And, as Bagolin did not understand any thing of Arabic, he could be no judge of Those Translations (86). I am going to copy a long Passage of Keckerman, where he wishes, that God would raise up a Translator, who might deliver the Works of Averroës from the gross and obscure Barbarity of former Interpretations. Then would appear the great Services, which This Arabian has done to Philosophy. "Quid & quantum Univerſæ Philoſophiæ Averroës ille profuerit, tum clarum perſpectumque haberemus, ſi quem nobis Deus virum excitaret, qui Latinam ejus verſionem ab iſta, qua ſcætet undique, moleſta barbarie liberaret, & ſtylo Latino ſaltem mediocri & intelligibili in gratiam Philoſophiæ ſtudioſorum venteret. Ad quam rem illa, quæ nuper Avicennam Arabicum nitidiſſimis typis dedit clariffima Typographia Medicea plurimum adjumenti adferret, ſi lingua Arabica Averroës ederet, atque ita occaſionem viris ejus linguæ peritis faciliorem præberet barbaræ verſionis emendandæ, & ad intelligentiam traducendæ: alias certum eſt, Averroës à multis neglectum iri, à quibus legeretur diligenter, niſi tam multis locis non intelligeretur. In poſterioribus Anal. apparet ſingulare operam præſtitiffe & immortalitate digniſſimam; Et Epitome Logicæ, quam ſcriptiſt, laudatiſſima eſt ob varias cauſas, ut & Logica ejus quæſita. Nemo tam interpretum veterum videri poteſt proximus Ariſtotelis menti atque hic Arabs (87). — How much all Philosophy is indebted to Averroës, can then only be known, when God ſhall raiſe up a Genius, who will free our Latin Translations of him from the unintelligible Barbariſms every where to be met with, and render him in That Language, in a Style, at leaſt tolerable, and intelligible, for the Uſe of Students in Philoſophy. To this purpoſe, the late beautiful Medicean Edition would greatly contribute, if Averroës were alſo printed in Arabic, which would give an eaſy Opportunity to the Learned, in That Language, to correct That barbarous Translation, and make it intelligible: otherwiſe it is certain, Averroës will be neglected by many, who would read him very diligently, if he was not unintelligible in ſo many Places. In the latter Part of the Anal. it appears, he has performed an excellent Work, and ſuch as deſerves to be immortal: His Epitome of Logic is much admired, and his Logic greatly ſought after. None of the ancient Interpreters ſeem to hit the Senſe of Ariſtotele ſo happily as this Arabian. I doubt there are not many Perſons at this time of Day, who would make ſuch a Wiſh, or ground ſuch fair Hopes on a complete Translation of Averroës's Works, or give him ſuch great Commendations.

[K] The People of Corduba raised Averroës to two high Offices, which his Father and Grandfather had enjoyed. His Grandfather was one of the moſt famous Lawyers of his Time; he paſſed for a ſecond Malich, who was One of the four greateſt Caſuiſts of the Mahometan Religion; and was moreover a learned Divine. It was He, whom the People of Corduba, ſhaking off the Yoke of their Prince, and deſiring to have the King of

(87) K. Keckermanus in Præconitio Logica, Tract. 2, cap. 2, n. 32, pag. 103.

(88) Huetius, Biblioth. oth. Theol. lib. 2, cap. 3, pag. 274.

Morocco

and of Chief Priest. He was very capable of discharging them, by his great Knowledge in the Law, and in Theology. After the Study of These two Sciences, he applied himself to Natural Philosophy; Physic, Astrology, and Mathematics. Whilst he held the Offices before mentioned, the King of Morocco sent Deputies to him, to offer him That of Judge of Morocco, and of all Mauritania, and on condition that he should continue all the Posts he was possessed of in Spain. This Proposition pleasing him, he went to Morocco; but, having settled Judges there as his Substitutes, he returned to Corduba. Wonders are related of his Patience, Liberality, and Mildness [L]. He referred all Criminal Causes to his Lieutenant, and never gave his Opinion in them. So many good Qualities did not hinder him from having many Enemies, who thwarted him extremely, and accused him of Heresy; which brought upon him many troublesome and grievous Consequences [M]: however, he was honourably delivered Morocco their Master, deputed to That Monarch to negotiate That great Affair. He obtained, of him, all the Favours he asked, in behalf of Those Mutineers, and returned to them, laden with Presents, and Compliments, having been created Chief Priest, and Chief Judge of the Kingdom of Corduba. He died, after having enjoyed These Dignities a very long time, and left a Son, who was a Lawyer, and was preferred to the same Posts, by the Votes of the Inhabitants of Corduba. This Election being confirmed by the King of Morocco, our Lawyer found himself invested with a high Character. We find, that the Authority of his Offices extended over all Andalusia, and the Kingdom of Valencia. His Life was long, and pleasant. After his Death, his Offices were conferred on his Son Averroës, by the Votes of the People (89). It is remarkable, that, at the Request of several great Persons, who implored his Clemency in favour of Ibnu Saigh, a famous Physician, who was detained in Prison for the Crime of Heresy, he set him at Liberty; during which Proceeding, Ibnu Giulgiul said, The Father of Averroës does not know, that he has a Son, who will be a greater Heretic than This (90). And he was not deceived in it.

[L] Wonders are related of his Patience, Liberality, and Mildness. There were several Persons, among the Nobility and Learned Men at Corduba, who hated, and opposed, him. As he was one Day reading a Lecture, in the Auditory of the Civil Law, a Servant of one of his Enemies came and whispered something in his Ear, which made him change Colour; but he answered only Yes, Yes. The next Day the same Servant returned to the Auditory, asked his Pardon, and confessed, before all the Students, that he had abused Averroës grossly by whispering in his Ear: He answered, God bless you, for declaring, that I am provided with Patience. He gave him afterwards a certain Sum of Money, with this Advice, Do not That to others, which you have done to me. Though he was rich, both by his Marriage, and by his Offices, yet he was always in debt, because he was very liberal to learned Men, who were necessitous, whether they loved, or hated, him. One Day, as his Friends reproved him for distributing his Wealth amongst his Enemies, he said to them, "Unhappy Men, as you are, you do not know, that to do good to one's Relations, and Friends, is not an Act of Liberality; a Man is inclined to That by the Dictates of Nature: to be liberal, is to communicate our Substance to our Enemies; and, since my Riches have not been acquired, either by my Ancestors, or myself, by Merchandize, or Art, or Arms, but by the Profession of Virtue, is it not reasonable, that I should dispose of them in Acts of Virtue? I find, that I have not misplaced them, for they have converted my Enemies into Friends (91)." Add to this, what I have said concerning his Sobriety, his Vigilancy, his Application to Study, &c (92). He would not consent, that his youngest Son should be advanced to the Honours, which were offered him at the Court of Morocco: and he was so far from rejoicing at the Respect, which was shewed to That young Man, the Design of which was to please the Father, that he was troubled at it in good earnest (93). What pity is it, that so many Virtues, and so many good Qualities, were not accompanied with Orthodoxy, but on the contrary attended with the most enormous Errors! The Writings of his Adversaries pretend not to defame him of any Thing, but his Heresy, and the Panegyrics of his Admirers are founded only on his Virtue and Learning, &c. "Hic à multis laudatus, à nonnullis vero aliis vituperio affectus est

" --- Adversarius ejus scriptis epistolam, quâ vituperabatur Averroës, eum de hæresi infamando, & alius
" scriptis aliam laudando eum de nobilitate, justitia " & doctrina: quæ quidem epistolæ sunt longissimæ (94). — He was commended by many, and
" condemned by others. — One of his Enemies wrote
" a severe Letter against Averroës, defaming him on " account of Heresy; and another Person wrote one in " Commendation of him for his Honour, Justice, and " Learning: These Letters are very long. (94) Ibid.

[M] His Enemies accused him of Heresy; which brought upon him many --- grievous Consequences. Several of the Nobles and Doctors of Corduba, and particularly the Physician Ibnu Zaar, envied him, and resolved to prosecute him for Heresy. They procured some young Persons to desire of him a Lecture in Philosophy; he agreed to it, and, in That Lecture, discovered to them his Philosophical Belief. Inter legendum autem suam Philosophicalem fidem detexerunt (95). They caused an Information of it to be drawn up by a Notary, and accused him for an Heretic; which Information, being signed by an hundred Witnesses, was sent to Mansor, King of Morocco. That Prince, upon sight of it, became incensed against Averroës, and said aloud; It is evident This Man is not of our Religion: Hunc nostræ legis non esse patet. He caused all his Effects to be confiscated, and condemned him to keep within the Jews Quarters. Averroës obeyed: but, going sometimes to the Mosque to say his Prayers, and being one Day chased from thence by the Children with Stones, he retired from Corduba to Fez, where he kept himself concealed. But, in a few Days, he was discovered, and imprisoned; and they sent to Mansor, to know what should be done with him. That Prince assembled several Doctors of Divinity, and Civil Law, and enquired of them what Punishment such a Man deserved? Most of them answered, That, as an Heretic, he deserved Death; but some represented, that it was not proper to execute This Punishment on a Person, who was chiefly known from his Character of a Civilian, and a Divine; Because, said they, the World will not understand it to be the Condemnation of an Heretic, but of a Civilian and a Divine: And the Consequence will be, I. That the Infidels will not embrace our Faith, to the Discouragement of our Religion. II. Complaints will be made, that the African Doctors seek opportunity to take away one another's Lives. It would be better to make him retract before the Gate of the great Mosque, where he shall be asked, if he repents: Our Advice is, that, if he repents, your Majesty should pardon him; for there is no Man on Earth that is without a Fault. Mansor was pleased with this Counsel, and gave Orders to the Governor of Fez to put it in Execution. Accordingly, our Philosopher was conducted, on a Friday, to the Gate of the Mosque, at the Hour of Prayer, and placed bareheaded on the highest Step, where all Those, who entered into the Mosque, spit in his Face. Prayer being ended, the Doctors, with the Notaries, and the Judge, with his Assistants, came, and asked this miserable Wretch, if he repented of his Heresy: he answered in the Affirmative; whereupon he was sent back, and continued at Fez, where he read Lectures in the Civil Law. Mansor, having permitted him, some time after, to return to Corduba, he accordingly went thither, where he lived miserably, being deprived of his Estate and Books. In the mean time, the Judge, who had succeeded him, acquitted himself so ill in his Office, and Justice, in general, was so badly administered in That Country, (89) Taken from a Book, De Viris quibusdam illustribus apud Arabes, translated into Latin by Joh. Leo A. Brucanus, and published by Hottinger, Biblioth. Theolog. cap. 3. pag. 272.

(90) Ibid. pag. 269.

(91) Hottinger, Biblioth. Theolog. lib. 2. c. 3. p. 273, 274.

(92) Above, in the Text of this Article, at the Passage out of the Journal des Savans, Citations (d).

(93) Apud Hottinger, Biblioth. Theolog. pag. 274, 275.

(f) Taken from a Book, De Viris illustribus apud Arabes, translated by Joh. Leo Africanus, and published by Hottinger, in chap. 3. of the 2d Book of his Biblioth. Theol.

delivered from them before he died. His Answer to a young Gentleman, who desired him to bestow his Daughter on him, is curious enough [N]. A very remarkable Story is told concerning the effect of an Imprecation he pronounced against his youngest Son [O]. He composed a great many Amorous Poems; which, when he grew old, he threw into the Fire (f) [P]. I cannot tell from whence Du Verdier Vau-Privas borrowed these Words: Averroës was broke by a Wheel placed on his Breast. You (106) Ibid. pag. 276, & seq.

(97) Ibid. pag. 279.

(98) Ibid.

(99) Ibid. pag. 278.

(100) Ibid. pag. 275.

(101) Comparationem ejus vidi, fratrem scilicet ejus. Ibid.

(102) Timeo te eam non cognovisse ob impetum tuum. Ibid. f. 8. 276.

(103) Ibid.

(104) Juvenis quidam ex nobilissimis civitatibus. H. d. f. 8. 275.

that the People groaned under it. Manfor, being willing to redress This Grievance, assembled his Council, where he proposed to re-establish Averroës; and, most of the Council being of the same Opinion, he sent him an Order to come immediately to Morocco, to take upon him again his Station of chief Magistrate. Averroës departed forthwith, with all his Family, and passed the rest of his Days at Morocco (96), where he was buried without the Carriers Gate (97), and where his Tomb and Epitaph were to be seen a very long Time after (98).

We ought not to forget his Answer to Those, who asked him about the State of his Soul during This Persecution. That State, said he, both pleased, and displeased me: I was pleased with being discharged from the troublesome Functions of Judicature, but I was displeased at being oppressed by false Witnesses. He added, I have never wished to be restored to my Office, nor have I accepted it again without my Innocence being first cleared (99).

[N] His Answer to a young Gentleman, who desired him to bestow his Daughter on him, is curious enough.] "Give me her, says this Gallant, and I will give you her weight in Gold. O domine Judex, da mihi in uxorem filiam tuam, Et quanti eam ponderaveris itidem aurum tibi tradam (100). Can you tell, answered Averroës, whether my Daughter be handsome, or homely? do you know whether you shall like her? The other replied, I have seen her "Copy, I mean her Brother (101). I am afraid," said Averroës, your too great Heat is hurrying you "into a blind Bargain (102). The young Man went away ashamed, and never had the Courage to make a second Attack. That Daughter was afterwards married by her Father to a Relation of the King of Morocco (103). When I said, that Averroës's Answer was curious, I had an Eye to two things; in the first place to the Circumstances, and in the next to the Obscurity of the Translator. I suspect the Passage to be wrong rendered. He was not well acquainted with the Latin Tongue: for, in all probability, there was some better Turn in the Arabic words, than what he has given us in the Translation; and therefore the Learned, who are curious, will like to have the Examination of this little Fact proposed to them. It is something very extraordinary to meet with a Gallant, who will barter his Gold, weight for weight, against a Maid he never saw. The Price must rise very high, even in Spain, where People are much leaner, than in many other Countries. Averroës would have done well to have asked the Gallant this Question; Do you know whether my Daughter be small, or lusty? This had been a very material Consideration; because, in the second Case, the Price must be higher, and yet the Value lower. According to our Customs, nothing would be more wonderful, than a Gallant, who had never seen the Daughter of the chief Magistrate of the place, where he lived: but, amongst the Mahometans, nothing is more common: they do not permit their Daughters to shew themselves at the Windows and Doors of their Houses, nor to run about from one House to another, and receive Visits every Day. And yet it is certainly remarkable, that this noble Corduban (104) should know no better, than by Conjecture, whether Averroës's Daughter was handsome. These are some of the Circumstances, to which I had an Eye.

[O] A very remarkable Story is told, concerning the Effect of an Imprecation he pronounced against his youngest Son.] The following Quotation, which composes this Remark, loses most of it's Beauties in a Translation. It is observable from it, that Averroës wished rather to see the Death of his Son, than his disobedience, and that, thereupon, he uttered an Imprecation, which That young Man outlived but ten Months. This long Latin Passage is not taken from Hottinger; for I find it more correct in another Author. "De Verroës carminum efficacia, hanc "historiam historicus Arabs refert: Quadam die eo "exillente cum amicis quibusdam, colloquentibusque, "ingressus est filius ejus cum aliquibus sociis juveni- "bus, quos cum animadvertisset Averroës, protulit "duo carmina, hujus sensus: Rapuerunt pulchritu- "dines tuæ capreolo pulchritudinem suam, donec "miratus est omnis pulcher in te: Tibi est pectus "ejus, & oculi ejus, & stupor ejus; Verum cras "cornua tua patri tuo erunt. Post quæ dixit, Sit "maledicta peregrinatio: quando eram juvenis, se- "quando patrem meum puniebam: Nunc autem Ali- "nex filium meum punire non possum. At deum "deprecor, ut priusquam videam aliquid contra vo- "luntatem meam, cum mori faciat. Sicque prius- "quam transiret menses decem filius ejus mortuus "est, & major solus remansit, qui judex opinionis & "sectæ effectus est (105). — Of the Power of "Averroës's Poetry, an Arabic Historian relates this "Story. One Day, as he was conversing with cer- "tain Friends, his Son came in with some of his wild "Companions, which Averroës taking notice of, spoke "two Verses to This Effect. Thy own Beauties could "not content Thee, thou hast stript the wild Goat "of his Beauties, and They, who are as beautiful as "thyself, admire thee. Thou hast got his wanton "Heart, his lecherous Eyes, and his senseless Head, "but to-morrow thou shalt find thy Father will have "his pushing Horns. After which he said, cursed be "all Extravagancies: When I was young, I sometimes "punished my Father: Now I am old, I cannot punish "my Son. But I beg of God to deprive him rather of "Life, than suffer him to be disobedient. Accordingly, "within ten Months, his Son died, and the eldest "only remained, who became a Defender of his Opini- "on and Sect." Bartholin, who furnishes me with this Passage, unreasonably imputes the great Effect, we are speaking of, to the Philosopher's Verses, which ought only to be imputed to the Imprecation pronounced by Averroës in Prose. Compilers have collected many Examples of the Effects of such Imprecations (106).

[P] When he grew old, he threw his amorous Verses into the Fire.] His Speech, which accompanied This Act, is full of wise Reflexions: A Man, says he, will always be judged by his Words; and, if I have spoken ill, I will not discover my Folly: If my Verses pleased any One, He would take me for a wise Man, and I do not acknowledge that I am so. You see here a good Character. Averroës, having committed a Fault, was willing to repair it; and equally declined both the Approbation, which he thought he did not deserve, and the Censure he feared he might deserve. His Love Verses would have met with a numerous Set of Admirers, who would have blessed his Memory, and even adored it. Ovid and Catullus are Examples of this. But he desired none of their Praises. Others would have thought it very indecent, that such a great Person, such an excellent Lawyer and Philosopher, should have wrote Love Verses. But he has prevented their Censure, by taking Care, that no One should read what he had composed on such a Subject. All his other Poetical Works are lost, except a very small Piece, wherein he declares, that, when he was young, he was disobedient to his Reason; but, when he was old, he followed it: Upon which he forms this With: Would to God I had been born old, and that from my Youth I had been in the State of Perfection. This seems to me to be the true Sense of these Words of John Leo (107). De suis quidem Carminibus tantum duo reperiuntur ad verbum significantibus: "Inbe- "diens enim sui voluntati mea juvenis, ac, quando "tempus cum caliditate senectutis agitavit me, tum "parvi voluntati mee. Utinam natus fuisset senex, "et in juventute abjulus (108). What With could be more becoming a Philosopher?

Let us now relate what Averroës did, in regard to the amorous Verses of another Writer. There was

(105) Tho. Bartholinus, de Medicis Poetis, pag. 105, 106.

(106) See Camerarius, in his Historical Meditations, Tom. 3, Book 5, chap. 6. and Tom. 3, Book 2, chap. 150, 16.

(107) Hottinger. Bibl. Theol. pag. 278.

(108) In Juventute abjulus. Per Translator put in instead of ab, and so it might be translated Exempt from Youth.

You will find them in a Chapter, which he entitles, Of several Learned Men, Ancient and Modern, who have died miserably (g). I was surprized to find so very little Notice taken of this famous Philosopher, in the Oriental Library of Mr d'Herbelot [2]. There was reason to believe, that a Man, of such a vast Knowledge in Arabic Learning, would have produced a thousand fine Things concerning the Doctrines and Fortune of Averroës; but, instead of this, we meet with a Brevity, which is amazing, and so far from instructing us in what we want to know, that it rather confounds what we knew before.

(g) It is the author of the 2d Book of his Diversion Leçons.

was, at Corduba, a Philosopher, Physician, and Astrologer, whose Name was Abraham Ibnu Sabal, who, by the Caprice of his ill Fortune, fell in Love, and fell to writing Verses, without considering the Doctoral Dignity. Postea ob disgratiam suam fortunæ amore captus, & dignitate doctorum postpositâ cepit edere carmina (109). The Jews, his Brethren in Religion, advised him not to publish Those wanton Verses. He returned them a prophane Answer in Poetry. Whereupon they applied to the Authority of the Magistrate; and, as Averroës was the chief Judge of the Country, they addressed themselves to him. They represented to him, that This Abraham had corrupted the whole City with his Poetry, particularly the Youth of both Sexes, and that nothing else was sung at Nuptial Entertainments. Averroës was angry with Our Poet, and forbade him to proceed in such Compositions, under such Penalties as the Case should require, or the Judge think proper. Being told, that This Prohibition did not put a stop to the Jew's Vein of Poetry, and desiring to know the Truth of it, he sent a Person, he could trust, to the Poet's House, who returned with this Report: I found no Body at his House, but your eldest Son, writing out some of his Poems. He added, There is not in all Corduba a Man, Woman, or Child, who has not learned some of the Verses of Abraham Ibnu Sabal. Upon this, Averroës proceeded no farther: Can one single Hand, said he, stop a thousand Mouths? Observing one Day at a Bookellers, that the Alcoran was sold but for a Ducat, and that the Poems of This Jew went off at one word for ten Pistols (110), he cried out, This City will soon be destroyed, for I have seen the People's Contempt for holy things, and their fondness for such as are dishonest and forbidden.

"Tunc dixit Averroës, omnibus adstantibus, Scitote, hanc Civitatem mox ruituram, quoniam vidi populum, quæ ad fidem pertinent, vilissimæ: atque prohibita, atque inhonesta grata extitisse, majoris- que fecisse. Et sicut dixerat successit: Non adhuc elapsis quinquaginta annis Christianicæ oppugnantur Cordubam, & multas alias civitates (111). — And as he said, so it happened; for, in less than fifty Years, the Christians took This, and several other Cities." From hence it may be gathered, that some Vices prevail in all Countries, Religions, and Ages. The Mohometans of Spain acted the same part, in the XIIIth Century, which a great many Christians of Paris have done in the XVIIth. If they are to buy Mr Godeau's Psalms, they will cheapen a long time, and never bargain, unless at a very low Price; but, for the Satirical Parnassus, they will never make one Word, but give whatever Price the Seller shall ask. Let us also observe, that we find Examples of good Actions in each Country, Age, and Religion. If Christians, in these latter Ages, have burnt their prophane Poems, their Love and wanton Verses (112), Averroës did the like, under the Profession of Mohometism: I say, under the Profession; for it is suspected, that inwardly he was of no Religion at all (113). His Prediction of the Miseries of Corduba does not prove the contrary; for it is natural enough to believe, that so great a Degree of Degeneracy, and Corruption of Taste, as to occasion a Contempt of what is esteemed Holy, and a Fondness of what is thought dishonest, must necessarily throw a City into very great Disorders.

[2] I was surprized to find so very little Notice taken of This famous Philosopher, in the Oriental Library of Mr d'Herbelot. First, It is surprising, that, in this Work, the Author has not placed Our Arabian Philosopher under the Name, which has been given him by all western Nations, I mean That of Averroës. I grant, that This is not the true Name, but One very much corrupted by Confusion of Dialects: But have we not sufficient Reason to continue This Name in our Dictionaries, since he was scarce ever called by any other in This western Part of the World. If it be thought more proper to give This Philosopher's Article under the Arabic Name, in it's true Orthography, Notice, at least, should be given of it, under the Word Averroës; and, consequently, d'Herbelot, by not doing so, is guilty of a very material Omission. In the Body of his Work, we find neither Averroës, nor Aben Roës, nor Aben Rois. We are obliged, therefore, to have recourse to the Index, which is not very agreeable. But what is to be found there? Averroës (114), with a Reference to Pages 303, 719, 815? At Page 303, we find only, that Averroës was one of those Philosophers, who believed, that the World was Eternal. At Page 815, we find only, that Mohammed Al-Gazeli believed, that Averroës's Principles were very contrary to Those of the Muhammadans. But, at Page 719, we find the Article of our Philosopher, under the Word ROSCHD. That Article does not contain twenty Lines; the latter half of which is this: "Averroës was the first, who translated Aristotle out of Greek into Arabic, before the Jews made their Translation; and, for a long time, we had no other Text of Aristotle, than That of This great Philosopher's Arabic Translation, who, afterwards, added to it very ample Commentaries, which St Thomas, and the other Schoolmen, made use of, before the Greek Originals of Aristotle, and of his Commentators, were known to us (115)." I find here many things, to which I can give no Credit; for I observe it to be the Opinion of learned Men, that Averroës was far from being Master of the Greek Tongue (116). I know, farther, that the Caliphs Almanzor, Abdalla, and Almamoon, who preceded Averroës some Centuries, caused a great many Greek Books to be translated into Arabic (117). This, therefore, makes it improbable, that Averroës was the first Translator of Aristotle into Arabic, even though we should suppose him sufficiently skilled in Greek. Alpharabius, who flourished in the Xth Century, found Aristotle's Physics in Mesopotamia (118). He is also generally esteemed the Translator of Aristotle's Analytics, according to Mr d'Herbelot (119). Rigord says, That a Council, held at Paris, in the Year 1209, condemned some of Aristotle's Books to be burnt, which were explained in the Colleges, and had been lately brought from Constantinople, and translated out of Greek into Latin. "Delati de novo à Constantinopoli & à Græco in Latinum translati (120)." This does not agree with Mr d'Herbelot, because it proves, that, about the Time, that Averroës died, they made use, at Paris, of a Translation of Aristotle from the Greek. It is certain, that, before the middle of the XIIIth Century, Aristotle's Philosophy was taught in the University of Paris. See the Complaints of St Bernard, related by Mr de Launois (121). This same Passage of Rigord shews, that the Greek Books of Aristotle were in France, in the time of Averroës. Lastly, I wish somebody would name me any Translators of Aristotle, and Averroës's Arabic Commentary, who lived between Averroës and Thomas Aquinas. All the Latin Translators of This Arabic Philosopher, that are come to my Knowledge, are later than That Angelical Doctor. I would not be understood to reject what I have read in some Authors, that the Emperor Frederic II, who flourished before the Time of St Thomas, and after Averroës, caused the Books of This Arabian to be translated into Latin. This may be inferred from these Words of Cuspinian: "Libros multos ex Græco & ex Arabico Latinos ferri curavit, inter quos & Aristotelis volumina fuerunt & multa Medicorum (122)." — "He procured many Books to be translated out of Greek and Arabic, into Latin, among which were Aristotle's Works, and many others, in Physic;" and from This Passage of Wolfgang Hungerius, in his Notes on Cuspinian (123). "Curavit quoque eas ferri translationes operum Aristotelis, & scriptorum Medicinæ

(114) It is an Error of the Press.

(115) D'Herbelot's Biblioth. Orient. pag. 719, col. 1.

(116) See, above, pag. 383, Citations (5) and (9).

(117) See Favotus Rapi'n's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, p. 403, 404. See also Mr d'Herbelot's Biblioth. Orient. p. 546.

(118) Rapi'n's Comparison of Plato and Aristotle, pag. 404.

(119) Herbelot's Biblioth. Orient. pag. 337.

(120) Rigordus in Philosophi Augusti apud Launoium de variâ Aristot. Fortuna, cap. 1, pag. 6.

(121) Launois, ibid. cap. 3, pag. 24, & seq.

(122) Cuspinian in Fred. II. init. p. 419.

(123) Hungerius. Annotation. in Cuspinian. pag. 150.

(109) Hotting. Biblioth. Theol. pag. 283.

(110) Prædictus emptor nihil respondens, sed manus crumenæ imponens decem aureos numeravit & perfolvit, & librum accepit, & in pace recessit. — The Buyer said nothing, but put his Hand in his Pocket, and took out ten Pistols, and went away contented. Ib. p. 290.

(111) Ibid.

(112) Pic. Mirandulani did it; see the End of the Remark [D] of the Article. ADONIS. Petrarch had a Mind to do so: See Mr Baillet's Judgment on the Poets, Tom. 3, pag. 24. He reported that he had wrote such Poems. See his third Letter of the eighth Book of his Familiar Letters, pag. 278.

(113) See the Remarks [H] and [M].

- "Medicinæ ex lingua Græca & Arabica, qui in hunc usque diem in scholis lætæ sunt, atque etiam leguntur; & Bononiam easdem misit, ut Academicæ offerrentur, quod ejus ex Epistolis apparet. — He caused those Translations to be made of the Works of Aristotle, and other Writings in Physic, out of the Greek and Arabic Languages, which have been read ever since in the Schools, and are in use at this Time; and sent them to Bononia, as a Present to That University, as appears from his Letters." See also the Chronicle of Carion (124), where he says expressly, that This Emperor caused to be translated the Almagest of Ptolemy, and several Works of Aristotle, Galen, Avicenna, &c. (125); you will find the same Names in the Theatre of Mathias (126), under the Quotation of the seventh Book of Aventine's Annals, and of the Chronicle of Ca-
- (124) Pag. 480.
(125) Perceer in Chronic. Carion, lib. 5, pag. 684.
(126) Pag. 956.

rios. I do not know how it happens, that Averroës is not named; however, I take him to have been one, amongst the Authors, translated, by the Care of This Emperor. But, as I said before, I should be very glad to know the Names of the Persons employed in these Translations. One thing is worth remarking, in Mr Herbelot's Bibliothèque, which is, that the Mahometans look upon the Doctrine of Those who, admitting a First Mover, maintain also, that the World is eternal, as mere Atheism (127). This Doctrine is ascribed to the most famous Philosophers, who have flourished among the Arabians, to our Averroës, to Avicenna, and to Alpharabius (128). The Christians generally pass the same Judgment upon This Doctrine, which, certainly, can never be supported, without treating the Holy Scripture as a Fable.

- (127) Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. pag. 337, col. 2.
(128) Id. ib. & pag. 303, col. 1.

AUGE (DANIEL d'), in Latin Augentius, was born at Villeneuve-l'Archevêque, in the Diocese of Sens in Champagne (a). He lived in the XVth Century, and was esteemed for his Learning and Writings [A]. He was appointed, in the Year 1574 (b), to the Office of his Majesty's Greek Professor in the University of Paris, which was vacant by the Death of Lewis le Roi (c). He had been Tutor to the Son of That Francis Olivier, who was Chancellor of France. This appears from the Epistle Dedicatory of a Book to Antony Olivier, Bishop of Lombes, and Uncle to his Pupil (d). It is dated at Paris, the First of March 1555. I am not certain as to the Time of his Death; I only know, that Francis Parent, his Successor in the Greek Professorship, entered upon That Office in the Year 1595 (e).

- (d) It is the Poem of Sannazarius, intitled, De Morie Christi Lamentatio. Dan. d'Auge printed it at Paris, with his Notes, in the Year 1557, in 4to.

- (e) Du Breul, Antiquitez de Paris, p. 566.

[A] He was esteemed for his Writings. They are A Consolatory Oration on the Death of Messire Francis Olivier, Chancellor of France, printed at Paris in 1560; Two Dialogues of Poetic Invention, of the true Knowledge of the Art of Oratory, and of the Filiation of Fable, printed at Paris, in 1560; A Discourse on the Arrêt of the Parliament of Dole in Burgundy, concerning a Man accused and convicted of being a Were-wolf † (1); The Institution of a Christian Prince, translated from the Greek of Synechus, Bishop of Cyrene, with an Oration on true Nobility, translated from the Greek of Philo Judæus, printed at Paris, in 1555; Four Homilies of St Macarius, the Egyptian, printed at Paris, and afterwards at Lyons, in 1559; An Epistle to the Noble and Virtuous Youth, Anthony Thelin, Son of the Noble William Thelin (2), Author of the Book intitled, Divine Essays, wherein is shown the true Patrimony and Inheritance, which Fathers ought to leave their Children. This Epistle is printed at the beginning of the Divine Essays, at Paris, in 1565. He revised and corrected them. He published also A Translation, into French, of the most beautiful Sentences, and Forms of Expression, in Cicero's Familiar Epistles, printed at Paris, in 1556 (3). This is all I find in la Croix du Maine, and in du Verdier. I do not meet with any mention of the Notes on the Poem of Sannazarius, which I have spoken of, in the Body of this Article.

Of all the Works of Daniel d'Auge, I esteem most curious the Discourse on the Arrêt, which condemns the Were-Wolf. Bodin says, This Arrêt was passed by the Parliament of Dole, the eighteenth of January, 1583, against Giles Garnier of Lyons, and was printed at Orleans, at Paris, and at Sens. He relates the principal Circumstances. "Namely, That the said Garnier, on St Michael's Day, in the Shape of a Wolf, did seize upon a young Girl of ten or twelve Years old, near the Wood of Serre, in a Vineyard of Cbâtenoy, about a quarter of a League from Dole, and there killed, and tore her, as well with his Hands, resembling Paws, as with his Teeth, and eat the Flesh of her Thighs and Arms, and carried some to his Wife: That, in the same Form, a Month after this, he took another Girl, and killed her, and would have eaten her, if he had not been prevented by three Persons, as he himself confessed: That, sixteen Days after, he strangled a young Child of ten Years of Age, in a Vineyard of Gredifans, and eat the Flesh of the Thighs, Legs, and Belly: And that, in the Shape of a Man, and not of a Wolf, he killed another little Boy, of the Age of twelve or thirteen Years, in the Wood of the Village of Prouyse, with a Design to have eaten him, if he had not been hindered, according to his own free Confession. He was condemned to be burnt alive, and the Arrêt was executed (4)."

- (4) Bodin, Demonomanie des Sorciers, Book 2, cap. 6, pag. 208, 209. Edit. of Lyons, 1598, 8vo.

ST AUGUSTIN, one of the most illustrious Fathers of the Church, was born at Tagaste in Africa, the Thirtieth of November, 354. His Father, whose Name was Patricius, was but a mean Citizen of That Place; his Mother was named Monica, and remarkable for her Virtue. Their Son had no Relish for Learning [A]. However, his Father put him to it against his Inclination, resolving to advance him in this way, and sent him to study Classical Learning at Madaura. At the Age of Sixteen, he took him from thence, and sent him to study Rhetoric at Carthage. St Augustin went thither towards the end of the Year 371 (a). He made a great Progress in the Sciences,

- (a) Du Pin's History of Ecclesiastical Authors, Tom 3, pag. 138.

[A] He had no relish for Learning. By the Picture St Augustin himself has drawn of his Youth, it appears, that he was what we call a Rake: He shunned the School as the Plague; he loved nothing but Gaming and public Shows; he stole all he could from his Father; he invented a thousand Lies to avoid the Rod, which they were obliged to make use of, to punish his Licentiousness (1). Furtiva etiam faciebam de cellario parentum & de mensa, vel gulâ imperitante, vel ut haberem quod darem pueris ludam suum mihi, quo pariter utique delectabantur, tamen vendentibus — Fallendo innumerabilibus mendaciis & pædagogum & magistrorum & parentum, amore ludendi, studio speiendi nugatoria, & imitandi ludicra inquietudine. This confutes what Leo Allatius affirms; "That St Au- gustin, at twelve Years of Age, had read and understood all Aristotle's Books, relating to Logic and Theory, of himself, without the Assistance of any Master; and that, at the same Age, he had composed some excellent Writings, to discover and confute the Errors of several Authors (2)." The Writer, who took upon him the Name of Christianus Liberius, has said the same thing (3). Mr Baillet confutes them both very solidly, by St Augustin's Confessions, and discovers the Cause of their Mistake. "Let us believe, says he (4), that They, who gave the first Occasion for This Mistake, read Twelve instead of Twenty, in the Place, where St Augustin speaks of it. This Saint acknowledges, that he was near Twenty Years of Age, when a Treatise

- (1) In Ap'l. Urbanis, p. 126. apud Baillet of Famous Children, p. 59.
(2) Christ. Liberius, de scrib. & leg. libris, pag. 178, apud Baillet, ibid.
(3) Baillet, ibid. pag. 60.
(4) Baillet, ibid. pag. 61.

- WORTHEN St Augustin was learned, and an Author, from his Youth?

- Confess. of lib. 4. c. 16.

Sciences, but gave himself up to Debauchery with Women [B]. He had a mind to read the Holy Scriptures; but the Simplicity of the Style disgusted him: he was yet too great an Admirer of the Pagan Eloquence, to have a Taste for the Bible. He had, in general, a great Desire to discover Truth; and, being in hopes of finding it in the Sect of the Manicheans, he engaged in it, and maintained most of it's Doctrines with much Fervency. Having lived some time in Cartbage, he returned to Tagaste, where he taught Rhetoric with so much Applause, that his Mother was congratulated upon having so admirable a Son. This did not hinder the holy Woman from being extremely afflicted on account of her Son's Heresy, and Debauchery. He returned to Cartbage in the Year 380; where he taught Rhetoric with a great deal of Reputation. It was at this time he fixed his Incontinency, which had been rambling after various Objects: He took a Concubine, to whom he kept very constant, and had, by her, a Son, whom he named Adeodatus, the Gift of God, and who had very good Parts [C]. He became a little wavering in his Sect, because he could meet with no satisfactory Answer to the Difficulties he had to propose [D]: however,

"of Aristotle fell into his Hands, called The Ten Categories, which he had often heard mentioned, at Cartbage, with great Applause. . . . He read it alone, and understood it perfectly well: so that afterwards conferring about it with Those, who said, they had learned it with much Pains from excellent Masters, who had not only explained it to them in Words, but also by Figures, drawn on the Sand, he found he had comprehended it as well by himself. He says also, that, at the same Age, he read, and understood, without any Help, all Books of the Liberal Arts, which he could meet with. He says the same thing of the Mathematics, and particularly of Geometry, Music, and Arithmetic.

[B] He gave himself up to Debauchery with Women.]

He began very early; for, at sixteen Years of Age, he followed the Dictates of That unruly Passion: "Ubi eram, (says he), & quam longè exulabam à deliciis domus tuæ, anno illo sexto decimo ætatis carnis meæ, cum acceptis in me sceptrum, & totas manus ei dedi venæzæ libidinis, licentiosæ per dedecus humanum, illicitæ autem per leges tuas (5)? — Where was I, and how long was I banished from the Delights of thy House, in That sixteenth Year of my Flesh, when I submitted to it's Empire, and gave myself up entirely to all it's violent Lusts, which disgrace our Natures, and are sinful by thy Laws?" He spent That Year in Idleness, because his Father not being then able to provide for his Expences at Cartbage, was by degrees making up a Sum sufficient to send him thither. The Joy of This good Father was remarkable, upon discovering, as he was bathing with his Son, an uncommon Forwardness of Nature (6). He could not forbear acquainting his Wife with the News; and had the Pleasure of fancying himself already a Grandfather, upon seeing his Son would so soon be fit to make him one. — Quinimo ubi me ille pater in balneis vidit pubescentem, & inquieta indutum adolescentia, quasi jam ex hoc in nepotes gessit, gaudens matri indicavit (7). St Augustin's Mother, instead of being pleased, was very uneasy at it; she feared the ill Effects of it, and therefore made him very serious Remonstrances to abstain from the Sex, and particularly from Adultery: "Secreto memini ut monuerit cum sollicitudine ingenti ne fornicar, maximeque ne adulterarem cujusquam uxorem. Qui mihi moribus muliebres videbantur, quibus obtemperare e-rubescerem (8). — I shall never forget how earnestly she cautioned me against Fornication, and particularly against Adultery; which I looked upon as such womanish Advice, that I was ashamed to follow it." But he took no notice of these good Exhortations; for he contracted such a strong Habit of Incontinence, that, even after he had renounced Manicheism, and prepared himself for Baptism, he took a new Concubine in the Room of Adeodatus's Mother, till the Wife, he was to marry, should attain to a fit Age (9), for which he was to wait near two Years (10). It is remarkable, that, in the Dispute between St Augustin and Alypius, on Marriage and Celibacy, Alypius, instead of persuading St Augustin to live single, suffered himself to be persuaded to marry. Alypius had led a very chaste Life; tho', in the beginning of his Youth, he just stolen a Taste of those forbidden Pleasures, but recovered This Slip betimes. He dissuaded St Augustin from Matrimony, as an Obstacle to the Design they had formed to live together in the Study of Wisdom. "Prohibebat me sane Alypius ab uxore ducenda, causans nullo modo nos posse securo otio simul in amore sapientiz vivere, sicut jamdiu desideraveramus, si id fecissem (11)." St Augustin confessed to him ingenuously, that it would be impossible for him to contain himself, and alledged to him the Example of some married Sages, who had been faithful to God and their Friends. He added, that there was a great Difference between Those transient Pleasures, which Alypius had tasted, and since forgot, and Those, which he (Augustin) had made habitual to him, which would also become more engaging under the fair Cover of Marriage. Alypius was so touched with this Dis-courte, that he resolved to be married himself; That I may know, said he, by Experience, what St Augustin has found more charming than Life itself. "Cum me ille miraretur, quem non parvi penderet, ita hærerè visco illius voluptatis, ut me affirmarem quotiescunque inde inter nos quaereremus, cœlibem vitam nullo modo posse degere, atque ita me defenderem, cum illum mirantem viderem, ut dicerem multum interesse inter illud quod ipse raptim & furtim expertus esset, quod pœne jam nec meminisset quidem, atque ideo nulla molestia facile contemneret, & delectationes consuetudinis meæ, ad quas si accessisset honestum nomen Matrimonii, non cum mirari oportere cur ego illam vitam nequirem sperare. Cœperat & ipse desiderare conjugium nequaquam victus libidine talis voluptatis, sed curiositatis. Dicebat enim scire se cupere, quidnam esset illud sine quo vita mea, quæ illi sic placebat, non mihi vita, fed pœna videretur (12)." However, neither of them did ever marry, but yet lived very chastly. [C] He took a Concubine, . . . and had by her a Son, whom he named Adeodatus, The Gift of God, who had very good Parts.] Without doubt my Reader will be pleased to find something here, concerning This Bastard; and therefore I shall inform him of what I have met with in Mr Baillet. "Adeodatus was but fifteen Years of Age, when his Father was baptized; but he was then so forward, and had made so uncommon a Progress in Knowledge, that he excelled many Persons of ripest Years, and several even of Those, who had got a Character in the World for their Gravity and Learning. About the same time St Augustin composed a Book, by way of Dialogue, intitled, Of the Master: Adeodatus and himself, are the two Personages of This Dialogue; and he takes God to witness, that all, he makes his Son say in That Work, is entirely his own, though he was then but sixteen Years of Age. St Augustin adds, That he had seen yet more wonderful Things in This Child, than what we have related. Lastly, in spite of his own great Firmness of Soul, he owns, he was astonished at the Prophecy of his Son's Parts. Adeodatus received the Sacrament of Baptism, together with his Father, and died soon after (13)."

[D] He could meet with no satisfactory Answer to the Difficulties he had to propose.] St Augustin had a penetrating Wit; he was a Rhetorician by Profession, and understood Logic. It is easy for a subtle and eloquent Disputant to form Doubts, and make Replies. It must not then be wondered at, that he embarrassed the Manichean Doctors; any

(5) Confess. lib. 2. cap. 2.

(6) It was against Decency, among the Pagans stem clothes, that a Son and a Father should bathe in the same Place. See Cicero de Offic. lib. 1. cap. 35. Val. Max. lib. 2. cap. 1. n. 7. Plutarch. in Catone major. p. 348.

(7) August. Confess. l. 2. cap. 3.

(8) Ibidem.

(9) Ibid. lib. 6. cap. 15.

(10) Ibid. cap. 13.

(11) Ibid. cap. 12.

(12) Id. ib.

(13) Baillet, des Enfans celebres, pag. 61. ex Aug. Confess. lib. 9. cap. 6.

however, he did not forsake their Opinions, but waited for better Explications. His good Mother Monica went to him at Carthage, to endeavour to draw him from his Heresy and Luxury; nor did she despair, tho' she found, that her Remonstrances were, then, to no Purpose. He wanted a new Theatre, for displaying his Learning, and resolved to go to Rome; and, that he might not be diverted from this design, he embarked without communicating it either to his Mother, or to his near Relation Romanian, who had maintained him at School (b). He taught Rhetoric at Rome, with as much Applause, as at Carthage: so that Symmachus, Prefect of That City, understanding, that they wanted, at Milan, an able Professor in Rhetoric, appointed him to That Employ, in the Year 383. St Augustin was very much esteemed at Milan; he made a Visit to St Ambrose, and was kindly received by him. He went to his Sermons, not so much out of a Principle of Piety, as That of a Critical Curiosity. He wanted to know if That Prelate's Eloquence deserved the Reputation it had obtained. It pleased God to make this the Means of his Conversion: St Ambrose's Sermons made such an Impression upon him, that St Augustin became a Catholic in the Year 384. His Mother, who was come to him to Milan, advised him to marry, that he might effectually forsake his former Irregularities. He consented to the Proposal, and sent his Concubine back into Africa; but, as the Wife, designed for him, was so very young, that he was to wait two Years before he could marry her, not being able to resist his Natural Inclinations so long, he relapsed to his usual Incontinence. At length, the reading of St Paul's Epistles, the Sollicitations and Tears of his Mother, and the good Discourses of some Friends, procured for him the finishing stroke of Grace; he felt himself a good Christian, ready to forsake all for the Gospel; he left off teaching Rhetoric, and was baptized, by St Ambrose, on Easter-Eve in the Year 387. The following Year, he returned into Africa, having lost his Mother at Osia, where they were both to have embarked (c). He was ordained Priest in the Year 391, by Valerius Bishop of Hippo; Four Years after, he became Coadjutor to That Prelate, and did very considerable Services to the Church by his Pen and his Piety, until his Death, which happened the Twenty eighth of August 430 (d). The particulars of his Episcopal Life and Writings would be superfluous here; They may be found in Moreri's Dictionary, and in Mr du Pin's Bibliothecque; and if Those Gentlemen had not too lightly passed over St Augustin's irregular Life, I might wholly have dispensed with this Article: But, for the better Instruction of the Public, it is proper to discover both the Good, and the Bad, of Great Men. The Approbation, which Councils and Popes have given St Augustin on the Doctrine of Grace, adds greatly to his Glory; for, without That, the Molinists, in these latter Times, would have highly advanced their Banner against him, and pulled down his Authority. We have shewn elsewhere (e), that all their Politics could scarce keep them in decorum, and prevent their attacking him indirectly. It is certain, that the Engagement, which the Church of Rome is under, to respect St Augustin's System, casts her into a Perplexity, which is very ridiculous [E]. The Arminians, not having the same Measures to keep, deal very sincerely with This holy Father of the Church

(b) His Father died about the Year 372.

(c) Taken from the Ecclesiastical History of John le Cueur, Tom. 3. ad Ann. 388. pag. 484, & seq. Edit. in 12mo.

(d) Du Pin, Biblioth. des Aut. Eccl. Tom. 3. p. 158.

(e) Above, in the Remarks [C] [D] and [E] of the Article A D A M (JOHN) the Jesuit: where you will see the various Judgments passed upon St Augustin. See also Etat de la Faculté de Théologie de Louvain, in 1708 pag. 207.

more than that he puzzled several Catholic Doctors, and that the weak Answers, which they returned to his Objections, confirmed him in his Heresies. He confessed, that, to his cost, he had gained a thousand Victories in these Engagements: so true is it, that every Orthodox Person ought not to engage himself in Disputes; and that, unless he has to do with an Heretic of his own Strength, he can do nothing, humanly speaking, but harden his Adversary. "Quædam noxia victoria penè mihi semper in disputationibus proveniebat, differenti cum Christianis im- peritis; quo successu creberimmo gliscibat adolescentis animolitas, & impetu suo in pervicaciæ magnum malum imprudenter vergebatur (14). — In disputing with unlearned Christians, I had almost always the ill Fortune to get the better of them; which frequent Success still added fresh Fuel to the Heat of my Youth, and hurried me headlong into That greatest of Mischiefs, Obstinacy."

[E] The Engagement of the Church of Rome to St Augustin's System casts her into a Perplexity, which is very ridiculous.] It is manifest to all Men, who examine Things without Prejudice, and with sufficient Abilities, that St Augustin's Doctrine, and That of Jansenius, Bishop of Ypres, are one and the same; so that we cannot, without Indignation, behold the Court of Rome boasting to have condemned Jansenius, and yet preserved St Augustin in all his Glory. These are two Things altogether inconsistent. More than This, The Council of Trent, in condemning Calvin's Doctrine of Free Will, did necessarily condemn That of St Augustin: For no Calvinist ever denied, or can deny, the Concurrence of the human Will, and the Liberty of the Soul, in the Sense which

St Augustin has given to the Words Concurrence, Co-operation, and Liberty. There is not a Calvinist, but acknowledges Free Will, and it's Use in Conversion, if That Word be understood according to St Augustin's Ideas. Those, condemned by the Council of Trent, do not reject Free Will, but as it signifies a Liberty of Indifference. The Thomists reject it also under That Notion, and yet pass for very good Catholics. See another Comical Scene! The Physical Predetermination of the Thomists, the Necessity of St Augustin, That of the Jansenists, and That of Calvin, are all one and the same thing at the Bottom; and yet the Thomists disown the Jansenists, and both of them think it a Calumny to accuse them of teaching the same Doctrine with Calvin. If one might be suffered to judge of another's Thoughts, here would be great Room for saying, that Doctors are, in this Case, great Comedians, and are only acting a Part, and that They cannot but be sensible, that the Council of Trent either condemned a meer Chimera, which never entered into the Thoughts of the Calvinists, or else, that it condemned, at the same time, both St Augustin, and the Physical Predetermination. So that, when they boast of having St Augustin's Faith, and never to have varied in the Doctrine (15), it is only meant to preserve a Decorum, and to save the System from Destruction, which a sincere Confession of the Truth must necessarily occasion. It is a great Happiness for some Persons, that the People never trouble themselves to demand of them any Account of their Doctrine, and that they have not a sufficient Capacity for it. They would, otherwise, oftener mutiny against Doctors, than against Tax gatherers. They would (14) Augustin, de duabus Anim.

(15) M. Bagnage shews plainly, that in the Council of Trent, and elsewhere, the Church of Rome decided against St Augustin, and against other Calvinists. See his History of the Religion of the Reformed Churches, Tom. 2. pag. 452, & seq.

Church [F]. A Learned French Critic may make use of terms as respectful as he pleases, yet he cannot hinder us from discovering, that he heartily despises St Augustin's Commentaries on the Scripture [G]. If Mr Claude, who condemned This Father's would say to them: If you do not know that you deceive us, you deserve to be sent to the Plough for your Stupidity; and, if you do know it, you deserve to be shut up within four Walls, with Bread and Water, for your Wickedness. But there is nothing of this to fear; the People are content to be led on in the usual Road; and, if they were inclinable to enquire a little farther, they would not be able to discuss such Points; Their Business does not permit them to acquire a sufficient Capacity.

WHETHER Ecclesiastical Doctors have any reason to stand in fear of the Capacities of the People.

[F] The Arminians ----- deal very sincerely with This holy Father of the Church. They might have perplexed the World, as well as the Jesuits; but they thought it much better to give up St Augustin wholly to their Adversaries, and to acknowledge him for as great a Predestinarian (it is a Term much used among them) as Calvin. Without doubt the Jesuits would have done the same, if they durst have condemned a Doctor, whom the Popes and Councils had approved.

[G] A learned French Critic ----- heartily despises St Augustin's Commentaries on the Scriptures.

I mean Mr Simon: See his Critical History of the Old Testament (16), wherein the chief Encomium he gives This Father is, that he knew his own Insufficiency. "He has very well observed, says

(16) Book 3, chap. 9.

(17) Ibid. P. 397, 398.

"he (17), the Qualifications necessary to make a good Interpreter of the Scripture; and, as he was a modest Man, he freely confessed, that he himself wanted most of them; therefore we ought not to wonder, if sometimes we find but little Exactness in his Commentaries on the Scriptures. — He soon acknowledged, that the Undertaking, to answer the Manicheans, was above his Strength. In Scripturis exponendis tyrocinium meum sub tanta farsine mole succubuit *."

* Lib. 1, Retract. cap. 15.

I confess, that Mr Simon does not quote Peter Castellani, without blaming him. But, as he wrote in France, was it not necessary to use all This Caution? "I cannot approve, says he (18), of the Heat of Peter Castellani, Grand (18) Hist. Critique du vieux Test. P. 399.

Almoner of France, who accuses St Augustin with too much Liberty, in reproaching him with having been only in a Dream, when he explained the Holy Scripture." They, who wrote against him, knew very well how to object to him the little Agreement there is between the Esteem he would seem to have for St Augustin's Writings, and the Judgment he really makes of them; and they have taken This Occasion to draw a very disadvantageous Picture of This Father. "No other Idea, say they (19), can be formed of the Blessed St Augustin, than That of a Declaimer, who says all that comes in his Head, whether to the Purpose, or not, provided it agrees with a certain Platonic System, which he had formed of the Christian Religion; of One, who loses himself every Moment in the Clouds, and suffers himself to be carried away by cold Allegories, which he delivers for Oracles; in short, of One, who had none of Those Qualifications, which an Interpreter of the Holy Scriptures ought to have." Of all this they give some very strong Examples. Mr Simon, in his Reply, has not much troubled himself to defend St Augustin. It is easy to see, he had not this at Heart: He pays some Regard to Decency, but much more to his Desire of confuting his Adversary (20). It may be observed, in several Places of his Writings, to be his Opinion, that, since St Augustin makes no Difficulty to forsake the Greek Fathers on the Subject of Grace, there is no Reason to follow him, in Preference to Those Greek Fathers. This Pretence would answer very well, if there was but room to urge it: But, since St Augustin's Doctrine, on Grace, has been approved of by the Church, it must follow, that all Doctrine, opposite to That, is to be rejected; and therefore whatever may be found in St Chrysostom, which favours Molinism, is a particular Tenet, and at least implicitly branded by the authentic Approbation given to St Augustin. This is the Perplexity I mentioned above, which exposes the Church of Rome to a sort of Ridicule. I shall relate Castellani's Words; they are remarkable, and his Life is not a very common Book in this Country: "Ut divum Augustinum contra (20) See the Answer to the 160. Sentiments, pag. 232, & seq. and the Answer to the Defence, p. 193, & seq.

(19) See the Book entitled The Sentiments of some Divines of Holland, on the Critical History of the Old Testament, pag. 317, & seq. and the Defence of whole Sentiments, pag. 348, & seq.

hæreticos de hominis Christiani Justificatione disputando, proxime ad divi Pauli sententiam accessisse fatebatur, ita linguarum ignorantia somniasse frequenter atque etiam delirasse sacra explicando asseverabat: cumque bonarum artium magis non ignorans quam peritus dici posset, non satis idoneum esse judicebat cui de artibus differenti legendo tempus transmitteretur qui minime otio abundaret. Eam quoque stili Augustiniani infestam sinuositatem esse, & sermonis omni elegantia vacui impuritate addebat, ut ab homine liberaliter in literis educato citra fastidium legi vix posset (21). — As he confessed, that St Augustin, in his Disputation against the Heretics, concerning Christian Justification, comes the nearest of any to the Sense of St Paul; so he affirmed, that by his Ignorance in Languages he has been often in a Dream, or even out of his Head, in his Interpretation of the Scriptures; and that, as he may rather be said not to have been a Stranger to Arts, than a Master of them, it is but lost Time to those, who have not a great deal to spare, to listen to him, in his discoursing on these Subjects. Farther, that St Augustin's Style is so rough and tedious, and not only void of all Elegance, but even very incorrect, that it must nauseate a Reader of a learned Education."

(21) Petr. Galland. in Vita Castellani, pag. 44, 45.

Since the first Edition of this Dictionary, I have seen the Explication, which Mr Simon has given, to stop the Complaints of the Jansenists. My Intention, says he (22), was not to diminish, in the least, the Authority of St Augustin, whom I have always acknowledged to be the most able Divine of the Western Churches, and to have deserved the great Elogies, which so many Popes have given him — I agree, that the Church assures us, that Those, who have taught Theology with Art and Method, have taken St Augustin for their Master and Guide. These are the Words of the Roman Breviary; but they do not mean, that Those Masters of Theology, who followed St Augustin in the manner of treating This Science, are obliged never to depart from the Opinions of That learned Bishop; nor that Those same Opinions are Articles of Faith, nor lastly, that the other Fathers are to be forsaken, when they do not entirely agree with him. The Church teaches us, in the same Lessons of the Breviary, speaking of St John Chrysostom *, That all the World admires his Way of interpreting the sacred Books, according to the Letter, and judge him worthy of what was believed of him, viz. that St Paul, whom he particularly honoured, dictated several things to him. I always had the highest Veneration for These two great Men, who are to this Day the Admiration of the Eastern and Western Churches; but, in explaining certain Passages of the Scripture, about which St Augustin and St Chrysostom differ, I thought I might follow St Chrysostom's Interpretation, whenever it seemed the most literal. This Difference, which no way affects our Fundamentals, does not binder them from agreeing together in the essential Points of our Belief. Speaking of St Augustin, in my History of the Commentators, I might indeed have been more cautious in my Expressions; and I have even mentioned some Things, said of him by Cardinal Sadolet, which seem too severe. But I never designed to oppose the Doctrine of This holy Doctor, who confuted so powerfully the Heresies of his Time. He adds, That he proposed Cardinal Gaspar Contarini for his Guide, who judged, that there was a certain Medium to be observed between Those, who, under pretence of being Enemies to the Lutherans, came too near the Heresy of Pelagius; and Those, who, having some Tincture of St Augustin's Writings, instead of imitating his Modesty and his Charity, preached very puzzling Doctrines to the People, which they did not understand themselves, nor could any way explain but by running into Paradoxes. "I believed, continues he, that I could not do better, than to imitate That great Cardinal, in my Answer to some Divines of Holland, who had objected against me, that the Tradition of the Church was not constant and certain; by producing, for an Example, the Doctrines of Grace, and of Predestination, in which the Church

(22) Simon's Preface to the New Observations on the Text and Versions of the New Testament, printed at Paris, 1695, in 4^{to}.

* Interpretandi rationem & intentionem sententiarum factorum librorum explicationem omnes adhibuerant, quinque existimant cui Paulus Apostolus quem ille mirifice coluit scribenti & predicanti multo dictasse videatur. Brev. Rom.

ther's Approbation of Penal Laws in Matters of Conscience, had lived but three or four Years longer, he would have exposed himself to a severe Censure [H].

A Phy-

* Church had followed and authorized St. Augustin's Explanation, notwithstanding he differed, they say, "from all the other Fathers, both Greek and Latin, who went before him. I observed to them, that This difference was only in some Points, which had never been determined as Articles of Faith, and in some Passages of Scripture, which might very well admit of different Interpretations; and therefore that the Church ought not to be accused of "Inconstancy in Tradition." This needs very little Examination to discover it to be a Mask or Colour, which can only deceive very ignorant Persons: For, pray tell me, whence come the most material Controversies? Is it not from a Difference in explaining some Passages of Scripture? Why then do you make use of the Idea of This difference, to shew us, that St. Chrysostom and St. Augustin differ in nothing essential? Is it only an accident, and nothing material to the Doctrine of Grace, to know in what the Power of a Sinner consists, and what is the Essence of his Liberty? Is it not rather a fundamental Part of This Doctrine? If then these two Fathers are directly opposite in their Explication of the Nature of Free-will, it is certain, their Difference is in Essentials, and the Church cannot adopt the Hypothesis of the one, without rejecting That of the other. Otherwise it must be said, that she embraces a Truth without condemning the opposite Error; for, in short, though it were possible, that both of them may be mistaken, yet it is impossible, that both their Opinions should be true: Therefore, either They, who follow St. Chrysostom's Explication, or They, who follow St. Augustin's Doctrine, must be in an Error. Here, again, we may observe the great Perplexity of the Church of Rome. She is forced to approve both those who hold that Grace does all, and those who hold that Grace does nothing, in obtaining our Assent; some of her Doctors, on the one side, teach, That we form this Assent ourselves, with full Liberty to refuse it: on the other, That Grace produces this Assent, without leaving us the least Liberty to refuse it. The one, or the other, teaches an Error, which does not turn upon a Trifle, but on a Point of very great Consequence. And yet the Church of Rome, with her pretended Infallibility, lets this whole Matter pass without Censure. If she condemns Janfensism, she is obliged to declare, at the same time, that she does not condemn St. Augustin (23); this is to undo, with one hand, what is done with the other. Observe, by the way, these words of Mr. Simon: The Difference — was only in some Things, which have not been determined as Articles of Faith. This is to say, that, provided an Error affects only some Points, which have not yet been determined as Articles of Faith, the Person, who propagates it, may still be an Orthodox, and a very good Christian; I say, observe this Privilege of an erroneous Conscience. Observe also, that, though it were lawful to dissent from St. Augustin's Opinion, before the Doctrines of Grace were determined in the Time of That Father; it does not follow, that, after those Determinations, the Writers of the XVIIth Century are at liberty to return to St. Chrysostom's Opinion; for here is a substantial Remark of a Divine, whom Mr. Simon can by no means suspect: "In the Disputes concerning Grace, Election, and Predestination, less Regard is to be paid to the ancient Fathers, who lived before the Pelagian Heresy, than to those, who came after: And much less to the Greeks, than to the Latins, notwithstanding that these came after That Heresy — But, among the Latins, whose Authority, we have already observed, is to be preferred to That of the other Fathers, Divines agree, that St. Augustin is he, on whom we ought most to rely: For not only all the Fathers, and all the Doctors, who came after him, but the Popes themselves, and the Councils of other Bishops, have held his Doctrine, concerning Grace, for certain and Catholic: and they have ALL BELIEVED it a sufficient Proof of the Truth of an Opinion, that This Saint had taught it (24)."

[H] If Mr. Claude — had lived three or four Years, he would have exposed himself to a severe Censure.] I have two things to shew; the one, that

Mr. Claude blamed St. Augustin for approving the Penal Laws against Heretics; the other, that, if he had lived three or four Years longer, he would have been censured for censuring St. Augustin.

I. To prove the First, I need only recite some Expressions of Mr. Claude, in a Letter, which was made public. He confesses, That St. Augustin had an admirable Understanding, a happy and fruitful Imagination, discovering, almost on every occasion, great Piety, Justice, and Charity: But he adds, There is one thing, which tarnishes his Memory extremely, viz. that, after having expressed Sentiments of Mildness and Charity, in regard to Proceedings against Heretics, his Disputes with the Donatists so very much inflamed him, that he became quite another Man, and turned Advocate for Persecution (25).

II. The Acts of the Synod of the Walloon Churches of the United Provinces, held at Amsterdam in the Month of August, 1690, demonstrate, beyond controversy, the second thing I am to prove; for This is one of the Propositions, which That Assembly condemned, The Magistrate has no right, by Virtue of his Authority, to suppress Idolatry, and hinder the Progress of Heresy. I say, This Proposition is one of Those, which the Synod solemnly and unanimously declares false, scandalous, pernicious, and equally destructive of Morality and Religion. The Synod proscribes, prohibits, and condemns them as such, forbidding all Persons, Ecclesiastic and Secular, under the severest Censures, to utter them either in Pulpits, or in private Conversations — And most expressly commanding all Consistories, within their Jurisdiction, to redouble their Pastoral Care and Vigilance, in proportion to the Danger, which threatens their Flocks, to suppress, without Distinction, or Complaisance, all who shall be found guilty, by refusing private Persons the Holy Sacrament, and by suspending the Ministers from their Offices till the next Synod, calling in two Pastors of the Neighbouring Churches to join in That Sentence (26). Some may object, that if Mr. Claude had been living, at the Time of holding this Synod (27), perhaps They would not have condemned This Proposition. I can say nothing at all to this: but, be it as it will, there is no denying, but that his Opinion has been anathematized. For it is evident, that St. Augustin only maintains, that Magistrates ought to suppress Heretics, by making them liable to certain Penalties. Now the Synod of Amsterdam establishes This so strongly, that it puts the contrary Proposition in the number of pernicious Errors, for which it orders the Laitie to be excommunicated, and the Clergy suspended. Therefore it has approved the same Doctrine, which Mr. Claude condemned in St. Augustin: and the Opinion of Mr. Claude lies under the Anathema of This Synod.

If Mr. Claude was surprised, that St. Augustin should be such a Turncoat in his Opinion, others wonder yet more, that the French Refugee Ministers (28) appear to be so too. For, whereas St. Augustin changed his Opinion, upon observing the good Success of the Emperor's Laws, in suppressing a Schism; these Refugee Ministers have changed their Opinion, while the Ruin of their Churches, by the Authority of the Sovereign, was quite fresh in their Memory, and the Wound still bleeding. If they had been asked, while the Edicts of Persecution were pouring on their Party, what they thought of the Conduct of a Prince, who inflicted Penalties on Those of his Subjects, who desired only the Liberty of serving God according to their Consciences, they would have answered, that it is unjust; and yet, as soon as they are come into another Country, they have pronounced their Anathema against Those, who condemn the use of Penal Laws, in order to suppress Errors. This should serve for an Example of the Instability of human Things; and may furnish matter for much moral Reflexion.

He, who was the Promoter of These Synodical Decisions, had been a Deister in Opinion; but it was, in some Measure, by a special Privilege, and by a prophetic Dispensation, from which others could draw no Consequence. His Politics of the Clergy, his Persecution, &c. had highly condemned the use of Penal Laws in Matters of Religion. He had amply discussed This Point, in his Answer to the History

(25) See the Letter written from Switzerland, printed at Dort, 1690, pag. 20.

(26) See what has been published of the Acts of this Synod in the Tableau du Socinianisme, pag. 565.

(27) He was dead in the Month of January, 1687.

(28) There was a much greater Number of them in the Synod, than of the Walloon Ministers, and they acted in concert with the French Ministers, who fled into England. See the Acts of this Synod, concerning this Fact, in the 8th Letter of the Tableau du Socinianisme, pag. 559, & seq. The Author of This Tableau affirms, p. 558, That the Resolutions and Determinations of That Synod were unanimous.

(23) See the Answer of a Jesuit to Mr. Leydecker. It is mentioned in The History of the Works of the Learned, 1697, pag. 231.

(24) Petav. Dogmat. Theolog. Tom. 1. lib. 9, c. 6, cited by Mr. Arnauld. Difficulties proposed to Mr. Steuert, part 9, pag. 200.

A Physician of Paris has published a very singular Remark; he pretends, that This great Saint could bear a great deal of Drink, and would sometimes make free with it, but without getting drunk. We shall produce his Reasons, as well as Those of a Journalist, who confutes him [I]. I shall not say much of the Editions of Calceinism; at least, he had given to understand, that he was desirous of confuting effectually the Advocates for Penal Laws. It is true, he had pulled down with one hand, what he endeavoured to build with the other; and fell into an unfortunate Contradiction, which exposed him to terrible Mortifications from several Writings, which were published against him; but, in short, all this was not sufficient to shew, that he had expressly declared on both sides of the Question. It was only in consequence of the Revelations, which he thought he had received from above, about the approaching Ruin of Popery: I say, it was only in consequence of these, that he exerted himself against Thole, who did not believe it lawful to extirpate Sectaries by the Authority of the Secular Power. He imagined These Persons had picked a personal Quarrel with him, and were conspiring against his Explication of the Apocalypse (29). The Clergy of France have made great use of St Augustin's Reasons, to justify the Conduct of the Court towards the Reformed. All that St Augustin published on this Subject has been ordered to be printed by itself, translated into elegant French. A Protestant has published a Confutation of it, in the third Part of the Philosophical Commentary on these Words, COMPEL THEM TO COME IN. See (30) the Reflexions, which have been made on the Prejudice, done to the good Cause, by the Authority of This Saint. It has been wondered at, that Mr Poiret should endeavour to excuse him. See the History of the Works of the Learned, for the Month of May, 1692, pag. 358; and for the Month of August of the same Year, pag. 552.

[I] A Physician — pretends, that This Saint could bear a great deal of Drink — but without getting drunk. We shall produce his Reasons, as well as those of a Journalist, who confutes him.] The Physician, I am speaking of, is Mr Petit. The Chapter, where he treats of this, is entitled, “Videri B. Augustinum non invalidum potorem fuisse (31). — That St Augustin seems to have been a hard Drinker.” He immediately lays down, for the Foundation of his Assertion, these Words of Augustin: “Ebrietas longe est à me: miseraberis, ne appropinquet mihi. Crapula autem nonnunquam surrepit servo tuo; miseraberis, ut longe fiat à me (32). — Drunkenness is far from me; thou wilt have Mercy on me, Lord, that it may not come near me. The Crapula surprises thy Servant sometimes; thou wilt pity him, that it may go far from him.” This seems to be a sort of Contradiction; for, the Crapula being the Effect of Drunkenness, how can any one confess, without contradicting himself, that he never drinks to the Degree of Drunkenness, and yet that he is sometimes overcome by the Crapula? Mr Petit shews, by the Authority of Aristotle, that the Crapula is the last Stage of Drunkenness, that it is the Head-ach, which remains, when sleep has dissipated the Vapours of the Wine, and when a Man, who has been drunk, recovers his Understanding, and is no longer under the Alienation of Mind, which deprived him of his Senses. He confirms this by a Passage of Pliny, and by some Verses of the Poet Alexis; and This is his Method of clearing up this seeming Contradiction. He supposes, that This great Saint had a very strong Head, and was able to drink a great deal of Wine, without losing the Use of his Reason, but not without being incommoded by it next Day. Quod est esset cerebri ac mentis firmitate ad pisset in eadem vini quantitate, quæ multis ad insomniam redigeret, rationis usum conservare (33). Upon this Foot, a Man may justly say, that he is never drunk, though, on some Occasions, he finds himself punished with the Crapula, for having drank too much; and he ought to acknowledge this to be an Imperfection, which stands in need of the Mercy of his heavenly Father. “Sic nobis dubitatio illa vanescit, vindictæque Augustinus à turpitudine eorum, qui rationem suam vino non obruere non dubitant: non tamen à culpâ omnino, ipso iudice, qui tantum vini hauriret, inde ut crapulam aliquando incurreret, nec posset “fili inter pocula temperare, quin nimio potu interdum valetudini suæ incommodaret. Quæ de re ibi misericordiam Dei implorat (34). — Thou wilt make this Difficulty easy, and vindicate St Augustin from the Imputation of Thole, who make no Scruple to intoxicate their Servants with Wine; nor yet leave him entirely innocent, because of his drinking, by his own Confession, so much as to cause a Crapula, and not having that Guard upon himself in his Cups, to prevent drinking more than his Health would bear. On which account he implies the Mercy of God.” Mr Petit excuses St Augustin, from the Nature of the Climate, where he lived, and from the Custom of the Africans, and proposes this Objection to himself. It is probable, that this great Man's Practice was agreeable to the Advice he gave to others: Now he recommended the living on Herbs and Bacon, and drinking two or three Glasses of Wine, without Water. Præcel tres vine meracæ potiones propter diligentiam validitatis sumptæ cum abstulit & largo laudantur (35). The Answer is, That it is probable St Augustin did not so strictly practise This Rule, but that he might sometimes transgress it among his Friends, and those whom he invited to his Episcopal Table. Velim & mihi illud concedit, non minus probabile: non ita hunc regulæ illi additum existit, ut non cum vini modum nunquam inter amicos, & mensæ episcopalis bespites, bibendo excederet (36). For, otherwise, it must be concluded, that he lived only on Herbs and Bacon, which cannot be supposed, without monkish Suppidity. Quod putare cullatæ est dementia (37).

Let us see what Mr Cassan has answered to this strange Paradox of Mr Petit: For he calls this Assertion (38). He is for reading “the whole Chapter of the Confessions, from whence the Passage is taken (39).” We shall find, “That St Augustin there represents his own Disposition, with regard to eating and drinking, and declares, that he had learned of God not to seek after Aliments, any other wise than as after Medicines, and to use both alike.” He says, “that, according to this Principle, he is always upon his guard against Pleasure, when he satisfies the Cravings of Nature; that he is in a continual War with himself, by Fastings, and Abstinence; that he frequently reduces his Body into Subjection, and continually hears the Voice of God crying to him; Ne graevetur corda vestra in crapula & ebrietate (40). — Let not your Hearts be overcharged with Drunkenness and Debauch.” Mr Cassan asks, “Whether a Bishop, who lived in This manner, can be suspected to have drank sometimes to excess?” He assures us, “no Distinction is to be made here; that St Augustin never drank more than Necessity required; and that, therefore, when he said, Crapula autem nonnunquam obrepit servo tuo, he takes the Word Crapula in another Sense (41). Besides That of Aristotle, wherein it signifies the Heat and Pain caused by Wine, taken to excess, it is capable of two more, at least; according to one of which, it is taken for an Excess of eating; and, according to the other, for the Pleasure itself of eating and drinking. St Augustin did not use it in the first Sense; for he was as far from eating, as from drinking, to excess. So, then, he could only understand it in the second Sense, and confess, that, though he endeavoured to be continually on his Guard against the Temptation of Pleasure, which places itself, as it were, in Ambuscade, at the Entrance of the Aliments, necessary to allay Hunger and Thirst, and to maintain Health; yet he sometimes suffered himself to be surprized by it. This Surprise happens to the most perfect, to Those, who mortify their Bodies, and nourish them only with Fastings and Abstinence.” Mr Cassan confirms this, by producing several Testimonies of Puffendorf, concerning St Augustin's Sobriety. I think he would have done well to have given good Authority for the two Significations of the Word Crapula, which he has added to That, so well proved by Mr Petit.

Editions of St Augustin's Works [K]. Several of his Treatises have been translated into French.

It belongs to my Readers to decide this Dispute: I content my self with giving them the Arguments on both Sides. I shall only add, that I have consulted several Dictionaries, without being able to find there the least Appearance of the Signification, in which Mr Coufin will have the Word Crapula used in this Place. I have even met with some Physicians, who maintain, that Drunkenness and Crapula signify the same thing; and that They, who pretend to make any Difference between them, raise idle Contentions about Words. Qui differentiam inter Crapulam & Ebrietatem figunt λογικαχρησται. Fœt. pag. 353. Diff. num. 475 (42). It is certain, that, in Cicero, the Phrases Crapulam dormire, Crapulam exbalare, mean the same thing as the French Words cruer son vin (43), i. e. to sleep one's self sober. Plautus uses, in the same Sense, Crapulam amovere (44), Crapulam dormire (45), Crapulam dormire (46). It is also well known, that, at this present time, the French Word Crapula is more odious than That of Iereste, Drunkenness; for it signifies the highest Degree of Drunkenness. It is, as Furetiere observes, a shameful and continual Debauch with Wine, or other intoxicating Liquors. Crapuler, adds he, means, to drink without ceasing, to be continually, and filthily, drunk. The Dictionary of the French Academy confirms these Interpretations. But there is no consequence to be drawn from one Age to another, as to the Sense of Words. Use makes it vary prodigiously. There was certainly a Distinction between Drunkenness and Crapula, both in Aristotle's, and St Augustin's Time. This appears clearer from The Passage of the Father of the Church, than from That of the Philosopher. The Question is, to know wherein this Difference consisted, in the Time of St Augustin. Without doubt, if Mr Petit had replied to Mr Coufin (47), he would have shewn a great deal of Learning, and I believe would not have forgot, that Authors, who, like Aristotle, treat a Subject dogmatically, confine themselves very strictly to Genus and Species, and observe the Propriety of Terms, designed to signify the Distinction of each Species, or the different Degrees of one and the same Quality; but Poets and Orators soon lay aside This Exactness: they either introduce, themselves, a greater Liberty of Words, or else conform to That established by public Custom, which uses, indifferently, on a thousand Occasions, Those Expressions which the Doctors so nicely distinguish.

[K] I shall not say much of the Editions of St Augustin's Works.] We meet with a List of them in Mr du Pin (48), which is neither so large, nor so exact, as That published by the Journalists of Leipsic (49). But, since it is very easy to consult Those Authors, it would be superfluous to copy them here. I shall only say, that the best Edition of This Father's Works is That printed at Paris, by the Care of the Benedictine Monks of St Maur. It is divided into ten Volumes in Folio, as some others are; but there is a new Order, or Disposition, in each Tome. The Ist, and IId, were published in the Year 1679, the IId, in 1680, the IVth, in 1681, the Vth, in 1683, the VIth, and VIIth, in 1685, the VIIIth, and IXth, in 1688, and the Xth, in 1693. This last Volume contains the Writings of St Augustin against the Pelagians.

There came out, A Letter from the Abbot D to the R. R. F. F. Benedictines of the Congregation of St Maur, on the last Tome of their Edition of St Augustin (50). The Author of This Letter pretends, that their Design was to favour Janenism, and that the Proofs he gives of it are very convincing. I have heard, that This Letter perplexes the Benedictines so much the more, because it has made some Bishops call them to an Account for their Conduct, and threaten to forbid the Reading of That Edition of St Augustin in their Dioceses.

These learned Fathers have given an Explanation of this Matter, and cleared themselves to the Public from this Aspersions. See the Letter of a Divine to one of his Friends, on the Libel, entitled, A Letter of the Abbot  &c. It was printed the Twenty second of February, 1699, and contains Eighty eight Pages in 12mo; but it did not determine the Dispute. There came out a Memorial of a Doctor of Divinity, addressed to My Lords, the Prelates of France, on the Answer of a Benedictine Divine to the Letter from a German Abbot (51), and the Author of This Memorial maintains, That all the Accusation of the Benedictines is just, and that the Answer of Those Fathers is insufficient. He takes notice (52), that they sent from Rouen to Paris a second Answer to the German Abbot, and that Father de St Martine was very ready to father it. The Benedictines replied; but could not silence their Adversaries. Some other Writings were published pro and con; but I cannot give the Particulars, because I have met with but few of them: I have seen a little Book, called, The Conduct of the Benedictines on the attacking of their Edition of St Augustin. It contains Seventy nine Pages in 12mo, and was printed in the Year 1699. Among other things, we are told there, I. That, before they had published any thing in their own Defence, a Writing was addressed to them from an unknown Person — who took care to disperse it all over Paris, before he sent them any Copy (53). II. That the Title of this Piece was, A Letter from a Commendatory Abbot, to the Reverend Fathers, the Benedictines of the Congregation of St Maur. III. That, as the Letter, which the German Abbot wrote against these Fathers, was called, The German Benedictine, they called This, The Little Benedictine; and all the World owned, that the younger was not inferior to the elder. IV. That the Author, from the beginning to the end, only personated, and spoke the Language of the Janenists, in order to be the better understood by the B.B. (54). V. That The Little Benedictine exasperated, and stirred up the Party; who, from that Moment, resolved to defend the new Augustin, and that the Abbot Du Guet went to the Abbey to offer his Pen to the Congregation of St Maur (55). VI. That The Little Benedictine had not long made it's Appearance, before another smaller, and more agreeable one, came out, on a sudden (56), entitled, The Letter of a Benedictine, not reformed, to the Reverend Fathers, the Benedictines of the Congregation of St Maur, and came from the same Hand as the Little Benedictine. VII. That the Benedictines were deliberating, when a fourth Benedictine appeared, which was so serious, as to make one believe, that it was really produced in a Cloister. It's Title was, A Letter of a reformed Benedictine of St Dennis, in answer to the German Abbot, the Commendatory Abbot, and the Benedictine not Reformed (57). VIII. That the first Answer of the Benedictines came from St Dennis, and was attributed, by all the World, to Father Lamy: It is entitled, A Letter from a Divine to one of his Friends, on the Libel, called, A Letter from the Abbot  to the Reverend F. F. the Benedictines, &c. (58). IX. That there appeared another Answer, unexpected, which Father St Martine bragged he had written in less than two Days; the Title of it is, Reflections on the Letter from a German Abbot (59). X. That it is universally agreed, that the best thing, which has been wrote on the Affair of This Edition, is That, entitled, A Memorial of a Doctor of Divinity, addressed to my Lords, the Prelates of France, on the Answer of a Divine among the Benedictines, to a Letter from the German Abbot (60). XI. That a Man, more learned, than polite, handed about a Manuscript against Father St Martine, and called it, St Martine a bad Divine, and a good Janenist (61); That the Manuscript of This learned Man was followed by another Manuscript of some melancholly Author of very bad Taste, entitled, Antimony, by way of Preservative against the Calumnies of Father St Martine (62); and that This last Manuscript was succeeded by another attributed to a Jesuit; it is called, Vindicia Petavii (63). XII. That, in the Book entitled, A Solution of divers Problems, and ascribed to Mr du Guet, the Janenists undertake the Defence of the Benedictines with an high Hand (64). XIII. That there appeared a third Answer of the Benedictines (65), called Vindicia Editionis S. Augustini a P. P. B. B. adornata; which preceded most of these Writings I have been naming, and that it is little more than a Translation of Father Lamy's Answer, and is published under a borrowed Name, &c. (66).

(51) Printed in 1699; it contains 128 Pages in 12mo.

(52) Page 121.

(53) Conduite des Benedictins, page 24.

(54) Page 25.

(55) Page 28.

(56) Page 29.

(57) Page 31.

(58) Page 35.

(59) Page 40.

(60) Page 44.

(61) Page 47.

(62) Page 50.

(63) Page 51.

(64) Page 67.

(65) This, without doubt, is the same which was mentioned, page 64, in quoting the Words taken from a Manuscript Letter of Mr Simon to Father Marcial: A Benedictine, named Dom Bernard de Montfaucon, — has published a very sharp Answer to the German Abbot, printed by the Licence of the Master of the Sacred Palace.

(66) Conduite des Benedictins, page 68.

(42) Jacob. Pancratius Bruno in Lexico Medico, pag. 385.

(43) See the 2 Philip. of Cicero, fol. 247, D, and the 8th epig. of Verres fol. 53, B.

(44) Plaut. in Pseud. Act. 1. Sc. 1. v. 35.

(45) Id. in Moffell. Act. 5. Sc. 2. v. 1.

(46) Id. in Rud. Act. 2. Sc. 7. v. 28.

(47) He could not; he was dead before his Nephew was published.

(48) See his New Bibliotheca of Ecclesiastical Authors, Tom. 3, pag. 287. Edit. of Holland.

(49) In the M. sub. of Jan. 183, pag. 2.

(50) Printed in 1699; it contains 72 Pages in 12mo.

SOME Circumstances of the Quarrel between the Benedictines and Jesuits, on account of the Edition of St Augustin's Works.

I have also seen a Piece attributed to Lamy; 'Tis a Complaint of the Apologist for the Benedictines, to the Prelates of France, on the Defamatory Libels, which are dispersed against That Religious Society, and their Edition of St Augustin; together with a Summons to the Authors of These Libels to appear before the Archbishop of Paris; and on account of the Process, which was entered against the Benedictines, on their Edition of St Augustin. All this contains Eighty eight Pages in 8vo. The Author, having demanded of the Prelates the Punishment of their Adversaries, takes notice that The Difficulty — is to find out these unquiet and seditious Spirits, who have attacked the Benedictines (67). It is not so great as may be imagined, adds he; it is true, they take care not to set their Names to their Libels: But the R. F. F. the Jesuits take so much pains to claim the Merit of them, and discover themselves by other means, in so many places of these seditious Writings, that they cannot possibly be mistaken, unless People take a Pleasure in deceiving themselves. He, then, proposes his Conjectures, and, after some general Considerations, he gives something more particular and decisive (68).

(67) Plainte de l'Apologiste des Benedictins, pag. 10.

(68) Pag. 12.

"And now, says he, as to the Letter of the German Abbot, if these Fathers had not discovered themselves by their Air, Voice, Accent, Principles, and Doctrine, yet it is a Fact, which no Body, at this time of day, contests, or denies, that Father Langlois, a Jesuit of the College of Lewis le Grand, is the Author of it: and certainly That good Father could not expect, that the World should be ignorant of it, since the Book was sold publicly enough, even in the College. As for the other Libels, such as the Letter of the Commandatory Abbot, and That of the Monk not Reformed, besides our knowing, that they made Presents of them every where, and raised Trophies in them to their pretended Victories; how many times have they, there, taken the Pleasure to characterize, name, and declare themselves to be our Adversaries. It is proper, my Lord, to let you see in what Shapes and Colours they shew themselves: I shall use their own Words; Consider, says one in these Letters, what the Jesuits do: They, whom you may suspect to be your Adversaries. Take them for your Model in this Matter. They answer every thing." After having made a Collection of a great many more Characters, he goes on thus: "I think, from all these Descriptions, it cannot be doubted, but that they are Jesuits: But it will be said, they are only a small number of particular Persons. I grant it: We know they must be only some particular Persons; for a whole Society was never yet known to have, all of them, a Hand in the Writing of one and the same Letter. But is there not some reason to attribute These Writings to a whole Body, when That Body generally speaks and talks of them with Pleasure and Approbation? Nay, when they boast of, and distribute them by way of Presents, and in a triumphing Manner, as all the World knows the Jesuits have often done in respect to These Letters. In a word, my Lord, how scandalous soever the Writings of any particular Persons of a Society may be, there is ground to attribute them to the whole Society, when the Superiors take no care to suppress them; or, if That be not in their Power, when they do not shew by some public Act, that they disapprove them; or when they do not make a Reparation to the Parties offended, as notorious and public as the Injuries and Calumnies have been. It is by this Rule, that the scandalous Piece called, The Comedy of the Monks, has been always looked upon

"as a Work of the Society of the Jesuits; in which almost all the Religious are treated with an Indignity and Derision, which would hardly be pardoned in the most furious Heretics. It has been, I say, justly attributed to the whole Body, altho' composed and acted by their young Scholars; because it doth not appear, that the Superiors ever made any Satisfaction for it, or any just Amends (69)." After this he shews, that it belongs to the Archbishop of Paris to determine this Difference (70); and he summons his Adversaries to appear personally at That Tribunal, and to prove their several Accusations, on pain, if they fail in any of them, of being condemned as Slanderers, and their Libels judged Defamatory. But, not to give them an opportunity of abusing This Citation, as too loose and uncertain for want of a Time prefixed, and yet not to be too pressing upon them, we give them two Months from the Day that our Citation shall be published at Paris (71). Lastly, he shews, what the State of the Question is; and afterwards, in the drawing up of the Process, he refutes several Things published against the Benedictines.

(69) Pag. 21.

(70) Pag. 23.

(71) Pag. 24.

I dare say, that the Archbishop of Paris, and even a National Council, would be puzzled in the Determination of such a Cause as This is; for, besides the Questions of Jansenism being full of Equivocations, Two powerful, and very learned Communities, who have each their Friends and Enemies, can cut out work enough, and start Incidents to Eternity. The best Expedient, when such Disputes are on foot, is to have recourse to the Secular Power, as to a God in a Machine, who may come, and cut the Knot. This is what has happened in This Dispute. The King ordered the Chancellor to write a Letter to the Archbishop of Paris, to put a Stop to This Controversy, and to forbid the Parties to publish any Thing farther about it (72). But, be this as it will, it must be said of the Benedictines, that they took the most reasonable Method of all, as well to shew their own Integrity, as to stop the Course of the Libels. They demanded a regular Proceeding, where their Accusers should be obliged to declare their Names, and to prove their Accusations according to Law. Without this no good issue can be expected; for, even in the worst Causes, They, who have the liberty to plead only at the Tribunal of the Public, by anonymous Pamphlets, find it always in their Power to be haughty, insulting, and clamorous, whilst there are Writers and Printers. A Private Man, whether he be in the right, or the wrong, is soon silenced, if his Pieces do not sell; he cannot go on with them, without being at the charge of the Press, which is beyond his Abilities. But this Inconveniency can never affect such rich and powerful Communities, as Those of the Benedictines, and Jesuits.

(72) Historical Letters for January 1700, pag. 99.

They are going to print This Edition at Amsterdam, in a smaller Character, which will be sold much cheaper than That of Paris (73). There was a design to print with it the Critical Notes of a learned Man, who conceals himself under the Name of Joannes Phereponus (74); but I understand since, that the design is altered, and that Those Critical Notes will be printed separately, with the Commentary of Ludovicus Vives on the Work of Civitate Dei, &c. There was some reason to fear, that the Roman Catholics would be displeased with it; and therefore they will be left at full Liberty to buy, or leave These suspected Notes. They will be in a separate Volume, and all St Augustin's Work, exactly conformable to the Edition of Paris, will be sold either with or without them.

(73) See Mr Bernart, Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for March, 1699, pag. 358.

(74) Id. ib.

AULNOI (MARIA CATHERINA LE JUMEL DE BERNEVILLE Countess d') so famed for her Writings [A], was the Wife of Francis de la Motte, Count d'Aulnoi. She died his Widow in the Month of January 1705. Her Mother, whose second Husband was the Marquis de Gadagne, died at Madrid, where she enjoyed a considerable Pension, which King Charles II. had given her, for the great Service she had done That Nation, while she was at Rome. Philip V. continued this Pension. The Countess d'Aulnoi left four Daughters (a).

(a) Mercurius Galant, Jan. 1705, pag. 244, & seq.

[A] She is famed for her Writings: The first she published, is entitled A Journey into Spain. She went thither with the Queen of Spain, the first Wife of Charles II. Her other Works are, Memoirs of the Court of Spain, which has had three Editions in France, and one in Holland; Memoirs of the Court of England; Hippolito, Earl of Douglas; The History of John de Bourbon, Prince de Cambray; The Earl of Warwick. There are so many little Romances, which have been universally read. She has also published several Tales of the Fairies, and a Paraphrase on the Miserere (1).

(1) Mercurius Galant, Jan. 1705, pag. 247, & seq.

(a) The Emperor Claudius, writing to him, calls him only Valerius Aurelianus. Vopiscus in Aurel. cap. 17.

AURELIANUS (LUCIUS DOMITIUS) (a), Emperor of Rome in the III^d Century, was one of the greatest Warriours of Antiquity. It is not certain where he was born [A]; but it is agreed, that his Extraction was very mean, and that his Mother, who made it her Business to forget Events, was a Priestess of the Sun (b). He was of a good Stature, handsome, robust, and of a very lively Genius (c). He loved Action, Wine, and good Cheer (d); but not Women (e): He observed Discipline exactly, and caused others to observe it with the utmost Severity [B]. One Thing was observed in him: he continued poor amidst the very great number of Offices (f).

(b) Id. ibid. cap. 14.

(c) Id. cap. 46.

(d) Id. c. 4.

(e) Id. c. 6.

[A] It is not certain where he was born. Vopiscus, having related three Opinions (1), adds, That it usually happens, that the native Place of Persons, meanly born, is uncertain. He gives this reason for it; Because they generally tell a lie on that occasion, and adopt some Place of greater Note, which they pretend to be That of their Birth, in order to recommend themselves to Posterity, in a brighter Light, by the Splendor of the Place of their Nativity. Evenit quidem ut de eorum virorum gentiliis solo nesciatur qui humiliori loco nati, plerique solum gentile confingunt, ut dent posteritati de locorum splendore fulgorem (2). I believe there is another Cause, which contributes yet more to it; I mean the number of the Places, which contend for the Honour of producing famous Persons. They take the Advantage of the uncertainty of the Fact, and, hoping never to be effectually disproved, They vainly, and without any grounds, report, that They are born in such and such a Place. From hence came the Disputes about Homer's Country. I grant, with Vopiscus, that our principal Inquiry into the Characters of great Princes, is not to know where they were born, but how they have governed: Nec tamen magnorum principum virtutibus summa sciendi est, ubi quisque sit gentis, sed qualis in republ. fuerit. Nevertheless, as we are naturally very inquisitive to know the time and place of the Birth of Great Men, I think an Historian is obliged to make all possible inquiry to satisfy his Readers in This Point; and that they have a right to complain of the Negligence of a great number of Writers, who have been wanting in this Particular (3).

(1) Id. ib.

(3) See Remark [A] of the Article ROTTERDAM.

[B] He observed Discipline exactly, and caused others to observe it, with the utmost Severity. We may add, that he had the good Fortune to see, that This Severity did not make the Soldiers mutinous, but only fearful of neglecting their Duty. Without doubt it was good Fortune; for sometimes Generals have as much reason to fear the Consequences of too great a Severity, as those of too great Lenity. Aurelian found it very right, to punish rigorously, and without remission. "Militious ita timori fuit, ut sub eo posteaquam semel cum ingenti severitate castris peccata corripit, nemo peccaverit. Solus denique omnium militum, qui adulterium cum hospitii uxore commiserat, ita punivit, ut duarum arborum capita inflecteret, & ad pedes militis deligaret, eademque subito dimitteret, ut scissus ille utrinque penderet. Quæ res ingentem timorem omnibus fecit (4). — He was so much feared by the Soldiers, that, whosoever of them once felt the great Severity of his Corrections, for breach of Orders, never offended again. He was, in short, the only Commander, who ever punished so terribly the Crime of Adultery, committed, by a Soldier, with the Wife of the Person, upon whom he was quartered: The Tops of two Trees were bent down to each other by Violence, and, being fastened to the Feet of the Criminal, were let go again, and so tore him in halves. This struck them all with very great Terror." You see, by this Quotation, he used the same sort of Punishment in the Case of a Soldier's committing Adultery with the Wife of his Host, that Alexander inflicted on the Traitor Bessus, who killed King Darius. Nothing can be finer, than Aurelian's Orders, concerning the Soldiers Duty. St John Baptist could not have laid them under a greater Number of Restrictions, had he been ever so particular (5). Aurelian would not suffer them to touch any Fruit, nor to take of the People any Salt, Wood, or Oil, nor to transgress the Rules of Chastity. Would not one think, that he had a Design to introduce the Monastic Discipline into the Army? "Hujus epistola militaris est ad vicarium suum data hujusmodi: Si

(4) Vopisc. in Aurel. cap. 7. pag. 434.

(5) Luke iii. 14.

"vis tribunus esse, imò si vis vivere, manus militum contine. Nemo pullum alienum rapiat, ovem nemo contingat, Uvam nullus auferat, segetem nemo deterat: oleum, sal, lignum, nemo exigit: annona sua contentus sit. De præda hostis, non de lacrymis provincialium, habeat: arma terga sint: ferramenta famiata — alter alteri quasi servus obsequatur: à medicis gratis curentur; auripicebus nihil dent: in hospitibus caste agant; qui litem fecerit, vapulet (6). — He wrote thus to his Lieutenant. If you would continue your command, or even your Life, keep strict Discipline among the Soldiers. Let not one of them steal a Chicken, touch an Egg, pluck a Grape, or damage the standing Corn; or make any Exactions of Oil, Salt, or Wood, but make every man content himself with his Allowance. Reward them by the Spoil of our Enemies, but not by the Tears of our Friends and Subjects: Let their Arms be clean; their Swords and Spears sharp; — let them serve one another; let the Physicians attend the sick and wounded, gratis; let the Priests take nothing of them for their Sacrifices; let them live chastely in their Quarters; and let Him, who breeds Quarrels, run the Gauntlet." He was so rigid, that the Emperor Valerian, who had a singular Esteem for him, durst not put his Son under his Direction, for fear That young Prince, who was inclined to be wild, should too far experience the Austerity of such a Master: For which reason, he chose for him a more gentle Governor. Read the Answer he gave to the Consul Antoninus Gallus, who would have That Office conferred on Aurelian:

"Culpas me familiaribus literis quod Posthumio filium meum Gallienum magis quam Aureliano commiserim: quum utique & tenerior & puer credendus fuerit & exercitus: nec tu id diutius judicabis, si bene scieris quantæ sit Aurelianus severitas. Nimis est, multus est, gravis est, & ad nolam jam non facit tempora. Tellor autem omnes deos, me etiam timuisse nequid etiam erga filium meum severius, siquid ille fecisset, ut eist natura pronus ad ludicra, sævius cogitaret. Hæc epistola inquit quantæ fuerit severitatis, ut illum Valerianus etiam timuisse se dicat (7). — You blame me, in your Letters, for chusing to put my Son Gallienus under Posthumus, rather than under Aurelian; when the Youth, as well as the Army, requires his Severity of Discipline; but you would be no longer of This Opinion, if you knew but Aurelian's extreme Rigour. His Punishments are too frequent, too great, and heavy, and no way proportioned to the Usage of these Times. And I call the Gods to witness, I am afraid he should execute some dreadful Sentence, even upon my Son, if he should misbehave, as he is naturally idle. This Epistle shews he was so extremely severe, that Valerian himself was even afraid of him." We must not forget Aurelian's Strictness to his Domestics. "He caused those, who had neglected their Duty, to be whipped in his Presence; and he delivered up several of his own Servants to public Justice, to have them punished for their Faults. He caused one of his Maid Servants to be put to Death, for committing Adultery with one of his Lacqueys. — Servos & ministros peccantes coram se cædi jubebat, ut plerique dicunt, causa tenendam severitatis: ut illi, studio crudelitatis. Ancillam suam, quæ adulterium cum servo suo fecerat, capite punivit. Multos servos à familia propria, qui peccaverant, legibus audiendos judiciis publicis dedit (8). — Most ascribe all this to his strict Method of Discipline; but some, to the natural Cruelty of his Temper. Valerian was in the right to say, that such a Man was too severe for the Age he lived in. Ad nolam jam non facit Tempora!

(6) Vopisc. in Aurel. cap. 7. pag. 434.

(7) Id. ib. cap. 8. pag. 434.

(8) Id. ib. cap. 4. pag. 585.

Offices, which were conferred upon him [C]. He had so strong an Inclination to draw his Sword, that the Soldiers gave him the Surname of Sword in hand, to distinguish him from a Captain of the same Name [D]. He made such a Slaughter in Combats, that he killed Forty eight Sarmatians in one day; and the number Thousand was made use of to count the mortal Blows, which he had given the Enemy (f). This became the Subject of Songs and Ballads (g); he received from these the same Honours, as the first King of the Jews (h), and deserved it much better: For it was not pretended, that Saul killed, with his own hand, the Thousand Enemies, whose Slaughter was ascribed to him in the Songs; but This was literally understood of Aurelian. He was adopted by Ulpian Crinitus, one of the greatest Men of those Times (i): The Emperor Valerian, who managed That Affair (k), made him Lieutenant to the same Crinitus (l), who was General of the Frontiers of Illyricum and Thracia (m), and appointed him Consul in the Year 258. These Rewards, and some others, were rendered yet infinitely more agreeable, by the Encomiums and particular Marks of Esteem, with which the Emperor conferred them [E].

We

(f) Vopisc. ibid. cap. 6.

(g) Id. ib. & cap. 7.

(h) 1 Sam. x. viii. 7.

(i) Vopisc. in Aurel. cap. 14.

(l) Id. ib. cap. 15.

(m) Ibid. cap. 10.

(n) Ib. cap. 12.

(a) Id. ib. cap. 8, pag. 439. pora (g) ! He was only fit for the Sect of the Montanists. The Christians of the succeeding Ages would have found him too rigorous; and how many Casuists, at this Day, would say of his Morals, as they do of Those of the Fathers, that they are too strict, and that This bitter and rough Physic does not agree with our Sick ? What military Men, or even grave Citizens, think it worth while to punish the Familiarities of their Men and Maids ? The general Punishment, for their Faults of this Nature, is to turn them away. Nay, sometimes Masters are so kind, as to marry them to each other. Observe, that History mentions but one of Aurelian's Servants, who was punished for her Lasciviousness. It is a sign, that such Transgressions were very rare in his Family, which is a Matter of wonder, considering what we see every Day, and that a General, or an Emperor, must necessarily have a great many Slaves of both Sexes.

[C] He continued poor, amidst the very great Number of Offices, which were conferred upon him (10).] The Emperor, his Master, testified This Virtue, when he charged the Public with the Expence, which the Consul, he promised Aurelian, would require.

" Consulatum cum eodem Ulpio Crinito in annum sequentem à die undecimo Calend. Juniarum, in locum Gallieni & Valeriani, sperare conuenit sumptu publico. Levanda est enim paupertas eorum hominum, qui diu reipublicæ viventes, pauperes sunt, & nullorum magis (11). — You may expect the Consulship, together with Ulpian Crinitus, for the next Year, from the XI of the Cal. of June, in the Room of Gallienus and Valerianus, and that your Expences shall be born by the Public. For no sort of Poor deserve That Regard so much, as Those, who have long served the Public, and yet are poor."

(11) Id. ib. cap. 445.

(12) Ibid. cap. 12.

(13) Ibid. cap. 15.

The Historian, who furnishes this Passage, produces the Letter, which the Emperor wrote to the Prefect of Rome, to signify to him his Pleasure, as to what should be given to the new Consul. " Aureliano, cui consulatut detulimus ob PAUPERIATEM, qua ille magnus est ceteris major, dabis ad editionem Circensium aureos Antonianos trecentos, &c. (12). — To Aurelian, whom we have made Consul on account of his POVERTY, which makes That great Man still greater, you are to present Three hundred pieces of Gold, of Antoninus's Coin, for his Expence in exhibiting the Circensian Shows." Some have said, that " the Poverty of Aurelian obliged Valerian to order Ulpian Crinitus to adopt him. — Memini me in quodam libro Græco legisse — Mandatum esse Crinito à Valeriano, ut Aurelianum adoptaretur, idcirco præcipue quod pauper esset (13). " It is remarkable, that, when he was Emperor, he used a great deal of Moderation in doing good to his Friends: Perhaps, from his long Habit of contemning Wealth, and the Opinion he had, that moderate Riches were sufficient for a great Man: Perhaps, also, because he would not irritate the People by excessive Profusions; for Subjects are not pleased to see their Prince bestow his Treasures and Favours on his Friends, in an extravagant manner. Vopiscus tells us, That " this Emperor chose to observe a Medium, which should take away the Inconveniences of Poverty, without substituting Those of Envy. — Amicos suos honeste ditavit & modice, ut miserias paupertatis effugerent, & divitiarum invidiam pav-

VOL. I.

" trimonii moderatione vitarent (14). " He adds, (14) Ibid. That " he would not suffer any Person to wear Silk Cloaths, of which he gave them an Example, and subjected his own Wife to This Law; for, when she desired, at least, one Silk Suit, he answered her, God forbid, that Thread should cost as much as Gold. For, at that time, a Pound of Silk was worth a Pound of Gold. — Vestem holiericam neque ipse in vestitio suo habuit, neque alteri utendam dedit. Et quum ab eo uxor sua peteret, ut unico pallio blatto serico uteretur, ille respondit, Absti ut auro fila pensetur: libra enim auri tante libra serici fuit (15). " See Mr de Tillemont, who has observed the little Agreement between This Fact, and certain things reported by the same Historian, or others, concerning This Emperor's Luxury (16). But we must not forget, that the Cloaths of his Domestics were no richer, after his Advancement to the Throne, than before (17); and that he granted the Senators the Liberty of wearing the same Habit with himself (18).

[D] The Soldiers gave him the Surname of Sword in Hand, to distinguish him from a Captain of the same Name.] What a proper Distinction is This to flatter the Pride of a brave Warriour ? I shall relate the Words of Vopiscus: " Gladii exercendi cupidus. Nam quum essent in exercitu duo Aureliani tribuni, hic, & alius qui cum Valeriano captus est, huic signum exercitus apposerat manus ad ferrum, ut si forte quaereretur quis Aurelianus aliquid vel fecisset vel gessisset, suggereretur, Aurelianus manus ad ferrum, atque cognosceretur (19). — Remarkably fond of drawing his Sword. For there being in the Army two Tribunes, both named Aurelian, this, and another, who was taken Prisoner with Valerian, the Soldiers called him Sword in Hand, by way of Distinction; so that, when it was asked, which Aurelian had done any thing, the Answerer, which meant him was, Aurelian Sword in Hand."

[E] The Emperor conferred them with Encomiums, and particular Marks of Esteem.] I am going to relate them; for they contain the considerable Services, which Aurelian had done to the Empire. " Valerianus Augustus Ceionio Albino præfecto urbi. Vellemus quidem singulis quibusque devotissimis Reipublice viris multo majora deferre compendia, quam eorum dignitas postulat, maxime ubi honorem vita commendat. Debet enim quid præter dignitatem pretium esse meritum. Sed facit rigor publicus, ut accipere de provincialium oblationibus ultra ordinis sui gradum nemo plus possit. Aurelianum fortissimum virum ad inspicienda & ordinanda castra omnia destinavimus: cui tantum à nobis atque ab omni Republica, communi totius exercitus confessione, debetur, ut digna illi vix aliqua vel nimis magna sunt munera. Quid enim in illo non clarum? quid non Corvinis & Scipionibus conferendum? Ille Liberator Illyrici, ille Galliarum Restitutor, ille dux magni totius exempli. Et tamen nihil præterea possum addere tanto viro ad munus gratiam quam patitur sobria & bene gerenda Respublice. Quare sinceritas tua, mi parens charissime, supradicto viro efficiat, quandiu Romæ fuerit, panes militares mundos sedecim, &c. (20). — Valerianus Cæsar, to Ceionius Albinus, Prefect of the City. It is our Desire to distinguish those, who

(14) Ibid. cap. 45. pag. 537.

(15) Id. ib. cap. 540.

(16) Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 3. p. 1074, 1075.

(17) Vopisc. in Aurel. cap. 1.

(18) Ibid. cap. 49.

(19) Id. ib. cap. 6, pag. 426.

(20) Id. ib. cap. 9, p. 440.

" ubi

(n) Ibid.
cap. 17.

(o) Zosimus,
lib. i. p. 654,
655.

(p) They were the neighbours to Rhetia, and to Italy.

(q) Vopisc.
in Aurel.
cap. 21.

(r) Taken out of Mr de Tillemont's
Hist. des
Emper.
Tom. 7. pag.
1030, & seq.
He quotes
Dexippus directly. See also his Notes.

We do not find, that Aurelian made any Figure under the Emperor Gallienus; but, under Claudius, he held the principal Posts, and commanded the Army with so much Glory, that, after the Death of That Emperor, all the Legions concurred to set him on the Throne (n). This happened in the Year 270. A little while after, he came to Rome, and, after establishing his Authority, he marched towards Pannonia, where the Goths had made an Irruption (o). He gave them Battle, and obliged them to repass the Danube, and to desire a Peace. After this, being informed, that the Marcomani, the Jutungi (p), and some other Nations, had resolved to carry the War into Italy, he marched against them, and overthrew them in a general Engagement, near the Danube. He killed many of them, as they repassed That River, and hindered the rest from returning into their Country, by shutting them up in the Roman Dominions. The want of Provisions, and many other Inconveniencies, which obliged them to desire a Peace of him, did not inspire them with such a Submission, as he expected. Their Deputies assumed so high an Air, that he dismissed them very haughtily; for, imagining he had cut off the Retreat of their Army, he concluded they could not escape him. But he was mistaken: The Enemy disengaged themselves, and, marching before him, entered into Italy, where they made great Ravages round about Milan. He could not follow them with Speed enough; for his Army was heavier than theirs. They defeated him by Surprise near Placentia (q), and, if they had understood the Military Art, as well as he, they might have ruined the Empire after such a Victory; but, as they knew not how to make use of their Advantage, and did not march close, he defeated them in several Rencontres, and reduced them to nothing (r). During This War, the Books of the Sibyls were consulted at Rome: I shall mention some Circumstances of it, which shew the Religion of Aurelian, and the Irreligion of his Flatterers [F]. It is likely he pursued the Enemy as far as Germany, where he was obliged to stop some time to repulse the Vandals, who had passed the Danube. He defeated them, and forced them to beg a Peace, which he was very willing to grant them (s). He returned to Rome full of Repentment, for the Seditions, which had been raised there, and punished them with extreme Cruelty (t). This was his predominant Vice; and it was for the sake of this, that many have refused to rank

(s) Tillemont, ibid.

(t) See Remark [H].

"who have deserved well of the Commonwealth, with greater Rewards, than are suitable to their Rank, especially where their whole Life will justify their Distinction. For, besides what is due to their Station, there is also something due to their extraordinary Merit. But the public Exactness requires, that none should receive, out of the Revenues of the Provinces, any more than is allotted to the Degree of his Dignity. We have appointed That brave Man, Aurelian, to inspect and direct our Incampments, to whom both we, and the Commonwealth, are so greatly indebted, that no Rewards can be thought too great, or even worthy, of him. What has he not performed! What could the Corvini and Scipio's have done more! He is the Protector of Illyricum, the Restorer of the Gallia's, a General, great in every Action. And yet we can assign to so extraordinary a Man no other public Reward, than the frugal and regular Administration of the Commonwealth allows. Be it your Care, therefore, my beloved Cousin, to furnish him, during his stay at Rome, with sixteen fine military Leaves, &c." Valerian wrote thus to the Prefect of Rome; and here follows part of his Letter to Aurelian: "Ego de te tantum, Deo favente, spero quantum de Traiano, si viveret, posset sperare Reipub. Neque enim minor est (21), in cujus locum fidemque te legi. Consultatum cum eodem Ulpio Crinito in annum sequentem tunc die undecimo Calend. Juniarum, in locum Gallieni & Valeriani, sperare te conveni sumptu publico. — I hope for as great things from you, under the Favour of Heaven, as the Commonwealth might have expected from Trajan, had he lived. Nor is He an unfit Match for you, to whom, both in Office and Friendship, I have designed you for a Partner. You may expect, therefore, the Consulship, together with Ulpius Crinitus, for the next Year, from the XI of the Cal. of June, and your Charges shall be born by the Public." Here is also the Speech, which Valerian made to him, in the Presence of the Army, and the Court: "Gratias tibi agi, Aureliane, Resp. quod cum Gothorum potestate liberasti. Abundamus per te præda, abundamus gloria, & his omnibus quibus Romana felicitas crevit. Cape igitur tibi pro rebus gestis tuis coronas murales quatuor, coronas vallares quinque, coronas navales duas, coronas civicas duas, hastas puras decem, vexilla bicolora quatuor, tu-

"nicas duales rufas quatuor, pallia proconsularia duo, togam prætextatam, tunicam palmatam, togam pictam, subarmalem profundum, sellam eboratam. Nam te consullem hodie designo, scripturus ad senatum, ut tibi deputet scipionem, de potest etiam fasces. Hæc enim imperator non solum dare, sed & senatu, quando fit consul, accipere (22). — The Commonwealth returns you thanks, Aurelian, for freeing her from the Injults of the Goths. By your Victories we abound in Spoil, we abound in Glory, and in every thing else, which can contribute to the Prosperity of Rome. Accept, therefore, for your great Services, four Mural Crowns, five Rampire Crowns, two Naval Crowns, two Civic Crowns, ten possib'd Spears, four Standards of two Colours, four military Buff Suits, two Proconsular Cloaks, and the Robe of State, the Robe embroidered with Palms, the rich Triumphant Robe, a Suit to wear under Armour, and the Ivory Chair. For I this Day appoint you Consul, and will write to the Senate to send you the Staff and Fasces, the Insignia of your Office; which are never given by the Emperor, but always by the Senate, to the new Magistrate."

(22) Idem Vopiscus, cap. 13, p. 449; 450

The first, of these three Passages of Vopiscus, contains one thing well worth Observation, and which does not at all agree with our common Notions of the Disorders of the Empire. We fancy, that, after the Soldiers took upon them to create, and kill, their Emperors, there was nothing but Oppression, and Tyranny, in the Roman Provinces. This was not always true; we see here, that Valerian managed the public Expences, in Ease to the Provinces, with more Precaution, than is this Day used in Christian Kingdoms.

[F] Some Circumstances, which shew the Religion of Aurelian, and the Irreligion of his Flatterers: The Consecration was very great in Rome, upon hearing, that the Marcomani were entered into Italy, and made great Ravages there (23). Some Seditions followed upon it, which made Ulpius Syllanus, Chief of the Senate, propose to consult the Books of the Sibyls; but some Senators opposed it, alledging, that, under so brave a Prince as Aurelian, there was no occasion to inform themselves of the Will of the Gods. This Difference of Opinions causing the Consultation of those Writings to be deferred, it became necessary for Aurelian to interpose. He wrote, therefore,

(23) Idem, cap. 18.

(21) Cæcilius will have it read as, that is to say, that Valerian believed, that Aurelian equalled Crinitus. This seems to be a mistake.

him among good Princes; and, according to the Saying of Dioclesian, he was much sicker to command an Army, than to be an Emperor [G]. However, we must take notice, that his sanguinary Disposition did not hinder him from being beloved by the People: His Liberality, and the care he took to maintain Plenty, and to punish Misdemeanors, caused his Cruelty to be forgot [H]. Having punished the Seditious, and therefore, to the Senators, that "be wondered they should hesitate about a Matter of That Nature, just as if they were deliberating in a Christian Church, and not in the Temple of all the Gods. . . . Mirror vos, patres sancti, tamdiu de aperiendis Sibyllinis dubitasse libris, perinde quasi in Christianorum Ecclesia, non in templo doorum omnium, tractaretis (24)." He pressed it very earnestly; he promised to defray the necessary Expences, and for that purpose sent orders to his Treasurer; "for,"

(24) Idem, cap. 20, pag. 463.

"added he, it is no Disgrace to conquer by the Divine Assistance: it was thus our Ancestors began and ended several of their Wars. Neque enim indecorum est diis iuvantibus vincere: sic apud majores nostros multa finita sunt bella, sic cepta (25)." So that Syllenus had reason to say to Aurelian's Flatterers, that This great Man both honoured and trusted in the Gods, and that their Assistance never disgraced brave Men. "Meministi P. C. me in hoc ordine saepe dixisse jam tum, quum primum nuntiatum est Marcomannos erupisse, consulenda Sibyllae decreta, utendam Apollinis beneficia, inservientium deorum immortalium preceptis: recusasse vero quosdam, & cum ingenti calumnia recusasse, quum adulando dicerent, tantam principis esse virtutem, ut opus non sit deos consuli, proinde quasi & ipse vir magnus non deos colat, non de diis immortalibus speret. Quid plura? audivimus literas quibus, rogavit opem deorum, quæ nunquam cuiquam turpis est ut vir fortissimus adjuvetur (26)."

(25) Idem, cap. 20, pag. 464.

"Venerable Fathers, You have often heard me, in this Place, on the first News of the Invasion of the Marcomans, give my Opinion for consulting the Sibylline Oracles, for making use of Those Favours of Apollo, and for attending to the Will of the immortal Gods. This some Persons opposed, and with great Abuse opposed; insisting, with their Flattery, that such was the Virtue of our Prince, as made all Application to the Gods unnecessary. As if this great Prince himself did not worship, and trust in, the immortal Gods. Why should I say more? you have heard his own Letters, wherein he desires their Assistance, which the bravest of Men need never be ashamed of." After receiving Aurelian's Letter, there was no farther delay; the Senate caused the Books of the Sibyls to be consulted, which occasioned a long Train of Devotions (27). Observe, by the way, how much the Maxim of Alexis is echoed by some Persons (28). We have Flatterers here, who imagine we never need have recourse to the Assistance of Heaven, but when we distrust the Valour and Prudence of the Princes of this World. I shall add here two Proofs, that Aurelian was not of this Opinion: "Credo adjutores Rom. Kemp. Deos qui nunquam nostris conatibus defuerunt (29)."

(26) Idem, cap. 19, pag. 459, 460.

(27) Idem, cap. 20.

(28) See Remark [E] of the Article AJAX the Son of Telamon.

(29) Vopiscus, cap. 16.

"I trust the Commonwealth will be assisted by the Gods, who have never once failed to prosper our Arms." This he wrote, when he found himself perplexed by the long Resistance of Zenobia. He acknowledged, in another Letter, that his Victories were a Present from the Gods. "Unde apparet nullam mihi à Diis immortalibus datam sine difficultate victoriam (30). — From whence it appears, that the Gods have given me no Victory, without Trouble." It is true, he added, that these Presents were always attended with a thousand Difficulties. It is the Fate of all things: it is not Virtue alone, which must be acquired by the Sweat of our Brows: it holds equally true of all other good things. Sic diis placitum. — Such is the Will of Heaven.

(30) Idem, cap. 38.

Τὸ δ' ἀπολλὺς ἰδὼν τὰ θεῶν ἀποδείξας ἰδὼν

Ἀδριανῶς, μωροῦς δὲ καὶ ὀπίθ' ὄϊμο· ἵν' αὖτις, καὶ τρυφῶς τὸ πᾶν ἔσται (31).

(31) Hesiod. Opera & Dies, ver. 237.

Closely the Gods their favorite Virtue keep,

Nor make her known to Men on Terms too cheap.

Long is the Passage to her blest Abode;
Strait and discouraging at first the Road.
Bar'd are all Passes, all Access denied,
To those, who take not Labour for their Guide.

In this sense, there are no Free Gifts; and we must confess, that this Will of Heaven is founded in Goodness; for our Joy in acquiring any good Thing is heightened by the Pains it cost us.

[G] His Cruelty hindered many from ranking him among good Princes; and, according to the Saying of Dioclesian, he was much sicker to command an Army, than to be an Emperor.] Vopiscus will inform us of these Particulars: "Et Aurelianus quidem, sicut be

(32) multi neque inter bonos, neque inter malos, principes ponunt, idcirco quod ei clementia, imperatorum dos prima, defuerit. Verconius Herennianus praefectus praetorio Dioclesiani, teste Asclepiodoto, saepe dicebat, Dioclesianum frequenter dixisse, quum Maximianus asperitatem reprehenderet, Aurelianus magis ducem esse debuisse quam principem. Nam ejus nimia ferocitas eidem displicebat. — There are many, who will not allow Aurelian to be ranked either among good or bad Princes. They deny him the first, for his Want of Clemency, That principal Jewel in a Crown. Verconius Herennianus, Commander of the Guard to Dioclesian, as Asclepiodotus relates, often affirmed it to be a frequent Saying of Dioclesian, when he reproved Maximian for his Roughness, that Aurelian was cut out for a General, but not for a Prince. For he did not like his too great Austerity." These words of Dioclesian were the words of a good Judge; for he used to say,

That there is nothing more difficult, than to reign well (33), and he perfectly understood the Reasons of This Difficulty. You will find them in Vopiscus

(34); an Author, who observes, that, in so great a number of Roman Emperors, there were reckoned but very few good ones (35); and who commends the Jest of a Buffoon, That all the good Princes may be painted on a Ring. "Vides quæso quam pauci sint principes boni, ut bene dictum sit a quodam mico scurra Claudii, hujus temporibus, In mi-annulo bonos principes posse perficere atque depingi (36)."

[H] His Liberality, and the Care he took to maintain Plenty — caused his Cruelty to be forgot.]

The manner, in which he punished the Seditious, which were raised in Rome, during his Absence, too much exceeded the bounds of a just and necessary Severity, that it tarnished his Reputation, and rendered him very odious: "Magnum illud, & quod jam fuerat, & quod non frustra speratum est, infamiae tristioris ictu contaminavit imperium. Timeri cepit princeps optimus, non amari, quum alii dicerent, perferendum talem principem, non optandum; alii bonum quidem medicum, sed mala ratione curantem (37). — He stained the Glory of

This great Reign, both what it had already gained, and was still like to gain, by one sad Blot of Cruelty. This excellent Prince began to be dreaded, instead of beloved; and some said, such a Governor was not to be endured, much less desired; others, that he was a good Physician, but practised too rough a Method of Cure." The People did not long continue This Hatred: they were soon mollified by the Distributions of Bread, Flesh (38), and Oil (39), and such other Kindnesses, which they enjoyed under His Government. They were still such, as in the time of Juvenal, and formed no other desires, beyond Those of Bread, and public Shows: Nothing could be more gay, than They were, provided they had their Bellies full.

— Jam pridem ex quo suffragia nulli Vendimus, effugit curas. Nam qui dabat otus Imperium, sales, legiones, omnia, nunc se had their Bellies full.

— Jam pridem ex quo suffragia nulli Vendimus, effugit curas. Nam qui dabat otus Imperium, sales, legiones, omnia, nunc se had their Bellies full.

— Jam pridem ex quo suffragia nulli Vendimus, effugit curas. Nam qui dabat otus Imperium, sales, legiones, omnia, nunc se had their Bellies full.

— Jam pridem ex quo suffragia nulli Vendimus, effugit curas. Nam qui dabat otus Imperium, sales, legiones, omnia, nunc se had their Bellies full.

Continet,

(u) Vopific. cap. 22.

(x) In 272.

(y) In Remark [E] of the Article APOLLONIUS of Tyana.

(z) Vopific. in Aurel. cap. 26.

(aa) See in Tillemont. Hist. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1055, the List of the Nations that first him Projects. See also below, Citat. (61).

(bb) Tillemont. Hist. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1056.

(cc) See Remark [L].

(dd) Vopific. in Aurel. cap. 32.

and composed all Disorders at Rome (u), he undertook an Expedition into the East against Zenobia (x). He presently ended This War by taking That brave Princess. I say, he ended it presently, though he found, by the way, many Enemies to give Battle to, and many strong Places to reduce. We have seen, elsewhere (y), what hindred him from ruining Tyana. He exposed himself so much, when he besieged Zenobia, in the City of Palmyra, that he received a Wound from an Arrow (z). He defeated the Persians, who came to the Assistance of the Besieged; and acquired such a Reputation by the Conquest of all Zenobia's Dominions, as cannot be expressed (aa). In his return towards the West, he understood, that the Palmyrenians had revolted. This News made him return into Syria, and he was got to Antioch, before they heard he was coming (bb). He punished Palmyra with an excessive Cruelty; for he put all to the Sword (cc). He was yet at Carræ in Mesopotamia, when he was informed of the Revolt of the Egyptians: He marched against them with his usual Success and Expedition; he defeated their Leader, took, and put him to Death, and so subdued Egypt in a very little time (dd). His desire of re-uniting the Gauls, Spain, and Britain, which had been usurped by Tetricus, made him return into the West. He gained a Victory near Cbalons on the Marne, which decided the matter; the rather, because Tetricus surrendered himself during the Battle (ee). He returned to Rome, and triumphed over Zenobia and Tetricus with an extraordinary Pomp (ff). He repassed into Gaul, and, being informed, that the Barbarians were entered into the Country of the Vindelici (gg), he marched thither immediately, and dislodged them. From thence he passed into Illyricum; and, judging, that there was no possibility of preserving Dacia, which Trajan had made a Province of, beyond the Danube, and which had been lost under Gallienus, he withdrew from thence the Troops and the Inhabitants, and settled the latter in part of Masia and Dardania, which he converted into a new Province (hh). He had a fine Army in Thracia, which he designed to lead, after the Winter, against the Persians, when he was killed by one of his Generals (ii). This happened in the Month of January, 275. We know the great Actions of his Life only in general; but, if we knew the Particulars of them from such exact Descriptions as are now used in relating Battles, and Conquests, we should admire him beyond expression, (ee) Tillemont. Hist. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1058, 1059.

(ff) See the Description of it in Vopiscus, c. 33 & seq.

(gg) It is really the Country, which is now called Bavarria and Suebia.

(hh) Which was at's called Dacia, or New Dacia. See the Proof of this in Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 3. pag. 1067.

(ii) Vopiscus in Aurel. cap. 35.

Continet, atque duas tantum res anxius optat,
Panem, & Circenses (40).

(40) Juven. Sat. 10. ver. 77.

*Now, free from Care, Those Slaves the People live,
No longer plagued with Votes to sell, or give.
That mighty People, whom the World obey'd,
Whose Voices, Consuls, Armies, Emperors made;
Now Liberty's no more, are sunk so low,
Their whole Ambition asks but Bread and Show.*

It was by these Means, This Emperor made himself beloved by the Multitude. Read the Letter, which he wrote to the Overseer of the Provisions: "Aurelianus Augustus Flavio Arabiano prefæcto annonæ. Inter cætera, quibus diis faventibus Romanam Rempub. juvimus, nihil mihi est magnificentius quam quod additamento unciæ omne annonarum urbaricum genus juvi: quod ut esset perpetuum, & navicularius Niliascos apud Ægyptum novos, & Romæ amnicos posui. Tiberinas extruxi ripas: vadum alvei tumentis effodi, diis & perennitati vota constitui, altam Cererem consecravi. Nunc tuum est officium, Arabiane jucundissime, elaborare, ne meæ dispositiones in irritum veniant. Neque enim populo Rom. saturo quicquam potest esse lætius (41). — Aurelianus Cæsar to Flavio Arabiano, Prefect of the Provisions. Among the Services, which by the Favour of the Gods I have done to the Commonwealth, I esteem none greater than That of making an Addition of one twelfth Part more to all the City Provisions. Which that I might perpetuate, I have built proper Vessels in Egypt, for navigating in the Nile, and at Rome, for the Tyber. This I have also new embanked; and deepened the Shallows of the swelling Channel. I have performed all holy Rites to the Gods, to Eternity, and to All Bountiful Ceres. It is now your part, most agreeable Arabianus, to put my Designs in Execution. Nor can any Thing give me so much pleasure, as to see the Roman People supplied with Plenty." He had a design to settle a perpetual Distribution of Wine, and had taken measures for it (42). It is said, that the Commander of his Guards dissuaded him from the execution, by saying, that, if Wine was given to the People, they must also have Geese, and Fowls. Si & vinum populo Romano daretur, superest ut & pullos & anseres demus (43). Such Large-

(41) Vopific. cap. 47. pag. 56, 57.

(42) Idem, cap. 43.

(43) Id. ib. pag. 58.

ses, as These are sufficient to cause the spilling of some Persons Blood to be forgot. Though Aurelian had caused his Sister's Son, or Daughter, or both, to be put to Death, for frivolous Reasons (44); though he had rashly inflicted capital Punishments (45); all this was not able to make him lose the Affection of a People, whom he fed so plentifully, and clothed so handsomely (46). Besides, his Severity put a Stop to several Disorders, which were very odious to the People. He extirpated all Informers, Extortioners, public Bloodsuckers, and such sort of Vermin. "Quicquid sane scelerum fuerit, quicquid male conscientie, vel artium funestum, quicquid denique scelerum, Aurelianus totopentus orbe purgavit (47). — Item quadruplatores ac delatores ingenti severitate persequutus est: tabulas publicas ad privatorum securitatem exuri in foro Trajano semel iussit. Amnestia etiam sub eo delictorum publicorum decreta est de exemplo Atheniensium: cujus rei etiam Tullius in Philippicis meminit. Fures provinciales reperundarum ac peculatus reos ultra militarem modum est persequutus, ut eos ingentibus suppliciis cruciatibusque puniret (48). — Whatever Crimes, whatever Iniquities, or pernicious Arts, whatever Factions appeared, all these Aurelian totally extirpated. — He also punished all Informers, and Sharers of Confessions, with exceeding Severity: and once burnt all the public Accounts in Trajan's Market-Place, for the Security of Those concerned in them. He decreed also a general Indemnity for all Offences against the State, after the Example of the Athenians: which is mentioned by Cicero in his Philippics. The Robbers of the Provinces, who were guilty of Extortion, Bribery, or Embezzling the Public Money, he treated with more than military Rigour, and made them undergo the most cruel Tortures and Punishments." He enlarged the Circumference of Rome, and restored the ancient Bounds of the Empire (49). By this show of Grandeur the People suffer themselves to be deceived. He applied himself to reform Abuses: he limited the Number of Eunuchs, because they were risen to too high a Price (50). He prohibited the keeping any Concubines, who were of a free Condition (51). To conclude, it was a Pleasure to the Roman People to see This Emperor make himself feared by the Senate: Perhaps That Assembly was grown a little too haughty; but, be it as it will, I imagine it was thought proper, that the Senators should

(44) Idem, cap. 36, & 39.

(45) See the Causes of Julian, under Mr. Spanheim's Notes pag. 107.

(46) Vopific. cap. 48.

(47) Idem, cap. 47.

(48) Idem, c. 39. pag. 522, 523.

(49) Idem, cap. 39.

(50) Idem, cap. 49.

(51) Id. ib.

expression, and think the Complaint of Junius Tiberianus extremely just [I]: For, in short, Aurelian carried the War from East to West, with the same ease as we do now from Alsatia into Flanders. He was much lamented, and had most magnificent Monuments erected in Honour to him. They deified him [K], and built him a Temple. It is remarkable, should be taught how to behave, by such a Master, as School-Boys under the Correction of a Pedagogue. Populus autem Romanus cum amavit, Senatus & timuit (52). Senatus mortem ejus graviter tulit, gravius tamen Populus Romanus, qui vulgo dicebat Aurelianum pedagogum esse Senatorum (53).

[I] The Complaint of Junius Tiberianus was extremely just. What, said he, shall a Thersites, a Sinon, and other Monsters of Anquity, be known to us, and to our Posterity; and shall they not know Aurelian, a most illustrious Prince, and a most severe Emperor, who restored the whole World to the Roman Name? Heaven grant this Madness may never happen. Hereupon he engaged Flavius Vopiscus to undertake That Emperor's History, and promised him all the Memoirs the Library of Trajan could furnish. I shall relate That Historian's own Words: "Quæsitivæ ut (Junius Tiberianus) quæ vitam Aureliani in literas retulisset. Cui ego quum respondissem, neminem à me Latinorum, Græcorum aliquos læditatos, dolorem gemitus sui vir sanctus per hæc verba profudit: Ergo Thersitem, Sinonem, cæteraque illa prodigia vetustatis, & nos bene scimus, & posteri frequentabunt: divum Aurelianum, clarissimum principem, severissimum imperatorem, per quem totus Romano nomini orbis est restitutus, posteri nescient? Deus avertat bonæ ameniam. Et tamen, si bene novi, ephemeridas istius viri scriptas habemus, etiam bella cæteræ historico digesta, quæ velim accipias, & per ordinem scribas, additis quæ ad vitam pertinent. Quæ omnia ex libris linteis, in quibus ipse quotidiana sua scribi præceperat, pro tua sedulitate condices. Curabo autem ut tibi ex Ulpia bibliotheca & libris linteis proferantur. Tu velim Aurelianum ita ut est, quatenus potes, in literas mittas (54).

— He (Junius Tiberianus) asked me who had wrote the Life of Aurelian. I answered, I had read it in some Writings of the Greeks, but not in any of Latins, on which That excellent Man expressed his Concern in this pathetic Complaint: What, shall a Thersites, a Sinon, and such other Prodigious of Antiquity be known to us, and our Posterity; and shall they not know the Divine Aurelian, the most celebrated Prince, the strictest Emperor, who restored the whole World to the Roman Name? May Heaven avert such Madness. And yet, if I am not mistaken, we have the Journals of This great Man in Writing, and also his Wars, digested in historical Method, which I would have you take, and copy in order, and insert in their proper Place, whatever relates to his Life. You will find the Particulars by a careful perusal of this Journal, which is wrote in Books made of Lint, and contains the Minutes of each Day's Transaction, set down by his own Command. I will take care they shall be sent you out of the Ulpian Library. Do you write such a History of Aurelian, as may describe him to the Life, as near as you are able." Observe, that Vopiscus spoke thus about thirty Years after the Death of Aurelian; I say, observe This as a Proof either of the Ignorance, or Negligence, of the Latins of those Times. None of them had yet published any thing of the great Actions of This Prince, the Restorer of the Empire, Orbis restitutor, as he is called on a Medal. He did not expect This Digression, when he took care to have a daily Register kept of the Series of his Exploits (55).

[K] He was much lamented. — They deified him.] Those very Men, who put him to Death, erected a magnificent Tomb for him, and consecrated a Temple to him (56); for they discovered, that they had been brought into That Conspiracy, by a horrid Piece of Villany. We shall show what That was. Aurelian had threatened his Secretary Mnesibæus; who, giving himself over for lost, as he well knew the Threats of This Prince would be put in Execution (57), resolved to be beforehand with him, and made several Persons believe, that Aurelian designed putting Them to Death. He shewed them a List, wherein he had put himself, and exhorted them to save their Lives. They were all Persons, who had either incurred Aurelian's Displeasure, or had Reason to believe, that, by the Importance of their Services, they stood very well in his Favour, and had nothing to fear (58). All those Persons plotted against his Life, and put it in Execution. But having afterwards discovered the Secretary's Fraud, they were the most zealous to honour Aurelian. Mnesibæus was exposed to the wild Beasts, and care was taken to preserve the Memory of That Punishment on This Emperor's Tomb (59). The Soldiers would not confer the Empire on any of those, who were concerned in his Death, but applied to the Senate for a new Prince, and for the Deification of Aurelian (60). The Senate would not take upon them to create an Emperor, but as for the divine Honours which the Army desired for Aurelian, they were decreed without any delay. Tacitus (61), who first gave his Opinion in the Senate, made a very fine Speech, which the Reader will be glad to find here, since it contains a just Abstract of Aurelian's most splendid Actions, and is embellished with some curious Sentiments.

Rectè atque ordine consulissent dii immortales. P. C. si boni ferro inviolabiles extitissent, ut longiorem ducerent vitam: neque contra eos aliqua esset potestas iis qui necesse infandas tristissima mente concipiunt. Viveret enim princeps noster Aurelianus, quo neque utilior fuit quiquam. Respirare certe post infelicitatem Valeriani, post Gallieni mala, imperante Claudio cæperat nostra Respublica: at eadem reddita fuerat Aureliano toto penitus orbe vincente. Ille nobis Gallias dedit, ille Italiam liberavit: ille Vindelici jugum Barbaricæ servitutis amovit. Illo vivente Illyricum restitutum est, reddita Romanis legibus Thraciæ. Ille (prophudor) Orientem fœmineo pressum jugo in nostra jura restituit: ille Persas insulantes adhuc Valeriani necce, fudit, fugavit, oppressit. Illum Saraceni, Blemyes, Axomitæ, Bactriani, Seres, Hiberi, Albani, Armenii, populi etiam Indorum, veluti præsentem penè venerati sunt Deum. Illius donis quæ à Barbaris gentibus meruit, reſertum est Capitolium: quindecim millia librarum auri ex ejus liberalitate unum tenet templum, omnia in urbe fana ejus micant donis. Quare P. C. vel deos ipsos jure convenio, qui talem principem interire passi sunt, nisi forte secum eum esse maluerunt. Derno igitur divinos honores: id quod vos omnes existimo esse facturos. Nam de imperatore deligendo ad eundem exercitum censeo esse referendum. Et enim in tali genere sententiæ nisi fiat quod dicitur, & electi periculum erit, & eligentis invidia. Probata est sententia Taciti (62). — Venerable Fathers: It would have been happy for Mankind, if the immortal Gods had been pleased to make all good Men invulnerable, and longer lived; that no vile Attempts of the Wicked, to destroy them, might have their Effect. Then had our Prince Aurelian been still living, than whom there never was a greater. After the Misfortunes of Valerian, and the Mismanagements of Gallienus, it is true, our Commonwealth began to take Breath under the Emperor Claudius; but it was Aurelian, who restored her, by conquering the whole World. It was he, that recovered the Gallia's: It was he, that freed Italy: It was he, who shook off the Barbarian Yoke from the Vindelici. To his Life we owe the Restitution of Illyricum, and the Thracia's to the Roman Empire. To his Life we owe the Recovery of the East from the Oppression (O shameful!) of a Woman. By his Arms the Persians, triumphing for the Death of Valerian, were routed, subdued, and enslaved. The Terror of his Arms have made him almost adored as a present Deity, by the Saracens, the Ethiopians, the Axomites, the Bactrians, the Seres, the Heberi, the Albani, the Armenians, and Indians. He has filled the Capitol with the Presents made him by the Barbarians; He has given to one Temple 15000 Pounds of Gold, and all the rest have shared of his Liberality. We justly, there-

(58) Mixtis iis quibus Aurelianus vere irascatur cum iis de quibus nihil asperum cogitabat. --- Joining those that Aurelian was really angry at, with others to whom he intended no harm. Id. ib.

(59) Idem, cap. 37.

(60) Idem, cap. 41.

(61) He was elected Emperor some Months after.

(62) Idem, cap. 41, pag. 526, 527.

(52) Vopisc. cap. ult.

(53) Idem, cap. 37.

(54) Idem, cap. 1, pag. 416.

(55) This appears from Vopiscus's Words just now mentioned.

(56) Idem, cap. 37.

(57) Quicquid Aurelianus neque frustra minari solere, neque si minaretur ignoscere. --- Who knew that Aurelian never used to threaten without effect, nor to pardon after he had threatened. Id. cap. 36.

remarkable, that there was no Deity for which he shewed more Zeal, than for the Sun [L]. He left but an only Daughter, whose Grandson was yet living in the Time of Dioclesian (kk). He was a Senator much revered for his Virtue, and had been Proconsul of Cilicia. We must regard as fabulous; what Abulpharagius says, that Aurelian upon making Peace with Sapor, King of Persia, gave him his Daughter in Marriage (ll). It is also pretended, that he sent him some Greek Physicians, who taught the Persians Hippocrates's Physic (mm). Note, he never employed any Physicians in his Sickness, and scarce ever made use of any other Remedy than Abstinence (nn). To conclude, it was a Happiness for the Christians, that such a bloody Prince did not undertake Their Extirpation. I confess one of the Persecutions of the Church is placed under his Reign; but some Historians never once mention it, and those who do agree it was short (oo). Before I make an end of this Article, I must take notice of a Distinction which Vopiscus has made, and which very few Persons are capable of making [M]: Such, says he (pp), was the End of Aurelian, a Prince more necessary than good. What we find in Angeloni, concerning some pieces of Marble found in the time of Pope Urban VIII, upon levelling the place where Aurelian had built a Temple, on Mount Quirinal (qq), gives a very great Idea of the Magnificence of That Edifice.

(kk) Vopisc. in Aurel. cap. 42, pag. 528.

(ll) Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 3, pag. 1182.

(mm) Abulphar. apud Tillemont. ib.

(nn) Vopisc. cap. 50.

(oo) Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 3, pag. 1085, & seq.

(pp) Hic finis Aureliano fuit principis magis necessario quam bono. Vopisc. c. 37.

(qq) Franciscus Angeloni, Historiæ Augusti de Giulio Cesare infans a Constantino il Magna, illustrata con la verità delle antiche Medaglie, p. 332.

"fore, O Venerable Fathers, may expostulate with the Gods themselves, for suffering the Murder of Aurelian, unless it was their Pleasure to receive him amongst them. I therefore decree to him all divine Honours: in which I hope to meet with your unanimous Concurrence. But as to the Election of an Emperor, I think we ought to refer That to the Army. For should we undertake it, and our Nomination not be complied with, the Elected would be in Danger, and the Electors in Disgrace. The Opinion of Tacitus was approved." The same Tacitus being elected Emperor some Months after (63), began his Reign by ordering four Statues to be erected to Aurelian, one of Gold in the Capitol, and three of Silver in other Places; and that every Body should have the Picture of That great Prince. The three Silver Statues were dedicated, but not That of the Capitol. "In eadem oratione Aureliano statum auream ponendam in Capitolio decrevit: item statum argenteam in Curia, item in templo Solis, item in foro divi Trajani. Sed aurea non est posita: dedicatæ autem sunt solæ argenteæ. In eadem oratione cavuit, ut si quis argento publice privativique æs miscuisset, si quis auro argentum, si quis æri plumbum, capital esset cum bonorum proscriptio. — Addidit ut Aureliano omnes pictum haberent (64). — In the same Speech he decreed to Aurelian a golden Statue, to be erected in the Capitol; also a Silver one in the Court, another in the Temple of the Sun, and a third in the Market of Trajan. Only the Silver Statues were dedicated: that of Gold was never erected. He, in the same Speech, decreed, that whoever should, either publicly, or privately, adulterate Silver with Copper, or Gold with Silver, or Copper with Lead, should suffer Death, and Forfeiture of Estate. — He added, that all should be obliged to have the Picture of Aurelian."

[L] There was no Deity for which he shewed more Zeal than for the Sun. It seems to me that his first Education was the Cause of That Worship; for it is likely, that his Mother, who was Priestess of the Sun, inspired him from his Youth with a particular Devotion for That Deity (65). However it be, we find, that when he thanked Valerian, on his appointing him Consul, he made use of these Words: Dii faciant & Deus certus Sol ut & Senatus de me sic judicet (66). — May the Gods, and that undoubted Deity the Sun, grant, that the Senate conceive the same Opinion of me. A learned Man pretends (67), that he spoke thus in a Letter (68), as if the other Gods were doubtful, and the Sun only certain. It is pretended, that, in the Battle which he won against Zenobia's Forces, near Emesa, he was assisted by a Deity, who encouraged the Soldiers, and made the Infantry support the Cavalry, which was ready to fly (69). As soon as he entered victorious into Emesa, he went to the Temple of the Sun: Statim ad templum Heliogabali tetendit, quasi communis officio vota soluturus, and found there the same Figure of the Deity, who had favoured him in the Battle. Wherefore he founded some Temples in That Place (70), and afterwards built the Temple of the Sun in Rome (71). He also caused the Temple of the same God to be rebuilt in Palmyra. Here are the Orders, which he dispatched for That Purpose: I shall relate them, because they discover to us both This Prince's Cruelty, and his Devotion for the Sun. "Aurelianus Augustus Ceionio Bassio. Non oportet ulterius progressi militum gladios. Jam satis Palmyrenorum caesum atque concitum est. Mulieribus non peperimus, infantes occidimus, senes jugulavimus, rusticos interemimus: cui terras, cui urbem deinceps relinquemus? Parcendum est iis qui remanserunt. Credimus enim tam paucos tam multorum supplicii esse correctos. Templum sane Solis, quod apud Palmyram aquilifer legionis certæ cum vexilliferis & draconario & cornicinis atque liticinis diriperunt, ad eam formam volo quæ fuit, reddi. Habes trecentas auri libras & Zenobia capulis: habes argenti mille octingenta pondo. De Palmyrenorum bonis habes gemmas regias. Ex his omnibus fac cohonestari templum: mihi & diis immortalibus gratissimum feceris. Ego ad senatum scribam, petens ut mittat pontificem qui dedict templum (72). — Aurelianus Cæsar to Ceionius Bassus. It is time to sheath our Sword. The Palmyrenes have sufficiently felt it's Edge. We have spared neither Women nor Children, we have put both the Aged and the Husbandman to the Sword. To whom, then, shall we leave the Lands, to whom the City? We must spare the rest. The few, who remain, will, undoubtedly, remember the Punishment of so many. The Temple of the Sun, at Palmyra, which the Standard Bearer of the third Legion, with his Ensigns, and Colours, and Trumpets, and Pipes, demolished: I will have rebuilt after the same Model. You have, of Zenobia's Treasure, Three hundred Pounds of Gold, and Eighteen hundred Pounds of Silver, You have, of the Palmyrenes Effects, the Crown of Jewels. With all these, erect a Temple: and you will perform a Work, not only most grateful to me, but also to the immortal Gods. I will write to the Senate, to send a Chief Priest to consecrate it."

[M] Vopiscus has made a Distinction concerning Aurelian, — — — — — which few Persons are capable of making. The Faults of Aurelian were serviceable, the State stood in need of them, but, in Vopiscus's Opinion, it does not follow from thence that he was a good Emperor. This is the Language of a Man who is careful not to confound things. A great Number of Persons are ignorant of this Distinction. They look on That as a truly, and absolutely, good and just Reign, which has prevented, or removed, some great Evil; and if once they fancy that a Government is unjust, they look on it as truly, and absolutely, bad, without regarding the necessary Advantages the Public receives from it.

(70) Hic templum fundavit donariis ingentibus positum. Id. ibid.

(71) Id. ib. cap. 35.

(72) Id. ib. cap. 31, pag. 439.

(65) Id. in Aureliano, cap. 4.

(66) Id. ib. cap. 14.

(67) Spennheimius's Note on the Cæsar of Julian, pag. 109.

(68) Vopiscus says, he spoke these Words.

(69) Id. ib. cap. 25.

AUREOLUS (PETER) a Franciscan Friar, and since Archbishop of Aix, was one of the most subtil and famous Divines of his Time. He flourished about the end of the XIIIth Century, and the beginning of the XIVth. He was born at Verberie

(a) Labbe, Differt. de Script. Eccl. Tom. 2. pag. 183.

(b) Placed, as he says, before the Commentaries of Oriol, on the Master of the Sentences, printed at Rome in the Year 1595.

(1) Labbe, Differt. de Script. Eccl. Tom. 2. pag. 184.

(a) Id. ib.

(3) Theoph. Raynaudus, Erotem, de malis ac bonis Libris, n. 430, pag. 230.

(4) Id. not in the lead mean time with attempt necessary Reformation.

Verberie on the Oise, and his Name was Oriol (a); but as he is only known by the Latin Name which he gives himself, I place him here, without imitating Moreri, who refers us from Aureole to Oriol. That Reference would be more pardonable, if we found in his Article of Oriol, all that might be reasonably expected from an Historian, who cites the Life of that illustrious Archbishop of Aix (b); but this he falls falls very short of. Nor can I supply his defect, for I do not believe, the Work, which contains the Life of Aureolus, is any where to be met with in all the United Provinces. What I can say is only this; Aureolus was Professor of Divinity in the University of Paris (c): they appropriated to him the Title of Doctor sacundus (d). He was Provincial of Aquitain, when he was made Archbishop of Aix (e), and did not live long after he was raised to that high Dignity [A]. It has been said that he that he was promoted to the Rank of a Cardinal. He had a very penetrating Understanding, but was too fond of distinguishing himself by new Opinions [B]. It is pretended, that he maintained the Impossibility of the Creation [C]. The Dominicans had a formidable Adversary in him, and caused him to be refuted with much Spirit, by

(c) Labbe, ubi supra, pag. 184.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Bellarm. de Script. Eccl. pag. 365.

[A] He did not live long after he was raised to the Dignity of Archbishop of Aix. The Archbishopric of Aix was conferred on him in the Year 1321; and we find that James de Concos de Cabrairez, a Dominican, was installed in the same Archbishopric the tenth of July, 1322 (1). It must follow, then, that the Twenty seventh of April, which was the Day of Aureolus's Death (2) belongs, at farthest, to the Year 1322. Behold the Negligence of Those Times: They were contented to note the Day, in which an Archbishop died, and never troubled themselves about the Date of the Year.

[B] He was too fond of distinguishing himself by new Opinions. This is a very dangerous Character; a Rock much to be feared: we scarce ever find, that those, who have Wit and Learning enough to raise strong Objections against the common Opinions, have Judgment enough to stop at a proper Time, and to discern what is not worth the Trouble of a Reformation. Here is a Passage, where those sort of Persons are well represented, and our Aureolus, in particular, by Name. "Ex hac classe, insignia ingenia duo, Durandus, & Aureolus minus bene audiunt, quod ingenii, quibus valebant plurimum, indulserint in perisque; & novas cudere, ac comminisci opiniones, communem tramitem sine causa deferendo non dubitavit. Et quae haud dubie argumentum judicii minus exquisiti, nec satis maturi, vel emundi, ferri facile, & absque urgenti ratione, extra viam: ita ut quamvis res de qua agitur, ad scholasticas merè pertineat, nec inde dispendium ullum doctrinae fidei, vel sanæ, ac puris moribus sit timendum, tamen consultissimum sit, quando manifesta ratio non urget, ab anteriorum placitis non discedere (3). ----- Of this Class two great Scholars, Durandus and Aureolus, base suffered most in their Characters, for using their extraordinary Talents so freely, on all Occasions, and leaving the common Road, for no other Reason, than only to invent, and start, new Opinions. And it is certainly a Sign of a weak Judgment, not sufficiently improved and corrected, to be easily, and without just cause, led out of the Way: So that even when the Question is only about scholastic Niceties, and can do no possible Damage, either to our Faith, or our Morals, yet the wisest Method is, not to leave the old Maxims, unless upon very satisfactory Grounds." And yet, it must be confessed, that these Innovators (4), and confounding Wits, are sometimes necessary; for what considerable Progress could be made without them? Should we not fall asleep, under Pretence, that every thing has been found out already, and that we must acquiesce in the Opinions of our Fathers, as in their Lands, and their Son? The Disputes, and the Confusions, which are raised by bold, ambitious, and rash Men, are never altogether evil: They may be, in themselves, as great an Evil as you please; but they are highly useful in respect to the Sciences, and the Improvement of the Mind. This may be said even of Civil Wars. A very honest Man affirms it of the Civil Wars, which ravaged France in XVIth Century. He says, they refined either the Genius or the Language of some; they cleared the Judgment of others; they served either for a Bath to wash; or a Curry-Comb to scrape off their Dirt. Here are his Words; both the Thoughts, and Expressions, deserve citing in this Place. "Ut sæpe res adversæ inperfectis bonis locum faciunt, ita in hac publica, & omnium maxima calamitate res auctor dari potest, quibusdam ingenium evasisse limatius, acumen perspicacius, judicium resecutius, os mundius, scripta purgatiora, proflus ut agnosceret liceat, ærumnarum procellas, quibus æstuavimus his esse balneæ quæ sordes eluerunt, aliis strigilem quæ squamam detestit, quibusdam uredinem, quæ absumpsit quicquid luxurians & inutile. Denique si quis vere æstimet, nunc demum intelligimus, eam, quæ Republicæ tempestas fuit, privatim, & pauculis esse cotem qua acuitur, & faculam qua accenditur quicquid in singulis est optimum (5). ----- As Misfortunes often occasion unexpected Benefits, so this public and heaviest of Calamities, may have been the Cause of polishing the Wit, clearing the Understanding, pruning the Judgment, refining the Language, or purifying the Style, of some Persons; so that the Storms of Affliction, whose fury we have felt, must be owned to have served, as Baths to wash away Spots, Curry-Combs to scrape off Dirt, or Blasts to consume what was useless and luxuriant. And to judge of it rightly, we may now, at last, perceive, that the public Misery has proved a private Happiness, and either sharpened, as a Whetstone, or kindled as a Torch, all manner of Excellencies in particular Persons." In truth, the Public might very well be without such Curry-Combs, Files, or Whetstones, as some may please to call them. Doubtless it is better to want those Advantages, than to pay so great a Price for them. It is better to continue sick, than to be cured by a Remedy so terribly dear. However it be, our Doctor here was resolved to follow no Body's Opinion in his Commentary on the Master of Sentences; and on the other side no Body followed him: All took a Pleasure in opposing him; some compared him to Ysmael: Quem (Petrus Aureolum) Antoninus ait: ita scripsisse in librum sententiarum, ut quia manus ejus contra omnes qui jam amea scriperant, etiam manus omnium contra eum fuerint (6).

[C] It is pretended, that he maintained the Impossibility of the Creation. The Knowledge I have of this Matter is very small, for I can only assure you, that Theophilus Raynaudus, after having rejected some Reasons of Averroës as very weak, adds, that the Arguments, on which Aureolus so ill employed his Learning, to shew the Creation to be impossible, amount to the same thing. "Eodem recidit argumenta quibus Aureolus apud Capreolum in 2. d. 1. q. 2. in argumentis contra quartam, parum feliciter ingenium exercuit, ut probaret creationem esse impossibilem. (7). ----- These Arguments are in Capreolus, 2. d. 1. q. 2. in his Arguments against the fourth." Observe particularly, that he had never read Aureolus, nor knew any thing of his Doctrine, but as he found it represented in his Adversary Capreolus. This puts me under a new Necessity of groping here in the Dark: But yet I believe I shall not be mistaken in the Conjecture I am going to make. I suppose that Aureolus did not directly, and absolutely, affirm, that the Creation was impossible, for that would have been broaching an Opinion very repugnant to the Romish Faith. He maintained only, that, for such and such Reasons, he should have held it impossible, that a Being could be made out of nothing, if Faith did not teach him, that the Words, which the Scripture uses concerning the first Formation of the World, must be understood to signify

(5) Carolus Pachelius, de optimo genere Elocutionis, pag. 124.

* Anton. tit. 24, c. 3, §. 2.

(6) Spondan. ad Annum, 1337, n. 10, pag. 460.

(7) Theoph. Raynaud. in Theol. Naturali, Diff. 8. n. 334, pag. 1039.

by one of their best Pens [D]. I shall say something concerning his Writings [E]. You will find the Time of his Death in the Remark [A].

signify a Creation, properly so called. Having once covered himself with this Shield, he might safely exert the whole Strength of his Genius, to prove the Impossibility of the Creation; he only ventured upon a Philosophical Dispute, in which he did not fear that he should want Cavils and Subtilties. I make no question but they, who read this, and have a Copy of Capreolus in their Studies, will be so curious as to consult him, to know whether this great Antagonist of Aureolus, faithfully lays down the whole State of the Question. There are a great many, who, on such an Occasion, would say, they are consulting a Doctor, who maintains the Impossibility of the Creation, and would exaggerate the pernicious Consequences of that Doctrine, without ever intimating, that the same Doctor preserves the Orthodox Opinion, and submits the most subtil Arguments which the Light of Nature affords him, to the Authority of Tradition. I know, that, in another Case, Aureolus behaved himself in the very same manner, as, I suppose he has done with respect to the Creation; which makes my Conjecture more probable. He said, that nothing but the Authority of the Saints could make him believe, that Transubstantiation is a true Change of the whole Bread, into the whole Body of our Lord. I have read this in a Book of Dr Allix. Petrus Aureolus Romana Ecclesia Cardinalis hoc profectur; propter solas auctoritates Sanctorum teneo, quod Transubstantiation est verus transitus & conversio totius panis in totum corpus Domini. in 4. dist. 11. q. 1. a. 2. (8).

[D] The Dominicans caused him to be refuted — by one of their best Pens.] It was by the same Capreolus, whom I have just before mentioned. Consult his Commentary on the Master of the Sentences. "He there attacks briskly, and levels his whole Force against the Commentary of Aureolus, on the same Master. — Quæ (Commentaria Aureoli) in suis in eadem sententiis Commentariis sæpius excussit, exagitantque Joannes Capreolus (9)." He insinuates, that the false Interpretations which Aureolus made, and which served him for Principles to draw odious Consequences from, had not always their only Foundation in the Obscurity of his Understanding, but were in some measure owing also to his Passions. I have this only from Father Baron, who expresses himself thus: "Memini me Capreolum nescio quo ex quæstionibus in primum sentent. loco legere, soluto quodam argumento Aureoli, quo ad grande aliquod impium, & absurdum ex falsa interpretatione non sive sententiæ rem dederat, hæc modestè adjunxisse Capreolum: ex nostrâ responsione patet hanc objectionem Aureoli profectam esse ex perverso intellectu, quidquid sit de affectu (10). — I remember Capreolus, somewhere in his Questions on the first Book of the Sentences, after refusing an Argument of Aureolus, which by a false Interpretation of our Opinion, had established something monstrously impious and absurd, thus modestly adds: "From our Solution it appears, that the Objection of Aureolus, proceeds from a depraved Understanding, whatever might be his Disposition." Note, That Constantius Surianus, a Franciscan, and a Cardinal, wrote a Book, wherein he pretends to reconcile Aureolus's Opinions, with those of Capreolus (11). He endeavoured to shew the same Agreement between the Doctrines of Thomas Aquinas, and those of Scotus (12). Just in the same manner some have pretended to discover a good Understanding between Plato and Aristotle. This is either trifling with Readers, or ridiculing, without designing it, those whom they endeavour to reconcile. Such a Peace is dishonourable to both Parties, and the Mediators might fear some severe Expostulations, is they, who first began the Quarrel, should return again into the World. They would be apt to say, What, do you pretend that we only dispute about Words, and that we agree in the same Doctrines, without perceiving it; our Passion so strongly prepossessing us, that we understand not what we are saying? This is a Satire all over, we will have no Peace on such ignominious Conditions. Away with your Projects of Re-union; we had rather continue the War, than see it ended at the Expense of our Learning and Understandings. Observe, that there are some Influences, where the hottest Controversies are only the Effects of a Misunderstanding; but I do not think we can judge so of Thomism and Scotism, nor consequently of the Difference between the Scotist Aureolus, and the Thomist Capreolus.

[E] I shall say something concerning his Writings.]

Those who have spoke of them, observe so little Exactness, that they neither distinguish between those Writings, which are yet remaining, and those which are lost; nor between those which have been printed, and those which never were. Father Labbe (13), who complains of this Neglect, too common among Bibliographers, promised to repair it amply; but he died without publishing his large Work, of which the Dissertation, I have quoted, was but a Specimen (14). He observes, that the Breviarium Bibliorum of Aureolus, five Epitome universæ sacræ scripturæ juxta literalem sensum, was printed at Venice, in the Year 1571, and at Paris in the Year 1585 (15), by the care of Stephen Nouellet, Doctor in Divinity, of the Faculty of Paris; and that the Commentaries on the four Books of Sentences, were printed at Rome in, in folio, the Year 1595, and dedicated to Pope Clement VIII, by Cardinal Constantius Surianus (16). He rejects what Father Maracci reports in his Bibliotheca Mariana, that the Treatise of Aureolus de Conceptione immaculata B Virginis, was printed at Toulouse in the Year 1314: he says, perhaps that Writing was composed in that Year, or printed in the Year 1514.

Let us make some small Remarks on all this. I. The Catalogue of the Oxford Library mentions the Epitome totius S. Scripturæ, printed at Strasburg in the Year 1514. Father Labbe did not know of that Edition: nor Gesner neither. Gesner's Epitome, published in the Year 1583, does not take notice of any of Aureolus's Books which had been printed: but observe, that our Peter Aureolus is there very falsely distinguished from Petrus de Verberia, dictus Aureoli. II. It is not true that the Commentaries on the four Books of Sentences, were printed at Rome, in the Year 1595. Bellarmin affirms, that he saw only the Commentary on the first of those four Books, and that it was printed at Rome, in the Year 1596 (17). The Catalogue of the Oxford Library, and that of the Archbishop of Reims, place in that Year, the Edition of Aureolus's Commentary on the first Book of Sentences, and they place in the Year 1605, the Edition of the Commentary on the three following Books, with the Quodlibeta. All this makes two Volumes in Folio, printed at Rome, the first in 1596, in the Vatican; the last by Zanzetti, in the Year 1605. I wonder that Bellarmin had no knowledge of the printing of the last Volume. This is something stranger, than to see in Moreri, that we have several Editions of the Commentaries of Aureolus, on the Master of the Sentences; but that this of Rome of 1595, is the most correct. Where could he shew those several Editions? Would he have dated That of Rome as he did, if he had known what I have laid above? III. I must needs say Father Labbe has been too favourable to Father Maracci, who could believe that there were Books printed in the Year 1314. Does not all the World know that Printing was not used in Europe, till about the Middle of the XVth Century? What then was the Jesuit Oldoini dreaming on, when he boasted of having seen the Treatise of Aureolus, de Conceptione Virginis Mariæ, printed at Toulouse in the Year 1314? Dr Conceptione Virginis Mariæ Librum, qui habetur M. S. Tolosæ in Collegio Fuxenfi, & excusum vidimus Tolosæ anno 1314 (18).

(13) Labbe, ubi supra.

(14) See the Preface of his Dissertation de Scripturæ Ecclesiasticæ.

(15) Oldoini, in Athen. Roman. pag. 532. makes it 1581.

(16) Ibid. pag. 533. says the same thing.

(17) Bellarm. de Scripturæ Ecclesiæ. pag. 365.

(18) Oldoini, Athen. Roman. pag. 533.

(8) Pet. Allix, Prefat. Historica de Dogmate Transubstantiationis, pag. 66.

(9) Labbe, ubi supra, pag. 184.

(10) Vincentius Baronius, Apolog. lib. 1. §. 2. p. 240.

(11) Oldoini Athen. Roman. p. 176.

(12) Id. ib.

AURIEGE, or rather ARIEGE [A], a River in France, has it's Source in

[A] ARIEGE.] It is so called in the Countries through which it passes. In the old Maps it is called Aregia, and Arcia in a Manuscript Martyrology of the Monastery of Moissac. There is in that Manuscript the Passion of St Antonin, who was married at Pamies, and it is affirmed there, that the Bark wherein in the Mountains which limit the County of Foix towards Roussillon. It passes by Tarascon, Foix, Pamis, Barilles, Bonac (a), Savardun, Sainte-Gabelle, and Haute-Rive, and falls into the Garonne at Portet, a long League above Toulouse, after having received the Waters of the River Lers, on the Right, and Those of the Arget, and of the Leze on the Left [B]. The Ariege is rapid and full of Fish, and also very good to drink; but it is only navigable from Haute-Rive. Du Bartas praises it much [C]. See also the Passage of Bertrand Helias, related by Papyrius Maffo (b).

(a) It is a Lordship that was erected into a Marquisate, for the late Mr Duffon, elder Brother of Monf. de Bonrepux, Ambassador of France to the Court of Denmark, and afterwards in Holland.

(A) Papyrius Maffo de Flum. Gall. pag. 412.

wherein his Body was laid, passed through That River into the Garonne. "Per fluvium qui Areia dicitur, ad Garonnam usque perveniens fluvium navicula

"(in qua corpus Antonini mart. à Gentilibus necati) inde alium qui Tarnis dicitur inveniens fluvium,

"inde retrogrado cursu per Tarnin intravit in Avarionis alevum (1). — The Boat (in which was the Body of Antoninus, the Martyr, murdered by the Gentiles) coming along the River Areia, as far as to the Garonne, and there finding another River, called

"Tarnis, returned in a retrograde Course along the Tarnis, into the Channel of the Avario." Hadrian Valesius, from whom I have this, has censured Those who call it Auriège, and treated Papyrius Maffo very ill for naming it Aurigera. "Fluvius est vulgo di-

"ctus Ariege, quibuldam corruptè l'Aurige; à Maffo (2) p'lici ejus fluvii nominis ignaro Aurigera

"novo ac ridiculo nomine nuncupatus (3). — The River is commonly called Ariege, by some corruptly

"the Auriège; by Maffo, who was intirely ignorant of the ancient Name of This River, it is ridiculously called Aurigera." Mr Baudrand believes that the true Latin Name of that River is Albarici (4). I wish he had quoted some good Author. Sanjon calls it Laurieque in a Map which he published in the Year 1675 (5). But most of the proper Names in it are so disfigured, that we ought to suppose them to be faults of the Engraver. Mr Moreri has very pleasantly imagined that the Auriège and Laurieque are the two Names by which it is called. He forgets the true one? and does not dream, that the two Names he mentions, are but one and same; one of them expressed without the Article, the other with the Article. His mistake is just the same as if he had said, that the River running by Paris, is called Seine and Lafaine. I know many Authors make a jest of a Writer who takes them up for Errors of this Nature, and pretend to be above those Trifles: But they are vain Pretenders, who want a fair Mask to cover either their Ignorance, or their Idleness, or their ill Taste, or their Incorrectness. If a City or River were only mentioned occasionally in a Piece of Wit, the faults which those Gentlemen call Trifles would be excusable. But the Case is very different, when those Faults concern the chief Subject of the Book. That which is only an insignificant Nicety in the Writings of a Divine, will sometimes be a capital Fault in a Geographer, or in the Author of a Dictionary. I remember Papyrius Maffo has called it la Riege. See afterwards the Remark [A] of the Article GARONNE.

[B] After having received on the Right, the Waters of the Lers, it receives those of the Arget, and the Leze, on the Left.] Moreri deserves a small Censure here: He says, that the Auriège, having received the Lers, the Arget, and the Leze, falls into the Garonne. This signifies plainly, that the Mouth of the Lers is above the Mouth of the Arget, and that the entrance of the Leze, is between the two others.

Nothing can be more false. The Arget comes into the Ariege, near Foix, and there is eight or nine Leagues distance between Foix and Sainte-Gabelle, which is very near the Mouth of the Lers. "Lertius vero in Aurigeram labitur prope Templum

"S. Gauvillæ (6). — The Lers falls into the Auriège, near the Church of St Gabille." The Leze has it's Entrance three or four Leagues below That of the Lers. Coulon might have taught Moreri the Order of those Entrances. Note, he observes, that the Auriège is called by the Latins, Aurigera (7); and the Larger, Argentigera (8); and that the One produces

Gold, the Other Silver (9). Perhaps he had taken these Remarks from Olbagarai, who wrote as follows: And what shall we not say of the Lers, with his Flux and Reflux (10)? Of the Auriège, and of the Arget, Rivers with Gold and Silver Banks? Does not this witness the hidden Treasures in the Bowels of Those Mountains (11)? [C] Du Bartas praises it much.] See here the third Sonnet of his Nine Pyrenean Muses, presented to the King of Navarre (12).

Fleuve d'or & de flot & de nom & de fable, Riche en grains, en paille, en fruits, en vins,
en bois,

Auriège au vifte cours clair ornement de Foix,
Qui rend par ton tribut Garonne navigable,

Fille de si grand Mont, qui cache, espouvantable,
Son front dedans le Ciel, qui chenu tous les Mois,

Depuis le bord du Su jusqu'au bord Ecossois,
Ne void autre plus grand à sa grandeur semblable;

Clair flot, je te seroy par un discours facond
Plus riche que Paëtol, plus que le Nil second:

Plus loin que l'Océan on orroit tes eaux bruire:
Fier, on t'égalerait aux fleuves les plus Grands:

On te verroit au Ciel comme le Po reluire,
Si je voyoy tes bords repurgés de brigans (13).

Auriège, thou noble River, known to Fame
For thy bright Waves, and for thy Golden Name.

Thy Borders every Scene of Plenty show,
Who pours her Horn, where'er thy Waters flow.

Foix to thy rapid Course owes all it's Pride;
And deep Garonne it's navigable Tide.

A mighty Mountain is thy awful Sire,
Whose towering Head does to the Skies aspire;

Hoary with Loads of everlasting Snows,
Nor, e'en from Pole to Pole, an Equal knows.

Would the Mule assist the darling Thème,
In loftiest Notes, I'd sing thy Crystal Stream.

With her just Praise, thy mantling Waves should smile,

Rich as Paëtolus, fruitful as the Nile.
Far as loud Ocean can be heard to roar,

Should ev'ry Murmur echo from thy Shore.
Thy curling Surge should proudest Floods out-vy;

And like the Po resplendent reach the Sky.
Could I thy Banks from ambush'd Rogues release,

And make the Traveller taste thy Stream in Peace.

See also the seventh Sonnet, you will find this in the beginning of it:

François, arreste toy, ne passe la campagne,
Que nature mura de Rochers d'un colicé,

Que l'Auriège entresfond d'un cours précipité:
Campagne qui n'a point en beauté de compagne

(14).

Stay, great Navarre, nor leave these burning Plains,
Where far above all Rival, Beauty reigns.

Rocks, Nature's Walls, the distant Prospects close;
And all around the daffy Auriège flows.

(c) Note, that Bertrand Helias, Historiæ Comitum Fuscensium, lib. 1. relates some curious Circumstances concerning this Gold.

Papyr. Maffo, Delect. Flum. Gall. pag. 412.

(10) See concerning this admirable Phenomenon, the 3d day of the 18 Week of Du Bartas, pag. 283.

(11) Peter Olbagarai, Preface of the History of Foix, Bearn, and Navarre.

(12) Du Bartas, in the Appendix of the first Week, page 934.

(13) Since Du Bartas's Time, this has been remedied.

(14) Du Bartas, ibid. pag. 936.

(1) Hadrian. Valesius in Notitia Gallie, pag. 26.

(2) Papyr. Maffo in Descript. Flumin. Gallie, pag. 470. Edit. 1685.

(3) Vales. Notit. Gall. pag. 26.

(4) See his Geography, pag. 33, 88, and 128.

(5) That of the Pyrenean Mountains.

(6) Papyr. Maffo, Descript. Flum. Gall. p. 470.

(7) Coulon, Rivers of France, Tome 1. pag. 483.

(8) He had twice said the Arget, which is the true Orthography.

AURISPA (JOHN), a Native of Noto in Sicily (a), was one of the most Learned Men of the XVth Century. He understood the Greek and Latin Languages; he was a good Orator, and wrote very well, for those Times, both in Prose and Verse. It is said that he was honoured with the Poetical Crown in Italy. He was Secretary to Pope Nicolas V, who gave him great Proofs of his Esteem, by

(a) The Name of this Town in Latin is Noto.

(b) Taken from the Elogia Nicolaurum qui litteris floruerunt, composed by the Jeuit Hierome Rugula, pag. 147, & seq.

presenting him with two rich Abbies [A]. He entertained a long Correspondence, by Letters, with Philippus, and his Name is celebrated by Laurentius Valla, Antonius Panormita, and several other famous Authors. He retired to Ferrara, and lived there to a great Age, honoured with the Esteem of the Lords of that Country [B], which proved very advantageous to him; for he did not only subsist, but also grow rich by their Liberality (b). What he composed is at present very hard to be met with [C].

(1) It is at Messina.

(2) It is at Lentinum in Sicily.

(3) Taken out of Jerome Rugula, pag. 148, 149 Elogiorum Nicolaurum.

(4) Lilius Gregor. Gryllid. de Poet. nor. Tempor. Dial. i. p. 651. See also in Gefner in Bibl. tol. 356, ver. 30.

[A] Nicholas V. — presented him with two rich Abbies.] He gave him That of St Philip de Grandi (1), the Thirty first of May, 1449, and that of St Marie de la Roccade (2), in the Year 1451. Auripisa had a Law Suit for this last Benefice, with one who had it beflowed upon him by Alphonfus, King of Naples. See Reccbus Pirrus, in the Two hundred and twenty fifth Page of his Account of the Church of Syracusa (3).

[B] He retired to Ferrara, and lived there to a great Age, honoured with the Esteem of the Lords of that Country.] I prove all this from a Passage of Gyraldus. "Johannes Auripisa Siculus, says be (4), ora"tor in aliquo poetarum ordine reponi potest, quippe
"qui Græcæ & Latine probe doctus esset, carmina
"tamen ejus quæ ipse legi nescio quid Sicularum
"gerrarum habere videntur: fuit enim eo tempore
"quo nondum exquisitæ literæ in lucem redierant.
"Vixit autem Ferrariæ ad summam senectutem, in "pretio habitus à nostris principibus, qui & cum lo-
"cupletum reddiderunt: ab hoc ferunt Cittarellum
"familiam originem duxisse. — John Auripisa of "Sicily, the Orator, deserves some sort of Place among "the Poets, being very learned in Greek and Latin,

"though his Poems, which I have read, contain I "know not what old Wives Tales: for he wrote in "the obscurer Ages of Learning. He lived at Ferrara,
"to a great old Age, esteemed by our principal Fa"milies, who made him rich: the Family of Citta-
"rella is said to owe it's Rise to him."

[C] What he composed, is at present very hard to be met with.] There are the Books ascribed to him: A Translation of Archimedes; the Translation of Hierocles's Commentary on the Golden Verses of Pythagoras; and that of a Consolatory Treatise of Philiclus to Cicero. Gefner's Epitome mentions these three Pieces, without saying whether they were ever printed. It is certain, that Auripisa's Hierocles was printed at Basil, by Henry Peter, in 8vo, in the Year 1543 (5). Gefner cites part of the Preface, by which it appears, that it was wrote when the Author was already eighty Years of Age (6). In the Library of Gabriel Nauclé, there was a Manuscript, entitled, Comparatio de præsentia Hannibalis Carthaginensis, Alexandri Magni & Scipionis Majoris Romani apud inferos, ex Græco in Latinum conversa ab Auripisa Oratore ad Baptistam Senatorii & Equæbris Ordinis Civem Romanum (7).

(5) See Gefner. Biblioth. fol. 231, verso.

(6) Id. ib.

(7) Labbe, nova Biblioth. MSS. Librorum, pag. 231, Edit. 1653.

(a) See the Enl. de Dedicat. of Parthenon de Anatolius de Antiquibus, by Janus Cornarius, Medicus Zuicavien- sis, dated the 1st of April, 1536.

(b) That, mentioned in the preceding Citation.

AUROGALLUS (MATTHEW) a Learned Man of the XVth Century, and Professor of three Languages in the University of Wittenberg (a); was born in Bobemia. He had made a curious Collection of the best Books of Antiquity, and was not contented to esteem them, as many others do, who endeavour to procure themselves a Name by their numerous Libraries, but loved also to read them. I have seen an Epistle Dedicatory (b), wherein he is exhorted to publish the Physician Aëtius, Nineteen Books of Natural History composed by an unknown Author, the Hymns of Callimachus, the Orations of the Ten Athenian Orators, and several other Greek Manuscripts, brought from the Levant to Bobemia by the Baron Bobuslas of Hafsenfeyn, which came to his hands cognationis & studiorum hereditario jure, as next Heir both in Kindred and Learning. It seems to be inferred, from Those Latin words, that he was related to That Baron. There are some Books of his remaining [A]. He died in the Year 1543 (c), and had been a great Assistant to Lutber in the Translation of the Bible.

[A] Some of his Books are remaining.] I do not know whether there any more besides Compendium Hebrææ Chaldaæque Grammaticæ, printed at Wittenberg, in 8vo, in the Year 1525, and at Basil, in the Year 1539; and De Hebræi Urbium, Regionum, Populo- rum, Fluminum, Montium, & aliorum locorum Nominibus Liber, & veteri instrumento confusus, printed at Wittenberg, in the Year 1526, and at Basil, in 1539, in 8vo (1). That second Edition was enlarged by the Author.

(c) Micrellius, Syneg. Hist. König is mistaken in putting 1533; and quoting Micrellius.

(1) Epit. Biblioth. Gefneri.

(a) Aufon. in Præfat. ad Syagrium.

[A] He was the Son of a famous Physician.] Whole Name was Julius Aufonius. He was a Native of Bazas, and settled at Bourdeaux (1). His Wife's Name was Emilia Aonia, and was the Daughter of Cæcilius Argicius Arborius, who fled into Aquitain, after a Proscription, which had deprived him of all the Estate he had in his Country (2). This Arborius, having fixed himself in the City, called Aque Tarbellarum (3), married a virtuous Woman, of little or no Fortune, whose Name was Emilia Corintbia Maurara. From this Marriage proceeded one Son, and three Daughters. The Son was the same Emilius Magnus Arborius, who taught Rhetoric at Toulouse, and who took such a very particular Care of the Education of our Poet (4). One of the Daughters was married to Julius Aufonius, and brought him four Children, of which the Poet Aufonius was the second. You will find all this, and what follows, in his Parentalia, or in his Epic典 in Patrem. This Julius Aufonius was a Man of very great Merit: and, if he was like the Picture which his Son has left of him, he was a Remnant of the Golden Age. There was the greatest Uniformity imaginable in his Conduct.

He offered, gratis, the Assistance of his Art, to all who desired it: He studied to keep up the good Opinion others had of him; but never judged favourably of himself.

Judicium de me studi præstare bonorum;
Ipse mihi nunquam, judice me, placui (5).
It is from others I must seek Applause,
For my own Judgment always damns my Cause.

He had an Aversion for Law-Suits; he neither increased his Estate, nor diminished it: he never was either Witness, or Informer, against any Person's Life (6), he was neither envious nor ambitious; he thought Swearing and Lying were both alike; he never was concerned in any Conspiracy, Plot, or Cabal; he religiously observed the sacred Laws of Friendship; he made Happiness to consist not in possessing what one would have, but in not wishing for what Fortune did not give:

(a) Aufon. in Epic典. pag. 298.

(6) Inficere me nullus sed neque teste perit. Id. ibid.

(b) See the Poms of Aufonius, entitled Pa-rentalia.

(c) Aufon.
in Pref. ad
Syagrium.

Family interested themselves in it (b), either because his Parts were very promising, or because the Scheme of his Nativity had prognosticated, that he should attain to great Honours [B]. He made a surprizing Progress in Learning, and at the Age of Thirty Years was appointed to teach Grammar, in Bourdeaux (c). Some time after he was promoted there to the Office of Professor of Rhetoric (d). He acquired so great a Reputation in This Employ, that he was invited to the Imperial Court to be Preceptor to Gratian, Son of the Emperor Valentinian. He made himself very agreeable both to his Pupil and his Pupil's Father, and received from them such Rewards and Dignities, as made him a very eminent Example of Juvenal's Maxim, That when Fortune pleases, a Rhetorician may become a Consul (e). He was, in effect, raised to the Consulship by

(d) Id. in Professor. n.
24. p. 187.

(e) Si fortuna violet fies
de flic ore Consul. Ju-
ven. S. l. 7.
ver. 197.

(7) Id. ibid. Felicem scivi, non qui, quod vellet, haberet:
Sed qui per fatum non data non cuperet (7).

*Happy is he, who can his Wish restrain,
Not he, who can that anxious Wish obtain.*

He did not endeavour to discover other Mens Secrets; he did not invent false Reports against his Neighbour's Reputation; but if he knew some prejudicial Truths, he concealed them.

Non occurrator, non garrulus, obvia cernens,
Valvis & velo condita non adii.

(8) Id. ibid. Famam, quæ posset vitam lacerare bonorum,
Non finxi: & veram si scierim, tacui (8).

*I shunn'd, with Caution, the officious Tale;
Saw what was bare, but ne'er withdrew a Veil.
I never forg'd, to urge another's Fate,
False Facts; nor did I those I knew relate.*

He never thought, that not committing a Fault was a Matter of Merit; he preferred Morality before the Laws; that is, if I mistake not, he did a good Action, because it was good, and not because it was conformable to the Laws.

(9) Id. ibid. Deliquisse nihil nunquam laudem esse putavi, Atque bonos mores legibus antetuli (9).

*In want of Fault, I never Merit saw;
Nor Virtue, in Obedience to the Law.*

(10) Id. ibid. He kept his Marriage Vow exactly, during the Forty five Years he was married (10); and if he had the Pleasure to see what he wished come to pass, it was not by too great an Indulgence of Fate, but because he set such strict Bounds to his Wishes.

Non quia fatorum nimia indulgentia: sed quod
Tam moderata illi vota fuere viro (11).

(11) Id. in Parental.
cap. 1, pag.
110.

*Nor did he this to Heav'n's Indulgence owe;
But to his limiting his Wish so low.*

He was compared to the ancient Sages of Greece; and imitated them in the most difficult Point, which was to practise what they taught; he endeavoured much more to lead the Life of a wise Man, than to discourse like one:

Quem sua contendit septem sapientibus ætas;
Quorum doctrinam moribus excoluit:

(12) Id. ibid. Viveret ut potius, quam diceret artephorum, Quamquam & facundo, non rudis ingenio (12).

*To rival Greece in Wisdom's School he sought,
More wisely acting what her Sages taught;
Supremely wise, he chose not to excel
So much in speaking, as in living well.*

And yet he was eloquent in Greek, though not in Latin;

Sermone impromptus Latio: verum Atticæ linguæ Sufficit culti vocibus eloqui (13).

(13) Id. in Epiced. pag.
298.

*He studied with Success the Arts to speak,
Tho' not in Latin, yet in nobler Greek.*

We need not wonder, then, if, after his Death, he was honoured with this Elogy, He imitated no Body, and is imitated by no Body.

Inde & persunctæ manet hæc reverentia vitæ,
Ætas nostra illi quod dedit hunc titulum:
Ut nullum Aufonium, quem festeretur, habebat:
Sic nullum, qui se nunc imitetur, habet (14).

(14) Id. in Parental.
cap. 1, pag.
110.

*So good a Life met with a due Regard;
This great Encomium was it's just Reward.
As he cou'd find no Copy to pursue,
So he found none could copy what he drew.*

He was honoured with some illustrious Offices, without having the Trouble to exercise them; and died at ninety Years of Age, without being sensible of any Decay. He walked without a Staff, and found no sort of Defect.

Curia me duplex, & uterque senatus habebat
Muneris exortem, nomine participem (15).

(15) Id. in Epiced. pag.
298.

Both Courts, both Senates, my Relation claim, Excuse my Presence, but invol my Name.

Ipse nec affectans, nec detractor honorum,
Pæfectus magni nuncupor Illyrici (16).

(16) Id. ibid.
pag. 302.

*I neither sought for, nor despi'd, a Name,
So Prefect of Illyricum became.*

Nonaginta annos baculo sine, corpore toto
Exegi, cunctis integer officiis (17).

(17) Ibid.
pag. 303.

*Ninety Years Load without a Staff I bear,
My Body alive, and my Senses clear.*

He composed some Works of Physic in Latin, which Vindicianus (18), and Marcellus (19), have honourably mentioned. Scaliger affirms, that he was the Emperor Valentinian's Physician, before his Son was chosen Gratian's Preceptor (20): but I have found no Proof it in Aufonius.

(18) See Scaliger, in Vita Aufo-
ni.

[B] The Scheme of his Nativity had prognosticated, that he should attain to great Honours. Cæcilius Argicius Arborius, his Grandfather, by the Mother's side, understood Astrology, and had calculated This Nativity; he kept it private, but his Daughter discovered it. Aufonius informs us of these Particulars himself.

(19) Marcell. in Epist.
prefat. lib.
de Medica.
& cap. 2.
ejusd. libri.

(20) Scalig.
in Vita Au-
fon.

Tu cæli numeros, & conscia sidera fati
Callebas, studium dissimulante agens.

Non ignota tibi nostræ quoque formula vitæ:
Signatis quam tu condideras tabulis;
Prodit non unquam. Sed matris cura retextit Sedula, quam timidi cura tegebat avi (21).

(21) Aufon.
in Parental.
cap. 9. pag.
117.

*Thy Art from conscious Stars our Lives can date,
And in Heav'n's Aspects read the Book of Fate.
There all my future Fortunes dist thou trace,
And in thy Schemes the pleasing Secret place.
But what the Grandfire with such Care conceal'd,
The curious Mother's prying Eye reveal'd.*

He adds, that Arboreus, meeting, from time to time, with the Frowns of adverse Fortune, and lamenting his Son,

(f) And not in the Year 382, as Vincentus affirms, in his Notes on Ausonius's Thanks.

(g) See Remark [F].

(b) Aufonius in Parental, cap. 9.

(j) Albertus Petrus Rubenius, Disser. de Vita Fl. Malli Theodorici, pag. 81.

the Emperor Gratian, in the Year 379 (f), after having gone through other very considerable Offices; for, besides the Dignity of Quæstor, with which he was honoured in the Life of the Emperor Valentinian, he was created Prefect of the Prætorium in Italy, and in Gaul, after the Death of That Prince (g). The Thanks which he gave to the Emperor Gratian, for his Promotion to the Consulship, is an excellent Performance. The time of his Death is not certainly known; but it is beyond question, that he was living in the Year 388, and even in the Year 392, and that he lived to a great Age [C]. He had married a Wife of a good Family who died young (b). He had some Children by her, and did not marry any more. He was much esteemed by the Emperor Theodosius, and some believe That Monarch conferred on him the Dignity of a Patriarch (i). They found this on a Letter, which appears, in most Editions, at the beginning of Ausonius's Works. Nothing can be more obliging than That Letter: Some Critics judge it to be supposititious; but they cannot deny that This Emperor very much esteemed Ausonius's Poems, and exhorted him to publish them; for this appears by a Preface which is incontestably That Poet's own. There is an extreme inequality in his Works, either because his Muse was a little too inconstant; or because some Pieces have been inserted in his Poems, which he had but rough drawn, or because some particular Reasons obliged him to permit the Publication of some Verses, which he had not time to polish. Generally speaking, there is something harsh in his Manner, and in his Style; but it was rather the Defect of the Age, than of his Genius. They who are good Judges of Poetry can easily see, that if he had lived in Augustus's time, his Verses would have equalled the best of that time, so much Delicacy and Wit appears in most of his Writings. Though the general Opinion makes him a Christian, yet some learned Persons believe he was not one [D]. If they ground their Objection either on some lascivious

Verses

Son, who died at thirty Years of Age, comforted himself, under his Afflictions, with the Expectation of those Dignities, which the Stars had promised to his Grandchild.

Dicebas sed te solatia longa fovere;

Quod mea præcipuus fata maneret honos.

Et modo conciliis animarum mixte piorum

Fata tui certè nota nepotis habes.

Sentis quod quæstor, quod te præfectus, & idem

Consul, honorifico munere commemoro (22).

(22) Id. ib. pag. 118.

Pleased with the Honours Fate for me design'd,

No longer thy own Griefs distract thy Mind.

E'en now thou smil'st among the Dead, to see

This full Accomplishment of Fate's Decree:

To see me thus adore thy pious Shade,

A Quæstor, Prefect, and a Consul made.

Observe, that he supposes his Grandfather's Soul, even in the Abode of the Blessed, was sensible of the Accomplishment of the Horoscope, and of the particular Dignities which our Poet had obtained at the Emperor's Court. He is less Orthodox in another Place; for he there questions, whether any thing of us remains after our Death.

(23) Id. in Prosefortibus, cap. 1, in fine, pag. 248.

Et nunc, sive aliquid post fata extrema superfit,

Vivis adhuc, ævi quod perit meminis;

Sive nihil superest, nec habent longa otia sensus,

Tu tibi vixisti: nos tua fama juvat (23).

(24) Id. in Clavis Urbibus, cap. 75, pag. 237.

And now if after Death there ought remains,

In thy best Shade sweetest Remembrance reigns.

Or if the Grave no farther Prospect give,

Yet thy past Life, will make thy Fame still live.

(25) And not in the Year 391, as Vincentus affirms on this Place of Ausonius. He is more exact in the Life of Ausonius, he there says it is the Year 388.

I cannot tell whether those, who say he was a Pagan, have ever quoted this Passage, as a Proof of their Opinion.

[C] It is beyond question, that he was living in the Year 392, and that he lived to a great Age. He speaks (24) of the Punishment of the Tyrant Maximus, whom Theodosius cut off, in the Year 388 (25). Baronius proves, that Paulinus dedicated himself to a Monastic Life in his Retirement at Nola in the Year 394 (26). It was but few Years after the devout Life he had led in Spain, and which Ausonius had blamed. This makes us judge, that our Poet was living in the Year 392. Whence it follows, that he lived to a great Age, for he was already old when he was made Consul in the Year 379 (27). Add to this, that there was but very little difference between his Father's Age, and his own (28); but he survived his Father, who died at Ninety Years of Age.

(26) Baron. ad Ann. 394, n. 72, pag. 884.

(27) Aufon. actione, pag. 709.

(28) Aufon. Epist. 1.

[D] Some learned Persons believe he was no Christian.] Vossius is of That Number. He says (22),

"Poëta fuit gentilis, quemadmodum ex Paulino

"liquet: ut quæ Christum celebrant perperam illi

"sint tributa. — He was a Heathen Poet, as ap"pears from Paulinus: So that Those Poems, which

"celebrate Christ, are falsely ascribed to him." Fa"ther Briet affirms the same thing, he only gives

"Vossius's Expressions another turn. "Ex Paulino

"certum est eum Ethnicum fuisse, quare opera Chri"stiana huic adjudicari solita, sine dubio alterius

"sunt (30). — It is certain from Paulinus, that "he was an Ethnic, and therefore those Christian

"Compositions usually ascribed to him, must, undoubt-

"edly, to be of another Hand." Borrichius goes

"further, for he affirms, that Ausonius often incurred

"Paulinus's Censure, because of his Paganism. "Re-

"ligione Ethnicus, Equæ à Paulino amico, sed Chri-

"stianis Sacris dedito identidem objurgatus (31). —

"Paulinus discipulus Ausonii quem colebat ut præ-

"ceptorem, sed ut averium à Christiana religione

"subinde increpabat, quemadmodum ex opere ip-

"sius liquidum est (32). — In Religion a Heathen,

"and on That Account reproached by Paulinus, who "was his Friend, but had been converted to the "Christian Faith. — Paulinus, a Scholar of Au-

"sonius, whom he much honoured as his Master, but

"now and then blamed for his Aversion to Chri"stianity, as is evident from his Works." All this

"shews, that even great Authors do not always take

"the trouble of going to the Fountain Head, but "sometimes stop at the first Testimony they meet with.

Those, who consult St Paulinus's Works, find no-

"thing there to persuade them, that Ausonius profes"sed Paganism; and since Paulinus no where uses

"any pressing Exhortation to him to be baptized,

"they conclude, he had already professed the Gospel.

They conclude yet it more certainly from those ex"press Words they meet with there,

Non reor hoc Sancto sic duplici Parenti (33).

Mentis ut errorum credat, sic vivere Christo (34).

(33) 76. n. is Ausonius.

I hope my holy Tutor now will find

The Christian Faith, no Error of the Mind.

(34) Paulinus in Epistola de fide ad Ausonium in fine.

So that the Reading of St Paulinus's Works proves the very Reverse of what Vossius and some others have affirmed; it demonstrates Ausonius's Christianity, as Lilius Gyradius acknowledges. "Christianus qui "dem Ausonius fuit, at ex ejus Verbis, & item

"Paulini ejus discipuli facile colligimus (35). —

"Ausonius was indeed a Christian, as appears from (35) Gyradius Hist. Poët. Dial. 10, pag. 514.

Verſes that he compoſed [E], or on the manner in which he condemned the Solitude of Paulinus, or on the intimate Friendſhip he preferred with the Pagan Symmachus, they

"his Verſes, and alſo from his Scholar Paulinus." It is therefore without Foundation that ſome would take from This Poet, what appears in Praise of JESUS CHRIST in his Collection of Verſes. Nay, tho' we ſhould take from him the Carmen Paſchale, and the excellent Piece, which begins with Omnipotens ſolo mentis mihi cognite culta, as ſome Critics would take from him the Oratio Paſchalis, verſibus Rophalicis, yet there would be enough left in his Works to confute Thoſe, who affirm he was a Pagan. Now ſee of what Conſequence it is to apply to ſome among the Moderns, rather than others, when one is not willing to be at the Pains to run to the Fountain. If Voffius had addreſſed himſelf to Baronius, he would have avoided the Fault he has committed, and ſo would They who copied it. He could never have believed, after reading Baronius, that St Paulinus gives the laſt Proof of the pretended Paganism of our Poet Auſonius; for That learned Cardinal relates the reſpectful Answer of St Paulinus, and makes it appear, that Auſonius's Thoughts, on That Friend's Retreat, does not differ from Thoſe, which worldly Chriſtians form, daily, when they ſee a young Man of Quality renounce all the Enjoyments of the World, to dedicate himſelf to a Monastic Life (36). It is pretended, that Auſonius thought ſome Miſanthropic Humour, or Malady like That of Bellerophon, made Paulinus retire from the World, and renounce the Muſes (37).

*Triftis, egens, deſerta colat: tacituſque pererret
Alpini convexa jugi: ceu dicitur olim
Mentis inops, cœtus hominum, & veſtigia vitans, Avia perluſtraſſe vagus loca Bellerophontes* (38).

*Deſerts, or Alpine Hills, ſhall be his Haunt,
His dire Attendants, Silence, Grief, and Want:
There, like Bellerophon, diſturb'd in Mind,
Far ſhall be ſpy all Footſteps of Mankind.*

Thousands and Thousands of Chriſtians might have made the ſame Judgment; it muſt therefore be but an impertinent Proof of Paganism. Without doubt Arnicaeus, and the French Author, whom he quotes, were Chriſtians, and yet they judged, like Auſonius, of the love of Solitude; they diſcovered, clearly enough, that they imputed the Retirement of the Founders of Monks, to a melancholy Humour. "Medici inter ſigna morbi melancholici reſerunt, ſi quis querat ſolitudoinem, aut ſi quem triſtitiæ agat moror, torvæ ſeverum fronte, vel à lætis ſociorum cœtibus arecat; & Gallicus quidam non inconcinuus ſcriptori, ejus ordinis fuiſſe cenſet Francicum, Dominicum, alioſque Eremitas, aut Anachoretas, qui contra naturæ præſcriptum politiciſ ſocietatis bene ſubtraxerunt, in eremos, inſtar Endymionum, ſeſe abdidant, & quo melancholica ingenia maximè afficiebantur, novum vitæ genus, affectatæ religionis pallio veſtitum, conſiderunt (39). ----- The "Physicians eſteem it a Sign of a Melancholy Diſorder, to ſeek Solitude, or to be given up to Grief; to have a ſtern, ſhy, Countenance, or to ſpy good Fellowſhip; and a judicious French Writer is of Opinion, that This Claſs will take in Francicum, Dominicum, and other Hermits, or Anchores, who, againſt the Law of Nature, have withdrawn themſelves from human Societies, and bid themſelves in Wilderneſſes, like Endymion, and afterwards covered, under the Cloak of Religion, that new Kind of Life which They affected only out of a melancholy Diſpoſition." Baronius has not forgot to obſerve, that Auſonius was educated by two Nuns, who were his Aunts (40). This is a Proof that he was of a Chriſtian Family. Now, Chriſtianity being upon the Throne in thoſe Times, and Paganism expoſed to Diſgrace and Perſecution, it ſeldom happened that a Chriſtian turned Pagan. Since, then, Auſonius was educated from his Infancy in Chriſtianity, we ought to believe he profreſſed it all the Days of his Life; for nothing is more abſurd than the Thought of Gjelinius, who ſays, That Claudian and Auſonius, being prevailed upon by the Authority and Eloquence of Symmachus, abjured the Chriſtian Faith, and plunged themſelves again into Idolatry (41). He pretends to prove this by the Teſtimony of St Auguſtin, and by the great Friendſhip Symmachus expreſſed in his Letters to them. The Jeſuit who confutes this, ſhews, that St Auguſtin, without mentioning Auſonius, ſaid only, that Claudian had been addiſſed to Paganism (42); this is not affirming he had ever once been a Chriſtian. And as for what concerns Auſonius, he is juſtified as well by the Silence of the Emperor Gratian, and of St Paulinus, as by their Kindneſſes. We might add, that the Reaſon, borrowed from the Friendſhip of Symmachus, is the weakieſt in the World: they were not united by the Conformity of Religion, but by the love they both of them had for Learning.

It cannot be denied, but that Mr Baillet embraces the Opinion of thoſe who pretend, that Auſonius was a Pagan, I ſay it cannot be denied, when we conſider his Words. "Theſe are Defects, which he ought to have made up by ſome good Qualities, and by Maxims and Sentiments drawn from Morality, as the beſt Poets of Antiquity took care to do before him. But, as he lived among Chriſtians, he was afraid, perhaps, that he might be miſtaken for one of them, if his Opinions, in Morals, had been found agreeable to theirs (43)." It is certain, that the beſt Maxims of Morality are found in Auſonius's Works, and particularly the Aſophthegms of the ancient Sages of Greece. What can be a finer Piece of Morality, than his Deſcription of Vir bonus (44)?

[E] He compoſed ſome laſcivious Verſes.] Scaliger, the Father, found ſome of Auſonius's Epigrams ſo filthy, that he thought Fire only was able to purify them. "Nonnulla (epigrammata) adeo fœda atque deteſtanda ut neque ſcriptore neque audire digna, non in ſpongiam incumbere merita ſint, ſed ſolis flammis expiari poſſe videantur (45). ----- Some (Epigrams) are ſo deteſtably obſcene, that they deſerve neither Writer nor Reader, and, inſtead of the Sponge, they ſeem to me to be riſt no other Purification than That of the Flames." I wonder he ſays nothing againſt the Obſcenities of the Cento nuptialis, which have principally excited the Indignation of ſeveral other Authors. Here is a fine Paſſage of Mr Baillet: "It were, at leaſt, to be wiſhed, that ſome body had expunged the abominable Cento, that wicked Piece of Patchwork, which he made up of ſeveral half Verſes of Virgil, on Subjects purely amorous. It is with much Juſtice, that the University of Paris complained, forty Years ago, of the Malice of This Poet, in making Virgil ſpeak in ſo very lewd a manner; who of all the Poets of Antiquity was moſt celebrated for his Chaſtity." And Father Briet, a Jeſuit, has carried his Zeal yet further, when he repreſents this Action of Auſonius to be as an Outrage highly penal; declaring it to be as great a Piece of impudent Affluance, as of ſcandalous Obſcenity, to make ſuch a Miſapplication; and that there was ſomething rather diabolical than human in That pernicious Art of perverting Things, and changing good into bad, to lay Snares for the Innocence and Integrity of Youth (46). And becauſe many Perſons will be glad to read Father Briet's own Words, I am going to copy them: Centones ejus Virgiliani non tantum impuriſſimi ſunt, ſed & impudentiſſimi, quibus caſtiſſimos verſus, libidineſe affixit materiæ, opere, quod plus dæmonem, quàm hominem ſaperet, adoleſcentium pudicitia inſidiantem. Auſonius wrote That Piece at the Inſtance of the Emperor Valentinian, who had compoſed ſuch another. He excuſes him himſelf on That Order, and obſerves, that a Prince cannot expreſs any ſort of Command more abſolute, than That of a Requeſt. He found himſelf much perplexed; for, in writing a wicked Poem, he expoſed himſelf to the Accuſation of groſſly ſacrificing his Reputation to Flattery; and by writing a better Poem than That of the Emperor, he was like to be condemned for his Inſolence, in having the Affluance to be more witty than his Maſter. He affirms, I. That he obſerved ſuch a Medium, that, without pretending to outdo Valentinian, he wrote a Poem not inferior to his. II. That he had the Advantage of pleaſing him, and not having conquered him, he did not incur the Diſgrace, which a Victory might have drawn upon him.

(42) Theoph. Raynaud. ibid.

(43) Baillet's Judgment on the Poets, Tom. 2, pag. 470.

(44) Poige, 529.

(45) J. Caſar. Scaliger. Poet. lib. 6, cap. 5, pag. 761.

* The Uni-verſity's Answer to the Apology of Father Nicauſſin, p. 338.

† Philipp. Briet, de Poetis Lat. lib. 4, p. 50.

(46) Baillet, ubi ſupra, p. 470, 471.

(36) Baron. ad ann. 394, n. 24.

(37) I expreſs myſelf thus, becauſe ſto Paulinus gave this Senſe to Auſonius's Words; there is reaſon to believe it is not the true one, but that they rather ſignify an Imprecation againſt him who addreſſed Paulinus not to anſwer Auſonius's Letters.

(38) Auſon. Epith. 25, p. 697, 698.

(39) Arnicaeus, Reflection. polit. pag. 9.

(40) Byron. ubi ſupra, ad Ann. 394, n. 85. See Remar. K p. 7.

(41) Victor Gjelinius, in Scholia ad ſecundum librum Prudentii contra Symmachum, apud Theoph. Raynaud. Hæſioth. §. 2. Serie 1, cap. 14, pag. 564.

(47) In Epist.
ad Solom.
Pantherum.

they are grossly mistaken. These are, however, the most specious Reasons which have been alledged. Ritterhusius looked upon That Friendship as a great Prodigy (k).
Scaliger's

(47) Aufon.
in Prefat.
Cent. Nuptial. p. 500, 501.

This is the Language of a cunning Courtier. But to do This Poet all the Justice, which the Delicacy of his Wit and Pen here deserves, we must hear his own Words. "Piget Virgiliani carminis dignitatem tam joculari dehoneffasse materia; sed quid facerem? jussum erat, quodque est POTENTISSIMUM IMPERANDI GENUS, rogabat qui jubere poterat, S. imperator Valentinianus, vir meo judicio eruditus: qui nuptias quondam ejusmodi ludo descriperat, aptis equidem versibus & compositione festiva. Experimenti deinde volens, quantum nostra contentione præcelleret, simile nos de eodem concinnare præcepit. Quam scrupulosum hoc mihi fuerit, intellige. Neque anteferri volebam, neque posthaberi: quum aliorum quoque judicio detegenda esset adulatio incepta, si cederem: infolentia, si ut æmulus eminerem. Suscepi igitur similis recusanti: feliciterque & obnoxio gratiam tenui, nec victor offendi (47)."

(48) Amm.
Marcell. lib.
30, cap. 9.

----- I am ashamed to have disgraced the Dignity of Virgil's Poetry on so jocular a Subject: But what could I do? I was commanded to do it, and, which is the most absolute Sort of Command, I was desired to do it, by him who could have commanded it, even by his Sacred Imperial Majesty Valentinian, a Prince, in my Judgment, truly learned: who had, himself, treated a Nuptial Subject after the same ludicrous Manner, in very apt and witty Poetry. Desiring therefore to try, how far he should excel, in this our Trial of Skill, he commanded me to undertake the Work. You will readily imagine I had a very nice Task. I was neither willing to excel, nor be excelled: if I fell short, it would look, in the Judgment of others, like Flattery: if I out-did, it would seem Insolence. I undertook it, therefore, with an Appearance of Unwillingness: and, by a happy Course, I kept in Favour as an Equal, and offended not as a Superior." If it were true, that the Cento nuptialis of the Emperor Valentinian was not inferior to that of Ausonius, it must be said, that This Monarch was not unskilled in Poetry; and besides, as he was grave, and of exemplary Chastity, it may serve much for Ausonius's Justification. "Omni pudicitie cultu domi castus, & foris, nullo contagio conscientie violatus obsecrare, nihil incestum: hancque ob causam tanquam retinaculis petulantiam frænarat Aulæ regalis (48)."

(49) Aufon.
in Prefat.
Cent. Nuptial. p. 500, 501.

----- He (Valentinian) had himself treated a Nuptial Subject after the same ludicrous Manner, in very apt and witty Poetry." We may be well assured that the Emperor's Verses were no less amorous than Those of the Emperor Gallienus (50).

(50) See the Article
ARODON,
near the End.

It must be acknowledged then, that Ausonius deserves some excuse, because he wrote his Nuptial Cento by way of Imitation, and at the request of his Master, one of the most grave and chaste Emperors that ever was, and besides, a great Follower of the most pure Christian Doctrine (51). So that if he had not allowed of a Toleration (52), it would have been said of him, that he wanted no Talent, which becomes the most Orthodox Monarchs. I only remark this to shew, that Those who place Ausonius among the Pagan Poets, under pretence that he wrote such a lascivious Piece of Poetry as that Cento Nuptialis, do not give Things a thorough Examination. Without doubt he is to blame; I do not pretend to excuse him. I only say, that this Fact is not a Proof of Paganism, nor sufficient to give any just Suspensions, that he was not a very Orthodox Christian. I prove this from the Circumstances of it. I mean, from the Emperor's Character, who

(51) See Mr.
Fle-biet in the Life of Theodosius,
pag. 52.

(52) Amm.
Marcell. lib.
30, cap. 19,
& ibi Valen-tius.

commanded him to compose such a Writing, and approved it. How many Christian Poets are there, whose Works are more lascivious than this Cento Nuptialis? Many of them must be degraded from the Name of Christians, if we follow the Maxim of Gyraldus, "Christianus quidem Aufonius fuit — sed petulantior tamen & lascivior quam ut inter Christianos numerari dignus sit (53). — Aufonius was indeed a Christian, but so loose and lascivious, that he deserves not to be named among Christians." Without going so far as Italy, is there not an Epithalamium in the Works of a Poet at the Hague, which, for Obscenity, does not yield to the Cento of Ausonius (54). I address this principally to Ritterhusius, who looked upon the Conduct of Ausonius, as monstrous; I mean, that a Poet, who was a Christian, both in Practice and Profession, should write lasciviously: "Illud imprimis apud me monstri instar habet, hominem Christianum, & ut appareat, non nomine tantum; sed & pectore & moribus, adeo sæpe lasciva atque improba scribere potuisse, ut nisi nomen Aufonii esset adscriptum, Bibliotarium poetam te legere putes (55). — To me it appears particularly monstrous, that one, who is a Christian, and that, as it seems, not in Name only, but also in Morals and Disposition, could write such wicked and lascivious Verses, that if the Title did not shew them to be Ausonius's, you would think you was reading Martial." He is not satisfied with the Excuse the Author made on the Purity of his Life, (53) Cynild.

Hist. Poet.
Dial. 10, p.
514.

(54) See Ba-fium 20, five Epithalamium of John Secundus, p. 103.

(55) Conrad.
Ritterhus.
Epist. ad So-
lom. Pantherum.

Lasciva est nobis pagina, Vita proba est.

My Book is wanton, but my Life is chaste.

I relate this Excuse at length, in another Article (56). Let us observe, that Ausonius was so sensible that he should be blamed, that he endeavours to justify himself at the beginning, in the middle, and at the end, of That small Poem. We have seen what he said at the beginning, we shall see in another Place (57), what he said at the end: It remains only to observe, what he said in the middle. Know then, that after having described the Wedding-Feast, the Procession of the Bride and Bridegroom, the Wedding Presents, the Complements of the Company; and having modestly enough represented the first Discourse of the married Couple, he stops there, and advertises his Readers, that what he had to say more, not being covered with a Veil, it was their part to decline going any farther. "Hæcenus callis auriibus audiendum mysterium nuptiale, ambitu loquendi, & circumitione velavi. Verum quoniam & sceleratos amat celebritas nuptialis, verborumque petulantiam notus veteri instituto ludus admittit, cætera quoque cubiculi & lectuli aperta prodentur, ab eodem auctore collecta: ut bis erubescamus, qui & Virgilium faciamus impudentem. Vos, si placet, hic jam legendi modum ponite, cætera curiosi relinquite (58). — Thus far I have veiled the Nuptial Mystery with many Words, and long Descriptions, for an Entertainment to modest Ears. But, because the matrimonial Solemnity requires some smutty Mirth, and Custom has authorized these loose Descriptions, the remaining Secrets of the Chamber and Bed, will be given you by the same Author; who must blasp again and again, for imposing upon Virgil's Words so impudent a Meaning. You that please may stop here; and leave the rest to those who are more curious." He has reason to say, that what he calls Imminutio (59), will be described in very obscene Terms. Moreri has been the most indulgent of all Men; There are some Pieces, says he, which Ausonius composed in his Youth, wherein he complies too much with the Liberty of the Age he lived in. This Censure is not rigid enough, and supposes a Falsity; for certainly Ausonius was not young when he composed the Nuptial Cento. I do not speak of the Verses which he made on a handsome Slave, whose Name was Biffula, and who had been adjudged to him for his Share of the Plunder, after a great Victory obtained in Germany, in the

(56) See R-mark [D] of the Article
VAYER.

(57) Ibid.

(58) Aufon.
in Cent.
Nupt. pag.
513, 514.

(59) That is,
The Deterioration.

Scaliger's Mistakes [F], and the principal Editions of Aufonius [G], will be the Subject of

Year 368; for we do not know to what Degree of Licentiousness he carried Them; They are lost, and we may only conjecture, that They were very free, since he requires Readers who had drunk hard.

admoneo, ante bibas.

Jejunis nil scribo : meum post pocula si quis Legerit, hic sapiet (60).

He who would relish our lascivious Page, Must first with flowing Cups his Taste engage.

This does not agree at all with what remains of this Poem; there is nothing obscene either in the Words or Thoughts; we must conclude therefore, that the greatest Part of it is lost. A certain Commentator, without thinking of this, has proved the same thing by another Argument. He Remarks, That this Poem is too short at present, to suppose it ever could have had so large a Preface as we now find prefixed to it (61): and consequently it must have been much longer, when the Author finished it, than we now have it. However, Aufonius, who was then past the Heat of Youth, described, in all likelihood, the Charms of his Slave with a pretty deal of Freedom: She appeared so agreeable to him from the first Moment, that he presently let her at Liberty (62).

[F] These are Scaliger's Mistakes. I. He believed, Aufonius was raised to the Office of Prefect of the Prætorium, in the Emperor Valentinian's Life (63). This is not true, Aufonius declares that he owed this Office solely to the Emperor Gratian. "Tot gradus nomine Comitibus propter tua incrementa concessi, ex tuo merito, te ac patre principibus, quæstura communis, et tui tantum Præfectura beneficii (64). — So many Honours heaped upon me, as being your Præceptor, on account of your own Proficiencies, and great Merit, by both Emperors, your Father and yourself, the Quæstorship your joint Gift, but the Præfectship your own Jingle Favour." II. Scaliger believed, without Reason, that there was a Mistake in the Theodosian Code, where mention is made of Auxonius, Prefect of the Prætorium (65). He would have it read Aufonius, and not Auxonius. He would not have required such a Correction, if he had observed, that the Person, concerned in that place of Theodosius's Code, died about the Year 371, and that Aufonius enjoyed the Consulship in the Year 379, and lived yet many Years after. III. He would have all the Laws addressed to Antonius, Prefect of the Prætorium, to be corrected, and that Aufonius should be read in those Places, and not Antonius. This is wrong, for it is certain, that Aufonius was honoured with the Office of Prefect of the Prætorium of Italy, in the Year 376, five Months after the Death of the Emperor Valentinian, and that his Son Hesperius was given him by his Colleague (66). We know, also, that Antonius was made Prefect of the Prætorium of Gaul, about the same time. Things remained in the same State the following Year; Aufonius and his Son, discharged the Prefectship of Italy, and Antonius, that of Gaul; but, in the Year 378, Antonius was Prefect of the Prætorium in Italy, and Aufonius and his Son, were Prefects in Gaul, and so continued 'till the Year 380. You will find the Proofs of all this, in the Author quoted in the Margin (67).

IV. Scaliger believed, that Aufonius spoke of himself in these two Verses:

Aut Italum populos, Aquilonigenasque Britannos Præfecturarum titulo tenere secundo (68).

*Lations, and farthest Britains too obey
Th' appointed Prefect's delegated Sway.*

It is a Mistake: The Poem, wherein these two Verses are; was composed in the Life-time of the Emperor Valentinian (69). Now Aufonius was not Prefect of the Prætorium, 'till after the Death of that Prince (70). V. There is no crediting what Scaliger affirms, that Aufonius, after his Consulship, enjoyed the Office of Proconsul of Asia, and that of Vicar of the Diocese of Africa (71). We find, indeed, one Auxonius, that was Vicar of the Diocese of Asia, in the Year 365; and another Auxonius, that was Pro-consul of Asia, in the Year 381 (72). But this is nothing to Scaliger's Opinion. VI. He mistakes the Uncle for the Grandfather, in these Words. "Hoc tanto viro nascitur Burdigalæ Decius Magnus Aufonius nomine avi materni, cognomine patris (73). — Off so great a Man was Decius Magnus Aufonius born at Bourdeaux, taking his Name from his Grandfather, by the Mother, his Surname from his Father." Aufonius's Grandfather, by the Mother, was called Cætilius Argiculus Arborius; he left a Son, whose Name was Æmilius Magnus Arborius. So that Scaliger's Mistake is plain. VII. He says, that Hilaria, and Julia Cataphronia, who had made a Vow of Virginity, were Aufonius's Aunts, by the Mother (74). This is only true with regard to Æmilia Hilaria, for the Nun Julia Cataphronia, was his Aunt by the Father (75).

[G] — and the principal Editions of Aufonius.] Geffner, and his Abbreviators, affirm, That Aldus is the first who published this Poet. They do not say in what Year, but, if they mean the Edition of Venice, in 1517, they may easily be confuted; for besides, that Aldus was not then living, Mr Van Beughem affirms, that Aufonius was printed at Milan, in 1490 (76), and, since that, at Venice, in the Year 1496, with a Preface, by George Merula (77). The Edition of Basil, 1523, by Valentine Curio, is sufficiently known: That of Lewis Mureus, printed at Lyons, by John de Tournes, in the Year 1557, is preferable to all the former. The Bibliographers mention it, but I do not see that they take any notice of That which Ducheri published; in praise of which, Nicolas Bourbon made four Verses, which may be seen on the reverse of the Title of the Edition of Lyons, by Sebastian Gryppius, 1549. I say nothing of Plantin's Edition, 1568, with the Notes of Theodorus Pulman. That of Joseph Scaliger, at Lyons, by Anthony Gryppius, in 1575, with a very learned Commentary, under the Title of Aufoniane lectiones, eclipsed all the former. Every Body knows, that Elias Vinetus is one of the Commentators who has bestowed most Pains on our Poet's Works. He was Teacher of Classica Learning at Bourdeaux, and being pressed, by several Persons of that City, to publish an Edition of their famous Countryman, he endeavoured to oblige them, but found no Manuscript of Aufonius, in the Libraries of Bourdeaux, so that all he could do, was to compare the Editions together. He restored and corrected several Passages, and while he was preparing his Commentaries, to give the Reasons of his Criticisms, he caused Aufonius's Works to be printed, as he had corrected them. His Friend, James Goupil, had the Care of this Edition, which is that of Paris, 1551. Some Years after Vinetus recovered a Manuscript, found near Lyons, and which gave him much Light; and as that left him but little Excuse to those who pressed him to print his Notes, he published the Poem de Clariss Urbibus at Poitiers, together with his Commentary, in the Year 1565. He sent a Compleat Copy of Aufonius's Works to Anthony Gryppius, who had desired it of him, and engaged to print it immediately; but that Edition not appearing, he was persuaded to make use of the Press, which was set up, in the mean Time, at Bourdeaux. He therefore gave another Copy to Simon Millanges, who began to print it at Bourdeaux, in the Month of February 1575, and finished it by the beginning of Summer, in the same Year. At the same time came out the Edition of Gryppius; but, for want of Paper, Millanges could not print off Vinetus's Commentary. It was not printed 'till four Years after Millanges's Edition of Aufonius's Works (78). Therefore, to speak properly, it ought not to be said, that the best Edition of Aufonius, is that of Bourdeaux, with the Commentaries of Elias Vinetus, in the Year 1575. Præ reliquis verò laudanda luculentæ Aufonii Editio, cum commentariis viri docti Eliæ Vinesi vulgata, Burdigalæ A. 1575; & post ejus obitum A. 1590, 4. (79). For, as I have said before, those Commentaries did not appear 'till 1580. Moreri has been exact in this Point; he is only mistaken, in saying Vinetus was of Saintes; the Word Santo signifies nothing here but Saintongeais, one of the Country of Saintonge. The Library of the Archbishop of Reims (80), mentions an Aufonius, printed by

(72) Rubenius, in vitæ Mallii Theodori, p. 244.

(73) Scalig. in vitæ Aufon.

(74) Id. ib.

(75) Aufon. in Paren. n. 26, p. 142.

(76) Beughem in Iconabulis Typographiæ, apud Joh. Albert. Fabricium Biblioth. Lat. pag. 177.

(77) There is a Copy of this Edition in the Catalogue of Thuanus's Library; it is in Folio, and perhaps of Aldus.

(78) Taken from the Preface of Elias Vinetus.

(79) Joh. Albert. Fabricius, Bibl. Lat. p. 477.

(80) In the 394th Page.

(60) Aufon. in Biffula, pag. 346.

(61) See the Aufonius of Tolius, pag. 342.

(62) Aufon. in Biffula, pag. 341.

(63) Scalig. Aufon. in Læctio. lib. 1. cap. 2. & lib. 2. c. 17. apud Alb. Pet. Rubenium, in Vitæ Mallii Theodori, pag. 16.

(64) Aufon. in Grat. A. citione, pag. 702, 703.

(65) Lege II. de Patrocinis Viror. See Valef. in Amm. Marcell. lib. 29, c. 1. pag. 549.

(66) Aufon. in Grat. A. c. p. 305.

(67) Albertus Petrus Rubenius in Vita Mallii Theodori, pag. 17, & seq.

(68) Aufon. in Mofella, ver. 407, pag. 419.

(69) This is plain from Viri. 450.

(70) See Rubenius, in Vita Mallii Theodori, pag. 23.

(71) Scalig. in Vita Aufon.

of two Remarks below; and I shall not forget to observe the Mistake of Trihemius, who pretended that Aufonius was Bishop of Bordeaux [H].

by Millanges, at Bordeaux, with the Commentaries of Elias Vinetus, in the Year 1575. I imagine that this Mistake proceeds from applying the Date 1575, to all the Pieces bound together, which only suits with Aufonius's Works, at the beginning of the Volume. Borrichius is in the Wrong to say, I. That the Edition of Vinetus, is one of the best. II. That Vinetus has commented upon Aufonius's Poem de Urbibus (81). Does not this look as if he had wrote no Commentaries on the other Poems of Aufonius? The best Edition of this Poet, is that of Amsterdam 1671; but I have elsewhere observed (82), that the Tide falsely promises, that they have there inserted all the entire Notes of Mariangelus Accursius.

I shall give a Supplement to all this, in the Article MARTELLIUS (HUGOLIN), at the End of the Remark [A]. Not having Father Lacarry's Book (83), I am forced to content myself with what I find of it in the Journal des Sçavans. "The double Prefect-ship of Aufonius, which gave Scaliger so much "Trouble, is here clearly explained. We find that, in the Year 378, Aufonius was Prefect of the Prætorium, in the Gauls, and in Italy, with his Son Heperius; but he was not Prefect in Italy, any longer than 'till about the Month of July, at which time one Antonius was appointed Prefect of the Prætorium in Italy, as he is said to have been in the Code. So that the Prefectship of Aufonius and Heperius, in Italy, was interrupted by Antonius; but he enjoyed it again, together with his Son, in 379, and continued, with him, that in the Gauls, without any interruption, during the Years

"378, and 379 (84)." This Hypothesis, and Chronology, are not agreeable to the Sentiment of Rube-nius, before related. If I had Father Lacarry's Book, I might, perhaps, be able to determine which of them has explained this Matter with greatest Accuracy.

[H] Trihemius pretended that Aufonius was Bishop of Bordeaux.] Trihemius affirms, That this Bishop was very learned in the Scriptures, and as remarkable for his Piety as his Learning, and that he flourished under Maximus, in the Year 310, and did some handsome Things, with St Martin, St Ambrose, and St Jerom, in the Synod, which That Prince caused to be held at Triers. What a heap of Fables are here! Vinetus observes, that some Persons will have it, that Aufonius was canonized. He says also, that the Inhabitants of Angoulême honoured one Aufonius, amongst their chief Saints, who was, as they say, their first Bishop, and he does not think it impossible, but that the Poet Aufonius, upon being elected Bishop by the Inhabitants of Angoulême, might have accepted that Dignity (85). A Manuscript Chronicle of Angoulême, says, that Aufonius, a Disciple of St Martial, and Bishop of Angoulême, suffered Martyrdom, when the Vandals ravaged Gaul (86). Alteferra confutes this, by observing, that a Disciple of St Martial could not be living in the beginning of the IVth Century, when the Irruption of the Vandals (87) happened. However it be, our Aufonius is represented in very various Lights. Some say that he was not so much as a Christian; and others, that he is in the Catalogue of the canoniz'd Saints.

(84) Journal des Sçavans, 12 Aug. 1675, pag. 225, Edr. of Holl.

(85) Elias Vinetus, in vitâ Auson.

(86) Alteferra, rerum Aquitanicar. lib. 5, cap. 8. pag. 339.

(87) Id. ib.

AUSTRIA (Don JOHN of), Natural Son of the Emperor Charles V, was born, at Ratisbon, the Twenty fourth of February 1545. A Gentlewoman of Ratisbon, whose Name was Barbara BLOMBERG (a), was willing to pass for his Mother [A], to save the real Mother the Scandal she must necessarily have undergone in being

[A] Barbara Blomberg was willing to pass for his Mother.] Famianus Strada says, that Cardinal de la Cueva revealed this Secret to him (1). That Cardinal had learned it from the Infanta Clara Eugenia, to whom Philip II, who concealed nothing from her, had discovered it. This Prince always pretended to the World, that Barbara Blomberg was the Mother of Don John. "Eodemque loco habitam à Philippo "Rege scænz pariter inserviente (2). — And was "treated as such by King Philip, who likewise kept "up the Pretence." The Sacrifice which that Lady was willing to make of her own Reputation, to that of a great Princess, is nothing near so great as may be imagined: It is thought a Scandal to pass for a private Gentleman's Mistress; but how many Ladies glory to be Mistresses of Kings and Emperors? I have said that this Sacrifice was made in favour of a great Princess: Strada informs me of it. "Joannem Au- "striacum non ex Barbara Blomberg uti creditum "ad eam diem, sed ex longe illustriori ac Plane "Principæ femina procreatum: cujus ut famæ par- "ceretur prætentam fuisse aliam à Carolo Cæsare. — "John of Austria was not born of Barbara Blomberg, "as was then believed, but of a much more illustrious "Lady, and even a Princess, to save whose Reputation, "That other was only pretended by Charles the Empe- "ror." The same Historian remarks, that Don John was twice deceived, as to his Mother, and never in- formed of the Truth. He first believed himself to be the Son of Magdalen Ulla, and afterwards of Barbara Blomberg. How happy and vigilant soever he was to discover the most secret Intrigues of the Enemy, he could never unravel this domestic Mystery. "Ha- "bet profecto unde minus sibi de sua sagacitate pla- "ceat humanum ingenium, quando tantus princeps, "atque intima quæque vel in hoste rimari solitus, "domi suæ, suorumque ignarus adeo vixerit obierit- "que, ut bis in matre deceptus, fœdè alienam co- "luerit, nunquam suam (3). — It is indeed enough "to make the human Understanding less proud of it's "Sagacity, to see that so great a Prince, who could "penetrate into the closest Secrets of the Enemy, should "yet live and die so ignorant of his own Birth, and "of what so nearly concerned him, that he was twice "mistaken in his Mother, and could never discover

"where to pay his Duty right." I wonder that Fa- ther Strada says nothing of a third Person, who passed for Don John's Mother. The Author of a learned Differtation, printed in 1688 (4), speaks with great Praise of Catharine de Cordonna, born at Naples in the Year 1559. She went into Spain, with her Cousin the Princess of Salerno, in the Year 1559, and, by her Virtue and Piety, acquired the esteem of Philip II, in such manner, that he commanded Rui Gomez, Prince of Evoli, Governour of Don Carlos, and Don John, to take care of This Lady. Rui Gomez took her home to his House, and, upon observing her admirable Prudence, desired her to undertake the Government of his Family, and to assist him in the Education of the two Princes. She acquitted herself of that Trust with all the care imaginable, and Don John always honoured her as his Mother. The Author of the Differtation makes a Remark on that word: Before we go any farther, says he (5), we ought to clear that Saint from an abominable Calumny, by which some abusing that word, would insinuate as if she was the true Mother of John of Austria. Strada of Rosberg seems to have given occasion to that supposition, by describing that Prince's Mother, in his Genealogy of the House of Austria, only by the Name of Catharine. But the chaste and mortified Life which Catharine de Cordonna always led from her Infancy, could not leave Room for such a Suspicion. He adds several other Reasons to justify Catharine de Cordonna, and ends the Remark with these Words: It was another more illustrious Person (who was the Mother of John of Austria) and whom our Saint (6) had also known, as the Historian of her Life observes; but who, for weighty Considerations, was never discovered. Let us add to all this a Passage of Mr Varillas. The secret of the Birth of John of Austria, says he (7), was never rightly discovered, and whether the too high quality of his true Mother required all these Precautions; or that more care was taken to avoid the Scandal, than the Sin; it is certain that Charles only discovered to Quichada who John of Austria was; and that he ordered him to let him pass for his own Son, till his Imperial Majesty, in resigning his Dominions to Philip II, informed him that he was his natural Brother. This Moderation of Mr Varillas is more to be com- mended,

(4) Differtation on the Hemina, or Print, of Wine, and the Pound of Bread, pre- scribed by St Benedict.

(5) Page 186.

(6) That is, Katherin de Cordonna. Her History is in the General History of the barefooted Carmelites, Part 1, Book 5. See Differtation on the Hemina, pag. 182.

(7) Varillas History of Francis I. Book 13, pag. 389.

(81) Aufonii Editio electior est Jof. Scaligeri & Eliae Vineti. Borrich. de Poët. Lat. pag. 73.

(82) Ab-ve, Citat. (6.) of the Art. ACCURSIUS (MARI- ANGELUS).

(83) Institu- ta, Historia Galliarum sub Præfe- ctis Prætorii Galliarum.

(a) See her Article.

(1) Strada, de Bello Belg. Decad. 1. lib. 10. pag. 626.

(2) Id. ib.

(3) Id. ib. pag. 627.

being publickly known to be so. The Child was carried into Spain, before he was a Year old [B]; the Emperor charged Lewis Quixada with this Commission, whom he had several times experienced to be very well qualified for keeping a Secret (b). He ordered him to let the Child be brought up by his Wife Magdalen Ulloa, without giving any body room to suspect who was the Father. Quixada served his Master in This, with all the Fidelity imaginable, for he did not only keep the Secret inviolable, but had also an extraordinary Care of Don John's Education. Charles, upon his Death Bed, discovered, to his Son Philip, that he was the Father of the young Lord whom Quixada educated at Villagarfia, and charged him to acknowledge him for the future as his Brother, and to treat him in that Quality. Philip did not perform this Order till two Years after [C], but then he did it in a very genteel Manner. He caused Don John to be educated with Don Carlos, and Alexander Farnefe. Those three Princes were almost of an Age, but Don John was much the finest, both in Person and Parts. Philip was displeased at the aversion he found in him to an Ecclesiastical Character, for which his Father had designed him. And much less at a Frolick of That young Lord, in taking a Journey to Barcelona, without the King's leave, accompanied with a great number of young Gentlemen, to go to the War of Malta. But the Letters he received from the King, before he embarked, put a stop to that Voyage. He so readily obeyed the Order, he had received to return, that he, in some measure, appeased Philip's anger by so immediate a Compliance; and he entirely recovered his Favour, by making the first Discovery to him of Don Carlos's Machinations. There was but very little Friendship between Those two young Princes [D]. A little while after, Don John was sent to the Kingdom of Granada against the Moors, and signalized himself in that War. He was declared Generalissimo of the League against the Turks, and, in that Post, gained the famous Battle of Lepanto, in the Year 1571. After which he took the City of Tunis, and That of Bijeria, and returned triumphant into Italy, attended by Amidas, King of Tunis, whom he had made Prisoner. He had left a Garrison in Tunis against Philip's Order, and there was already a Rumour of conferring upon him the Title of King of Tunis, by the Interposition of the Pope. The King of Spain was not at all pleased with these continual Successes; the Idea which he formed to himself of that young Prince's Ambition made him uneasy (c). He sent him to command in the Netherlands; but ordered him to pacify those Provinces: He had not a Mind to have him there at the head of an Army. Being thus prejudiced against him, he easily believed all Reports which could give him room to suspect his Brother's Conduct; and some say, that, to increase the Misunderstanding, means were used to inform him, that Don John was going to be married to Queen Elizabeth (d). To cut the Matter short, I shall just observe, that

(b) Quem expertus erat arcinorum celantissimum. Strada, d.c. 1, lib. 10, pag. 612.

(c) Quod Philippo susceptionem intendit elatum victoriarum cursu juvenem non diu latum privatam fortunam & regna nunc rogare aliquando invasurum. . . . Philip began to suspect, that so young a Conqueror would be too much elated with his Victories, to be long satisfied with a private Condition, and that his next Step would be to importune him for some Kingdom. Id. ib. pag. 617.

(d) See Remark [F].

Escovedo,

mended, than the Liberty taken in the second Edition of the Menagiana, in declaring plainly, that Don John of Austria was born of his Father's own Sister. What gave occasion to this, was an excellent Saying of Charles V. It seems upon cancelling an unjust Privilege, which he had granted, He said, I had rather deface my Hand-Writing, than my Conscience. Upon which we find, in the second Edition of the Menagiana, pag. 422, the following Gloſs. What a tender Conscience is here, for one who was so great a Cheat all his Life, and, if scandal may be believed, did not scruple to lie with his own Sister, while Barbara Blomberg served as a Screen to this incestuous Commerce, by passing for the Mother of Don John of Austria.

[B] The Child was carried into Spain before he was a Year old.] Brantome tells another Story, which I will relate in the Remarks of the Article BLOMBERG; and which ought not to be believed to the Prejudice of Strada.

[C] Charles V. discovered, to Philip II. that Don John was his Brother, and charged him to acknowledge him as such — which he obeyed not — till two Years after.] The Application of an Historian to the principal Matters, makes him sometimes not discover a Slip in Calculation. Here Strada affirms, that Don John was born the Twenty fourth of February 1545; that his Father died the Twenty first of September 1558; that Philip acknowledged Don John two Years after the Death of his Father; that he caused him to be educated with his Son Don Carlos; and that These two Princes had not yet attained to their fifteenth Year, annum quantum decimum nondum supergressi. If Strada had reckoned right, he would have made it above fifteen Years. It cannot be pretended that the Year 1547, was That of the Birth. I confess that Mr Moreri vouches it, but it cannot be the Opinion of Strada, since, by placing the Death of Don John on the first of October 1578, he makes him Thirty three Years of Age. So then there is no fault of the Press in the number 1545. The Author of the Dissertation on the Hemina (8) places the Birth of that Bastard on the fourteenth of February 1545, and his Death about the first of October 1578, in the Army near Namur; and censures the Genealogy of the House of Austria, which makes him die at Bruges in the Twenty fifth Year of his Age. He also censures Father Strada, for having placed the Death of Don John in the Month of December; but we read, in express words, in Strada, Kalendis Octobris (9). Mr Varillas is not to be credited, when he says, That Philip II. let eleven Years pass, before he performed his Father's Orders, and that John of Austria was already twenty Years of Age, when his Catholic Majesty bestowed himself to acknowledge him for his Brother (10). According to this Calculation he would have been twenty four Years old. Let us remember that he was sent Generalissimo to the Kingdom of Granada, in the Year 1569 (11). According to Mr Varillas, therefore, Philip II. must have begun, by that important Office, to acknowledge him for the Natural Son of Charles V. This would be judging very wrongly of that Prince, to impute to him such a precipitate Conduct.

[D] He made the first discovery of Don Carlos's Machinations: there was but little Friendship between Those two young Princes.] I shall relate one particular that is mentioned in Brantome. It is said that Don Carlos "having discovered something of moment to Don John, he revealed it to the King of Spain, who always loved him the better for it, though he rewarded him but very indifferently afterwards; and Don Carlos hated him so much for it, that they generally quarrelled, so that once he called him Bastard, and Son of a Whore; to which he returned this Answer, Si yo lo soy; mas yo tengo padre mejor que vos: Yes I am so, but I have a better Father than you; and they were like to have come to blows about it (12).

(8) Pag. 187.

(9) Strada, Decad. 1, lib. 10, pag. 611.

(10) Varillas's History of Francis I. Book 13, pag. 389.

(11) Moreri's Jeux 1570.

(12) Brantome's Lives of Foreign Captains, Tom. 2, pag. 117, 118.

(c) Majoribus in dies pressus angustis ac defectibus, uti palam querebatur à Rege, traditusque hostium ludibrio, ingens animi spique principis --- ex more contulit. --- Being reduced to greater Straits every Day, and, as he continued openly, betrayed by the King, and sacrificed to the Sport of the Enemy, that great and promising Prince, --- died of Grief.

Strada, dec. 1, lib. 10, pag. 619.

(13) Additions to the Memoirs of Catharine, Tom. 2, pag. 389.

(14) Seneca, Epist. 3.

(15) Strada de Bello Belg. Dec. 1, lib. 10, pag. 612.

Escovedo, Don John's Secretary, having been sent to Madrid, by his Master, to sollicite the Succours which were a long time expected, was killed there [E]. Don John, upon this, found himself to be in Disgrace; and his vexation, to see himself sacrificed to the Contempt of the Enemies, for want of Supplies to make head against them [F], threw him into a Diftemper, of which he died the first of October 1578 (e). It was even believed that he was poisoned [G]. He did indeed recommend his supposed Mother, and his supposed uterin Brother, as also his Domesticks to King Philip, but durst not mention to him his two Natural Daughters (f) [H].

His Elogy may be seen, among those of several other Warriors, in a Book composed by Primo Damascino, and printed at Rome, in the Year 1680, under the Title of La Spada d' Orione stellata nel Cielo di Marte. But if you are desirous to see the Particulars of the Complaints made against his Conduct, with many of his intercepted Letters, you need only read the Summary Discourse of the just Causes and Reasons, which obliged the States General of the Netherlands, to provide for their Defence against Don John of Austria. It is a very curious Manifesto printed at Antwerp, by William Sylvius the King's Printer, in the Year 1577. See also the Manifesto published by Prince John Casimir, Count Palatine of the Rhine, in the Year following, to justify his Expedition.

[E] Escovedo, Don John's Secretary, being sent to Madrid — was killed there.] Mr le Laboureur says, that he had read some Memoirs written by Mr Peiref, which make Escovedo die after his Master; and that Mr du Vair, who had been told that Particular, in a familiar Conversation with Antonio Perez, related it to Mr de Peiref (13). This deserves to be examined. Perhaps I shall compose an Article for Escovedo, wherein I shall treat of this more amply, and we shall see whether it was before or after Don John's Death, that the Designs, which he and the Duke of Guise had formed, were known at the Court of Spain. Philip II was not so much in the wrong as was imagined; and Don John would have been able, in a little time, to have cut him out more work than the Dutch. He was no truer, in respect to his Sovereign, than the Duke of Guise. But it must be owned, that the jealous Humour of Philip, and his mysterious Politics, was the chief Cause of inspiring his Family with those rebellious Thoughts. "Multi fallere docuerunt, dum timent falli, & aliis jus peccandi suspicando fecerunt (14). — Many Persons have put others upon cheating them, by their fearfulness of being cheated, and have occasioned, by their Suspicions, the very Thing they suspected."

[F] He saw himself sacrificed to the Contempt of his Enemies, for want of Supplies to make head against them.] Thus the King of Spain, as great a Politician as he was, chose rather to lose the Netherlands, than not to satisfy the jealousies, and other hidden Passions, which disquieted his Soul. It is to this that the Dutch are as much, or more, indebted for their Liberty, than to their good and wise Conduct. There are few great Affairs but what owe their Success as much, at least, to the Misconduct of one of the Parties, as to the Prudence of the other. There was no great difficulty to draw Philip II into the Snare, as soon as his jealousies were discovered. Strada fancies, that the Prince of Orange wrote about Don John's Marriage, with the Queen of England, to one of his Friends at Paris, and the promise which the Bridegroom made of Liberty of Conscience to the Protestants, on purpose to increase King Philip's Suspicions: he thought that his News would not fail to be known by the Spanish Ambassador. "Quin ad hanc quoque suspicionem Regi confirmandam haud sanè dubitaverim apseville Orangium, scriptis ad amicum litteris in Galliam, quibus Joan. Austriaci, atque Anglæ Reginæ conjugium significabat: addebatque, pro sua in eam rem operâ, spem sibi ab Austriaco, factam liberæ per Belgium Religiosis. Id, quod à Varga, Hispano apud Gallum oratore in arcana quoque intento, sollicitè admonitum ferunt Philippum Regem (15). — I make no doubt, but the Prince of Orange had an Eye to the confirming this Suspicion of the King's, in the Letters he wrote to a Friend in France, intimating a Marriage between John of Austria, and the Queen of England: and adding, that John had promised her, so far as in him lay, a Liberty of Conscience through the whole United Provinces. This Varga, the Spanish Ambassador in France, sobo was always on the Watch for Secrets, is said to have met with, and to have sent a particular Account of it to King Philip."

[G] It was believed — that he was poisoned.] You will find here both Accounts, of Strada and Brantome. Ex Mæore contabit, says Strada (16): "An vero ad hoc quod satis extingui potuit, venenum aliud cujusquam dolo subjeclum fuerit (namque in defuncti corpore extitisse non obscura veneni vestigia affirmant qui viderunt) equidem nihil ipse statuerim. He died of Grief: But whether, to dispatch him more effectually, any Poison was given him, (for those who saw the Body, affirm there were very evident Signs of Poison), I will not take upon me to determine. That poor Prince, says Brantome (17), did not long enjoy that great Glory and Praise, for he, who had so often sought Death in the hard Field of Mars, died in a soft Bed, as if he had been a Favourite of Venus, and not a Son of Mars. It was said that he died of a contagious Diftemper, which the Marchioness of Avic, with whom he was in love, had given him, but this is not generally said, not even in Spain: for it is thought that he was poisoned with perfumed Muskins."

[H] He durst not recommend to Philip II, his two Natural Daughters.] Don John, the handsomest Prince of his Time, was also very Gallant and Complaisant. Judge whether he was not a lucky Man. He got a Daughter at Madrid, and another at Naples. She at Madrid was called Anne, and her Mother was a Person of the first Quality, and a perfect Beauty. "Ex Mariâ Mendozia splendidissimi generis formæque elegantissimæ puellâ (18). — Of Mary Mendoza, "a young Lady of a most noble Family, and incomparable Beauty." The same Lady who had brought up Don John (19), brought up this Bastard-Child likewise privately till she was seven Years of Age, and then put her into a Nunnery. Philip II took her from thence, and sent her to Burgos, where she became perpetual Superior of the Benedictine Nuns. Don John's other Daughter's Name was Joan: her Mother was a Lady of Sorrento, whose Name was Diana Pbalanga, and after she was brought up to seven Years of Age, by her Father's Sister, the Duchess of Parma, she was put into the Nunnery of St Clara at Naples, where, having lived twenty Years, she was afterwards married to the Prince of Butero. Those two Daughters of Don John died almost in the same Day, in the Month of February 1630. He had caused them to be brought up so privately, that he did not doubt but that the King was ignorant of the whole Secret: nor had he trusted it to his great Friend the Prince of Parma, who did not know any Thing of those Bastard Children, but, from the Duchess his Mother, a little before the Death of Don John. Eas Regi incomptas crederat: quippe occultè adeo cauteque educatas, ut Alexander ipse secretorum ejus planè omnium participi filiarum alteram ignoraret: alteram non ab Austriaco sed à Margaritâ matre haud pridem noisset (20). The Author of That Prince's Life, printed at Amsterdam in 1690, will have it, that Don John discovered his Amours with the Fair Mendoza, and the Birth of his Daughter Anne, to his dear Nephew Prince Alexander Farnese, because, both living at the same time, in the Spanish Court, they observed each other very narrowly, and because they were too good Friends to hide any Thing

(f) Taken from Strada, in the 10th Book of the 1st Decad.

(16) Id. ib. pag. 619.

(17) Brantome's Lives of foreign Captains, pag. 140.

(18) Strada, Dec. 1, lib. 10, p. 624.

(19) Catharine Ulla, the Wife of Don Lewis Quixada.

(20) Strada, Dec. 1, lib. 10, p. 624.

Expedition. He got it printed, at Newstadt, in Higb-Dutch and Latin. There was another Don Joba of AUSTRIA [I], in the XVIIth Century, who made a considerable Figure in the World. He was the Son of Philip IV, by a Comedian [K].

Shing from each other. But, says he, being well persuaded, that the declaring of a Crime is a Crime, he had made a Secret of his Amours with Diana to him (21). This is giving Strada the He without Grounds, or Proof, and it is assigning a Reason for that Prince's Silence, which proves too much.

[I] There was another Don John of AUSTRIA, in the XVIth Century. He was the Natural Son of King Philip IV, of Spain, and was born in the Year 1629 (22). He was legitimated in the Year 1642, and no body paid the Complement of Congratulation upon it to Philip IV, with so much forwardness as James Pamphila, the Pope's Nuncio (23). The King's Love for that Child was the most tender imaginable. In the Year 1642 he declared him Generalissimo, both by Sea and Land, in the War against Portugal, and, some Years after, he sent him into Italy, against the Rebels of Naples (24). The last Expedition having proved very fortunate, inclined that King to give the same Don John a Commission to reduce the revolted Catalans to their Duty. After this he sent him to command in the Netherlands. That Post did not contribute greatly to Don John's Glory; that which he acquired by raising the Siege of Valenciennes, vanished away by the ill Success which attended him in other Places; and especially by the loss of the Battle of the Dunes, which was soon followed by the loss of Dunkirk. He was no less unfortunate, in the War of Portugal, after the Peace of the Pyrenes; for the Army, which he commanded, was entirely defeated; and he fell into Disgrace, and received Orders, from the King his Father, to retire to Confuegra (25). He had no share in the Government after the Death of That Prince; the whole Administration was in the Hands of the Queen-Mother, and the Jesuit Nibbard. They would have removed him, under the specious pretence of sending him into the Netherlands to oppose the Arms of France; but he discovered their Cunning, and would not go thither, pretending to be sick. The Court, being offended with That Conduct, made him retire to Confuegra (26). He did not forget himself in That Retreat, but managed so well the Discontents of those, who were incensed at the great Favour shewn to Father Nibbard, that, at last, This Jesuit was forced to withdraw. He went from Spain to Rome, and from That Time Don John's Affairs went better, 'till at last he was recalled to Court (27), and had the chief Direction of the Government. He died the seventeenth of September, 1679, after Twenty three Days Sickness (28). Some said he had been poisoned. "Vi fono persone, che afficurano che fosse un colpo ufcito dalla mano della Reg. Mad. e del Cardinal Nitardi, coll' assenso" za de' suoi partigiani (29). — There are some "who affirm, that the Blow came from the Hands of "the Queen Mother, and Cardinal Nitardi, by the Affiance of their Party." Others have said, that he was too much troubled at the King's Marriage, with the Daughter of the Duke of Orleans, that it was the Cause of his Death; and yet, according to the common Opinion, he was the chief Promoter of That Marriage (30). I remember to have read, in some Gazette, of the Year 1678, that the Marquis of Agrepit, being suspected of having wrote a Comedy against Don John, was banished to Oran.

[K] Son of Philip IV, by a Comedian. All the World knows, that Philip IV was very much addicted to the Love of Women. He discovered that Inclination very early, and he had a Governor, who was so far from holding him up, in such a slippery way, that he contributed to his Fall. It was the Count d'Olivarez; who was also subject to That Passion himself, and for That Reason, as was for the better securing to himself the Administration of Affairs, encouraged the lewd Temper of his young Prince: he was in hopes, that, under the Reign of of his Pupil, he should have the greatest Offices of the State, and he forelaw, that if the Monarch should lead a voluptuous and effeminate Life, he could exercise them with much more Authority: And besides, that his own Debaucheries would have a much freer Course under a Master whom he should only imitate. This Management of his had the desired Success. Philip IV ascended the Throne at sixteen Years of Age, in the Year 1621, and left the Care of the Kingdom to the Count-Duke, d'Olivarez, who neglected no means of continuing the Indolence of That Monarch. He invented new Diversions, and brought to Madrid the most compleat Company of Comedians that could be formed in Spain. They acted before the King in the Year 1627. There was an Actress among them, whose Name was Caterina, that pleased him very much. She was not very handsome, but extremely genteel and engaging, and had a charming Voice. The King no longer saw her on the Stage, but he fell in Love with her, and ordered her to be brought to his Chamber: He said he had only a Mind to hear her speak nearer him. As soon as the Count-Duke received this News, he managed the Meeting, and caused the Actress to be introduced at Night into his Majesty's Chamber. She did not return from thence 'till the next Day, and then left the Prince so much in love with her, that he declared her his Favourite. She was but sixteen Years of Age. After that they met frequently, he proved with Child, and was delivered of our Don John. But, after her lying-in, she broke off That Commerce (31), and shut herself up in a Nunnery, and took the Habit of a Nun, with the Benediction of the Pope's Nuncio (32).

AUTON (JOHN d') a Gentleman of Sainsonge (a), Abbot of Angle (b), of the Order of St Augustin, lived under the Reign of Lewis XII. He was kept in waiting at Court, on purpose to write the private History of That Prince (c). This Work he actually performed, and it was printed at Paris, in the Year 1615, in 4to, by Theodore Godfry. It extends only from the Year 1506, to 1508 (d). We find there some Verses which the Author had dedicated to his Sovereign (e).

AZOTUS, a City of Palestine near the Sea, one of the five Satrapies of the Philistines (a). There they kept the Chief of their Idols, called Dagon, which fell down and broke before the Ark which they had taken from the Jews, and placed in the Temple of that Idol (b). It does not appear, that the Jews subdued this Place before the Reign of Uzziah King of Juda (c) [A]. It was taken from them by

Tartan,

[A] It does not appear, that the Jews subdued this Place before the Reign of Uzziah. Look as long as you please, in the eleventh and fifteenth Chapters of Isaiah, to which Moreri refers, you will not find, that Isaiah conquered the City of Azotus. Nor is it truer, that Those of the Tribe of Judah, conquered it in the Time of the Judges: The Author, who affirms it, and quotes the first Chapter of the Book of Judges (1), has no grounds for it. That which deceived either Moreri, or the Author whom he followed, is, that, in the fifteenth Chapter of Isaiah, This City seems to be in the Dividend of the Tribe of Judah. But he ought to have remembered, that they reckoned, in those Dividends, both what was already conquered, and what was, afterwards, to be conquered. It appears plainly, from the third Chapter of Judges, that the five Governments of the Philistines, and consequently this of Azotus, were

(21) Vie de Don Juan d'Austria, pag. 146.

(22) Vita di Don Giovanni d'Austria, pag. 4. Edit. di Genova, 1786.

(23) Ibid. pag. 7.

(24) Ibid. pag. 37.

(25) Ibid. pag. 284.

(26) Ibid. pag. 288.

(27) Toward the end of the Year 1676.

(28) Vita di Don Giovanni d'Austria, pag. 628.

(29) Ibid. pag. 629.

(a) Baudier, Hist. du Cardinal d'Amboise, pag. 44. (b) Du Chesne, Biblioth. des Hist. de Franç. p. 65.

(c) Joshua xiii. 3. where the Translation calls it Asdod.

(1) Christoph. Heideemannus, in Palestina, pag. 9.

(30) See the Nouvelles de la Repub. des Lettres, for July, 1686, pag. 827.

(31) Non volle poi la Calderona accoppiarsi più col Rè. — Calderona, after this, would be no longer concerned with the King. Vita di Don Giovanni d'Austria, pag. 5.

(32) John Baptist Pamphilo, who was afterwards of Pope Innocent X. This is taken from the Life of Don Giovanni d'Austria, pag. 2, & seq.

(c) Baudier, Hist. du Cardinal d'Amboise, pag. 44. (d) Du Chesne, Biblioth. des Hist. de Franç. pag. 65. (e) Sirey, Bibl. Franç. pag. 329.

(b) 1 Sam. 7.

(c) 2 Chron. xxvii. 6.

- (d) Isaiab tells us (d), who fived in that time. Some time after it was besieged by Psammitichus King of Egypt, and it was one of the longest Sieges ever heard of: for they lay before this Place Twenty nine Years, before they could take it (e). It was ruined, in all probability, by the Egyptians, since the Prophet Jeremiab mentions it only as the remainder of a City (f). It was considerable in the Wars of the Maccabees; and the taking of it was not the least of Jonathan's Exploits. The Enemies he had defeated retired thither, and shut themselves up in the Temple of Dagon. He ordered it to be set on Fire, so that they perished in the same Flames which consumed the Temple and City (g). We read, in the Acts of the Apostles, that when St Philip had baptized the Eunuch of Queen Candace, he was caught away by the Spirit of the Lord, and was found at Azotus (B). Prophane Authors have mentioned this Place as the chief Trading City of the Arabians (b); and it's Inhabitants must necessarily have made a considerable Figure, since Strabo has placed them in the List of the four Nations which were intermixed with the Calosyrians, and the Phoenicians, the two principal People, according to him, which possessed Syria (i). Stephanus Byzantinus pretends, that the Founder of Azotus was one of those Fugitives who came from the Red-Sea into Palestine, and that he gave the Name of his Wife to the City which he built; which name signified a She-Goat. Mr Bochart has rejected all this (k). St Jerom says, That, in his time, Azotus was still a considerable Town [C].

- were not conquered by Joshua. God himself, when he represented that This Conqueror was too old to finish That War, places these same five Governments among the Countries, that remained to be conquered (2). This discovers another Mistake of Moreri: Joshua, says he, subdued it first to the Hebrews, towards the Two thousand five hundred and eighty sixth Year of the World, and it was afterwards one of the five Satrapies of the Philistines. Was it not to before Joshua's Time, by the Testimony of God himself? [B] Was found at Azotus (3). Moreri pretends, it was in This City, that St Philip was taken away. If he had read the eighth Chapter of the Acts, which he quotes, he would not have ventured to have said so.

[C] St Jerom says, that, in his Time, Azotus was still a considerable Town (4). These are his Words, Usque hodie infigne oppidum Palestine. A considerable Town in Palestine to this Day. Mr Bau- drand will have it, that having been anciently an Episcopal City, under the Archbishopric of Caesarea, it became afterwards a mere Municipium in St Jerom's Time. Olim Episcopalis sub Archiepiscopo Caesariensi, postea municipium tempore S. Hieronymi (5). He must excuse my saying, that this Change was certainly the very Reverse. For what could have ruined the Bishopric of Azotus, between the Time it's of Erection and the Age of St Jerom?

(4) Hieronymus de Locis Historicis.

(5) Bau-drand Lexicon Geograph.

B.

ABELOT, Chaplain to the Duke of Montpensier, distinguished himself so much by his Cruelty, during the Civil Wars of France, under Charles IX, that he has acquired a very considerable place in History. It ought not, therefore, to be thought strange, that I should bestow on him this Article. He was a Franciscan Friar, who left the Monastery to follow "the Army, out of his implacable Hatred

"to the Calvinists (a). He had so little Regard to his Character and Profession, that instead of saving the Lives of those whom the Fortune of War reduced to the Mercy of Montpensier, that he earnestly solicited him to put them to death; and could not endure that any of them should be pardoned [A]. This Thirst after the Blood of the Calvinists, which the two first Wars could not allay, grew more raging in the third, when the Prince's (b) Soldiers being informed, that Babelot had imprudently shut himself up in Champigni (c), gave such a furious Assault to that place that they took it (d). The pleasure of finding themselves Masters of the Person whom they looked upon as their Executioner, made them more human to the Inhabitants of Champigni. Those they pardoned, and discharged all their Revenge on Babelot. They hanged him on an extraordinary high Gibbet (e) [B]; and if they gave him time to prepare himself for Death, it was only to have leisure to reproach him for his Cruelty. The Vengeance which the Duke of Montpensier, who loved him, took for his Execution on the Calvinists, when Chance, or Weakness, put any of them into his Hands, caused for some Weeks an unfair War (f) between the two Parties. The Soldiers of Brissac cut the Throats of the Garrison of Mirebeau, though they had capitulated in due Form; and d'Andelot treated that of St Florent in the same manner." Here was a Man altogether destined for the Destruction of the Huguenots, since, even after his very Death, he occasioned the Slaughter of many of them. Brantome believed him guilty

[A] He earnestly solicited the Death of the Calvinists, and could not endure that any of them should be pardoned.] Brantome deserves to be heard.

"When they brought him, (says he (1), speaking of the Duke of Montpensier) any Prisoners, if it was a Man, he only said to him, at first sight, My Friend, you are a Huguenot, I recommend you to Monsieur Babelot. This Monsieur Babelot was a learned Franciscan Friar, who governed him very him very peaceably, and never stirred from him; to whom the Prisoner was no sooner brought, but, after a short Examination, he was immediately condemned to death, and executed."

[B] He was hanged on an extraordinary high Gibbet.] This puts me in Mind of what Galba did to a Man, who endeavoured to save himself from Death, by pleading his Right of a Roman Citizen; he caused him to be fastened to a Cross, very well whitened, and much higher than the rest: This was to honour the Quality of the Criminal, and give him a little Comfort; but all this might rather look like Mockery. "Tutorem quod pupillum cui substitutus hæres erat veneno necasset cruce affecit, implorantique leges & civem Romanum se testificant, quasi solatio & honore alioque poenam levaturus, mutari, multoque præter cæteras aliore & dealbata statui crucem iussit (2). — A Guardian, who had who had poisoned his Ward, whose Heir he was, being condemned to be crucified, and pleading the Privileges of a Citizen of Rome, to alleviate and make his Punishment more honourable, he ordered him a Cross painted white, and much bigger than the rest." I do not know what were the Motives to Those, who made choice of a more exalted Gibbet for the Monk Babelot; perhaps they designed only to excite a greater Attention to the Fantasticalness of the Characters of That Man, without any Allusion, or Regard to the Practice of Antiquity. See Justin (3) concerning Maleus, a General disgraced by the Carthaginians, qui filium cum ornatu suo, in altissimam crucem in conspectu urbis suffigi iussit; — who commanded his Son to be hanged, in his finest Dress, on an exceeding high Cross, in the full View of the City; and Silius Italicus (4), concerning Regulus:

----- Vidi cum robore pendens
Italiam cruce sublimis spectaret ab altis.

High from th' exalted Cross he saw, unmoved,
His Country, he so faithfully had loved.

Haman, in the Book of Esther, had prepared, for Mordecai, a Gibbet fifty Cubits high. Sometimes the excessive Height of the Gibbet, has been intended to expose the Sufferer to the View of a greater Multitude of People. See the Remark [C] of the Article OTHO III. I shall observe, by the way, that Those, who compare This Cross of Galba to That which Verres ordered for Gavins (5), are not exact; for all that was remarkable in the latter was, that it was not erected in the Place where the Inhabitants of Messina used to crucify Malefactors, but on That Side, which looked towards Italy. It was thus Verres chose to insult over the Sufferer, who declared himself a Roman Citizen; He shall look, said he, from the Top of his Cross, towards Italy, and towards his House. "Quid attinuit cum Martini more atque instituto suo crucem fixissent post urbem in via Pompeja, te jubere in ea parte hære quæ ad fretum spectaret, & hoc addere quod negare nullo modo potes, quod omnibus audientibus dixisti palam, te idcirco illum locum deligere, ut ille qui se civem Romanum esse diceret, ex cruce Italiam cernere ac domum suam prospicere posset. ----- What did it avail, when the Custom of the Messinians was to crucify their Malefactors behind their City, in the Pompeian Way, for you to command the Cross to be erected on That Side next the Sea, and to add, what you cannot possibly deny, what you declared openly before all the People, that you therefore chose That Place, that he, who called himself a Citizen of Rome, might, from his Cross, behold Italy, and cast a Look towards his House." It is this last Circumstance which Cicero has chiefly insisted upon (6); though Lactantius, who had no occasion for That Particular in the Subject he was treating on, makes him only consider the Indignity of That Punishment in general (7).

(c) A Town in Poitou, which belonged to the Duke of Montpensier.

(d) In 1568.

(e) It is a great chance, if his Fraternity have not placed him in the number of their Martyrs.

(f) That is, They gave no more Quarter.

(a) I only mean to be the Words of Varillas, History of Charles IX. Tom. 2, page 147.

(b) He means the Prince of Condé, Chief of the Protestants.

(1) Brant. Memoires, Tom. 3, p. 281.

(2) Suet. in Galba, c. 9.

(3) Justin, lib. 18, cap. 7.

(4) Silius Italicus, l. 2, vers. 343.

(5) Torren-tius has done it; see his Comment. in Sueton. Galb. c. 9.

TORRENTIUS has mistaken the Meaning of a Passage in Cicero.

(6) Cicero, in Verr. 7.

(7) Lact. Institut. Divin. lib. 4, c. 18.

Guilty of another sort of Crime, that is, of inspiring his Master with the Brutality of caufing Women to be ravished [C].

[C] Brantome believes him guilty ----- of advising the Brutality of caufing Women to be ravished.] The Duke of Montpensier used to recommend his Prisoners to his Guidon, Viro bene vasato et bene nutrito, --- A Man extremely well hung and provided. Brantome describes this very freely, and adds as follows: "This is the Punishment of Those poor Huguenot Ladies, invented by Monsieur de Montpensier, which I am apt to believe might be taken, by Monsieur Babelot, from Nicephorus (8), where he says, that the Emperor Theodosius took away, and abolished, a Custom, long used in Rome, that is, if any Woman was taken in Adultery, the Romans did not punish her by preventing the Repetition of her Crime, but by the greatest Provocations of her Lust; for they shut the Criminal

" up in a narrow Lodge, and then suffered her " impudently to take her Fill of Letchery with every Body that came, the most nasty and filthy. The " Manner was for those lewd and whoring Fellows " to be furnished with certain little Bells, all the " Time they were in company with the Lady, " which, by their tinkling, and ringing, might " not only discover what they were doing, to Those " who were passing by, or listening, but also signify, that This Punishment was accompanied with " Shame and Ignominy. What Ignominy! which " they cared much for! Truly this was a very abominable Custom which That wise Emperor abolished, as the Historian Nicephorus relates: in whom " possibly Monsieur Babelot found it, and caused it " to be copied by this brave Guidon (9)."

(8) He had better have quoted Socrates, l. 5. cap. 18.

(9) Brant. Memoires, Tom. 3. p. 232, 233.

B A B Y L A S, one of the most celebrated Martyrs of the ancient Church, was made Bishop of Antioch in the III^d Century, under the Emperor Gordian (a). He governed his Church as a good and holy Prelate ought to do, and after having worthily discharged his Function about Thirteen Years, he obtained the Crown of Martyrdom towards the Year 251, during the Persecution of Decius. Some say, he was actually put to Death for the Christian Faith (b); and others say that he died in Prison (c). All agree, he desired to be buried with his Chains (d). It is pretended, that his Relics filled one of Apollo's Oracles. St Chrysostom has more than once displayed all his Eloquence to celebrate the Memory of St Babylas: It is pity he was not sufficiently informed of the Facts which he advanced. He supposes that this Martyr was put to Death for denying a Criminal Emperor an Entrance into the Church [A]; and he speaks of that Emperor's Crime like one who had but little consulted History [B]. Neither did he so much as know what was said of That Prince's

(a) Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. 6. cap. 29.

(b) Chrysost. Tom. 1. p. 641, 669.

(c) Martyrolog. Romanum ad diem 24 Jan. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. 6. cap. 39.

(d) Chrysost. Tom. 1. pag. 669. & Martyrolog. Romanum ad diem 24 Jan.

[A] St Chrysostom ----- supposes that this Martyr was put to Death, for denying a criminal Emperor an Entrance into the Church.] It is certain, that Babylas died in the Reign of the Emperor Decius; and therefore, if St Chrysostom's Account were true, it must have been Decius that was excluded from entering into the Church; but it does not appear, that Decius was ever at Antioch in the whole Time of his Reign. Baronius advances, without proof, that Decius went into Syria, in the Year 253, to make War against the Persians, and that it was then that Babylas would not suffer his Church to be prophaned by the Presence of such an Emperor (1). This neither agrees with Chronology nor History, nor with the Prudence of the Bishop of Antioch. The best Chronologists place the Death of Decius in the Year 251 (2). No good Historian says that Decius was in the East, to make War with the Persians. It is true, the Acts of St Laurence (3) affirm, that This Emperor went to make War against the Persians, and that he took from them the Country of Babylon, Assyria, all Persia, Hircania, and even Baetiana, and that he died at Rome, being possessed with a Devil a little after the Martyrdom of St Laurence (4); but those Acts are without Authority, and full of Faults (5). Father Naris does not scruple to say, that all That War of Persia is a mere Fable (6). With regard to the Prudence of St Babylas, we may say, that it would not have suffered him to resist a Pagan Emperor. It was not agreeable to the Conduct of the Church, for St Babylas to attempt binding him from coming into it, if he had come thither, as a Pagan, to commit some Violence; for the Church had not, nor exercised, any Power over any, but those that were of the Number of her Children, and she patiently suffered the Insults of Persecutors. Thus speaks the Author of the Life of Tertullian, and of Origen (7). M de Tillemont confirms that Remark. Upon those Occasions, says he (8), the Church defended herself only with Prayers, and with a peaceable and humble Patience, with which she suffered the Insults of Persecutors. We find, in a Sermon, ascribed to St Chrysostom, that St Roman of Antioch opposed a Pagan Governor from entering into the Church; but it is a very extraordinary Thing, and the Fact is by no means certain. He observes also, that all the Terms, which St Chrysostom makes use of, shew, that the Prince, whom St Babylas opposed, was a Christian. So that it cannot be true, that this holy Man refused Decius, and yet he died under the Empire of Decius: St Chrysostom, therefore, must be allowed to have fallen into a Mistake, in saying, That St Babylas suffered Death for having denied the Entrance of his Church to an Emperor.

[B] — and he speaks of that Emperor's Crime, like one who had but little consulted History.] He relates, that a certain People being in War with This Emperor, desired to make an end of it, and to confirm the Peace by all the strongest and most inviolable Ties that were known among Men; that the Agreement was made and confirmed by Oath on both sides; that those People being willing to shew their Enemies that they acted sincerely, persuaded their King to give his own Son as an Hostage to the Prince with whom they had concluded the Peace; that what followed made it appear, that instead of being deposited, as they intended, in the Hands of a Friend, he was put into the Mouth of a Lion; since that Prince, having no regard either to the Youth of the Son of his Allie, or to the inviolable Sanctity of the Oath which he had taken, or to that all-seeing Eye of the Divine Justice for the punishing of Crimes — with his own Hand, cut the Throat of him whom he ought to have protected as a sacred Depositum, and as the indissoluble Tie of the Alliance (9). This, says St Chrysostom, was the Crime of That Prince, whom St Babylas treated in the following manner. " That " great Prelate, on this occasion, perfectly imitated the " Zeal of Elias, and of St Job; for he did not consider, that he was then to resist not only a Prince, or a common King, but him that was Master of a " great Part of the Earth, who had a very powerful " Army, and whom all things seemed to conspire to " make dreadful to him. He was not dazzled with " all this outward Splendor — but that very Splendor serving only to represent to him, in the same " Moment, the Supreme Majesty of that King whose " Minister he was — he slept boldly to that Criminal Prince, in the midst of his Guards, Rapt him " with his Hand against his Breast, represented his " Crime to him, and forbade him, in the Name of " God, from entering into the Assembly of the Faithful (10). " It is needless to observe, that St Chrysostom uses the most lively and pathetic Figures of his Rhetoric, in the Relation of these Facts (11); one may easily think so, that knows (and who is ignorant of it?) he was a great Preacher, and spoke to a People full of Respect and Zeal for the Name of St Babylas (12). But is he not to be pitied for having employed

(1) Baron. Annal. ad Ann. 253. n. 128.

(2) Calvinus, Petavius, Pag. 1, &c.

(3) See Tillemont, Tom. 3. p. 60.

(4) This Saint did not die till the Year 258. Tillem. ib.

(5) Id. ib.

(6) Noris, de Epoch. Syro-Maced. p. 203. cited by Tillemont, ib.

(7) Printed at Paris, in 1675, see there, pag. 642.

(8) Tillemont, Tom. 3. pag. 821.

(9) Chrysost. Tom. 1. Orat. 48. p. 547. a. (10) Id. (11) Id. (12) Id.

(9) See the Lives of Tertullian and Origen, pag. 632.

(10) Ibid. pag. 636.

(11) Erasmus advises the reading this Homily in the College, as a more perfect Pattern for the Scholars than Lyfian, Libanius, &c. See the Letter which he wrote to the Head of a College of Louvain; it is the 24th of the 28th Book, pag. 1705.

(12) To be the People of Antioch. St Babylas had been Bishop of that City, employed Prince's Submission to the severe Discipline of St Babylas [C]. We may point out the general Grounds of some of his Mistakes [D]. All this will be treated of in the Remarks, employed so many Ornaments, and so powerfully exerted his Imagination and Lungs, on such Falsties? For what can be more chimerical, than to suppose People, who were Enemies to the Romans, should persuade their King to deliver his Son for an Hostage into the Hands of their Emperor? If any People did this, without doubt they were the Perfians. But it is very certain they did nothing like it, during the Episcopacy of St Babylas. I question very much whether any Roman Emperor ever killed, with his own Hand, a young Prince, delivered to him as an Hostage, after the Conclusion a Peace: But it is absolutely false, that one of the Emperors, under whom St Babylas enjoyed the Bishoprick of Antioch, was ever guilty of so barbarous a Perfidy. I do not question, in the least, but that St Chrysostom erred very innocently; because he did not only affirm those Errors in the Pulpit, but also in a Piece he wrote against the Gentiles (13). If he could promise himself that his Auditors would forgive him for insisting upon a false and pious Tradition, he could not have expected the same Favour from the Enemies of the Christian Name. He therefore believed himself, that what he asserted was true.

[C] St Chrysostom did not know what was said of that Prince's Submission to the severe Discipline of St Babylas.] St Chrysostom has supposed, that St Babylas had to do with a Monarch, who punished with Death the holy Resistance that was made against his entering into the Church. The Falsity of this Fact has been sufficiently detected, by shewing that St Babylas died in the Reign of Decius, and that Decius had not met with any Resistance at the Door of the Church of Antioch. Here is another Proof of the same Falstiy. The Predecessor of Decius was Philip: And it was to him that St Babylas is thought to have refused the Entrance of his Church, nor considering him as an Emperor, but as a Christian, who ought to submit to the Rules of Discipline and Penance. Now it is pretended, that This Emperor submitted to Those Laws, and that he behaved himself towards the Prelate of Antioch, much in the same manner as Theodosius has since done towards St Ambrose at Milan. Eusebius relates, That the Emperor Philip was desirous to assist at the public Prayers on Easter-Eve; but that the Bishop would not suffer him to come into the Church, before he had obliged him to confess his Sins, and place himself among the Penitents; which the Emperor performed with all the Marks of a sincere Piety, and Fear of God (14). Eusebius relates this only on a meer Hear-say, and neither names the Place of this great Event, nor the Prelate, who had the Honour of it. It is very strange that such things should have been so confidently known. We even find some very learned Men, who will not allow the Emperor Philip to have been a Christian. But however it be, we must not separate the Courage of Babylas, and the Submission of Philip, as St Chrysostom has done: they must either be both received, or both rejected. There are some Historians that speak of it with greater exactness than Eusebius. The Chronicle of Alexandria observes, that the Emperor was condemned to do Penance, as well as the Emperor her Husband: It adds, that St Babylas made use of this Severity, because Philip had killed the Emperor Gordian's Son (15). Note, that Erasmus, deceived by St Chrysostom, remarks the great Difference, as to the Success, between the Courage of St Babylas, and that St Ambrose. "Babylæ, says be (16), parum feliciter cessit quod Imperatorem impie cædæ funestum templo prohibuit; imo feliciter cessit ipsi qui præfatis auctoritatem suâ morte confirmavit. At Ambrosio cessit felicius, qui summa constantia suam tuens auctoritatem, ipsum etiam Cæsarem Christo lucrî fecit. — Babylas had but "ill Fortune in denying his Church to an Emperor, "polluted with Blood, or rather had good Fortune in "confirming his Episcopal Authority by his Death. "But Ambrose had better Fortune, in not only maintaining his Authority, with the greatest firmness, but also bringing over the Emperor to Christ." And in another place: "Ambrosius Episcopus Mediolanensis ausus est Theodosium Cæsarem, ob crudelem ac præcipitatum in Theodosianenses sententiam,

"à templi limine secludere, postque sævas objuraciones, post indicatam satisfactionem in pœnitentium classem relegare — Tentavit idem Babylas Antiochenus Episcopus adversus regem innocens homicidio pollutum, & interfectus est (17). — Am-brose, Bishop of Milan, had the Courage to shut the Church Door against the Emperor Theodosius, for his cruel, and bloody, Sentence against the People of Theſſalonica, and after severely reproaching him, and enjoining him a suitable Atonement, to place him among the rest of the Penitents — Babylas, Bishop of Antioch, attempted the same Thing against an Emperor guilty of Murder, but lost his Life by it."

[D] We may point out the general Grounds of some of his Mistakes.] We have just now seen that it was said, St Babylas grounded his Conduct on Philip's perfidious Murder. The Emperor Gordian, under whom he was Prefect of the Prætorium, had intrusted him with his Son: after Gordian was dead, Philip designing to reign in his stead, killed the young Prince committed to his Care. St Babylas knowing him guilty of such an execrable Murder, would not admit him into the Church: Decius revenged the Affront put upon Philip; and put Babylas to Death for it. This we find in the Chronicle of Alexandria, as it had been related by Leontius, Bishop of Antioch, in the Year 348. He did not perfectly understand Philip's Conduct, but came much nearer the Truth than St Chrysostom. The Emperor Gordian, under whom Philip was Prefect of the Prætorium, had no Child to trust with any Body, for he had none at all. So that Leontius must quite mistake the matter, in saying that Philip killed the Son, in order to succeed That deſeated Emperor. The Truth of the Fact is this: Philip, taking the Advantage of the Emperor Gordian's Youth, caballed in such manner that he caused himself to be declared his Colleague and Guardian. The Factions were revived, that of Gordian was worsted: Philip caused him to be deposed, and afterwards to be killed (18). The Misrepresentations of this Fact increased in time. Leontius said, that Philip killed the Son of his Emperor, the same Son of whom That Emperor had committed to his Care. This is already one step out of the way; and a direct departing from the Truth. St Chrysostom affirms, that Philip killed the Son of a Prince, with whom he had concluded a Treaty of Peace, the same Son this Prince had deposited, as a Pledge of his Friendship, and of his sincere Desire, to live in perfect Harmony with him. This is a second false Step; and is going a great way towards the Mistake of Leontius. This last Author says, that Decius caused Babylas to be put to Death, to punish his Insolence towards Philip. Those who knew the Aversion that Decius had for Philip, such an Aversion as was believed to have been the Cause of Decius's persecuting the Christians, found this Assertion of Leontius to be very absurd. They corrected it, therefore, by supposing, that Philip himself caused St Babylas to be put to Death (19); thus have they corrected one Fault with another, and unhappily deceived St Chrysostom. They have disappointed him of some Reflexions, which he might have had an Opportunity of setting off with the Ornaments of his Eloquence, to repel the Insults of the Pagans, and display the Glory of the Evangelical Ministry. The Humiliation of an Emperor, at the word of a Bishop, would have supplied St Chrysostom with some fine Thoughts; it is pity he did not know it. See how he glories in the Resistance of St Babylas: "Whereas, says be (20), the Priests of the false Deities are more Slaves to the Emperors, than to their Gods, and attend their Worship only for fear of those Princes, to whom the Devils are also indebted for the Honour and Adoration paid them by Men; on the contrary, this great Bishop of Antioch, has demonstrated, by punishing the Emperor himself, in a manner very sensible to a reasonable Man, and as much as he was permitted to do, according to the Extent of the Power of the Church, that the Priests of the Religion of Jesus Christ, are Slaves to no Body on Earth; and that they ought to be so jealous of that holy Ex-

(17) Idem, Epist. 60. lib. 25, pag. 1303.

(18) Cyprianus in the Life of Gordian.

(19) See Tilleront, Tom. 3. p. 822.

(20) Contra Gentiles, de S. Babyl. O. per. Tom. 1. p. 664, 665, cited in the Lives of Tertullian and Origen, pag. 633.

(13) St Chrysost. Homily on St Babylas, pag. 641, vol. 1. allô contra Gentil. and on St Babylas, pag. 647, 655, &c. cited in the Life of Tertullian and Origen, pag. 633.

(14) Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. 6, c. 34.

(15) Chron. Alexandr. pag. 630, cited by Tillermont, Tom. 3. pag. 822.

(16) Erasmus, Epist. 3. lib. 28. pag. 2386.

Remarks, as also the Request which it is pretended, Apollo made to the Emperor Julian, concerning the Relics of St Babylas [E]. This Martyr has the Honour of having obtained three great Victories over the Pagan Emperors, two in his Lifetime, and the third after his Death (e). The First is, the Advantage he gained over Pbilip, by obliging him to keep without the Church in the Condition of a Penitent: The Second is, That he had over the Persecutor Decius, when he chose to prepare himself to suffer any thing for the Faith, rather than to do any thing unbecoming his Episcopal Function: The Third is, That which his Ashes obtained, over the Oracle of Apollo near Antioch (f). Mr Chevreau has not been very exact in speaking of the Martyrdom of St Babylas [F]. We shall examine This more particularly below.

(e) See the Lives of Tertullian and of Origen, p. 757.

(f) See Remark [E].

"altation, which God has allotted them, as the true Characteristic of their Dignity, that they must be ready to lavish holily their Lives, rather than to suffer any Diminution of it. This very Example, adds he, by confounding the Pride of the Pagans, increased the Piety of the Faithful, who learnt, from the Conduct of their Pastor, to fear God more than Man; and wholly stop the Mouths of those who durst, with an extreme Assurance, maintain, that there was no true Courage among the Christians, but that every thing among them was false and counterfeit, and only covered with fair Appearances."

[E] It is pretended, that Apollo made a Request to the Emperor Julian — concerning the Relics of St Babylas. [There was, near Antioch, a Temple and an Oracle of Apollo, in a Place called Daphne. Here Superstition and Debauchery strove which should outdo each other. It was the Rendezvous of Lovers, and their Mistresses: others went thither to pay their Devotions; and, in all probability, many pursued both those Ends, at one and the same Time. Galus, the Brother of Julian the Apostate, was no sooner declared Cæsar, but, to put a stop to this double Disorder, he built a Church in the place, and ordered the Tomb of Babylas to be brought thither. It is said, that, upon this, Apollo returned no more Answers. The Tomb of this Martyr was the Cause of it, and not the Interruption of the Sacrifices: For, upon receiving the Sacrifices, in the Reign of Julian, the Oracle still continued silent; and when Julian went himself to consult it, he was told, that the dead Bodies, which incumbered that Place, shut the Mouth of the Oracle. The Emperor applied this only to St Babylas's Tomb, and therefore ordered it to be taken away. The Christians of Antioch brought it into the City. There was a Procession of Persons of all Ages, and both Sexes, who sung a Song of Triumph all the way (21), repeating, for the Chorus of their Song, the Confusion of those who adore Idols, from Psalms XCVII. Ἐξήρχον δὲ τῶν ἑλλήνων τοὺς ἄλλους, οἱ τῶν ἀειδόντων, καὶ συνεπῆχεν τὸ πλῆθος ἐν συμφωνίᾳ καὶ ταύτην τὴν ῥῆσιν ἐπῄθον ἡσυχάζοντες πάντες οἱ περὶκονῆτες τοὺς ἄλλους οἱ ἑκαστὸν αὐτοῖς τὰς εἰδώλους (22). Those who were skillful in singing, presided in the Song, and the People answered, in Chorus, and repeated this Verse, "Confounded are all

(21) It was about 40 Stadia, that is 5000 Paces.

(22) Sozomen Hist. Eccles. lib. 5. cap. 20.

"they who worship graven Images, and glory in "Idols." We might conclude, a fortiori, from this History, that the Birth of Jesus Christ imposed Silence on all the Oracles of Paganism; if we did not otherwise find, from the Confession of Sozomen, that this Oracle of Apollo gave Answers till the Empire of Constantius, in whose Time Galus obtained the Dignity of Cæsar. The Objection seems yet stronger against Those who do not acknowledge any diabolical Operation, in the Oracles of the Pagans. But see what Mr Van Dale answers: He supposes, that the Priests of Apollo, being unwilling to be so nearly observed by the Christians, who came thronging to Babylas's Tomb, invented an Answer which might oblige the Emperor to take away the Tomb of That Martyr. Those Priests feared nothing so much as the Eyes of the incredulous, and concluded, they should never be able to hide their cunning Practices from People who would be so curious to discover them, as the Christians. Perhaps, also, the blind Superstition of these Priests persuaded them, that it would be a very religious Act, to get removed, from the Neighbourhood of their Temple, a Tomb of a Christian Martyr, so much revered by the Enemies of their Gods. "Christiani, quibus repleta erat Antiochia, alique e"judem religionis aliunde advenientes, visitabant quotidie sepulchra Martyrum, atque inprimis quidem Babylæ. Sub quo prætextu dum loca illa ita frequentarent, cum subreperent etiam huic Oraculo oculis emissit omnia perlustrarent, ut sic detegerent imposturas ac præstigias ibi exercitas, neque id ferrent ea tempora, ut vi expellere eos inde possent Antifites: illi sub prætextu à mortuis purgandi locum Dis sacratum, cum Babyla alique, Christianos inde removere nitentur. Nihil enim magis aut citius detegere valebat Antifistum ejusmodi imposturas, quam continuus concursus publicæ Panegyres, ob ludos aut festa publica ibi celebranda: si quarumcunque sectarum Philosophis, eorumve sequacibus ad illa pateret accessus (23). — The Christians, with whom Antioch abounded, and those of the same Religion, coming thither, from other Places, daily visited the Tomb of the Martyrs, and, above all, That of St Babylas. By which means, as they had an Opportunity of observing the Oracle, and of prying into every Thing which passed, in order to detect the Frauds and Impostures there carried on, the Priests not having Power enough, in those Times, to drive them from thence by Force, endeavoured to get them removed, with Babylas, and others, under the Pretence of clearing, from the Pollution of dead Bodies, a Place, which was consecrated to their Gods. For the Jugglings of the Priests were like to be as readily, and as fully, detected by these continual Assemblies, and public Commemorations, on account of celebrating there Rejoicings and Festival Solemnities; as if they were laid open to the strictest Examination of all the several Sects of Philosophers."

(23) Van Dale, de Oraculis, p. 442. See the Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres for March 1684, pag. 15, 16.

[F] Mr Chevreau has not been very exact in speaking of the Martyrdom of St Babylas. See what he says of it: "Babylas, Bishop of Antioch, suffered Martyrdom, with his three Children, for not permitting Numerian to see the Ceremonies of the Christians, adding, That a Man polluted with Blood, and with the Sacrifices of Idols, could not enter into the Church; or, as Suidas says, That he would not suffer the Wolf to enter into the Steel-fold of the Lord (24)." I. Babylas had no Children; He should therefore have said, that three Brothers of his, who were yet Children, or very young, suffered Martyrdom with him (25). II. There is above thirty Years between the Death of Babylas, and the Reign of Numerian. III. The ancient Writers do not ascribe to That Martyr Mr Chevreau's Expressions. We must confess, that the Undertaking of a General History is very difficult Matter. Mr Chevreau was a learned Man; he knew the Defects of those who went before him in That Design; he took a long time for his Work; and yet — As he is yet alive (26), and, notwithstanding his Age, enjoys a perfect Health of Body and Mind; therefore I do not doubt but he will publish a new Edition, yet more curious than the preceding (27).

(24) Chevreau's Hist. of the World, lib. 4. cap. 4, pag. 400, of Vol. 2. Edit. of Holland, 1687.

(25) Lives of Tertullian and Origen, pag. 753.

(26) This was wrote in 1694.

(27) He has actually published a new Edition of the Hague, in the Year 1698, with several Additions and Corrections, but has altered nothing in this Passage concerning Babylas.

I hoped that Mr Chevreau could not have taken amiss those little Critical Notes we have just now seen; and, as I had all the Esteem for him, which is due to his great Merit, I would have suppressed them, if I had thought they would have made him uneasy: But I thought that he was above being concerned at so trifling a Matter. I fancied he would have applied to himself what I said in my first Preface, and he was certainly one of those Authors, who need not have been alarmed at little Losses (28). I was therefore surprized, at his unexpected Repentment, and heartily troubled for having made him so. There are some Persons of great Note, who can be my Witnesses, that when I wished him a yet longer Life than he had already enjoyed (29), I did it, not only

(28) See the Specimen of this Dictionary, towards the End of the sixth Paragraph.

(29) He died Febr. 15, 1701, aged 87 Years and some Months. I See the Journal of Trevoux for March and Apr. 1701, pag. 241. Dutch Edition.

only in regard to his being the Ornament of his Age, but also out of the Desire I had, that he might find, in this second Edition, the greatness of my Respect for him, and the Explanation of a thing, which had been expressed in an ambiguous manner. I am apt to think, that this Ambiguity was the chief Cause of his Discontent; he thought, that the pointed Line, and yet - - - had some Poison in it. 'Tis a Gap, which his own Imagination filled with disobliging Ideas; and I was desirous, he should know, that, according to my sincere meaning, That Hiatus was left only as a general Representation of the Impossibility of avoiding Faults, in a Work containing abundance of minute and particular things, even though an Author be ever so learned.

But, to come to the Point, Mr Chevreau himself acknowledges the Solidity of my first Remark; since he confesses (30), that it had been better to have put three Brothers, who were as yet Children, to take away all Equivocation, and that he ought to have explained himself more clearly, than several Authors, who expressed it so before him. As for the Expressions, which I said the ancient Authors did not ascribe to St Babylas, Mr Chevreau quotes Georgius Syncellus, and Paulus Diaconus (31); but can these Authors be called ancient, with respect to the time of the Martyr we now treat of? Did not they live towards the end of the VIIIth Century? Lastly, he quotes several Writers, most of them modern, who have said, that Babylas was slain by Numerian, and repeats these Words of Mr Tillemont (32): We must confess, that the History of St Babylas is embarrassed with many Difficulties, beyond our Capacity to surmount. I agree, that all this may serve to excuse Those, who are not exact in their account of the Martyrdom of St Babylas; but it will always be allowable to remark, where Care is not taken to chuse such Expressions, as are the most exact we can meet with.

I am very well satisfied, that Mr Chevreau has found Faults in my Book. Any one, who has not the fourth part of his Learning, may find a great many in it. If he had given some Examples of what he has said, in general, concerning those essential Faults against our Language, and concerning those mean, burlesque, obscure, and perplexed Expressions (33), I should think myself obliged either to dispute the Point, or submit to the Accutation; and I should very willingly do the latter, if I could be made sensible of the least Reason for it imaginable: But, since he has pointed out nothing, I may be allowed to take That part of his Book for general and loose Reflexions (34). He charges me, particularly, with a kind of Contradiction, about a Man, who had been, as he says, my Idol a long time (35). I am sure he would have omitted this, if he had seen how I have justified myself on that Point, in my Reflexions on a Paper, entitled, The Judgment of the Publick, &c. And, as for using Words, which, he says, nice Ears cannot endure (36), the Reader may see, in an Explication, at the end of this Book, what I have to answer to That: I should be glad to deserve all that he says, by way of retorting, to the Period, which ends with and yet - - - (37). And I should think myself very happy, if I could be excused, for this Reason, that it is impossible, or next to impossible, to avoid committing a great many Faults, in such a Work as this. I do not believe I should ever have engaged in this Dictionary, if I had foreseen, that all my Care to avoid Mistakes could not have secured me from making a great many, and very gross ones too.

To conclude, I must desire my Readers to consult the learned Work of Mr de Larroque (38), printed at Leyden, in the Year 1688, under the Title of Matthæi Larroquani Aversariorum Sacrorum Libris. See the 79th, and following Pages.

BABYLON. Moreri, and his Continuators, have collected so many things concerning this City, that, to make this Article of any reasonable length, I should be obliged to repeat most of their Observations: So that, to spare the Public the distaste of finding the same things in different Dictionaries, I shall confine myself here to a Fact, which they have not touched upon. I do not examine whether what they relate be exact as it ought to be. The Inhabitants of Babylon pretended, that their City was very ancient; they counted Four hundred seventy three Thousand Years from the first Observations of their Astrologers to the coming of Alexander, as Diodorus Siculus informs us (a). Others, keeping to a round number, say, that the Babylonians boasted of having preserved, in their Archives, the Observations, which their Astrologers had made on Nativities, for the space of Four hundred and seventy Thousand Years [A]. From hence we ought to correct a Passage of Pliny [B], which some Authors make use

[A] The Babylonians boasted of having preserved Observations, made by their Astrologers, — for the space of Four hundred and seventy thousand Years. We shall only quote two Passages out of Cicero. "Condemnamus etiam Babylonios, et eos qui e Caucasu cœli signa servantes, numeris & motibus stellarum cursus persequuntur. Condemnemos, inquam, hos aut stultitiam, aut vanitatem, aut imprudentiam, qui ccccclxxx. millia annorum, ut ipsi dicunt, monumentis comprehensa continent (1). — We must also despise the Babylonians, and others, who have made Observations of the Stars, from Mount Caucasus, and attempted to trace their Number and Motion: We must despise them, I say, either for their Ignorance, their Vanity, or their Inconsiderateness, in affirming, that their Records take in Four hundred and seventy Thousand Years." Let us see how he laughs at this in another Place. "Quod aiunt ccccclxxx. millia annorum in periclitandis experindique pueris quicunque essent nati, Babylonios poluisse fallunt. Si enim esset scitatum, non esset defuturum. Neminem autem habemus autorem qui aut fieri dicat, aut factum sciat (2). — It must be a wretched Mistake, to say, that the Babylonians employed Four hundred and seventy Thousand Years, in calculating the Nativities of all the Children, who happened then to be born. If this were true, they would certainly have continued the same Trade to this Day. But we have no good Author, who either affirms their practising it at present, or knows any thing of their having done so for that Space of Time past."

[B] From these Astronomical Observations of the Babylonians we ought to correct a Passage of Pliny. These are his Words; "Epigenes apud Babylonios 720 annorum observationes syderum cœlilibus late-ritiis inscriptas docet, gravis auctor imprimis: qui minimum, Berosus & Critodemus, 480 annorum. Ex quo apparet æternus litterarum usus (3). — Epigenes, an Author of great weight, tells us, that the Babylonians had Observations of the Stars, for Seven hundred and twenty Years, recorded on Bricks: Berosus and Critodemus, who make the least of it, say Four hundred and eighty Years." He had said, a little before, that he believed the Assyrian Letters had been perpetual, or that the Assyrians had always made use of Writing, Litteras semper arbitrator Assyrios fuisse (4). We ought, therefore, to look upon the Testimonies, he borrows from Epigenes and Berosus, concerning the Astronomical Observations, recorded by the Babylonians, as Proofs of his Opinions; for the Conclusion, he draws from those Testimonies, is the same with the Opinion he had laid down a little before: "Ex quo apparet, this is his Conclusion, æternus litterarum usus. — From whence it appears, that the Use of Letters has been perpetual." Now there is nothing so absurd as his Reasoning, if he is supposed to speak according to the present Readings of the Manuscripts and Editions of his Books. Epigenes, a credible Author, affirms, that the Observations of the Babylonian Astrologers comprehend Seven hundred and twenty Years. Those, who give them the least Extent, as Berosus and Critodemus, assign them Four hundred and eighty

(30) Cherreaus, Part. 2. pag. 321. Dutch Edition.

(31) Ibid. pag. 321.

(32) Ibid. p. 329, 330.

(33) Ibid. pag. 320.

(34) Compare this with the end of the Remark [C] of the Article ROY.

(35) Cherreaus, Part. 2. pag. 320.

(36) Ibid.

(37) Ibid. p. 330, 331.

(38) Daniel Larroquanus Matthæi filius.

(v) Cicero de Divinat. lib. 1. cap. 29.

(a) Id. lib. 2. cap. 46.

(a) Lib. 11. pag. 118. Edit. Rhodomanii.

(3) Plin. lib. 7. c. 56.

(4) Mr Perizonius believes it ought to be read Assyris. See his Dissertation Philologica de Originibus Babyloniciæ. They are some Theores which were maintained in the Month of April, 1654.

(b) Mr Perizonius: See Remark (B) Criticisms (8) and (9).

(c) In Lib. 2. de Calo, Com. 45, P. 123.

(d) M. rha-min in Ciro-
nic. p. 107.
Eup. 16. 6,
in 40.

(e) Berofus, Chaldeo-
rum Lib. 2.
and Joseph.
Lib. 1. contra Apion. pag.
104.

use of improperly, either to confute the antiquity of Babylon, or for other Purposes. This a learned Professor of Leyden has lately observed (b), and I wonder it has not been taken notice of sooner. Aristotle knew, without doubt, that the Babylonians boasted of having a Series of Astronomical Observations, comprehending a prodigious number of Centuries. He was desirous to inform himself of the Truth of This by means of Callisthenes, who was in Alexander's Retinue, but found a great mistake in the Account; for it is pretended, that Callisthenes assured him, that the Astronomical Observations, he had seen in Babylon, comprehended no more than 1903 Years. Simplicius reports This, and borrows it from Porphry (c). If Callisthenes has computed right, it must be agreed, that, after the Deluge, Men made very great haste to become Astrologers; for, according to the Hebrew Bible, there is but Two thousand Years to be found from the Flood to the Death of Alexander. There is reason to question what Simplicius reports; and it is remarkable, that all the ancient Authors, who have ascribed the building of Babylon to Semiramis, have no other Authority, than That of Ctesias, whose Histories abounded in Fables (d). And, therefore, we see, that Berosus very much blames the Greek Writers for affirming, that Semiramis built Babylon, and adorned it with most beautiful Structures (e). The Supplement to Moreri quotes Quintus Curtius, in relation to the Immodesty of the Babylonian Women. It may be added, that This Lewdness was very ancient. Jeremiab's Letter, inserted in the Book of eighty Years. Therefore the use of Letters has been perpetual, and I have reason to believe, that it has always been practised in Affrya. It is thus Pliny argues, in his Natural History, as we now have it: It is thus, I say, he argues, after having observed, that Cadmus brought the Use of Letters into Europe, and that the Invention of them, in Egypt, was said to have happened fifteen Years before the Reign of Phoroneus. A Fool, a drunken Man, or a Dotard, could scarce have been Author of such a Heap of Contradictions. It must, therefore, necessarily be supposed, that this Passage is not in it's original State: And it is greatly to be wondered, that a Thousand learned Critics should have examined these Words, without perceiving such an inconsistent piece of Logic in them, as might make them suspect, that the Passage was corrupted. Scaliger, Vossius, Sir John Marbham, and Mr Dodwell, have so little mistrusted it, that they have taken it for the Foundation of the Conclusions, which they would draw concerning the Age of Berosus (5), or against the Antiquity of Babylon (6), or for other Purposes (7). Father Hardouin has corrected part of this Passage; but it must not rectify Pliny's Reasoning; for, if this had been his principal Motive, he would have corrected all: It is Mr Perizonius (8), who has fully discovered the whole Matter, and proved the Corruption of the Text (9). He has demonstrated, that the Number of a Thousand must be added as well to the Account of Epigenes, as to That of Berosus; and then Pliny's Argument would stand thus; that, according to the Testimony of Epigenes, the Observations of the Babylonian Astrologers comprehended Seven hundred and twenty Thousand Years; and, according to the Testimony of those, who, like Berosus and Critodemus, give them the least extent, Four hundred and eighty Thousand Years. And Pliny is certainly in the right, upon the Supposition he makes, that these Testimonies are authentic, to conclude, that the beginning of the Affryan Letters is impossible to be traced. Now, when a thing is so ancient, that the Original of it is beyond finding out, we may, without any scruple, affirm it, as Pliny has done, to have been perpetual. But would any one venture to call it so, when the Proofs given of it's Antiquity leave it much later than several Things, whose Beginnings are known? This must have been Pliny's Case, had he wrote what we find in his Work at this Time. Consider well what he has said concerning Cadmus and Phoroneus.

Father Hardouin's Correction deserves a distinct Explanation. He mends Pliny's Text thus: "E diverso Epigenes apud Babylonios ccccclxx annorum "M. observationes siderum cœtilibus laterculis inscriptas docet — qui minimum, Berosus & Critodemus, cccxc annorum. — On the contrary, Epigenes tells us, that, amongst the Babylonians, there were celestial Observations for Four hundred and seventy Thousand Years, inscribed on Bricks. — Berosus and Critodemus, who make the least of it, say Four hundred and ninety Years." On one side, he puts Four hundred and seventy Thousand, instead of Seven hundred and twenty; and, on the other,

Four hundred and ninety, instead of Four hundred and eighty. He builds on Manuscripts, as to the last Correction, and on the Authority of Cicero, as to the first (10). It is true, he says, by the way, that the Passage itself, in Pliny, seems to require the first Correction. "Certè annorum millia locus ille postulare videtur, non annos (11). — Certainly "This Place requires the reading Thousands of Years, "instead of Years." This looks as if he was sensible, how bad a Reasoner Pliny is made by the common Reading. But, if a Thousand be added to the Four hundred and eighty of the common Reading, we fall into another Difficulty; for, then, Berosus allows Four hundred and eighty Thousand Years to the Observations of the Babylonian Astrologers; and yet we know, that, when he mentions the great Care of the Babylonians, in preserving the Memory of several natural and historical Matters, he speaks but of a Hundred and fifty Thousand Years. Βηροσός ἐν τῇ πρώτῃ τῶν Βαβυλωνιακῶν φησὶ γενέσθαι αὐτὸν καὶ Ἀλέξανδρον τὸν φιλιππεὺς τὴν ἡλικίαν, ἀναστρέφας δὲ πολλὸν ἐν Βαβυλῶνι φυλάσσεσθαι μὲτὰ πολλῆς ἐπιμελείας ἀπὸ ἐτῶν πεντήκοντα ἑκατὼν ἑκατομμύριον ἔτη. — Berosus, in his first Book concerning the Babylonians, says, he himself was born in the Time of Alexander, the Son of Philip; and that there were Inscriptions, preserved, with great Care, at Babylon, comprehending above a Hundred and fifty Thousand Years: And that these Inscriptions contained Accounts of the Heavens, and of the Sea, of the Originals of Things, of Kings, and their Transactions. It must be confessed, that this Passage equally proves these two things: The one, That the Number Four hundred and eighty, or Four hundred and ninety, ought to be struck out of Pliny's Text; The other, That Four hundred and eighty Thousand must not be put in the room of it, but rather a Hundred and fifty Thousand. And yet it might admit of some Cavil: It may be objected, that Berosus, being better informed of the Fact, found Four hundred and eighty Thousand Years, and inserted That Calculation in a Book, which Pliny followed. It might also be objected, that the Numbers, in the Passage quoted by Eusebius, have been corrupted. However it be, I should chuse to retain the Correction of Father Hardouin, only with the Alteration, as to Berosus and Critodemus, of an Hundred and fifty Thousand, instead of Four Hundred and ninety.

I shall observe, by the way, that Vossius has not been careful enough, in relating what concerns Berosus, in the Passage of Pliny, which is the Subject of this Remark. He pretends, that Pliny says, Berosus wrote the History of what had passed during the Space of Four hundred and eighty Years. I quote Vossius's own Words. "Plinius, Lib. vi, Hist. "Nat. Cap. lv, (He should have said Lib. vii, Cap. "lvi.) refert Berosum tradere memoriam quadringentorum annorum & octoginta (13). — Pliny reports, that Berosus has given a History of Four

(10) That is to say, on the basis Passages in the Treatise of Divination, quoted above, num. (1), and (2).

(11) Hardouin. in Plin. Tom. 2, pag. 134-157.

(12) Berosus, apud Alexandrum Polyhistor. citatum ab Euseb. in Chronico, pag. 5, 6. Edit. Scalig. 1658.

(13) Vossius de Histor. Grec. p. 86.

(-) Scaliger, ad Græcæ Eusebii, pag. 407. Vossius de Hist. Græcæ. apud Perizonium, in Origin. Babylon.

(6) Marbham, Secul. 17, pag. 4-4. Edit. Amstel. apud eundem.

(-) See Dodwell. Obervat. Cyprian. in Append. P. 37, 37.

(8) Formerly Professor at Francker. He is now Professor of Greek, History, and Epigenes, at Leyden, from the 1st Year 1693.

(9) See his De Antiquitat. Lib. 1. de Originibus Babylon.

of Baruch, touches something of it, but in an obscure manner, and wants a Commentary, taken out of Herodotus [C].

"hundred and eighty Years." Compare them with the Passage of Pliny, and you will find how wide they are from the Truth. Whom shall we trust?

[C] Jeremiah's Letter, concerning the Immediacy of the Babylonian Women, wants a Commentary, taken out of Herodotus. This is Jeremiah's Text:

"The Women also, with Cords about them, sitting in the Ways - - - but if any of them, drawn by some that passeth by, lie with him, she reproacheth her Fellow, that she was not thought as worthy as herself, nor her Cord broken (14)."

To understand this right, we must have recourse to Herodotus, who informs us, That there was a Law at Babylon, which obliged all the Women of the Country to seat themselves near the Temple of Venus, and there to wait for an Opportunity of lying with a Stranger (15). They were all forced to go through this Ceremony once in their Lives. The rich sat in their Coaches, and had a great number of Domestic to attend them: The others had only an Inclosure of Cords; that is, they formed certain Ranks, which were separated from each other with Cords (16), but in such a Manner, that there was Liberty to go in and out, that Strangers might pass freely in the Intervals, and make choice of her, who best suited their Taste. When they had made their Choice, they cast Money into her Lap, and led her aside, in order to enjoy her. They put up a Prayer for her to the Goddess of the Temple (17). These Women were not suffered to refuse any Stranger, nor the Money given them, how small soever was the Sum. They were obliged to follow the first Stranger, who threw them Money. Observe, that these Sums were appointed for Religious Uses. Γίνας γὰρ ἱερὰν τέρτο δὲ ἀργύρεον (18). This Money is held sacred.

After the Performance of the Act, they might return to their Houses; the Devotion, or Expiation, which the Goddess required, was accomplished.

Who can sufficiently bewail the monstrous Alliance, preferred by Paganism, between the Worship of the Gods, and the most filthy Passions? It might justly have been called The easy Devotion, if the Comedy had contained more Acts and more Scenes, and if there had not been a disadvantageous Mixture for the ugly; for three or four Years Patience was an hard Penance for one single Rencontre. Martin del Rio retracteth what he had said, on the Words I have quoted from the Book of Baruch. He thought they were to be understood of certain Ligatures practised to make themselves loved. See his Magical Disquisitions (21).

*Tam gratum mihi, quam ferunt puellæ
Perpici aureolum fuisse malum,
Quod zonam solvit diu ligatam* (20).

*Dear as the Golden Apple, in the Race,
Which check'd the flying Atalanta's Pace.
Nor sought she Gold, but seiz'd the specious Bait,
With Joy to end her tedious Virgin State.*

(14) The Book of Baruch in the Apocrypha, chap. 6.
(15) Herod. lib. 1, c. 199.
(16) I am forced to paraphrase a little, to make Herodotus the better understood, who has not been particular enough in his Explanation.
(17) This was Venus: the Babylonians called her Mylitta. Herod. lib. 1, cap. 199.
(18) Ibid.

(19) Ibid.
(20) Catul. Epigr. 2.

(21) Lib. 3, Part 1, Quest. 3, pag. 13.

BACHOVIVS (REINIER) was born at Cologne, in the Year 1544. You may find his Life, among those of the Civilians of Germany, in Melchior Adam. I shall not repeat what Moreri has taken from him: I will only give an account of the Persecutions, which Bachovivus suffered, at Leipsic, for his Calvinism. At first he was only suspected, and they were satisfied with keeping him out of all public Employments; but, the Times altering, he obtained the Office of a Senator, and afterwards, in the Year 1585, That of an Echevin, and, in three Years more, That of Consul. The Elector, Christian I, dying in the Year 1591, Bachovivus was urged to profess Lutheranism; and, because he would not, they compelled him to relinquish his Offices. He would not hearken to the advice given him to retire, though the danger of a Prison was represented to him; he thought his Flight would give his Enemies a Handle to pronounce, that he esteemed himself guilty: But, in the Year 1593, he was obliged to give way to popular Commotions, and leave Leipsic. He went first to Serveste, and, the Year after, into the Palatinate, having lost almost all his Effects. He met with a kind Protector in the Person of the Elector Palatine, and enjoyed several profitable and honourable Offices at Heidelberg till his Death, which happened the Twenty seventh of February 1614 (a). He published a Book, which discovered more of the Divine, than of the Civilian [A]. He left, among other Children, Reinier or Reinhard BACHOVIVS, whom he saw promoted, from the Professorship of Politics, to That of Civil Law, in the University of Heidelberg. This Son obtained a great Name among the Civilians of the XVIIth Century [B]. He was particularly remarkable

[A] He published a Book, which discovered more of the Divine, than of the Civilian. It was a sort of a Commentary on the famous Heidelberg Catechism. Melchior Adam speaks thus of it: "Propaganda evangelicæ studio edidit Catechesin Palatinæ, testimoniis Sacræ Scripturæ ac sententiis patrum, qui primis quingentis à Christo nato annis in Ecclesia Dei clauerunt, exornatam & illustratam, cum epitome vitæ eorumdem patrum, & methodica narratione de Conciliis, quorum Canones in illo Catechetico libello citantur (1). — Out of a sincere Desire for the Propagation of Evangelical Truth, he published the Catechism of the Palatinate, adorned, and illustrated, with the Testimonies of sacred Scripture, and Opinions of the Fathers, who were famous in the Church, for the first five Centuries after CHRIST, with an Epitome of the Lives of those Fathers, and a Methodical Account of the Councils, whose Canons are cited in That Catechism."

[B] Reinier or Reinhard Bachovivus — obtained a great Name among the Civilians. Conringius calls him, Disciplina juridicæ æternum decus (2). — The perpetual Ornament of the Civil Law. Vinnius says he is, subtilissimus Jurisconsultus, non tam suæ sententiæ adstrictor, quam destructor alienæ (3). — The most able Civilian, not so much in advancing Opinions of his own, as in overthrowing those of others. Another says, Eo in his, quæ ad solidam nostri juris interpretationem faciunt, acutiorem cix tradit prior ætas (4). — The former Age scarce produced a greater Interpreter of the Civil Law. Lastly, the Compliments of accuratissimus, subtilissimus, acutissimus, inexorabilis Censor (5). — The most accurate, most able, judicious, most severe Censor, are commonly given to him. The Elogy, Vinnius gives him,

(1) Ibid.

(2) Catul. Epigr. 2.

(3) Lib. 3, Part 1, Quest. 3, pag. 13.

(4) Taken from Melchior Adam, in the History of Civilians.

(5) Conringius, de autoritate juris publici, in Germaniâ apud Magistrum Eponym. p. 99. (3) Vinnius, cap. 11, de Pact. n. 9. apud Magistrum Eponym. p. 99. (4) Hahn. in Deic. Obiter. ad Wesenbeck. apud eundem. (5) Schurz, apud eundem.

(14) The Book of Baruch in the Apocrypha, chap. 6.

(15) Herod. lib. 1, c. 199.

(16) I am forced to paraphrase a little, to make Herodotus the better understood, who has not been particular enough in his Explanation.

(17) This was Venus: the Babylonians called her Mylitta. Herod. lib. 1, cap. 199.

(18) Ibid.

(1) Melch. Adam in vitis Juric. p. 472, 473.

(b) See Remark [B].

(c) His Name was Tabor, and he was esteemed a great Civilian.

remarkable for his skill in confuting, with great Subtlety, whatsoever he undertook to oppose (b). He was wavering on the Point of Religion; for he said, in confidence, to a Lutheran Professor (c), that, if he might be permitted to read private Lectures of the Civil Law at Strasbourg, he would leave his Professorship of Heidelberg, and remove to Strasbourg. He declared, that he detested the Doctrine of absolute Predestination, and that he believed the Corporeal Presence of JESUS CHRIST in the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, tho' he knew not the manner of it. The Person, to whom he discovered this Inclination, communicated it to the Magistrates of Strasbourg, who ordered him to be assured he should be welcome. Bachovius removed to that City, with his Library; but, not finding a maintenance there (d), he returned to Heidelberg, where his Friend found him under great Vexation and Sickness, in the Year 1629 (e).

(d) Vitæ præditiis de-stitutis religionem omisit. --- Being disappointed of a Livelihood he quitted that Religion. Prædictus in Mausoleo Taboris.

(e) Taken from Prædictus in Mausoleo Taboris.

agrees but with too many Persons: There are too many Writers, and Men of great Reasoning, who have had Success in proving their own Doctrine, but yet can entirely demolish That of others. Men, who engage in Disputes, are commonly stronger in the Offensive, than in the Defensive. See what an Electors of Cologne said concerning the Quarrel between the Cordeliers and Jacobins. Father Paul relates it. See the fourth Book of his History of the Council of Trent, Page 309 of Mr Amelot de la Houffaye's Translation.

BACON (ROGER) An English Franciscan, lived in the XIIIth Century. He was a great Astrologer, Chymist, and Mathematician. It was this, undoubtedly, which occasioned him to be suspected of Magic. There runs a Tradition among the English, that This Fryar made a Brazen Head, which answered all his Questions [A]. Selden rejects this as a childish Fable [B], and observes, that no Historian has mentioned it, and that Bale, who had defamed Roger Bacon, recanted, and honourably repaired That Injury. Francis Picus says, That he read, in one of Bacon's Books, "That a Man might become a Prophet, and fore-tell things to come by means of the Looking-glass, Almucbezi, composed according to the Rules of Perspective; provided he used it under a good Constellation, and first brought his Body into an even and temperate State by Chymistry (a)." This is agreeable to what John Picus Mirandulanus has maintained, That Bacon only busied himself with Natural Magic (b). This Fryar sent several Instruments, of his own Invention, to Pope Clement IV (c). Several of his Books have been published: Specula Mathematica & perspective, Speculum Alchemiæ, De mirabili Potestate Artis & Naturæ, Epistolæ cum Notis, &c. In all probability, he did not perform any Thing by compact with the Devil; but has only ascribed to Things a surprizing Efficacy, which they could not naturally have. Consequently, there is reason to say, that his Writings contain a great deal of Superstition [C]. He was very much infatuated with Judicial Astrology.

(a) Francis Picus, lib. 2. de Prædicatione, cap. 1. & lib. 7. cap. 7. cited by Naudé, Apology for Great Men, pag. 490.

(b) Joh. Picus in Prædict. Apolog. cited by Naudé, ibid.

(c) Naudé, ibid. p. 493.

[A] He is said to have made a brazen Head, which answered all his Questions. Mater remarks, That Roger Bacon is commonly introduced upon the Stage, in Comedies, as a great Magician, and that "the common Report is, that he, and his Fellow-Monk, Thomas Bungey, wrought seven Years to forge This Head, to know, from it, if there might not be some means to inclose all England with a thick Wall and Rampart? Upon which it gave them an Answer, which however they could not rightly understand, because, not expecting to receive it so speedily, they were taken up in other things, than listening to the Oracle (1)." These are popular Stories, which do not deserve to be confuted. The like are told of Albertus Magnus (2).

[B] Selden rejects this as a childish Fable. [These are his own Words: "Istiusmodi caput ex ære conflatum ab eruditissimo Rogero Bachone est in ore nostratis vulgi, sed non sine injuria in illius Mathesein, quam summam & à dæmonum præstigiis puram monstrant fallis illius opera quot nos legisse contigit, & quidquid adversus eum uti magum seu vexoçuaviv J. Balæus inscitia dicam, an in optimas artes malitia, editione centuriarum prima satis incogitantes effutierat, id bene monuit omne non modo retractavit, verum in ea quæ tali & tanto viro digna sunt postrema recognitione etiam prodigenter commutavit. Nec quod hanc vulgi famam adduxit, habent Annales nostri (3)."]

(1) Mater, Symbol. aureæ. Menfis, lib. 10. pag. 453, cited by Naudé, Apology for great Men, pag. 491.

(2) See, above, Remark [F], n. 2, of the Article ALBERTUS (MAGNUS).

(3) Selden de Diis Syris Syntagma, 1. cap. 2, pag. 38.

"gician, or Necromancer, he has, on better Advice, in his last Edition, not only retracted, but also wisely substituted, in its Place, what becomes the Character of so great a Man. Nor is there any Authority in our History for That common Report." John Dee, an English Philosopher and Mathematician, wrote an Apology for Roger Bacon. He mentions it in the Epistle dedicatory of his Propædæmata Apboristica de præstantioribus quibusdam naturæ virtutibus. See Naudé, in the Four hundred eighty eighth Page of his Apology for great Men.

[C] His Writings contain a great deal of Superstition. Martin del Rio, who, of all Men in the World, in these Matters, is least prodigal of his Absolution to Persons suspected, clears Roger Bacon of Magic, and is contented to make him only a superstitious Author. "Alchindus, says he (4), Rogerus Baconus, & Geber Arabs, multis scaten superstitionis; ideo vetitæ lectionis etiam hos putarim. --- Alchindus, Roger Bacon, and Geber, the Arabian, abound in Superstition, and therefore, in my Opinion, ought not to be read." John Wierus is not so favourable; for he puts Roger Bacon, Petrus Aponeusis, Anselmus Parmensis, Cicchus Aculus, and some others, in the same Class; whereas Martin del Rio treats the three last, I have named, as true Magicians, and puts Bacon only in the number of the Superstitious. "Ab hoc numero removeo, ut demoniacos magos, Picatricem Hispanum, Anselmum Parmensem, Cicchum Eculanum, Petrum de Abono, & Corn. Agrippam, & Paracelsum --- mines partim atheos, partim hereticos (5). --- I exclude from this Number, as diabolical Magicians, Picatrix the Spaniard, Anselmus Parmensis, Cicchus Eculanus, Petrus de Abono, Cornelius Agrippa, and Paracelsus, --- Men partly Atheists, and partly Heretics." As for the rest, Wierus agrees perfectly with him; that is, he took Petrus Aponeusis, Anselmus Parmensis, &c. for Practisers of infernal

(4) Disquisit. Magicæ, lib. 1, cap. 3, pag. 22.

(5) Ibid.

Astrology [D]. — The Letter, which he wrote to Pope Clement IV, and which is now in the Library of Lambeth, together with great Encomiums on the Holy Scriptures, mentions a very odd Project; for he there exhorts That Pope to confirm, by Apostolical Authority, and to recommend to the whole Church, the Method he had found out to teach every Body Hebrew, Latin, Greek, and Arabic, in a very few Days. He pretended, that the Laity ought not only to read the Scripture, but also to understand the Originals [E]; and he averred, that his Universal Grammar was earnestly wished for, and had been confirmed by several Prophecies.

infernal Magic. "Superiorum magorum nugamen-
"ta itidem insulse sequuti sunt Apion Grammati-
"cus, Julianus Apostata, Robertus Anglicus apud
"Helvetios misere mortuus, Rogerius Bacon, Petrus
"Aponensis Conciliator dictus, Albertus Teutonicus,
"Arnoldus de Villanova, Anselmus Parmensis, Pi-
"catrix Hispanus, vel author libri ad Alfonso sub "Picatrix nomine, Cicchus Afculus Florentinus, &
"plerique alii obscurioris nominis scriptores, deplorati
"certe ingenii homines. Qui quum se magiam tra-
"dere pollicentur, non nisi aut deliramenta quedam
"nulla ratione subnixta, aut superstitiones piis omni"bus indignas congesserunt (6). — — — The Tricks of "former Magicians are foolishly followed by Apion
"the Grammarian, Julian the Apostate, Robertus An"glicus, who died miserably in Switzerland, Roger "Bacon, Petrus Aponensis, called the Reconciler, Al"bertus Teutonicus, Arnoldus de Villà Novâ, Ansel-
"mus Parmensis, Picatrix the Spaniard, or the Au"thor of the Book under his Name to King Alphonsus,
"Cicchus Afculus the Florentine, and several other "Writers of obscure Names, Men of desperate Minds :
"Who, instead of the Magic they pretend to be Ma"sters of, have only beaped together either some idle
"Dreams, without any Foundation of Reason, or Su"perstitions unworthy the Attention of all pious Per"sons."

[D] He was very much infatuated with Judicial Astrology. John Picus maintains, that the Book, entitled Speculum Astrologie, which treats of the Lawful and Unlawful Authors, who wrote upon Astrology, is a Work of Roger Bacon (7). That Book was condemned by Gerfon (8), and by Agrippa, as exceedingly superstitious (9). Francis Picus (10), and many others, have condemned it, because the Author maintains in it, with submission to better Judgments, that the Books of Magic ought to be carefully preserved, because the Time draws near, that, for certain Causes not there specified, they must necessarily be perused, and made use of on some Occasions. Naudé adds, That Roger Bacon was so much addicted to Judicial Astrology, that Henry de Haffia, Gulielmus Parisensis, Nicolas Oresmius — — — were obliged to inveigh sharply against his Writings and all the Vanities of Astrologers (11).

[E] He pretended, that the Laity were not only allowed to read the Scriptures, but also to understand the Originals. As I have not read his Letter, I cannot say whether he relies upon this Argument :
That a private Person, who understands neither the Greek nor Hebrew Language, is obliged to depend on the Fidelity and Capacity of Translators: Which, it may be said, is but a weak Foundation, and not to be trusted, to build our Salvation on. However it be, his Pretension is sufficiently extravagant, and contains Impossibilities. This is the Judgment of the Author, who mentions this Letter. "Inter Scrip-

"tores 13 seculi, qui a Whartono pro Scripturis &
"sacris vernaculis adducuntur, comparet Rogerus
"Bacon, cujus epistolam de laudibus S. Scripturæ
"ad Clementem IV. bibliotheca Lambethana tenet.
"Osservat autem, Autorem illum portentosa quædam
"& impossibilia in prolixâ illa epistola comminisci.
"Non enim tantum necessarium esse docet, ut omnes
"Christiani sacram Scripturam tanquam fidei suæ
"fontem & regulam perfecte sciunt, sed etiam fontes
"Hebraicos & Græcos ab omnibus consulendos as"serit. Et quamvis incredibile videatur, ut singuli
"Christiani linguarum istarum notitiam sibi compa-
"rare possint, id tamen Baconus factu perquam fa"cile esse persuadere suis Lectoribus cupit, im-
"primis cum se Grammaticam, quandam universalem
"invenisse gloriatur, cujus ope intra paucissimos dies
"quilibet linguam Hebraicam, Græcam, Latinam,
"& Arabicam, addicere queat; & ut omnes, quod
"legunt, etiam intelligant, se opus quoddam ma-
"nuduclorium seu præliminare ad promovendam S.
"Scripturæ intelligentiam editurum spondet, enixe
"Pontificem orans, ut artificium suum, summis
"omnium votis expetitur, & frequentibus vati-
"ciniis confirmatum, Apostolica autoritate confir-"met & universæ ecclesiæ commendet, unde in"numera in ecclesiâ beneficia redundatura mini-
"me dubitat (12). — — — Among the Writers of the "XIIIth Century, who are produced, by Wharton,
"in favour of translating the Scriptures, and Di"vine Services, into our own Language, Roger Bacon
"is cited, whose Epistle, to Clement IV, on the Prais"es of Sacred Scripture, is now in the Lambeth Li"brary. But he observes, that this Author, in that "long Epistle, has projected something very monstrous
"and impracticable. For he holds it to be necessary "for all Christians, not only to understand perfectly
"the Sacred Scripture, as the Fountain and Rule "of their Faith, but also to be able to consult the "Hebrew and Greek Originals. And, though it "may seem incredible, that every Christian should be "able to attain the Knowledge of those Languages,
"yet Bacon would persuade his Readers, that it may "very easily be done, especially since he pretends to "have invented an universal Grammar, by the help of "which any one may, in a very few Days, make him"self Master of Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and Ara"bic; and, that all, who read, may understand, he "promises to publish an Introductory Work, to make "the Sacred Scripture more easily understood, earnest"ly desiring the Pope, that this Invention of his,
"so very much wished for by all, and confirmed by "several Prophecies, might be established by his Apo-
"stolical Authority, and recommended to the whole
"Church, to which he is sure it will bring innu"merable Advantages."

(12) Acta E-
ruditi. Lipt.
mensis Junii
1691, pag.
279. In the Abstract of the Book of the Archbishop
Usher, de Historiâ Controversæ de Scripturis & Sacris Ver-naculis.

BACON (FRANCIS), Lord High Chancellor of England under King James I, was one of the greatest Men of his Age, and one of those, who best understood the Imperfections in the Philosophy of that Time. He studied hard to find out a Remedy for them, and formed very fine Plans for their Reformation [A]. The Public received his Works very favourably. A compleat Edition was made of them at Francfort in Folio, in the Year 1665. The Journal of the Learned did not mention it without bestowing great Encomiums upon this illustrious Chancellor (a). The Treatise De Augmentis Scientiarum, which was reprinted at Paris in the Year 1624, is one of This Author's best Productions [B]. His Moral and Political Works, translated into

French

[A] He formed very fine Plans for their Reformation. See what Mr Baillet has said of them, in the first Volume of the Life of Mr Des Cartes (1), and what Gassendus has said in particular of Bacon's Logic (2).

[B] The Treatise De Augmentis Scientiarum — is one of This Author's best Productions. See here what Cosart said of it to Voiture: I have lately read the Books, which Chancellor Bacon wrote about the Advancement of Sciences, in which I found a great many admirable Things (3). He afterwards gives Instances of some of those Things, and by his Choice shews his good Taste; for indeed they are all fine and great Thoughts. I have been informed, that Bacon's Works were principally made use of by Cosart, and that he took from thence the Ground, or Basis, of his Collections;

(a) In the Journal of March 8, 1666. Note, that an Edition of them was promised in 6 Volumes in 12mo, in 1684. See Nouvelles de la Repub.
des Lettres,
for June, 1684, in the Catalogue of new Books,
n. 5.

(3) Conversations of Voiture and Cosart, pag.
173. Edit. of Paris,
1654.

(b) See, in Sir Tho. Pope-Blount pag. 635, the Judgment made of them by Contrarius, Boecle- rus, &c. there you see the Judgment of other Au- thors, to the Honour of Lord Bacon.

French by Baudouin, sold so well, that they had a Run of several Editions. His Life of Henry VII, King of England, is very much esteemed (b). By labouring so hard for the Republic of Learning, Bacon neglected his Domestic Affairs, in such a manner, and plunged himself into so many Expences, that he died very poor. We shall produce two Authorities on this Subject [C]. His Death is placed on the Ninth of April 1626. He lived Sixty six Years.

lections; that is, having found some Thought in Bacon, which pleased him, he wrote it down, and, when he met with any thing, that related to it, in other Books, he added it to that Leaf; after which he needed no other Index, or Common-Place.

[C] We shall produce two Authorities for Bacon's Poverty. The first I am indebted to the Bibliothéque Universelle; for the second, to the Sorberiana. The Bibliothéque Universelle informs me, that James Howell says, in a Letter (4) dated the Sixteenth of January 1625 (5). — "That Chancellor Bacon died so poor, that he scarce left enough to bury him; which made Howell say, That, though he had a great Genius for Learning, he had no great Judgment of Things. However, he imputes this Chancellor's Poverty either to his Contempt of Riches, or excessive Liberality. Howell says, That, a little before his Death, he wrote a mournful Letter to the King, wherein he implored his Assistance, 'For fear he should be reduced in his old Age to Beggary, and be obliged to study only how to live, instead of living, according to his Wishes, only in order to study. Expressions, which seem as low to our Author, as those of another Letter, which he had wrote before to the Prince of Wales, were prophane. He told That Prince, That he hoped, as the Father had been his Creator, the Son would be his Redeemer (6)."

Let us see, now, what Sorbieri says: "Bacon's Natural History, at Paris 1631, translated, or rather epitomized, by Peter Amboise Esq; Sieur de la Madeleine. The Translator has added an Account of That Chancellor's Life, and, at the end, a Translation of his New Atlantis. Those few excellent Remarks, I have seen, make me with greatly for an intire and faithful Translation. Mr Boswell tells me, he had a particular Intimacy with this extraordinary Man, who left him in his Will all his Papers, which was the only one, which was executed out of a vast Number of Legacies, which he gave by way of Pleafantry. He bequeathed Four hundred thousand Livres to an imaginary College, which he had given the Plan of, in his New Atlantis (7)." This Account does not seem to say, that Bacon died poor; it rather insinuates, that he died not a little whimsical (8): But, if you consider it closer, you will find there is a Sign of Indigence in it.

(6) Biblioth. Universelle, Tom. 15. pag. 45.

(7) Sorberiana, pag. 41. Edit. of Holland.

(8) See what the Sieur du Maurier says concerning the last Will of Cervantes. Memoirs of Holland, p. 430.

(4) The 8th of Sept. 4. 97. Vol. I.

(5) There must be an Error in this Date; for Chancellor Bacon did not die, till Apr. 9. 1626.

(a) Rocolet, True History of Calvinism, pag. 166.

BACOUÉ (LEO), born at Casteljaloux in the lower Guienne, forsook his Family Religion, which was That of the Reformed, and became a Franciscan. He attained afterward to the Prelacy, and was made Bishop of Glandeve. My Author observes, That Father Leo Bacoue is the only converted Huguenot, who was promoted to Episcopacy under the Reign of Lewis XIV (a). This Fryar published a Latin Poem on the Education of a Prince, about the time that the Dauphin was to have Preceptors. He re-printed it at Paris in the Year 1685. The Journal des Sçavans mentions it, the following Year (b).

(b) January 21st, pag. 23.

(c) Moreri was wrong to call it a Howe's. The Author, whom he quotes, makes use of the Word Municipium. Geiner gives the Surname of Gandensis.

BADIUS (JODOCUS), surnamed Alcensius, because he was born in the Borough (a) of Afsebe near Brussels, was in much Esteem for the great number of Books, which he printed and commented. He was born in the Year 1462. He performed his first Studies at Ghent; he continued them in Italy, and made a great progress in the Greek Language at Ferrara, under Baptista Guarini. He settled at Lyons, and taught the Latin and Greek Tongues there as well in public as in private. Afterwards he removed to Paris, and set up a Printing-House there, which gained him great Reputation [A]. From thence came forth several Classic Authors, with his Explications and Notes [B]. He bestowed the same Pains on some Modern Authors, as Petrarch, Politian, Laurentius Valla, Baptista Mantuanus, &c. He published also some Books of his own both in Prose and in Verse (b) [C]; and it is agreed, by good Judges, that, if his Domestic Cares had not obliged him to write as much, or more, for Gain, than for Glory, he would have succeeded much better than he did [D]. Erasmus

(b) Ex Valerii Andreae Biblioth. Belg. pag. 588, 589.

[A] He set up a Printing-House, at Paris, which gained him great Reputation. Father du Moulinet informs us, That Jodocus Badius was the first, who brought into France the round Characters; and that, before him, all the French Printers made use of the Gothic Characters. About the Year 1500, he came from Italy into France, as well to teach Greek in Paris, as to set up a very fine Printing-House there, which he called Prelum Alcensianum, Alcensius's Press (1). Father du Moulinet forgets, that Badius stopt a very considerable Time at Lyons, before he came to Paris. See the Remark [H]. As for the rest, Mr Chevallier has proved, against That Father, That Printing in France did not begin with Gothic Letters*, and that Roman Letters were used there, before Badius's Time (2); And farther, that tho' a great Number of His Editions were printed in a good Letter — He printed several also in Gothic (3).

* Gabriel Naudé, in the seventh Chapter of his Addition to the History of Lewis XI, pag. 317, and 318, of the Edition of 1630, pretends, that it was The Workmen, who, less desirous of Honour than Profit, introduced the Gothic Character; but I know not how he understands This; since many of the old Editions, which we have in square Letters, are no less charged with Abbreviations, than the Gothic, which succeeded them. REM. CRIT.]

[B] He printed a great many Classic Authors, with his Explications and Notes. Valerius Andreas gives a List of them, wherein we find Horace, Perseus, Terence, Juvenius, Theocritus, Sallust, Valerius Maximus, Quintilian, Aulus Gellius, and several Treatises of Cicero. "Commentarii vero, sive famillares enarrationes, circumferuntur, in Horatium Flaccum, &c (4). — There are also banded about Commentaries, or familiar Explications, on Horace, &c." The List of Swerius is still larger, and mentions Ovid, and Seneca's Tragedies (5).

[C] He published some Books of his own, both in Prose, and in Verse. Valerius Andreas mentions these following: Psalterium B. Mariae, Epigrammatum liber, Navicula stultorum mulierum, De Grammatica, De conscribendis Epistolis, Vita Thomae à Kempis.

[D] If his domestic Cares had not interrupted him, — he would have succeeded much better than he did. Erasmus speaks very freely of this; "Nec in felicitate omnino cessit conatus Badio; adeit illi facillitas non indocta, felicitas tamen cessurus, nisi curae domesticæ, reique parandæ studium, interciperent orium

(1) Journal des Sçavans, of Jan. 31, 1684, p. 38.

(2) Chevallier. Origin of Printing at Paris, p. 54.

(3) Ibid. p. 138.

(4) Valer. Andreas, Bibl. Belg. pag. 589.

(5) Swertius in Athen. Belg.

happened to compare him, in some things, to Budæus; and it can scarce be credited, what a Clamour was raised at Paris against That Comparison [E]. Those, who place Badius's Death in the Year 1526, are mistaken [F]. He was incumbered with a very great Family, and it is said, in his Epitaph, That, in all probability, the Number of his Children would have equalled That of his Books, had he made as early a beginning in the one, as he did in the other [G]; but that he had been much longer an Author, than a married Man. I would not warrant This to be exactly true [H].

His

(6) Erasmus, in Ciceroniano, pag. 73.

(6) The 28th of the 22d Book, pag. 1172, 1173.

(8) Brixius, in Epistolâ ad Erasmus inter Epistolas Erasmi, 27. lib. 22, pag. 1166.

(9) Ibid. p. 1168.

(10) Erasmus, Epist. 23. lib. 22, pag. 1172.

(11) Ibid. Epist. 72, lib. 20, pag. 1030.

"otium illud Musis amicum, hujus laudis candidato necessarium (6). — Nor was Badius's Attempt unsuccessful; his Manner is easy, and not unlearned: But he would have succeeded much better, if his domestic Cares, and Endeavour for a Maintenance, had not interrupted that Quiet, which the Muses require in one, who writes for Fame." He passes the same Judgment in one of his Letters (7). "Alius liberum erit de Badio iudicare quod volunt; ego semper illum habui in eorum numero, quorum nec eruditionem, nec ingenium, nec eloquentiam possis contemnere: tametsi non dissimulo illum longe majorem fuisse futurum, si fortuna benignior otium ac tranquillitatem studiorum suppeditasset. — Others may judge as they please of Badius; for my own part, I have always esteemed him in the number of those, whose Learning, Understanding, and Eloquence, are by no means contemptible: though I cannot deny but these would have appeared to much greater Advantage, if an easier Fortune had allowed his Studies a greater Tranquillity." Brixius, after having given a very mean Idea of Badius, says, he studied much more for Gain, than to become Eloquent. "Scio Badium non esse prorsus d'usor. Verum qualis qualis est talem se certe hominibus nostris hactenus probavit, ut quoties de doctis sermo inter doctos incidit de Badio plane id'is λέγῃ. Illi, quod non inficiaris, quæstus tantum non eloquentia scopus est (8). — I know Badius is not altogether unlearned. But, let him be what he will, the Appearance he has hitherto made in the learned World is such, that, whenever Men of Learning speak of others of their own Class, not a Syllable is mentioned of Badius. It cannot be denied but that his Aim was Gain, and not Eloquence."

[E] Erasmus compared him — with Budæus; and it can scarce be expressed, what a Clamour was raised, at Paris, against That Comparison.] Brixius, who was Erasmus's Friend, wrote to him a Letter on This Subject, part of which I have quoted. He told him plainly, That the learned Men of Paris were very angry to find, that he had, in some measure, preferred Badius to Budæus. "Quo major indignatio nostrorum omnium animos subit, quod hæc in opinione, iusta de causâ quum sint, existimant illum ab te non tantum Badio collatum, sed & postpositum. — Ea una commissura adeo nostris omnibus invidiosa est, ut multorum tibi benevolentium animos à tui studio abalienarit, ob id quod existimant Budæum cum Badio commissum perinde esse ac si quis Achillem cum Thersite committeret (9). — All our People have conceived so much the greater Indignation against you, to find one, for whom they have so just a Value, not only compared, but even postponed, by you, to Badius. — This one Comparison has so disgusted every Body here, that it has drawn off a great many of your Well-Wishers from the Respect they had for you, who look upon your comparing Budæus with Badius to be just like matching Achilles with Thersites." Erasmus justified himself, and made it appear, that he had very evidently given Budæus the Superiority. He wondered they had not perceived it in France; or, if they had, how they came to make such an out-cry, and compose so many satirical Verses. Demiror isthic esse doctos, quibæ non vident, & vident, magis etiam demiror esse qui confiterentur, qui maledictis Versibus rem dignam existimant (10). This Affair became so much talked of, that it reached the Ears of Francis I. "Si verus est rumor, sic fremunt amici Budæi, quasi in cineres patris ac matris illius imminerim. Clamant ô Cœlum! ô terra! Budæum cum Badio? Clamant me invidere gloriæ Budæi, meque multis epigrammatis dilacerant. — Causa delata est & ad Regis cognitionem. Volenti cognoscere diffidii causam, dictum est Budæum me taxasse in loco quodam, eo me offensum quævisse vindictam, eumque cum Badio contulisse (11). — If Report speaks true, the Friends of Budæus are as much incensed, as if I had offered the greatest Indignity to the Albes of their Father and Mother. They cry out to Heaven and to Earth, What! Budæus with Badius! They charge me with envying Budæus's Glory, and lash me with their many stinging Epigrams. — The Matter is brought even to the Knowledge of the King. To whom, on Inquiry into the Cause of this Disgention, they pretend, that Budæus has somewhere censured me, which has provoked me to take this Revenge, by comparing him with Badius." If Erasmus designed to honour Badius by That Comparison, he was very much mistaken; for this poor Man was wounded to the Heart, every time Complaints were made of the Injustice done to Budæus. It had been better for Badius, if Erasmus had not thought of him. The offence was removed in the second Edition.

[F] Those, who place his Death in the Year 1526, are mistaken.] Swerius was content to say, that he found Badius had lived to the Year 1526 (12). This indeed leaves it doubtful, whether or no he lived beyond that Year; but he does not pretend to affirm, that he did not live beyond it. Komig, instead of expressing himself thus cautiously, affirms, that Badius died in the Year 1526. And others have said it after him. But let us consider a little Brixius's Letter, which I have quoted; it was written in the Year 1528, and mentions Badius as living. Valerius Andreas says nothing at all concerning his Death. Moreri places it about the Year 1529, or 1530. But he is mistaken; for it is very well known, that Erasmus rejoiced, in a Letter of the Month of September 1530, (13), that the current Report about the Death of Badius was not true: And we have an Edition of the Epistles of Longolius, published by Badius in the Year 1533. Gesner observes, in his Bibliotheca, printed in the Year 1545, that Badius had been dead about ten Years. He was not dead, when the Book of Alphonsus à Castro, against Heresies, was printed at Paris; for Badius was one of those, who printed it in the Year 1534 (14). The Title Page of Peter Lombard, in Epistolas Pauli, has these words; pro hæredibus Jodoci Badii 1535, Mensis Decembris (15). So that he was not living in the Month of December 1535.

[G] The Number of his Children would have equalled those of his Books, had he made as early a Beginning in the one, as he did in the other.] This Thought was the Subject of the following Epitaph, composed for him.

Hic, liberorum plurimorum qui parens,
Parens librorum plurimorum qui fuit,
Situs Jodocus Badius est Ascensius.
Plures fuerunt liberis tamen libri,
Quod jam senescens cepit illos gignere,
Ætate florens cepit hos quod edere (16).

Here lies Jodocus Badius Ascensius,
Father of many Children,
Author of many Books:
His Books were more numerous than his Children,
Because he commenced Author very early,
Father very late.

This is not the Epitaph, now to be seen on the Tomb of Jodocus Badius, in the Charnel-House of the Collegiate Church of St Benedict at Paris (17), where he was buried (18). If we may rely upon the Truth of these Lines, he followed the Maxim of most of the Learned, and married late. See the Book entitled Valefiana (19).

[H] He had been much longer an Author, than a married Man. — I would not warrant this to be exactly true.] The Sieur de la Caille is the Cause of this

(12) Swertius in Athen. Belgic. pag. 490.

(13) Letter 22d of Book 25th, pag. 1373.

(14) See la Caille, Hist. of Printing, pag. 74.

(15) Chevile, Origin of Printing at Paris, p. 128.

(16) Swertius in Athen. Belgic. pag. 490, relates this Epitaph, as made by a Friend of Badius. He should have said by his Grandson. See the following Review, msc.

(17) You may read it in la Caille's History of Printing, pag. 75.

(18) Rocoles, True History of Calvinism, pag. 213.

(19) Pag. 5. Edit. Amst.

His Son Conradus BADIUS was born at Paris, and settled at Geneva. He became a very good Protestant, and demonstrated it in the Koran of the Cordeliers. He translated the first Book of it, and compiled the second, and adorned both with Marginal Notes, which are very severe. He was both a Printer and an Author, and made some Attempts in French Poetry. He wrote something of this kind against Nostradamus (c). Three of his Daughters were married to famous Printers [I]. I was a long time at a Loss to know, what a certain Modern Author means, by seeming to charge Henry Stephens with having censured Jodocus Badius [K]. I have nothing to say concerning one Conradus BADIUS, who died, with all his Family, of the Plague at Orleans, where he was Minister, in the Year 1562 (d), and was a Friend of Theodorus Beza from his Youth (e).

Mr Chevillier, who collected several Elogies on Jodocus Badius, asserts, that he had been Professor of Belles Lettres in the University of Paris, and afterwards in the City of Lyons, where he read the Poets in Public (f).

There is certainly a Mistake in the Title of One of the Books, which Valerius Andreas ascribes to him [L].

this Doubt: he says, That Badius, at his Return from Italy, taught several Gentlemen in Lyons, and composed, and printed, a great many good Books, at the House of John Trechsel, Printer at Lyons, whose Daughter, Theliff Trechsel, he married ----- (20). It was to him, continues this Author, that the learned Robert Gaguin, the twentieth General of the Order of the Trinitarians, who knew his Merit and Capacity for Correcting of the Press, wrote to print his Works, as appears by the Letter of That General to him, prefixed to his Epistles in Quarto, in the Year 1498. This obliged Badius to go to Paris about the Year 1499, or 1500, after the Death of his Father-in-law, both to teach the Greek Tongue there, and to restore the Art of Printing, which began to decline. It appears from this Passage, that Badius was a married Man in 1500. He was then but Thirty eight Years of Age; therefore it cannot be said, that he deferred his Marriage till he was old; jam senescens cepit illos gignere: And yet his Grandson, Henry Stephens, affirms it: for Henry Stephens is the Author of That Latin Epitaph, and of a Greek Epitaph, which turns on the same Thought. "Jodoco Badio elegantissimis hinc Epitaphis parentavit ex filia nepos Henricus" Stephanus, quæ propter elegantiam non potui non adscribere (21). ----- Henry Stephens his Grandson, by his Daughter, paid his Duty to Jodocus Badius in these elegant Epitaphs, which, for their Beauty, I could not forbear transcribing." The Epitaphs may be seen in Henry Stephens Book, de Artis Typographicae Querimonia. Mr Almeloveen has published both of them, with another of the same Author in Latin, in his curious Dissertation De Vitis Stephanorum.

[I] Three Daughters of J. Badius were married to famous Printers: Catherine Badius, a Daughter of Jodocus, was married to Michael Vascosan (22). Perrette Badius, another Daughter of Jodocus, was the Wife of Robert Stephens (23). Jane Badius, the other Sister, married John de Roigny (24), who made use of the Mark of his Father-in-law, and yet the Prelum Ascensianum on his Editions for above Twenty five Years (25). Perrette understood Latin, which she learnt, either by her Father's teaching her, as Mr Almeloveen believes (26), or by hearing People speak it in her Husband's House. Each of these Opinions is probable: Those who are of the latter, may take it from this, that a Sister of H. Stephens, Daughter of Perrette Badius, learned Latin without the Assistance of a Grammar, and only by Use. For Robert Stephens's House was always full of People, who spoke nothing but Latin; so that the very Maid-Servants acquired That Language. See the Epistle Dedicatory of Henry Stephens, prefixed to Aulus Gellius, where you will find these words, directed to his Son: "Avise tuæ eorum quæ Latine dicebantur (nisi rarius aliquod vocabulum intersciceretur) haud difficilior erat intellectus, quàm si dicta sermone Gallico fuissent. Quid de superflua sorore mea, amita autem tua, nomine Katharina, dicam? Illa quoque eorum quæ Latine dicuntur loquere non desiderat: multa vero & ipsa eodem loqui sermone potest; & quidem ita (licet nonnumquam impingat) ut ab omnibus intelligatur. Unde illi hæc Latine lingue cognitio? Artem certe Grammaticam haud magistrum habuit, nec alius illi hac in re quàm us prævit. --- Your Grandmother understood as readily what was spoke in Latin, except now and then some uncommon Expressions, as she did her own Mother-Tongue. Your Aunt Katharine also, the only Sister I have now living, never needed an Interpreter for that Language. She even spoke it pretty well herself, and, though not without some Slips, yet so as to be easily understood. Nor was she taught this by Grammar, but only by use." He explains what he means by this use, viz. that the Printers and Correctors of Robert Stephens spoke nothing but Latin.

[K] I was a long time at a Loss to know what a certain modern Author means, by seeming to charge Henry Stephens with having censured Jodocus Badius. This perplexity was occasioned for want of understanding a Period of the Sieur de la Caille; which, I think, I have, at last, apprehended. That Period runs thus: "Here is his Epitaph, inserted by Henry Stephens in his Book de Artis Typographicae Querimonia, printed by the same Stephens in 1569, wherein are several Complaints addressed to the laid Badius, both in Greek and Latin (27)." At first I thought it meant, that Henry Stephens had reproached Badius very much, both in Greek and Latin, for having spoiled the Trade: But, considering that he was his Grandson, and finding nothing against Badius in the Querimonia Artis Typographicae, which Mr Almeloveen has published, I could not tell what to think. Mr Almeloveen having assured me, that he had cut nothing off from the Querimonia, occasioned my reading the whole Period over again; upon which I now apprehend, that these words, both in Greek and Latin, most probably relate, not to Complaints, but to Epitaphs. At last I have had an Opportunity of consulting the very Work of Henry Stephens (28). I found in it, I. A Preface in Prose, against the Ignorance of Printers. II. A Poem, wherein Printing is introduced, complaining of it's decay. III. The Epitaphs, both in Greek and Latin, and some in Latin only, of some learned Printers. But I could nowhere meet with any Complaints, either against Badius, or addressed to him; so that this Passage of the Sieur de la Caille is a Riddle to me, if it is not a mistake. It is not to be wondered, that dead Languages, which admit of such a Variety of Transpositions, should be so obscure to us; when our own will not a little puzzle us, by altering the usual Order of the Words.

[L] There is certainly a Mistake in the Title of One of the Books, which Valerius Andreas ascribes to him. He makes him Author of a Work, entitled, Navicula fulturarum Mulierum (29), but notes neither the Place, nor Time, of the Impression: he is satisfied, in regard to this, with copying the Catalogue of Swerius. I have been informed (30), that Badius published, in 1513, a Book, entitled, Navis fultiferae Collectanea ab Jodoco Badio Ascensio vario carminum genere, non sine eorumdem familiarium explanatione, confata. It is probable, that the Book, which Valerius Andreas mentions, is the same with This; or, at most, that it differs only as a Part from the Whole. I am opinion, likewise, that the Work, published by Badius, in 1513, is taken from That, which is entitled, Navis Narragenia, written by Sebastian Brandt (31). Native of Strasbourg, Professor of Law, and a good Poet for those times, viz. the End of the XVth Century. See, in Gesner's Bibliotheca (32), what the Navis Narragenia, or Navis fulturarum, is.

(c) Du Verdier Vau-Privas, Biblioth. Franç. pag. 237.

(d) Beza, History of Churches, lib. 6, pag. 149.

(20) History of Printing, pag. 72, 73.

(21) Almeloveen de Vitis Stephanorum, pag. 28.

(22) La Caille, History of Printing, pag. 102.

(23) Ibid. pag. 96.

(24) Ibid. pag. 105.

(25) Chevillier, History of Printing, p. 138.

(26) Almeloveen, ubi supra.

(e) Ant. Fayus in Vita Theod. Beza, p. 45.

(f) Chevillier, Original of Printing at Paris, pag. 137.

(27) La Caille, History of Printing, pag. 74.

(28) Mr Almeloveen, who lends his Book, so obligingly, sent me the Arts Typographicae Querimonia.

(29) See Remark [C].

(30) By Mr de la Cotte, a Dutch Antiquary.

(31) Or Titivoltus.

(32) Gesner's Biblioth. fol. 593.

BADUEL (CLAUDIUS) in Latin Baduellus, lived in the XVIth Century. He was of the Reformed Religion, as appears from his Latin Translation of some Sermons of John Calvin, which he published at Geneva; as also from the Acts of the Martyrs, which he printed in Latin, at the same Place, in the Year 1556 (a). I am very certain, he taught the Belles Lettres, in the College of Nîmes; for we find, among his printed Works, Oratio ad instituendum Gymnasium Nemaufense de Studiis Literarum; and another Piece, intituled, de Collegio & Universitate Nemaufensi. He wrote well in Latin, and was a good Orator, a good Father, and a good Christian. These two last Qualifications appeared very plainly in his Epistola parænetica ad Paulum filium de vero Patrimonio & Hæreditate, quam Christiani Parentes suis Liberis debent relinquere. I refer you, for the Titles of his other Books, to the Epitome of Gesner's Bibliotheca: But I shall say something of a Discourse he published on the Marriage of Men of Learning [A]: and I shall shew, that the Epitomizers of Gesner have been guilty of some Omissions; for they take no Notice of Baduel's having composed, in Latin, a Funeral Oration on the Lady de St Veran (b). The Catalogue of the Oxford Library ascribes to him some Notes on the Apocrypha, printed at London, in the Year 1660.

(a) Frisli Epitome Bibl. Geineri, p. 150.

(b) She was Daughter of the first President of the Parliament of Toulouse. This Funeral Oration, translated into French, by Charles Rozel, was printed at Lyons, in 1546. See the Biblioth. of du Verdier.

[A] I shall say something of a Discourse he published on the Marriage of Men of Learning. This is the Title of it: De Ratione Vitæ studiose ac literatæ in Matrimonio collocandæ & degendæ. It was printed at Lyons, by Sebastian Gryphius, in 1544, in 4to, and at Leipsic in 1577, and 1581 (1). This last Edition contains One hundred forty three Pages, in 8vo. A Professor at Leipsic, whose Name was Gregory Bresman, has added a Preface, very much in Commendation of the Author, and his Book. It is certainly a very judicious Performance, and full of excellent Morality. Baduel dedicated it to Mr de Maffencal (2), first President of the Parliament of Toulouse. He sets off, in it, the Excellency of Matrimony, and shews the Disorders which usually attend a single State; and refutes those, who object, that Matrimony is inconvenient to Men of Learning, by interrupting their Studies, and not allowing them the Liberty of applying wholly to their Books. He tells us (3), he had made choice of this State himself, and gives some Advice to those, inclined to follow his Example, for the chusing a proper Wife, very earnestly exhorting to join the Pleasures of an agreeable Marriage with the Profession of Letters. He says, that William Bigot, a Person well skilled in Physic and Philosophy, had promised a Treatise to prove Matrimony necessary; that is, according to the Sentiment of Baduel, in order to a perfect Enjoyment of Health. "Gulielmus Bigotius, qui se (4), qui in Medicis ac Physicis diligenter versatur, summam harum rerum habet scientiam, aliquando promissit se de conjunctione Matrimonii ususque ejus necessario scripturum. Necessarium (opinor) intelligit, sine quo homo non potest valere. Itaque eam partem Naturæ, conjugium ad bonam Corporis constitutionem appetentis, nos ei explicandam relinquemus: in quo valde prudenter faciet, si eam commoditatem ex legitima uteris conjunctione, ejusque moderatâ consuetudine, petendam esse doceat: & ea incommoda ostendat quæ ex liberis illis ac dissolutis scortationibus humanis corporibus multa & magna afferuntur. . . . Therefore this Part of Nature, says he, which requires Matrimony, in order to a beautiful Constitution, I shall leave him to explain: In which he will do very prudently, if he demonstrates this Advantage to arise from a lawful and moderate Use of Copulation: and at the same time describes the many, and great, Disorders, the Body must be subject to, from a licentious and dissolute Course of Venery." To give a just Idea of this Work, I shall borrow the Words of a Professor of Leipsic, who procured a second Edition of it. He remarks, that nothing is more necessary in the Conduct of Life, than to consult the Rules of Prudence; but that there are few Persons, who think of doing this, even in the Question concerning Matrimony, which is the most difficult of all to determine with Judgment (5). The Impatience of Youth hurries us into it, without listening to any Advice, but That of Passion or Interest, &c. and yet the false Steps, which are made in it, are entirely irreparable. "Plerique vigentis A- venustate allecti, plures dotis magnitudine inefcaci, neque pauci splendore generis fascinati, his autoribus & consularibus agunt omnia. . . . Quos, meo quidem judicio, fatius erat, cum animis suis considerantes illud Publii Syri, deliberandum est aut, quod statuendum est semel; & hoc item alterum, Deliberare utilia, Mora est tutissima; diu secum multumque deliberare, atque ad naturæ suæ rationemque vitæ institutum consilium conferre omne, præsertim cum in deligendo matrimonio, si quid erroris acciderit (accidit autem sæpissimè) non quod aliis in rebus facere in promptu est, cum quis fortè se errasse intelligit rationem & consiliorum mutationem instituire cuicumque sit integrum: sed aut stultitiæ penam luere, aut negligentiae culpam præstare oporteat sempiternam. . . . Most Persons, in the Prime of their Youth, and before they are at Years of Discretion, pushed on by a juvenile Heat, and the blind Passion of Love, hurry into Matrimony, before they can make any Judgment of That State of Life. Many are captivated with the Charms of Beauty, more with those of Fortune, and some with the Splendor of a Family, and are led by no other Views but these. . . . Who, in my Opinion, would do much better, by considering That Saying of Publius Syrus: We ought long to deliberate on what we can determine but once; and That other, To deliberate on Questions of Importance, is the most safe Delay; to deliberate again, and again, and consult their own Tempers, and the Nature of That State, in the most particular Manner; because, if we commit any Mistake in marrying (which is too often the Case), we cannot remedy it, as we do those in other Matters, by changing our Methods and Counsels; but must fix down by what we have done, and either do Penance for our Folly, or continue our Fault of Carelessness, as long as we live." It being therefore so necessary, and at the same time so unusual, to enter, with Prudence, into This State, it was thought of signal Service to the Public, to reprint Baduel's Book, which contains the best Instructions in the World, and particularly advises to apply, by earnest Prayer, to the Holy Ghost, for Assistance. The Author of the Preface holds it necessary to begin with this, when we deliberate on a Point so nice and hazardous. "Qui hanc vitæ conjugalis viam ingressi sunt, operam ante omnia dabunt, ut Deum sibi consiliarium, atque in rei tam arduæ consultatione, atque affectione moderatorem, piâ ac religiosâ nominis divini imploratione asistant. . . . de quâ unus & trini Dei, in coëundo conjugio ardentem invocationem diligenter facienti, præter complura alia prudentiæ & circumspèctionis & cautionis in hoc vitæ genere constituendum, præcepta sedulò tenenda, piè, sapienter, & eruditè admodum in hoc quem tibi, Lector benevole, de alieno largientes offerimus, Libello differunt. . . . They, who enter upon This Way of conjugal Life, should first of all endeavour, by Devotion and Prayer, to prevail with God to be their Counsellor and Conductor in so difficult an Affair. . . . Concerning which earnest Application to the triune God, besides several other Rules of Prudence and Circumspection to be constantly observed in this State of Life, the Book, which I present the Reader with, at another's Expence, does piously, prudently, and learnedly

(1) It was this made Mr. König, falsely believe, that Baduel composed it in 1581. See his Biblioth. Vetus & Nova.

(2) Ad Joh. Maffencalum.

(3) De Ratione Vitæ studiose in Matrim. collocandæ. pag. 3.

(4) Ibid. p. 47. 48.

(5) In deliberatione de contrahendo Matrimonio, que est una omnium difficillima. Greg. Bresmanus Pref. ad Lector.

(6) Gregor. Bresmanus, Prefatione ad Lector.

(7) Inferior Lieutenant in the Seneschallship of Provence, in the Jurisdiction of Arles. See the Biblioth. de la Croix du Maine, pag. 134. and that of du Verdier, pag. 532.

"learnedly treat." This Work of Baduel has been translated into French, by Guy de la Gard (?); but, if he has not succeeded better in his Translation of the Book, than he has in That of the Title, it cannot be very valuable. He intitles his Version, A very useful Discourse of the Dignity of Matrimony, and the virtuous Conversation of Men of Learning. It was printed at Paris, in 1548, in 8vo.

BAGNI (JOHN-FRANCIS) lived in the XVIIth Century. He was raised to the Dignity of a Cardinal by Pope Urban VIII, in the Year 1629, on the Recommendation of France (a). Mr Moreri speaks of him very largely, but not without committing Mistakes, which it will be proper to take Notice of [A]. This Cardinal went through more Employments than Mr Moreri mentions, as will appear in our Remarks. One thing has been said of him, in the Sorberiana, which is false on several Accounts [B]. He had a Brother, who was called the Marquis of

(a) Manuscript of the Cardinal Richelieu, at the beginning of the Year 1630.

(1) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. I. p. 119.

[A] Mr Moreri speaks of him — and commits Mistakes, which it will be proper to take notice of.] He says, I. That Cardinal Bagni was of the House of the Counts de Guidi. This is pretending, that the Name of his Family was of Guidi: But he should not have separated the Name of Guidi from That of Bagni or à Balneo. Naudé never divides them. II. That he was born the fourth of October, 1573. This does not agree with an Author, whose exactness is infinitely more to be depended on, than That of Moreri (1). This Author places the Death of Cardinal Bagni on the Twenty fourth of July, 1641, and makes him Seventy six Years old. So that, consequently, he was born in the Year 1565. III. That Clement VIII sent Bagni into France, to congratulate Henry IV, on his Marriage with Mary de Medicis. This is not true. Mr Moreri did not understand Thomasin, whom he quoted. He might read, in this Author, that Cardinal Aldrobrandini, Legate of Clement VIII, in France, as well on the Account of the Marriage of Henry IV, as of the Peace with Savoy, had John-Francis Bagni in his Retinue. And here is the whole Amount of this pretended Deputation. IV. Moreri multiplies Bagni's Nunciatures beyond the Truth: He will have it, that he was twice sent Nuncio into France, once under Gregory XV, and once under Urban VIII; and farther, that Gregory XV sent him Nuncio into Flanders. Thomasin does not go so far, but is satisfied with saying, that Bagni was sent to Paris by Gregory XV, in the Quality of Nuncio-Extraordinary; and that he went from Paris into Flanders to act there as Ordinary Nuncio. Gassendus does not go so far as Thomasin; he says, that Bagni, going as Nuncio to Brussels, passed through Paris, and saw there, incognito, all that was to be seen. Transitit sub id tempus (that is, in the Month of July, 1621). "Parisius memoratus supra Vicelegatus à Balneo, Pontificis Nuncius destinatus in Flandriam, qui cum vellet singularia quæque in urbe spectare, sed tamen quasi incognitus, commodum profecto convulvit Peirescius, qui ipsum variè deduceret ad eruditos, ad Musæa, ad opera omnia rariora (2). — About the same time, the Vice-legat Bagni, beforementioned, passed through Paris, to go to Flanders, being appointed Nuncio there by the Pope, who desiring to see, incognito, every Thing remarkable in that City, Peirese was luckily so well recovered, that he introduced him successively to all the learned Men, and showed him the Libraries, and every Thing that was curious." I know very well, that he was Nuncio in France; but it was at another time. The same Gassendus, speaking of the illustrious Men, with whom Peirese was become acquainted, in the Year 1614, says This of our John-Francis Bagni. "Unus fuit Joannes-Franciscus Vi-dius à Balneo, Patracensis Archiepiscopus, & per ea tempora Avenionensis Vicelegatus. Singularis enim deinceps necessitudo intercessit, seu donec ille Avenione degit, seu cum est versatus perillustres Nuncios tam apud principes Belgarum, quam apud Regem Christianissimum, seu postquam factus est Cardinalis rarè ac spectatè virtutis (3). — One was John-Francis Guidi Bagni, Archbishop of Patras, and then Vice-legat at Avignon. There was a particular Intimacy between them, not only during his Residence at Avignon, but also while he was Nuncio-Extraordinary both to the States of Holland, and to the most Christian King, and after he was made Cardinal for his great and singular Virtue." It is most certain, that Bagni was twice Nuncio; for Naudé, who was a long time his Domestic, and Library-Keeper, speaks thus to him in the Dedication of his Coups d'Etat: "My Lord, since

"you are now at Rome, enjoying the Honours due to your Deserts, and That Quiet, which you have so merited by so happy a Conduct in your public Employments, while you have been seven times Governor, once Vice-legat, and twice Nuncio, I did not think, &c." He was sent Nuncio to Brussels by Gregory XV, and into France by Urban VIII. Thomasin and Moreri are both in fault; they could not give a right Account of one of the clearest matters in the World. It was during his being Nuncio in France, that Bagni was raised to the Cardinalship. Gassendus says, that, in the Spring of the Year 1631, he passed through Provence, in his Return to Rome, and that he went to see his old Friend Mr du Peirese. "Vere novo Cardinalis à Balneo, utraque sua Legatione functus, & accepto Parisiis purpurato pileo, Romam rediit (4). — In the beginning of the Spring, Cardinal Bagni, having discharged both his Nunciatures, and received the red Cap at Paris, returned to Rome." He brought the learned Gabriel Naudé along with him. He continued in his Station of Nuncio at Paris, for above a Year after his Advancement to the Cardinalship, and was particularly concerned in reconciling the Differences between the Queen-Mother and Cardinal Richelieu (5). A Manuscript Memoir of Mr Baudrand says, I. That he was not made a Cardinal at the Recommendation of France, though we are told so in the History of the Ministry of Cardinal Richelieu; but merely by the Pope, as Nuncio of the Holy See, which is a Favour frequently conferred on those, who are Nuncios in France, and Spain, and at the Imperial Court. II. That there is a Mistake in those words of Gassendus, which I have quoted (6); accepto Parisiis purpurato Pileo Romam rediit. "The Pope doth not send the Red Hat to the Cardinals, which he makes, but they are obliged to come and receive it at Rome; for the Pope sends only the Calot by a Courier, and afterwards the Red Cap by one of his Chamberlains. So that Cardinal Richelieu and Cardinal Mazarin never had the Red Hat, because they never went to Rome after their Promotion. For above One hundred and twenty Years past, the Pope has never sent the Red Hat to any but the Cardinal Infant, into Spain, which was a particular Favour in respect to his Brother the King of Spain." All this is very curious: but yet Mr Baudrand should not have censured Gassendus's words, since they do not signify, that the Cardinal received the Red Hat; but only that he received the Red Cap. Gassendus says Pileo, not Galero. It is said, that Paul V departed from the Custom, introduced by Sixtus V: and That, in favour of the Duke of Lerma, to whom he ordered the Cardinal's Hat and Ring to be given, at Madrid, in 1618; this Duke being seventy Years old (7). See the eleventh Chapter of the fifth Book of Pallavicini's History of the Council of Trent.

[B] One Thing has been said of him, in the Sorberiana, which is false on several Accounts.] It is pretended, that, at the sight of the Thirty seven Volumes of the Councils, printed at the Louvre, he cried out, I wonder there should be still any Heretics in France. What Christian from beneficence can be any thing but a Catholic? Sorbiere admires this Thought: "Optime Cardinalis Banius, in Galliâ Nuncius, says he, dum 37 Vol. Concil. cerneret typis regis impressa, aiebat: Miror unde jam in Galliâ hæretici fiant, quis enim hypotheseum Christianorum servans potest non esse Catholicus (8)? It is false, That this Cardinal ever saw Those Thirty seven Volumes: He died in the Year 1641, and That Edition of the Councils came out in the Year 1644. But, if he had said, what is ascribed to him, he must have very much betrayed

(4) Ibid. l. 4. ad ann. 1631.

(5) See the History of Cardinal Richelieu, by Aubrey, Vol. I. pag. 264, 279. Edit. of Holl 12mo.

(6) Above, Citation (4).

(7) Mercurius Galant, for Apr. 1706, pag. 109.

WHETHER the Councils in 37 Volumes are able to convert Heretics.

(8) Sorberiana, pag. 12. Edit. of Holland.

(2) Gassendus in Vita Peireskii, lib. 3. ad Ann. 1621, pag. 289.

(3) Ibid. pag. 281.

of BAGNI [C], and was General of the Pope's Troops in the Valtelline, in the Year 1624.

betrayed his Judgment. For nothing can be so improper for the Conversion of Heretics as a Work of many Volumes, as Thirty seven Volumes of the Councils. Of Ten thousand Protestants, there will scarce be found two, who can read a Page in That Edition of the Louvre, and among those, who understand Latin, the greatest part have neither the Inclination, nor the Patience, to undertake so vast a reading. The Inconvenience would not be remedied by Translations into the Vulgar Tongue; for who, among the Ignorant, would not lose themselves in such a Sea as This? Without the Grace of God, and the Power of Education, the reading of the Councils would make an hundred Times more Infidels than Christians. There is no History, which affords more matter of Scandal, nor a more shocking Scene of Passions, Intrigues, Factions, Cabals, and Frauds, than This of the Councils (9). Those, who published the Menagiana, forgot a good Jest, which I have heard several times, in the Mercuriales of Mr Menage. A witty Man is quoted there, who when he heard say, "Such a one was condemned in such a Council, cried, It was a sign he did not know how to cabal so well as his Adversaries, or had not the same support from the secular Arm." Can Those, who know the Religion of Sorbiere, be well edified by his Optime?

(9) See Remark [B] of the Article NESTORUS.

(a) He is more known by this Latin Name, than by that of de Bay, which was his true Name.

(b) It is the Name of the Founder.

(c) I correct Valerius Andreas thus, for his number, cix. lxxv, is a most absurd Fault of the Printer.

(d) Ex Valer. Andreæ Biblioth. pag. 670.

BAIUS (a) (MICHAEL), Professor of Divinity at Louvain, was born at Melin in the Territory of Aeth, in the Year 1513. He distinguished himself so much by his great Progress, and prudent Conduct, during his Studies at Louvain, that, from the Station of a Scholar, he was promoted to That of Principal of the College of Standonck (b). Having been three Years in That Office, he applied himself to teach Philosophy; and, after six Years spent in Those Lectures, he obtained the Place of Principal of the Pope's College in the Year 1549 (c). In the same Year he was made Licentiate in Divinity. Two Years after he took his Doctor's Degree, and was appointed Regius Professor of Scripture. In 1563, he was one of the Divines sent by the King of Spain from Louvain to Trent [A]. He was admired in That Council. He obtained the Deanry of St Peter at Louvain, in the Year 1575. At the end of Three Years he was promoted to the Dignity of Conservator of the Privileges of the University (d). His Epitaph imports, that he was Chancellor of the same University, and Inquisitor-General in the Netherlands. He was a very learned Man, and no less eminent for his Morality, Piety, and Modesty, than for his Parts and Learning (e). He had read over St Augustin's Works nine times (f): He composed several Works in Divinity [B], which discovered That Reading (g), and which contained, as was pretended, a great number of Propositions, condemned by Pope Pius V [C]. He wrote also some Books of Controversy against Those of the Protestant

[C] He had a Brother, called the Marquis of Bagui. Mr Baillet assures us, that This Marquis was the Brother of Cardinal John-Francis Bagui, and that, having quitted the Sword, he advanced himself, in Ecclesiastical Dignities, even to That of the Cardinalship, to which he was promoted in the Year 1657 (10). He had been Nuncio in France all the time of the Pontificate of Innocent X, and the two first Years of Alexander VII. — He died at Rome, the twenty third of August, 1663, aged eighty Years (11). Mr Baillet thinks it likely, that Mr Des Cartes went to see him in the Valtelline: He grounds his Conjecture on This Marquis's being addicted to the Study of Natural Philosophy (12). The Truth is, Des Cartes was not only well known to Cardinal John-Francis Bagui, but also much respected by him (13). The French Mercury says, "That the Marquis de Bagui, to whom his Holiness had given the Command of his Forces in the Valtelline, was known to be a Partisan of Spain, descended from the Family of the Colonna's, altogether Spaniards, chief of the Gibelins in Romagna, and who had always been a Pensionary of Spain, having, as such, accompanied the Conitable Colonna, in his Journey into Spain, four Years ago (14)."

(10) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. 3, pag. 161.

(11) Id. ib. p. 119, 120.

(12) Ibid. pag. 119. See also pag. 161.

(13) Ibid. pag. 253, 254, 300, 301, 302.

(14) Mercurius Francicus, Tom. 10, p. 179, ad Ann. 1624, quoting the Venetian Gazette.

(e) See Remark [H].

(f) Swerter. Athenæ Belg. Valer. Andreas.

(g) See Remark [E].

[A] The King of Spain sent him from Louvain to Trent. See, in Cardinal Palavicini, all the Springs, which retarded or advanced the Deputation of Michael Baius (1). The Writer of Commendation's Life has past over this slightly, and with too much Flattery (2); but the Author of the History of the Council unravels all Commendation's Intrigues very clearly, and gives him only what belongs to him. This Nuncio, being at Brussels, in the Year 1561, took notice of the Differences, which had happened at Louvain, on account of some particular Notions of Baius and Hefels, concerning the Doctrine of Free-will, That of Good-works, and some others. These two Doctors had kept Silence a long time, in condescension to those who had given them that Advice; but hearing that, at the Solicitation of the Franciscans, the Serbonne had condemned eighteen Propositions, and being exhorted by their Disciples to defend their Cause, they prepared themselves accordingly. Commendation put a Stop to This Paper-War, not by his fine Discourses, as Gratiani affirms, but by writing such Letters to the Pope, as occasioned him to give order to Cardinal de Granvelle to enjoin them Silence (3).

[B] He composed several Works in Divinity. He published some of them, the Titles whereof are these, as I find them in Valerius Andreas: De Meritis Operum libri II. De prima hominis Justitia & Virtutibus impiorum libri II. De sacramentis in genere contra Calvinum. De forma Baptismi. All these Treatises were printed together at Louvain in the Year 1565. The next Year these following were printed there; De Libero Hominis Arbitrio liber I.

De Charitate, Justitia, & Justificatione, libri III. De Sacrificio libri I. De Peccato Originis libri I. De Indulgentiis libri I. De Oratione pro defunctis libri I.

[C] Which contained, as was pretended, a great Number of Propositions condemned by Pius V. I say, as was pretended; for the Fact is not yet settled, and I find Michael Baius is very far from granting, that he taught what was imputed to him. "However," says he (4), among those Propositions (5), there were some very different from our Sentiments; others which we never maintained, nor meddled with, in any Sense, but all, or, at least, most, of them, were turned, and expressed, in such a malicious Manner, that the very Form of them alone might make them appear suspicious, especially in the Opinion of those, who had not purposely studied these sorts of Questions." This is the old Game of the ODIUM THEOLOGICUM: That Passion, which occasioned a Proverb long ago, finds Heresies where-ever it pleases; it frames such artificial Extracts, and so proper to exasperate the People, that it transforms, into pernicious Heresies, That, which, when considered with it's Principles, Restrictions, and Applications, is not so much as heterodox. This Passion is contagious: A Physician, who affects to set up for an Informer, from a Motive of Zeal only, finds himself all on a sudden possessed with the Sacerdotal Spirit; he produces unfair Extracts; he divides what he should join, and joins what he ought to divide, and gives the Propositions such a turn, as is proper to make them appear most shocking

(4) In his Letter to Cardinal St. monetta cited by Gery, Apology for the Centures, p. 42.

A METHOD of extracting Propositions out of a Book that one would have censured.

(5) He speaks of those which the Franciscans showed to Cardinal Granvelle, and which were afterwards sent to Rome. See the Apology for the Centures, pag. 42, 43.

(1) Palavic. Hist. Concil. Trident. lib. 15. c. 7.

(2) Anthony Maria Gratiani, Life of Cardinal Commendation, re-consulted by McFlecher, pag. 153.

(3) Palavic. Hist. Concil. Trident. lib. 15. c. 7.

stant Religion [D]. He paid such a Respect to the Pope's Censure [E], that, tho' he did not believe, he had taught any Heterodox Doctrines, yet he would not suffer the Books to be reprinted, which were pretended to contain the censured Propositions (b). Valerius Andreas has committed several Mistakes in speaking of That Censure [F]. We are promised a New Edition of the Works of Michael Baius. It will contain several Pieces never yet printed. The Editor will illustrate it with many Theological and Historical Notes. He has compared the Editions of This Author's Works with the Manuscripts to be met with in the best Libraries. There was a Report, that Michael Baius, to be revenged on the Jesuits, who, he believed, had promoted the Censure of his Doctrine, employed all his Credit in Louvain to cause the Doctrines of Leonard Lessius to be censured there (i). It ought not to be forgot, that the Bull of Pius V was very tender of his Honour [G]. His last Will was a

Proof

(b) Val. Andreas, in Biblioth. pag. 671.

(i) See the Apology for the Censures passed on the two Universities, published by Mr. Gery in 1688.

ing to the Conferences of the Judges. The Physician Francis Blondel will soon afford us an Example. This is not the only Injustice observed in Persons possessed with This Passion: Their double Weights and Measures give us another Instance of their Wickedness. Desire their Censure against their Inquisitors; shew them, ever so plainly, the Justice of your Cause; they will either turn a deaf Ear to it, or pay you with Nonsense. It is Then, that their Charity suffers all, and excuses all.

[D] He wrote some Books of Controversy against those of the Protestant Religion. The same Valerius Andreas supplies us with the following Titles; Responsio ad Questiones Phil. Marini de Ecclesia Christi, & Sacramento Altaris, at Louvain, 1579. Apologia pro Responsione contra Objectiones ejusdem de veritate Corporis Christi in Eucharistia, at Louvain, 1581. Epistola de Statu Inferioris Germaniae unionis cum iis qui se desertores Romanæ Ecclesiæ vocant, & de Juramento quod eorum jussu à Clero & Monachis exigitur, at Louvain, and at Cologne, 1579. He wrote also a Letter de juramento jussu Ducis Alenconii Antwerpæ in prætori concepto & comprobato.

[E] He paid a great Respect to the Pope's Censure. To comment rightly on this Text, I will make use of the Words of the Sieur Gery, Bachelor in Divinity. "This pious and learned Doctor, says he,

"speaking of Baius (6), at the Time of his greatest Reputation, saw, all of a sudden, a Bull appear against Seventy six Propositions, which the Solicitors of That Censure imputed all to him, tho' some of them were none of his, others were turned in a malicious Manner to make them obnoxious, and some others, which the Bull itself acknowledged, might be maintained in a Catholic Sense. They were not satisfied with sending to Louvain, in the usual Form, in 1570; but a second Publication was made of it nine or ten Years after; and they affected to have it done by a Jesuit, in 1580: whom the Society had without doubt solicited, to make a Shew of their Credit. What did Baius do; and what did the Faculty? Nothing else but humbly submit, and, for Peace sake, and the Edification of the Faithful, suppress all the Justifications, Explanations, and Representations, which they might have made." However, it must not be supposed, that Baius wrote nothing in his Justification: His Letter to Cardinal Simonetta (7) proves the contrary; for he shews there, that Dr John Hessel, and himself, had put into Cardinal Granvelle's Hands their Answer to certain Propositions, which he had communicated to them. The Scots forged these Propositions, to cry down Those two Doctors, and presented them to some dignified Persons, without either naming Hessel, or Baius. If I was to be asked the Reason of their desiring to cry down these two Professors, I should answer, that it was because they had introduced a Method of Study, which had the Appearance of an unpleasant Novelty. "After the Explication of the Master of the Sentences, they were for reducing the Study of Divinity to the Holy Scriptures, and to the Writings of the ancient Fathers (8)," and principally to those of St Augustine. This "was not pleasing to Persons possessed with quite different Notions, and particularly to those, who, not being willing to trouble themselves with much Study, think it better to follow the Opinions already received by the Majority, than to be at the Pains of establishing new ones, on the solid Foundations of Scripture: And these Persons imagined, it was with design to point at, and reflect upon, them,

"whenever, in Lectures or Disputes, any Sentiment was advanced different from theirs, or any thing taught contrary to the Maxims they had long received from certain Authors." Baius was not satisfied with writing This Letter (9), but sent an Apology for his Opinions to the Pope, in the Year 1569.

[F] Valerius Andreas has committed several Mistakes, in speaking of the Censure, of Pius V, of Baius (10). I. He reports it for a Certainty, that the Bull of Pius V, against the Seventy six Propositions, was confirmed by Gregory XIII. In the New Edition of Baius, this will be shewn to be false (11). II. He asserts, that most of Those Seventy six Propositions were extracted out of Baius's Books. The contrary will be proved in the New Edition. III. He contents himself with saying, that the Bull of Pius V was published at Louvain, the seventeenth and nineteenth of April, 1570. But, besides that, he should have said the sixteenth of November; he is guilty of some Omissions. He does not say, that the Bull was published either by the Pope's or Cardinal Granvelle's Order, but by the Order of the Duke d'Alba, and by That of the Synod of Meublen. This was irregular, since the Pope had commissioned Cardinal Granvelle to notify the Bull to the Divines of Louvain, in such manner as he should judge most convenient.

However, Valerius Andreas should have expressed who Those were, who gave order for the Publication of the Bull. He ought also to have observed, that, on the Days he mentions, I mean the seventeenth and nineteenth of April, Michael Baius declared his Opinion, in publick, upon the condemned Propositions. His Recantation was extorted from him by wicked Practices. The new Edition will treat of all these things. IV. He says, that some credible Persons told the Pope, that some Divines of Louvain were writing an Apology for the condemned Propositions. It will be shewn, by the Testimony of Toletus, that they were false Informers, who reported these things to the Pope. V. He asserts, that Gregory XIII. condemned the same Propositions anew. This will be made appear to be false. VI. He places the Death of Baius on the sixteenth of December; whereas it happened on the sixteenth of September (12). I do not repeat, what I have already observed, concerning the wrong Chronology of his Printers (13). I ought not to add his making the Year 1551, the first of Baius's Regius Professorship of Divinity: He is not mistaken; but the Epitaph of Baius was not grounded upon This Date, since it mentions That Professorship to have continued forty Years, two Years more than the Calculation of Valerius Andreas requires. These Bulls against Michael Baius may have been multiplied, by some Persons, beyond the Truth, by making no Difference between condemning a Doctrine, and publishing another Person's Condemnation of That Doctrine. In this Sense, indeed, it may be truly said, that Gregory XIII condemned the Seventy six Propositions; for he not only inserted, in a Bull of his own, the Constitution of Pius V, declaring, that he found it in the Pope's Register, and that an entire Obedience ought to be paid to it; but he commanded also, that his Bull should be solemnly published at Louvain, by the Jesuit Toletus, in the Year 1580. M. rillon, great Vicar of Meublen, notified That of Pius V to the Divines of Louvain, in 1567: And, in the Year 1570, he notified it to them again, with a little more Formality.

[G] The Bull of Pius V was very tender of his Honour. The Letter of Baius, which has been quoted (14), adds, "that, after many long Solicitations,

(9) It is quoted in the Bibliothèque Universelle, Tom. 14, pag. 198, as being printed at the end of Baius's Apology at Roan, 1666.

(10) Valerius Andreas, in Fatis Academicis Studii Lovaniensis.

(11) What I say here, and in the Body of the Article, concerning the new Edition of Baius, is taken out of a Memoir, which fell into my hands, and which comes from good Authority.

(12) He has done it in the Bibliothèque Belgica.

(13) In the Citation (c).

(6) Gery's Historical Apology for the two Censures of Louvain and of Dowry, pag. 26, Edit. of Cologne, 1688.

(7) The Sieur Gery, p. 40, produces part of it, which he translates from the Latin, which is printed in the Fests of the University of Louvain, p. 336.

(8) Gery, Apology for the Censures, pag. 40, 41.

(14) Above, Citation (7).

(8) Swert. in Athenis
Belg. pag.
565.

(l) Id. ib.

(m) You will find it in Swertius ubi
supra.

Proof of his great Charity [H], for he left all his Estate to the Poor (k). He founded a College at Louvain, and dedicated it to St Augustin (l). He died the Sixteenth of September 1589, aged Seventy seven Years, and was buried in the Pope's College, of which he had been a long time Principal. His Nephew James BAIUS, Doctor of Divinity, caused a Monument to be built for him with a fine Inscription (m). This Nephew followed his Uncle's steps. He was made Doctor of Divinity in the Year 1586 (n). He was often deputed for the Affairs of the University of Louvain, and executed his Commissions with great Prudence and Ability (o). He was Dean of St Peter's in the same City, and Regius Professor of the Catechism (p). He published some Treatises [I]. He gave all his Estate to the Founding (n) Valer.

Andr. Bibl.
Belg. pag.
401.

(o) Swert.
ib. p. 355.

(p) Valer.
Andr. ibid.

(15) Palavic.
cin. Hiflor.
Conc. Trident. lib. 15.
cap. 7.
Septuaginta novem Baii Positio-nes.

(16) Gery,
Apology for the Censures, p. 43.

(17) Ibid.
pag. 44.

(18) Palavic.
cin. Hiflor.
Conc. Tri-
dent. lib. 15.
cap. 7. n. 12.

(19) In Remark [E] of the Article
ANGLUS
(THOMAS).

A BULL of the Pope, wherein the placing of the Words caused an Obscurity, which was increased by the Omission of a Comma.

(20) St Amour's Journal,
Part. 2. p. 64.
cited in the Biblioth.
Universelle,
Tom. 14.
pag. 201.
See also the Difficulties propounded to Mr Steyaert,
Part. IX.
pag. 180.
and the new Edition of Baius's Works, Part.
II. pag. 235.
& seq.

"which began from the Pontificate of Pius IV, they obtained, at last, a Bull of Pius V, dated the first of October, 1567, which condemns Seventy fix (15) Propositions (16)." It is true, he who brought the Bull, by Commission from Cardinal Granvelle, declared publicly, in the Assembly of the Faculty of Divinity at Louvain, that the first sixty of those Propositions were taken out of the Writings of Baius (17); but, in short, the Bull did not name him; and besides, the Condemnation was expressed very tenderly, since it allowed, that some of those Propositions were capable of a favourable Constrution. Cardinal Palavicini informs us, that, in order to treat Baius with the greater Tenderness, Pope Pius V was contented with causing his Bull to be privately notified to the University of Louvain, by the Bishop of Mechlin; but that Gregory XIII, finding the Evil was not remedied, judged it necessary to make a solemn Publication of it, and deputed his Preacher, the Jesuit Francis Toletus, for that Purpose, who did not oblige Baius to a public Recantation, or put him to any Disgrace. "Hic studuit Baium removere à pravis illis opinionibus, cohortatus, ut sedis Apostolicæ judicio acquiesceret: & perpaucis colloquiis id obtinuit, privata illius retractatione contentus: atque hoc pacto Baius non solum illæsus perstitit, sed ipsius etiam nominis verba Diplomati perperere; quin per illud ejus errores manum tam mitem experti sunt, ut vix viderentur errores, cum aliquæ ex proscriptis positionibus, nullis certis in hac exceptione adnotatis, dicerentur posse sustineri in aliqua minus propria significatione (18).—He endeavoured to bring off Baius from his erroneous Opinions, advising him to acquiesce in the Judgment of the Holy See: This he accomplished after a few Conferences, and was content with his private Recantation: And, by this means, Baius not only continued free from Trouble, but escaped being so much as mentioned in the Pope's Bull. Nay, his Errors were, in That, so very tenderly handled, that they scarce seemed to be Errors; since some of the Condemned Propositions, without particularly excepting any of them, are therein declared to be capable of being maintained in a less obvious Sense." We have observed, in another place (19), the Inconvenience of censuring a heap of Propositions, in such a general and loose manner, that the respective, in the Conclusion, cannot enable us to make any Distinctions. The Bull of Pope Pius V had this Inconvenience; and, besides, left the Reader uncertain, on another account; for, without particularizing any thing, it affirmed, that, among the condemned Propositions, there were some, which might be maintained, in some certain Sense. This was the least that the Bull permitted, and there could be no question, but it permits this; but it might be pretended, that it permitted much more. The placing of the Words produced this perplexing Obscurity; a Comma was omitted: This Omission made the Words capable of two very different Construtions; and That was the occasion of much Contest. See the Latin I am going to quote, and admire the Turns and Chances of Controversies. "Quas quidem sententias stricto coram nobis examine ponderatas, quamquam nonnullæ aliquo pacto sustineri possint in rigore & proprio verborum sensu ab auctoribus intento hereticas, erroneas, suspectas, temerarias, scandalosas, & in pias aures offensionem immitentes, respectivè & presentium auctoritate damnamus (20).—Which Propositions, after having passed our strict Examination, although some of them may in some sort be defended in the literal and proper Sense of the Words, and in which the Authors intend them to be understood, we condemn them respectively, by the Authority of

"these presents, as heretical, erroneous, obnoxious, profligate, infamous, and offensive to pious Ears." That, which the Pagans called the Sport and Caprice of Fortune, is not excluded from this Sanctuary: the pretended infallible Oracle of Rome does not remedy the Mischief. After having taken a great deal of trouble to concert all the Syllables of his Answer, he may see, that his Transcriber, or Secretary, by forgetting one Comma, shall be the Cause of the Damnation of an infinite Number of Persons. Nay, farther, the Comma will do nothing there, whether you place it after possint, or not; the Equivocation still remains. There is no Rule, either in Writing, or Printing, by which a Comma after possint must necessarily confine what follows to the Word damnamus. The most correct Books, which furnish numberless Instances, where Commas placed, as this might be, after possint, do not at all hinder; but what follows, from such a Comma to the next succeeding one, may relate to the Word possint, or any Word so situated.

[H] His last Will was a Proof of his great Charity.] The Apologist for the Censures of Louvain, and Donay, sets this Virtue of Michael Baius against the pretended Miracles of Leffius. "It is a great Miracle, says he (21), to see so much Humility, accompanied with such great Parts and Learning, that even Toletus could not forbear giving him the following Character, which is preserved in Louvain by Tradition: Michaele Baii nibil doctius, nihil humilius, — Nothing can be more learned, or more humble, than Michael Baius. It is a great Miracle, to see so much Submission and Patience, as appeared in his Conduct, in regard to the Pope's Bull. It is a great Miracle, to see a holy Priest, whose many Studies and Occupations have not abated his Piety; and who melts into Tears at the Altar, from a lively Sense of the Sanctity of our Myteries. Lastly, it is a great Miracle, to see so much Charity for the Poor, extending so far, as to desire no other Heirs, and which, for their sakes, stifles all Sentiments of Nepotism, how just soever they might be, in him. This will make Baius always dear to Posterity; whereas a Reputation, supported only by an artificial Pretence to Miracles and Wonders, without Foundation, will soon be lost, and vanish away in Smoke." Cardinal Palavicini reports, that Commen-dan, giving an account, to the Cardinal of Mantua, of the State, in which he found the University of Louvain, in the Year 1561, observes to him, that Michael Baius, and John Hesselius, had taught some Novelties on Free-will, and that they were two Persons very remarkable for their Learning, and good Lives (22); that Ruard Tapper had taken Umbrage at their Union, and thought they valued their Learning too much, though they were otherways very modest and virtuous; "But, adds he, every one places his Pride in the Art he professes, and bears other things very easily. Comperimus sibi esse Ruardam in Theologicis disciplinis præclarum, dum is, in illa Academia docens, in his duobus adbus ætate juvenituli observaret insaufam conjunctionem ingenti & audacie, solum esse dicere se non nisi schisma ab illis expectare, & Theologicam lauream diu ipsis distulisse: eos profecto videri scientiæ suæ nimis amantes, quamvis aliqui probos & modestos: & hæc ille verba sapienter usurpavit, digna quæ à nobis repetantur; sed ejusque iuper bis in ea arte quam profectur fuit est, cætera facile suffert (23)."

[I] James Baius published some Treatises.] A Panegyric on the Arrival of the Archduke Albert, and the Infanta of Spain: Catechismus, sive Institutio-

(21) Gery,
Apology for the Censures,
pag. 37, 38.

(22) Erant ambo & scientia & exemplo vite conspicui.
Palavic.
Hiflor. Conc.
Trident. lib.
15. cap. 7.
n. 7.

(23) Id. ib.
n. 9.

(9) Id. ibid.
Swertius
fory: October 9.

ding of a College [K], and died the fifth of October, 1614 (9). — The new Edition of the Works of Baius, which I mentioned as a thing to come, has appeared since the first Impression of this Dictionary [L], and been condemned at

(24) Ex Val-
ler. Andrea Bibl. Belg.
pag. 401.

num Christianæ Religionis libri IV, and De Venerabili Eucharistiæ Sacramento & Sacrificio Missæ, libri III. (24).

[K] He gave all his Estate to the founding of a College. Swertius asserts, I. That James Baius left the Administration of his Estate to his Nephew Giles Baius, Doctor and Profetor of Divinity, and that he charged him to apply it intirely to the founding of a College, for young Persons of his Country. II. That Giles Baius, in obedience to his Uncle's Will, caused a very fine College to be built, which is justly called BALANUM. III. That this College had been built but few Years; he takes notice in what place. Objectus patris desiderio, augustissimum (Collegium) ab hinc paucis annis extruxit e regione Pædagogii Falconis & BALANUM meritis indigetatur (25). But Aubertus Miræus, who could not be ignorant of what Swertius had wrote upon it, affirms only, that he had read somewhere, that James Baius had designed the Foundation of a College, for the Reception of young Students in Divinity. De altero Collegio Sacrarum Literarum studijs adolescentibus pariter alendis præ præsentemque cogitasse scriptum invenimus (26). Thus Writers deliver themselves, when they can only praise a Man for the good Intentions, which an Author, whom they have read, ascribes to him: For, when they know They have been actually executed, they expressly mention it. Aubertus Miræus, therefore, knew nothing of the building of the Collegium Balanum. Now this Ignorance of so notorious a Fact is something prodigious, in such a Man, as This, who so well knew his own Country, the Spanish Netherlands.

(27) Swert.
Ath. Belg.
pag. 355.
T. 1. p. 2.
quis credidit
in 1623.

(26) Aub.
Miræus de Scriptoribus
Sæculi
XVI. pag.
134.

[L] A new Edition of the Works of Baius — has appeared since the first Edition of this Dictionary. This is the Title of it: Michælis Baii celeberrimi in Lovaniensi Academiâ Theologi Opera: cum Bullis Pontificis, & aliis ipsius causam spectantibus, jam primum ab Romanæ Ecclesiæ ab convictis Protestantibus, simul ac Arminianorum, cæterorumque hujusce temporis Pelagianorum impetibus vindicandam, collecta, expurgata, & plurimis quæ hactenus delituerant opusculis aucta: Jussu A. P. Theologi. Coloniz Agrippinzæ, sumptibus Balthasar ab Egmont & sociorum, M.DC.XCVI. It is a pretty large Quarto, divided into two Parts. The first contains, besides those Writings of his, which were already printed, six or seven Pieces of Baius, which had never been published. The second consists almost intirely of such, as now make their first Appearance, and relate to the Censure of some of Baius's Propositions. One of these is a Chronological Narrative of the Proceedings in that Cause, and was wrote by him, who had the Care of This Edition. This Narrative informs us, among other things, that Michael Baius was induced to form his Method of teaching Divinity, on the Scripture, and on the Fathers, and chiefly on St Augustin, for two Reasons (27). The first was, because the Protestants of the Netherlands boasted to have the Scripture, and the ancient Fathers, on their Side. The second, because many Catholic Writers (28), deserting the Hypothesis of St Augustin, came extremely near That of the Pelagians. Ruard Tapper, and Tiletan, Profetors of Divinity at Louvain, disapproved this new Method of Baius, as soon as they heard of it, after their return from the Council, in the Year 1552: And it is affirmed, that Ruard cried out one Day, What Devil brought this Doctrine into our School, in our Absence? This was the beginning of a furious Storm against Baius: the Franciscans, especially, fell foul upon him. The respective Guardians of Nivelles, and of Leids, sent eighteen Articles to the Faculty of Divinity at Paris, in the Year 1560, and desired their Judgment upon them. That University condemned them all, some, to the Number of three, as false and contrary to the Scripture; and the rest as heretical. Baius made Remarks on This Censure, and had a Mind to communicate them to some Doctor at Paris; but he gave over That Design, when he saw it impossible for him to obtain a Copy of this Decree of the Sorbonne (29). He communicated them to the Provincial of the Franciscans. He shews plainly, that the Sorbonne had censured, as Heretical, what was visibly contained in St Augustin. The Year following, a List was presented, to Cardinal Granvelle, of the Propositions extracted from the Writings of Baius, as was pretended; and yet some of those Propositions were contrary to his Opinions; others he had never disputed for, or against; and most of them were drawn up so artificially, that the very turn of the Expressions might make them suspected either of Falsity or Heresy (30). The Cardinal communicated them to Michael Baius, who returned an Answer not now to be found. The same Cardinal received Orders to impose Silence on the Parties; and by This means the Quarrel was composed: But it was renewed in the Year 1564; for Tiletan endeavoured to obtain the Censures of the Universities of Spain against Baius's Writings (31), and he sent Extracts of them to Pius IV, that they might be condemned. Other Extracts were added to These, and sent to Pius V, who issued a Bull, the first of October, 1567, wherein he condemned Seventy six Propositions. This Bull was neither published, nor fixed up, but was only read to Baius, and to the particular Faculty of Divinity at Louvain, the Twentieth ninth of December, 1567, by Maximilian Morillon, Vicar-General of the Archbishop of Mechlen (32). This Vicar-General being required to give a Copy of This Bull, he refused it. He declared, that he had Orders to prohibit all the printed Books, out of which most of the Seventy six Propositions were said to have been extracted. The Dean of the Faculty represented, That, for great Reasons, it was very necessary, that the Books of Baius should not be prohibited; neither were they. This Doctor wrote to the Pope, the eighth of January 1569, and sent him an Apology, wherein he made it appear, that he had not taught those Seventy six Propositions, and that most of them, if understood in a certain Sense, were true, and the very Doctrines of St Augustin. The Answer, which the Pope returned him, the third of May, the same Year, contained an Exhortation to submit to the Censure. Baius was extremely surprized, when That Letter of Pius V was delivered to him, to see himself treated like a Rebel, who had incurred the Punishment of Excommunication and of Irregularity. He requested Morillon to be absolved from This Sentence, but could not obtain it, without abjuring the Articles, which the Bull had condemned. Summo pre miratus est Baius se cum agere si suas vindicias & apologiam scribendo Pontifici, in eum fuisset rebellis, ac Excommunicationis & Irregularitatis censuras incurrisset: à quibus cum peteret absolvi, Morillonus absolutiois beneficium ei impetiri noluit, nisi prius Articulos per Bullam confixos ejureret (33). From that time every Body was suffered to inveigh against This Doctor, as if he had really taught those Seventy six Articles; they exclaimed against him in their Sermons, and in their Lectures: He bore this Opposition very patiently; but, in the Year 1570, he was advised, by three Bishops (34), to vindicate himself. He explained himself, therefore, on these Matters, in his Auditory of Divinity, and declared, that, among those Seventy six Propositions, there were some, which deserved to be condemned, but which he had never maintained: that others were maliciously drawn up, which he did not admit of, in the bad Construction that might be put upon them, though otherwise they were very capable of a sound Interpretation. Cæpit in Sibus Theologorum quid circa hujusmodi Articulos sentirent, cum multa humilitate ac modestia, aperire: declarans nonnullos ipsorum esse falsos ac jure confixos, sed à se nunquam traditos: alios esse arte ac dolo confixos, qui pravam sensum pati possunt, quem nunquam tenuit, licet & in sano intelligi quoque facile possent (35). In the Month of June of the same Year, 1570, the Bishops of the Netherlands held a Council at Mechlen, wherein, at the Instance of the Duke d'Alba, they engaged to cause the Bull of Pope Pius V to be solemnly published at Louvain, and to be signed by all the Profetors of Divinity. The Commision for it was given to Morillon, who performed it the sixteenth of November, the same Year. However, he could

(30) Id. ib.
pag. 194.

(31) The Censures of the Universities of Salamanca and Alcalá were not passed till after the Death of Tiletan, Idem,
pag. 195.

(32) Ibid.
pag. 197.

(33) Ibid.
pag. 199.

(34) Martin
Richtovius
Bishop of Li-pres, Francis Sonnus Bishop of Boisle-duc, and Cornelius Jansenius
Bishop of Ghent.

(35) Oper.
Baii, part. 2.
pag. 200.

(29) Bail Oper. part. 2.
pag. 197.

at Rome by the Congregation of the Index. It contains many instructive Particulars, and several things, which would carry the makers of Reflexions a great way. The Remark, which I shall give, concerning This Edition will make a good Supplement to this Article. The Editor was very ill treated by Father Dez, a Jesuit, in a Work compos'd on purpose to defend the Church of Rome against the injuries he had done it (r).

(r) Quibus emendatior rat Bani nunc editor.

not obtain the signing of the Formulary, which required the Approbation of the Censure of the Seventy six Propositions. The Faculty of Divinity of Louvain imagined this to be some Snare laid for them, and, though they were assured, by a Letter, from the Bishop of Boisleduc, and the Bishop of Ghent, that there was no Design to surprize them, it does not appear, that ever they agreed to That Signing: But, the following Year, a Decree was made, importing, that the Seventy six Propositions should be held for condemned, and that all the Members of the Faculty should abstain from teaching them, and that all the Books, wherein they should be maintained, should be taken away from the Students in Divinity (36). It is to be observed, that Morillon did not deliver any Copy of the Bull, which he thus solemnly notified. This gave occasion to some to maintain, that it was not authentic, or, that, having been surreptitiously obtained, it would be revoked. Others maintained the contrary with great Heat. Pope Gregory XIII, being solicited by the Spanish Ambassador, in his Master's Name, and by Father Toletus, in the Name of some Divines of Louvain, to apply a speedy Remedy to These Disputes, formed a Constitution the Twenty eighth of January, 1579, wherein he inserted the Bull of Pius V, without approving, or confirming, the same, and without condemning the Seventy six Propositions anew; he was contented to say, that he had found it among the Records of his Predecessor, and to order, that Credit should be given to it. He sent the same Father Toletus to Louvain, in the Year 1580. This Jesuit there solemnly notified the Constitution of Gregory XIII, and asked Baius, whether he condemned the Seventy six Articles, or not. Baius answered, I condemn them according to the Intention of the Bull (37). All the Doctors, Licentiates, Bachelors, &c. declared, that they submitted to That Bull. Toletus informed Baius, in some Conversation, which he had with him, that he was accused of teaching his Disciples, privately, the Doctrines, which Pius V had condemned. Baius denied it, and desired to undergo all manner of Punishments, if That Accusation could be legally proved. But, no Steps being made towards it, Toletus promised to give a good Testimony of him at the Court of Rome, and declared it was false, that the reading of Baius's Writings was forbidden. He propos'd to him the signing of a Formulary, which was very hard; but, however, Baius did it to procure some ease to himself. He was obliged to own, under his Hand, that he had taught many of the Seventy six condemned Articles, and that they were condemned in the Sense, in which he had taken them. "Ei præscripsit (Toletus) quandam Confessionis formulam, in qua fateri debuit multos ex damnatis 76 Articulis à se esse traditos, ac eo sensu proscriptos quo eos docuisset; cui formulæ optimus hic Doctor, undique latebitus ac calumnias obrutus, ut tandem pace aliquid quærueretur, subscripsit die vigesima quarta Martii hujus anni 1580 (38)." He wrote a Letter to the Pope, wherein he declared the Calumnies spread against him, for the Space of twelve Years concerning those Articles, and desired a Copy of the Bull of Pius V. This was granted him, in June, 1580. Father Horantius wrote a Piece against him, the same Year. He complained of two things; one was, that Baius had answered Philip de Marini too civilly (39). Conquerens 1. quod ejus epistola Marini scriptæ nimis benigne fuisset (40). The other, that Baius had affirmed, according to the Doctrine of St Augustin, that the Scripture only is to be consulted, in order to judge of the Church. 2. Quod Baius Augustinum secutus dixisset judicium de Ecclesia esse ex sola Scriptura petendum (41). Baius justified himself, in a Letter, which he prefixed to his Apology against Philip de Marini, in the Year 1581. He was disturbed again in the Year 1585; for his Enemies accused him to the Pope's Nuncio, and required, that he should be examined on certain Articles, which they had drawn up against him (42). It is not known, whether he underwent This Examination.

The Author of this Chronological Narrative takes a prodigious deal of Pains to prove to us, that Mr Leidecker, and some other Ministers are in the wrong to conclude, from That Bull of Pius V, that the Church of Rome has condemned the Doctrine of St Augustin, and favoured the new Pelagians (43). It seems to me, that he shews clearly enough the Invalidity of That Bull, the Dishonesty of those, who made the Extracts, the Negligence of That Pope, and the Precipitation, wherewith he condemned those Propositions, before he had examined the Works, from whence it was pretended, that they had been taken, &c. This Negligence appeared also from the Rules of Grammar not being observed in That Bull (44). It may be alledged, that Urban VIII, in his Bull against the Book of Janjenius, published in the Year 1642, confirmed the Bull of Pius V and That of Gregory XIII. But the Author answers, that Urban VIII, did not confirm those two Bulls, but upon the Supposition of Facts, which were false, and that therefore his Confirmation was void. "Quandquidem ergo Urbanus eas non confirmaverit, nisi supponendo quæ falsa sunt; ex ista confirmatione nullum robur accedit istis suorum Predecessorum Constitutionibus: quod enim in sua origine vitiosum ac nullius roboris est, rati-habitione non fit validum, vel, ut jura loquuntur, Quod initio vitiosum est, non potest tractu temporis convalescere: nec firmatur tractu temporis, quod jure ab initio non subsistit (45)."

— Since therefore Urban did not confirm them, but upon Suppositions, which were false; such a Confirmation could add no Authority to the Constitution of his Predecessors: For what is originally void, and of no Force, can never be made good by subsequent Ratification; or, as the Law says, What is void from the Beginning, can never become valid by any Course of Time; nor does long Usage confirm any thing, which did not legally subsist from the first." This Pope being deceived by Francis Albiizzi, Assessor of the Holy Office, and Penitentiary of the Jesuits, imagined, that the Bull of Pius V had been attended with all due Formality, and had been confirmed by That of Gregory XIII. These were two false Suppositions; for Pius V did not cause his Bull to be fixed up, or to be solemnly published, at Rome: And, as for Pope Gregory, he was satisfied with saying, that he found it among the Records of his Predecessor. Urban VIII, therefore, was made to affirm a Falsity, by inserting, in his Bull, that the Articles, condemned by Pius V, had been condemned anew by Gregory XIII: and, to conceal the Knowledge of This Imposture from the People, care was taken to leave the Constitution of Gregory XIII out of the Bull of Urban VIII, tho' the Bull of Pius V was inserted in it. "Ani-madvertendum est quod Urbanus VIII in Bulla superius memorata enunçaverit quidem à Gregorio XIII confirmatam fuisse Pii V Constitutionem, articuloque in ea confixos denou fuisse damnatos. Verum hæc Urbani VIII Bulla aperit falsi ea saltem in parte convinctur, sicut & ab Joanne Sinibio Lovanienfis Academiæ delegato Romæ convicta est, ex ipsomet Gregorii XIII Diplomate, in quo nihil de ista confirmatione, aut de iterata hujusmodi articulorum dispositione habetur. Ne autem id innotesceret, AlbiZZius, Jesuitarum Rendiarius, qui Bullam Urbani VIII conscripsit, in ea quidem Pii V Bullam integram inseruit, sed non Gregorii XIII Constitutionem, ex qua singulis patuisset ejus mendacium, & quam falso in Bulla Urbani dicitur Pii V Bulla à Gregorio XIII confirmata, proscriptique in ea articuli iterum à Gregorio XIII prohibiti: cum Gregorius XIII duntaxat testificetur tenorem Bullæ, quam inserit, esse planè conformem tenori Bullæ, quam in Pii V regitro invenit; & illi tenori eam fidem adhibenda, dam, (42) Id. ib.

pag. 209.

(43) Id. ib.
pag 210, &
seq.

(44) Ibid.
pag. 235.

* ff. de Reg.
Jur. & o.
Dcret. eod.
Tit.

(45) Ibid.
p. 239. 40.

(36) Ibid.
p. 202, 203.

(37) Divino secundum intentionem bullæ, & fi-cut bulla cordamnat ib.
pag. 206.

(38) Id. ib.
p. 207.

(39) A quo animo Pius non potuit quod Baius humaniori
Stilo fuis ad
Marinixium scripsisset e-pistolam. Id.
ib. pag. 208.

(40) Comprehendit Mar-tinum cum French Ministry, auto complained publicly, in the Year
1608, of Mr
Jacoblet's Letter to the Predict of France.

(41) Id. ib.

(46) Ibid.
p. 242.

"dam, quæ ipſius Bullæ protographo debetur (46).
 "— It is to be obſerved, That Urban VIII, in "his Bull before-mentioned, declared, that the Con-
 "ſtitution of Pius V had been confirmed by Gregory
 "VIII; and that the Articles, therein condemned,
 "had been condemned anew. But This Bull of Urban
 "VIII aſſerts a Faſſity, at leaſt in this Reſpect,
 "as was proved by John Sinnenius, Deputy for the "Univerſity of Louvain, at Rome, and from the Bull
 "itſelf of Gregory XIII, wherein not a Syllable of "That Confirmation, or of a ſecond Condemnation of "Thoſe Articles, is to be found. But, that this might "not appear, Albizzi, Penſionary of the Jeſuits, "who drew up the Bull of Urban VIII, inſerted in
 "it indeed the Bull of Pius V, but not the Con-
 "ſtitution of Gregory XIII, which would have di-
 "covered his whole Fraud, by ſhewing how falſely
 "he had made the Bull of Urban declare, that the "Bull of Pius V was confirmed, and that the pro"hibited Articles were again prohibited by This Con"ſtitution of Gregory XIII; when This Pope only
 "teſtifies therein, that the Tenor of the Bull, which "he inſerts, is exactly conformable to the Tenor of "the Bull, which he had found in the Register of "Pius V; and that the ſame Obedience ought to be "paid to it, which was due to the Original." All "this is much more proper to ſhew the Artifices uſed

 "in the Condemnation of Books, than to confute
 "Mr Leidecker; for, in ſhort, for one Roman Catholic,
 "who believes Baius to be innocent, there are above
 "a thouſand, who believe him juſtly condemned; and "therefore the Church of Rome may, with much like"lihood, be accuſed of holding This Doct's Opinions
 "for Heretical, which are moſt agreeable to St Auguſtin's
 "Doctrinè. This ought to make the Fate of ſome Men
 "pitied. Though Paſſion, Irregularity, and Injuſtice,
 "appear manifeſtly in the Proceedings uſed againſt
 "them; yet, in the Opinion of the Majority, they "will be ſuppoſed guilty. A Judgment againſt their "Doctrinè is ſufficient to ſecure the Prejudices of the "Public. The Adverſary will enjoy the Fruit of his "Frauds and Intrigues; he will conſtantly engage the "Folly of the People on his Side, who generally pre-
 "ſume in favour of Tribunals.

A great Work of Baius is promiſed (47), if this "new Edition goes off well. This will be his Com"mentary on the Muſter of the Sentences, and his Ex-
 "plication of David's Pſalms.

(47) In Præfat.

BALBUS. This Name makes ſuch a Figure in the Ancient Roman Hiſtory, that it is ſtrange the Hiſtorical Dictionaries ſhould pay ſo little Regard to it [A]. If I endeavour to repair their Fault, it is chiefly in reſpect to Lucius Cornelius BALBUS, who was Conſul in the Year of Rome 714, and who had a Nephew, whom I ſhall mention either in the Text, or in the Remarks, as occaſion offers. This Conſul was born at Cadix. He ſignalized himſelf by his great Courage in the Wars, which the Romans carried on in Spain againſt Sertorius, and againſt the Luſitanians; inſomuch, that Pompey, being very well ſatisfied with his great Services, declared him a Roman Citizen. Lucius Gellius and Cn. Cornelius, who were Conſuls a little time after, made a Law, that all thoſe, whom Pompey, with the Conſent of the Council of War, had made Citizens of Rome, ſhould be actually ſo eſteemed. By this means Balbus entered into full Poſſeſſion of his Freedom of Rome (a). He took upon him the Prænomen of Lucius from one of thoſe two Conſuls, and the Name of Cornelius from the other [B]. He was ſo much eſteemed in Rome, that he had the Friendſhip of the greateſt Men of the State, as of Pompey, Cræſſus, Cæſar, and Cicero, and was adopted by Theophanes (b), who was very particularly beloved and regarded by Pompey.

(a) See Cicero in Ora-tione pro
Cornelio Balbo, & ibi Manu-cium & Nicolaum Abramum.(b) Cicero
ib. & Epit.
7. ad Attic.
lib. 7.

[A] The Hiſtorical Dictionaries have paid but little Regard to this Name. They are prodigiouſly barren on the Word Balbus. Charles Stephens remarks, that it was the Surname of the Attilii, and that the firſt of This Family, who was called Balbus, was ſo called, becauſe he ſtammered; and that afterwards his Poſterity preferred This Surname. It is very likely, that This Appellation had the ſame beginning, in ſeveral Families, as it is certainly on the ſame Account, that, in all Countries, ſo many Perſons are named White, &c. And ſince there has been an Emperor of the Eaſt (1), and another of the Weſt (2), who had both of them the Surname of Balbus, or Stammerer, from That Defect in their Speech: Why ſhould it ſeem ſtrange, that, in the time of the Roman Common-wealth, a like Defect introduced This Surname into ſeveral illuſtrious Families? It is not, therefore, for This, that Charles Stephens deſerves to be criticized, but becauſe he miſtook the Attilii for the Atcii, or Atii, and becauſe he expreſſed himſelf in ſuch a manner, as if the Attilii had no other Surname but This: whereas they have had, among them, thoſe of Regulus, Seranus, Calpurnius. Nay, there was one C. Attilius Balbus, Conſul in the Year of Rome 508, and 518, which is, perhaps, the cauſe of Charles Stephens's Error. Mr Lloyd ought to have been ſatisfied with correcting This Article; but he thought it fitter wholly to ſuppreſs it; in Imitation of Thoſe Chirurgeons, who, inſtead of curing the Wound, cut off the whole Limb: Or, as Diſputants ſerve an Objection, when they find themſelves upon pretty much the ſame Terms with Alexander, in reſpect to the Gordian Knot. Mr Hufman neither cured, nor cut off, but retained the Article as he found it in Charles Stephens.

The ORI-GINAL of the Surname Balbus.
Whether Ck. Stephens has rightly applied it to the Attilii.(1) Michael
II. of That Name, who was Emperor of Conſtantinople,
from the Year
810 to 826.(2) Lewis
III. of That Name, who was alſo
King of France, and who died in 879.WHAT Name thoſe who obtained the Freedom of Rome, gave themſelves.[B] He took upon him, in reſpect to . . . the two Conſuls, the Prænomen of Lucius, and the Name of Cornelius. It was the Cuſtom of Rome, that Thoſe, who obtained their Freedom, took upon them the Name of him, who procured them That Honour. It was for This Reaſon, that the Hiſtorian

Theophanes, and his Poſterity, bore the Name of Pompey. I may be asked, Why then did not Cornelius Balbus alſo take the Name of Pompey? My Answer is, becauſe he choſe rather to ground his Right on a Law, than on the Kindneſs of That General.
The Law, I ſpeak of, is That made by the Conſuls L. Gellius, and Cn. Cornelius, with the Conſent of the Senate, in the Year of Rome 682. It imported, that all Thoſe, on whom Pompey had conferred the Freedom of Rome, with the Approbation of the Council of War, ſhould be reputed Citizens of Rome.
"Nacitur, Judices, cauſa Cornelii ex cæ lege quam
"L. Gellius, Cn. Cornelius, ex Senatus ſententia tu-
"lerunt; quæ lege videmus ſatis eſſe ſanctum, uti
"cives Romani ſint ii, quos Cn. Pompeius de con-"ſili ſententia ſingillatim civitate donaverit (3). —
"The Cauſe of Cornelius, Judges, is founded on "That Law, which L. Gellius, and Cn. Cornelius,
"by Decree of the Senate, enacted; which we ſee
"has ſolemnly confirmed Thoſe, as Citizens of Rome,
"to whom Pompey, with Conſent of his Council,
"had reſpectively given That Privilege." Balbus, looking upon Thoſe two Conſuls as the true Authors of the Honour he enjoyed, took the Prænomen Lucius from the one, and the Name Cornelius from the other.
This is much more likely, than what Manutius ſays,
That, though Balbus had been made a Roman Citizen by Pompey, yet he was nevertheleſs obliged for That Freedom to Cornelius Lentulus, ſubje Prænomen, and Name, he took, according to Cuſtom (4). He con-jectures alſo, that This L. Cornelius Lentulus is the ſame, who was Conſul, the firſt Year of the Civil War, that is, in the ſeven hundred and fourth Year of Rome.
To conclude, we learn from hence, that Cardinal Baronius made too long an Enumeration of Titus's Favours to Jſepphus, when he notes particularly, that, beſides the Right of a Citizen, he alſo conferred on him the Name of the Family of Flavia (5). For, in the firſt place, it was Vopæſian, and not Titus, who made him a Citizen (6), and, after that, the Name Flavius was given him of courſe.

(3) Cicero
Orat. pro
Balbo.(4) Manut.
in Argu-
mentis Orat.
pro Cornelio Balbo. See alſo the Note on the next Page: Cicero's Epistles to Atticius, pag. 3.
Edit. Gronov.
Where there ſeems to be an Error of the Preſs.(5) Baron.
ad ann. 36.
n. 12.(6) Joſeph.
in Vita juſt.

[C] Capitulinus

Pompey. It is on account of this Adoption, that Capitolinus names him Balbus Cornelius Theophanes [C], when he says, that the Emperor Balbinus affirmed, that he was defended from him (c). The Prosperity of Balbus raised him up Enemies, who commenced a Law-Suit against him about his Freedom: Crassus, Pompey, and Cicero, pleaded his Cause (d), and gained it. He found himself much perplexed during the War between Cæsar and Pompey; for he had great Obligations to both. It appears, that he gave the preference to Cæsar, but in such a manner, that he endeavoured to bring Matters to a Reconciliation (e). Velleius Paterculus remarks it as a great Temerity, that Balbus was so bold, as to go to Pompey's Camp, to gain over the Consul Lentulus, who was considering at what Price he should sell himself (f). It was by this means, adds he, that Balbus, tho' a Spaniard, opened his way to the Triumph, the Pontificate, and the Consulship. Pliny, indeed, observes, that Balbus was made Consul, and that he was the first Foreigner, who obtained That Dignity (g); but, as for the Honour of a Triumph, he says it was another Cornelius Balbus, a Nephew of This, who obtained it, with the Roman Freedom, the first of all Foreigners (b). We shall see wherein Paterculus's Fault consists. These two Cornelius Balbi were so rich, that the Uncle, at his Death, left Twenty five Drachmas to each Roman Citizen (i), and the Nephew caused a new City (k) to be built at Cadiz (l). The Uncle wrote a History of Julius Cæsar, in the form of a Journal (m). It was, undoubtedly, he, who contracted to very strict a Friendship with Pomponius Atticus [E]. Some have confounded Cornelius Balbus with Cornelius Gallus [F]. We shall shew, that Vellius was [C] Capitolinus names him Balbus Cornelius Theophanes. I give you this Author's words:

"Familia vetustissima, ut ipse (Balbinus) dicebat, à Balbo Cornelio Theophane originem ducens, qui per Cn. Pompejum civitatem meruerat, quum esset suæ patriæ nobilissimus, idemque historiæ

(7) Capitol. in Balbino. pag. 147.

(8) Casaub. in hunc locum Capitol.

(9) Vossius de Hist. Græc. pag. 147.

(10) Tillemont's History of the Emperors, Tom. 3. p. 489.

(11) Strabo, lib. 13. pag. 425.

(12) Cicero pro Cornel. Balbo, non procul init.

"scriptor (7). — Of a very ancient Family, as he (Balbinus) himself affirmed, derived from Balbus Cornelius Theophanes, who was made a Citizen of Rome by Cn. Pompey, being of a noble Rank in his own Country, and also an Historian." Casaubon imagines, that This is to be understood of the Historian Theophanes, born at Myslene, in the Island of Lesbos (8). Vossius (9), Mr de Tillemont (10), and several others, are of the same Opinion. I believe they are mistaken, and it is better to understand here the adopted Son, than the Father. Cornelius Balbus was the Son of Theophanes by Adoption: The three Titles, which Capitolinus made use of, belong to him, and the last only belongs to Theophanes. If I am told, that Balbus was not of noblest Rank in his own Country, I answer, No more was Theophanes in Myslene. It is true, Strabo affirms, that Theophanes had a share in the public Offices, and that he became the most Illustrious of all the Greeks (11). But This does not help us to confirm the words of Capitolinus: Strabo does not ascribe to him Antiquity of Family, or Nobleness of Blood, which raised him above all the other Myslenians; and This is the Point in question, in Capitolinus. So that the Objection signifies nothing, since it would prove too much: And it is enough for me, that Balbus's Enemies did not deny, but that he was of a very honourable Family. Hunc in eâ civitate, in quâ sit natus, honestissimo loco natum esse concedis (12). It is likely, they would not acknowledge all he ascribed to himself hereupon. There is another Objection to be feared. Balbus was Consul, and Theophanes was not: Whence comes it, then, that Capitolinus, who remarked his Quality of Historian, forgot That of Consul, much more proper, than the other, to set off the Nobility of Balbinus? I answer, that Capitolinus is not a Man, from whom much Accuracy, and Judgment, is to be expected. The worst, which may come of it, would be to say, that he applied Balbinus's Pretensions wrong, and that he thought, that Cornelius Balbus Theophanes, from whom That Emperor said he was descended, was the same Theophanes, of the Island of Lesbos, whose chief Glory was That of having been an Historian. I would not absolutely reject this Conjecture; Men of better parts, than Capitolinus, might have taken the one for the other in that place; but I rather choose to say, that he knew Balbus, of Cadiz, was Author of an History.

[D] I shall mention wherein Paterculus's Fault consists. These are his words; "Tum Balbus Cornelius excedente humanam fidem temeritate ingresses, castra hostium sæpiusque cum Lentulo colloctus, Confule dubitante quanti se venderet, illis incrementis fecit viam quibus non Hispanienfis natus, sed Hispanus, in triumphum & Pontificatum affur-geret, fieretque ex privato Consul (13). — Cornelius Balbus, by an incredible Rashness, entering into the Enemies Camp, to gain the Consul Lentulus, whose particular Friend he was, treated several times with him, who was, for some time, considering what Price to ask for his Treachery. By this means, Balbus cleared the way to those Pretensions, whereby, though he was not only born in Spain, as several Romans and Italians were, but also of Natural Spaniards (14), yet he obtained, in Rome, the Honour of a Triumph, and the Pontificate; and, from a private Person, became a last a Consul." I shall say nothing of This Action of Balbus, which Cicero has greatly celebrated in the places I quote (15). I will only dwell a little on Paterculus. Either he says nothing to the purpose, or he affirms, that Balbus was raised to the Consulship, as well as to the Honour of a Triumph, and to the Dignity of Pontiff; and it would be in vain to deny This under pretence, that he did not say, & Consulatum, as this seems to be the most natural Expression, to signify, that Balbus was made Consul: I shall not take upon me to prescribe Forms to one, who spoke so politely, as That Author did; he had his Reasons for altering the turn of his Phrase, when he came to mention the Consulship. But he was mistaken in the Thing, and confounded the Uncle's Honours with Those of the Nephew. That Balbus, who negotiated with Lentulus, in the beginning of the Civil War, is the Nephew, as appears by Cicero's Letters, which I have quoted. It was Balbus the Nephew, who triumphed over the Garamantes, the first Stranger honoured with a Triumph, as we learn from Pliny (16); but it was Balbus the Uncle, who was the first Stranger honoured with the Consulship, as the same Pliny informs us (17). These two Balbus's were distinguished, at Rome, by the Title of Major, given to the Uncle, and That of Minor, to the Nephew. I wonder, that Salmasius, who distinguished the Honours of both very well, did not take notice of this Fault of Paterculus (18).

[E] He contracted a very strict Friendship with Pomponius Atticus. This cannot be denied, when we consider, that Atticus, having resolved to end his Life by starving himself, sent for his Son-in-law, and L. Cornelius Balbus, and Sextus Peducaus, to declare to them his final Resolution (19). I think, I have read, in one of Cicero's Letters, that Balbus was one of those, who were often entertained at Atticus's Table (20). Which would prove, that he delighted in hearing good things read (21).

[F] Some have confounded Cornelius Balbus with Cornelius Gallus. It is in relation to a Fact, which is far from honouring his Memory. They make him die in the Act of Venery (22). Without doubt, the first Occasion of this Mistake, was an Error of the Press. Cornelius Gallus had been put in the List of those, who died in that Condition, on the Authority of Pliny (23); and the Printer using a B, for a G, caused several to mistake the one for the other. I find this Error in several Editions of

(b) Id. lib. 5. cap. 5.

(7) Dio, lib. 48.

(8) Strabo, lib. 3. p. 116.

(9) He was born there, as well as his Uncle.

(10) Sidonius Apollinarius, lib. 9. Epist. 14.

(11) Paterculus, lib. 2. c. 51.

(12) This Explication of the words, which Paterculus makes between Hispanus and Hispanienfis (it, however, his Text admits of it) seems as good as That of Lipsius, who, by Hispanienfis, understood an Inhabitant of Spain; and by Hispanus, a natural Spaniard.

(13) Epist. 32, of Book 10, of Familiaris; and the Comment in Epist. 9, of Book 8, to Atticus.

(14) Plin. lib. 5. c. 5.

(15) Id. lib. 7. cap. 43.

(16) Salmasius in Solin. c. 9.

(17) Corn. Nepos in Vita Attici, cap. 31.

(18) I could not find the place; but I think I have read it in Cicero's Letters to Atticus.

(19) See, above, the Remark [F] of Atticus's Table.

(20) Plinius in Historia Naturali, lib. 10, cap. 16, ex Trajanus, lib. 10, cap. 15, n. 27.

(21) Lib. 7, cap. 53.

was in the wrong to censure Savaro [G]; that Lloyd and Hofman deserve some Censure [H]; that Paulus Manutius is not entirely excusable [I]; that Glandorpius multiplies Persons of this Name unnecessarily [K]; that the distinction of the greater and of Tiraquellus's Commentary on the Matrimonial Laws.

[G] Vossius was in the wrong to censure Savaro.] Whilst he was taking notice of a Fault, which he believed he had found in Savaro's Commentary on Sidonius Apollinaris, he himself was mistaken (24). Savaro had affirmed, that Balbus, to whom Sidonius Apollinaris ascribes the Journal of Julius Cæsar's Life (25), is the same with Balbus Cornelius Theopbanes, of whom Julius Capitolinus says, in the Life of Balbinus, That he had obtained the Roman Freedom by Pompey's Favour, and that, moreover, he was the most Noble of his Fellow-Citizens, and an Historian. Vossius refutes this Pretension of Savaro, I. Because Balbus, Author of the Journal, was an intimate Friend of Julius Cæsar, as appears by Suetonius (26), and by Aulus Gellius (27); whereas Theopbanes was an intimate Friend of Pompey, which was made a Crime of to his Posterity, as Tacitus observes, in the sixth Book of his Annals. II. Because Theopbanes was a Lesbian, and wrote in Greek, and Balbus lived at Rome, and wrote in Latin.

If I had a mind to be over-critical, I might object to these Reasons, I. that the same Balbus, who was one of Cæsar's intimate Friends, was also one of Pompey's Friends; and to far honoured with his Confidence, that Pompey's other Friends were jealous of him (28). It is true, that the Conjunction, which was then between Pompey and Cæsar, having permitted Balbus to cultivate the Friendship of the latter, without failing in what he owed the former, it was at last found, that Cæsar's Favours were superior to Those of Pompey: Nevertheless, Balbus obtained leave of Cæsar not to follow him against Pompey, and retired to Rome during the Civil War (29). It is true, also, that he was Cæsar's Agent there, and that, by endeavouring to bring Matters to an Agreement, he did not appear altogether free from Partiality. But, after all, it is not sufficient, in order to make a just Opposition between Balbus and Theopbanes, to say, on the one side, as Suetonius does, that Balbus was an intimate Friend of Julius Cæsar, and, with Aulus Gellius, that Balbus was one of Cæsar's Agents at Rome, during his Absence; and to say on the other side with Tacitus, that Theopbanes had been one of Pompey's intimate Friends and that Tiberius imputed it as a Crime to Theopbanes's Posterity: For, considering That Emperor's capricious Humour, he was like enough to persecute a Family, under pretence, that it had obtained the Freedom of Rome by Pompey's Favour. Now This would be true in a literal Sense, as to Theopbanes, though he should be confounded with Cornelius Balbus; since it is not only certain, that Pompey conferred that Freedom upon him, but also that he pleaded for him, when they brought it into question, and loaded him with Favours. So that Vossius's first Reason is not good. II. I might say, in the second place, that the Theopbanes, whom Vossius means, lived at Rome, as well as Balbus; and since there have been Romans, who have wrote Histories in Greek, it does not follow, that Balbus is not Theopbanes, because Theopbanes wrote in Greek. Nay, how do we know, whether the Balbus in question be not the Cornelius Balbus, whose eighteenth Book, of the Ἱστορίαι, Macrobius has quoted (30)? Simler does not doubt it (31).

But, without trifling on Disputes, which may be charged with too ferulous a Preciseness, here is the jugulum causæ, and the decisive Point, in three words. Vossius imagined, that Savaro confounded Cornelius Balbus, with Theopbanes, born in the Island of Lesbos, and Author of an History of Mithridates's War. But he has not done this. He has only confounded him with the Theopbanes, mentioned by Capitolinus, and who differs very much from Him of Lesbos, though he has This in common with him, that He also received his Freedom of Rome from Pompey. Now there is nothing more reasonable, than to take the Theopbanes of Capitolinus, for the Cornelius Balbus of Suetonius, and for the Balbus of Sidonius Apollinaris; for it is certain, that the same Cornelius Balbus, born at Cadiz, and honoured with the Freedom of Rome, by Pompey, was, by the Recommendation of the same Pompey, adopted by Theopbanes of Lesbos (32): after which, according to Custom, he named himself Lucius Cornelius Balbus Theopbanes, as Paulus Manutius, and Corradus, have observed; the former in his Argument of Cicero's Oration for the same Balbus; and the latter in his Notes on Cicero's Epistles to Atticus: And both of them have taken this Balbus for the Historian Cornelius Balbus Theopbanes, mentioned by Capitolinus. So that, if there had been any Fault to be found with This, Vossius should have censured Those learned Italians, rather than Savaro, who came a long time after them.

[H] Lloyd and Hofman deserve some Censure.] I say nothing of Charles Stephens; he has been a little too dry on our Cornelius Balbus; but what he mentions of him is not ill chosen. Lloyd has cut off some Words from it, which were not superfluous, viz. That we still have Cicero's Oration for This Balbus; for they are two very different Facts, the one that Cicero pleaded such a Cause, and the other, that we still have his Plea; and it is in the latter Case, that the Readers are mostly interested. Mr Hofman lengthens the Article (33), to inform us, that there was another Cornelius Balbus, of Lesbos, firmamed Theopbanes, that is, to teach us a Fallacy. Lucius Cornelius Balbus Theopbanes is no way different from Him, who was of Cadiz, and who is the Subject of this Article.

[I] Paulus Manutius is not entirely excusable.] I have already touched upon some of his Mistakes; here are yet two more. The one is in his Argument of Cicero's Oration for Cornelius Balbus, and in the Notes on That Passage of the Oration, where mention is made of the Adoption of This Balbus. He there says, most fallily, that Theopbanes was one of Pompey's Freed Men (34): for it was not his Liberty, but his Freedom of Rome, which Pompey gave Theopbanes. "Quid Magnus hic noster, says Cicero, qui cum virtute fortunam adæquavit: nonne Theopbanem Mitylenæum scriptorem rerum suarum in concione militum civitate donavit (35)?—What did our Pompey do, who loves to join Fortune and Virtue to: gether: did he not, in an Assembly of the Soldiers, present Theopbanes of Mitylene, the Writer of his History, with the Freedom of the City?" The other Mistake of Manutius is in referring us, among other Authorities, to the seventh Book of Pliny, chap. 43 (36), concerning the Triumph of Cornelius Balbus the Younger, Nephew to him we are speaking of; for Pliny, in that place, speaks only of the Uncle's Consulship. One may easily be mistaken in such Cases as these. Father Hardouin, on the same Place of Pliny, refers us to a Passage of Paterculus (37), where he only speaks of Balbus the Nephew.

[K] Glandorpius multiplies Persons of this Name unnecessarily.] He ought not to have produced three Consuls called L. Cornelius Balbus. It is to multiply Beings without necessity. He says, the first is Balbus the Elder, whose Consulship he places in the Year of Rome 713. The second is Balbus the Younger, for whose Consulship he says nothing particular, contenting himself to set down the Words of Paterculus. The third is one L. Cornelius Balbus, who, he says, was made Consul for some Days, towards the end of the Year, by Augustus, and had such a vast Estate as to be able to bequeath Twenty five Drachma's to each Citizen of Rome (38). The Truth of it is, These three Consuls make but one; for Balbus, the Uncle, is the same with Him whose Consulship was of so short a Continuance. Do but consult Dion Cassius. To ascertain this Consulship, Father Hardouin says wittily, That Balbus was Consul under the Consulship of Cn. Domitius Calvinus, and of C. Asinius Pollio, in the Year of Rome 714. Consul hic fuit, quoniam ita necesse est dicere, Cn. Domitio Calvinio secundum, C. Asinio Pollio Cæss. Anno Urbis DCCXIV (39). To conclude, if Glandorpius had known any thing of the Passage of Pliny (40), where Balbus the Elder is called Paternal Uncle, Patruus, of Balbus the Younger, he would not have defended to the Quotation of such a bad Authority as That of Volaterranus, to inform us, that

(24) De Hist. Græc. lib. 1, c. 23, pag. 148.

(25) Sidonius Apoll. Epist. 14, lib. 9.

(26) Suetonius in Cæsar. c. 81, misquod by Vossius, cap. 71, and by Moreri, cap. 74.

(27) A. Gellius, lib. 17, cap. 9, ubi be says, that Julius Cæsar and Balbus wrote to each other in Cyphers.

(28) Cicero ad Attic. lib. 9, Epist. 13.

(29) Epist. Balbi ad Ciceron. lib. 9, ad Attic. p. 36, Edit. Grævii.

(30) Macrobius Saturnal. lib. 3, cap. 6.

(31) Simler in Epist. Bibl. Gelfner.

(32) Et adoptio Theopbanis agitata est. Cicero pro Balbo. Placet igitur etiam me expulsum & agrum Campanum perisile, & adoptatum patri etiam a plebeio, Galienum a Mityleneo. Id. Epist. 7, ad Attic. lib. 7.

(33) In Vol. 1. of his Continuation, he has made great Additions, concerning Cornelius Balbus.

(34) He repeats it in his Notes on Epist. 11, to Atticus, l. 5.

(35) Orat. pro Archia: Valerius Maximus says as much, lib. 8, c. 14.

(36) In Argument. Orat. Cicero pro Balbo, ubi, in- stead of quoting the 43d chap. of the 7th Book of Pliny, the 37th is quoted; and, instead of the 24th of Suetonius, the 42d is quoted. This Edition of Manutius is of Cologne, 1582, in 8vo.

(37) Lib. 2, cap. 51.

(38) Glandorpius. Onomastic. Roman. pag. 277.

(39) Hardouin in Plin. lib. 7, cap. 43, pag. 64.

(40) Lib. 5, cap. 5, pag. 54.

and leffer Consulship is chimerical [L]; and that Moreri committed several Faults [M], though his Article of Balbus is very short and dry.

I shall say but little of some other Balbus's, mentioned by ancient Authors. Lucius Lucilius BALBUS, Disciple of Mucius Scaevola, and Preceptor of the famous Servius Sulpitius, was an excellent Lawyer. He flourished about the Year of Rome 670. Cicero says, that Sulpitius exceeded his Master [N], who, by the Addition of a mature Judgment to his Learning, was something slow, whereas his Disciple was quick and expeditious. Balbus's Writings are lost, to which perhaps his Disciple Sulpitius did not a little contribute, by inserting most of them in his own (n). We must not, as Glandorp has done, confound this Balbus with Quintus Lucilius BALBUS the Stoic Philosopher, one of Cicero's Interlocutors in the Books of Natura Deorum (o). Publius Octavius BALBUS was Cotemporary with Cicero, who praises him for his Knowledge in the Civil Law, for his Wit, and Probity, and for many other good Qualities (p). Cicero gives as good a Character of Lucius Octavius BALBUS, who lived at the same time (q). It is likely, that one of these two was the Octavius Balbus, of whom Valerius Maximus reports, that, having saved himself, through a Back-door, from the Cruelty of the Triumvirs, and hearing, that they were killing his Son in his House, he returned back again, and caused himself to be put to Death (r). Appian reports the Matter somewhat differently (s).

one of those Balbus's was the Son of the other's Brother.

[L] The Distinction of the greater, and leffer, Consulship is chimerical. Observe, a little, to what Extravagancy of Thought Men are subject. There are some, who, from these Words Pliny, Fuit et Balbus Cornelius Major Consul, have fallen into the Chimeria of two Degrees of Consulship, and pretended, that Balbus was made Great Consul, or First Consul (41). It was easy to see, that Major, in this Passage, does not relate to Consul, but to the Name. Cornelius Balbus, the Elder, was Consul.

[M] And that Moreri committed several Faults. I. It is only with an it is said, that he reports, that Cornelius Balbus composed a Journal, or Ephemeris, of what happened daily to Cæsar. If he had known, that Sidonius Apollinaris mentioned that Journal, as a Book, which was extant, and also commended it (42), he must have rejected, That it is said. Some will have it, that Symmachus spoke of This same Book, when he wrote to his Friend: "Si impar est desiderio tuo Livius, fume Ephemeridem C. Cæsar's decerptam Bibliotheculæ meæ ut tibi muneri mitteretur. Hæc te origines, situs, pugnæ, & quidquid fuit in moribus aut legibus Galliarum docebit (43). ----- If Livy does not fully satisfy your Desire of having the History of ancient Gaul, you need only take Cæsar's Ephemerides, which I made you a Present of out of my own small Library. This will explain to you the Origin, Situation, Battles, Customs, and Laws of the Gauls." But others pretend, that Symmachus means only the Memoirs Cæsar had wrote himself, and which we still have under the Title of Commentaries on the Wars of Gaul (44). It is, nevertheless, true, that he wrote other Memoirs, under the Title of Ephemeris, as we learn from Servius. Why might not Symmachus speak of the latter? II. The Advice he gives, to take care not to confound This Author with one of the same Name, surnamed Theophanes, who was of Lesbos, as Savaro, and others have done, contains two Faults. We have shewn the first, in justifying Savaro from the Censure of Vossius. The second consists, in supposing, that there was an Historian, born in the Island of Lesbos, whose Name was Cornelius Balbus Theophanes; than which nothing can be more false. The Historian Theophanes, born at Mitylene, in the Island of Lesbos, was indeed Cn. Pompeius Theophanes, because Pompey had conferred the Freedom of Rome upon him; but he never added the Name of Balbus, or Balbus Cornelius, to That of his Family; and there is reason to be surprized, that Vossius should make such a Slip, as to say, that the Historian Cornelius Balbus Theophanes, mentioned by Julius Capitolinus, was Theophanes the Lesbian, who wrote the War of Mithridates (45). III. But again, Why must we take care not to do as Savaro did? It is because Cornelius Balbus dwelt at Rome, and because Theophanes was of Lesbos. Are not these two Attributes incompatible in the same Subject, and can a better Proof be required, for a personal Distinction? See how Errors grow: Moreri, desirg to abbreviate Vossius's Proof, made it incomparably worse, than it was. IV. He goes on thus: I think he is the first, whom Cicero defended against an Accusation, for taking, unjustly, the Title of a Roman Citizen. Besides, that the Expression is so far from being clear (46), that one would think, by it, that the Cause of the Person in question was the first that Cicero pleaded of That kind, which is neither what Moreri intended to say, nor what ought to be said; there is This Fault in these Words, that they ought not to have mentioned this Fact as uncertain; when there was nothing more easy, than to be fully convinced of it, by reading the Arguments of Paulus Manutius, of Father Abram, &c. on Cicero's Oration, pro L. Cornelio Balbo.

[N] Cicero says, that Sulpitius exceeded his Master. Cicero's Thought will be better comprehended from his own Words, than from mine. Read, therefore, what follows. "Cum dicendi causâ duobus peritissimis operam dedisset (Servius) L. Lucilio Balbo, C. Aquilio Gallo, Galli hominis acuti & exercitatus promptam in agendo & in respondendo celeritatem subtilitate diligentique superavit: Balbi docti & eruditi hominis in utraque re consideratam tatem vicit, expediendis consiciendisque rebus. Sic & habet quod uterque eorum habuit, & explevit quod utrique defuit (47). — As he (Servius) had learned to plead under two excellent Masters, L. Lucilius Balbus, and C. Aquilius Gallus, he excelled his ingenious and experienced Master Gallus's great readiness in speaking and replying, by his Subtlety and Diligence; and his learned and judicious Master Balbus's deliberate Consideration of every thing, by his Expedition and Dispatch. So that he both had, what each of them had, and made up, what each of them wanted."

BALBUS, BALBI, or BALBO (JOHN) a Dominican Monk, flourished in the XIIIth Century. He understood Greek, a rare thing in those Days, and much more Latin, than all his Fellow Monks together. He was as much esteemed for his good Life, as for his Knowledge, and some have treated him as a Saint [A]. It was for this reason his Image was placed in St Thomas's Church at Pavia. The Title of his Works may be seen in Moreri, who, instead of referring us to Vossius's Book on the

[A] Some have treated him as a Saint. This appears from the following Passage. "Non vi hà man- cato chi lo riponga nel numero de' Beati, e come tale si vede dipinto nel Tempio di S. Tomaso di Pavia, in luogo eminente vicino al soffitto (1). —

There have not been wanting those, who have placed him in the Number of Saints, and he may be seen painted, as such, in the Church of St Thomas, at Pavia, in a high Place near the Ceiling."

[B] Let

(n) Pomponius, lib. 2, de Origine juris.

(o) Glandorp. Onomastic. pag. 552. In pag. 63, Glandorp takes, for one and the same Person, him who is made Interlocutor in the Nature of the Gods, him who is praised in the Oration for Cluentius, and him who is praised in the Oration against Verres.

(41) See Salmafius, Exercit. Plin. pag. 383.

(42) Quis Opera Suetonii, quis Juvenalis, Martialis Historiam, quivise aut exireum BALBI EPHEMERIDEM FANNO ADARCUA VERIT? — Who can come up to the Style of the Works of Suetonius, the Histories of Juvenius and Martial, or the excellent Ephemeris of Balbus? Sidon. Apollinar. Epist. 14, lib. 9.

(43) Symmach. Epist. 18, lib. 4.

(44) Vossius, de Hist. Lat. p. 64, where he ascribes to Suetonius what belongs to Symmachus.

(p) Cicero, Orat. pro Cluentio, fol. 114, C.

(q) Idem in Verrem O. rat. 7, fol. 40, B.

(r) Valer. Maxim. lib. 5, cap. 7.

(s) Appianus, de Bello Civilis, lib. 4, pag. 601.

(45) See, in Remark [C], Calaubon and others who committed the same Fault.

(46) The Faults of this kind in Moreri's Style are numberless.

(47) Cicero, in Bruto, cap. 42.

(1) Alfonso Fernandez apud Michælem Justinianum in libro degli Scrittori Liguri, pag. 312.

the Latin Historians, would have done well to remark, that John Balbus is far better known by the Name of Joannes de Janua, or Joannes Januensis, than by any other. We shall observe why he went by This Name, and examine whether he be the same with Jacobus de Voragine [B]. We shall make but One Remark for all This, and for what may follow from it.

[B] Let us see why he went by This Name, and — whether he be the same with Jacobus de Voragine.] John Balbus, a noble Genoese, was called Januensis, or de Janua, because he was of Genoa. He says himself, in his Catholicus, at the Word Janua, that he was of a City called Janua, which City is no other, than Genoa: From Luiprandus's Time it was rather called Janua, than Genoa; either to insinuate more clearly, that Janus was the Founder of it, or in regard to the Reason, mentioned by John de Janua, namely, that this City is the Gate of Provence, Lombardy, and Tuscan. He informs us, in the same Place, that he was called Frater Johannes Januensis de Balbis, and that he had wrote some other Books. At the end of the Catholicus, he says, that, after several Years of great Labour, he finished it on the Day of the Nones of March, which is the seventh Day of March, 1286.

Mr Oudin, formerly a Monk of the Order of the Præmonstratenses, and at present associated with the Protestant Church, to the great Satisfaction of the Party, which has great Reason to think itself happy, in gaining so great a Man, and expects many fine Pieces from his Pen; I say, Mr Oudin pretends, that Jacobus de Voragine, Author of the Golden Legend, and Joannes de Janua, Author of the Catholicus, are only one and the same Person (2). His Reason for it is, that all agree they both lived at the same time, were both Dominicans, both of Genoa, and therefore both called Januensis. So that it was an easy thing, for those, who saw the Name of Januensis, at the beginning of several Manuscripts, preceded by the Letter J, being the initial one of the Christian Names Joannes, and Jacobus, to ascribe them sometimes to Jacobus Januensis, and sometimes to Joannes Januensis; which must make two Authors of one.

But I must beg leave to tell him, that his Conjecture receives a severe Blow from the Enumeration, which the Author of the Catholicus has given of his Works, at the Word Janua; for, though there might have been a great Distance of Time, from his ending the Article Janua, to his finishing the Catholicus, yet it is not at all likely, that, if he had wrote any Books, during that time, he would have omitted adding them to the rest in That Article, upon closing That Dictionary. And therefore it may be supposed, that the Catalogue, which he gives under the Word Janua, is of the Year 1286, in which he put the last Hand to the Catholicus. Now it is certain, that Jacobus de Voragine published an Italian Translation of the Bible in the Year 1270. What likelihood is there, that, sixteen Years afterwards, upon mentioning the Books he had given the Public, he should forget one of so new an Undertaking, and, in all respects, so remarkable, as the Translation of the Scriptures into the Vulgar Tongue? It is not at all probable, therefore, that Jacobus de Voragine should be the Author of the Catholicus. However, we shall not determine this Point, but wait for the Information of the Learned, and particularly of Mr Oudin. Dr Cave also chuses to suspend his Judgment of it (3).

This is what I said, in the Specimen of my Dictionary, but now I can speak, in a more positive manner, against Father Oudin's Conjecture: I have, for my Foundation, several good Reasons, from a very able Hand (4). Here is the Extract of a Memoir, which came from Dijon. "I believe, it may be clearly decided, that Joannes de Genoa ought by no means to be confounded with Jacobus de Voragine. The first, who is the Author of the Dictionary, entitled Catholicus, was never cited by the Name of Jacobus. The second, who is Author of the Golden Legend, was never cited by the Name of Joannes. The first is always called Joannes de Janua, or Januensis, because he was, undoubtedly, of Genoa, of the Family of the Balbi. The second, whose Family is unknown, is generally called Jacobus de Voragine, very rarely Jacobus Januensis, and then we either understand Archiepiscopus, or else suppose, that he was called so, by reason of the small Distance between the Borough of Liguria, called Voragine, the Place of his Birth, and Genoa. The first was only a Dominican Monk. The second was raised to the Archbishopric of Genoa. All Authors, and the Dominicans, among others, have constantly distinguished the Names, the Country, and the Works, of These two Writers. This is carefully observed, by Leandro Alberti, in his Description della riviera de Genova di Ponente. James Bracelli, a Genoese, who wrote in the Year 1431, and is Author of a little Book, De claris Genuensibus, makes no mention, there, of Jacobus de Voragine, because he was not of Genoa; but he speaks, in it, with Praise of Joannes Balbus, the Author of the Catholicus, to whom he would not have failed to have given the Stile of Archbishop of Genoa, if he had enjoyed it, as he must have done, according to the Opinion of Those, who confound him with Jacobus de Voragine."

Simler is so far from confounding two Authors in one, that, on the contrary, he has made three of one; for he speaks of Joannes de Janua, of Joannes Januensis, and of Joannes Balbus, as of three different Authors (5). He is farther mistaken, in writing Baldus for Balbus, a Fault, which Quenstedt followed, in his Treatise of the Country of Illustrious Men (6). Martinius also gives into This Fault of Multiplication. It is in the Catalogue of the Dictionaries he consulted to make his own; at the beginning of his Lexicon Philologicum, printed at Bremen, in 1623, and afterward at Frankfort, in 1655, and reprinted at Ulrecht, in the Year 1697. He mentions the Catholicus, which was finished the Day of the Nones of March 1286, and quotes the very Words, at the end of the Dictionary of Joannes de Janua. Immediately after, he names a Summa quæ vocatur Catholicus, published by Brother John de Janua, and printed at Venice, in 1487. It is plain, that they are only two different Editions of one and the same Book, and that the first ought no less to be ascribed to John de Janua, than the second. Martinius would not have failed doing it, had he known what is in the Article Janua, in the Catholicus, finished in 1286.

I find it is not yet rightly agreed, who was the Author of the Dictionary, first entitled Catholicus. Mr du Cange ascribes it to our John de Janua, and says, that neither Papias nor Ugutio, who had made some Compilations before, used This Title (7): But Borrichius, who wrote afterwards, and had seen Mr du Cange's Preface, undertakes to maintain, nevertheless, that Papias is the Author of the Catholicus, and that he finished That Work, in the Year 1286 (8). He had found it affirmed in That Preface, that Papias did not flourish in the Year 1200, as Tribemius will have it, but in 1053, as the Chronicle of Albericus justifies; and yet he lays it down, as a certain Fact, that Papias finished his Dictionary, in 1286. He ought either to have refuted Mr du Cange, or, at least, to have observed, that he was mistaken. This Proceeding, and Silence, serve only to puzzle the Reader. However, it is a strong Presumption against Borrichius, to see, that he places the Conclusion of Papias's Dictionary exactly in the same Year, 1286, that Joannes de Janua finished his Catholicus. The above-quoted Memorial assures me, that Papias did not write the Catholicus, which was finished in 1286, and that John Balbi is the first, who made use of the Word Catholicus for the Title of a Dictionary.

It was a long time ago, that Bartbius, without having consulted the Manuscript Chronicle of Albericus, judged, that Papias was more ancient, than he was supposed to be. Platina delivers it for certain, that he lived in the Time of Pope Innocent III; that is, in the beginning of the XIIth Century, which agrees with Tribemius. Borrichius places him at the end of the XIIth Century. But Bartbius, in the third Chapter of the third Book of his Adversaria, placed him under the Reign of Henry II (9), because This Author carries the List, which he gives, under the Word Ætas, of all the Princes of the past Age, no further than Henry, whom he calls minorum, which he would not have done, if there had already

WHETHER
Joannes de Janua, and Jacobus de Voragine, are one and the same Author.

(2) Oudin, Supplement
de Script.
Ecclesiæ. pag.
501.

(3) Cave,
de Script.
Ecclesiæ. p. 8.
73.

(4) From the learned Dr de la Monnoie.

MULTI-PLICATI-
ON of Joannes de Januas into several Authors.

(5) Epitome
Biblioth.
Grecinæ.

(6) Pag.
307.

OF the Book, entitled Cat-holicus.

(7) Du Cange, *Præfat. Glossæ.
Lat.*

(8) Borrich.
Append.
de Lexicis Grecis & Lat.
at the end of his *Analec-ta ad Cogit.
de Ling. Lat.*
1652.

THE Age of Papias, according to Bartbius.

THE Negligence of the Conti-nuators of Compilations.

(9) He did not live a Year 1244; that Bartbius's Reason seems to trace in mistake.

already been more than two Emperors of the Name of Henry. It is true, that Bartolus raises a Suspicion, which, generally speaking, is justified by the prodigious Neglect of Those, who continue, or enlarge, Compilations. This is, that; perhaps, Papias left the Article Etas just as he found it in some old Dictionary, without continuing the Catalogue down to his own Time. Thus we find, in the Chronicle of the Abbot of Ursperg, in one Place, that the Author was at Rome, in the Year 1102 (10); in another, that he was very young, in minori etate, in the Year 1198, and in another, that he was made an Abbot, in the Year 1215. If the Continuator had cleared up the Matter, with respect to his Additions, we should not have met with so much Confusion.

(10) See Vossius de Hist. Lat. lib. 2. cap. 57. and Bellarm. de Script. Eccl. p. 335. falsely accused by Zeiller, de Histor. pag. 155. of having believed the Number 1102 to be falsified.

BALDUS, a famous Civilian in the XIVth Century, was the Son of Francis Ubaldus [A], a Physician of Perugia. He studied under Bartolus, and, being but fifteen Years of Age, he proposed such a puzzling Objection to him, that he required time to consider of it; and the Answer to it was not given till the next Day. So that those, who say, Baldus began his Studies very late, are grossly deceived [B]. A little after his promotion to the Degree of Doctor, he maintained some Theses, which Bartolus opposed for five Hours together, without being able to obtain the Victory. He often pleaded Causes against Bartolus, and there arose such an Emulation between them, as soon degenerated into Hatred. This cannot be doubted, when we see, that Baldus made it his endeavour to eclipse the Reputation of his Master. What has been said, that, upon consulting the Pandects of Pisa, on occasion of a Dispute which they had, concerning the reading of a Law, Baldus was convicted of several Falsifications, and that he was punished for them in an ignominious manner, ought to pass only for a Fable [C]. He taught at Perugia, and Cardinal de Beaufort was his Scholar there, who was afterwards Pope Gregory XI. He was called to Padua about the Year 1378; but left That University, when Galeazzo Visconti, desirous to re-establish That of Pavia, drew thither, by the power of his Money, the ablest Professors

[A] He was the Son of Francis Ubaldus.] Observe, then, that Baldus is the Christian Name of This Civilian, and Ubaldus his Surname. Moreri calls him, besides, Peter; which is confounding the elder Brother with the younger. Petrus Ubaldus was the third Son of the Physician Franciscus Ubaldus, and was a good Civilian. And so was his Brother Angelus Ubaldus. See Panciroli, in the seventieth, and following Chapters, of the second Book De claris Legum Interpretibus.

[B] Those, who say, Baldus began his Studies very late, are grossly deceived.] It is reported, that he was forty Years of Age, when he began to study the Civil Law, and that Bartolus having said to him, tarde venisti Balde. — You come late Baldus. Baldus answered him, citius recedam. — I shall return the sooner (1). La Motte le Vayer has lengthened Bartolus's Speech, and makes him say, You come late, Baldus, you will be an Advocate in the other World. Sero venis Balde, eris advocatus in alio seculo. I do not believe, that, if Bartolus said this, he intended any Allusion to Cato's Jest. That Censor, to deride Socrate's School, said, That the Scholars grew old in it, that they might exercise their Eloquence in Hell, at the Bar of Minos (2). This Story, about Baldus, has no Foundation. Panciroli proves, that, at the Age of fifteen Years, he started a very puzzling Objection to the famous Bartolus; that, at the Age of seventeen Years, he read public Lectures: and that, four Years after, he wrote a Book de Pactis, and another de Constituto (3). These are the words of that Writer: "Opinionem Bartoli adeo argute contraxit, ut ille argumenti acuminem perterritus respondere non poterit, commendatque juvenem tempus ad solvendum petiit, & sequenti mane respondit. Deinde 17 annuum ingressus solenni interpretatione difficillimam legem publice Baldus explicuit, unde fabulosum est quod vulgo fertur, Baldum quadragenarium ad legum studia accessisse (4). — He objected so ingeniously to the Opinion of Bartolus, that he was surprized with the Force of the Argument, and could not solve it, but, commending his young Opponent, desired some time to answer his Objection, which he accordingly did the next Day. Afterwards, upon entering into his seventeenth Year, Baldus explained a very difficult Law in a solemn Lecture, whence That common Report must be fabulous, that Baldus was Forty Years old, when he first began his Studies on the Civil Law." The Civilian Zafius reports the same Story on the Credit of Paul Citadin; but Tiraquellus rejects it as a Fable (5). "Adducere, says he (6), quod de Baldo vulgo dicitur — nisi scirem hæc esse commentitia & prorsus fabulosa, ut ex iis conflat quæ supra diximus. — I should mention what is commonly reported of Baldus, — if I did not know it to be only an Invention, and a Fable, as "appears from what I have already said." Mr Baillet observes, that la Motte le Vayer, and Father Bartoli, seem to have adopted This Opinion, as of a Fact well attested, — and not a Story made at random. He refers to President Tiraquellus, and to the eighth Chapter of the Elogies of Paulus Jovius (7). He cites la Motte le Vayer, Letter 32, pag. 420, and Bartoli, Car. Hom. lit. pag. 248. I never read, that Tiraquellus was President. Paulus Jovius observes, that Baldus's Parts were not only forward, but lasting: "Præcoci ingenio pene puer, non ad optimam modo frugem, sed rarissimo etiam naturæ dono ad longam senectutem pervenit (8). — A Youth of almost too early a Wit, and which yet not only produced excellent Fruit, but also, by an uncommon Gift of Nature, continued even to a good old Age."

[C] What is said — — — — — that he was convicted of several Falsifications, and punished for them — — — — — ought to pass only for a Fable.*] Some say, the Disgrace, which he received, obliged him to exile himself, and to say, as Scipio Africanus did, that his ungrateful Country should not supply him with a Grave: Publicè traditum patria excessisse ferunt, Et abeuntem Scipionis Africani verba protulisse, ingrata patria ne ossa quidem mea habeat, ac in voluntario exilio senem defunctum fuisse (9). Others say, that he was condemned to be marked with a hot Iron on the Forehead, and that Bartolus protected him. Jafon had heard of it; but he was very much in the wrong to immortalize This Hear-say in his Works. Such Reports should never be so far honoured, but in these two Cases; the one, when they are extremely probable; and the other, when they are to be branded with a Note of Reprobation; that is, refuted and hissed at. In this latter case, it is very useful to mention such Traditions, because nothing is more proper to make one suspect the Reports of Fame, than to shew the foolish and ridiculous Credulity of foregoing Ages. To prove demonstratively, that Jafon's Hear-say is a Fable, there needs no other reason than this. Jafon knew it only by Hear-say; if the thing had been true, he would have read it in an hundred Places. Baldus lived a very long time with great Honour: He wrote Books; he consulted whom he thought fit; he had some formidable Opponents and Adversaries. We may be perfectly assured, that, if he could have been reproached with an Infamy, it would have been done in more than one Book. It is there, that Jafon, and all the World, would have learned This Disgrace. It is the Misfortune of learned Men, who make themselves eminent, and write much, that, sooner or later, they will be publicly reproached with the least Faults of their Youth. If other Authors become their Enemies, they must expect satirical Romances, rather than the Discretion of an Adversary. Thus Panciroli should have apologized for Baldus; he should have

(7) Baillet's Famous Children; pag. 420.

(8) To 76 Years of Age.

* One Falsification related to the Law Creditor, the first of the Digest de distractione Pignorum; in which, they say, he was proved to have suppressed an n. Baldus defended Falsitas, not by denying the Fact, but by alleging, in his Favour, the Law Ad Restit. 318 of the Digest de Pænis, which qualifies the Rigour of the Law, where the Offender is, otherwise, of great Merit. R. x. m. c. x. i. r.

(9) Panciroli. ibid. p. 201.

IN WHAT manner an Author ought to report a Hear-say.

(1) Panciroli. de claris Legum Interpret. l. 2. cap. 70. pag. 201.

(2) Plot. in Catone, p. 350.

(3) Panciroli. ubi supra, p. 203.

(4) Ibid. p. 200, 201.

(5) Zafius, apud Tiraquell. de Jur. Primi. gen. Pref. n. 206.

(6) Tiraquell. ibid.

fors he could meet with. A quick Repartee, which Baldus made, the first time he appeared in the College of Pavia, caused him to be admired [D]. He had a formidable Colleague there, whose Name was Philip Cassolus. This was a Man of an excellent Memory, and great Parts; but the good Opinion he had of his own sufficiency having put him upon giving a Challenge, he was overcome, and his Glory sacrificed to That of Baldus [E]. The Death of Philip did not free his Competitor from trouble; for there was such a warm Emulation between the Professor, who succeeded him, and Baldus, that they introduced the shameful and pernicious Custom of bribing Auditors by Supplications. Baldus raised a great Fortune [F]. He composed a great many Books, and there is no probability of his having studied but two Hours in a Day [G]. He must not be produced as an Instance of an Author without Faults; had he only had That of contradicting himself, he would fall very short of Perfection; but he had a great many others [H]. The Excuses he made for his Contradictions deserve to be considered [I]. He died the Twenty eighth of expressly, and openly, made use of this Observation, and not have only said; "Quæ omnia falsa esse & "alii potius evenisse non dubito, cum nulla de hoc "certa extet auctoritas, & cum Ticini decessisse con- "flet (10). All which I conclude to be false, and ra- "ther to have happened to some other Person, since we "find no good Authority for it, and are certain, that "he died at Pavia."

[D] A quick Repartee, which Baldus made - - - - - caused him to be admired. He was of a small size, so that, as soon as he appeared in the Auditory, they cried out, Minuit præsentia famam, - - - His Presence lessens his Fame. He answered, without altering his Countenance, Augebit cætera virtus, - - - Virtue will enlarge every Thing else. Pancirollus adds, Quo dicto omnibus sui admirationem injectit (11). — Which Reply made him much admired by all.

[E] The Glory of Cassolus was sacrificed to That of Baldus. Cassolus had engaged himself to answer, upon the Spot, all Questions proposed to him concerning last Wills. The Day and Hour were appointed to make good this Challenge. The Assembly was numerous: Baldus stood up, and proposed a Question, which Cassolus could not answer. Baldus was obliged to shew the Law in Question. Judge whether the Challenger was mortified. "Philippus, qui, ut "memoria cæteris antecellebat, ita superbo titulo "Doctorum Doctor vocabatur, ingenio fretus, se ex "omnibus ultimarum voluntatum questionibus ex "tempore responsum professus est. Statuta ad "dicendum die, cum in magnâ expectatione esset, "surgens Baldus interrogavit, Ubi in jure cautum "reperiretur, parem non esse ejus, qui non vult, "ei, qui non potest, conditionem. Ad primam in- "terrogationem hæsitante Philippo, cum Baldus de "proposita questione legem ostendisset, magnam "gloriam retulit (12). — Philip, who, as he ex- "celled all others in Memory, so also was called by "the proud Title of Doctor of Doctors, depending "upon his Abilities, undertook to satisfy extempore "all Questions concerning last Wills. The Day ap- "pointed being come, and great Expectation raised, "Baldus, standing up, asked, Where it was, that the "Civil Law had provided, that the Case of him, who "would not, should be esteemed quite different from "That of him who could not. Philip being puzzled "at the first proposing the Question, Baldus produced "the Law required, and gained great Glory."

[F] Baldus raised a great Fortune. The Opinions he gave only on the Point of Substitution, brought him in above Fifteen thousand Crowns: "De jure "respondendo immensam pecuniam coëgit, qui ex "solis substitutionum speciebus plus quindecim millia "aureorum lucratus fuisse traditur. Aliunde præ- "terea ex innumeris aliarum successio-nis crimi- "numque causis & contractibus peramplas opes "accumulavit (13). — He got a prodigious Sum "of Money by his Practice in Law, so that one only "Article of Substitutions is said to have procured him "Fifteen thousand Crowns. Besides innumerable "Causes of other Successions, and criminal ones, and "Contracts, by which he heaped up immense Riches." He had several Lands, and lived in a pleasant Country-House near Pavia, from whence he came on his Mule to the Auditory. Pancirollus adds (14), Domus vestustate vitiatâ abduc bodie pro re memoranda ostentatur. - - - The Ruins of the House are still shewn as a Curiosity.

[G] There is no probability of his having studied but two Hours in a Day. Pancirollus, confuting this, relates, among other Things, that Baldus, going a Journey, which hindered him from spending so much of his Time in reading, as he was used to do, said, At every Step of my Horse's Foot, I lose a Law out of my Head. — Quot gradus equus ambulabat, tot leges sibi excidere querebatur (15). It is a Sign he had acquired, and still retained his Knowledge, by much reading.

[H] But he has a great many Faults. He advances a thousand Things singular, and contrary to the Opinion of other Civilians, and without quoting any Law: they are only his own Fancies: He quotes Laws nothing at all to the Purpose: he treats of many things quite out of their Order: he is too barren on the essential Part, and too prolix on the useless: He answers Questions no Body ever asked: and answers nothing to what every Body asks: He confounds himself by his own Subtilties, and gives himself too much liberty: The Vivacity of his Wit is the Cause of the want of Uniformity in his Opinions. "Cum "parum sibi constans sæpenumero contrarius reperia- "tur, id tamen non levitate, sed ingenii subtilitate "evenisse Paulus Castrensis autumat (16). — His "Inconsistencies, and very often downright Contra- "dictions, Paulus Castrensis thinks to be owing not "to the Levity, but Subtilty, of his Parts." Those, who have a quick Imagination, have commonly but a short Memory; and this is the Reason why they do not remember, when they consider a Question in one view, that formerly they maintained it in another sense. They contradict themselves without knowing it. Add to this, that a subtle Wit easily invents Arguments to prove and disprove the same things. But it is a great Defect not to be capable of suspending the Effects of This Subtilty, till the Mind is perfectly settled.

[I] The Excuses he made for his Contradictions deserve to be considered. He said, that our Under- standing alters, and that he therefore argues one Day after one manner, and another Day after another. I believe he referred to himself, in petto, the Privilege, which he attributed to Legislators. The Bishop of Pavia asked, one Day, why the Laws were so changeable: Baldus answered him, that the same things become either lawful, or unlawful, according to the Times. In time of War some things are permitted, which are forbid in time of Peace: Therefore Justice enjoins all things, which become proper to the Times; such a Conduct is proportioned to the present Circumstances, therefore it is just. Those, who make Laws, imitate Physicians, who permit, order, and forbid, the same things, according to Times and Seasons; these are what they observe. Ipse quoque se excusat, quod Intellectus, qui ratiocinatur, non semper sit idem, sed varius; & Episcopo Ticinensi sæpè interroganti, cur toties Leges mutarentur, respondit, flagrante bello permittitur, quod pacis tempore non licet, id ita justum esse, quod cuique suo tempore expedit, exemplo enim medicorum tempora à legum lateribus dicebat observari (17). This was Baldus's Answer; and This is either implicitly, or explicitly, the Principle, on which Authors argue, who confute themselves, when they are to dispute against two sorts of Enemies. This Proposition is true and good, this Day, while I dispute against Pelagius; in a Year's Time it shall not be so, if I am to dispute against Calvin. See what has been said, above, concerning the Contradictions of Advocates, and the Apology Cicero makes for them (18). I remember to have read, that certain Controversitists, not being able to deny, but that the Church commands certain things, which roll. ibid.

(10) Panci-
pag. 222.

(11) Ibid.
pag. 203.

(12) Id. ib.

(13) Ibid.
pag. 204.

(14) Pag.
203.

(15) Ibid.

(16) Ibid.
pag. 203.

(17) Ibid.

(18) In the Remarks [B] and [C] of the Article
ANTONY (MARC) the Orator.

of April 1400 [K]. His Death was something Tragical: He had a little Dog, which he loved very much, and plaid with, and kissed very often. In one of these Careffes he was bit by the Lip, and the Dog, being mad at that time, communicated a subtle Poison to the Body of Baldus, which had no effect for a long time; but at last it produced the Hydrophobia, or Dread of Liquids, and caufed an incurable Distemper (a). Baldus lived Seventy fix Years (b), and left two Sons, who proved good Civilians (c). Zenobius, the Eldest, was Bilhop of Tiferno (d).

(a) Taken from Pancirollus de claris Leg. Interp. l. 2. c. 70, pag. 201, & seq.

(b) P. Jovius, Elog. cap. 8, pag. 27.

(c) Pancirollus. ibid. p. 203.

(d) Ibid.

which do not seem agreeable either to Scripture, or to the Primitive Church, have maintained, that they were nevertheless just and true, because the Holy Spirit, who guides the Church, inspires her in every Age with such Interpretations, as are most proper for the good of Souls. "Scripturas esse ad tempus adaptatas & variè intellectas, ita ut uno tempore secundum currentem universalem ritum exponerentur, mutato ritu iterum sententia mutaretur (19). Non est mirum si praxis Ecclesie uno tempore interpretatur Scripturam uno modo, alio tempore alio; nam intellectus currit cum praxi (20). — That the Scriptures are adapted to the Times, and to be variously understood, so that they shall be explained at one time, according to the Universal Usage then prevailing: if this Usage comes to alter,

"so must the Interpretation. — It is no wonder if the Practice of the Church interprets the Scripture at one time in one way, at another time in another; for the Understanding goes along with the Practice." I love this plain dealing.

[K] He died the Twenty eighth of April, 1400.] His Epitaph confirms it; so that Bellarmin is deceived in placing the Death of Baldus in the Year 1400 (21). Trithemius, who placed it in the Year 1423, asserted a Fallshood; but Mr Moreri, who said, that, according to Trithemius, the Death of Baldus ought to be placed in the Year 1423, was not in the wrong. The Dutch Edition of his Dictionary ought not to have made the Correction of 1403, instead of 1423.

(19) Nicolaus Cusanus, Epist. 2. ad Bohemos.

(20) Idem, Epist. 7.

(21) Bellarm. Script. Eccles. pag. 33a.

BALDUS (JAMES), one of the best Latin Poets Germany produced in the XVIIth Century, was born at Ensfeldheim, in 1603. He turned Jesuit in the Year 1624. He taught Rhetoric and Literature for six Years; he was a Preacher many Years, and preached also at the Court of the Elector of Bavaria, and acquired an extraordinary Reputation by his Poems. There were none, even among the Protestants themselves, but praised them in a singular manner [A]. One of his last Works was his Urania victrix, seu Animæ Christianæ Certamina adversus illecebras quinque sensuum corporis sui. Pope Alexander VII was so pleased with it, that he sent his Medal in Gold to the Author. Father Baldus consecrated it to the Blessed Virgin [B]. Some Senators of Nuremberg disputed which of them should have his Pen [C], and it is said, that He, to whose share it fell, kept it in a Silver Case. This Poet died at Neubourg the Ninth of August, 1668. His Poetry is of a miscellaneous kind; and consists of Panegyrics, Treatises of Morality, Pieces for the Stage [D], Pieces of Devotion, Sylvas, Odes, &c (a).

[A] Even the Protestants ——— praised his Poems in a singular Manner. Father Southwell expresses himself upon this, in these terms: "Ipsi Aca- tholici etiam adeo placerunt, ut publico typo cum Horatium Germanum nominare non dubitarent. — The Non-Catholics were so pleased with them, that they did not scruple to name him, in print, the German Horace." If I am not mistaken, this is grounded on a Letter of Barleus. Father Baldus, having seen the Verses Barleus had wrote in Praise of the Duke of Bavaria, wrote a very obliging Letter to him, and sent him a Volume of his Poems. Barleus returned him Thanks for it, with great Complements, and said to him, among other things: "Resistit nobis lyram neglectam diu & intermissam, ut jam merito vocari possis lyricorum scriptor, aut potius Bojorum fidicen lyrae, ut ad Horatii verba alludam (1). — You have restored the Lyre a long time neglected and unstrung, so that you may now be justly called a Lyric Writer, or rather Master of the Bavarian Lyre, that I may allude to the Words of Horace." This Letter was written the first of March, 1644. The Jesuit was then Rector of the College of Munich (2).

[B] He consecrated a Medal of Alexander VII to the Blessed Virgin.] This is what Southwell says of it. "Hanc verò Jacobus Deiparæ Virginis anathema appendit, ut palam faceret cui Palladi ipse

"suos labores consecraret (3). — This Medal, James consecrated to the Virgin Mother of Christ, that it might shew who was his Minerva, and Patroness of all his Labours."

[C] Some Senators of Nuremberg disputed which of them should have his Pen. "I do not know, says Mr Baillet (4), whether he, who preserved it in a fine silver Case, made on purpose for it, did not commit a Sacrilege; because it seems to me, that Father Baldus had consecrated it to the Holy Virgin, and that his Intention was, that it should be hung up on one of her Images, or over one of her Altars, as Lipsius had formerly done in a like Fit of Devotion."

[D] His Poetry ——— consists of Pieces for the Stage.] There is one of them, which bears this Title: Poësis Osca, five Drama Georgicum de Belli malis & Pacis bonis carmine antiquo, Attellano, Osco, Casco (5). How rustic soever this Piece, and the Osque and Casque Gibberish, in which it was composed, may seem, yet I do not question, but that it cost the Author both more Time and Wit, than a grave Piece in good Latin. We must be cautious therefore of believing, that it was printed at Munich, in the Year 1617, as Father Southwell asserts. James Baldus was not capable of executing such an Undertaking at the Age of fourteen Years.

(1) See the 467th Letter of Barleus, pag. 911. See also the 487th, written to the same Baldus.

(2) See the Table of Barleus's Letters.

(3) Sotuel, Biblioth. Soc. Jef. pag. 356.

(4) Judgment on the Poets, Tom. 5. n. 1507, pag. 45.

(5) Compare this with the Dialogue of Mariangelus Accursius which I have mentioned in the Remark [F] of his Article.

(a) His Great Grand-Father left the Name of Cantagallina, an illustrious Family of Perugia, from which he was descended, and took this Name. Scharlonein. See below, Citation (c).

BALDUS (a) (BERNARDIN), Abbot of Guastalla, born at Urbino in the Year 1553, was one of the most learned Men of his time. He made such great Progress under his first Tutors, that he found himself able to translate the Phænomena of Aratus into Italian Verse, while he was yet but a young Scholar. His Father, perceiving by these early Trials, that he had a very promising Son, sent him to Padua in the Year 1573 [A]. Bernardin studied Homer there under Emanuel Margunius (b), and

[A] His Father, perceiving his Capacity, by these early Trials ——— sent him to Padua.] Correct, by this, a Fault of Nicus Erythraeus. I am sure he had no Intention to lessen the Fame of our Baldus in any thing, and yet he did lessen it very much; but it was done inadvertently, and for want of observing the order of Time. He has said, that after the Lectures of Margunius (1), Baldus thought himself sufficiently

(b) He was of Candia, and Professor of the Greek Tongue at Padua.

(1) Not Margunius, as it is in Erythraeus.

(c) De Tormen's R. I. lica & eorum inventibus.

(d) Libros ex de Auli eruditissimos, methodo analytica conscripti. Scharlencius. See the following Citation.

and, by himself, almost all the other Greek Poets, and understood them very well. He composed a Book at Padua concerning Machines of War (c), which made his Name fly beyond the Alps, and increased his desire of understanding French and High Dutch; for he thought it was a piece of good Manners to learn the Language of those, whose Affection he had acquired. He became Master of those two Languages with a great deal of Ease. He was forced to leave Padua on account of the Plague, and, being returned to Urbino, he applied himself for five Years to Frederic Commandino, an excellent Professor of Mathematics, and learned of him all the parts of That Science. He was extremely sorry for the Death of That learned Man; and, having applied himself to write his Life, this drew him into a design to write those of all the Mathematicians. He laboured twelve Years about it. The Commentaries, which he published in 1582, on Aristotle's Mechanics, discovered his Capacity in that sort of Knowledge. To unbend his Mind in those difficult Studies, he wrote a Poem in his Mother-Tongue concerning the Art of Navigation. Ferdinand de Gonzague, Prince of Mossetta, and Lord of Guaftalla, being a great Lover of Mathematics, would have our Baldus near him. In That Court he began to write on Vitruvius, and composed the Book, De verborum Vitruvianorum significazione. A Fit of Sickness having hindered him from taking a Voyage into Spain with his Master, he employed the leisure Time, the absence of Ferdinand de Gonzague gave him, in writing a very Methodical Treatise of the Court (d), and several other Works [B]. He was made Abbot of Guaftalla in 1586, without ever once asking it; and, from that time, he applied himself wholly to the Study of the Canon-Law, the Fathers, and Councils, and the Oriental Languages, without excepting the Arabic [C]. Having composed five Books, De nova Gnomonice, in the Year 1595, he translated, in the following Year, the Chaldee Paraphrase on the Pentateuch, and enlarged it with Commentaries; after which he translated the Book of Job, and the Lamentations of Jeremiab, from the Hebrew, and added Notes to them. He spent some spare Hours in explaining a Plate, which is at Eugubio [D], on which there are some old Tuscan Inscriptions. He began sufficiently able to translate some Greek Poems into his Mother-Tongue: "Apud quem tantum profecit, ut eo duce & cererum quodammodo lucente obfus-

"rissima Græcorum quorundam poetarum loca pene"traverit ----- Quamobrem eâ est incensus animi
"alacritate atque fiducia, ut ausus sit poemata Græca
"in nostrum sermonem convertere (2). — Under "whom he made such Proficiency, that, by his Instra-"ction, and, as it were, shewing a Light, he was able "to understand the most difficult Passages of certain
"Greek Poets — This gave him so much Spirit "and Courage, as to attempt the Translation of some "Greek Poems into our Language." He had translated a Poem of Aratus before he went to Padua.

[B] He wrote several other Works.] This Remark shall only contain the Titles of some of our Baldus's Writings; I mean those, which have not been mentioned in the Text of this Article, whether the Author composed them during his Master's Voyage, or at any other time. I say, then, that he translated Heronem de Automatis & Balistis; the Parasymenon of Quintus Calaber, and the Poem of Museus; and wrote a Book of Mathematical Paradoxes; another, of Scamillis imparibus Vitruvii; another, of Firmamento & Aquis; another on the Description of the Temple by Ezekiel; another, De Historiæ scribendæ Legibus; another, of the Antiquities of Guaftalla; the Life of Frederic, and that of Gui Ubaldus, Dukes of Urbino; Oeconomia Tropologica in S. Matthæum; several Latin and Italian Poems, among which That, intitled Deipnobe, is an Imitation of the Cassandra of Lycophron. The following Remarks will give the Title of some of his other Books. I shall observe here, that Nicetus Erythraeus has reason to say, that the Description of the Temple is a very difficult Matter, but he was in the wrong to take Jeremiab for Ezekiel. "Jerofo"lymitani templi — descriptionem, says he (3),
"per Hieremiam literis consignatam & traditam, rem
"involutam & multis difficultatibus obfessam, evoluit,
"illustravit, atque hominum intelligentiæ aperuit. —
"The Description of the Temple of Jerusalem, left us,
"in writing, by Jeremiah, a Subject obscured and at"tended with many Difficulties, he cleared and illu"strated, and made universally intelligible."

[C] He applied to the Study of the Oriental Languages, without excepting the Arabic.] He studied it at Rome, with John Baptist Raimondi, and also the Slavonian Tongue, with so much Application, that he was almost a Stranger to all manner of News. Romæ dum viveret fere nescivit quid gereretur in aulis: Arabicæ enim linguæ cum Jo. Baptista Raimondil diligentissime studuit, & arcana industria Slavonicæ, quam perfectè callabat (4). He translated the Geographical Garden of an anonymous Author out of Arabic, and composed a Dictionary of that Language. He believed, that this unknown Author lived towards the end of the Xth Century. If Marc Velsius had lived, he would have caused the Translation of that Geographical Work, and the other Writings of Baldus, to be printed (5).

[D] He took pains in the explaining of a Plate, which is at Eugubio] Scboeckius, having but a confused Notion of this Work of Bernardin Baldus, ascribed another to him, which is none of his. "Elerquilinio Anniano Bernardinus Baldus nuper collegit Antiquitates Etruscas anno 1637. Florentiæ evulgando volumin typis perquam elegantibus cujus hæc inscriptio; Etruscarum antiquitatum fragmenta quibus urbis Romæ aliarumque gentium primordia, mores & res gestæ indicantur, à Curtio Inghiramioreperta Scornelli prope Valterram anno salutis M.D.C.LXXXVII. Etrusci vero CCCCXCCCXCV (6). — *Bernardin Baldus lately collected the Antiquities of Tuscany, out of some Rubbish at Annum, in the Year 1637, and published a Volume at Florence, in a very neat Character, with this Title; Some Fragments of the Antiquities of Tuscany, shewing the Origin of the City of Rome, and of other States, together with their Customs and Transactions, found by Curtius Inghiramius, at Scornelli, near Valterra, in the Year of Christ, 1637, of Tuscany, 3495." How could a Man, who knew that Baldus died in the Year 1617, commit such a Mistake? What is the more surprizing, is, that the same Scboeckius, after speaking in this Manner, at the Sixty seventh Page, speaks, as he ought to do, in the Two hundred and seventeenth Page. "Simili ratione egit Bernardinus Baldus, vir cæteroquin longè doctissimus, annis abhinc ferme quinquaginta evulgando suam quasi divinationem in tabulam Æneam Eugubinam linguâ Etruscâ veteri perscriptam, simul abutendo operâ Marci Velsirii viri cæteroquin judiciosissimi (7). — Such was also the Conduct of Bernardin Baldus, otherwise extremely learned, who, about fifty Years ago, upon publishing his Conjecture upon a Copper-Plate, engraved in the old Tuscan Language, at the same time reflected upon the Work of Marcus Velsius, a Man otherwise very judicious." Why then did he not correct his Mistake? Perhaps he had forgot it, as it happens but too often to those, who are fond of writing much. They can hardly maintain that Character, without copying, in haste, whatsoever they find in all manner of Books. See what *Scharlencius

(4) Fabricius Scharlencius in ejus vita.

(5) Id. ib.

(6) Schoeckius de Fabula Hamelendi, p. 67.

(7) Ibid. p. 217.

(2) Nic. Erythr. Pinac. l. pag. 4.

(3) Id. ib.

began a very great Work in the Year 1603, I mean A Description of the World. His Plan was no less Historical than Geographical, and extended to the least Boroughs of which the Modern Writers have said any thing. He finished the whole Work, as to the Matter [E], but put only part of it in Order. He died the Twelfth of October 1617, after having laboured under a great Rheum for forty Days (e) [F]. He was extremely laborious [G], without Ambition, or Vain-glory, always ready to excuse other Mens Faults, which he grounded on a very good Reason [H]; very devout, not only for a Mathematician, but also for a Churchman [I].

(e) Taken from a Letter of Fabricius Scharloncinus ad illustriſſimum & reverendiſſimum dominum Lælium Rurinum, Episcopum Balneoregensem, ex-Nunquium Apulicum ad Poloniam regem. See also Niclaus Erythraeus, Pinacoth. I. pag. 4. and the Funeral Orat. on of Baldus, by Marc Ant. Virgilius, not printed in 1607, as Mr. Tiesher says, Bibl. p. 220, but in 1617.

nus says concerning this Work of Baldus. "Tribulam Etruscum Eugubinum interpretatus fuit: in ea autem divinatione, ut aiebat, subcivitas unius mensis horas consumpsit. — He explained a Tuscan Plate of Eugubio; and spent, in those Conjectures, as he said himself, the spare Hours of one Month." Our Baldus is mentioned in the new Edition of the Eponymologium of Magirus, only to let us know, that he published a Book, in the Year 1637, the very same that Schoonckius ascribes to him. Is not this an admirable Choice?

[E] He finished the Description of the World, as to the Matter. These are the Words of his Historian. "Totum opus ad umbilicum perduxit: non digestit tamen universum, quatuor, aut, ni fallor, quinque tantum totum fuerunt ordine alphabetico dispositi: superesset septem aut octo disponendi, quantum ex chartarum & falciculorum mole conieci licet. — He brought the whole Work to Perfection; but had not adjusted, I think, above four or five Volumes of it in alphabetical Order; there might be about seven or eight more to be digested, as near as one could guess from the Quantity and Heaps of Papers." I do not believe, the List, Fabricius Scharloncinus has given of our Baldus's Works, is imperfect; but, according to the ill Custom of most of those, who give such sort of Lists, he does not distinguish the Books, which have been printed, from those, which have not (8). I have not transcribed the whole List.

[F] He died — after having laboured under a great Rheum for forty Days. I thought I might thus translate Scharloncinus's Words: Postquam dies 40 vehementi Diffinitione vexatus fuisset. Vassus understood a Catarrh, by Diffinition, and he is not in the wrong to pretend, that these two Words are synonymous. That of Rheum seemed to me the most proper; because a Catarrh seldom continues so long as forty Days. Moreri, by a great Mistake, confutes this an Apoplexy of forty Days.

[G] He was extremely laborious. He would rise at Midnight to study, and read while he was eating. "In studiis sic assiduus fuit ut sæpe & legeret & comederet. S. Augustini de civitate Dei ter inter prandium evoluit; statim à noctis meridie dum ei vires firmiores essent ad lucubrandum surgebat (9). — He was so earnest in his Studies, that he often both eat and read. He thrice went thro' St Augustin's Book de Civitate Dei, during the Times of his dining: So long as his Confection beld good, he rose at Midnight to his Studies." He reckoned an Euclid, translated into Arabic, one of his Books of Recreation. A prandio Euclidem Arabicè editum, vel Libellum aliquem Germanicum, aut Gallicum in manus sumebat (10). After Dinner he used to take into his hand an Arabic Euclid, or some high Dutch or French Book. Happy are those, who can take so much Pains, without impairing their Health.

Felices quibus ista licent, miramur & illos, Et nostri miseremur.

Happy are they whose Studies never tire; Our selves we pity, while we them admire.

[H] He was always ready to excuse the Faults of others, which he grounded on a very good Reason. If we knew the Infides, said he, of those, we take for the best of Men, we should find not one, but who deserves Correction. Facile parcendum esse dicebat iis maxime qui in re levi impegissent, quoniam si quos censemus optimos, nudos conspiceremus, nullum eorum non judicaretur multis dignum verberibus (11): This may seem too far stretched: Perhaps it were better to keep to Cardinal Mazarin's Maxim. He said, That the greatest Men were like Beasts for Sacrifice, which, though ever so nicely chosen, had always something bad, when their Entrails were examined (12). I remember, on this Occasion, a Passage of Father Rapin, which I thought very judicious the first time I read it. It is a Thought he makes use of, by way of Apology, for Cicero. There are, says he (13), certain things at the bottom of the Souls of the greatest Men, which, if they could be perceived, would shew them to be as weak as others — and often times the Reputation of those, we so much admire, does not proceed so much from their Art in displaying their good Qualities, as from that of hiding their bad ones, and not suffering themselves to be seen into.

[I] He was very devout, not only for a Mathematician, but also for a Churchman. He fasted twice a Week; he communicated every Holy-Day (14), and was very charitable to the poor. His Mother said, that, when he was but a Year old, he did not only look upon the Altars and Images with Joy, but also with Veneration (15). With Joy, I do not question; for it is usual for Children to leap at the Sight of Guildings, Ornaments, and Images: but, as for Veneration, That is another thing; they have at most but mechanical Motions, just as they are used. Our Baldus did well fortified with all the Sacraments of the Church, and in the Arms of Friars. Spiritum Deo reddidit Sacramentis Ecclesiæ omnibus rite manibus (16). Quemadmodum sanctissime vixerat, ita etiam sanctissime in complexu cullatorum patrum extremum vitæ spiritum edidit (17).

(10) Id. ib.

(11) Id. ib.

(12) See the Preface of Mr. Chanut's Memoirs.

(13) In the Comparison of Demosthenes with Cicero.

(14) Thus I transfer to diebus festis omnibus sacrum faciebatur: Which Words, perhaps, mean only, that he officiated every Holy-Day: but it cannot be denied, that what I say is contained in the Latin Words of Scharloncinus.

(15) Scharloncinus. ibid.

(16) Id. ib.

(17) Nic. Erythraeus Pinacoth. I. pag. 7.

(8) See, above, the beginning of Remark [E] of the Article AUREOLUS.

(9) Scharloncinus in Vita Baldi.

(a) See The History of the French Academy, pag. 230, 238.

BALESDENS (JOHN), Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, and in the Council, was born at Paris. He was admitted into the French Academy about the Year 1647, in the room of Malleville; and, if he had not given up his Pretensions to Mr Corneille [A], he had succeeded Mainard, who died before Malleville. The Chancellor Seguier was his Mæcenas (a). He published several Works, of which he was not the Author [B]. I think he lived till towards the Year 1676 (b). I have not found

[A] He gave up his Pretensions to Mr Corneille. I see what the Historian of the Academy says of it. "Mr Corneille was afterwards received in the place of Mr Mainard. Mr Balesdens had also been proposed, and, as he had the Honour to belong to the Chancellor, the Academy had That respect for it's Protector, as to depute five of it's Members to him, to know whether both Persons propoſed were equally agreeable to him. The Chancellor assured them he would leave the Society entirely at their Liberty; but, when they began to deliberate on their Choice, the Abbot of Cerisy presented them with a Letter from Mr de Balesdens, full of a great many

"Compliments to them, and to Mr Corneille, to whom he desired they might give the Preference, protesting that he paid him this Honour, as his due, on all Accounts. The Letter was read, and commended by the Assembly: and he (1) was afterwards received into the first Vacancy, which was That of Mr de Malleville; but I do not find on what Day; for, since that Time, the long and frequent Indispositions of the Secretary of the Academy have left great Vacancies in the Registers (2)."

[B] He published several Works, of which he was not the Author. Mr Pellisson gives this List of all that

(b) The State of France, in 1686, places Balesdens in the List of the dead Academiſts, before the Conſort and des Marrets: Conſort died in September, 1675.

(1) Mr Balesdens.

(2) Pellisson Hist. de l'Acad. Franç. pag. 220, 230. Edit. 1676, in 12mo.

found his Name in the Petition of the Dictionaries; and yet it ought to be there, according to the Menagiana [C]. He had lived in the College of Harcour [D].

(3) Ibid.
pag. 38.

that Balsdens published (3). "He translated the Book entitled, The Penitent Sinner's Looking glass; and, among other Manuscripts, which he had collected, he gave the following to the Public: *Caritativum Logicæ, seu Logica memorativa, vel Poëtica, R. Patris Thomæ Murnori, cum notis & conjecturis. Rudimenta cognitionis Dei & sui, Petri Seguerii Præfidi insulati. Elegia clarorum virorum Joannis Papirii Massonis, in two Volumes. Gregorii Turonensis opera pia, cum Vitis Patrum jui temporis, in two Volumes. The Arts of the Conveyance of Dauphiné, made to the Crown of France. A Treatise of Brandy, by Mr John Bronaut, the King's Physician. He published, also, Æolop's Fables, corrected by himself, in French, for the King's Instruction, with Maxims Political and Moral." Mr de Marolles says, That Balsdens gave him "several Letters in a figurative Style, without mentioning a very great Number of others, of which he proposed to make several Volumes, there was such a prodigious Number of them (4)."*

(4) In his Catalogue of those, who had made him Presents of their Books.

(5) Menagiana, pag. 190, of the first Edition of Holland.

[C] His Name ought to have been in the Petition of the Dictionaries, according to the Menagiana. In Effect, these Words are found there: the first Sample of my Poetry, says Mr Menage, was the Petition of the Dictionaries. I was looking for Rhimes to finish it. Mr du Puy sent me Claquentin to Rhime to Ballesdens (5). Mr Menage had the best Memory in the World; but yet he might mistake one thing for another, even in those, which personally concerned him. I do not believe, that he asked for the Rhime in question, to finish his Petition of the Dictionaries; for That incomparable Satire was finished before Balsdens came into the Academy. He was not admitted before the Year 1647, or 1648; and That Petition was finished about the Year 1642; I shall prove it from the History of the Academy. Mr Pellisson relates, that Mr Menage suppressed That Petition, after he had made it: He goes on thus: "It remained above ten Years concealed among his Papers, 'till a Person, who "had them all in his keeping, suffered himself to be robbed of this, by a Person not unknown to us, who soon gave several Copies of it (6)." Mr Pellisson had said, in the same Page, That "a Printer had lately published this Petition, in a small Form, with many Faults, and that it had since been more correctly printed, in Quarto." Without doubt he means, by This more correct Impression, the Edition of Mr Menage's Miscellanea, which appeared in the Year 1652. However it be, the Year 1652 is the Date of Mr Pellisson's Book; and consequently the Petition of the Dictionaries was finished in 1642 (7). It might be said, that, when Mr Menage was tired with keeping That Piece, which he had suppressed, and was resolved to publish it himself, among his other Poems, he designed to enlarge it, by introducing the new Members of the Academy; and that, if Balsdens is not among them, it is because the Rhime, which Mr du Puy sent, did not please, or was too difficult to come in there. Upon this Supposition, Mr Balsdens was obliged to his Name, for escaping the Lash, in the Petition of the Dictionaries, and That Name, so untractable, with respect to rhiming, produced a much more favourable Effect, than Those of Tuticannus (8), and Eearinus (9): But I do not think, there is any room to make this Supposition; for the Petition, printed in the Year 1652, does not contain the Name of any one Member, admitted into the Academy, since the Year 1640; and yet there were some among those new ones, who lay open to Mr Menage, as much as he could desire. Was good Mr du Rier a Translator without Reproach?

[D] He lived in the College of Harcour.] Mr de Marolles, who informs me of this, adds, That Balsdens's Landlord was a good Man, whose Name was le Landez, since Doctor of Divinity, and Uncle to the two Mazures, Curates of St Paul, one after another (10). He says, That Balsdens was, at That Time, of a merry Humour, and of a diverting Conversation.

(6) Pellisson, Hist. de l'Acad. Franç. pag. 72.

(7) See many curious things in the Anti-Bailler, Vol. 1, cap. 82, concerning This Petition of the Dictionaries.

(8) Quod minus in no fric ponar a amicis libellus, Nominis efficitur condicione tui. Lex pedis officio, fortunæque nominis obstat, Quæque meos adeas est via nulla modis. -- Thy Name, my Friend, should in my Books appear, But it disdains poetic Chains to wear.

Ovid. lib. 4, de Ponto Eleg. 12.

(9) Nomen nobile, mole, delicatum, Versu dicere non rudi volebam.

Sed tu Syllaba contumax repugnans. -- Thy noble Name my Muse with Pleasure tries;

But the rough Syllable it's Aid denies.

Marshall. lib. 9, Epig. 12.

(10) Mémoires de Marolles, pag. 32, ad Ann. 1616.

BALMIS (ABRAHAM de) a Jewish Physician, born at Lecci [A], in the Kingdom of Naples, flourished at Venice in the Beginning of the XVIth Century. He composed a Hebrew Grammar [B], printed at Venice in Hebrew and Latin, by Daniel Bomberg, in the Year 1523. He translated into Latin several Commentaries of Averroës on Aristotle, as also some Works of Aven Pace, and wrote a Book of his own, De Demonstratione, and another De Substantia Orbis. See Gesner's Bibliotheca, and the Bibliotheca Rabbinnica of Bartolocci. We must not forget, that he taught in the University of Padua (a), and that he took a much greater Pleasure in confuting what was advanced by others, than in laying down any thing certain of his own [C].

(a) Simon's Critical History of the Old Testament, pag. 536.

[A] He was born at Lecci.] You will find these Words in Gesner's Bibliotheca: "Ibidem (1) hic author natus se scribit in Litorio civitate agri Salentini quæ à Brundisio Hydrunto & Graia Gallipoli 24 miliaribus distat, eodem in loco sita ubi olim Rudizæ patria Ennii, ex reliquiis Rudiarum nata originem (2). -- There this Author writes, that he was born in Litorium, a City of the Salentines, which is distant from Brundisium, from Otranto, and Græcian Gallipoli, Twenty four Miles, situated in the same Place, where Rudizæ, the Native Place of Ennius, formerly stood, and was built with the Ruins of Rudizæ." I wonder, that neither Toppi, nor Leonard Nicodemus, have mentioned him, in the Bibliotheca Neapolitana.

(2) Gesner in Biblioth. vol. 1, versio.

[B] He composed a Hebrew Grammar.] He intitled it Mikne Abraham, that is to say, Abraham's Possession. Father Bartolocci is mistaken, when he says, that Daniel Bomberg translated it into Latin (3). If he had consulted the Preface, he might have seen, that Daniel Bomberg caused That Translation to be made by others. First of all, he employed the Author himself, and desired him to make his Translation literal. This Strictness was observed for some time: Afterwards the Author used a greater Freedom, in order to have some Elegancy: After his Death, Calonymus, who finished the Translation, took infinitely more Liberty, and Bomberg did not oppose it (4). This shews, that de Balmis, was no longer

(3) Julius Bartolocci, Biblioth. magna Rabbini. Tom. 1, pag. 34.

(4) See in Gesner's Biblioth. fol. 1, a Fragment of the Preface, which living in the Year 1523. Mr Simon says, that the Translation of That Grammar is word for word, and very barbarous (5); that, in truth, there is but little Method, in That Author, but that otherwise he shews great Erudition, and that, in a great many Places, he corrects the Errors of the Grammarians, who wrote before him (6). Huetius gives a very faithful Account of the Latin Translation (7). He says, that de Balmis began it, and that Calos Calonymus finished it; that the first rendered it barbarous, and more obscure, than the Original; and that the second, thinking to avoid the Defects of the other, ran into the opposite Extremum.

[C] He took a much greater Pleasure in confuting than in laying down any Thing certain of his own.] Munster makes this Reflection on him. "Abraham de Balmis, says he (8), nihil aliud ægrot mihi visus est quam veterum doctrinam perpetuo convellere atque impugnare, magis in insectando occupatus quam in docendo. At in dubium tantum vocare priforum præceptiones, cum interim nihil certi statuas, non docere est fed ridere. -- Abraham de Balmis seems to me to do nothing but continually attack, and oppose, the Doctrine of his Predecessors, being more taken up with censuring, than with teaching. But, to weaken the Authority of the old Maxims, without establishing something new in their room, is not the way to instruct, but to turn every thing into Jest."

(5) Simon's Critical History of the Old Testament, pag. 536.

(6) Id. ibid. lib. 1, sub. fin. pag. 278.

(7) Huetius de Claris Interpretibus, p. 186, 187. Mr Bailler's Judgment of the Learned, Tom. 4, n. 24, p. 200, makes him say, that this Translation was made by an unknown Hand.

(8) Munster in Præf. Grammat. Elie. apud Spizellii Felicem Literatam, pag. 958.

BALTHASAR (CHRISTOPHER) was a Man of Learning and Merit, in the XVIIth Century. He applied himself principally to the Study of Ecclesiastical History, and This Application gave him a very great Disgust for the Romish Doctrines, and a great Desire to embrace the Protestant Religion. He had a considerable Post in the Presbital of Auxerre (a), and, because he must either resolve to quit that, or still keep his Religion, he was for some time in doubt which part to take: But, at last, Conscience got the better, and obliged him to leave Auxerre, his Estate, Office, Relations, and Friends, and go to Charenton, where he was publicly received into the Reformed Church. He persevered in it to his Death, and edified his Brethren as well by his good Life, as by his Conversation. The Expences he was obliged to be at in Paris being too great for the Circumstances he was in, and his Conversion exposing him too much in such a City as That, he considered, that it would be better for him to retire into some Province, and was very well pleased to find himself invited to go to Castres by a young and rich Counsellor of the Bipartite Court of the Edict (b), who lodged him in his House, and allowed him a reasonable Pension. This Counsellor thought himself very fortunate in having a Learned Man with him, who might teach him a great many fine things by his Instructions and Conversation. But Mr Balthasar, desiring to labour for the Public, would have all his time at his own disposal, and for that reason he took leave of his Counsellor. His Design was favoured by the National Synod of Loudon in the Year 1659; for That Assembly granted him a Pension of Seven hundred and fifty Livres, to be paid by all the Churches of France, according to the Repartition, which was made of them (c). Before That Synod was held, he had prepared a good number of Dissertations on material Points against Cardinal Baronius (d). He gave four or five of them to a Minister of Castres, who was one of the Deputies of the Province of Upper Languedoc and Upper Guienne. They were presented to Mr Dailly, Moderator of That National Synod, who, of all the Ministers, was best able to judge of the Goodness of those Pieces. Mr Dailly was very well pleased with them, and gave all the Company a very advantageous Character of them. He brought them to Paris, where it was hoped they would have been printed; for they were thought to deserve Publication. But the Event made it appear, that no Measures were, or could be, taken for it. The Author, who was very old, and afflicted with the Stone, happened to die; Mr Dailly died also; and, after this, the Church of Castres wrote several Letters to recover those Dissertations, but they could not so much as learn what was become of them. Mr Balthasar left some others not quite finished, and many Collections, most of which consisted of separate Notes, wherein he had set down the Authorities and Testimonies he was to make use of against Cardinal Baronius. It is pity, that all this should remain in a Chest, in the Possession of I know not who (e). Mr Balthasar wrote very well in Latin; his Panegyric on Mr Fouquet is in a fine Style. This is all that I have seen of his, and I cannot tell whether he published any thing else. If he had been less scrupulous about his Language, he might have made a quicker Progress in his Censure on Baronius. However, I believe what has been said of his Scruples about his Latin, is something Hyperbolical [A]. What is reported of his Credulity in Witchcraft seems to me more likely [B].

(a) It was that of the King's Advocate.

(b) His Name was Mr du Faur.

(c) It was at the Request, and Recommendation, of the Synod of Upper Languedoc, and of Upper Guienne. He enjoyed already a Pension of 300
Livres. See the Act of the National Synod of Loudon, in the Syno-dicon of Mr
Quick, Tom.
2, pag. 572.

(d) He gave them the Title of Dissertationes.
His Work
was in Latin.

(e) Taken from a Memoir, communicated by Mr de la Deuze, to Monsieur Minister at Castres, and now at the Hague.

[A] What has been said of his Scruples about his Latin is something Hyperbolical.] Among several Pieces, the Abbot de Marolles published in the latter Part of his Life, there is one, which contains the Names of Those, who had presented him with their Books, or honoured him with their Compliments, in an extraordinary Manner. There we find the following Words: "Christopher Balthazar, who had made for many Collections, with his own Hand, for several manuscript historical Treatises. He designed to compose some Animadversions on the Annals of Baronius; but went a little too late about it, and had not yet formed his Style, intending to polish it yet farther, after too elegant a Manner, in so much, that he could not write one whole Page of his Book in a Day, though he was above Sixty three Years of Age." If the Abbot de Marolles had dated the Time, which he pointed at, we had known at what Age Mr Balthasar obtained a Pension from the Synod of Loudon.

[B] Notice has been taken of his Credulity in Witchcraft.] The same Abbot de Marolles supplies me with the whole Commentary on This Text. The Passage is somewhat long, but I will not abridge it: What will not serve for one Purpose, may serve for another. "Let us return now into our Closet, where one day, in a Company of learned Men, were Mr Balthazar, who is so skillful in the Knowledge of History, and Mr de Sorbiere, whose Affability and Learning deserve also much Commendation: The one, from being a Catholic, had embraced the pretended Reformed Religion (1), and the other, from being a Protestant, was returned to the Catholic Church. Whereupon, the first being taken to task, on account, that the Motives of his Change could not be comprehended, considering his great Knowledge, said, he was induced to it, from a Belief, that there was more Purity, and Simplicity, in the other Communion, than in ours: That it had re-established the Holy Liberty of the Gospel, under the mild Yoke of Faith in our Lord's Promises; and that it had taken away all Abuses, and Superstitions, to place, in their room, a Worship agreeable to the Usage of the Primitive Church. All the Parts of his Answer were disputed; but That proving ineffectual, the Discourse was turned to other Matters; and from the Subject of Miracles, came to That, of the infinite Number of Stories told of Sorcerers, and Apparitions, which would scarcely be credited by Children: whereby it appeared, that he, who had shewn himself such an Enemy to Superstition, admitted it, in some Measure, by a sufficient Credulity for these Things; besides that, having explained himself on the vain Predictions of Astrologers, he discovered plainly, that he adhered but too much to them, as well as to Those of Nostradamus, in his Centuries, than which nothing in the World can be more gross. This was the Judgment of the whole Company, in which was present the Abbot Talman (2), a Man of fine Parts, Mr Baudouin (3), Abbot of Massay; and the Abbot of Verdus, who have so intirely shook off all popular Errors, with Mr de la Herpiniere of Bleis, so rational, in all his

(1) The Memoirs of the Abbot de Marolles were printed off the 5th of January, 1656. Mr Balthazar had therefore made his Abjuration in 1655; at least.

(2) He ought to have said Tallemant.

(3) He ought to have said Bourdelot.

"his Sentiments, Mr de Marsay le Bassin, Governor "of Gien, whose great Knowledge is accompanied "with a noble Elocution, and some others, whereof

"one only endeavoured to maintain the Opinion,
"which had been rejected (4)."

(4) The Abborde Marol-les' Memoirs, pag-276.

BALZAC, a small Lordship in Angoumois, on the River Cbarante, is famous for having given it's Name to, and been a long time the Residence of, one of the most Eloquent Writers of the XVIIth Century [A], namely, the famous Mr de BALZAC. His Name was John Lewis Guez, and he was the Son of William Guez, a Gentleman of Languedoc [B], who was very deserving, and who, having devoted himself early to the Service of Roger de Bellegarde, Marechal of France, and Governor of the Marquisate of Saluces, conducted several Affairs with a great deal of Prudence. Before he was Twenty six Years of Age, he was sent to the Court of Philibert Emanuel, Duke of Savoy, about some Negotiations of Consequence, which he managed very successfully, and gained the Esteem of This Prince. Some time after, he was Governor to the Son of the Marechal de Bellegarde: This young Lord was killed in the Battle of Coutras, in the Year 1587 (a). The Father died in the Year 1579 (b). So that William Guez, having lost these two Patrons, found a third in the Duke of Epemon, who desired to have him near him. His Services proved very considerable on several troublesome Occasions. Henry IV, having observed with what Address, Integrity, and Steadiness, This Gentleman dispatched the Affairs, on which the Duke of Epemon sent him to Court, would willingly have retained him in his Service (c); but found him more inclined to a Country Life, than to That of the Court, with which his Virtue would not easily suit. This good Gentleman fixed himself in the Province of Angoumois, where he died the Twentieth of September, 1650, at the Age of an Hundred Years [C]. He had married a Gentlewoman of the Family of Nesmond, with whom he lived Sixty four Years in perfect Concord (d). He had by her, among other Children, the Famous Mr de Balzac, whom I am going to mention. See the Latin Elogy of William Guez, composed by Mr de Girac, and printed at the end of the Christian Socrates. I have taken from it what has been just now read, to which I add; I. That William Guez did so much resemble Father Narni, that, the first time Mr de Balzac saw That famous Preacher, he thought his Father had disguised himself in a Capucin's habit (e). II. That, among several other Virtues of William Guez, Don Peter de St Romuald praises the Magnificence, which he shewed in the Structure of the Castle of Balzac, and in That of his House at Angoulême (f). That House was furnished with such exquisite Rarities, and particularly Pictures and other Ornaments, that the Queen Mother, Mary de Medicis, would lodge no where else during her abode in Angoulême. III. That one of his other Sons was called Mr de Rouffines (g). IV. That he had a Daughter, who is very often mentioned by Monsieur de Balzac [D].

(a) Father Anselm's History of the great Officers, pag- 194.

(b) Id. ibid.

(c) See the Choice Letters of Balzac, p. 364. Edit. of Holland.

(d) See l'aved 'till the Year 1653. See the 15th Letter of Balzac to Conrart, Book 3.

(e) Balzac, Letter 27, to Chaplain, lib. 3.

(f) St Romuald, Thres. Chronol. ad Ann. 1627.

(g) Mr de Balzac wrote the 4th Letter of the 8th Book to him.

[A] It is famous, for having given it's Name to one of the most eloquent Writers of the XVIIth Century. I cannot tell what Moreri builds upon, when he says, that Those of the Family of Guez have enjoyed the Name of the Lordship of Balzac. I. First of all, he ought to have known, that Balzac is the Name of This Village, and Balzac That of the ancient Family of Balzac d'Entragues (1). II. Secondly, none but John Lewis Guez used the Name of Balzac; his Father always retained the Name of his Family (2); and if, after the Death of John Lewis, some of his Relations called themselves Balzac, I do not believe it came to Mr Moreri's Knowledge. In short, what has been said by some Persons, "That, if Mr de Balzac had not taken the Name of his Lordship, his Family Name at the Head of his Works would have prevented their great Success in the World, and that People would not have conceived so favourable an Idea of his Letters, if they had been entitled Monsieur Guez's Letters; and that it is believed, the Name of Balzac being taken for That of a Noble and Ancient House, sufficiently known, procured him the more Respect (3)."; this, I say, is partly probable, and partly very false. It is probable, that such a plain Name, as That of Guez, might have prejudiced an Author in the Title of a Book (4); but it is very false, that John Lewis Guez put the Name of Balzac in the Title Page of his Books, to avoid this Inconvenience, and to make People believe, that they came from a great Lord; This was the thing, which Sorel would be at, with his confused, and perplexing, Expressions. Once again, this is false: for John Lewis Guez had taken the Name of Balzac, before he thought of printing his Letters. I cannot apprehend how it happened, that Mr Ménage, who caused This Author's Poems, and Latin Letters, to be printed, where we see, both in the Title, and at the Top of every Page, the Name of Joannis Ludovici Guezii Balzaci, should say, that they bear the Name of Joannis Ludovici Guezii Balzaci (5). I should think, that the Printer of the Anti-Baillet put Guezii instead of Guezii, if I did not see the same Fault, in a very correct Edition of Mr Ménage's Poems (6).

[B] Balzac ----- was the Son of William Guez, a Gentleman of Languedoc.] Sometimes Mr de Balzac represents his Extraction, in such a manner, as to give us an high Idea of it. He says, That Those, to whom he has the Honour of being related, have founded Monasteries in several Parts of the Kingdom, and that Angoulême and Toulouse are proud of the Marks of their Piety (7). He tells us, in another Place, that the Great Grand-father of his Great-Great Grand-father was presented with three Parishes, in Languedoc, by the Countess Alix (8). Theophibus gives us a quite contrary Idea of Mr de Balzac's Family.

[C] Who died at the Age of an hundred Years.] I have made use of a round Number, after Mr de Girac, whom I have quoted; but I ought to rectify the Matter a little, by means of a Letter of Mr Guez, to his Son, signed Guez, and dated the twentieth of November 1642 (9). He was then entered into the Eighty ninth Year of his Age. He could not therefore be an hundred Years old, the twentieth of September, 1650, which was the Day of his Death. That Letter is a pressing Exhortation to publish some Manuscripts, but, above all, the Apologies against Phylarchus.

[D] He had a Daughter, who is very often mentioned by Mr de Balzac.] She was married to Mr de Campagnolle, who died Captain of the Guards, at Montauban, and who was the Brother of a brave Man, whom Tevanus sometimes mentions (10). That Captain of the Guards left a Son, who was killed at the Siege of Lens (11), and a Daughter, who is the Lady of CAMPAGNOLLE, sometimes mentioned in Mr de Balzac's Letters (12). He shews much Fondness for That Niece, and gives good

(5) Ménage, Anti-Baillet Tom. 1. p. 4.

(6) In the Index: It is the Edition of Wetstein at Amsterdam, 1687.

(7) Balzac, Miscellan. Works, Dié. 14.

(8) Choice Letters, pag- 367.

(9) Ibid. pag 367. Edit. of Holl.

(10) See the Latin Poems of Balzac, pag. 112. in 12mo.

(11) See the Volume of Letters to Conrart, Book 5, Letter 3.

(12) See the 6th Letter of the 16th Book, and the 42d of the good 9th.

good Advice for her Education. See his Choice Letters, Page 157, and the Forty sixth, Forty seventh, and Forty eighth Letters of the seventh Book, in the Edition in Folio. I have found a Passage, in a Letter of Cassat, which concerns the Lady of Campagnolle. Mr Balzac, says he (13), you will see a Niece, beautiful and ingenious, who very well understands true gallantry from false, and who wants nothing but a little more of your Esteem. This he wrote to Voiture. I have seen another Book, in which there is something, which may relate to This Lady. It is there said, that Langlade (14), one of Those, whom Cardinal Mazarin employed most in his secret Negotiations, had, before he came to Court, fallen in Love with a young Lady in the Country, called Mademoiselle de Campagnol (15). "He did not dare to propose Marriage to her; but he had exacted a Promise from her, not to marry, and engaged himself to let her know, when his Fortune should be in a Condition to make her "happy. He trusted Gourville with his Engagement to This young Lady, and, told him, with some Discontent, that he did not think his Fortune was sufficient to pretend to This Alliance, having, in all, but Forty thousand Crowns. Gourville bid him not trouble himself about That, but go, with all Satisfaction, and conclude his Marriage, promising to give him as much more. Upon this Assurance Langlade departed, and gave a great deal of Joy to Mademoiselle de Campagnol, by shewing her he had not forgot her. They were married, and Langlade returned to Paris, with his new Wife, where they found Gourville had taken a fine House for them, and furnished it splendidly. He gave Langlade That fine Furniture, with a great Quantity of Plate and Jewels for his Wife, besides the Forty thousand Crowns; and Madam de Parville (16) took great Care to shew this Country Lady all the Beau Monde. This new married Couple lived a long time together, in mutual Satisfaction."

(13) See the 20th Letter of the Entre-tiens des Voitures et Coiffes, pag. 249.

(14) Gallantries of the Kings of France, Tom. II. pag. 239, Edition of Brussels, 1694.

(15) Ibid. pag. 243.

(16) She was a Mistress of Gourville's.

BALZAC (JOHN LEWIS GUEZ Sieur de), was born at Angoulême, in the Year 1595 [A]. He acquired an extraordinary Reputation very early. There was so lively an Imagination, so much Eloquence, and so many uncommon Thoughts, in the Letters, which he wrote in his younger Years, that those, who saw them, were charmed with them, and praised them every where: So that, being in the Service of the Cardinal of la Valette (a), he soon became known, and esteemed at Court; inasmuch, that Cardinal Richelieu, to whom he had wrote several times, did him the honour to answer him very obligingly. This Answer was printed with Balzac's Letters, the first Edition whereof is of the Year 1624. He thought himself in the way of a very great Fortune [B]; his Letters sold so well, that they had a Run of several Editions. They were praised beyond measure; but not with the unanimous consent of all Readers. Some contradicting Spirits started up, either excited by Envy, which is most likely, or from a discovery of the weak Passages of Balzac's Works. These Dissentions, having reigned for some time in Conversation, became a public War in the Year 1627, and one of the most cruel, that ever was known of this kind. It was begun by a young Monk, who wrote a little Book, intitled, The Conformity of Mr Balzac's Eloquence with That of the greatest Persons of the past and present Times. Tho' this Piece was not printed, yet it went almost as publicly from Hand

(a) Sorel, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 121. of the 2d Edit.

[A] He was born at Angoulême, in the Year 1595. I have not met with this in any Book; but observe, how I have inferred it from two Letters of Balzac. He mentions, in one of these two Letters (1), the Thanks he had given to Mr Spanheim, in 1649, for the fine Oration, which he had received from him, and which had revived in him a Passion, which Fifty three Years had taken from him. Without doubt, That Oration was his Funeral Oration on Frederic Henry, Prince of Orange: it may be supposed, that he received it in the Year 1648; for he was not quick in answering; he was, therefore, Fifty three Years of Age, in 1648, and must consequently be born in 1595. In the other Letter, dated the fifteenth of October, 1637 (2), he speaks of a Piece, which he composed, at seventeen Years of Age, and says, that it was full Twenty five Years, since his writing it. So that he was Forty two Years of Age, when he wrote That Letter, and consequently must be born in 1595. St Romuald places his Birth in the Year 1598. For he says, he, Twenty eight Years of Age, in 1626 (3); but he forgot to prove This Reason. I do not deny, but I have found a Passage, which proves, that Balzac was born in 1596. I quote it in the Remark [B].

The small Piece, he composed, at seventeen Years of Age, is worth a Digression. He owns, that, in writing it, he committed both a Fault, and a Folly, and excuses himself, the best he can, on his Youth, and on his composing it in Holland, without designing to publish it in print (4). He took it very ill, that Heinsius revived that Fault. I have already observed (5), that this is an inconvenience, to which Authors, any thing famous, are very liable: They generally happen into some Paper Quarrel, which causes their Antagonists to search out, carefully, every little Fault of their Youth, to reproach them with in public. I do not wonder, that some have believed, that, at This Time, Balzac would not have refused to make his Fortune in Holland, under the Profession of an Huguenot. Before I read the Piece, I am mentioning, I took it to be a rash Judgment; but I have altered my Opinion, since Mr Minutoli favoured me with a Transcript of That Writing (6). He had a printed Copy of it, of the Edition, which Heinsius caused to be published, at Le den, in the Year 1638. The Title of it is, A Political Discourse on the State of the United Provinces of the Netherlands, by I. L. D. B. a French Gentleman. It is a Pamphlet of four or five Pages, subscribed, at the end, John Lewis de Balzac. This Work is very fine, full of Wit and Thought; but I am well assured, that Baudius, who was in a public Office at Leyden, and who received a Salary from the States of Holland, would not have decided so strongly for the Justice, wherewith the States threw off the Yoke of Philip II, nor have sought for such high Compliments for Holland, nor such cutting Invektives against the Spanish Government, nor, in short, such studied Maxims, in favour of Liberty of Conscience. So that it is very excusable to suspect, that the French Gentleman, perhaps, founded the Business, by That flying Sheet, and that, if the Republic, struck with Admiration of so fine a Pen, and so well affected, had offered a good Post, the Author, of seventeen Years of Age, would have preferred it before his Country, and his Catholicism.

Mr de Balzac took his Journey into Holland, in the Year 1612. Theophilus was his Fellow-Traveller, whom, if we may believe Father Gault, he, at the same time, played a very sly Trick (7), which occasioned the Misunderstanding between That Poet and Balzac. The terrible Letter, which Theophilus printed against him, contains a Charge of two, or three, unpleasant Adventures: I do not speak, says he, of the plundering of Authors; Doctor Baudius's Son-in-law accuses you of another sort of Theft. - - - I do not repeat my having formerly drawn my Sword to revenge your being cuckolded.

[B] He thought himself in the way of a very great Fortune. It is very pleasant to hear him relate the Reasons of his great Hopes. Read, then, the second Story, which he tells, in his Entre-tiens (8): it concerns himself. Among other things, you will find there the Proof of what I have said, concerning the Elogies, given to his Letters, even before they were printed. He tells us, That the Bishop of Lyon, being

(6) He is Master of a great number of such scarce Pieces, which he always took great care to collect.

(7) Letters of Philarch. Part. I. pag. 257.

(8) Entre-t. 8. pag. 132. Edit. 12mo.

(1) It is the 14th of the 3d Book to Conrart: see Thanks to Mr Spanheim are in the 19th of the 6th Book.

(2) It is the 10th of the 3d Book to Chapelain.

(3) St Romuald, Chron. Abbrégé, ad Ann. 1598.

A WARNING published by Balzac, at 27 Years of Age.

(4) The 10th Letter to Chapelain, Book 3.

(5) See above, at the End of the Remark [C] BALDUS.

Hand to Hand, as if it had been in Print, and no Body was ignorant, that a Feuillant, called Brother Andrew, was the Author of it [C]. Mr de Balzac desired it might be publickly confuted; which was performed in the Apology, published by Ogier in 1627 [D]. The General of the Feuillans, whose Name, at that time, was Father Goulu, took Brother Andrew's Cause in hand; and, under the Name of Phyllarcus (b), wrote two Volumes of Letters against Balzac, with an extraordinary Heat, as I shall relate in his Article. This Quarrel was the occasion of a great many Books (c), and raised such a Storm, as almost overwhelm'd Mr Balzac, as well because of the Artifices of his Enemies, as because he had given some hold to his Critics, by some very dull Hyperboles, vain Sallies, and ticklish Propositions. He let this Storm blow over, without answering his Adversary [E]. Upon whose Death, which happened in the Year 1629, a Calm ensued. The Public began to recover from the prejudices, they had suffered themselves to be possessed with against Mr Balzac, who, making a good

(b) This is the first notice of the name, by way of allusion to his quality of General of the Feuillans.

(c) See 1. Eibl. fr. pag. 121. See the Article J. A. VERSAC.

(g) This happened in the Year 1618.

being recalled from his Exile (g), *careful him extremely, and complimented him as an illustrious, rare, and extraordinary Person, and that, having invited him to Dinner, one Day, he said, to a great many Persons of Quality, at Table with him, Here's a Man (that Man was then but Twenty two Years of Age) to whom we must do good, when it lies in our Power, and we must begin with an Abbey of Ten thousand Livres a Year. Is it possible to conceive a finer beginning? Many would have been lent him upon this, at Rome, and Wagers laid on his future Advancement. Nevertheless, Matters went no further. Cardinal Richelieu did not remember what the Bishop of Luçon had said. This puts me in mind of a Passage of the Misanthrope: "Monsieur de Balzac appeared first to be a Bishop. Afterwards he desired "only to be an Abbot; but he did not succeed in "either. He even writes, in one of his Books, that "he should never be an Abbot, unless he himself "should be the Founder of the Abbey (10)."*

(10) Page 290.

[C] A little Book was published against him - - - wherein a Feuillant, called Brother Andrew, was the Author. He was of Mans; he reconciled himself afterwards to Mr Balzac, and went to see him, at Angoulême (11). Mr Balzac entertained him magnificently, and contracted a cordial Friendship with him, which continued as long as they lived (12). He wrote several Letters to him, wherein he styles him, The Reverend Father Don Andrew de St Dennis. See, particularly, one of the Dissertations, printed with the Christian Socrates, in the first Edition, and, among the Latin Letters, the Poem, entitled, Iteration, preceded by a Letter, wherein Balzac relates the Change of That Monk with much Joy, and makes use of this fine Exclamation, a Parody on Virgil (13).

(11) St Romanus, Continuat. Chron. Admari ad Ann. 1627.

(12) See his Concern for the Interests of Father Andrew, in the 17th and 18th Letters of the 4th Book to Contrasts, written in the Year 1633.

(13) Virg. Aen. lib. 12. ver. 563.

O superi tantum plebs concurre motu
Aeterna posthac mentes in pace futuras?

Love, couldst thou view, and not avert thy Sight,
Two jarring Authors join'd in cruel Fight,
Whom Leagues of lasting Love so shortly shall unite.

DRYDEN.

(14) Page 268.

Another Latin Letter, which precedes This (14), informs us, that Brother Andrew, who, according to Voiture's Expression, had been the Helena of That War, having heard, that Mr Balzac was dead, lamented, and praised him. But, after this, being informed, that the News was false, he became a good Friend of the supposed deceased, and therefore made it appear, that he was not in the Case of This Sentence:

(15) Horat. Od. 24. l. 3.

Virtutem incolamem odimus,
Sublatam ex oculis quarimus invidi (15).

We fight that Virtue we enjoy the most;
And never know it's Value, 'till 'tis lost.

(16) Perfect to Mr Balzac's Works 1. and the Relation of his Death.

This Circumstance must not be forgot, that This Friar, who was then Prior of the Convent of St Merri, near Orleans, had no sooner heard of Mr Balzac's dangerous Sickness, but he attended all his Monks to pray with him for the sick Person (16). The latter, being recovered, gave an Incense Pot for the Altar of their Church, of Four hundred Livres Value, and an annual Revenue to supply it continually with Perfumes. If Moréri had mentioned the evident Marks Mr Balzac gave of his sincere Reconciliation with Brother Andrew, and with Father Goulu, there would not have been found to great a Want of Judgment in this Place of his Dictionary. He was esteemed, from the first, as the most eloquent Man in France. This Reputation raised him a great deal of Envy, and the Quarrel he had, toward the Year 1627, with Father Goulu, General of the Feuillans, and others, is sufficiently known. All the World, however, was persuaded of Mr Balzac's Sincerity, and Generosity, who died, as he had lived, very much of a Christian. What a strange leap, from the Year 1627, to the Year 1654, in so few Lines! And, besides, what signifies, That Sincerity, and That Generosity, which every Body was, however, persuaded of? Was That the Business in Hand? The Question was, only to know, whether Balzac was a good, eloquent, and orthodox Author.

[D] This Piece was refuted, - - - in the Apology, published by Ogier, in 1627. There have been various Reports, about the true Author of That Work. Some believed, that he, who fathered it, was really the Author of it: Others, that he only lent his Name to a Piece, composed by Balzac himself. Here is what Mr Ménage says of it: "Prior "Oger answered those Books of Father Goulu, against Mr Balzac, in a Piece he intitled, Mr Balzac's Apology (17), which is a Book, wrote with "some Learning and Elegancy. But Oger furnished "only the Learning: The Elegancy was, altogether, "Mr Balzac's own. I have heard Mr de Racan, "and Mr de Gomberville, say to several Times, who "had seen Mr Balzac intent on That Work. And "I have read, elsewhere, that Mr de Balzac, speaking of That Work, declared, that he himself was "the Father of it, and Oger only the God-father; "that he had supplied the Silk, and Oger only the "Canvas (18)." In all Probability, the publishing this Report made the Sieur de la Motte-Hérain fear such another Fate, which he endeavoured to prevent, by declaring, in the Preface to his Answer to Phyllarcus, that the Advice he had received from several Places, that they would give his Book a Master, obliged him to advertise all his Readers, That he was no Roger, who fought under the Arms of Leo; that he had not the Complaisance of those, who father other People's Children; that he could not endure to have his Books made for him; and that, for this, he was no more obliged to his Friends, than to the greatest Strangers in the World. He tells us, in the same Place, that his Preface, on Balzac's Letters, had been very falsely ascribed to others. This will be seen more particularly in his Article (19).

(17) These few lines, in the Remark [F] after GOULU's Article, that Mr Menage is mistaken in saying, that the Apology, published by the Prior Oger, was an Answer to Father Goulu's Book.

(18) Menage's Preface, sentive to the Letter of Balzac, p. 252.

[E] He let this Storm, raised against him by Father Goulu, blow over, without answering his Adversary. I confess, that, at this very time, he took Pen in Hand to compose his Relation to Menander; but That Piece was not printed till a long time after. The reason of This Conduct appears from their Words of Balzac's Twenty third Entretien. "You may remember the cruel Perfection kindled against me above "twenty Years ago. At that time an Angel from "Heaven would not have been heard, if he had come "down to plead my Cause. The Faction was too "strong, and too passionate, to allow the Public to "form a right Judgment. God be thanked, the "Storm is over, and, after it, succeeds a Calm. The "Face of Things being changed, it is to be hoped "that Right will also take place again." The Author

(19) See Remarks [D] of the Article MOTTIER-AIGNON.

a good use of his Disgrace, and also of the indifferent Success of his Prince [F], retired to his Country-House, where he not only refined his Thoughts and Style, but his Heart also, and there preserved, by his Epistolary Correspondences [G], and the Pieces, he from time to time published, the Reputation of very great Merit, and of the best Pen in France. However, it must be confessed, that his Style seems too much laboured, and the turn of his Thoughts sometimes too much affected, and feldom natural: but, tho' his Letters have not that easy Air, and that happy Sprightliness thor, finding himself importuned anew to publish his Defence, complied with it. Menander, to whom he addresses his Relation, is Mainard (20). Though that Relation contains a Defence of some of the Passages, which Father Goulu had criticized, yet it is rather a general Answer, than a continued and complete Refutation of the two Volumes of Phyllarchus. Balzac also vindicated some Passages, which a Doctor of Louvain, and a Doctor of Bezançon, had censured (21). I find there is a Fault in his Calculation. It appears by his Twenty seventh Entretien, that he did not resolve to publish his Apologies, till above twenty Years after the Persecution he had suffered from Phyllarchus. And yet, it is most certain, that the Volume of his Miscellaneous Works, of which the Discourse to Menander makes a very considerable part, was printed in the Year 1645, and his Bookeller says in it, That the Author could not refuse the Publication of it, at the repeated Instances of his Father, who was Ninety one Years of Age. If you compare Mr Guez's Letter, which I have mentioned in the Remark [C] of the foregoing Article, with That Advertisement to the Reader, you will find, that the Resolution of printing the Apologies against Phyllarchus was taken in the Year 1644. How can this agree with the Twenty seventh Entretien?

[F] He made a good Use of the indifferent Success of his Prince.] The Author's Friends had promised This Work as a Master-Piece, which would silence all Critics; especially those, who accused Balzac of being incapable of writing any thing but Letters. The Event did not answer these Expectations; That Book added nothing either to Balzac's Reputation, or Fortune, and raised him some trouble from the Sorbonne. Though the Marquis d'Ayotona had caused it to be burnt at Brussels (22); it was yet mentioned, with the utmost Contempt, in an Answer of the Abbot of St Germain, as a Book suppressed by the Censure of the Doctors, and the Sentence of the Judges, a Month after it's Birth. Mr Pellisson relates, that, in the Year 1636, Balzac read some part of his Prince, which he then called the Minister of State, to the French Academy (23). This would make one believe, that, at first, he had only a Mind to write the Cardinal's Panegyric. But it is certain, Mr Pellisson was mistaken. The Prince was printed in the Year 1631. This Book was to have been followed by two others; the latter of which was called the Minister of State. Some observe, that, in his Prince, he praises the Cardinal more than the King. (See the Thirty seventh Page of the fifteenth Volume of the Bibliothèque Universelle.) But this is false. We find, in the eighth Book of This Author's Letters, the Answer the Faculty of Divinity wrote to him, to signify, that they were satisfied with his offers to alter what they had found worthy of Censure. The Latin Letter, he wrote to a Father of the Christian Doctrine, concerning This Process of the Sorbonne, is admirable. It is in the Hundred eighty seventh Page of his Epistolæ selectæ, in the Edition, of Paris, 1651, in 12mo.

Observe, That some Persons have affirmed, that this Work was one of the Author's best Performances. It is thus, Sir, that you yourself have praised it in your Prince, and in your Relations to Menander, which are the two great Miracles of your Art, and the highest Pitch of Heroic Eloquence. Thus says Coslin in his Defence of Voiture. Mr Richet says, in his Remarks on some Letters, That the Prince, and the Aristippus, are two of the most Eloquent Pieces of Balzac (24). If a Judgment of the Merits of Balzac's Prince was to be made by the Number of Editions, it would be very advantageous: "At first came out two Editions in Quarto, at the same time; then another in the same form, but in smaller Characters, and full of Faults, which I believe was printed at Niort, or at Poitiers. Afterwards, there was one in 8vo, pretty good, though pirated.

"After that, came out That of Bouillerot, in 8vo also, but corrected; and lastly the Edition in 12mo, of 'Coulé.' These words are taken from a Letter, Mr du Rondel did me the Honour to write to me the tenth of May 1698. I am going to quote another part of it. "I have lately bought, says he, the Prince, of the first Edition, wherein I found, with unspeakable delight, what Mr de Balzac had written, and what he afterwards altered and cut off: "and it was on this occasion, that I first rightly apprehended what Scaliger meant by his detrabendo fecit audire. Balzac, by cutting off five or six Pages, suppressed Faintness, re animated Weakness, increased his Strength, and recovered the Attention, which was just forsaking the Reader." I make use of an Edition in 4to, of the Year 1632. The place, where it was printed, is not set down; but doubtless it was at Rouen. I have seen one, in a small 8vo, printed at Paris by Torffaint du Bray, 1632. It is called, in the Title, The second Edition corrected. Mr Perrault, who so highly commended Balzac's Aristippus (25), said nothing advantageous of his Prince. He only takes notice, that this Piece appeared after the Miscellaneous Works. I flatter myself he will not take it amiss, if I observe, that he is mistaken. For the Miscellaneous Works did not appear till a long time after the Prince (26). Let us conclude with a Passage of Gabriel Naudé: "Quibus omnibus velut coronidem accessisse ferunt Bullaci, Viri Clarissimi, Principem, Gallicæ modo pumice diligenter expolitum. Verum enimvero, quoniam ipse post meum à Gallia discessum typis fuit demandatus, ut propterea nondum in manus meas pervenerit; varique, ut audio, ac proflus accipiti judiciorum alea fuit acceptus: hoc solum de illo pronunciare possum, quod fuit ab antiquis in simili occasione ex formula usurpatum, Non liquet (27). — To all which, they say, is added, as a finishing Piece, the Prince of the most famous Balzac, now represented in the finest French Polish. But, as that Book was not printed till after my leaving France, and is therefore not yet come to my Hands, and has been, I bear, very differently received: I can only say this of it, as some of the Ancients did on a like Occasion, It does not appear."

[G] He kept up Epistolary Correspondence.] This Correspondence was so great, that it over-powered Mr Balzac. For, besides that he composed with extreme Difficulty, he knew, that his Letters would be shewn to every body, and must therefore be very exact. See how he describes his own Case in this respect. "He receives all the bad Compliments of Christendom, to say nothing of the good ones, which give him yet more trouble. He is persecuted, he is killed, with the Civilities, which come to him from the four Quarters of the World; and last Night there lay fifty Letters on the Table in his Chamber, which required Answers; and those eloquent ones, and such as might be shewn, copied, and printed. — (28). He lays in another place (29), "At this very time I am speaking to you, there lie a Century of Letters on my Table, which wait for Answers: I owe some to crowned Heads." As he was the first in France, who acquired a great Name by this sort of Writings, so he obtained the Title of the great Epistolizer of France. The first Letters, he published, were not near so good as those he wrote after his Retirement; and yet the latter did not sell any thing like the former. Sorel had reason to make this Observation (31); and the Critic Maimbourg was not to blame for repeating it (32). This shews the capricious Humour of the Public.

[H] His

(20) Menage, Remarks on Aymault, p. 252.

(21) See the Pieces, added at the End of the Christian Socrates.

(22) Balzac's Letter 43, l. 8. Entretien, 13, p. 282.

(23) History of the French Academy, pag. 221, & 267.

(24) Richet's Letters, pag. 97.

(25) Perrault's Illustrations Men, pag. 176.

(26) The Licence for Printing his Prince, is dated the 13th of Sept. 1631; and the Apprehension is dated the third of October following. The Miscellaneous Works were printed in the Year 1645.

(27) Naudæus, Bibliogr. Polit. p. 47.

(28) Balzac, Entretien, 7.

(29) The seventh Letter of the fifth Book, in the Volume to Constant. See also the Choice Letters, pag. 15, and the Letters to Chapelain, pag. 81, Edit. of Holland.

(30) Select Epistles, pag. 258.

(31) Sorel's Biblioth. Franç. pag. 135.

(32) Preface to the New Letters on Maimbourg's History of Calvinism.

Sprightliness, which shines in those of Voiture; yet they are very pleasing, and have a certain lively and serious Gaiety, almost inimitable [H]. There appear also, in all his Writings, a great many Touches of Learning, well chosen, and well applied. In a Word, one cannot sufficiently admire, considering in what condition he found the French Tongue, how he could open his way to such a neatness of Style. It must not be wondered at, that his Writings favour of Labour. Elevation; and Grandeur, was his principal Character; which cannot be attained without Meditation. In all probability, future Ages will do his Works Justice, for the long Discredit, they suffered, by means of some Critics: Which did not hinder a great number of very excellent Judges from persevering constantly in their first Admiration

(d). He was a good Latin Poet; and his Latin Letters shew, that he wrote That Language in very great Purity. If he had many Enemies, who wrote against him [I], he had, on the other side, a very great number of Friends, and Admirers (e); and there were few Persons of Merit, either French or Foreigners, who, in travelling through France, did not take the Pleasure of making him a Visit [K]. He was one of the forty Members of the French Academy [L]. Cardinal Mazarin endeavoured (d) See what Mr Menage said of Mr Balzac's Eloquence, Menagiana, pag. 212, 213, 214. See also Mr Perrault in Balzac's Elégy.

(e) The great Dux Caesar's Load and showed him very much. See his Life by Mr Baillet, Vol. I. pag. 159, & seq.

[H] His Letters ----- have ----- a certain lively and serious Gaiety, almost inimitable. Let us hear what Richeliet says (33). "Balzac does not make a Complaint, which has not in it something witty, new, and eloquent. — He had a pleasing sprightly Melancholy: This appears in his Letters, and he never speaks of it without charming the Heart, and inspiring Delight. — He discovers there a certain Melancholy full of Charms, which engages more than all the Gaiety in the World."

(33) Richeliet, Lett. p. 81, 82.

[I] He had a great many Enemies, who wrote against him. The Chancellor Seguyer, having prevented the Publication of a Book composed against Balzac in 1636, received, a little while after, a Letter from that Author (34), which contains the following Words: "So long as there are none but these Pen-gladiators, who present themselves for Licence to appear in print, be not so sparing of the Prince's Favours, but abate a little of your Severity. If it was a new thing, perhaps I should not be displeased with the Suppression of the first Libel, which should abuse me; but now there are as many of them, as will make a small Library, I am very well pleased to see the Number increased, and I take delight in raising a monumental heap of Stones, which Envy has cast at me, without doing me any harm." Among those, who wrote against him, besides the Persons already mentioned, we may reckon Daniel Heinfius, who answered, with some scorn, the Criticisms, which Balzac had made on the Herodes Infanticida. See the Thirty fifth Entretien of Balzac upon this, and the Twenty fifth Letter of the first Book of Chapelain, and the twentieth of the second Book. Salmajus, who was Heinfius's Enemy, and Balzac's Friend, appeared in this Dispute, and adjudged the Victory to his Friend: but a Minister of Languedoc, whose Name was Croi (35), took arms against Balzac in favour of Heinfius: and yet, a little while after, he wrote very sharply against Heinfius; but it was indeed on other matters. Nicolas Bourbon, of the French Academy, is also one of the Number. See what the Historian of the Academy says of it (36). We must not forget Coffar, who, thinking, that Balzac had, by way of Jealousy, engaged Mr de Girac to criticize Voiture, addressed to him the Defence of Voiture, and stult it full of stinging Raileries. The Blow was felt, and the matter came at last to an open War. And Coffar threw off the Mask. See how Mr Girard reproaches him for it in the Preface to Balzac's Entretiens. There are some Facts in the Menagiana very proper to be inserted here. "Mr de Balzac, after having obliged Mr de Girac to write in Latin, against the Letters of Voiture, engaged also Mr Coffar in the Defence of Voiture, and to write against Mr de Girac: this was to procure to himself the Praises of both Parties. I passed through Mans in my return to Paris, at the same time that the Defence was finished. Mr Coffar gave me two Copies of it, the one to be sent to Mr de Pincheyne, Nephew to Mr Voiture, and the other to Mr Conrart. He told me, that he would willingly submit it to any Alterations, either by adding, or diminishing. One of the Copies was communicated to Mr Balzac, who sent some Corrections; but, in the mean while, the Work was printed. And, as his Corrections came when the Impression was finished, an Account

(34) It is the 43d of the 3d Book of the second Part of the Choice Letters.

(35) He is the Author of the Anonymous Answer to Balzac's Letter and Discourse on a Tragedy of Heinfius, entitled, Herodes Infanticida; which Answer was printed at Geneva (lib) the Title does not mention it) in 1642.

(36) Pag. 259, Edit. 1674. See also the 28th, and 36th Letter of the second Book of Chapelain.

was sent him, that they were received too late; and the Count appeared such as it was, which gave him some Uneasiness (37). I pass over the biting Expressions belittled on Balzac, in the Hexameron Rustique. See the Complaint, which Mr Menage makes, for having been introduced in it, to act a Part against Mr Balzac (38). I omit also what passed between Mr du Moulin, and him; for it was only a light skirmish of Controversy, wherein each Party was complimented. Other Disputes proceeded from it, which were more malignant (39); but, as far as I can remember, Mr Balzac received only this little Blow in it; Vir ingenio compto & Gallicæ eloquentiæ laude clarus Balzacus, sed in religionis negotio plusquam infans. — Balzac famous for his fine Understanding, and his French Eloquence, but in Matters of Religion ignorant below the Capacity of a Child. Mr du Moulin gave it him in the Epistle Dedicatory of his Answer to Petra-Santa. No notice was taken of it, as if the Insult was not known. See the eleventh Letter of the second Book to Chapelain. I should be too tedious, if I should undertake to speak of one de Vaux (40), and all the other Adversaries of Balzac.

(37) Menagiana, pag. 166, 167.

(38) Ibid. pag. 323.

(39) The Jesuit Sylvestre à Petra-Santa having written sharply against du Moulin's Answer to Balzac, was paid in the same Coin, by du Moulin and Rivet.

(40) He published the Tomb of the French Orator.

[K] There were few Persons — who — did not take the Pleasure of making him a Visit. This was a great Incumbrance to him, as appears by these words of his seventh Entretien. "Some troublesome Persons come here sometimes, from above an hundred Leagues distance, and that on purpose, if they may be credited, who are almost the Death of him, beginning with their first Compliment, that his great Reputation, and the Celebrity, which he has given to the Place of his Abode, have obliged them to come and see A Person so well known, and A Village so renowned; so that he ought not to take amiss so just and obliging a Curiosity. Some Days since, one of these curious Persons began his Harangue with, The Respect and Veneration, which be always had for him, and for the Gentlemen his Books. Nothing can be more Historical than this; by which you see how far the Style of Compliments may be carried." They were not only learned Men, who went to see him, but great Lords also, and I am much deceived, if the Count de Pigneranda did not do him that Honour, when he passed through that Country, in his Return to Spain. Mr Balzac informs us with Pleasure, that the same Count had reproached him for the ardent Zeal of his Pen, in the Defence of the Honour of France. This we find in the Letter, wherein he confutes the current Report, that he had composed a Manifesto for the Prince of Condé, in 1651 (41).

[L] He was one of the forty Members of the French Academy. Mr Pellisson, having related, from the Register of the Academy, that, on the thirteenth Day of March, 1634, Mr de Beisrebert produced a Letter, which he had wrote, on his own Authority, to Mr de Balzac, to acquaint him, that, if he should request of the Society, by Letter, to be admitted among them, it would readily be granted. I say, Mr Pellisson, having related this, adds, That he did not find in the Register what followed upon it; but that undoubtedly Mr Balzac was, upon his Answer, admitted, a little while after, into the Academy (42). Mr Balzac did not find Mr Pellisson a faithful Historian

(41) It is printed at the Christian Socrates.

(42) History of the Academy, pag. 221.

(f) See Balzac's first Letter to that Cardinal, in the Vol. of Letters to Conrart.

(g) See the 11th Letter to Conrart, lib. 3. and several others in the same Volume.

(h) Thus he was pleased to call the Place of his Residence.

(i) This appears in an hundred Places of his Letters.

endeavoured to recall him to Court (f). Queen Christina was very kind to him, and desired him to write to her (g). The greatest Lords of the Kingdom gave him, in his Desert (b), many Marks of their Esteem (i). His greatest Excellency was, that he not only lived and died in his Retreat as a good Man, but also as a good Christian. While he was living, he set a-part Eight thousand Crowns of his Estate for Pious Uses (k). He caused two Chambers to be built for him, in the Convent of the Capuchins of Angoulême [M], where he often resided (l). It was there that he composed his Christian Socrates. He spoke some very fine things on his Death-bed, and, by his Will, ordered himself to be buried in the Hospital of Our Lady of the Angels in Angoulême, at the Feet of the Poor, that were buried there (m). He bequeathed twelve thousand Livres to that Hospital, and left a Fund, of an hundred Livres a Year, to be given every two Years as a Prize to him, who, in the Judgment of the French Academy, should best compose a Discourse on a Pious Subject (n). He died the eighteenth of February 1654 [N]. The Sieur Morisset, a Canon of Angoulême, made his Funeral Oration, and another Morisset, Brother of the former, and Advocate in the Presidial of the same City, caused a Discourse to be printed in Praise of the Deceased (o). An Edition of all Balzac's Works was published at Paris, in the Year 1665, in two Volumes in Folio, with a Preface of the Abbot Cassagnes, a Member of the French Academy. Consult the Illustrious Men of Mr Perrault, and you will find there an Elogy of John Lewis Guez.

(b) Epistle Dedicatory of Balzac's Entretiens.

(l) Morisset, Account of his Death.

(m) St. Romuald, Chronol. Abbrevi. ad Ann. 1654.

(n) This was not begun to be executed before the Year 1671. See the Hist. of the French Academy, Edit. 2. pag. 555.

(o) St. Romuald, ubi supra.

(43) In the Year 1635, La Peyre dedicated his Book, intitled The Explication of the Times, to the Academy, with this Title, To the Eminent, adorned with the Cardinal's Picture engraved on a Copper Plate, with a Crown of Rays round it, on each of which was inscribed the Name of an Academiſt. History of the Academy, p. 195.

(44) Ibid. pag. 221.

(45) Ibid. pag. 106.

in this matter: He acknowledges, that Mr BuisRobert had exhorted him several times to write a complimentary Letter to the Academy, and had even threatened him from the Cardinal, if he should refuse to write That Compliment: But he declares, that he wrote no Answer, and that, about five or six Months afterwards, he had an Account of his being made a Member of the Academy, and of his Name having been seen in the Sun of the little honest Man, Mr de la Peyre (43). From whence he concludes, that, if a Letter had been presented, as from him, to the Academy, it was a false one. This is what he wrote to Mr Conrart, the Twenty second of September 1653. It is not known, what answer he received from him to clear the matter; but it appears by a Letter of the third of November, of the same Year, that Mr Conrart had undeceived him. One would almost suspect, that Mr Conrart had satisfied him, that he had seen the very Original of That Compliment under his own Hand; from whence we must conclude, that the greatest Wits do not always remember the Letters they have written some Years before. What is unquestionable is, that Mr de Balzac took himself to be a true and absolute Academiſt; for the Register of the fourteenth of April, 1636, testifies, that he read some part of his Prince in the Academy (44); and it has been proved by his printed Letters, that he "sent some of his "Works to Monsieur du Chatelet, desiring him to "read them in the Academy, and to accompany "them with some of his Words, which, he said, "would not only suffice to excuse him to them for "the Thanks, but also for the Speech, which he "owed them (45)." He had just before said, "That "the Honour which the Academy had done him, "to admit him into their Body, without obliging "him to go to Paris, were two singular Favours "at one time." I remember two Passages in his Letters, wherein he acknowledges the Gentlemen of the Academy for his Brethren. The first is in the sixteenth Page of his Choice Letters, and the last in the Ninety fifth Page of his Letters to Chapelain.

[M] He caused two Chambers to be built for him in the Convent of the Capuchins of Angoulême.] I have not read any where, but in the Menagiana, that he had a Design to put on the Habit of that Order. "Mr de Balzac was so affected with Devotion, that he "entered into a Convent of the Capuchins, where he "had a Mind to put on their Habit. Nevertheless, "he did not die there (46)." Perhaps he desired, like many others, to die in the Habit of St Francis.

[N] He died the eighteenth of Feb. 1654.] The List of the Academiſts, printed at the end of the second Edition of The History of the Academy, makes Mr de Balzac live 'till the Year 1657, since, in that Year, it names Hardouin de Peresfixe, Archbishop of Paris, as his Successor. On the contrary, the List of the deceased Academiſts, printed at the end of the State of France, of the Year 1680, mentions Mr de Balzac as dead a considerable time before the Year 1654; since it places him before Baro and Baudouin, who died before the Year 1651. If Mr Pellisson had been concerned in the second Edition of The History of the Academy, the two Faults, which I have quoted, would not have been seen in the List; one whereof relates to the time, when Balzac died, the other to the Person that succeeded him, who is not Mr de Peresfixe. Moreover, Mr de Peresfixe was not Archbishop of Paris, in the Year 1657. But Mr Pellisson has not examined these Particulars. Mr Baillet, who, without doubt, believed the contrary, is very excusable, for having thought, that, on such an Authority, he might place the Death of Balzac in the Year 1657 (47). As to the Day of his Death, Moreri, St. Romuald (48), Henningus de Witte (49), Mr Perrault, and several others, say it was the Twenty eighth of February. But the Persons, whom I have consulted, informed me, that it was the nineteenth of February, according to the Contract made with the French Academy, concerning the Fund that Balzac left it, and according to a Manuscript Letter of the Sieur Morisset. Lastly, it was the eighteenth of February, if we may rely on these two things: the one is, that, in the Preface to Balzac's Works, it is affirmed, that the Account of his Death was written the very next Day after: the other is, that this Account is dated the nineteenth of February, 1654.

(46) Menagiana, pag. 238.

(47) Baillet, Judgm. on Poets, Tom. 4. n. 1487.

(48) In the Table of his Chronol. Journal, printed in 1664; for he says nothing of Balzac under Febr. 28.

(49) Dier. Biographie. ad Ann. 1654.

BANCK (LAURENCE) a Native of Norcopin in Sweden, was Professor of the Civil Law, in the University of Franker, for the space of fifteen Years (a). He gained so great a Reputation, while he was a Student there, that, upon his Return thither from his Travels into France, Italy, Spain, &c. the Civil Law Chair was presented to him, together with a very good Salary (b). He died the thirteenth of October 1662 (c). I shall mention his Works below [A], and particularly an Edition, which he published, of the famous Book of Taxes of the Romish Chancery [B]. It is a Work sufficiently curious to be considered a little more

(b) Banck. Epist. Dedic. Taxæ Cancellariæ Romanæ.

(c) Witte, ubi supra.

[A] I shall mention his Works below.] He published, at Franker, in 1649, a Book intitled, de Tyrannide Papæ in Reges & Principes Christianos. Seven Years after, he published Roma triumphans, seu Inauguratio Innocentii X. As to his Pieces, De Banca Ruptorio; De Duellis; De Consiliis & Conflariis Principum, &c. (1); I cannot ascertain their Dates.

[B] — and an Edition, he published, of the Taxes of the Romish Chancery.] I have related, in another Place (2), several things concerning these Taxes, and particularly mentioned the Edition of them, published by Pinet, in the Year 1564. I have observed also, that d' Aubigné quotes the Edition of Paris, in 1520. This is not the first, as some have imagined; for the

(1) In Rem. [B] of the Article p. 1. NET.

(1) Witte, Dier. ad Ann. 1662.

more particularly, and deserves our making some Reflections on it, as well to rectify what we have already said of it elsewhere (d), as to illustrate what several other Authors have written about it, who have not explained themselves with due exactness.

(d) Le Remark [B] of the Article PINET.

(3) It is in Latin and Dutch, in 8vo See Preface, and p. 330.

(4) By Gofwin Colinaur.

(5) Taxe Canc. Apof. pag. 95, 96, Edit. of Bois-le-duc.

(6) See Remark [1] of the Article PINET.

(7) That is, he must pay 5 Gros.

(8) It is that published by Banck. See pag. 127.

(9) See Remark [B] of the Article PINET.

(10) P. 132.

(11) P. 103.

(12) That is, he must pay 5 or 7 Gros.

(13) It was printed at Lyons in 1564, and at Leyden in 1607, and at Amsterdam in 1701, with a new French Translation. These 3 Editions are in 8vo.

(14) Taxe des Parties Casuelles de la Boutique du Pape, pag. 65, & seq. Edit. of Lyons, 1564 in 8vo.

Edition of Bois-le-duc, 1664 (3), shews, that this Book was printed at Rome, in the Year 1514, and at Cologne (4), in 1515; and was entituled Regule, Constitutiones, Reservationes, Cancellarij, S. Domini nostri Leonis Papæ decimi, noviter editæ & publicatæ, and that, in fol. 67, it has these Words: Taxe Cancellariæ, per Marcellum Silber, alias Franck, Romæ, in Campo Floræ, Anno M.D.XIV, die XVIII Novembris impressæ, finient feliciter. - - - - The Chancery Taxes, printed by Marcellus Silber, alias Franck, at Rome, in the Campus Floræ, the eighteenth of November, 1514, is happily completed. This is attested by two of the Eschevins of Bois-le-duc, together with the Town-Clerk, who had collated, Word for Word, this Edition of Rome, with That published by Stephen du Mont, Bookseller at Bois-le-duc, in the Year 1664, and entituled, Taxe Cancellariæ Apofolice, & Taxæ Sacræ Penitentiariæ Apofolice. In this last we find (5) the Passage, quoted by d'Aubigné, from the Paris Edition, in 1530 (6): Abolutio pro eo qui matrem, Sororem, aut aliam conjuganeam vel affinem suam, aut commatrem, carnaliter cognovit, gr. v. Abolutio pro eo qui virginem deforavit, gr. vi. (7). — The Abolutio of him who has lain with his Mother, Sister, or other Relation, either in Consanguinity, or Affinity, is taxed at Gr. v. The Abolutio of him who has deflowered a Virgin, Gr. vi. This is also to be met with in the Edition of Franeker, in 1651 (8). I am surprized it should be wanting in the Edition of du Pinet, entituled, Taxe des Parties Casuelles de la Boutique du Pape. This is in Latin and French, with Notes added by the Editor. He was greatly to blame, in not mentioning on what authentic Copies he formed his Edition; for it differs from the others, both in the order of Matters, and in the Denomination of Monies. This mentions only Tournois, Ducats, and Carlini; and the others only Gros: at least the Ducat and Carlin is very rarely mentioned. d'Aubigné affirms (9), that the Paris Edition says, The Murder of a Father, or Mother, is rated at one Ducat, and five Carlini; but, in the Edition of Franeker (10), and in That of Bois-le-duc (11), it is, "Abolutio pro eo qui interfecit patrem, matrem, sororem, uxorem - - - - gr. v. vel vij (12). "The Abolutio of him, who has murdered his Father, Mother, Sister, Wife, - - - - at gr. v. or vij." I say, I am surprized, that this Article of Incest should be missing in the Edition of du Pinet (13), in which we find more enormous Articles; These, for instance; "Abolutio à lapu carnis super quocunque actu libidinoso commissio per clericum, etiam cum monialibus, intra & extra septa monasterii, aut cum conjuganeis vel affinis, aut filiâ spirituali, aut quibuscum aliis, five ab unoquoque de per se, five simul ab omnibus abolutio petatur cum dispensatione ad ordines & beneficia, cum inhibitione, tur. 36. duc. 3. Si verò cum illis petatur abolutio etiam a crimine commissio contra naturam, vel cum brutis, cum dispensatione, ut supra, & cum inhibitione, turon. 90. duc. 12. carl. 16. Si verò petatur tantum abolutio à crimine contra naturam, vel cum brutis, cum dispensatione, & inhibitione, turon. 36. duc. 9. Abolutio pro moniali, qua se permittit pluries cognosci intra & extra septa monasterii, cum rehabilitatione ad dignitates illius ordinis, etiam abbatiale, turon. 36. duc. 9. Abolutio pro concubinario, cum dispensatione ad ordines & beneficia, turon. 21. duc. 5. carlin. 6 (14). - - - - The Abolutio and Pardon of all Acts of Fornication committed by a Cleric, in what manner soever, whether it be with a Nun, within or without the Limits of the Nunnery, or with his Relations, in Consanguinity, or Affinity, or with his God-daughter, or with any other Woman whatsoever; and whether also the said Abolutio be given in the Name only of the Cleric himself, or of him jointly with his Wives, with a Dispensation to enable him to take and hold his Orders, and ecclesiastical Benefices, and with a Clause also of Inhibition, costs Thirty six Tournois, and nine or three Ducats. And if, besides the above, he receives Abolutio from Buggery, and the Crime against Nature, although committed with brute

Beasts, with the Dispensation and Clause of Inhibition, as before, he must pay ninety Tournois, twelve Ducats, and six Carlini. But, if he only receives Abolutio from Buggery, or the Crime against Nature, and committed with brute Beasts, with the Dispensation and Clause of Inhibition, he pays only Thirty six Tournois, and nine Ducats. A Nun, having committed Fornication several times within and without the Bounds of her Nunnery, shall be absolved, and enabled to hold all the Dignities of her Order, even that of Abbess, by paying Thirty six Tournois, and nine Ducats. The Abolutio of him, who keeps a Concubine, with Dispensation to take and hold his Orders, and ecclesiastical Benefices, costs Twenty one Tournois, five Ducats, and six Carlini (15)." I conjecture, that du Pinet followed the Edition, which the Protestant Princes inserted amongst the Causes of their rejecting the Council of Trent, and which was entituled, Taxe Sacræ Penitentiariæ (16). Mr Heidegger recites some Pieces of it, which exactly agree with the Edition of du Pinet (17). It is observed by some, that there is an Epitome of the Taxes of the Romish Chancery, at pag. 603, & seq. of a Work entituled, Luculentæ Deductio Causarum recusati Concilii Tridentini à Protestantium Germaniæ Principibus publicatarum, and at the beginning of a Book of Hunnius de Indulgentiis, and at pag. 216, & seq. of Majusculæ Common Places (18). The Author of the Book, entituled Simonia Curie Romæ, printed in 1612, has inserted in it this Passage of the said Common Places (19). Compare this with the Remark [A], of the Article TUPPIUS.

We shall say something of the Edition, published by Laurence Banck. It was printed at Franeker, in the Year 1651, in 8vo. He says, he consulted the most ancient Copies, both printed and Manuscript; and, by comparing them Word for Word, supplied from thence, which were most perfect, what was wanting in the others. He made use of the Edition of Cologne, in 1523, of that of Wittenburg, in 1538, of that of Venice, in 1584 (20), and of a Manuscript, which had been communicated by John Baptist Sibon, a Bernardin Friar, and Reader of the College at Rome. By this means he enlarged his Edition, something beyond any of the former. He added a sort of Glossary, or Notes, to explain the difficult Terms. He also subjoined a small Piece, in Italian, containing the Taxes in Use, under Pope Innocent X; and explained the Value of Money, according to the Usage of that Time. His Notes have been of great Service to the Author of the Remarks, added to the Edition of Bois-le-duc. Note, that, in the Preface of this here, it is observed, that the Inquisitors have put the Tax of the Chancery in the List of condemned Books. "Nascentem suffocare conati sunt ipsi Authores, & in Indice Librorum prohibitorum, ex Patrum Concilii Tridentini autoritate, Hispaniarumque Regis & ducis Alban. decreto, Leodii anno 1570 edito, inter primæ Classis Authores atro calculo notarunt (21). — The Authors themselves endeavoured to stifle it in the Birth, and branded it among the Works of the first Class, in the List of prohibited Books, published at Liege, in the Year 1570, by the Authority of the Fathers of the Council of Trent, and by the Decree of the King of Spain, and Duke d'Alva." I have not this Edition of the Index Librorum prohibitorum. That, which I make use of, and which was copied from That of Madrid, in 1667, in Folio, places, only under the third Class, Præfixæ & Taxæ Officiæ Penitentiariæ Papæ, ab Hæreticis depravata (22): Observe, that it is only condemned on the Supposition of its having been corrupted by Heretics; and the Index, published at Rome, by Order of Alexander VII, uses the same Words with this of Spain (23). But let them suppose as much as they please, that it has been corrupted by Heretics, the Editions of it, which cannot be disowned, as That of Rome, in 1514; That of Cologne, in 1515; Those of Paris, in 1520, in 1545, and in 1625 (24); and Those of Venice (25), one in the sixth Volume of the Oceanus Juris, published in 1533, the other in the fifteenth Volume of the same Collection, reprinted in 1584: These Editions, I say, are more than sufficient

(15) I have followed du Pinet's Translation.

(16) See Heidegger Myfter. Babylon. magnæ, Tom. II, p. 350, & seq.

(17) Ibid. p. 350, & seq.

(18) Daniel Francus, Disquisit. Academicæ de Indicibus Libr. prohib. & expurgand. p. 115. Lipsæ 1684. 4to.

(19) Lydiæ Analacta in Clemang. pag. 17.

(20) He means that published in Tom. XV, Part. I. pag. 368, of Tractatus Trinitatis, seu Oceanus Juris Universæ.

(21) Preface of Taxæ Cancell. & Penitent. Apofol. Edit. of Bois-le-duc.

(22) Indices Libror. prohibitor. & expurgand. Hispanicus Romanus. Genev. 1657 in Folio, pag. 859. col. 2.

(23) Ibid. in Indice Roman. ejusd. Edit. pag. 106.

(24) Mr Drellincourt cites these 3 Editions of Paris. See his Words in Remark [B] of the Article PINET.

(25) Heidegger Myfter. Babylon. magnæ. Tom. I. p. 547.

sufficient to justify the Reproaches of the Protestants, and to cover the Church of Rome with Confusion. Our Laurence Banck was ignorant of almost all these Editions, I have particularized, as also of That of Frankfort, in 1612, in 4to (26). Rivet, Voëtius, Hottinger, and several other, Hellwones Librorum, great Readers, have falsely believed, that the Edition of 1520, was the first (27); for they have principally urged this Edition against the Roman Catholics, who would not allow, that ever the Taxation of the Chancery had appeared by Authority. Voëtius relates, that, in 1633, a Chancellor of Bois-le-duc declared he would abjure his Catholicism, if any one could shew him those Abominations, which the Protestants had quoted, as from the Taxes of the Romish Chancery. Application was made to Rivet, who lent his Copy of the Paris Edition, in 1520 (28). Voëtius, in giving this Account, takes Occasion to exhort, very pathetically, the Library-keepers of Protestant Universities, to preserve and buy up the authentic Copies of this Work. "Quia autem, says he (29), "hic Taxe Penitentiariae mentio facta, moneo exemplaria pauca hodie haberi posse (quæ & quorum "arte facili prudentiores cuncti;) aliqua tamen "in manibus nostrorum superflue editionis Parisiensis "1520, in 4^o, apud Tussain Denis. Editæ etiam est "Venetiis, cum quampulcris aliis Tractatibus in "Oceano Juris. Addo, rem & librum à Pontificiis "passim negari, ubi ita usu venit, ut nostri, allegando illam Taxam, mendacii & calumnie suspecti fiant, imò & arguerent. Accidit anno 1633, ut quis J. Confultus idemque Senator Sylvæducentis, desertionem & rejectionem Papatus mineretur, (more ipsi non infolito, si quidem tam abominanda, qualia ex Taxâ nostri referunt, demonstrari possent. Ut amplius & consult. huic Viro ex asse satisfaceret, quæritum apud exemplari (30), me de etiam à me postulatam est. Quod cum mihi ab ipsis pontificiis editum nullum esset, petii commodato à celeberrimo Theologo Andræ Riveto. Ante biennium alibi concertatione inter nostros & Pontificios quoddam obortâ super eadem hæc Taxâ, denuo consultus, commonstravi Bibliothecam D. Riveti, in quâ certo scirem exemplar edit. Parisi. 1520. haberi; quippe quod ipse ante annos aliquot manibus & oculis meis usurpasset, & Fratribus Sylvæducentibus ex summi illius Theolog. concessione aliquamdiu usurpandum misissem. Velim hæc occasione obtestatos omnes publicos Reformatum Scholarum, Ecclesiarum, Politiarum, Bibliothecarios, exemplaria illa, si quæ in ipsis potestate sint, capis inclusa diligenter custodiant, ne à plagiaris auferantur; aut, si non sint, hoc agant, ut à privatis five Bibliopoliis, five Viris literatis, prece aut pretio quovis redimant. — But, since I have here mentioned the Penitentiary Fees, I must take notice, that there are but few Copies of it now to be met with, by whose means, and what Contrivance, is not difficult to be conjectured, though we have some of the Paris Edition, in 1520, in 4to, by Tussain Denis, still remaining in our Hands. It was also published at Venice, with several other Tracts, in the Oceanus Juris. I must add, that both the Fact, and the Book, are denied by the Papist, inasmuch that when we cite those Fees, we are not only suspected, but even accused, of Forgery and Calumny. It happened in the Year 1633, that a certain Civilian, and Counsellor of Bois-le-duc, engaged (by an usual Bravo) to renounce Popery, if those Abominations could be proved, which our Protestants quoted from those Fees. In order to give full Satisfaction to this honourable and learned Person, great Inquiry was made for a Copy of it, and, among others, Application was made to me. As I had not an Edition by me, which was published by the Papist, I borrowed one of That celebrated Divine, Andrew Rivet. About two Years after, being consulted again, upon another Dispute between our People, and some of the Papists, concerning these Fees, I showed them the Library of Rivet, where I knew there was a Copy of the Paris Edition, 1520; having myself pe- ruled it, some Years before, and sent it, by the Favour of that great Divine, to be perused, for some time, by the Fraternity of Bois-le-duc. I would take this Occasion earnestly to intreat all public Library-keepers of Protestant Seminaries, Churches, and Societies, who have any of these Copies in their Custody, to take particular Care and secure them in their Cases, out of the Reach of Plagiarists; and those, who have not any of them, to make it their Business to procure such as are to be met with in private Hands, either of Book-sellers, or Men of Learning, at any Rate.

I take the Romish Controversists, who have not a Word to say against the Authority of the Edition of Rome, or That of Paris, to be under great Perplexity. This appears from the Answers of Abbot Richard to the Præjuxæ of Mr Jurieu. This Minister had published the Abominations of the Tax of the Chancery (31). The Abbot replies, that these were only particular Facts, which had never been authorized by the Laws and Canons of the Church of Rome (32).

"We find, indeed, continues he (33), that [Mr Jurieu] relates * these Taxes from an old Book of the Romish Chancery. But is it not extremely ridiculous, to endeavour to pass upon the World a Book of Taxes for Laws and Canons? Would it not be making a Jest of all Civil Law, to insert Tables of Taxes into the Code, and reckon them in the Number of Laws? Would not this be doing great Honour to the Gentlemen concerned in them?

"Let Mr Jurieu, therefore, inform himself, what are the Laws and Canons of the Church of Rome; and let him know, in the mean time, that these old Taxes of the Chancery of Rome are not only of no Authority in the Church, but have always been regarded by her with Horror. These Taxes of the Chancery began but under the Pontificate of John XXII, about the Year 1320; and the Taxes of the Penitentiary appeared only towards the Year 1336, under Benedict XII †; and both were immediately suppressed, and ever afterwards ranked in the Number of prohibited Books, according to the Remark of Mr du Mont, who printed them in the Year 1664; which sufficiently shews the Church of Rome's Abhorrence of those Taxes, and that she is far from proposing, or observing, them for Rules, as Mr Jurieu would make us believe she has done. Let him therefore consider, that the Acts of the Officers of the Court of Rome are but particular Acts, and not at all the Acts of the Church." This Answer is far from sufficient; for, in the first place, the Church of Rome has never shewn, by the Suppression of these Taxes, that she has had them in Abhorrence. They have been printed thrice at Paris, twice at Cologne, and twice at Venice; and some of these Editions have been published since Claude d'Espence exclaimed publicly against the Enormities of this Book. We have seen, that the Inquisition of Spain, and That of Rome, have condemned it only as they suppose it to have been corrupted by Heretics. I must add, in the second place, that the Suppression of such a Work is not a sure Sign of disapproving the Rules it contains. This may only signify, that they repented of the Publication of it, as it gave so fair a Handle for the Heretics to reproach the Court of Rome, and to wound the Church of Rome through the Sides of the Pope. These ought to be esteemed Mysteries of State, Arcana Imperii, not to be divulged (34). Are there not Persons of the same Opinion as to Ceremonies (35)? I pass by many other Considerations, which a Controversist might alledge against Mr Jurieu's Adversary; but I shall not content myself with observing, that Claude d'Espence exclaimed, very loudly, against the Abomination of these Taxes (36); I must also observe, that the Protestant Controversists cite This, in all their Disputes, and that the Spanish Inquisition would have this Passage expunged from That Doctor's Book (37). Note, that the Inquisition of Rome has condemned Laurence Banck's Edition of the Taxes (38).

(31) Jurieu, Præjuxæ latige, contre le Papiſme, Tom. I. p. pag. 295, & seq.

(32) Rivet, Examen des Præjuxæ de Mr Jurieu, pag. 218.

(33) Ibid. pag. 319.

* Part. 7. pag. 295. of his Præjuxæ.

† Polydore, Virgil, de Invent. Rarum, lib. VIII, c. II.

(34) Compare this with that of Hor. de Art. Poët. ver. 185.

— nam tam Digna geri promes in Scenam t multaque tolles Ex oculis, que mox narret fœcundia præfens. Improper Sighi do but disjunge the Scene, Such had much better be describ'd than seen.

(35) See Remark [D] of the Article GRASSIS.

(36) See a Passage of Mr Drellin-court, cited in Remark [B] of the Article PINET.

(37) Index Hispan. Libror. prohibitor. p. 232, col. 1.

(38) Index Rom. Libror. prohibitor. pag. 124, col. 2. & pag. 261.

(26) Catalogue of the Oxford Library, pag. 132.

(27) Franci Disquisit. de Indicibus Libr. prohib. p. 115, 116.

(28) Voët. Disquisit. Theolog. Tom. II, pag. 296.

(29) Id. ib.

(30) There is an Error in this Place. The Errata of the Author corr. it, me de exemplari. But this does not rectify the Error. Daniel Francus, Disquisit. de Indicibus Libr. prohibitor. p. 115, cites this Passage thus: quæritum apud alios de exemplari, etiam à me postulatam, exemplar.

(a) The Words of Voëtius, circa annum 1500. vivat Matth. Bandellus, in pag. 677, de Hilhor. Latinitate, are not worthy regarding.

BANDEL (MATTHEW), born at Castro-novo in Lombardy, flourished in the XVth Century (a). He was a Dominican. Moreri (b) has repeated the greatest part of what Voëtius had said of him; but he ought to have added some other curious matters of Fact, and not to have omitted two Circumstances, which were taken notice of by Voëtius: One of which is, That the Translation of Egesippus is in Italian;

(b) Moreri under the Word BANDELLA.

Italian; The other, that the Inhabitants of Fermo caused the Harangue, which Matthew Bandel made in praise of their City, in the Year 1513, to be placed among their Records (c). Here follow some Supplements. This Friar, being at Mantua, contracted a very strict Friendship with Julius Cæsar Scaliger, which continued all his Life-time, and which he carefully cultivated in Guienne [A]. He was some Months Bishop of Agen, and there he composed, in the Italian Tongue, the Histories, or the Gallant Novels, which made him so famous. I have quoted them in the Remark [M] of the Article LEO X. and in the Remark [I] of the Article MAHOMET II. They are each of them dedicated to some Person of his Acquaintance (d). The Twenty first of his Second Part is dedicated to Lucretia de Gonzague, to whom he had been Preceptor (e). He dedicated another to his Friend Scaliger. They have been translated into French, and we must say a word about the Judgment, which the Translator made of them [B]. The Catalogue of Thuanus's Library (f) informs me, that the three first Parts were printed at Lucca, in the Year 1554, in Quarto, and the fourth at Lyons, in the Year 1573, in Octavo. I wonder, that Mr Menage did not place this Monk in the Catalogue of Ecclesiastics, who have composed Love Verses (g) [C].

[A] He contracted a Friendship, with Julius Cæsar Scaliger, --- which he cultivated --- in Guienne.] This would scarcely be known, but from these Words: "Eodem tempore Mantuæ degebat Matthæus Bandellus insuper Dominicanus, vir eloquentissimus, & optimus, qui postea per aliquot menses Episcopus Aginnensis fuit, & Mantuæ Marium Æquicolum summa observantia coluit, atque ibi cum Julio Cæsare arctissima amicitia necessitudine conjunctus fuit, quam ab eo tempore, ad supremum usque vite diem, in Aquitania perpetuavit. Is, quum unam historiarum suarum, quas Aginni Etruscæ lingua Boccacium imitatus concripit Julio dedicaret, eum non solum Scaligerum agnoscit, sed etiam illusterrimum vocat in epistola dedicationis. Et quum in quatuor tomis ingentibus, singulas singulis summis, & nobilissimis, ac generosissimis viris dedicaverit, neminem eorum majori honore, quam Julium affectit, quum aliquot ex illis illustres vocare nulla fuisset invidia (1). --- At the same Time lived, at Mantua, Matthew Bandel, a Dominican, a very eloquent, and excellent Man, who was afterwards, for some Months, Bishop of Agen, and, at Mantua, professed a great Esteem for Marius Æquicola, contracting also there a most intimate Friendship, and Familiarity, with Julius Cæsar Scaliger, which he continued afterwards, in Guienne, to the Day of his Death. He dedicated to him one of his Novels, which he wrote in Italian, in Imitation of Boccace, and calls him illustrious Scaliger, in his Epistle dedicatory. And, though he dedicates every particular Novel, in all the four great Volumes, to so many several Persons of the biggest Rank, yet he honours none of them more remarkably than Scaliger, though calling some of those illustrious was far from a being Compliment." Lucretia de Gonzague wrote two Letters to Father Bandel, which intimate to us, that he was advanced to some Preferment. The first (2) shews, that he was in France (3), the second that he was in Guienne: In the first he is called Reverendo patre, but, in the other, he is styled Monsignor P. Bandello, and he is congratulated on his new Dignity. There is no Date of the Year to it. He was not yet a Bishop, when Julius Cæsar Scaliger wrote him a Letter (4), on the Death of Fracastorius. The Answer (5), Bandel returned him, is dated Bassensis 22 Novemb. 1553.

[B] His Novels have been translated into French, --- Here is the Judgment the Translator made of them.] Observe, first of all, that the first six were done into French, by Peter Boistau, and the other by Belleforest. The Advertisement to the Reader, prefixed to the first Volume (6), contains these Words: "Desiring also that you would not to take it ill, if I have not confined myself to the Style of Bandel; for his Phrases seemed to harsh to me, his Expressions so improper, his Discourse so ill put together, and his Sentences so barren, that I chose rather to new-mould his Work, and put it into another Form, than to be such a superstitious Imitator, having only taken the Subject Matter of the History, as you will easily discover, if you have the Curiosity to compare my Style with his." Observe here a Fact, which is pretty curious. Belleforest, working on the Thirty seventh Novel, was seized with such a Remorse of Conscience, that he resolved to leave off his Translation. "I will here lay down my Pen, says he (7), and leave, from henceforth,

"these Subjects, which are capable of being turned every way, and may serve as Lessons of Instruction to some, and, to others, as Examples, to encourage them in their Follies and Wildness; for what I have done of it, at this time, was rather to gratify a Friend, than out of any Desire to be necessary to the Publication of any Thing of this kind. Not that Age exempts me from speaking merrily and jocosely; but, whatever may be concealed under them, that may colour the too soft, and tender, Expressions, necessary to be used in describing Amours, there are different times for these Merriments: And, besides, I have other Designs of greater Consequence than Bandel's Histories, or the Amours of Those, who, by their Example, should deter us from following our sensual Appetite so far, as to become, at last, the Entertainment of Posterity, by the Memory of our Follies. This King (8), then, shall put an End to my Undertaking, and make me, from henceforth, take my Leave of all prophane Subjects, unless, sometimes, a more solid History should enliven my Spirits, and a longer Discourse should encourage me still to go on with this Author, whom I have rather adorned and amplified, than followed, or imitated." To excuse what is past, he adds this Remark. "I do not write Love Stories out of Levity, but as one, who laughs at Fools, and those, that are vainly transported with, and suffer themselves to be conquered by, their Lusts; and accuses Adulterers, detests the Infamous, abhors Murderers, and is sorry, that there are such senseless Men in the World, who sacrifice their Lives for so short a Pleasure, as the Ease of the Body. In fine, I praise Virtue, and condemn Sin, wishing, that, as I myself have taken warning, by these Examples, so I may see others put an End to their Folly, by the Amendment of their Lives. If any Body takes more Delight in the merry Stories, that are in Bandel, let him divert himself with them as much as he pleases: As for me, (as I have said) I give him up my Share of it, and leave him also the Happiness and Honour he may receive from thence, by enriching this dry Author, and also our Language, with the natural Sweetness of his Eloquence (9)." See here a French Layman, who scruples to translate, what an Italian Monk had wrote about Love. But this Scruple did not continue long; for Belleforest finished that Translation, and even added some Supplements to it.

[C] Mr Menage has not placed him in the Number of Ecclesiastics, who composed Love Verses. Bandel wrote some, and was congratulated for them, by his Friends. See Julius Cæsar Scaliger's Epigram, de Bandelli amoribus Tuscia lingua decantatis (10), and the four Verses I am going to transcribe:

Dum teneros loquitor dulcis Bandellus amores,
Ipse sui oblitus tela remisit amor.

Seu cantat Anionum fontem fontique sorores,
Ponti ipse ex illo lactea vena fluit (11).

While sweet Bandellus paints Love's various Charms,
The lifting God lets fall his useless Arms.
Or, if of Helicon we bear him sing,
His flowing Wit supplies the Muses Spring.

The Catalogue of Nicolas Heinsius's Library (12) informs me, that the Canti XI, &c. dal Bandelli, were printed, at Agen, in the Year 1545, in 8vo.

BANDOLE

(c) Voff. de Hist. Lat. pag. 677.

(d) See Remark [A].

(e) See that Lady's Article.

(f) In pag. 403, of part 2.

(g) It is at the end of the Anti-Bailliet

(1) Joseph. Scaliger. in Consultatione Fabulæ Burdonianæ, p. 269, 270.

(2) Letters of Lucretia de Gonzague. Venice 1553.

(3) Page 63.

(4) Pag. 56, of his Letters, Edit. of Leyden, 1600.

(5) Letter 67, among those of Julius Cæsar Scaliger.

(6) Printed at Paris, in 1567, and reprinted, the same Year, at Antwerp.

(7) Belleforest, in his Epistle, p. 327, part Po. matu

(8) Henry VIII, King of England.

(9) Belleforest, ibid. pag. 65.

(10) You may find it in Remark [B] the Art de GONZ. GUE (L. CRETIA

(11) Julius Cæsar Scaliger in his roibus, p. 327, part Po. matu

(12) In t 200, of t II.

BANDOLE. BANGIUS. BARANZAN. 631

BANDOLE (ANTHONY de), Advocate in the Parliament of Provence, published a French Translation of Xipbilinus, at Paris, in the Year 1610, in Quarto. He also printed, in the same City, in 1609, in Quarto, a Parallel between Cæsar, and Henry IV., prefixed to Cæsar's Commentaries, translated into French, and commented on by Vigener.

BANGIUS (THOMAS), Doctor and Professor of Divinity in the University of Copenhagen, was born in the Year 1600 (a). He finished his Studies in Humanity in the College of Ottensee, in the Island of Funen, and, about the Year 1621, he went to Copenhagen, where he continued his Studies with great Success. Gasper Brochmand, Professor of Divinity, and Bishop of Sealand, made him Preceptor to his Son. Bangius was, at the same time, Preceptor to Christian Friis, eldest Son of the Chancellor of Denmark. Having continued that Employ above five Years, he obtained a Pension of the King, and went to Rosstock, from whence he returned to Copenhagen, upon the Emperor's Troops advancing towards the Baltic Sea. He finished his Course of Divinity under Professor Brochmand, and then went to Franker, where he learned Rabinism and Chaldaism under Sixtinus Amama, by whom he was much esteemed. He afterwards studied at Wittenberg, where he received a Letter, in the Year 1630, from the Rector, and Council, of the University of Copenhagen, offering him the Professorship of the Hebrew Tongue. He desired to be excused, as not being learned enough to acquire himself worthily of that Office: But, being advised by Professor Brochmand, who was then Rector, not to refuse what was offered him, he accepted of it, upon condition that he might be permitted to employ the Income of that Post in studying the Arabic and Syriac Languages, for some Years, under Gabriel Sionita (b). This being consented to, he went to Copenhagen, and, in the Month of September 1630, he took possession of the Hebrew Professorship, and afterwards was made Doctor in Philosophy. He discharged this Duty, to the Advantage and Improvement of the Students, till the Year 1652, when he was promoted to the Professorship of Divinity, vacant by the Death of Brochmand. He was made Doctor of the same Faculty in the Year 1653, in the King and Queen's Presence. Three Years after, the Office of Library-Keeper of the University was conferred upon him, and he performed the Dedication of the Church of the Trinity, by a Latin Sermon (c). Being taken ill, the eleventh of October 1661, his chief Care was of the Concerns of his Soul: He Confessed himself, and Communicated the sixth Day of his Sickness, and died the Twenty seventh of the same Month (d). He married, in 1638, the Daughter of a Senator, by whom he had fourteen Children, eight Sons and six Daughters. His Writings testify his Learning [A].

(a) Flemish Finorum. I chose rather to set down the name of his Country in Latin, than to mistake the vulgar Name.

(b) He then taught at Paris.

(c) That Church was designed for the Religious Exercises of the Students.

(d) Taken from his Funeral Program, composed by Peter Scavennius, Rector of the University of Copenhagen, cited by Witte, Memor. Theol. renov. pag. 1387.

[A] His Writings testify his Learning.] He was an Author before he was a Doctor: for, in the Year 1627, he published an Exposition of a Passage of Jeremiah (1). His Vindiciæ locorum Genes. xlviii. 16. Genes. lvi. 1. Psalms xix. 1. appeared in the Year 1630. The Year following, he published Fontium Israelis Trias, Jona, Michea, Ruth; and in the Year 1634, his Exercitatio Glotologica, de Ortu Linguarum. His Exercitationes otto literariæ antiquitatis appeared in the Year 1638. The two Books, Obervationum Philologicarum, appeared two Years after. The Hermes & Pan Hebraicus, quo vivum absoluti Hebraici Lexicographi exemplum proponitur, was printed in 1641 (2). The Psephorus Inscriptionis hierosolymicæ, quo Stellæburgum regium Hafniense illustratur, came out in the Year 1648, and was followed, the Year after, by the Tropæum protevan- gelicum, quo ex Scriptis Pontificiorum ostenditur veram esse lectionem, Ipsum conteret tibi caput, & soli Christi convenire. The Exercitatio elenctica de Nepilimis, Gigantibus vulgo dictis, opposita Jacobo Boulduc was a Work of the Year 1652; and the Oliva Sacræ pacis repurgata, a Work of the Year 1654; and the Cælum Orientis & prisca Mundi, a Work of the Year 1657. I do not mention the Titles of some other Works, which have not been omitted in the Funeral Program, nor by Albert Bartholin (3). Some of the Books, whose Titles I have mentioned, are only Orationes, of which Number is the Oliva Sacræ pacis repurgata. This, however, has obtained a Place for the Author in the Catalogue of the Reconcilers of Religion (4), and has been wholly inserted in the Irenicorum Tractatum Prodromus, by John Duræus, or rather Dury.

(1) It is the 24th Verse of Chap. xxiii.

(2) Father Labbe, Biblioth. Bibliothecæ p. 298, speaks of that Book, and it has no Relation to his Design, and acribes it to Thomas Bengus.

(3) In Libro de Scriptis Danorum.

(4) See Heidegger, de Concord. Ecclæs. Prot. pag. 208.

BARANZAN (REDEMPTUS), a Barnabite Fryar, was one of the first, in the XVIIth Century, who ventured to quit the Path of Aristotle's Philosophy. La Motte le Vayer says, that he may be placed among the first Wits of our Age (a), and that the Works of his Youth entitle him to it [A]. He adds, that this honest Barnabite had many times promised him, but always under the good pleasure of God, That he would appear to him again, if he should depart this Life. He did not keep his word, Providence having ordered otherwise; and he verified the Sentence of a Latin Poet.

(a) Christian Discourse of the Immortality of the Soul, in Vol. IV. of his Works, in 12mo, pag. 172.

Qui nunc it per iter tenebricosum,
Illuc unde negant redire quemquam (b).

Wbo (b) Catull. Epigr. 3.

[A] He may be placed among the greatest Wits of our Age; the Works of his Youth intitle him to it.] Doubtless he means the Book De novis Opinionibus Physicæ, printed, at Lyons, in the Year 1619. König mentions two of This Fryar's Works. Edidit, says he, Uranoscopiam & campum Philoſophicum, ann. 1620 (1). — He published two Pieces, one called Uranoscopia, the other Campus Philoſophicus. I have had, in my Hands, a Copy of the Campus Philoſophicus, printed, at Lyons, in the Year 1619. It contained but one Volume, and treated only of Logic, very much in the manner of the Peripatetics; but the Approbation, annexed, gives me to understand, that This Volume is but the first Part of Baranzan's Course of Philosophy, and that the general Title of That Course is, Summa Philoſophica Amiciensis; which confirms what I have said, that That Author taught in Amici.

(1) The Oxford Catalogue says, Uranoscopia seu universa Doctrina de Cælo, 1617.

*Who now does Death's benighted Way explore,
From whence the wandering Soul returns no more.*

(c) In the Article
BONFA-DIUS.

I shall mention, in another place (c), some Persons who have made such Promises. Baranzan was of Verceil: He taught Mathematics and Philosophy in the City of Annecy in Savoy. Naudé, in the Seventy ninth page of the Instruction, which he published in 1623, concerning the Society of Rosicrucians, mentions him as then dead.

BARBARUS (FRANCIS), a Noble Venetian, was a famous Man in the XVth Century. He was not only very learned, but also very skillful in the managing Affairs of Government. He was no less a Statesman, than a Man of Letters, as he made appear in all the public Employs, with which he was intrusted; and principally when he was Governor of Brescia. The Vigilance, Steadiness, Tractableness, and other great Virtues, wherewith he defended That City against the Forces of the Duke of Milan, commanded by the famous Piccinin, cannot be sufficiently admired. He had Enemies within, and without, the Town, and conquered them all. The Divisions were very great in the City: the Avogadri, and the Martinenghes, were the Heads of two opposite Factions; he engaged them, by his Eloquence, to unite, and act in concert, for the Public Good. The length of the Siege, or Blockade, caused a Famine in the Town, and the Famine caused the Plague; and yet, under all these Obstructions, he had the happiness to frustrate all Attempts of the Enemy, for three Years, and force them to retire. This happened about the Year 1439 (a). Some Authors believe, that our Francis Barbarus is he, who wrote a Book of Re Uxoriam, some Letters, and some Orations. It is the opinion of Volaterran (b), who adds, that he had been a Disciple of Chrysoloras, and that he forgot all his Greek in his Old-age. Volaterran might perhaps be under some Mistake [A]. Francis Barbarus died in the Year 1454 (c).

(a) Taken
fr. m. Vianoli in Book 18,
of The History of Venice, Tom. I.
See also what he says in Book 20,
pag. 768.

(b) Volaterr.
lib. 21, pag.
73.

(c) Voss. de Hist. Lat.
pag. 620.

[A] Volaterran might perhaps be under some Mistake.] These are the Grounds of my Suspicion. I find, in Vianoli, that Francis Barbarus, who so successfully defended the City of Brescia, was the Father of Zachary, and That Zachary was the Father of Hermolaus Barbarus (1). I find, in Gesner's Bibliotheca, that Francis Barbarus, Author of the Book of Re Uxoriam, translated the Lives of Aristides and Cato from the Greek of Plutarch, and dedicated them to his Brother Zachary. I find, in Volaterran (2), that Hermolaus Barbarus was Nephew (3) of That Francis Barbarus, who defended the City of Brescia: Volaterran had mentioned this Francis Barbarus, in the Seven hundred and seventy third Page, and, among other things, had said of him what follows: "He understood the Greek Tongue well, but, as I have heard his Relation, Hermolaus Barbarus, say, he forgot it quite in his Old-days. Hic postremo senescens, uti ab Hermolaus ejus necessario accepit, literarum Græcarum, quas probe tenebat, erat omnino oblitus." The other Particulars, which Volaterran has related of This Francis Barbarus, are, that he had been a Disciple of Chrysoloras, that he had written a Book of Re Uxoriam, some Orations, and some Letters, and that he acquired a great Reputation in defending the City of Brescia. Dum Brixia Prætor esset, eam urbem à Philippo ductis obsidione magnâ cum laude liberavit. This gives room to suspect, that Volaterran has promiscuously joined together what belongs respectively to the Father and Son. The Passage of Gesner testifies, that Francis Barbarus, Author of the Book of Re Uxoriam, and Translator of the Life of Aristides, was the Brother of Zachary Barbarus. Now, according to Vianoli, Zachary Barbarus was the Son of him, who defended Brescia, and Father of Hermolaus; it should be said, then, that he, who defended Brescia, had a Son, whose Name was Francis Barbarus, who wrote the Book of Re Uxoriam, and translated the Lives of Aristides and Cato out of the Greek of Plutarch, and who was Uncle of Hermolaus Barbarus. According to this, Volaterran attributes certain Things to the Father, which belong only to the Son. Moreover, he, who defended Brescia, might have had a Brother, whose Name was Zachary, to whom he had dedicated his two Translations; and then Volaterran's whole Mistake would consist, in not having known, that Francis Barbarus was the Grandfather of Hermolaus. If I had the Works of Francis Barbarus, probably, I might find some Circumstances, which would decide the Question. But, for want of that Advantage, I desired Mr de Larroque to clear my Doubt; and this was his Answer: "Mr Joli proves (4), that the Author of the Book of Re Uxoriam was the Grandfather of Hermolaus, and that he published it about the Time of the Council of Constance; for Poggio and Paul Vergerio mention That Book, in some Letters, dated from the City of Constance: Poggio's Letter is written to Guerini of Verona, and That of Vergerio to Nicholas Leontinus. They praise Francis Barbarus for having written so well concerning Marriage, though he was very young, and not married himself. He dedicated the Translation of the Lives of Aristides and Cato to his Brother Zachary, and died in the Year 1454. "Mr Joli distinguishes two Daniel Barbarus's." Note, I have been told, that this Preface of Mr Joli, which I have quoted, contains several Elogies of the Author of the Book of Re Uxoriam, and clears up a great many Things, that concern learned Men.

Gesner and Vossius quote a Letter of Andrew Brentinus, by which one may learn, that Francis Barbarus, Grandfather of Hermolaus, and Father of Zachary, had composed and translated many Books. "Nimirum in te omnia Francisci Barbari patris virtutum lumina elucescunt: cui certe multum Latina lingua debet, tot tantique ab eo libris partim compositis, partim conversis, à quo minime degenerat Hermolaus filius, te tanto patre non indignus (5). — For, in you, all the Virtues of your Father Francis Barbarus shine in their brightest Lustre: to whom, undoubtedly, the Latin Tongue is greatly indebted, on account of so many Books, some composed, and others translated, by him; and from whom Hermolaus, a worthy Son of so great a Father, does not at all degenerate." It is very certain, by the Testimony of Hermolaus himself (6), that his Father's Name was Zachary; so that Philip de Bergamo was much mistaken, when he made him the Son of Francis Barbarus, and Grandson of Zachary: Francisci Barbari filius, Zachariae Barbari nepos (7). Moreri, as well here, as in a thousand other Places, translates Nepos by Nephew, which is a very gross Fault. They, who pretend to write good Latin, use Nepos only to signify Grandson: They, who are not so scrupulous in their Latin Style, use, indeed, the Word Nepos for Nephew, but they commonly add, ex fratre, or ex sorore, to take off the Equivocation; if they say Nepos only, they mean Grandson.

(4) In the Preface to the French Translation of the Book of Re Uxoria, printed at Paris, in the Year
1667.

(1) Vianoli's History of Venice, Tom.
1, lib. 27,
pag. 768.

(2) Lib. 21,
pag. 777.

(3) Ex fratre
nepos.

(5) Andreas
Brentinus, Patavinus,
Epistola ad
Zachariam Barbarum aræd Vossium
de Hist. Lat.
p. 621.
It is affirmed in the Appendix of Dr
Cave, pag.
147, that Hermolaus was the Son of Francis.

(6) See the 32d Letter of the 12th Book of Isidore of Politian.

(7) Phil.
Berg. apud
Vossium de Hist. Lat.
pag. 621.

BARBARUS (HERMOLAUS), Grandson of the foregoing, was one of the most Learned Men of the XVth Century. He was born at Venice, the Twenty first of May, 1454 (a). He made such great, and speedy, Proficiency in his Studies, that he began to write Books at the eighteenth Year of his Age [A]. The publick Employ, wherein he was very early engaged, did not prevent his earnest application to Learning [B]. He was sent, by the Venetians, to the Emperor Frederick; and to his Son Maximilian King of the Romans; and This Deputation was so far from putting a stop to his Pen, that it supplied him with matter to exercise it; for he did not only publish the Speech [C], which he delivered before those two Princes, at Bruges, in the Year 1486, but he wrote also a Treatise of the Agreement of Astronomy with Physic; I say, he wrote it the same Year, as he went through the City of Cologne in his way to Mentz, at the desire of Theodorick Flasz, a Physician of Nuis (b). As he understood Greek very well, he undertook the most difficult Translations, and began with a celebrated Paraphrast on Aristotle; I mean Themislius. Afterwards he undertook Dioscorides, whose Text he corrected as well as he could; and made a Translation of it; to which he added a very learned Commentary. It is said, that he also attempted two of the most difficult Treatises of Plutarch (c): I cannot tell whether That Translation was ever published. He had a design to translate all Aristotle's Works [D]; and he says, in one of his Epistles Dedicatory, that the Execution of that Design was a great way advanced. He had an extraordinary Facility in writing Verses, and it is pretended, that he composed above Twelve thousand [E]. But, of all his Works, there is none, which gained him so much Reputation, as That, which he perform'd on Pliny. He corrected near Five thousand Passages of That Author, and occasionally restored Three hundred in Pomponius Mela (d). This noble Work has been criticised [F], as well as his other Books

(a) Gesner. in Biblioth. fol. 247, ex Trithemio.

(b) Gesner. in Bibl. fol. 317.

(c) De Iride & Ofiride & cur Oracula desierunt. Gesner. in Libl.

(d) Hermol. Barbarus in Prefat. ad Alexandrum VI.

(1) Gesner. Biblioth. fol. 317.

(2) Teissier's Additions to the Eloquia of Tiberius, Tom. 1. P. 354.

(3) Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 622.

(4) Herm. Barbar. Epist. 37, lib. 12, inter Politiani Epistolas.

[A] He began to write Books at the eighteenth Year of his Age.] Gesner tells us so: Ab octavodecimo ætatis sue anno scribere exorsus multa elegantissima opuscula composuit (1). Vossius intended the same thing: but, because his Printer forgot two Letters, it occasioned Mr Teissier to say, that Hermolaus Barbarus began to write at Twenty two Years of Age (2). This is his Translation of these Words of Vossius, Ab anno ætatis duo vicesimo scribere exorsus fuit (3). And thus you see the Errors of Printers are sometimes of great Consequence. It is plain, that Vossius had written duodevicesimo: So that two Letters, suppressed in this Word, have robbed an Author of four Years Glory. Mr Teissier's Fault may be seen in the One hundred fifty seventh Page of Dr Cave's Appendix.

[B] His publick Employs - - - did not prevent his earnest Application to Learning.] We must understand this with some Restriction; for it is certain, that those Employments must have interrupted his Studies. "Honores, jays be (4), in republica gesti multos & magnos: quâ fide, quâ opinione, quâ gratiâ, non dixerim. Placet quidem impendisse annos penitus duodecim, sed octo reipub. continuos: totum id tamen tempus literis ferè perit. — I have discharged many, and great, Trusts in the Common-wealth; with what Fidelity, Reputation, and Favour, I shall not pretend to say. I have been engaged in them full twelve Years, eight of which have been entirely spent on the Public: And the whole Time was almost quite lost to Learning."

[C] He published a Speech.] It was dedicated to Carondelet, who was then Chief Secretary to the King of the Romans. The Author confesses, that he does not publish it exactly as he delivered it; but he declares, at the same time, that he gives it entirely as he had prepared it. If he did not speak it as it was composed, it was, because the Courtiers desired him to be short, and to come speedily to the main Point. They were not ignorant, that the Study of polite Learning flourished at that time in Italy, and that the Ambassadors from That Country took a Pleasure in making long Speeches, set off with all the Ornaments of Rhetoric. Nay, Hermolaus was obliged to reduce the two Speeches, which he, and his Colleague had prepared, into one; and, as the Abridgment, and the Reduction, were to be made in the Space of an Hour and a half, judge of Hermolaus's Presence of Mind, which happily overcame all These Difficulties. "Obsecro ne mirere si qua leges in hoc libello quæ tunc dicta non fuerunt. Nec enim addidi nunc ea, sed detraxi tunc, admonitus ab aulicis exemplo quam limen attrigi ne longus essem, ambitiosa reciderem, optima quæque dicerem, patientissimis omnino, sed occupatissimis tamen Principibus, parcerem. Amputavi subito consilio multa.

"----- Considerans hoc & æstimans quid sequi horam antequam Principes adiremur significandum nobis fuerit non duas orationes seorsum, ut cogitabamus & paraveramus, sed unam duobus junctim habendam & recitandam esse (5). - - - Be not surprized if you meet with some Things here, which were not delivered. They are not now added, but were then suppressed, being advised, by the Courtiers, as soon as I appeared, not to be long, to cut off all Flourishes, to speak only to the material Points, and to favour, as much as possible, Princes, who, though they had a great deal of Patience, yet had very little Leisure. I immediately cut off many Things. - - - Considering, and providing for this also, that we were told, about an Hour and half before we were to be admitted into the Presence, that we must not deliver two separate Speeches, as we expected, and had prepared, but put both of them into one."

[D] He had a Design to translate all Aristotle's Works.] See what he says in the Preface to his Pomponius Mela (6). "Vocant nos majora quædam studia, urgemusque nostrum illud verum omnes Aristotelis libros in latinum vertendi exponendique propositum. Quod si ad exitum perduxero (nam bona ejus pars jam pridem peracta est) non dubito futurum, quin de reliquo in literis labore gratia mihi fiat. - - - I am intent upon greater Studies, and am carrying on the old Design of translating into Latin, and commenting on, all Aristotle's Works. Which if I can bring to Perfection, as a great Part of it is already done, I do not doubt but the learned World will thank me for all the rest of my Time, spent in their Service." His Translation of Aristotle's Rhetoric was published after his Death. See the following Article.

[E] He had an extraordinary Facility in writing Verses; and had composed above Twelve thousand.] Among other Pieces of Poetry, he wrote a Poem of Six hundred Verses, which bears the same Title with a Piece, written by his Grand-father Francis Barbarus, I mean, de Re Uxorâ; but the Substance of them is very different. Francis Barbarus prescribes Rules as well to those, that would marry, as to those, that are already married (7): he is so very particular, that he has a Chapter de cœtus ratione. Hermolaus confines himself to this Question, Whether a wise Man ought to marry (8)? and concludes for the Negative.

[F] That noble Work, on Pliny, has been criticised.] It has been pretended, that he had too much indulged his Conjectures and Memory. Pintiaus used him very rudely upon it. Those, who pardon him the Defects of his Memory, do not forgive the Instances of his Temerity; but declare, very freely, that he has undertaken to correct many things, which were no Faults,

(c) Herm. Barbarus Epist. ad Carondeletum, inter Epistolas Politiani 45, lib. 12.

(6) Apud Gesner. Biblioth. fol. 317, verso.

(7) See the Titles of the Chapters of his Work in Gesner's Biblioth. fol. 247, verso.

(8) Gesner. Biblioth. fol. 317.

Books [G]. He was Embassador from the Republic of Venice to Pope Innocent VIII, when the Patriarch of Aquileia died. The Pope immediately conferred That Patriarchate upon him. Hermolaus was so imprudent as to accept of it, without waiting for the Approbation of his Superiors [H], though he could not be ignorant, that the Republic of Venice had made Laws, to forbid all Ministers, sent from thence to the Court of Rome, to accept any Benefice. Hermolaus's Excuses, grounded on the Pope's having compelled him to embrace the Prelacy, were not listened to. The Council of Ten signified very roughly to him, to renounce the Patriarchate, and that, if he did not, his Father should be degraded from all his Dignities, and Faults, but only surpassed his Understanding. It is true, that, in several Editions of Pliny, great Regard has been had for Hermolaus's Corrections, since they have been inserted in the Text; but it was said, long ago, that this pretended Physician of Pliny had given him more Wounds, than he had cured. Let us see how Father Hardouin expresses it. "Ipse (Hermolaus) in iis quæ attigit, sæpè nimium concessuræ, memoriæ etiam plus quam hominem deceat, tribuit: uti paulo acerbius eam ob rem in vestus in eum Pintianus olim exprobravit. Sed concessa facile venia μνημονικῶν ἀμαρτυριῶν, quod minus mirum sit memoriam excidere aliquid rerum, quam constare omnium: at non venia dignus æque, quam neglectis veterum exemplarium vestigiis, & præfatur ante se editionum securus, plurima pro arbitrio, eruditè magis quam cautè ac verè, mutavit, vel planè pessumdedit: cum plurima ex iis quæ castigavit, non errata illa sint, sed parum intellecta. Tantum nihilominus auctoritati Barbari subsecuta ætas eruditionique tribuit, ut conjecturas illius, ceu totidem κρίσεις, δόξας, in contextum inferuerit, unde eliminandæ à nobis variis argumentis fuere. Sensit jamdudum hanc labem operi Pliniano illatam auctor Epigrammatis, alias haud perlegantis, in Commentarios à Stephanus Aquæz edite, de quibus agendum mox erit. Sic enim ille:

Dum facere Hermoleos medicinam Barbarus optat
Non paucis lacerò vulneribus Plinio, Perlæsum gravius conjecta vulnerat arte:
Nec minus incauta plurima turba manu.
In tantum ut Latio jam deploratus abiret,
Ob multa in Stygias vulnera fessius aquas, &c.

"Felicior aliquanto SIGISMUNDUS GELENIUS, qui uno duntaxat archetyporum prædico, collatis inter se exemplaribus, non pauca restituit, quæ Hermolao latuerant (9). — He (Hermolaus) in his Corrections, gives often too much Liberty to Conjecture, and to Memory a great deal more than any Man ought to do; for which Pintianus has a little too severely reproved him. But his Faults of Memory are very excusable, since it is much less to be wondered at the letting slip some things, than the retaining all: but he is not so easily to be pardoned, for sighting all old Manuscripts, and former Editions, and boldly altering, in an arbitrary Manner, with more Learning than Caution and Truth, and sometimes plainly defacing: since a great many of his Emendations appear where there were no Faults, but only his own Misunderstandings. And yet the succeeding Age paid such a regard to the Authority, and Learning, of Barbarus, that they inserted his Conjectures as so many authentic Glasses into the Body of the Text, which have cost us a great many Arguments to remove. This Injury, done to Pliny, was observed by the Author of an Epigram, otherwise not very elegant, on the Commentaries published by Stephanus Aquæz, of which we shall presently speak. Thus he,

While Barbarus, and other Quacks, pretend
The mangled State of Pliny's Text to mend:
Their Art so much in blind Conjecture deals,
It boldly gives ten wounds for one it heals.
That thus defac'd he flies the Latian Light,
And gladly seek Repose in Realms of Night.

"SIGISMUNDUS GELENIUS used a much more successful Method, who, by the sole help of Manuscripts, which he collated, has restored a "great many Places, which Hermolaus passed by." I have let down this long Passage, the letter to convince Mr Varillas that he was mistaken in a Matter, which was pretty well known. But yet, I am very well satisfied, that Hermolaus's Work on Pliny's Natural History deserves Admiration, considering the great Number of Authors he was obliged to consult, and the little time he had for it. He says, he performed it in twenty Months: He broke the ice for others; he found Pliny in a very bad Condition, and like a Land that had lain waste a long time, or a House infected with the Plague, or haunted by Hobgoblins. Hæc erant in Pliniano codice flagitia, propter quæ non parum multi divinum opus tanquam fœditatum, imo vero quasi pestilens aut lemuribus infame domicilium vitabant. Ea nos Græcis & Latinis auctoribus perlectis omnibus lucubratione viginti mensium revellere ac publicare curavimus (10). As to Volaterran's Notion, that it was an Undertaking little suitable to the Character of Hermolaus Barbarus; opus impar ejus dignitatis & vitæ instituti (11), it has been very justly condemned, as well because Hermolaus had entred upon it before he was a Churchman, as because it were to be wished, that many other Prelates would commit the like Faults. Utinam sic a multis ejus dignitatis atque instituti peccaretur (12). Vossius adds another Reason, which is, that Pliny did not make him neglect the Episcopal Functions; witness his Sermons, still preserved in Manuscript at Padua. I should rather chule to say, that, since the Venetians would not suffer him to accept that Dignity, he could not neglect the Patriarchal Functions in favour of Pliny. Note, that, having published that Work in the Year 1492, he added an Appendix to it, which he calls Secundæ castigationes, and which is dated at Rome, the thirteenth of January, 1493.

[G] As well as his other Books.] His Translation of Themistius is not just, if we may believe Vossius. "Ipse ille Themistius ab Hermolao Barbaro, dum nimium fudet elegantiz, tantâ conversus est libertate, ut sæpissimè longè aliud dicat quam fenserit Themistius (13): — Hermolao Barbarus, while he too much studied Elegancy, took such liberty in translating Themistius, that he often said those Things which Themistius was very far from meaning." And he has shewn, in the Translation of Aristotle's Rhetoric, that he did not understand Greek well enough, if we rely on Francis de Ejebat (14). It is objected, that he was so full of Pliny, that he too often made use of his Words in the Translation of Dioscorides. This Translation has been often criticized by Marcellus Virgilius. Doctè quidem & eleganter translati, sed (ut nonnulli videntur) nimis ad imitationem Plinii, quem dum ubique sequitur à Dioscoridis verbis aliquando recedere videtur. Marcellus Virgilius, qui post Hermolaum eisdem libros transulit, plerumque interpretationem ejus carpit (15).

[H] Hermolaus was so imprudent as to accept of the Patriarchate of Aquileia, without waiting for the Approbation of his Superiors.] I know of no Body, who has related the Fact better, than Peter Bembo; for which reason it cannot be improper, or disagreeable to all those, who have not that History, to see here what he says of it. "Eo mortuo Innocentius Patriarchatum (sic enim appellant) Aquileiensem — Hermolao Barbaro, legato apud se Veneto attribuit. Quod ubi civitas intellexit, tamen Hermolao ad Senatum scriperat, coactum se à Pontifice vestem senatoriam mutavisse: quoniam tamen sacerdotiis cooptari cives Veneti, qui legati Romæ essent, lege prohibebantur; graviter tulit, ausum illum contra leges patrias facere. Auxit ejus rei magnopere invidiam, quod antea ex Hermolai literis, quas ad Senatum de Barbi morte dederat, more inusitatoque majorum comitiis senatoriis præ-

(10) Herm. Barbarus in Epilogo Operis p. 425. Bafil. 1534.

(11) Volaterr. lib. 21. pag. 777.

(12) Cogitare debuerat Volaterranus, jam antequam ad Episcopatum provectus esset, parata majori ex parte habuisse, quæ ad istud opus pertinerent. Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 623. Hermolaus foyi only, Plinianus castigationes quas Legatus Romæ nec dum scripsit inchoaveram. Pref. ad Alexand. VI.

(13) Voss de Philosophia, pag. 8.

(14) Andr. Schott. Biblioth. Hispan. p. 333.

(15) Gesenius in B. biblioth. fol. 317. veris.

(9) Hard. Præfat. in Plinium ad uñum Delphinum.

and soon after see his Estate confiscated. They were inflexible: Zachary Hermolaus made use of all imaginable Means to obtain the Consent of the Republic to the Patriarchate of his Son; but, not being able to gain his Point, he died of Grief [I]. His Son followed him soon after: Some say, that Grief also was the Cause of his Death [K]; but it is more likely, that he died of the Plague. Pierius Valerianus has placed him at the head of his Unfortunate Learned Men. He seems to me to run an extravagant Length, in saying, that it is not certainly known, whether Hermolaus Barbarus was ever buried [L]. This great Man died at

"judicium Patres fecerant, cujus ipsi civis nomen ad
"id adipiscendum sacerdotium Innocentio commen"darent. Itaque deceptos in eo sese, ac propè de"ludos querebantur. Erat omnino Hermolaus, propter
"ejus summam in literarum atque optimarum ar-
"tium studiis præstantiam, magnum apud externas
"nationes nomen, apud suos quidem certe maxi"mum: nam ad doctrinæ singularum opinionem
"etiam vitæ perpetuum innocentiam adjunxerat. Si-
"mul est multum patris opibus, & gratia, qui summo
"proximum in civitate magistratum gereat, mul-
"tum clientelæ, necessitudinibus, propinquitatibusque
"pollebat. Quibus tamen in rebus omnibus satis
"sibi præfidi non habuit: cum pluris à Patribus una
"legum charitas, majestasque, quam illorum civi-
"um omnibus aucta nominibus dignitas, atque cla-
"ritas, feret. Decemviri enim literas ad eum fe"vere scriptas dederunt; mora omni, exultatione-
"que sublata, sacerdotium repudiaret: id si non "faceret, patrem magistratu remoturus, & bona "ejus publicaturos præ se tulerunt. At pater, per"specta civitatis voluntate, omnibus tentatis rebus,
"cum jam eam flecti & leniri posse discederet,
"ægritudine animi est mortuus. Filii non multo
"post Romæ, editis Plinianis castigationibus, im-
"mensi propè laboris opere, privatus plebeio mor-
"bo perit. Eum vitæ finem Hermolaus habuit,
"omnium ex sua civitate, qui ante illum nati es-
"sent, Latinorum & Græcorum literis plane doctissi-"mus (16). — Upon his Death, Innocent gave
"the Patriarchate (as it is called) of Aquileia, to "Hermolaus Barbarus, Embassador for the Venetians
"at Rome. Which, when the Senate understood, not"withstanding Hermolaus had signified to them by "Letter, that he had not made this Exchange of his "senatorial Robes, without being compelled to it by "the Pope, the Venetian Laws not allowing any of "their Citizens, who are sent Embassadors to Rome,
"to accept of any Ecclesiastical Preferments, they "were much incensed, that he should dare to infringe
"the Laws of his Country. What farther heightened "their Displeasure was, that, upon the News the Se"nate had received, by Letters from Hermolaus, of "the Death of Barbus, they had, in their Assembly,
"according to ancient Custom, made choice of a Per"son, whose Name they were to recommend to Inno"cent, to succeed in That Patriarchate. Therefore "they looked upon themselves as deceived, and in "some Measure tricked by him. The Reputation of "Hermolaus was very great in foreign Nations, on "account of his extensive Learning; and greatest of "all in his own; the Integrity of his Life being as "extraordinary as his Knowledge. The Wealth and "Interest of his Father, whose Office in the Republic
"was next to that of the chief Magistrate, the Num"ber of his own Dependants, Friends, and Relations, "were great Advantages to him. But yet all these "put together were not sufficient to protect him: since
"the single Consideration of the Value and Authority
"of their Laws was of more weight with the Senate,
"than all the Excellencies, which any of their Citi"zens could possibly attain. The Council of Ten "wrote severely to him, that, without delay or excuse,
"he should renounce his Ecclesiastical Dignity; and "threatened to degrade his Father, and confiscate his "Estate, in case of Refusal. The Father, finding the "fixed Resolution of the Senate, which he had, in "vain, tried all possible means to soften and divert,
"died of Grief. The Son not long after, having pub"lished his Corrections of Pliny, a Work of immense "Labour, died at Rome in a private Station, and of "a vulgar Distemper. This was the End of Hermo"laus, who, for his Learning in Latin and Greek, was "the most extraordinary Person Venice had ever pro"duced."

[I] His Father — died of Grief. We have just now seen, that Bembus asserts it. The thing is likely enough; for he was an ancient Man, and enjoyed one of the chief Polls of the Republic. Such an hard Experience of the Decay of one's Credit in one's old Age, and to the Prejudice of a famous and dearly-beloved Son, is generally a fatal Blow. Zachary Barbarus died in the Year 1492, much refig-ed to the Decrees of Providence: He was in the seventieth Year of his Life: He was much lamented, and his Funeral-Pomp was very magnificent. See the Letter, which Hermolaus wrote to his Friend An-tonius Calvus (17). "Accedit quod septuagesimum
VOL. I.

"ingressus annum, quamdiu in familia nostra vixit
"nemo; quod functus omnibus honoribus; quod re-
"publica incolumi; quod liberis honesto loco pos-
"itis; incredibili desiderio & amore civitatis excessis,
"frequentia funeris tanta (ut audio) quanta in cive
"nunquam. — We must add, that having entred
"into his seventieth Year, to which none of our Fa"mily ever before arrived; that having attained all
"the highest Honours; that having seen the Republic
"in absolute Security; that having placed his Children
"in honourable Stations, he died extremely lamented
"and beloved by all, and was attended, I am told,
"at his Funeral, by such Numbers, as no Citizen
"ever had been before."

[K] Some say, that Grief also was the Cause of his Death.] Volaterran affirms it: "Romæ decessit ex
"animi dolore exacerbante quod orator à Venetiis
"missus, præter ejus auctoritatem Senatus, Patriar-
"cha Aquileiensis ab Innocentio fuerat creatus, ac
"propterea contumax & exul (18). — He died at "Rome through excess of Grief, because, being sent "thither Embassador by the Venetians, and made 777.
"Patriarch of Aquileia, by Innocent, without their "Consent, he was therefore declared a Rebel, and an "Exile." I am fully persuaded, he died, being accounted a Rebel, and an Exile; for he always took upon himself the Title of Patriarch, notwithstanding the strict Orders he had received from his Sovereign to renounce the Patriarchate; but I believe he died of the Plague, and not of Grief. My Reason is, I. That, from the time of his Disgrace to his Death, he was engaged in a Work, which required a great Composure of Mind, and a perfect State of Health (19). II. That Peter Crinitius, who lived at that time, declares, that Hermolaus died of the Plague (20). He does not relate it in general, but adds a very particular Circumstance, which is, that Picus Mirandulanus, having heard at Florence, that Hermolaus was sick of the Plague, sent him an Antidote with all Speed; but the Messenger came too late. Paulus Jovius reports the same Fact. "Mors
"ante diem irrepsit, & pestilenti quidem morbo
"properata, adeo ut quod à Pico Politianoque Flo-
"rentiâ laboranti per dispositos equos mittebatur
"miræ potestatis antidotum, veneni celeritate præ-
"verteret (21). — Death approached before"hand, being hastened by a Pestilential Disem"per, which made such quick Dispatch, that the "famous Antidote, which was sent him with all possi"ble Expedition from Florence by Picus, and Poli-"tiano, came too late." So that I can easily believe what Hermolaus Barbarus says of himself, That he bore his Disgrace without Uneasiness, and was even pleased with an Injury, which gave him an entire Leisure for Study (22). His Friends were afraid he would sink under his Disgrace, and his Enemies declared to every where. It was undoubtedly by means of these latter, in order to rob him of the Honour of his Constancy and Tranquillity, that what was owing to a contagious Distemper, was ascribed to Grief. See, in the Remark [P], what I quote out of Alcyonius.

[L] Pierius Valerianus — says, that it is not certain, whether Hermolaus Barbarus was ever buried.] I say once more, that Pierius Valerianus seems to run an extravagant Length, in saying, that this Patriarch, dying in Poverty, and forsaken, was depriv-ved

(17) It is the 32d of the 12th Book of Istoph of Politian.

(18) Volat. lib. 21, pag. 777.

(19) Viz. The Corruption of Plin.

(20) Crinit. de honestâ Disciplinâ, lib. 2, c. 7.

(21) Jovius Elog. c. 36.

(22) See the 31st Letter of the 12th Book of Istoph of Politian.

(16) Bemb. Histor. Vene-
tice, lib. 11.
fol. 18 verso

(e) See Remarks [K].

at Rome, in the Year 1493. He expresses, in his Letters, a great Renunciation, and Tranquillity of Mind, in regard to the Treatment, he had received from his Country (e). I do not believe, he can be said to have been a Cardinal [M]. It is reported, he had recourse to the Devil, to know the Sense of a Greek word [N], made use of by Aristotle. We must not forget, that Laurence de Medicis gave him some Testimonies of a singular Esteem [O]. Mr Varillas has given us; a very entertaining and elaborate Account of Hermolaus Barbarus, but he is mistaken in many things, and oftener than Moreri [P].

I shall

(23) Pier. Valerian. de Literariorum Infelicit. pag. 9.

(24) Jovius Elog. c. 36.

(25) Rochepozai in Nomenclat. Cardinal.

(26) Ollivini, in Athen. Romano.

(27) See, below, the Passage of Alcyonius.

(28) Valerian. de Literat. Infel. pag. 9.

(29) In Compendio Historico.

(30) Voß, de H. E. Lat. pag. 621.

(31) Pref. in Plin.

ved of Burial: "Ob susceptum inconsulto Senatu suo Aquileiense sacerdotium exul factus, & de possessione ejectione, vitam inopem aliquandiu traxit, Alexandri Pontificis summi sportula quodammodo sustentatus: paucis vero post mensibus pestilentia contactus, delertus ab omnibus, infelicissimo mortis genere oppressus est; quique laudatione, & eloquentia sua innumeris ætatis suæ homines illustraverat, & funere, & honore sepulchri ita defraudatus est, ut ubi sepulcus, quove hominis cadaver coniectum fuerit, ignoretur (23). — Being exiled, and deprived of his Estate, for accepting the Patriarchate of Aquileia, without consulting the Senate, he lived very poor for some time, and was in some measure maintained by the Charity of Pope Alexander. In a few Months after, he was taken with the Plague, and, being forsaken by all, died in the most wretched manner; and he, who, by his Elogies and Eloquence, had so highly honoured a great Number of his Contemporaries, was so far denied both a Funeral and Grave, that, where his Corps was thrown, or buried, no Body can tell." Paulus Jovius, who wrote after Pierius Valerianus, does not only say, that Hermolaus Barbarus was buried, but also mentions the Place of his Burial. "Scilicet ut nimis severa patria optimi civis ossa non haberet, quæ sub colle hortorum ad Flumentanam portam sepulchro condita ex Campo Martio ab erudita Romana juventute salutantur (24). — But that his cruel Country might not have the Remains of so excellent a Citizen, they were buried under the Hill of the Gardens, near the Flumentan Gate, where they are visited by the Roman Youth from the Campus Martius." Mr da la Rochepezai (25), and Father Ollivini (26), point out the place of his Sepulture more clearly; they place it at Santa Maria del Popolo. If Valerianus had only said, that the Fear of the Plague caused those, who should have assisted the Patriarch (27), to forsake him, he would not have fallen into This Hyperbole.

[M] I do not believe, he can be said to have been a Cardinal. Pierius Valerianus is far from affirming it; he says some things, that are too inconsistent with it; but does Paulus Jovius, who has so clearly contradicted him as to the burying-place of Hermolaus Barbarus, say, that this Patriarch had obtained a Cardinal's Cap? Not in the least: he only says, that he was designed for that Dignity. "Tulisti quippe æquo animo suffragiorum severitatem, quum ex eo tamen pari merito tibi purpura pararetur. Sed mors ante diem irrepit (28). — Thy even Mind received the cruel Sentence unmoved, and such appeared thy great Merit, that it was just about being rewarded with the Purple. But Death approached before hand." The Author of the Nomenclator Cardinalium reports, that Tritemius, followed in this by Pierius Valerianus, and several others, assert, that Hermolaus Barbarus attained to the Cardinalship. As to himself, he affirms nothing, but contents himself with these words, Cardinalis designatus, sed ut fertur nondum evulgatus. — Designed a Cardinal, but, as it is said, not declared. Voßius quotes the Franciscan, John Ricbe, who asserts (29), that Hermolaus Barbarus was made a Cardinal (30). Father Hardouin affirms the same thing (31).

[N] It is reported, he had recourse to the Devil, to know the Sense of a Greek Word.] This Word is so essential to the Peripatetic Natural Philosophy, that, without first fixing the Sense of it, there is no understanding what Aristotle meant, concerning the Nature of Body. I speak of the Word ἐντελεχία, which some Latinists, not being able to find a better, have at last rendered by That of perfectibility. Peter Crinitus speaks as if Hermolaus himself had boasted of That magical Consultation, and as if he had said, that the Answer was given with such a weak Voice, that he could make nothing of

it. "Et revera perexilis vocula dæmonum & exigua est, quod olim noster quoque Venetus Hermolaus dicebat, vocem se dæmonis præteritum & pene subsistentem audisse, qua ille, de Aristotelis forte entelechia interrogatus, sibi ipsi & Georgio Placentino responsitavit (32). — And, indeed, the Voice of Devils is soft and low, as cur Hermolaus, of Venice, formerly said, that he heard the Devil answer a Question, he, and George Placentinus, had put to him, concerning the Entelechia of Aristotle, in a faint and whispering sort of Voice." I believe I have gone to the Source of this Fact, by quoting Peter Crinitus: Most People (33) quote only Bodin's Dæmonomania, where I have not yet met with this Transaction of Hermolaus (34). Some quote Menrolus, who mentions it in his Treatise de Entelechia. To conclude, some pretend, that Bædæus is the Inventor of Perfectibility: You will find these Words in Du Verdier Vau-Privat, And even Thise, who intended to praise him, have said of him, Est felicissimus quidem, fed audacissimus in novandis vocabulis. — He is very happy indeed, but very bold, in coining new Words; as when he rendered Aristotle's Entelechia by the Word Perfectibility (35). Note, that several Persons maintain, that Cicero has very ill translated that Word of Aristotle (36).

[L] Laurence de Medicis gave him some Testimonies of a singular Esteem.] He went to meet him, notwithstanding his ill State of Health, and received him very magnificently at his Country Seat: "Cum Hermolaus Barbarus Reipub. Venetæ nomine legationes foret per Italiam obiret, & ad urbem Florentiam obiter accederet, Laurentius Medicus [qui Florentinam Rempublicam non minore tum consilio, quam fortuna gubernabat] statim tanto viro cum amicis pluribus (ut sit) obviam procedit: nihil veritus, quod ægros pedes haberet, ac summis doloribus vexaretur. Tum in Caiana villa (quam infinitis propè sumptibus ædificatam) honorificentissimè illum accepit: simulque tanti hominis ingenio, & doctrina singulari provocatus, eam quoque liberalissimè studiorum nomine illi obtulit, cum infanti atque instructissima bibliotheca, quam ad exemplum Philadelphi mira tum industria paraverat, ut in eo quasi Musarum secessu simul cum Pico Mirandula honestioribus disciplinis, ac philosophiæ sacris pro arbitrio incumberet. In quo Hermolaus Barbarus (ut homo maxime humanus) libenter se dixit & studiorum causa, & Laurentii merito talem animum agnoscere: villamque ipsam, si per publicas curas liceret, excipere (37). — As Hermolaus Barbarus, who happened to be charged with some Embassies, from the Republic of Venice, to Italy, took the City of Florence in his Way, Laurence de Medicis, who then governed the Florentines with no less Prudence than Success, went out to meet so extraordinary a Man, with a great Number of his Friends, as the Ceremony is: Not at all regarding, that he had the Gout in his Feet, and was in great Pain. Then he received him very honourably at his Villa Caiana, which he had built at an infinite Expence: and, at the same time, in respect to his great Abilities, & extraordinary Learning, he offered him the Use of it, for the pursuing his Studies, together with a large and curious Library, which, in Imitation of Philadelphus, he had collected with surpassing Industry, in order to enjoy this Retreat of the Muses, together with Pico Mirandulanus, in the Pursuit of Learning and Philosophy. Which kind Offer, Hermolaus Barbarus, as he was perfectly complaisant, readily replied he should be glad to accept, not only for the sake of his own Studies, but also in regard to his Highness's great Favour, if his public Commissions would have given him leave."

[P] Mr Varillas has given a very entertaining and elaborate Account of Hermolaus Barbarus; but he

(32) Crinit. de honesta Disciplina, lib. 6. c. 11.

(33) Further Rapin's Reflections on Philosophy, pag. 350. Teiffier, Elog. Tom. 1. pag. 355.

(34) I have not had leisure to look Page after Page for this, but I have not met with it in the places where it was most likely to be found.

(35) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franç. pag. 472. reporting what Genebrard said of Bædæus.

(36) Joannes Ferrerius Pedemontanus confutes them in the Treatise de Entelechia.

(37) Petrus Crinitus de honesta Disciplina, lib. 1, cap. 9. pag. 400.

I shall cite a Passage of Alcyonius, which will shew, that our Hermolaus congratulated himself on his Disgrace, and that he never studied with so much application, as after his Country had used him ill [2].

(38) Varill.
Anecdotes
de Florence,
pag. 187, &
seq.

(39) Mr. Varill.
says, that Pliny's Natural History contains 36 Books: he ought to have said 37.

(40) Har-dwin, in Plin. Tom.
I, pag. 2.

(41) Jovius
Elog. c. 36.

(42) See towards the end of the following Remark.

(43) Gelfner.
fol. 318.
These Words,
Hos libros Themistii paraphra-sticos Hermolaus Barba-rus Venetiis
A. 1570, in
fol. editis,
in the Journal of Leip-sic, ann.
1685, pag.
461, are not exact; for that Edition was a great while after the Author's Death.

be is mistaken in many things, and oftner than Möreri.] He says (38), I. That Hermolaus Barbarus was esteemed, at Venice, the most remarkable of all the Nobles for the Profession of the highest, and nicest, Gallantry. II. That no Body ever saw him study, or that no Books were to be seen in his Chamber, or Closet. I question the first of these things, and the second I hold to be false. III. That, having undertaken the most laborious Task, then known, in the Republic of Learning (this was the Correction of Pliny (39), he made use of the Authority of Manuscripts, and that of The Greek and Roman Writers, who had treated on the same Subjects; and that, in such Places, where those two Assurances failed him, he made use of his own Conjectures with so much Probability and Success, that not one of them have been rejected. See the Confutation of this, in the Remark [F]. IV. That it was by this ingenious Method he discovered, that Pliny was born at Como, and that he composed a Dissertation about it, which convinced all those who read it. Of all the Authors I have consulted for a List of Barbarus's Works, I have found none, who ascribes to him any such Dissertation. It is true, that, in his Preface to Pliny, he seems to prefer the reading Catullum congeronem meum, before That of Catullum conterraneum meum, whereby he eludes a very strong Argument, which is taken from That Passage, to prove, that Pliny was of Verona. It is true also, that, independently from the reading Congerronem, which he will neither absolutely admit, nor reject; he declares, that Pliny was of Como, and not of Verona; but he does not enlarge upon this; he contents himself with three Lines: This therefore cannot be called a formal Dissertation. Now, though Varillas were in the right, as to this Point, yet he tells a great Falshy; for there is scarce any learned disinterested Critic, but always adjudged Pliny to those of Verona. "Ca- sam dudum adjudicarent Veronenibus eruditi, inter quos præcipui Polycarpus Palermus singulari opere de Plinii patriâ, & Scaliger in Euseb. Chron. pag. 190 (40). — The Learned have long since adjudged the Cause to the City of Verona, among whom the principal are Polycarp of Palermo, in a particular Treatise on Pliny's Country, and Scaliger on Euseb. Chron. pag. 190." Very probably the misunderstanding Paul Jovius's Words deceived Varillas. "Novocomenibus C. Plinium secundum civem suum ab imperitis invidiose surreptum erudita præclaraque sententia reddidit" (41). — Your great Judgment has restored to "Novocomum ber Citizen C. Pliny II. whom the illiterate had robbed her of." V. He tells us, in the Secret History, That the prodigious Desire Barbarus had to remedy the Disorders in Physic, made him attempt Dioscorides in the same manner, as he had done Pliny. Which is to confound the Order of Times. Barbarus lived so short a time after the Publication of his Work on Pliny's Natural History, that he formed no new Designs; he had Books enough to finish; and I do not doubt but that he had begun with Dioscorides, before he applied himself wholly to Pliny (42). VI. Hermolaus's Friends advised him quietly to enjoy the Honour, which he had acquired by his Pliny, and his Dioscorides; but he himself told them, he must translate what Themistius had left us on Aristotle, and be performed what he had proposed. Here is a new Anachronism: the Translation of Themistius is one of the first that Barbarus published. "Themistii Peripatetici Paraphrases in aliquot Aristotelis Libros admodum adolefcens Latinas effecit (43). — He translated the Paraphrase of Themistius the Peripatetic, upon some Books of Aristotle, when he was very young." He dedicated it to Sixtus IV., who had been dead eight Years, when he published his Notes on Pliny. VII. Hermolaus did the Republic Justice, against his own Interest, and confessed, that they had Reason to be against him. He intreated the Pope to confer the Benefice on Him, who should be presented to him by the Ambassador of Venice; and expressly declared, that he would not have it, if he must purchase it at so great a Price, as the Displeasure of his Citizens. This seems to be a meer Romance: We have seen already

(44), in the Passage of Peter Bembo, that Hermolaus's Father would never let go his hold, and that he only endeavoured to soften the Republic. It is certain also, that the new Patriarch always preserved his Title, and did not submit to his Temporal Superiors. VIII. I do not know where Varillas read, That the only Means, for Hermolaus's Cure, was to send him right Bezoar, and that there was some of it in a Vessel of Agate at Florence, which the Soldan Caibay had presented to Laurence of Medicis. Peter Crinitus, who ought to know it as well as any Body, says, that the Antidote belonged to Picius Mirandulanus, who knew the Composition of it. "Pharmacō contra pestem quod ille sibi fī quando incidisset affervabat diligentissimē, curat ut Romam quā celerim ad Hermolaum devehatur. Dicebat autem Picius illud ipsum ex oleo scorpionum linguisque aspidum, & aliis ejusmodi venenis, confectum (45). — The Remedy for the Plague, which he carefully kept for his own Use, whenever he should meet with that Misfortune, he dispatched to Hermolaus, at Rome, with all possible Expedition. Picius said, it was a Preparation from Oil of Scorpions, Tongues of Asps, and other Poisons of that kind."

Mr Möreri's Faults consist in saying, I. That the Senate did not approve the Choice, which Innocent VIII made of Hermolaus Barbarus, for the Patriarchate of Aquileia. II. That Hermolaus Barbarus published Pliny's Natural History. The Senate would have no less disapproved the Election of another Person; and the Republic was not displeased for what Innocent VIII had done in favour of Hermolaus Barbarus, but because the Pope pretended to dispose of the Patriarchate without consulting them, and because Hermolaus had acknowledged the Pope's pretended Right, in accepting of that Dignity, against the Laws of his Country. He published his Corrections on Pliny without Pliny's Text (46).

[2] A Passage of Alcyonius will shew, that Hermolaus — never studied with so much Application, as after his Country had used him ill.] Here is the Passage: it is Cardinal John de Medicis (47), who speaks. "Exsiliū igitur Barbaro non solum calamitatem detraxit, sed etiam dignitatem auxit, quod quidem ita constanter, moderateque ferebat, ut facitissime jocularetur Musas illud sibi à patria impetrasse, quoniam ægrè ferrent hominem suis sacris initiatum ambitione vulgarium honorum distineri, & plebeis occupationibus impediri. Itaque plura scripsit biennio exsul quā XX. ante annos cum patria frueretur & honoribus illius florentissimè esset, recognitionem errorum Pliniani codicis, explanationem librorum de anima Aristotelis, cum tamen ante ejusdem Philosophi libros talis argumenti in Latinum convertisset, & XVI. libros de ratione differendi, veteres Peripatetici organon eos appellanti; & V. Rhetoricos & unum Poëticum, octoque Dioscoridae Medicos, quos alio etiam opere intruxerat quod Corollarium inscribebat. Adjece- rat quoque pulcherrimam expositionem ad libros analyticos posteriores Aristotelis ante in Latinum translatos (48). — Exile, therefore, not only eased him from Trouble, but advanced him in Dignity; and he bore it with such Constancy and Moderation, that he used to jest, and very pleasantly call it a Favour, which the Muses had obtained for him, from his Country, in order to prevent one, initiated in their Mysteries, from being otherwise taken up, and interrupted with popular Ambition, and public Employments. Therefore he wrote more, in the two Years after his Banishment, than he did in twenty Years before, when he was in Favour with his Country, and in fullest Enjoyment of it's Honours; namely, a Correction of the Errata of Pliny, an Explication of Aristotle's Books of the Soul, which he had before translated into Latin, as also his sixteen Books of The Art of Reasoning; the Peripatetics call them Organon; and five Of Rhetoric, and one Of Poetry, and the eight Books Of Physic of Dioscorides, enlarging them with a Work, which he calls a Corollary. He had likewise added an excellent Commentary on the latter Books of Aristotle's Analytics, before translated into Latin." This seems to refute what I have advanced above (49), but,

(44) Citation (16).

(45) Petrus Crinitus de honestis Dis-
ciplinâ, lib.
2, cap. 7.

(46) This Paragraph was at the End of the Remark of the Article BARBA-RUS
(FRANCIS) in the first Edition.

(47) He was a Terwards
Pope Leo X.

(48) Petrus Alcyonius in Medice Legato priore de Exilio.

(49) In Remark [P], num. 7, and vi.

but, if you consider it attentively, it does not; for, besides that there might be some want of Exactness in this Enumeration of Alcyonius, it is certain, that part of the Writings, which he particularizes, are rather a Revision, or a more ample Exposition, of what Hermolaus had already performed, than a quite new Undertaking; and it appears plainly, that Dioscorides had past through his Hands before his Exile, and before the Correction of Pliny's Text. It is a Confirmation of what I have said against Varillas. Farther, it ought to be observed, that the Writings, in this List, were not published before the Death of the Author, who, therefore, could not be advised to take his Ease, on account that his Pliny, and, afterwards, his Dioscorides, had acquired him sufficient Honour. We shall now see, that Alcyonius observes, that these Works of Barbarus were preserved in Manuscript, in a Library. "Et hæc quidem omnia (50)

(50) The Work on Pliny, published by the Author himself, should have been excepted.

(51) Alcyonius supplies that Cardinal John de Medicis said this about the Year 1512.

(42) Alcyonius in Medicine Legatus prioris.

"ad huc diligentissime asservari vidi à fratribus illius cum, sedecim abhinc annos (51), Venetiis Bibliothecam illius excuterem, atque incredibili sum lætitia elatus cum cognovi doctissimi amicissimi hominis elucubrations non intercidisse, quod ne evenisset magnopere verebar, cum in suburbano Oliverii Caraphæ Collegæ mei ex pestilentia obisset, et domesticis intimique familiares fugâ salutis suæ consulissent, omniaque tanquam bona caduca in medium relinquent. Sed ejus generis scripta ab interitu & furto vindicta fuisse narrabant Zenotetis celsitudinem operâ, quem ille habebat ad manum (52). — And all these I found were still very carefully preserved by his Brothers, upon my examining his Library at Venice, about sixteen Years ago; and it was an exceeding great Pleasure

"to me, to understand, that the Lacubrations of this learned and friendly Man were not lost, as I apprehended they had been, on his dying of the Plague, at the Country House of my Colleague Oliveri Carapha, and being forsaken by his Friends and Domestic, for fear of Infection, and leaving all his Papers and Things in such Confusion, and without an Owner. But they informed me, that these Writings were preserved by the Care of one Zenoteles, who attended him." I cannot deny, but that Barbarus, in the Epilogue of his Corrections on Pliny, does promise an Edition of Dioscorides: "Scire oportet, says he (53), annotamenta hæc — Dioscoridi quoque prope diem emittendo profutura: — It will not be improper to hint, that these Annotations — will also be of Service in an Edition of Dioscorides, which I shall shortly publish." But I still insist, that Varillas has not distinguished the Times. A Work of this Author, on Dioscorides, had been seen, before he published That on Pliny, and after he had given a Paraphrase of Themistius. See what follows: "Primum quidem dum Themistii nobis paraphrasin atque id juvenis adhuc tam elegantè Latine loquentem producit: mox edito in Dioscoridem corollario tam variâ ac reconditâ doctrinæ rerum omnium suppellectilem depromit: postremum Plinio — succurrit (54). — He first published an elegant Latin Translation of the Paraphrase of Themistius, while he was very young; afterwards, by publishing his Corollary on Dioscorides, he discovered an inexhaustible Fund of Learning: last of all, he undertook the Assistance of Pliny."

(53) Herm. Barbarus in Monito ad Lector. ad calcem castigat. pag. 521.

(54) Jo Oporinus Ep. dedicat. Castigat. Herm. Barbari in Plin.

BARBARUS (DANIEL), Great Nephew to the preceding, was esteemed for his Learning. He published a Commentary on the Five Predicaments of Porphyry, in the Year 1542. Two Years after, he publish'd a Commentary on the Three Books of Aristotle's Rhetoric to Theodectus, which had been translated into Latin by Hermolaus Barbarus. He had said, in a Letter to Gesner, that he hoped speedily to publish several Works of Hermolaus (a). We are indebted to him for the Edition of the Dialogues of Speron Sperone.

(a) Taken from Gesner, Bibl. p. 192, verso.

BARBARUS (DANIEL), of the same Family as the preceding, was Patriarch of Aquileia, and famous for his Learning. He had much addicted himself to Mathematics and Philosophy, before he was dignified in the Church; but, after his Promotion to Episcopacy, he applied himself wholly to the Study of Divinity. He was so prejudiced in favour of Aristotle, that he would willingly have taken an Oath of Fidelity to him, had he not been a Christian (a). He was Ambassador of Venice in England, when Pope Paul IV named him Coadjutor to the Patriarch Grimani (b). He was one of the Fathers of the Council of Trent, and expressed there a great Zeal for the Pope. He voted strongly against those, who desired the Communion in both Kinds (c). He died in the Year 1569, aged Forty one Years (d). He had published several Works [A], and doubtless, if he had lived longer, he would have published many more (e).

(a) Taken from Thuanus, lib. 46, pag. 942.

(b) Palavic. Hist. Conc. Trid. l. xvi. cap. iv, n. 22.

(1) Voss. de Scient. Mathematicat. pag. 355, & 425.

(2) De Script. Sculci XVI.

(3) Teiffier, Adit. to Thuanus, Tom. I. p. 354.

(4) Freh. Th. at. Vir. illust. pag. 126.

[A] He had published several Works: A Commentary on Vitruvius, which was printed at Venice, in the Year 1567. La prattica della prospettiva, printed at the same Place, in the Year 1559, and in the Year 1568 (1). Catena Græcorum patrum in quinquaginta Psalmos latine versa. Aubertus Miræus (2), Morici Teiffier (3), Konig, Paul Freberus (4), &c. ascribe to him the Commentary on the Five Predicaments of Porphyry, and the Commentary on Aristotle's Rhetoric, which I mention'd in the preceding Article: But, as the first of these Commentaries was printed in the Year 1542, and the second in the Year 1544, it is evident they are not the production of our Daniel Barbarus, who was born in the Year 1528 (5). Freberus, by a very strange Mistake, says, that our Daniel Barbarus, who died in the Year 1569, at 40 Years, of Age, had obtain'd the Patriarchship of Aquileia from Pope Innocent VIII. to whom he was sent Ambassador from Venice (6).

(c) Id. lib. xviii. cap. iv. n. 4, ad An. 1562.

(d) Voss. de Scient. Mathematicat. pag. 355. Thuanus, l. xvi. pag. 942.

(e) Thuanus ibid.

(5) According to Thuanus and Vossius.

(6) Freber. ibid.

BARBARA, Wife of the Emperor Sigismund, was the Daughter of Herman Count of Cilia in Hungary. Sigismund had been taken by the Hungarians, and placed under the Guard of two young Gentlemen, whose Father he had put to Death. While he was under their Guard, he persuaded their Mother to let him escape. This point was not gained without having made a great many Excuses to her, for the Death of her Husband, as well as a great many Promises. Among other things, he promised her to marry the Daughter of the Count of Cilia, a near Relation of this Widow; and he performed that Promise (a). She proved the most extraordinary Woman, that ever was seen. She had no manner of shame for her lewd Life. Nor did her great Singularity consist in this; there have been but too many Princesses, who have shewn no Regard for what the World should say of them, with respect to their Impudicities. What made her so extraordinary, was Atheism [A], which is almost without Example among Women. She did not believe there was either Heaven, or Hell [B], and laughed at those Religious Persons, who renounced the Pleasures of Life, and mortified their Bodies. Sigismond found himself also ill married upon other accounts; for his Wife Barbara plotted, with some great Lords of Bohemia, to drive him out of the Kingdom, and to marry another Husband. He discovered the Plot, and condemned the Empress to perpetual Imprisonment. When he was dead, she was set at liberty (b); and, as she had Thoughts of marrying again, some body represented to her the Example of the Turtle Dove, which lives single all her life, after the death of her first Mate. But she answered, If you would propose to me the Example of Beasts, Let it be That of Pigeons and Sparrows (c) [C]. She grew old at Graz in Bohemia, without forsaking her Debaucheries (d), and died there about the Year 1451. The Bohemians buried her very magnificently at Prague in the Tomb of their Kings, as Bonfinius affirms in the seventh Book of the third Decad. Prateolus does not forget her in his Alphabetical Catalogue of Heretics, which makes him very ridiculous; for she did not forge any new Doctrine, nor set up her self as the Head of a Sect; She fell into the Impieties, which are common to all times. In all Countries, profane and impious People have always ridiculed those, who, out of a Principle of Religion, undertake the Task of mortifying the Flesh, instead of following the inclination of Nature (e).

(a) Æneas Silvius in Addition. ad Anon. Panormitum de dictis & factis Alphonzi. l. iiii. n. 44, p. 69.

(b) Ex Matthis, Theat. Hiflor. in Sigismundo, pag. 998.

(c) Aeneas Silvius, ubi supra, n. 52, pag. 56.

(d) Gretii in Bohemia in vita turpi & fœdis libidinibus infameminiuit. Matheus, lib. 1.

(e) Barbara — stultas app. habuit virgines que pro Christi nomine pascere fuissent, propterea quod voluptatis gaudia non gustassent. Prateolus, pag. 85.

[A] What made her so extraordinary, was Atheism, which is almost without Example among Women. I am not ignorant of what has been lately published in a Satire on that Sex, which, in my Opinion, is Mr Boileau's Master-Piece. In this new Piece, Impiety itself is made one of the Irregularities of Women;

Dans le sexe j'ai peint la piété caustique.
Et que feroit-ce donc, si Censeur plus tragique
J'allois t'y faire voir l'athéisme établi,
Et non moins que l'honneur le Ciel mis en oubli?
Si j'allois t'y montrer plus d'une Capaneé,
Pour souveraine loi mettant la destinée,
Du tonnerre dans l'air bravant les vains carreaux,
Et nous parlant de Dieu du ton de Des-Barreaux?

*Justly I've shewn the Sex's flaming Zeal.
What if still blacker Crimes I should reveal,
The Female Atheist's gigantic Pride,
Trampling on Heav'n and Hell with impious Stride;
A bold Capaneus in a Woman's Form,
Daring the Heights of Providence to storm;
Defy it's Laws, disdain it's sovereign State,
And substitute that senseless Idol, Fate;
To brave the dreadful Thunder's threatening Tone,
And speak of God as Des-Barreaux has done?*

But all this may be true, though there be not above four, or five Women, in France, fallen into those impious Maxims. I am willing to own, that this Prodigy is become something less extraordinary, since Women do not pretend to be so ignorant as formerly. It will require a certain Proficiency in false Metaphysics, to sink the Mind into this unhappy abyss of Irreligion. However it be, I am very much of Opinion, with the Author of the Thoughts on Comets, that Women do not deserve to be censured upon such an account. "Atheism is not their Vice: they make it a Virtue not to enter into deep Reasonings; so that they stick to their Catechism, and are much more inclined to Superstition, than Impiety; they are great Followers of Indulgences and Sermons, and so much possessed with a thousand Passions, that fall, as it were, to their lot, that they have neither the necessary time nor capacity to call in question the Articles of their Faith (1)." It is certain, they will sooner find the Secret of reconciling Passions and Religion together, even in Molinism itself, than the Expedient of believing nothing.

[B] She did not believe there was either Heaven or Hell. See the Picture Bonfinius has left us of this Woman: "Barbaram Imperatricem ea tempestate Græci diem obitu ferunt, indomitæ libidinis mulierem, quæ inter adulteros publicè vitam duxit, prostitutæ pudore viros sapiens petiit quam pederetur. Quam ab omni religione destituta foret, superos æ inferos esse negabat: religiosas ancillas, jejuniis aut orationi rebusque divinis intentas, gravius increpabat, nullis asseverans molestiis ac inedia

"corpus esse macerandum: immo laute pascendum, in deliciis & voluptatibus alendum, & post mortem, cum nihil superest, nullam deorum animorumque curam esse subeundam (2). — The Greeks relate, that the Empress Barbara died about that Time, a Woman of insatiable Lewdness, who spent her Life publicly among Adulterers, and, laying aside all Modesty, solicited the Men much oftener than they solicited her. Having thrown off all Religion, she denied there was either God or Devil: She severely chid her Maids, who were devoutly inclined, and spent their time in fasting and praying, and other religious Exercises, affirming, that the Body ought not to be mortified, or made uneasy, but much rather indulged and gratified in the most luxurious manner; and that, as there was no such thing as a future State, it was needless to be concerned about Gods and Spirits."

[C] If you would propose to me, said she, the Example of Beasts, let it be that of Pigeons and Sparrows. It is one of the finest Common-Places of Morality, to shew Man his Disorders, by comparing them with the Regularity of Beasts; Men tear each other to pieces; Man is a Wolf to Man (3); but Beasts of the same Kind do not fight with each other. It was by this means that Horace endeavoured to make the Romans ashamed, who engaged themselves in Civil Wars; The Wolves and Lions, says he, do not do so. He supposes his Objection to be so strong, as to reduce those, against whom he urges it, to a shameful Silence.

(2) Bonfinius, Rerum Ungaricar. Decad. III. lib. vii. pag. 344, 345.

T H E Inconveniences of a System of Morality form'd on the Conduct of Beasts.

(3) Homo homini lupus. Erasmus. Adag. chil. 1, c. 1, n. 70, p. 43.

Neque hic lupus mos, nec fuit leonibus
Unquam, nisi in dispar, feris.

Furor ne cæcus, an rapit vis acior?
An culpa? respondit date.

Tacent, & ora pallor albus inficit,
Mentisque percussæ stupet (4).

(4) Horat. Epod. 7.

*Nor Wolf, nor Lion preys upon his Kind:
And shall we Man a greater Savage find?
Well may the Question turn the Monster pale,
And make the faulting Sense it's Office fail.*

Juvenal made use of the same Morality in his fifteenth Satire, ver. 159.

Sed jam serpentum major concordia: parci
Cognatis maculis similis fera: quando leoni
Fortior eripuit vitam leo? quo nemore unquam
Expiravit aper majoris dentibus apri?
Indica tigris agit rabida cum tigride pacem
Perpetuam, sævis inter se convenit uris:
At homini, &c.

*But Serpents now more Amity maintain:
From spotted Skins the Leopard does refrain:
No weaker Lion's by a stronger slain:
Nor, from his larger Tusks, the Forest Boar Commission takes his Brother Swine to gore:*

(1) Some Thoughts on Comets, n. 147, pag. 421.

*Tyger with Tyger, Bear with Bear, you'll find
In Leagues offensive and defensive join'd.
But lawless Man, &c.* TATE.

(c) See his 8th Satire.

Mr Boileau has very well translated the Latin of those two Poets, and joined other Examples to it (5).

Voit-on les loups brigans, comme nous inhumains,
Pour detrouffer les loups, courir les grands chemins ?
Un aigle sur un champ pretendant droit d'aubaine
Ne fait point appeler un aigle à la huitaine :
Jamais contre un renard chicanant un poulet
Un renard de son sac n'alla charger Rolet.
Jamais la biche en rut n'a pour fait d'impuissance
Trainé du fond des bois un cerf à l'audience :
Et jamais Juge entre eux, ordonnant le congrès,
De ce burlesque mot n'a fait ses arrêts.

*Who sees the High-way Wolf in ambush lye,
To rob his Brother Wolf in passing by ?
When does the Eagle on the Eagle prey,
By setting up a Claim to waif and stray ?
When does the Fox, whom constant Thefts maintain,
For Poultry stoln his Brother Fox arraign ?
When does the rutting Hind a Suit commence,
And prosecute the Stag for Impotence ?
When does the Judge, assign'd to try their Cause,
With bawdy Orders stain the sacred Laws ?*

Though this is a very fine and pathetic Common-Place, yet it has it's Foible : For, first, it may be eluded by turning it into a Jest ; and, in the second place, it may be seriously opposed by the Maxim ;

(6) Horat.
Sat. 3, lib. 2.
ver. 103.

Nil agit exemplum litem quod lite resolvit (6).

That Argument but little Force displays, Which, solving one, another Doubt will raise.

that is to say, It may be retorted, and, by turning the Tables, the Moralist may lose his Advantage. I do not pretend to approve of those, who oppose Jest to Arguments ; but I say, it is a very great Disadvantage to an Argument, to be able to be turned into Ridicule by those, who love jesting. Let us prove this by an Example. Suppose any body had undertaken to persuade Mr de Bautre, that it is better to chuse an old Mistress, than a young one, and had quoted the place of Pliny, where it is said, That the Rams are fonder of old Ewes than young ones ; would he not have been confounded by this Answer, given him with a Sneer (7), That is, because Rams are Rams (8). A Roman Lady made use of the like Thought, on somebody's wondering why the Females among Beasts did not desire the Male, but when they had a Mind to become Mothers. The Lady answered, It is because they are Beasts. Simile dictum Populæ Marci filia, quæ miranti cuidam quid esset quapropter aliæ bestia nunquam marem desiderarent nisi cum prægnantes vellent fieri, respondit, bestia enim sunt (9). Was not this a confounding Stroke ? So much for the first Inconveniency. The other is not less considerable ; for, in short, a Man, who is to be sent to learn his Duty in the School of Beasts, will tell you, that he desires no better Doctrine. " For there, says he, I shall learn to determine Right by Force : The stronger Mastiff does not scruple to rob the weaker of his Share. What is more common than to see " Dogs fighting together ? Do not Chickens attack " one another in fight of their common Mothers ? " Do not Cocks fight together so cruelly, that many " times the Battle does not cease before the Death of " one of the Combatants ? Do not Pigeons, the Symbol of Meekness, come very often to Blows ? " What can be more furious, than the Engagement of Bulls ? Does not Force decide their Right in their " Amours."

(7) See Menagiana, p. 323. of the 5th Edit. of Holland.

(8) Vervecina in patria crassique sub ære nascitur Juvenc. Sat. X. ver. 50.

(9) Macrobi. Saturnal. lib. II. cap. v. in fine.

----- Ignotis perierunt mortibus illi
Quos Venerem incertam rapientes MORE FERARUM
Viribus editor cædebat ut in grege TAURUS (10).
*No Pen their Histories did e'er relate,
Who in promiscuous Love have met their Fate,*

(10) Horat.
Sat. III. lib. I. ver. 103.

*Cut off by some superior Lover's power's
As the Herd Bull no Rival can endure.*

Illic alternantes multa vi prælia miscent
Vulneribus crebris : lavit ater corpora sanguis, Verlaque in obnixos urgentur cornua vasto Cum gemitu : reboant silvæque & magnus Olym-pus :

Nec mos bellantes una stabulare, sed alter
Victus abit, longæque ignotis exulat oris
Multa gemens, ignominiam plagasque superbi
Victoris, tum quos amittit inultus amoris,
Et stabula aspectans regnis excessit avitis (11)

(11) Virgil.
Georg. lib.
3. ver. 210.

*The sloping Warriors, aiming Head to Head, Engage their clashing Horns ; with dreadful Sound
The Forest rattles, and the Rocks rebound.
They fence, they push, and pushing loudly roar ;
Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in Gore ;
Nor, when the War is over, is it Peace ;
Nor will the vanquish'd Bull his Claim release :
But, feeding in his Breast his ancient Fires,
And cursing Fate, from his proud Fox retires.
Driv'n, from his native Land, to foreign Grounds,
He with a gen'rous Rage repents his Wounds ;
His ignominious Flight, the Victor's Boast,
And, more than both, the Loves, which unrevenged be lost.*

Often he turns his Eyes, and with a Groan Surveys the pleasing Kingdoms, once his own.

DRYDEN.

" Shall I not learn the most unnatural Barbarity in " the School, where you send me ? Do not fume " Beasts devour their young Ones ? Shall I not learn " Incest there ?

----- fed enim damnare negatur
Hanc venerem pietas, coëuntque animalia nullo
Cætera delectu, nec habetur turpe juvenæ
Ferre patrem tergo : fit equo sua filia conjux, Qualque creavit init pecudes caper, ipsaque cujus
Semine concepta est ex illo concipit ales.
Felicis, quibus ista licent : humana malignas
Cura dedit leges, & quod natura remittit
Invida jura negant (12).

(12) Myrm.
apud Ovid.
Met. lib. 10.
ver. 323.

*But Piety this Passion must allow ;
All Creatures else promiscuous Love pursue.
Bulls know no shame their Daughters to bestride ;
The willing Filly makes her Sire a Bride ;
The wanton Goat does his own Kids enjoy ;
Nor to the Bird are his own young Ones coy.
O happy these ! while Man by Nature free,
To envious Laws gives up his Liberty.*

" Shall I not learn there to seize on every thing that " lies within my reach, that I may lay up Provi" sions like the Ant ?

----- ficut
Parvula, nam exemplo est, magni formica laboris
Ore trahit quodcumque potest atque addit acervo
Quem fruit, haud ignara ac non incauta futuri (13).

(13) Horat.
Sat. I. lib. 2.
ver. 32.

*Great Heaps to raise, learn from the little Ant ;
See her vast Stores, to guard from future Want.*

" Shall I not free myself from the hard Slavery, which " torments so many People, and makes them break
" out into these pathetic Complaints ?

Que vôtre bonheur est extrême,
Cruels lions, sauvages ours,
Vous qui n'avez dans vos amours
D'autre règle que l'amour même !
Que j'envie un semblable fort !
Et que nous sommes malheureuses
Nous de qui les loix rigoureuses
Punissent l'amour par la mort (14) !

(14) These Verses are taken from the Pastor Fido, according to the Translation of the Comte de la Savoie.

*How exquisite your Bliss appears,
Cruel Lions, savage Bears;
Whose Loves no other Rule confines,
But that which Love itself enjoins!
How envied is your happy Fate!
How wretched is our slavish State;
Whose rigid Laws, against all Sense, Make Love a Capital Offence!*

It cannot therefore be denied, but that the Examples, which the School of Brutes affords, of all manner of Irregularities, do something weaken the moral Reflections I have mentioned in the beginning of this Remark: For, since Divinity assures us, all Beasts are free from Sin, it cannot be said, that some are grown disorderly for a Punishment of their Faults, and that others have been preserved regular for a Reward of their Virtue. So that whatever they do is equally regular; and, if any one should ask, as Sigismund's Widow did, Why will you rather have me imitate the Turtle-Dove, than the Pigeon, or the Sparrow? You can give no good Answer, without consulting the Grounds of Morality, as much as you would be obliged to do, if you did not at all make use of the Example of the Turtle-Dove. What Answer would Mr Boileau give to a Sophist, who should maintain, that his rutting Hind is a very false Comparison? For, to make it good, it must be supposed, that this Brute is capable of being in the same Condition with those Women, who sue a Man for Impotency. Now can a Hind be in such a Case? Does the engage her Faith to a single Stag? If one fails her, does she not find others? Mr Boileau's biting Invective, and Satire, would be well grounded in a Country, where there were no Laws of Marriage; but it is very certain, that, in such a Country, Men would no more be sued for Impotency, than Stags, nor condemned to shew their Manhood by a Congress, in pursuance of an Order of Court.

What I have said does not at all lessen my Belief, that the moral Observations, I am speaking of, are very proper to affect most People. Therefore I do not blame Francis de Sales, who propounded the Elephant for an Example of Chastity; and I condemn the Answer of the Empress Barbara. A thousand things might be said on this Subject. The Actions of Brutes are, perhaps, one of the most profound Mysteries, on which our Reason can be exercised; and I am surprized, that so few Persons perceive it. But let us relate the Words of Francis de Sales: "The Elephant, says he (15), is one of the most unwieldy, but, at the same time, the worthiest and most sensible of the whole Brute Creation. "I shall say one word of his Chastity; he never changes his Female; he very tenderly loves the Mate he has once chosen; but yet he cohabits with her only every third Year, and then not above five Days, and so privately, that he is never seen in the Act: On the sixth Day, he makes his Appearance, and, in the first place, goes directly to some River, and washes his whole Body, nor returns to the Herd before he is purified. Is not this a fine, and a chaste, Disposition of such an Animal, and a good Example to married People, not to set their Affections on their Sensuality and Pleasure, but, as soon as those Gratifications are over, to wash their Heart and Affections, and purify themselves as speedily as possible, that they may afterwards have their Minds at full Liberty, for the Performance of Actions more pure and exalted? &c." What he says of the Elephant is taken from Aristotle (16), Pliny (17), and Ælian (18). Claud. Spence in his Treatise Of the State of Widowhood, where he speaks of Monogamy, had remarked this of the Elephant, and given it, together with that of the Turtle-Dove, for eminent Examples of Modesty and Chastity to Christians.

(c) Introduction to a ge-vout Life, part 3. c. 39.

OF the Chastity of the Nuptial Bed.

(16) Aristot.
Hist. Anim.
lib. 5. c. 15.

(17) Plin.
lib. 8. c. 5.

(18) Ælian.
Hist. Anim.
lib. 3. c. 17.

BARBERINI (FRANCIS), one of the best Poets of his Time, was born in the Year 1264, at Barberino in Tuscany. His Mother being a Native of Florence, he went and settled in that City, where the Profession of a Civilian, but, above all, the beauty of his Poems, made him very considerable. Most of his Works are lost. That, which was intitled The Precepts of Love [A], had a better destiny. It was printed at Rome, in the Year 1640, and adorned with fine Cuts. It was done by the Care of Frederic Ubaldini, who took that occasion to court the higher Powers; for the House of Barberini, which was descended from this Poet, enjoyed the Papacy at that time. At the beginning of This Work he placed the Author's Life and some Elogies; and, because there were several obsolete words in those Verses, he added a Glossary to explain them, and clear, or prove, the Sense of them, by the Authority of cotemporary Poets (a).

[A] His Poem entitled, The Precepts of Love was preserved.] This is equivocal; one might imagine that this Poem was a School of Coquetry, like that of Ovid, de Arte amandi; but it would prove a very great Mistake. There is nothing more Moral than this Poem of Barberini. It contains nothing but Rules, which teach those their Duty, who fix their Love on Glory, Virtue, and Eternity (1).

(a) Taken from the Acta Eruditorum, in 8. 74
of Vol. I. of the Supplements, pag.
349.

(1) Acta E-ruditor. pag.
349, of the 1st Vol. of the Supplements.

BARCLAY (WILLIAM) a Learned Civilian in the XVIth Century, was of Aberdeen in Scotland, and of a very good Family [A]. Though he had been in favour with Queen Mary Stuart, he could not make his Fortune at the Court of the King of Scotland, the Son of that Princess. This made him resolve to retire into France in the Year 1573 (a); and, though he was near thirty Years

(a) The Life of John Barclay, prefixed to the Ar-genis, has it
the Year
of 1572.

[A] He was of a very good Family.] Namely, That of Barclay, which is related to all the great Families of Scotland, as appears by a Patent, from King James, printed before the Argenis. I make use of the Word Patent, because it is not a meer Letter, written to the Duke of Lorrain, as Mr Ménage affirms (1), but a Letter, sealed with the great Seal of the Kingdom, and addressed to all Persons, in the usual Form, To all to whom these Presents shall come, Greeting. Mr Ménage is very excusable in his Mistake; but he, who caused this Supercription, Episcopa Jacobi Scottiæ Regis, Carolo Lotharingiæ Duci, to be placed before King James's Attestation, is guilty, either of unpardonable Fraud, or Ignorance. He ought to have read That Writing, since he caused it to be printed, and prefixed to a Book (2). There is not a Line in it but will shew, that it was not a Letter written to the Duke of Lorrain. The Italian Translator of the Argenis (3) tells us, That the Relations of the Lady Malleville would not agree to her Marriage with William Barclay, before they had seen Proofs of the Nobility he had boasted of. He adds, That this vexed Barclay, only on account of the amorous Impatience, with which he was transported; for he was obliged to wait for the Arrival of a Certificate, before he could taste the Pleasures of Enjoyment. He goes on, and says, That, when the Relations of the fair Lady saw the Royal Attestation, they were the first, who bestowed the Consummation. It is impossible to forbear wondering, when we find these things in the same Page with the King of Scotland's Certificate; for This Prince declares,

(3) His Name is Francisco Pona; he wrote the Life of John Barclay, and prefixed it to his Translation of the Argenis.

(1) Ménage, Remarks on the Life of Ayrault,
pag. 228.

(2) It is printed before the Ar-genis.

of Age, yet he went to study the Civil-Law at Bourges. Some time after, he there took his Doctor's Degree [B]; and as he had a great deal of Wit, and applied himself very much to Study, he soon made himself capable to teach the Civil-Law. His Uncle, the Jesuit Edmond Hay, procured him a Professorship in that Science, in the University of Pontamousson, by the Credit he had with the Duke of Lorrain, who had lately founded that University. That Duke did not only confer the chief Chair on Barclay, but made him also one of his Counsellors of State, and Master of Requests of his Palace. In the Year 1582 (b), Barclay married a Gentlewoman of Lorrain (c), by whom he had a Son, who became a Famous Man, and was the innocent cause of his Father's falling out with the Jesuits. This young Man had so much Wit, that they used their utmost endeavours to get him into their Order. His Father was angry with them for it; and they with him in their turn, and did him so many ill Offices with the Duke, that they obliged him to leave Lorrain. He went to King James at London, who offered him a place in his Council with a very good Salary; but he refused those Offers upon account of the condition annexed to them, which was to embrace the Religion of the Church of England. In the beginning of the Year 1604, he returned into France, and accepted the Professorship of the Civil Law, which was offered him by the University of Angers. He taught there with great Splendor [C], till his Death, which happened towards the latter end of the Year 1605 [D]. He was buried at the Franciscans (d). He published some Books [E], and

(b) See Remark [A], of the following Article.

(c) Her Name was Anne de Malleville.

(d) Taken from Mr Menage's Remarks on the Life of Peter Ayrault, pag. 228, & seq.

(4) In Lorraine, he had married a Wife, not at all unobtainable either in Family or Virtue.

(5) The 10th of March, 1582. Moreri makes it the 25th.

(6) Menage, ubi supra.

(7) Francis, ubi supra.

(8) Menage, ubi supra, pag. 231.

(9) Nic. Erythraeus, in Pinae, lib. III, pag. 76. Paul. Freherus, in Theat. pag. 153, makes him to be a native of Pontamousson. He quotes Imperialis and Thomassin.

(10) Mr Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, pag. 228, divides this Preface of John Barclay into the Son of William.

declares, expressly, that Barclay had a Wife already (4); and this is farther certain, from the Date of the Attestation (5). That Date is above a Month after the Birth of John Barclay, the Son of William, and of the Lady Malleville. Judge how the amorous William Barclay was obliged to delay his Joy, by waiting for a Certificate. The Author of John Barclay's Life, in Latin, was in the same Error: He says, The Attestation was required, that he might prove himself a Person of Quality to his future Spouse. Cum Anna de Malavilla contracturus nuptias ex Scotia regias literas accepisset, quibus ingenue nobilitatis titulus futuræ sponse approbaret.

[B] He studied the Civil Law at Bourges --- and there took his Doctor's Degree. Cujacius presided at That Act (6). It is a great Folly to say, that Barclay's Marriage did not interrupt his Studies, and that, having continued them, after his Wedding, from a Scholar he became a Doctor, and, from a Doctor, a Professor of the Civil Law: Lequali (nozze) non rompendo il bel filo de gli studii di lui, successse che di jobulare ch' egli era, passato al grado del Dottorato, ricevea una lettura principale di Leggi (7).

[C] He taught, at Angers, with great Splendor. "He went to his Lectures, attended by his Son, and two Servants, dressed in a magnificent Robe, with a great Chain of Gold about his Neck (6)."

[D] He died towards the end of the Year 1605. Mr Moreri, being deceived by Nicetus Erythraeus, and others, has put down the Year 1609, instead of the Year 1605. He believed, with Reason, that our Barclay went to teach the Civil Law, at Angers, in 1604; and he found, in Nicetus Erythraeus, that This Professor lived five Years after taking Possession of That Place. "Ab Andibus optimis conditionibus evocatur, ut in iplo gymnasium primariam Juris Civilis cathedram obtineret, ubi cum jam quinquennium docuisset mortuus (9). --- He was invited, by the University of Angers, on advantageous Terms, to accept the principal Chair of the Civil Law, which he enjoyed five Years, and then died." It was natural to conclude, that he did not die, till about the Year 1609. But the Italian Author is mistaken, since, besides the Authority of Mr Menage, I can alledge this Reason; William Barclay was dead before the Differences between Paul V. and the Venetians, were ended. "Accendebant hominem & pietate & jam senecta liberiorum illæ turbæ quas multi ominabantur, cum Pontifex in Anglum Venetique districtus, illum quidem jam à sacris nostris alienum acerbare, hos autem alienare videbatur. Sed tam pium conatum intercepti foelix & in Christo obitus. --- The Disturbances, which many forelaw, from the Pope's Violence against England and Venice, which seemed to exasperate the former, already alienated from our Communion, and to alienate the latter, stirred up the good Man, whose Piety, and old Age, had given him a greater Degree of Freedom. But a happy, and truly Christian, Death prevented his pious Design." This we find in the Preface to the Book De Potestate Papæ (10). The Differences between the Pope, and the Republic of Venice, were ended in the Year 1607. The Sieur Witte being, perhaps, deceived only by Moreri, has placed the Death of Barclay in the Year 1609 (11).

[E] He published some Books. Among others, Praemedia, on the Life of Agriola, and a Commentary on the Title of the Puncta de Rebus Creditis & de Jurjurando. He published it in the Year 1605, at Paris. But the two Pieces, which made the most Noise, were the Treatise of the Papal Power, and That of the Regal Power. The Title of the first is, De Potestate Papæ, an & quatenus in Reges & Principes seculares jus & imperium habeat. The second is entitled, De Regno & Regali potestate adversus Buchananum, Brutum, Boucherium & reliquos Monarchomachos. He published this latter Work at Paris, in the Year 1600, and dedicated it to Henry IV. The other did not come out of the Press before the Death of the Author, who durst not even say, that he was writing such a Work. "Et quidem de Regno libros quibus popularem amicum exagitat nulla dissimulatione conscripsit. Sed hoc opus (de Potestate Papæ) secreto aggressus est, cum tunc aliquid Pontifici negare hæresis censetur (12). --- He never dissimulated the writing his Book, of The Regal Power, wherein he lashes popular Ambition. But this Work (Of the Papal Power) he undertook privately, the denying the Pope any thing being, then, esteemed Heresy." He undertook these two Pieces, when he saw the Disorders of the League, the Subjects in Arms against their King, and the legitimate Possessors of the Throne declared, by the Papal Bulls, to have forfeited their Crown: Lorrain, where he was advantageously settled, followed the Stream, and approved the Revolt of Subjects, and the Attempts of the Court of Rome against the Temporalities of Princes. He remained firm in his Principles; for he had learned them in a good School; neither must it be questioned, but that the Seditions of the Scots had been, in this Respect, his chief Catechism. Nothing is more proper to make the Republican Maxims hated, than to see, that they have produced Troubles, which have destroyed the Religion one believes to be the true one, and dethroned a Queen, by whom one was beloved. However it be, the Professor of Pontamousson shewed an uncommon Steadiness: Most Persons alter their Principles as they change their Country and Interests; as for him, he preserved those Maxims in Lorrain, which he had in Scotland, though the Situation of Affairs was entirely reversed. The Authority of the People, advanced above the Royal Power, served, in Scotland, for the Ruin of Popery, and, in France, for the Ruin of the Protestants. Notwithstanding all this, Barclay did not change his Opinion: He had found it unjust in Scotland, where it promoted the Catholic Religion, and found it no less unjust in France, where it promoted the same Religion. It is a Rarity to meet with so much Constancy in a Doctor; but those, whose Principles turn like Weather-cocks, are every where to be found. I have said, that Barclay durst

(11) Witte, in Appendice Diarii Biographici.

(12) In Praefat. Opera de Potestate Papæ.

The League did not alter Barclay's Hypothesis concerning the Independence of Kings.

(c) *Quæ (Ft ras) cum idem Guil-lelmus videret una cum avita religi-one foredecere, Principi peno vero suum marcedere in infamis car-ceris situ, dolore confectus migravit, anno 1571, Lutetiam.....
Whicb (Learning) when Bar-*

and one among the rest, wherein he refuted some Authors, who, tho' of different Religions, did yet agree in Republican Maxims in favour of Religion [F]. He had an aversion for the Calvinists [G]; which Spirit of Bitterness was probably occasioned by the Condition he saw his Country in, when he was forced to abandon it for the sake of his Catholic Religion (e).

*clay saw trampled on, together with the Religion of his Ancestors, and his Queen reduced to the Disgrace of a Prison, he was ready to find nothing but Grief, and retired to Paris. Vita
Jo. Barclaii.*

not own he was writing against the Maxims of the Italians; but this ought only to be understood of the time of the Continuance of the League; for, when it was defeated, he no longer made a Mystery of his Work, but sent it to the Press, and dedicated it to Clement VIII (13). But he took it away again from the Printer, and kept it near ten Years, during which time, he added a great deal to it, but cut off much more. He was making all the haste he could to finish it, on the Apprehension of the Differences, which were likely to happen, between the Pope, and the Venetians; but Death hindered him from putting the last Hand to his Work (14).

[F] He refuted some Authors, who, though of different Religions, yet agreed on Republican Maxims, in favour of Religion.] He refuted two Protestants, Buchanan, and Hubert Languet: And also Boucher, one of the Curates of Paris, and a very violent Leaguer. This Man submitted the Sovereign Authority to the People, for the good of the Catholic Religion; the others did the same thing for the good of the Protestant. So that they were all three united in the general Thesis, and all three Adversaries to Barclay.

[G] He had an Aversion for the Calvinists.] This appears by his Writings. Read these Words of Mr Menage: "He was a great Enemy to the Calvinists" and Lutherans. In his Commentary on the Title "in the Digests de Rebus creditis, he says, speaking of Doneau, Doctor-Regent of the Civil-Law in the University of Bourges, Hugo Donellus unus ex præceptoribus meis: vir civilis Disciplinæ peritus, sed malus, quia hæreticus Calvinista (15). — Hugo Donellus, one of my Preceptors, to be admired for his Learning in the Civil Law, but to be abhorred for his Calvinistical Heresy."

(15) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, pag. 229.

BARCLAY (JOHN), Son of the foregoing, was born at Pontamousson, the Twenty eighth of January, 1583 [A]. The Jesuits of That Town, under whom he studied, were so charmed with his Wit, that they used their utmost Endeavours to draw him into their Society. I have already said, that this was the reason of his Father's going to King James, who was lately come to the Crown of England. He brought his Son along with him; his Son I say, who was already an Author [B], and had some new Works ready for the Press: He had published a Commentary on the Thebais of Statius, in 1601 (a), and he published a Latin Poem on the Coronation of King James, and the first part of the Euphormio, in the Year 1603. Those two Pieces pleased his Britannic Majesty very well, who loved and understood Learning. John Barclay dedicated to him That beginning of the Euphormio. He returned into France with his Father, who would not leave him with King James, for fear That Prince, who would willingly have retained him, should engage him to abjure the Romish Faith. He continued at Angers, till his Father's Death; after which he went to Paris, where he married [C], and went soon after to London. He was there in the Year 1606, and

(a) It was printed at Pontamousson, and dedicated to Charles III, Duke of Lothian.

[A] Was born at Pontamousson, the Twenty eighth of January, 1583.] I have blindly followed Mr Menage, but referred to myself the Liberty to rectify him here by himself. He mentions, at Page 228, what I have taken for the Text to This Remark, and afterwards affirms, at Page 232, that John Barclay died the twelfth of August, in the Year 1621, aged Thirty nine Years and six Months. He must therefore be born in the beginning of the Year 1582. This is confirmed by another Fact, related by Mr Menage. In the Year 1603, John Barclay dedicated the first Part of the Euphormio to the King of England (1), and declares, in the Apology for the Euphormio, that he was but Twenty one Years of Age, when he caused that first part to be printed (2). An Author, who is but twenty Years and some Months old, does not use to say, that he is but Twenty one Years of Age; he expresses himself only in that manner, when he is in his Twenty second Year. Barclay was, therefore, full Twenty one Years old, in 1603; and consequently was born, not in the Year 1583, but in 1582. So that, if his Birth-day was the Twenty eighth of January, his Father's Marriage must be placed in the Year 1581, and not, as Mr Menage would have it, in the Year 1582. The same Consequences will follow from what he says (3), that Barclay, being but nineteen Years of Age in 1601, printed a Commentary on Statius. He remarks, that he, who wrote the Life of John Barclay, printed before the Argensis, is strangely deceived in saying, that John Barclay was born at Aberdeen (4). If he was mistaken in the Place of his Birth, he was not mistaken in the Time, which, he says, was the Twenty eighth of January, 1582. We read, under the Effigies of John Barclay, in the Frontispiece of the Argensis, that he was born the Twenty eighth of January, 1682: And thus the Engravers deceive us, as well as the Printers.

[B] He was an Author very early.] We have seen already, that, at nineteen Years of Age, he published a Commentary on Statius; he deserves, therefore, to be inserted in the next Edition of Baillet's Famous Children; but he would deserve it yet more, if his true Age had been known to Niclus Erythraeus: for, in that Case, he must have been an Author at fifteen Years. And, indeed, Erythraeus says, that Barclay was but seventeen Years of Age, when he wrote a Poem on King James's Coronation; that is to say, in 1603. Annum tum agebat Joannes decimum Septimum cum de Regis inauguratione elegantissimum carmen edidit, maximo verborum sententiarumque splendore illuminatum; quod lætum Rex adeo probavit, ut &c. (5). At that rate, he must have been but fifteen Years of Age, when, in 1601, he published a Commentary on the Thebais of Statius. Let us observe, here, a new Mistake of That Italian Author, which proved contagious to Moreri, and so contagious, that it has produced another. Mr Moreri was not contented with saying, that Barclay was but seventeen Years of Age, when King James was crowned, but he has converted the printed Poem of This Author into a Speech delivered on that Occasion. Paul Freberus places John Barclay's Birth in the Year 1585, and the Panegyric on the Coronation in the seventeenth Year of his Age (6).

[C] He went to Paris, and there married.] "He married Louise Debonnaire, Daughter of Michael Debonnaire, Treasurer of the old Bander, and of Ursula Denisot. — He went afterwards, with his Wife, into England, where he had, by her, two Sons and a Daughter (7)." He did not marry at Rome: Moreri, who says so, did not, in the least, understand his Niclus Erythraeus, who would easily have informed him, that Barclay escaped from England, with his Wife and Son, and retired to Rome, where she brought him another Son. Ibi Barclaius ex uxore quam habebat masculam prolem suscepit. Sed aliquanto post — clam ex Anglia una cum uxore & filio se fugâ surripuit, ac Romam venit (8). — Romæ novam ex uxore suâ masculam prolem accepit, ac citæ unæ Urbem

(5) Niclus Erythr. Plineo. 3^a pag. 76.

(6) Freherl, Theat. pag. 1515.

(7) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, p. 230.

(8) Niclus Erythr. Plineo. 3^a pag. 77.

and it was then, that he came acquainted with Mr de Peirese. He had lately published the History of the Gun-Powder-Treafon. It is a Pamphlet of Six Leaves (b), printed at Amsterdam. In the Year 1610 (c), he published, at London, an Apology for the Euphormio, and his Father's Treatise De Potestate Papæ [D]. In the Year 1612, he printed a Book at Paris, intituled Pietas [E]. It is an Answer to Cardinal Bellarmin, who had wrote against William Barclay's Book of the Papal Power. Two Years after, appeared the Icon Animorum, which he published at London. From whence he went, in the Year 1616, to Paris, where he was prefented, by his good Friend Mr de Peirese, to Mr du Vair, Keeper of the Seals. He went afterwards to Rome, being invited thither by Pope Paul V, where he published a Book of Controversy, intituled Parænesis ad Sæcularios. He received a great many Favours from Cardinal Bellarmin, though he had written against him. He died at Rome, the twelfth of August 1621 (d), while his Argenis was printing in France (e) [F]. His body was carried into the Church of St Onuphrius upon the Janiculum. His Son erected a Marble Monument for him, in St Lau-rence's Church, on the way to Trooli (f): We shall give the Reason, in the Remarks, why his Widow caused her Husband's Bust to be taken from thence [G]. Many believe, that John Barclay made Profession of the Protestant Religion in

(b) Intituled, series pate- facti alvinis- tus paricidii in maxi- mum regem, regnumque Britanniæ cogitanti, & instructi.

(c) See the end of the Re- mark [D].

(d) On the Print before the Argenis they have put the date of April.

(e) Taken from Mr Menage's Remarks on the Life of Peter Ayrault, pag. 228, & seq.

(f) Nic's Erythreus, Pinacoth. 3. pag. 80.

(9) Ibid. pag. 79.

(10) Ibid.

(11) Gassendus in vita Peireskii ad Ann. 1616. pag. 283. See also pag. 288.

(12) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, p. 231, 232.

(13) Ibid. pag. 231.

(14) Joannes Barclaius qui post editum de Summo Pontifice o- pus, nec jam solita apud Regem, fu- erique pollens gratia, subduxit sese ex Angli- a. John Bar- clay, having published the Book of the Papal Power, and not enjoying so much of the King's Favour as formerly, retired out of England. Gassend. ib. pag. 282.

(15) Endre- mon-Jean- nus, Epit. monitaria ad Jo. Barcli- o. n. 1.

Urbem nostram auxit (9). Maffio Barberini, who was afterwards Pope Urban VIII, was God-father to our Barclay's new Son (10). In Reading these Words of Erythraus, one would never imagine, that Barclay's Wife did not come to Rome, 'till four Years after her Husband; and yet Gassendus affirms it to be true. Read the Place, where he mentions the good Offices, which Mr de Peirese did the Husband, in the Year 1616, and the Wife and Child in 1620. Præterea fuisse Peireskio non minorem circa Barclai uxorem, filium, & Jo. Ludovicum Debonarum uxoris germanum, cum QUARTO post ANNO profecti Romam ad illum sunt (11). If Mr Menage had well considered these Words of Gassendus, he would not have said, that Barclay's Son came to Paris with his Mother, in the Year 1652; that he made no great Figure; that he composed Latin Verses; and that, at the same time, he printed there, a Latin Elogy. Erythraus speaks of Barclay's Widow, as of a presumptuous and haughty Woman: See, below, the Remark [G]. In the Latin Life of John Barclay, it is falsely said, that he married Louise Debonnaire, after having been employed in several Embassies by King James.

[D] He printed his Father's Treatise De Potestate Papæ. If we believe Mr Menage (13), the printing That Book lost him great Part of the King of England's Favour. I cannot apprehend from whence this should come, since this Book strongly confutes the Pretensions of the Ultramontanes, and particularly Bellarmin's Arguments, and stoutly maintains the Independency of Kings. Could any thing be written more agreeable to King James? I conjecture, that Gassendus's Latin (14) has deceived Mr Menage; and this convinces us yet more effectually, how difficult it is to write very clearly in Latin. Upon examining the Passage more closely, it will appear, that the Author does not affirm, that the Book, concerning the Pope's Power, displeased King James; but it may very easily be so understood, without some Attention. The Jesuits did not be- lieve, that the printing of That Book had displeased the King of Great Britain: But, on the contrary, they reproached John Barclay for having put it in the Press with That Prince's Consent, and with the Corrections of the English Divines. Neque vero nisi ejus (Regis) nutu patris tui librum à Britannici Evangelii ministris ad libidinem deformatum, Londini typis excusum (15). Mr Menage has not rightly marked the Year of the Impression. That Work was printed in the Year 1609. The Congregation of the Index condemned it the same Year, by their Decree of the ninth of November.

[E] He printed a Book at Paris, which he intituled Pietas. Here is the remaining Part of the Title; Sive publicæ pro regibus ac principibus, & privatæ pro Gul. Barclai parente, vindictia contra Bellarmi- num. The Letter of Eudemone-Joannes, which I have quoted, testifies, that Barclay took a Journey to Paris for the printing of That Work, to do more Service to the Protestant of England: for it was said, "that "he thought he should be less suspected of Intel- ligence with the Enemies of the Church, if he "published That Work out of England." Ac nunc quoque non dissimili consilio te Lutetiam & Brit- annia demigrasse, ut cum & coram apud viros prin- cipes, & scriptis apud cæteros, Ecclesiæ causam cal- lumnias tuis traduceret, tamen quantis majore locorum inter- vallo ab Rege disjungereris, hoc longius abesse à suspi- cione fraudis (16). This is one of the most cunning and common Teaches of the ODIUM THEOLO- GICUM. Those, who are at a loss to answer the Ob- jections, raised against the Common Doctrines, fall upon the Persons, who propose those Objections: They brand them as so many false Brothers, who are in League with the Adversaries, and only retain the outward Profession of Orthodoxy, to enable them to do greater Execution.

[F] He died - - - while his Argenis was print- ing in France. His good Friend, Mr de Peirese, to whom he had sent the Manuscript, took care to find him a Printer, at Paris (17). The first Edition of This famous Book is That of Paris, 1621. It has been translated into several Languages, as French, English, Italian, Dutch, &c. Nicæus Erythraus ob- serves, that it was translated into Italian to satisfy the Curiosity of the Women. Hearing that this Book was very much cried up, they expressed a great De- sire of knowing the Contents of it. "Eadem in- genii fecunditate peperit egregium illud opus, "Argenida nomine, quod & argumenti novitate, " & verborum splendore, ac rerum varietate, tan- tum commendationis habuit, ut mulierum etiam, quæ illud miris in cœlum laudibus effertur audiebant, ad cognoscendum, quid illud afferret, studia com- moveret; adeo ut quidam quo animus illis exple- ret, in Italian sermonem illud converteret (18). "The same Fruitfulness of Genius produced "that celebrated Work, entitled the Argenis, which, "for the Novelty of the Subject, the Beauty of "the Language, and Variety of Matter, was so "universally admired, as to raise, even among the "Women, a Curiosity to know what it contained; "so that, in order to gratify them with an Oppor- "tunity of reading it, some Person translated it into "Italian." Mr de Peirese caused the Author's Effigies to be placed in the Title of the Book, with the following Distich, which he desired Grotius to com- pose (19).

(15) Id. B.

(17) Gassend. Vit. Peiresk. pag. 288, 290.

(18) Nic. Erythre. Pi- nacoth. 3. pag. 77, 78.

(19) Gass. Vit. Peiresk. pag. 290.

Gente Caledonius, Gallus natalibus, hic est,
Romam Romano qui docet ore loqui.

His Birth in France, his Name in Scotland shines;
The Roman Tongue he ev'n at Rome refines.

[G] We shall give the Reason, why his Widow caused her Husband's Bust to be taken from thence. John Barclay's Tomb was near the Gate of the Church-yard, over-against which Cardinal Francis Barberini had erected another, for his Preceptor Bernard William. Both Tombs were exactly alike. John Barclay's Widow, being offended at so perfect a Resemblance, would have demolished her Hus- band's Tomb; but, not being able to do That, she would, in England [H]: He denied it publicly [I]. His Books of Controversy had no great Success: the others had many Admirers [K], and have not wanted Centuriers [L]. As to the Fortune he made at Rome, it is variously related. Some say,

would, at least, have his Marble Bust taken from it, and brought to her House. Her Pride could not endure, that her Husband, who was illustrious by his Birth, and more so still by his Wit and Learning, should be there paralleled with a pitiful Pedagogue. "Quod uxor Barclaii mulier tumido, "ut aiebant, animo atque elato, cum vidisset, statim viri sui imaginem ex sepulchro illo, quod rotundum demoliri non posset, detrahi iussit, ac domum suam afferri; quod acciperet indigne, cum cui ipsa nupta fuisset, generis splendore clarum, fed ingenium et eruditiois fama clariorum, cum homine obscuro, ac nullius fere ingenii, & ut ipsa dicebat, "pedagogo, componi (20)."

(20) Niclaus Erythraeus, Pinacoth. 3. pag. 81.

[H] Many believe, that John Barclay made Profession of the Protestant Religion in England. The Jesuit Eudemus Joannes lays it to his Charge, that, while he lived at the Court of the King of England, he either actually was, or at least passed for, a Heretic. He adds, that it was said, This Prince made use of him, to translate his Preface concerning the Oath of Allegiance into Latin, and to carry it to several Princes. "Nam te quidem aliquot annis in aula ejus Regis ita veritatem ferunt ut hæreticus aut plane effes, aut habere quidem certè. Cui nonnullam etiam Latine reddendâ, deferendâque ad Principes præstatione ejus monitoria operam ab te navatam memorat (21)." Erythraeus, not daring to say, positively, that Barclay was a Heretic in England, or, at least, that he professed Heresy, does yet declare it as the Opinion of all the Papists of that Country, that King James made use of John Barclay's Pen to compose the Book, entitled, Funiculus triplex, & Cuniculus triplex. These are his Words: "Utrum autem, apud regem, incorruptam catholicam religionem semper conservaverit, vel falsum, si non animo, specie tenus hæreticorum se erroribus oblinierit, incertum est mihi: illud autem certum, catholicorum omnium in Anglia fuisse opinionem, Regem illum in eo libro, cui titulus est Funiculus triplex, & Cuniculus triplex, componendo usum fuisse Barclaii adiutorem atque magistrum (22)."

(21) Eudemus Joannes, Ep. Monit. ad Barclai. n. 1.

(22) Niclaus Erythraeus, Pinacoth. 3. pag. 77.

I know of no body, who has been more decisive on this Question, than Imperiali. He says, plainly, that Barclay embraced the Religion of the Church of England, and afterwards abjured it; but, that they were to little persuaded of the Sincerity of his Conversion at Rome, that, after his Death, they caused the Inscription, and the Statue, which his Son had put upon his Tomb, to be taken away (23). Paul Fridericus attributes this to the Jesuits: "Statuum & inscriptionem quam ejus demortui gloriæ filius in templo S. Laurentii extra muros exerebat, patres Soc. Jesu sublatam & deletam voluerunt (24)."

(23) Imperialis in Museo Historico.

(24) Freherus in Theatr. pag. 1115. He quotes Imperiali, and Thomassin.

"The Jesuits ordered the Inscription and Effigies, which his Son had dedicated to his Memory, in St Laurence's Church-yard, to be taken down and demolished." The Truth of it is hard to be known: It is possible, something was found among his Papers, or elsewhere, which might discover, that he was a Protestant in his Heart, and occasion this Resentment shewn against his Tomb. It is possible, on the other side, that the Vanity of his Wife might be the only Cause of the disordering of his Tomb; and that this might give occasion, to such as are fond of Conjectures, or of idle Comments on Town-talk, to find a Mystery in it, and some private Process of the Tribunal of the Inquisition.

(25) In Prefat. Parmensis, ad Secretarium. That Book was printed in the Year 1617.

[I] He denied it publicly. We must either lay aside the most certain Maxims, by which we judge of Facts, or acknowledge, that John Barclay did not renounce the Catholic Profession in England. He declares publicly, that he was born, and always continued, a Catholic (25), and that, though he had accepted of an Office from King James (26), he never conformed to the Church of England, nor absented himself from the Catholic Assemblies. I was constant, says he, at the latter. He calls to witness the French and Spanish Ambassadors, and their Fathers Confessors, who were also mine, says he. Here is something of yet greater force. He appeals to King James, of whom he boasts to have obtained the Pri-

(26) In regis familia esse inter domesticos. One of the King's Domestic Erythraeus says, that the King made him his Secretary: ab epistolis, & consiliorum omnium participem habuit. Freherus, ubi quærit Imperialis, et Thomassin, says, that his Place was that of Gentleman of the Bed Chamber: titulo nobilitati cubiculo regi honestatus.

vilage not to be disturbed in his Catholic Religion. King James was yet living, when Barclay published these Particulars: the Embassadors, to whom he appealed, were not all dead. How can it be thought therefore, that he declares a Falshood? He vindicates himself from another thing, which had been laid to his Charge; That of having been the Author, or Promoter, of a terrible Libel, which appeared against King James, as soon as Barclay left England. Lastly, he makes a Recantation of certain Doctrines, in the Book, which he had written against Cardinal Belarmin. He does not forget to mention, that he went away with the Royal Permission. Neque fortum me feci: impetrati regis pace publice cum familia Britanniae ora solvi.

[K] The others had many Admirers. See, in the Works of Sir Thomas Pope-Blount (27), and Mr Baillet (28), several fine Encomiums made on Barclay. The following, if it were true, would without doubt be the greatest of all, in respect to the Dignity of it's Author. It is reported, that Cardinal Richelieu was continually reading the Argenis, and that from it he took all those Counsels, and Political Expedients, with which he put France into so advantageous a Situation. Ad immortalitatem Barclai una sufficit illius Argenis, quam Richelæus ævi nostri miraculum affiduit, ut ajunt (29), verjabat manibus, babebat quasi præcepticem ac directoricem illius regiminis, quo deinceps Galliam reverentem juxta terribilemque gentibus cæteris fecit (30).

(27) Centuria Authorum, p. 655.

(28) Judgment on the Poet, T. m. 4. pag. 152.

(29) Here is an, it is said, which has very much the Air of a Fable.

(30) In Barclay's Life, before the Argenis.

(31) See the end of the Remark [F].

[L] And have wanted not Centuriers. We have seen the Distich under Barclay's Picture, compiled by Grotius (31). It is a great Compliment on that Author's Latin Style. However his Style has not been approved by every Body. "The Anonymous Author of the little Book, entitled Censura Euphormionis, printed at Paris in 1620, speaks of the Style of the Euphormio, in these terms: Quod miretur aliquis, latinitas quoque ipsa Romanas aures peregrinitate radit, & veteris saporis imbutum palatum offendit. — And what is very surprizing, even the Latin of it sounds like a foreign Language to a Roman Ear, and is shocking to those, who have any Relish for the Elegancies of Antiquity. It is thought, to mention this by the way, that Seton, a Scotchman, was the Author of that little Book. Joseph Scaliger, in his Three hundred and eleventh Letter to Charles Labbé, does not speak at all more favourably of That Satire of Barclay. Quantum Euphormionem Barclai faciam ex eo cognoscere potes, quod vix sex folia ejus legere poterim. — What an Opinion I have of Barclay's Euphormio, you may guess from this, that I have scarce been able to read six Leaves of it. Thus speaks the Original of that Letter, which I have seen in Charles Labbé's Hands; for, in the Edition of Scaliger's Letters, there is an Asterisk in the Head of Euphormionem Barclai. He gives much the same Account of it in his Scaligerana secunda: There is a Pedant at Angers, who wrote a Satyricon, which seems at the beginning to promise some thing, but in Conclusion makes out nothing at all (32). Peter Musnier, a Canon of Vézelay, answered the Book entitled Censura Euphormionis, by another, entitled Censura censura Euphormionis; but this Answer was so very indifferent, that, in all probability, it made John Barclay himself write an Apology for his Euphormio (33). But, as it has been already observed, John Barclay was but Twenty one Years of Age, when he published the first Part of that Satire. His Argenis, which was written in his riper Years, is better done. And, if he, who wrote "John Barclay's Life, printed before the Argenis, may be believed, Cardinal Richelieu very highly esteemed that Performance. I shall conclude with remarking, that a Benedictine, named Bugnot, who taught Rhetoric in the Abbey of Tiron, composed Latin Notes on that Work, which were printed at Leyden in 1664, with the Argenis (34)."

This is the Harvest of the learned Mr Menage; I shall endeavour to gather up some Gleanings after him, and begin with these Words of Balzac: "An Académiste of Rome, a Confident of the formidable Scripius, know-

(32) See Mr Menage's second Addition to the Life of Ayrault, pag. 539.

(33) Mr Menage said, pag. 231, that Barclay published, at London, in 1610, the Apology for his Euphormio, which he dedicated to Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy.

How can he say so, that the great Answer, which was made to a Criticism on it, printed in the Year 1620, obliged Barclay to write his own Apology?

(34) Menage's Remarks on the Life of Ayrault, pag. 232, 233.

(g) Ibid.
p. 79.

(h) Imperialis & Tommasinus, apud Paulum I. reherum, Th. str. pag. 1515.

(i) See Baillet's Judgment on the Poets, Tom. 4, pag. 112; and Sir Thomas Pope: Bunt, Centura Aurorum, p. 655.

say, that Maffeo Barberini, who loved him very well, having been created Pope, was a great Benefactor to him, and conferred a good Benefice upon his eldest Son, and the Office of his Holiness's Chamberlain (g). Others say, that he was forced to amuse himself with the culture of Flowers, to divert the Concern he was under, on seeing himself so little advanced (b) [M]. But it is certain, that he died before Barberini was elected Pope. He attempted some Things in Poetry, and several good Judges commend the Latin Verses, we have of his, as very extraordinary (i). His Works have been confusedly mentioned in Moreri's Dictionary [N]. He was revising his Euphormio, in order to reprint it. He left behind him the History of the Conquest of Jerusalem (k), and some Sheets of the History of Europe (l). It could not, with any Truth, be said, that King James sent him Embassador to the Courts of the Emperor, King of Hungary, and Duke of Savoy [O]. He makes no mention of it himself, when he describes the

(h) Ha lasciatto a po le l'Historia de beati Jacobi: chi e la medesima ch' e il Taffo cartato nel suo Goffredo. --- The same which was the Subject of Taffo's Poem. Francesco Pons, in the Life of John Barclay.

(i) Id. ibid.

"ing the Friendship, that was between Mr Barclay, "and myself, and the Love I had for his Argenis, "in order to moderate, as he said, the Violence of "my Passion, offered to shew me in that new History, which we had then in Manuscript, Fifteen "hundred Inimproprieties, upon a fair Computation, "besides innumerable other Faults, and strange "Phrases (35)." Sorel, an Enemy of Balzac, passed much the same Judgment on the Style of the Argenis: "As for the Argenis, says he (36), if it's Latin "is esteemed, I am of a quite contrary Opinion; "for there are an infinite number of new Words in "it, which were never current in Rome, inasmuch, "that, if Sallust were to return into the World again, "he would be at a loss to understand them." He pretends, that, in this, he only follows the Opinion of the most learned, who have some of them even gone so far as to say, that Barclay's Language was rather French, than Latin (37). He is not content with censuring the Style, but also condemns the Economy of the Work itself, and is no less severe "on the Euphormio (38). "It is, says he (39), an "History of a Person of mean Quality, but it is "extremely silly. — What gave this Book so "great a Run was it's being in Latin, and the Rarity of seeing a modern Romance in that Language; but it has never been considered, that it is lucky for the Author, that he did not write it in a Vulgar Language, because there is now no notice taken, that he does not understand how to make each of his Persons speak agreeably to his Character, which is the Grace of a Satire. Instead of this, he affects pedantic Expressions, and makes a Footman speak like a Schoolmaster, who understands Greek and Latin History; so that, all this considered, together with the lowliness of the Adventures, the Satire of Euphormio appears to be the Work of a School-Boy, just beginning to "learn Wit (40)." When he grew old, he was not quite so severe in his Censure; but he continued his Dislike to the Euphormio (41). That Satire, says he (42), was wrote in Latin by John Barclay, and translated into French by John Beraut, Doctor of Physic, of the Faculty of Paris; there is a good deal of Learning in it, with some touches of Satire on several Vices of the Age; but the Method of it is not the most ingenious, and agreeable, that ever was invented. We have already seen what Scaliger thought of the Euphormio; This is the Judgment he passes on the Style. There are a great many Faults in it, which every Body does not know: as there are Gallicisms in Beza's Poetry (43). We must not forget, that this Book had the same fate with the Treatise of the Pope's Power; it was condemned by the Inquisition. The Decree orders the expunging some Parts of it: but Nicinus Erythraeus says, That the Bookellers were forbid to sell it, and all particular Persons to keep or read it; and that, before this Order, he had read some Part of it. Partem Euphormionis degustavi tum, nondum lata lex erat, ne bibliopola cuiquam liceret eum vendere, aut cuiquam domi habere ac legere (44). Let these Words be well considered, and compared with some others in Page 77. It is surprising, that the Court of Rome should have so little regard to the Congregation of the Index: We shall see, that John Barclay was very graciously received at Rome, and most liberally supplied with every Thing, by the Bounty of the Pope, on account of the Reputation he had acquired by his Euphormio. "Romam venit, "ubi cum Pro eo quod ex EUPHORMIONE, quem

"nibus humaniter exceptus, & a Paulo V, qui tum "Romanam Ecclesiam Pontifex administrabat, bonis "omnibus, quibus sponte se exuerat, amissis, in victu, "vestitu, ac ceteris omnibus ad vitam necessariis, magnifice ac liberaliter habitus (45). Mr Ménage has found a Fault in the Epistle Dedicatory of the Argenis (46). Barclay, addressing himself to King Lewis XIII, tells him, That the Prince, of whom he was born, deferred in his Life-time the Surname of Le Grand, the Great, which was not conferred upon him till after his Death. Eo se parente genitus, qui vel confusum hostium, sæculi sui jumentum Magni cognomen ferre visus debeat, quod vos modestius extindit adididit (47). This is a Fality: for John Barclay's Father, dedicating his Book de Regno, to Henry IV, in the Year 1600, gives him the Title of Henricus Magnus. Mr Ménage confesses, that he owes this Observation to Mr Noble.

(45) Id. ib. pag. 77.

(46) Ménage's Remarks on the Life of Ayraul, pag. 232.

(47) Barclay's Epistle Dedicatory to Argen.

[M] Some will have it, that he was under a Concern on seeing himself so little advanced.] The Author of the Italian Translation of the Argenis confesses, that the Favours of Paul V, and Gregory XV, were no way proportionable to the Merit of John Barclay, whether it be, says he (48), that Fortune is pleased to persecute Virtue every where, or that the Pope thought, that Poverty was the true Mother of Knowledge (49). He insinuates, that Barclay was no good Oeconomist, and that his generous Temper, and numerous Family, reduced him pretty low. Ivi dunque si tratteneva il Barlaam con facolta non poco angusta rispetto la numerosa famiglia, e gli suoi spiriti generosi. In some Latin Verses, where he introduces his Wife, who causes her Picture to be drawn, Barclay says he had but two Sons. In his Latin Life, those Verses are quoted, to prove, that he had two Sons and one Daughter. What Judgment is here!

(48) Franciscus Pons, in the Life of John Barclay.

(49) This Proposition is very uncertain, and often very false. See the Hand facile emergunt quorum virtutibus obstat Res angusta domi & curta suppellex juvenalis. Sat. 3, vers. 164. Rarely they rise by Virtue's Aid, who live in Plung'd in the depth of helpless Poverty.

[N] His Works have been confusedly mentioned in Moreri's Dictionary.] I. I have said already, in the Remarks [B] and [C], that this Author has converted a Piece of Poetry into a Speech; II. And that he has falsely placed the Scene of John Barclay's Marriage at Rome; III. And his Birth in the Year 1586. IV. He is in the wrong to think, that Barclay's Satiricon Euphormionis contains five Books. Properly speaking, it contains but two, for the third is only an Apology for the other two; the fifth is not Barclay's, but Morisset's; and the fourth is not built on the Model of the foregoing. It is the Book, which the Author entitled, Icon animorum. V. Moreri knew nothing of this, since he spoke of That Icon animorum, as of a distinct Work from the five pretended Books of the Satiricon Euphormionis. VI. If I am not mistaken, John Barclay published no other Pieces against the Protestants, but only the Parænesis ad Sæcularios, which he carried ready finished into Italy, and printed it at Rome, as soon as he arrived there. And yet, Moreri tells us, that Barclay published some Books against the Protestants, during the melancholy and solitary Life he led at Rome, amidst the Favours of Paul V, and of his Successor Gregory XV. The Parænesis ad Sæcularios was printed in the Year 1617. Gregory XV was not elected till the Year 1621. VII. He adds, that Barclay published also, at that time, the Icon animorum. This is false. That Work was printed at London in 1614, two Years before the Author went to Rome.

Dryden. See also the 6th and 7th leaving Verses of the 7th Satire.

[O] It could not with any Truth be said, that he was sent Embassador.] A Writer of Panegyrics, or Lives, is too apt to make use of great Words. If a Prince appoints any Body to carry a Packet

(31) The 10th Discourse among the Miscellaneous Works, pag. 405.

(36) Berger Extravagant, lib. 13, pag. 83.

(37) Sorel, Remarques sur le Berger Extravagant, pag. 608. See also his Bibliothèque Franç. pag. 182.

(38) The 13th Book of the Berger Extravagant, and in the Remarks on the 13th Book, and elsewhere.

(39) Remarques sur le Berger Extravagant, pag. 763.

(40) Ibid. pag. 765.

(41) Bibliothèque Franç. pag. 182.

(42) Ibid. pag. 193. See the End of this Article.

(43) Scaligeriana, pag. 23.

(44) Nicinus Erythraeus, P. 1. lib. 3, pag. 2.

the Life he led with King James (m); and all that can be made of it, in my opinion, is, that this Prince might make use of him to transmit, to foreign Princes; some Copies of the Book, he composed for their common Interests, against the Pretensions of the Court of Rome. His Euphormio and Argenis have been translated into French [P].

(m) Barclay us in Pref. Parone. ad Sectarios.

of Importance, you will soon see the Dispatch of a Courier, converted into an Extraordinary Deputation; or even into a real Embassy. I am willing to believe, that, if the Presents, which King James made to several Princes, as an Author, were intrusted to Barclay, it was not as to a meer Bearer; it is likely, that the King, who knew his Merit, made that Commission agreeable to him; but, after all, That Message makes to little Noise; that it is a Jest to say; "Illius (Regis magnæ Britanniæ nomine legationes obivit ad Rodolphum Imperatorem, ad Matthiam Pannoniæ Regem, & ad (50) Emma-nuelem Philibertum ducem Allobrogum (51). — He was sent Ambassador, by that King, to Rodol-phus the Emperor, Matthias King of Hungary, and Emanuel Philibert, Duke of Savoy."

[P] His Euphormio and Argenis have been translated into French. I have already quoted Sorel (52), who observes, that the Euphormio was translated into French by John Berault: I must add, that this Translation was printed at Paris, in the Year 1640, in 8vo, and that it was preceded by two others, the Authors of which, for fear of keeping too superstitiously to the Letter, have left the Work at least as difficult as they found it (53). Berault has subjoined a Key, and Commentary, to his Version. The Translation of the Argenis was printed at Paris, by N. Buon, in 1624, in 8vo; but the Author of it is not named.

(52) Above, Quat. (50).

(53) See the Advertisement of the Bookeller, before the Translation of Berault.

(50) The Duke of Savoy's Name was Charles Emanuel.

(51) In the Life of Barclay, before the Argenis.

(a) That is, Son of the Star. He applied to himself the Prophecy of the Book of Numbers, chap. xxiv, ver. 17. There shall come a Star out of Jacob.

BARCOCHEBAS, or Barcochab (a), excited innumerable Disorders in Judæa, by his Impostures, and drew a dreadful Calamity upon his Nation under the Reign of Adrian. He was a Jew, who declared himself to be the Messias, and found a famous Rabbi, who favoured That impious Pretension (b). This false Messias suited himself surprizingly to the Prepossessions of That miserable People; he spoke of nothing but Wars, Battles, and Triumphs; and the first Lesson of his Gospel was, that they ought to rebel against the Romans. He had so much the less Trouble to inculcate This Doctrine, because he took his time, when the Zeal of Religion had thrown the Jews into a violent Rage against the Emperor. That Prince had newly established a Colony near Jerusalem (c), where he had settled Idolatry. The Jews looked upon this as an intolerable Abomination, and a prodigious Profanation of the Holy Places; on account of which they were very inclinable to rebel. Some pretend, that Circumcision was forbidden them [A]: this was to force their Consciences. The Talmud alledges another reason for their taking up Arms [B]. Their Impostor is said to have made use of the same Trick, which Eunus had practised in Sicily, to make the Slaves revolt; that is, he kindled Straw in his Mouth, that he might be thought to vomit Fire [C]. He fortified himself in several places; but he chose the City of

(b) His Name was A K E T A. See his Article.

(c) Which he called Ælia Capitolina, after his own Name and of Jupiter Capitolinus, to whom he caused a Temple to be built there.

[A] Some pretend, that Circumcision was forbidden them. Spartan imputes their rising to that Prohibition: Moverunt ea tempestate & Judæi bellum quod volebant mutilare genitalia (1). — The Jews at that time broke out into Rebellion, because they were denied the Liberty of Circumcision. It is not unlikely, that the circumcising of their Children was forbidden them, since we read in Modestinus, that they obtained from Antoninus Pius the Liberty of doing it; they had been disturbed on that account, and were obliged to have recourse to the Emperor's Justice. Circumcidere Judæi filios suos tantum, rescripto Divi Pii permittitur in non ejusdem religionis qui hoc fecerit, castigans pæna irrogatur (2). The Decree, which they obtained, seems to say, that sometimes they circumcised Children not born of their Sect. This was forbidden them on the Penalties established against Castration.

(1) Spartan in Vita Adriani, cap. 14.

(2) Modestinus Libro Regularum, apud Casaubon in Spartan. Adrian. cap. 14.

[B] — — — The Talmud assigns another Reason for their taking up Arms. It is reported, that the Jews had a Custom to plant a Cedar on the Birth of a Son, and a Pine on that of a Daughter; and to make the Bridal-bed of the Wood of those Trees, when their Children married. It is added, that, in a Journey, which the Emperor's Daughter made into Judæa, some part of her Chariot happening to break, her People cut one of these Cedars, and brought it to her; that the Jews, not being able to bear this, rose up in Arms, and killed those, who had cut down that Tree. The Emperor, understanding, that the Jews were revolted, marched in great Wrath against them, and extirpated them. "Ob curs carpenti vastata est Bethara. In more fuit ut cum nasceretur infans plantarent cedrum, cum infantula, pinum; cumque nati contraherent matrimonium, ex iis conficerent thalamum. Die quadam transit filia Cæsaris, & confectum est ei curs carpenti. Cedrum istiusmodi exiderunt atque ad eam attulerunt. Insurrexerunt in eos Judæi atque eos ceciderunt. Relatum est Cæsari rebellare Judæos. Profectus ille in eos iracundus, excidit totum cornu Israelis (3)." The Jews would be altogether inexcusable, if they revolted on so slight an occasion as this. These poor People do not even know how to tell a Lie to their Advantage. What Ignorance is it to give the Emperor Adrian a Daughter! To conclude, Pines are Trees, which grow too slowly (4) to serve for a Bed, by that time a Daughter will be ready to share it with a Man; and many of them would have deserved to be pitied, if they had been obliged to wait for a Husband, till their Pines were grown to a sufficient Size.

